XXX. Quite appropriately does Moses speak of <sup>126</sup> the fruit of instruction as being not only "holy" but "for praise"; for each of the virtues is a holy matter, but thanksgiving is pre-eminently so. But it is not possible genuinely to express our gratitude to God by means of buildings and oblations and sacrifices, as is the custom of most people, for even the whole world were not a temple adequate to yield the honour due to Him. Nay, it must be expressed by means of hymns of praise, and these not such as the audible voice shall sing, but strains raised and re-echoed by the mind too pure for eye to discern. Indeed there is an old story on men's <sup>127</sup> lips, the invention of wise men, and handed down by memory to succeeding generations of posterity, which has not escaped my ears which are for ever greedy for teaching. It is to this effect. When, they say, the Creator had finished the whole world, He inquired of one of His subordinates <sup>a</sup> whether he missed as having failed to be created aught of created things beneath the earth or beneath the water, aught found in air's high realm or heaven's, furthest of all realms that are. He, it is said, <sup>128</sup> made answer that all were perfect and complete in all their parts, and that he was looking for one thing only, namely the word to sound their praises, which should make the surpassing excellence that

PHILO

- καὶ ἀφανεστάτοις δοκοῦσιν ὑπερβολὰς οὐκ ἐπαι-νέσει μᾶλλον ἢ ἐξαγγελεῖ· τὰς γὰρ διηγήσεις τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ ἔργων αὐταρκέστατον ἐκείνων ἔπαινον εἶναι, προσθήκης οὐδεμιᾶς ἕξωθεν εἰς κόσμον δεομέ-νων, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀψευδὲς τῆς ἀληθείας τελειότατον 129 ἐχόντων ἐγκώμιον. ἀκούσαντα δὲ τὸν πατέρα τοῦ παντὸς τὸ λεχθὲν ἐπαινέσαι, καὶ οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν τὸ πάμμουσον καὶ ὑμνωδὸν ἀναφανῆναι γένος ἐκ μιᾶς δὴ τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν δυνάμεων παρθένου Μνήμης, ἦν Μνημοσύνην παρατρέποντες οἱ πολλοὶ τοῦνομα καλοῦσιν.
- 130 XXXI. Ὁ μὲν οὖν τῶν παλαιῶν μῦθος ὧδε ἔχει. ἐπόμενοι δὲ ἡμεῖς αὐτῷ λέγομεν, ὅτι οἰκειότατόν ἐστιν ἔργον θεῷ μὲν εὐεργετεῖν, γενέσει<sup>1</sup> δὲ εὐχαριστεῖν μηδὲν ἕξω τούτου πλέον τῶν εἰς ἀμοιβὴν ἀντιπαρασχεῖν δυναμένῃ<sup>2</sup>. ὁ γὰρ ἂν θελή-σῃ τῶν ἄλλων ἀντιχαρίσασθαι, τοῦθ' εὐρήσεται τοῦ πάντα πεπονηκότος ἀλλ' οὐ τῆς κομιζούσης φύσεως 131 κτῆμα ἴδιον. μαθόντες οὖν, ὡς ἐν ἔργον ἡμῖν ἐπι-βάλλει μόνον ἐν τοῖς πρὸς τιμὴν θεοῦ, τὸ εὐχάριστον, τοῦτο ἀεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ μελετῶμεν διὰ φωνῆς καὶ διὰ γραμμάτων ἀστείων καὶ μηδέποτε ἐπιλείπωμεν μήτε λόγους ἐγκωμιαστι-κούς μήτε ποιήματα συντιθέντες, ἵνα καὶ ἐμμελῶς καὶ χωρὶς μέλους καὶ καθ' ἑκατέραν φωνῆς ἰδέαν, ἣ τὸ λέγειν καὶ τὸ ᾄδειν ἀποκεκλήρωται, ὅ τε κοσμοποιὸς καὶ ὁ κόσμος γεραίρηται, “ὁ μὲν,” [349] ὡς ἔφη τις, | “ἄριστος τῶν αἰτίων, ὁ δὲ τελειότατος τῶν γεγονότων.”

<sup>1</sup> MSS. θεὸν . . . γένεσιν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. -ην οἱ -ων.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 497.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. Plato, Timaeus 29A.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 128-131

marked even the most minute and inconspicuous among them the subject of announcement rather than of praise, seeing that the mere recounting of the works of God was in itself their all-sufficient praise, for they needed the embellishment of no extraneous additions, but possessed in the reality that could not lie their most perfect encomium. The story runs 129 that the Author of the universe on hearing this commended what had been said, and that it was not long before there appeared the new birth, the family of the Muses<sup>a</sup> and hymnody, sprung from the womb of one of His powers, even virgin Memory, whose name most people slightly change and call her "Mnemosyne."

XXXI. So runs the myth of the men of old. We 130 take the same line and say that the work most appropriate to God is conferring boons, that most fitting to creation giving thanks, seeing that it has no power to render in return anything beyond this; for, whatever else it may have thought of giving in requital, this it will find to be the property of the Maker of all things, and not of the being that brings it. Having learned, then, that, in all that has to do 131 with shewing honour to God, one work only is incumbent upon us, namely thanksgiving, let us always and everywhere make this our study, using voice and skilful pen. Let us never tire of composing eulogies in prose and poetry, to the end that, whether with or without musical accompaniment whichever of its appointed functions the voice may exercise, be it eloquent speech or song, high honour may be given both to the world and to the Creator of the world; the former, as one has said,<sup>b</sup> the most perfect of things produced, the latter the best of producers.

- 132 XXXII. Ἐπειδὴν οὖν ἔτει καὶ ἀριθμῷ τετάρτῳ πᾶς ὁ ψυχῆς ἀφιερωθῆ καρπός, τῷ πέμπτῳ τὴν ἀπόλαυσιν καὶ χρῆσιν ἡμεῖς αὐτοὶ σχήσομεν.<sup>1</sup> φησὶ γάρ· “ ἐν τῷ ἔτει τῷ πέμπτῳ φάγεσθε τὸν καρπὸν,” ἐπειδὴ τὸ γεγονός τοῦ πεποιηκότος ὕστερον ἐν ἅπασιν ἐξετάζεσθαι νόμος φύσεως ἀνεπίληπτος, ὥστε κἄν, εἰ τῶν δευτερείων ἀντιλαμβανοίμεθα, καὶ θαυμαστὸν ἡγείσθαι.
- 133 καὶ διὰ τοῦτο μέντοι τὸν καρπὸν τοῦ πέμπτου ἡμῖν ἀνατίθησιν, ὅτι αἰσθήσεως πεντὰς ἀριθμὸς οἰκείος καί, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, τὸ τρέφον τὸν νοῦν ἡμῶν ἐστὶν αἴσθησις, ἢ δι’ ὀφθαλμῶν τὰς χρωμάτων καὶ σχημάτων ποιότητος εὐτρεπίζουσα ἢ δι’ ὠτῶν παντοδαπὰς τὰς τῶν φωνῶν ιδιότητος ἢ διὰ μυκτῆρων ὀσμὰς ἢ χυλοὺς διὰ στόματος ἢ μαλακότητος εὐενδότους καὶ σκληρότητας ἀντιτύπους ἢ λειότητος καὶ τραχύτητας, <ψυχρότητας> τε αὖ καὶ θερμότητος διὰ τῆς ἀνὰ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα σκιδναμένης δυνάμεως ἢ ἔθος ὀνομάζειν ἀφήν.
- 134 XXXIII. Τῶν δὲ εἰρημένων παράδειγμα σαφέστατον οἱ Λείας υἱοί, τῆς ἀρετῆς, οὐχ ἅπαντες, ἀλλὰ τέταρτός τε καὶ πέμπτος. ἐπὶ μὲν γὰρ τοῦ τετάρτου φησὶ Μωυσῆς, ὅτι “ ἔσθη τοῦ τίκτειν,” καλεῖται δὲ Ἰούδας, ὃς ἐρμηνεύεται κυρίῳ ἐξομολόγησις. τὸν δὲ πέμπτου Ἰσάχαρ προσαγορεύει, μισθὸς δὲ μεταληφθεὶς καλεῖται. καὶ τεκοῦσα τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον ἢ ψυχὴ ὃ ἔπαθεν εὐθύς ἐξελάλησεν· “ ἐκάλεσε ” γάρ φησι “ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰσάχαρ, ὃ 135 ἐστὶ μισθός.” οὐκοῦν Ἰούδας ὁ εὐλογῶν τὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αὐτοῖς χρήσομεν.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 132-135

XXXII. When, therefore, in the fourth year and 132 in the number 4 all the soul's fruit shall have been consecrated, in the fifth year and in the number 5 we ourselves shall get the enjoyment and use of it ;
for he says, " in the fifth year ye shall eat the fruit." This accords with nature's incontrovertible law, that the place of creation is in all things lower than that of the Creator. That is why Moses treats it as a marvel that we should be recipients even of secondary privileges. Again, the reason why he 133 ascribes to us the fruit of the fifth year and number is that 5 is the number proper to sense-perception, and that, if we are to face facts, we must own that it is sense-perception that supplies food to our mind. By means of the eyes, it serves up to it the varying qualities of colours and forms ; through the ears, the peculiarities of sounds in all their diversity ; scents by way of the nostrils ; savours by the palate ; smoothness and roughness, yielding softness and resistant hardness, nay coldness and heat as well, by means of the faculty distributed over all the body, which we are in the habit of calling " touch."

XXXIII. A very clear illustration of what has been 134 said is found in the sons of Leah, who is Virtue ; not indeed in all of them, but in the fourth and fifth. For, after recording the birth of the fourth, Moses says that " she ceased from bearing " (Gen. xxx. 35), and his name is " Judah," which signifies " confession of praise to the Lord." The fifth she calls " Issachar," a name which interpreted means " reward." And the soul, upon giving birth to this character, at once gave utterance to her experience ; for it says, " She called his name Issachar, which is ' reward ' " (Gen. xxx. 18). It follows that Judah, the 135

PHILO

- θεὸν νοῦς καὶ τὰς εἰς αὐτὸν εὐχαρίστους ὑμνωδίας ἀπαύστως μελετῶν αὐτὸς ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν “ ἅγιος καὶ αἰνετὸς καρπὸς ” ἦν, οὐχ ὑπὸ γῆς δένδρων, ἀλλ’ ὑπὸ φύσεως λογικῆς καὶ σπουδαίας ἐνεχθείς. παρὸ καὶ ἡ τεκοῦσα αὐτὸν φύσις “ στήναι ” λέγεται “ τοῦ τίκτειν, ” ἐπεὶ καὶ πῆ τράπηται οὐκ εἶχεν ἔτι, πρὸς τὸν τελειότητος ὄρον ἐλθοῦσα· τῶν γὰρ ἀποκυθηθέντων κατορθωμάτων ἀπάντων ἄριστον καὶ τελειότατον γέννημα ὁ εἰς τὸν πατέρα
- 136 τοῦ παντὸς ὕμνος. ὁ δὲ πέμπτος υἱὸς τῆς κατὰ τὸν πέμπτον ἐνιαυτὸν τῶν φυτευθέντων ἀδιαφορεῖ χρήσεως· ὃ τε γὰρ γεωπόνος μισθὸν τρόπον τινα λαμβάνει παρὰ τῶν δένδρων ἔτει πέμπτῳ καὶ τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς γέννημα Ἰσάαχар [ὃς] μισθὸς ἐκαλεῖτο, καὶ σφόδρα εἰκότως, μετὰ τὸν
- [350] εὐχάριστον Ἰούδαν ἀποκυθηθείς· τῷ γὰρ | εὐχαρίστῳ μισθὸς αὐτὸ τὸ εὐχαριστεῖν ἀνταρκέστατος.
- 137 οἱ μὲν οὖν τῶν δένδρων καρποὶ γεννήματα λέγονται τῶν ἐχόντων, ὁ δὲ παιδείας καὶ φρονήσεως οὐκέτι ἀνθρώπου, μόνου δέ, ὡς φησι Μωυσῆς, τοῦ πανηγεμόνος· εἰπὼν γὰρ “ τὰ γεννήματα αὐτοῦ ” ἐπιφέρει· “ ἐγὼ εἶμι κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν, ” ἐναργέστατα παριστὰς ὅτι οὐ τὸ γέννημα καὶ ὁ τῆς
- 138 ψυχῆς καρπός, εἰς ἔστιν ὁ θεός. τούτῳ καὶ παρά τινι τῶν προφητῶν χρησθέν συναδέει τόδε· “ ἐξ ἐμοῦ ὁ καρπός σου εὐρηται. τίς σοφὸς καὶ συνήσει ταῦτα; συνετὸς καὶ γνώσεται αὐτά; ” οὐ γὰρ παντὸς ἀλλὰ μόνου σοφοῦ τὸ γνῶναι, τίνος ὁ διανοίας καρπός ἐστι.

<sup>a</sup> Or “ right (truly virtuous) actions.” See note on Quod Deus 100.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 497.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 135-138

mind that blesses God, and is ceaselessly engaged in conning hymns of thanksgiving to Him, was himself the fruit that is really "holy and for praise to God," fruit borne not by earth's trees but by those of a rational and virtuous nature. Accordingly the nature which gave birth to him is said to have "ceased from bearing," because she had no longer any way to turn, having reached the utmost bound of perfectness; for of all successful accomplishments<sup>a</sup> ever brought to the birth the best and most perfect is the hymn of praise to the Father of the universe.

The fifth son is identical with the using <sup>136</sup> in the fifth year of the trees that had been planted; for, on the one hand, the husbandman does receive a sort of pay or reward from the trees in the fifth year, and, on the other, the offspring of the soul was called Issachar, "pay" or "reward." He was very naturally so called, having been born next after Judah the thanksgiver; for the thanksgiver finds in thanksgiving itself an all-sufficient reward.

Now, whereas fruits borne by trees are called pro- <sup>137</sup> ducts of the persons who own them, the fruit of instruction and good sense is not like these spoken of as being a man's, but as belonging, as Moses says, to no other than the Ruler of all. For after the words, "His products,<sup>b</sup>" he adds, "I am the Lord your God," affording most clear proof that He to whom the product and the fruit of the soul pertains is One, even God. In harmony with this is the oracle given in <sup>138</sup> one of the prophets: "From Me is thy fruit found. Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? understanding, and he shall know them?" (Hosea xiv. 9 f.). For not everybody, but only the wise man knows, Whose is the fruit of intelligence.

PHILO

- 139 XXXIV. Περὶ μὲν οὖν γεωργίας τῆς πρεσβυτάτης καὶ ἱερωτάτης, ἣ τὸ αἷτιον πρὸς τὸν κόσμον, τὸ παμφορώτατον φυτῶν, χρῆται, καὶ περὶ τῆς ἐπομένης, ἣν ὁ ἀστείος ἐπιτηδεύει, καὶ περὶ τῆς φερομένης τετραδος τῶν ἄθλων<sup>1</sup> ἃ κατὰ προστάξεις καὶ ὑφηγήσεις νόμων συνεκροτεῖτο, ὡς
- 140 οἶόν τε ἦν εἶπομεν. τὴν δὲ τοῦ δικαίου Νῶε ἀμπελουργικὴν, εἶδος γεωργικῆς οὖσαν, ἐπισκεψώμεθα. λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ἤρξατο Νῶε ἄνθρωπος εἶναι γεωργὸς γῆς· καὶ ἐφύτευσεν ἀμπελῶνα, καὶ
- 141 ἔπιε τοῦ οἴνου, καὶ ἐμεθύσθη.” οὐκοῦν τὸ μέθης φυτὸν ἐξεργάζεται τεχνικῶς καὶ ἐπιστημόνως ὁ δίκαιος τῶν ἀφρόνων ἄτεχνον καὶ πλημμελῆ ποιουμένων αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐπιστάσιαν, ὥστε ἀναγκαῖον τὰ προσήκοντα περὶ μέθης εἰπεῖν· εὐθύς γὰρ εἰσόμεθα καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ παρέχοντος αὐτῇ τὰς ἀφορμὰς φυτοῦ. τὰ μὲν οὖν εἰρημένα τῷ νομοθέτῃ περὶ μέθης εἰσόμεθα ἐπ’ ἀκριβείας αὐθις, νυνὶ δὲ ἐξερευνήσωμεν ὅσα καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἔδοξεν.
- 142 XXXV. Ἐσπουδάσθη δὲ παρὰ πολλοῖς τῶν φιλοσόφων ἡ σκέψις οὐ μετρίως. προτείνεται δὲ οὕτως, εἰ μεθυσθήσεται ὁ σοφός. ἔστι τοίνυν τὸ μεθύειν διττόν, ἓν μὲν ἴσον τι τῷ οἰνοῦσθαι, ἕτερον
- 143 δὲ ἴσον τῷ ληρεῖν ἐν οἴνῳ. τῶν δὲ ἐπιχειρησάντων τῇ προτάσει οἱ μὲν ἔφασαν μῆτε ἀκράτῳ πλείονι χρῆσεσθαι<sup>2</sup> τὸν σοφὸν μῆτε ληρήσειν· τὸ μὲν γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> καὶ is omitted before ἃ κατὰ from Wendland's conj.

<sup>2</sup> mss. χρῆσθαι.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 497.

<sup>b</sup> Or “the word μεθύειν is used in two senses.”

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 498.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 139-143

XXXIV. We have discoursed to the best of our 139 ability concerning the earliest and most sacred husbandry, plied by the First Cause in dealing with the world, that most fertile of plants ; and concerning the husbandry that comes next in order, carried on by the man of worth ; and concerning the number 4<sup>a</sup> which carries off the prizes conferred upon it by the injunctions and directions found in laws.

Let us now turn our attention to the righteous 140 Noah's work on his vineyard, which is a special form of husbandry. The account runs : " Noah began to be a husbandman, a tiller of the soil :
and he planted a vineyard and drank of the wine, and became drunk " (Gen. ix. 20 f.). We see from these words that the righteous man tills the tree, that is the means of drunkenness, with skill and knowledge, while those who are devoid of good sense tend it in an unskilful and faulty way. This 141 renders it necessary for us to make some pertinent remarks regarding drunkenness ; for, as we treat of it, we shall ascertain also the powers and properties of the tree which furnishes it with the material which produces it. The Lawgiver's words regarding drunkenness we shall acquaint ourselves with another time : let us at present engage in a thorough investigation of the sentiments of other persons.

XXXV. Many philosophers have given no slight 142 attention to the question ; which is propounded in the form " Will the wise man get drunk ? " Now, there are two ways of getting drunk <sup>b</sup> ; one is equivalent to drinking heavily, the other to being silly in your cups.<sup>c</sup> Among those who have tackled the 143 problem some have maintained that the wise man will neither take strong drink in excess nor become

PHILO

- ἀμάρτημα, τὸ δὲ ἀμαρτήματος εἶναι ποιητικόν, 144 ἐκάτερον δὲ ἀλλότριον κατορθοῦντος· οἱ δὲ τὸ μὲν οἰνοῦσθαι καὶ σπουδαίῳ προσῆκον ἀπεφήναντο, τὸ δὲ ληρεῖν ἀνοίκειον· τὴν γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ φρόνησιν ἱκανὴν εἶναι τοῖς βλάπτειν ἐπιχειροῦσιν ἀντιστατήσαι καὶ τὸν ἐπὶ τῇ ψυχῇ<sup>1</sup> νεωτερισμὸν αὐτῶν καθελεῖν· δύναμιν δὲ περιβεβλησθαι φρόνησιν παθῶν σβεστήριον εἶτε ὑπὸ φλεγμαίνοντος ἔρωτος οἴστρω<sup>2</sup> ἀνερριπισμένων εἶτε ὑπὸ πολλοῦ καὶ ζέοντος ἐξημμένων οἴνου, δι' ἣν ὑπεράνω στήσεται· [351] ἐπεὶ | καὶ τῶν κατὰ ποταμοῦ βαθέος ἢ θαλάττης δυομένων οἱ μὲν ἄπειροι τοῦ ναυτίλλεσθαι διαφθεί-ρονται, οἱ δὲ τοῦ πράγματος ἐπιστήμονες τάχιστα διασώζονται· καὶ μὴν ὡσπερ χειμάρρους ὁ πολὺς ἄκρατος ἐπικλύζων τὴν ψυχὴν τοτὲ μὲν βρίθουσαν εἰς ἀμαθίας ἔσχατον βυθὸν κατέρριψε, τοτὲ δὲ ὑπὸ τῆς σωτηρίου παιδείας ἐπικουφιζομένην καὶ ἐπελαφριζομένην οὐδὲν ἴσχυσε βλάψαι.
 145 οἱ δὲ τὸ μέγεθος τῆς περὶ τὸ πάθος ὑπερβολῆς οὐ κατανόησαντες, οἶμαι, τοῦ σοφοῦ μετεωροπολοῦντα αὐτὸν ὡσπερ οἱ τὰ πτηνὰ θηρῶντες ἐπὶ γῆν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ κατεβίβασαν, ἴν' εἰς τὰς ὁμοίας κῆρας ἀγάγωσιν, οὐδ' ἰδρύντες<sup>3</sup> ἀρετῆς εἰς ὕψος ἔφασαν, ὅτι χρησάμενος οἴνω πλείονι τοῦ μετρίου πάντως ἀκράτωρ αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ γενόμενος διαμαρτήσεται καὶ οὐ χεῖρας μόνον ὑπ' ἀσθενείας οἶα τῶν ἀθλητῶν οἱ νενικημένοι καθεῖς, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐχένα καὶ κεφαλὴν παραβαλὼν καὶ ὀκλάσας καὶ ὄλον τὸ σῶμα κατα-

<sup>1</sup> τῇ ψυχῇ is kept with mss. : Wend. τὴν ψυχὴν.

<sup>2</sup> mss. οἴστρω : Wend. οἴστρων.

<sup>3</sup> ἰδρύντες conj. Tr. : U ἰδρῶντες, MGF ἰδρῶτες.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 498.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 143-145

silly and maudlin ; the latter being a sin, and the former productive of sin, and both alike alien to him whose standard of conduct is the highest. Others, while regarding a condition of silliness as 144 foreign to a man of moral excellence, have pronounced heavy drinking to befit him, seeing that the good sense which resides in him is capable of holding its own against everything that attempts to injure him, and of baffling their efforts to change the constitution of his soul. They hold that good sense is an armour which has power to quench passions, whether fanned by the stinging blasts of inflaming love, or kindled by the heat of much wine ; and that in virtue of his good sense he will come off victorious. They point out that, when people sink in a deep river or in the sea, those who cannot swim are drowned, while those who know how to swim escape at once ; and that a quantity of strong drink is like a torrent washing over the soul ; in one case, as it sinks, plunging it into the lowest depth of ignorance, in another case, as it is buoyed up and kept afloat by salutary instruction, altogether powerless to hurt it. The others,<sup>a</sup> 145 failing, as I think, to recognize the completeness of the wise man's superiority to every passion, have brought him down to earth from heaven whose skies he haunts, treating him as fowlers treat the birds they catch, and being bent on bringing him into as evil a plight, and not setting him on virtue's lofty summit, have declared that after taking an immoderate quantity of wine he will certainly lose self-control and commit sin, and not only, like vanquished athletes, let his hands fall from sheer weakness, but let his neck and head drop and his knees give way, and, collapsing in

PHILO

- 146 συρεῖς ἀναπесεῖται. XXXVI. τοῦτο μέντοι προμαθῶν οὐκ ἄν ποτε ἀξιῶσειεν ἐκῶν εἰς πολυουίας ἀγῶνα ἐλθεῖν, εἰ μὴ μεγάλα εἶη τὰ διαφέροντα, σωτηρία πατρίδος ἢ τιμὴ γονέων ἢ τέκνων καὶ τῶν οἰκειοτάτων σωμαίων ἀσφάλεια ἢ συνόλως
- 147 ἰδίων τε καὶ κοινῶν ἐπανόρθωσις πραγμάτων. οὐδὲ γὰρ θανάσιμον φάρμακον προσενέγκαιτο ἄν, εἰ μὴ πάνυ βιάζοντο οἱ καιροὶ καθάπερ ἐκ πατρίδος μετανίστασθαι τοῦ βίου· φάρμακον δέ, εἰ καὶ οὐ θανάτου, μανίας γοῦν ἄκρατον εἶναι αἷτιον συμ-βέβηκε. διὰ τί δ' οὐχὶ καὶ μανίαν λεκτέον θάνατον, ᾧ τὸ κράτιστον ἀποθνήσκει τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, ὁ νοῦς; ἀλλὰ μοι δοκεῖ τις ἄν εἰκότως τὸν διακρίνοντα καὶ διαλύοντα ψυχὴν τε καὶ σῶμα ὡς κουφότερον ἀντὶ βαρυτέρου τοῦ κατὰ τὴν ἔκστασιν,
- 148 εἴ τις ἦν αἴρεσις, ἀνευδοιάστως ἐλέσθαι. διὰ τοῦτο μέντοι καὶ τὸν εὐρετὴν τῆς περὶ τὸν οἶνον ἐργασίας μαινόλην ἐκάλεσαν οἱ πρῶτοι καὶ τὰς ἐξ αὐτοῦ κατασχέτους γενομένας βάκχας μαινάδας, ἐπεὶ μανίας καὶ παραφροσύνης αἷτιος τοῖς ἀπλήστως ἐμφορουμένοις ὁ οἶνος.
- 149 XXXVII. Τὰ μὲν οὖν ὡσανεὶ προοίμια τῆς σκέψεως τοιαυτὰ ἐστί, τὸν δὲ περὶ αὐτῆς λόγον ἤδη περαίνωμεν διπλοῦν ὡς εἰκὸς ὄντα, τὸν μὲν ὅτι ὁ σοφὸς μεθυσθῆσεται κατασκευάζοντα, τὸν δὲ τὸναντίον ὅτι οὐ μεθυσθῆσεται βεβαιούμενον.
- 150 τοῦ δὲ προτέρου τὰς πίστεις ἀρμόττον λέγειν πρότερον, ποιησαμένους ἐνθένδε τὴν ἀρχήν· τῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "entirely lose heart."

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 146-150

every part, sink to the ground.<sup>a</sup> XXXVI. Having 146 learned this beforehand he will never think fit voluntarily to engage in a drinking-contest, unless the matters at issue are of great moment, a fatherland's deliverance, respect for parents, children's safety or that of the persons of those very near and dear, or, in a word, a putting on a right footing of private and public concerns. No more would a wise 147 man take a deadly poison, unless the crisis were such as absolutely to compel him to depart from life as though he were leaving his country. And strong drink is a poison bringing about not death indeed but madness. And yet why should we not call madness death, seeing that by it mind dies, the noblest part of us? Nay it appears to me that, were a choice offered, a man would be likely to choose without hesitation the death that separates and dissolves the union of soul and body, in preference to that of going out of one's senses, feeling that he was choosing the lighter in place of the heavier. It was for this 148 reason that the earliest inhabitants of the world called the inventor of the culture of the vine Maenoles and the Bacchantes whom its frenzy seized Maenads, since wine is the cause of madness and loss of sound sense in those who imbibe it over freely.

XXXVII. Such then is what we may call the pre- 149 lude to our inquiry. It is time for us to state in full the argument bearing upon it. That argument obviously admits of two contentions, one establishing the thesis that the wise man will get drunk, the other maintaining the contrary, that he will not get drunk. It will be convenient to take first the 150 proofs by which the former thesis is supported. We will begin by remarking that some things are

PHILO

- πραγμάτων τὰ μὲν ὁμώνυμα, τὰ δὲ συνώνυμα εἶναι συμβέβηκεν. ὁμωνυμία δὲ καὶ συνωνυμία [352] τάναντία ὁμολογεῖται, | ὅτι ὁμωνυμία μὲν κατὰ πολλῶν ὑποκειμένων ἐν ὄνομα, συνωνυμία δὲ καθ’ 151 ἐνὸς ὑποκειμένου <πολλά>. ἡ κυνὸς φωνὴ πάντως ὁμώνυμος ἐμφερομένων πλειόνων ἀνομοίων, ἃ δι’ αὐτῆς σημαίνεται· τό τε γὰρ χερσαῖον ὑλακτικὸν ζῶον κύων καὶ θῆρ ὁ θαλάττιος καὶ ὁ οὐράνιος ἀστῆρ, ὃν ὀπωρινὸν οἱ ποιηταὶ καλοῦσιν, ὅτι τῆς ὀπώρας ἄρτι ἠβώσεως ἐπιτέλλει τοῦ τελεσφορηθῆναι τε χάριν αὐτὴν καὶ πεπανθῆναι, καὶ προσέτι ὁ ἀπὸ τῆς κυνικῆς αἰρέσεως ὄρμηθεις φιλόσοφος, Ἀρίστιππος καὶ Διογένης καὶ ἄλλων οἱ τὰ αὐτὰ ἐπιτηδεύειν ἠξίωσαν ἀπερίληπτος 152 ἀριθμὸς ἀνθρώπων. ἄλλαι δ’ εἰσὶ προσ-ρήσεις διάφοροι κατὰ σηματομένου ἐνὸς ὡς ἰός, οἰστός, βέλος— τὸ γὰρ διὰ τῆς τόξου νευρᾶς ἐπὶ τὸν σκοπὸν ἀφίεμενον πάντα ταῦτα λέγεται—· καὶ πάλιν εἰρεσία, κώπη, πλάτη, τὸ πρὸς πλοῦν ἰσοδυναμοῦν ἰστίοις· ὁπότε γὰρ μὴ δύναιτο χρῆσθαι ναῦς κατὰ νημερίας ἢ ἀντιπνοίας ἰστίοις, πρόσκωποι καθίσαντες οἷς ἐπιμελὲς καὶ οἶα ταρσοὺς ἐκατέρωθεν ἀποτείναντες ὑπόπτερον αὐτὴν φέρεσθαι βιά-ζονται, ἢ δὲ ἐξαιρομένη πρὸς ὕψος, ἐπιτρέχουσα τοῖς κύμασι μᾶλλον ἢ ἐντέμνουσα ταῦτα, τροχάζουσα ταχυναυτεῖ καὶ ναυλοχωτάτοις ὑποδρόμοις 153 ἐνορμίζεται. καὶ μὴν πάλιν σκίπων, βακτηρία, ράβδος ἐνὸς ὑποκειμένου διάφοροι

<sup>a</sup> ἐμφέρεσθαι, here used of different senses being implied in one word, is found in § 154 in the sense of “occur,” “be used.”

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 150-153

homonymous and others synonymous. Everyone will allow that homonymy and synonymy are opposites, homonymy meaning one name applied to many objects, synonymy many names applied to one object. The word "dog" is certainly 151 homonymous, several dissimilar objects being included under it,<sup>a</sup> all of which it is used to signify. The barking animal on the land is a "dog"; so is the monster found in the sea; and the star in the heavens which the poets call the fruit star, because just when the summer fruit has reached its prime this star rises to bring it to perfection and to ripen it. The name "dog" is applied moreover to the man whose philosophy takes its colour from the Cynic school, Aristippus, Diogenes, and ever so many others who found it congenial to conform themselves to their principles.

There are other names which are different though 152 one thing is meant by them, as "arrow," "shaft," "dart"; for the thing discharged at the mark from the string of the bow is called by all these names. Again, the instrument which does as well as sails for propelling a vessel is called an "oar," "scull," "rowing-sweep." For when, owing to a calm or head wind, a vessel cannot make use of sails, the men, whose business it is, take their seats at the oars, and stretching out from each side wing-like blades, force the vessel to be borne along as though it were flying. The vessel, lifted high out of the water, not so much cutting the waves as coursing over them, makes a quick run, and is soon safely moored in harbour.

Once more "staff," "walking-stick," 153 "rod" are different names by which we call one object, with which we can beat someone, on which κλήσεις, ᾧ τύπτειν καὶ ἀκραδάντως σκηρίπτεσθαι καὶ ἐπερείδεσθαι καὶ ἄλλα πλείω ποιεῖν ἔνεστι. ταῦτα δ' οὐ μακρολογοῦντες ὄλως εἶπομεν, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ σαφέστερον γνῶναι τὸ ζητούμενον.

PHILO

154 XXXVIII. τὸν ἄκρατον ὡσπερ οἶνον, οὕτως καὶ μέθυ οἱ παλαιοὶ ἐκάλουν· πολλαχοῦ γοῦν τῆς ποιήσεώς ἐστι τοῦτ' οὖνομα ἐμφερόμενον, ὥστ' εἰ τὰ συνωνυμοῦντα καθ' ἑνὸς ὑποκειμένου λέγεται, οἶνος καὶ μέθυ, καὶ τὰ ἀπὸ τούτων οὐδὲν ὅτι μὴ φωναῖς διοίσει μόνον, τό τε οἰνοῦσθαι καὶ
155 τὸ μεθύειν [ἐν]· ἐκάτερον δὲ πλείονος οἶνου χρῆσιν ἐμφαίνει, ἣν πολλῶν ἔνεκα αἰτιῶν οὐκ ἂν ἀποστρέφοιτο ὁ σπουδαῖος. εἰ δὲ οἰνωθήσεται, καὶ μεθυσθήσεται, χεῖρον οὐδὲν ἐκ τῆς μέθης διατεθείς, ἀλλὰ ταῦτόν ὅπερ καὶ [ὁ] ἐκ ψιλῆς τῆς οἰνώσεως παθῶν.

156 Μία μὲν ἀπόδειξις περὶ τοῦ τὸν σοφὸν μεθυσθῆναι λέλεκται, δευτέρα δ' ἐστὶ τοιαύτη· σχεδὸν οἱ νῦν ἄνθρωποι τοῖς προτέροις ἔξω μέρους βραχέος οὐδὲν ὁμοιότροπον ζηλοῦν ἀξιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν λόγοις καὶ ἐν ἔργοις τὸ μὴ συνωδὸν καὶ διαφωνοῦν
157 ἐπιδείκνυνται· τοὺς μὲν γὰρ λόγους ὑγιαίνοντας καὶ ἐρρωμένους εἰς πάθος ἀνήκεστον καὶ φθορὰν περιήγαγον ἀντὶ σφριγώσης καὶ ἀθλητικῆς ὄντως
[353] | εὐεξίας οὐδὲν ὅτι μὴ νοσοῦν κατασκευάσαντες καὶ τὸν πλήρη καὶ ναστόν, ὡς ἔφη τις, ὑπ' εὐτονίας ὄγκον εἰς παρὰ φύσιν οἰδούσης καχεξίας

<sup>a</sup> i.e. "in many cases the wise man would see no reason for avoiding this."

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 153-157

we can firmly support ourselves, on which we can lean, and with which we can do several other things. I have given these examples, not just because my tongue runs on, but that we may get a clearer idea of the subject which we are investigating.

XXXVIII. The ancients called strong 154 drink "wine" and an "intoxicant" indifferently: as we see from the frequency with which this last word occurs in poetry. If, then, "wine" and "intoxicant" are used as synonyms of one object, their derivatives "to be filled with wine" and "to be intoxicated" will differ only in word; for either 155 term denotes taking more wine than usual, a thing which several motives<sup>a</sup> might induce a really excellent man to do. But if such an one will get filled with wine, he will get drunk, and be in no worse plight for being drunk, but in precisely the same state as he was brought to by being filled with wine.

One proof of the wise man's getting drunk has 156 been mentioned; there is a second to the following effect. Broadly speaking, the men of the present day, apart from a small fraction of them, do not resemble those of former times in their aims and enthusiasms, but both in language and in action exhibit tendencies wholly out of harmony with theirs. Language that was once healthy and robust they 157 have turned into a jargon hopelessly depraved. For a style sound and full of vitality as an athlete's frame they have substituted a sickly form of speech. A full and massive type, possessed, as someone has said, of a solidity due to its firmness of fibre, they debase into a bloated mis-growth of disease, to which they give a seeming loftiness and grandeur by ἀγαγόντες καὶ κενῶ φύσῃματι μόνον ἐπαίροντες, ὁ δι' ἔνδειαν τῆς συνεχοῦσης δυνάμεως, ὅταν 158 μάλιστα περιταθῆ, ῥήγνυται. τὰς δὲ πράξεις ἐπαινώσεως<sup>1</sup> καὶ σπουδῆς ἀξίας καὶ αὐτάς, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ἄρρενας ἐξεθήλυναν αἰσχροῦς ἀντὶ καλῶν ἐργαζόμενοι, ὡς ὀλίγους εἶναι παντάπασιν ἐκατέ-ροις, ἔργοις τε καὶ λόγοις, ἀρχαιοτρόπου ζηλώσεως 159 ἐρῶντας. τοιγαροῦν ἐπ' ἐκείνων ποιηταὶ καὶ λογογράφοι καὶ ὅσοι περὶ τὰ ἄλλα μουσικῆς ἐσπούδαζον ἤνθουν, οὐ τὰς ἀκοὰς διὰ τῆς ἐν ῥυθμοῖς φωνῆς ἀφηδύνοντές τε καὶ θρύπτοντες, ἀλλὰ εἴ τι τῆς διανοίας κατεαγὸς καὶ κεκλασμένον ἐγείροντες καὶ ὅσον ἐμμελὲς αὐτῆς ἀρμοζόμενοι φύσεως καὶ ἀρετῆς ὀργάνοις<sup>2</sup>. ἐφ' ἡμῶν δὲ ὄψαρτυταὶ καὶ σιτοπόνοι καὶ ὅσοι τῆς ἐν βαφικῇ καὶ μυρειφικῇ τεχνῖται περιεργίας, αἰεὶ τι καινὸν χρῶμα ἢ σχῆμα ἢ ἀτμὸν ἢ χυλὸν ἐπιτειχίζοντες ταῖς αἰσθήσεσιν, ὅπως τὸν ἡγεμόνα πορθήσωσι νοῦν.

PHILO

 160 XXXIX. Τίνος δὴ χάριν τούτων ἐμνήσθη; ἵν' ἐπιδείξω, ὅτι καὶ τὸν ἄκρατον οὐχ ὁμοίως οἱ νῦν τοῖς πάλαι προσφέρονται. νῦν μὲν γὰρ ἄχρι τοῦ σώμα καὶ ψυχῆν παρεθῆναι πίνουσιν ἀθρόως καὶ ἀπνευστί, χαίνοντες ἔτι καὶ προσεπιφέρειν τοῖς οἰνοχοουμένοις κελεύοντες, κἂν διαμέλλωσιν ἀγανακτοῦντες, ὅτι τὸν θερμὸν λεγόμενον παρ' αὐ-τοῖς πότον<sup>3</sup> παραψύχουσι, καὶ τὸ παράκομμα τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. γενέσεως.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὀργίοις.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ποτόν.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 157-160

empty puffing and blowing, which, in default of any confining power, bursts when distention has reached its limit. Actions, meriting praise and calling out 158 enthusiasm, and, if the expression may be permitted, masculine, they have rendered effeminate, and in performing them made them base instead of noble. The result is that whether on the side of action or of speech, there are very few indeed who take delight in the objects that kindled the ardour of the men of old. Consequently in their 159 times poets and chroniclers flourished and all who engaged in literary work of other kinds, and they did not at once charm and enervate men's ears by the rhythm of their language, but they revived any faculty of the mind that had broken down and lost its tone, and every true note of it they kept in tune with the instruments of nature and of virtue. But in our days it is chefs and confectioners that flourish, and experts in making dyes and concocting unguents. These are ever aiming at sacking the citadel of Mind, by bringing to bear upon the senses some novelty in shade of colour or shape of dress or perfume or savoury dish.

XXXIX. What has been my object in recalling 160 these things? My object has been to make it clear that the modern way of taking strong drink is not the same as the ancient way. For nowadays men go on till body and soul are unstrung, drinking huge draughts without stopping, open-mouthed for more, and ordering the servants to replenish the cups they have just filled and shewing arrogance if they delay, because all such delay cools what they are pleased to call the "heat" of the carousal. They give an exhibition to their fellow-guests of that counterfeit

PHILO

- γυμνικῶν, τὸν παροίνιον ἀγῶνα, πρὸς τοὺς συν-όντας ἐπιδείκνυνται, ἐν ᾧ μεγάλα καὶ καλὰ ἀλλήλους ἀντιδρῶσιν, ὧτα καὶ ρίνας καὶ χειρῶν ἄκρους δακτύλους καὶ ὅποια δ' ἂν τύχη μέρη τοῦ 161 σώματος ἀπεσθίοντες. ταῦτ' ἐστὶ τῆς ἠβώσης καὶ νεωτέρας καὶ ἄρτι ἀκμαζούσης ἄθλα, ὡς ἔοικεν, εὐφροσύνης, τῆς δὲ ἀρχαίας καὶ πρεσβυτέρας τὰναντία· πάσης γὰρ καλῆς πράξεως ἀφ' ἱερῶν τελείων οἱ πρότεροι κατήρχοντο, νομίζοντες μάλιστα οὕτως αἴσιον ἀποβῆσεσθαι τὸ τέλος αὐτοῖς, καὶ πρὶν εὐξασθαί τε καὶ θῦσαι, καὶ εἰ σφόδρα τοῦ πράττειν ἐπέσπενδον οἱ καιροί, πάντως ἀνέμενον οὐκ αἰεὶ τὸ ταχὺ τοῦ βραδέος ἠγούμενοι κρεῖττον· οὐ προμηθὲς μὲν γὰρ τάχος βλαβερόν, βραδυτῆς δὲ μετ' εὐελπιστίας ὠφέλιμον.
 162 εἰδότες οὖν, ὅτι καὶ ἡ τοῦ οἴνου ἀπόλαυσις τε καὶ χρήσις δέεται πολλῆς ἐπιμελείας, [354] οὔτε ἄδην<sup>1</sup> | οὔτε αἰεὶ προσεφέροντο τὸν ἄκρατον, ἀλλ' ἐν τε κόσμῳ καὶ καιρῷ προσήκοντι. πρότερον γὰρ εὐξάμενοι καὶ θυσίας ἀναγαγόντες καὶ ἱλασάμενοι τὸ θεῖον, σώματα καὶ ψυχὰς καθηράμενοι, τὰ μὲν λουτροῖς, τὰ δὲ νόμων καὶ παιδείας ὀρθῆς ρεύμασι, φαιδροὶ καὶ γεγηθότες πρὸς ἀνεμιμένην δίαιταν ἐτρέποντο, μηδὲ οἴκαδε πολλάκις ἀφικόμενοι, ἀλλ' ἐν οἷς ἔθυσαν ἱεροῖς διατελοῦντες, ἵνα καὶ τῶν θυσιῶν μεμνημένοι καὶ τὸν τόπον αἰδούμενοι ἱεροπρεπεστάτην ὡς ἀληθῶς ἄγωσιν εὐωχίαν, μήτε λόγῳ μήτε ἔργῳ διαμαρτάνοντες.<sup>2</sup> 163 ἀπὸ τούτου γέ τοί φασι τὸ μεθύειν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἄρδην.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. διαπατοῦντες.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 160-163

parody of the athletic games, namely the tipsy contest. In this they practise on one another magnificent passes, gnawing off ears and noses and tops of fingers and any parts of the body that come handy.

These are, apparently, the contests indulged in by the gladness of these later times, which flourishes to-day and is just reaching its full growth; but far other were those of the more lofty gladness of old. For our forefathers inaugurated every noble business with sacrifices duly offered, deeming that an auspicious result would by this means be ensured. However urgently the crisis might call for immediate action, they never failed to tarry to pray and offer sacrifices beforehand, deeming that what is rapid is not always superior to what is slow; for rapidity without forethought is hurtful, while slowness prompted by the prospect of a happy issue is beneficial.

Knowing, then, that, like other things, the use and enjoyment of wine needs great care, they took strong drink neither in great quantity nor at all times, but in such order and season as was befitting. For after having first prayed and presented sacrifices and implored the favour of the Deity, when they had cleansed their bodies by ablutions and their souls by streams of holy ordinances and instructions in the right way, radiant and gladsome they turned to relaxation and enjoyment, in many cases not after returning home, but remaining in the temples in which they had sacrificed in order that both the recollection of their sacrifices and their reverence for the place might lead them to celebrate a festivity in actual truth most holy, sinning neither in word nor deed.

You must know that it was from this, so it is said, that "getting drunk"

PHILO

- ὠνομάσθαι, ὅτι μετὰ τὸ θύειν ἔθος ἦν τοῖς πρότερον οἰνοῦσθαι. τίσι δὴ μᾶλλον οἰκείος ἂν εἴη τῆς τοῦ ἀκράτου χρήσεως ὁ λεχθεὶς τρόπος ἢ σοφοῖς ἀνδράσιν, οἷς καὶ τὸ πρὸ τῆς μέθης ἔργον 164 ἀρμόττει τὸ θύειν; σχεδὸν γὰρ οὐδὲ εἰς τῶν φαύλων πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἱεουργεῖ, κἂν ἐνδεδεχεῖς μυρίους βόας ἀνὰ πᾶσαν ἡμέραν ἀνάγη<sup>1</sup>. τὸ γὰρ ἀναγκαιότατον ἱερεῖον αὐτῷ λελώβηται, ὁ νοῦς, λώβας δὲ οὐ θέμις βωμῶν προσάψασθαι.
- 165 Δεύτερος μὲν δὴ λόγος οὗτος εἴρηται, δεικνὺς ὅτι οὐκ ἀλλότριον σπουδαίου τὸ μεθύειν, XL. τρίτος δ' ἐστὶν ἀπὸ διαφερούσης τῆς πρὸς τὴν ἐτυμολογίαν πιθανότητος ἠρητημένος· τὴν γὰρ μέθην οὐ μόνον, ἐπειδὴ μετὰ θυσίας ἐπιτελεῖται, νομίζουσί τινες εἰρῆσθαι, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ μεθέσεως
- 166 ψυχῆς αἰτία γίνεσθαι. μεθίεται δὲ ὁ μὲν τῶν ἀφρόνων λογισμὸς εἰς πλειόνων χύσιν<sup>2</sup> ἀμαρ-τημάτων, ὁ δὲ τῶν ἐμφρόνων εἰς ἀνέσεως καὶ εὐθυμίας καὶ ἰλαρότητος ἀπόλαυσιν· ἡδίων γὰρ αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ νήφοντος οἰνωθεὶς ὁ σοφὸς γίνεσθαι, ὥστε οὐδ' ἂν ταύτη διαμαρτάνοιμεν φάσκοντες ὅτι
- 167 μεθυσθῆσεται. πρὸς δὲ τούτοις κἀκεῖνο λεκτέον, ὅτι οὐ σκυθρωπὸν καὶ αὐστηρὸν<sup>3</sup> τὸ τῆς σοφίας εἶδος, ὑπὸ συννοίας καὶ κατηφείας ἐσταλμένον, ἀλλ' ἔμπαλιν ἰλαρὸν καὶ γαληνίζον, μεστὸν γηθοσύνης καὶ χαρᾶς· ὑφ' ὧν πολλάκις προήχθη

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγάγη.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἰσχυσιν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. αὐχημηρὸν.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 498.

<sup>b</sup> Or "based on another and different form of the argument from etymology." See App. p. 498.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 163-167

got its name, because it was the custom of the men of earlier times to indulge in wine "after sacrificing."<sup>a</sup> Now with whom, I ask, would the mode of using strong drink just described be more in keeping than with wise men, with whose character the act which precedes the drunkenness, namely the act of sacrificing, is also in perfect accord? For we may venture to say that there is not a single 164 bad man who really performs a sacrificial act, even though he lead to the altar in unceasing procession ten thousand bullocks every day; for in his case the mind, the most essential victim, is a blemished thing, and no blemish may come into contact with an altar.

Such is a second argument put forward to shew 165 that getting drunk is not a thing inconsistent with moral excellence. XL. There is a third, possessing etymological plausibility<sup>b</sup> in a very high degree. For some hold that drunkenness is so termed, not only because it follows the performance of sacrifice, but because it is also the cause of a letting go or release of soul. It is to 166 give vent to many sins that the reasoning faculty of fools is let go, but that of sensible men for the enjoyment of relaxation, cheerfulness, and good spirits; for the wise man becomes a more genial person after indulging in wine than when he is sober, and accordingly we should not be wrong in asserting on this ground as well as on those others that he will get drunk.

We must re- 167 mark furthermore that the countenance of wisdom is not scowling and severe, contracted by deep thought and depression of spirit, but on the contrary cheerful and tranquil, full of joy and gladness, feelings which often prompt a man to be sportive and

- τις οὐκ ἀμούσως παῖζαί τι καὶ χαριεντίσασθαι, παιδιὰν μέντοι τῇ σεμνότητι καὶ σπουδῇ καθάπερ ἐν ἡρμοσμένη λύρα φθόγγοις ἀντιφώνοις εἰς ἑνὸς
- 168 μέλους κρᾶσιν συνηχοῦσαν. κατὰ γοῦν τὸν ἱερώτατον Μωυσῆν τέλος ἐστὶ σοφίας παιδιὰ καὶ γέλως, ἀλλ' οὐχ ἅ τοῖς νηπίοις ἄνευ φρονήσεως πᾶσι μελετᾶται, ἀλλ' ἅ τοῖς ἤδη πολιοῖς οὐ χρόνῳ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ βουλαῖς ἀγαθαῖς γεγονόσιν. οὐχ ὄρας ὅτι τὸν αὐτηκόου καὶ αὐτομαθοῦς καὶ αὐτουργοῦ τῆς ἐπιστήμης ἀρυσάμενον οὐ μετέχοντα γέλωτος, ἀλλ' αὐτὸν γέλωτα εἶναι φησιν;
- 169 οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰσαάκ, ὃς ἐρμηνεύεται γέλως, ᾧ παίζειν μετὰ τῆς ὑπομονῆς, ἣν Ῥεβέκκαν Ἑβραῖοι
- [355] καλοῦσιν, ἀρμόττει. XLI. τὴν δὲ | θείαν παιδιὰν τῆς ψυχῆς ἰδιώτη μὲν οὐ θέμις ἰδεῖν, βασιλεῖ δὲ ἕξεσθαι, ᾧ πάμπολον χρόνον παρώκησεν, εἰ καὶ μὴ πάντ' ἐνώκησε τὸν αἰῶνα, σοφία. προσαγορεύεται οὗτος Ἀβιμέλεχ, ὃς διακύψας τῇ θυρίδι, τῷ διοιχθέντι καὶ φωσφόρῳ τῆς διανοίας ὄμματι, τὸν Ἰσαάκ εἶδε παίζοντα μετὰ Ῥεβέκκας τῆς γυναικὸς αὐτοῦ.
- 170 τί γὰρ ἄλλο ἐμπρεπές<sup>1</sup> ἔργον σοφῷ ἢ τὸ παίζειν καὶ γανοῦσθαι καὶ συνευφραίνεσθαι τῇ τῶν καλῶν ὑπομονῇ; ἐξ ὧν ὅτι καὶ μεθυσθήσεται δῆλόν ἐστι τῆς μέθης ἠθοποιοῦσης καὶ ἄνεσιν καὶ ἀφέλειαν<sup>2</sup> ἐργαζομένης· ὁ γὰρ
- 171 ἄκρατος τὰ τῇ φύσει προσόντα ἐπιτείνειν καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐμπρέπει.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀφέλειαν: so Wend.: ἀφέλειαν is Mangey's conjecture.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 167-171

jocular in a perfectly refined way. Such sportive-ness is in harmony with a dignified self-respect, a harmony like that of a lyre tuned to give forth a single melody by a blending of answering notes.

Moses, at all events, holiest of men, 168 shews us that sport and merriment is the height of wisdom, not the sport which children of all sorts indulge in, paying no heed to good sense, but such as is seen in those who are now become grey-headed not only in respect of age but of thoughtfulness. Do you not observe that when he is speaking of the man who drew directly from the well of knowledge, listening to no other, learning through no other, resorting to no agency whatever, he does not say that he had a part in laughter, but that he was laughter itself? I am speaking of Isaac, whose name means 169
"laughter," and whom it well befits to sport with "patient waiting," who is called in Hebrew "Rebecca." XLI. For the sacred sporting of the soul is a sight not permissible to an ordinary citizen, but it is open to a king, with whom wisdom was for a very long time a guest, if indeed she did not make him her permanent abode. The name of this king is Abimelech. He looked out at the window, the mind's eye wide-opened and admitting light, and saw Isaac sporting with Rebecca his wife (Gen. xxvi. 8). What other occupation is 170 seemly for a wise man rather than bright sportive-ness and making merry in the company of one who waits patiently for all that is beautiful? Hence it is evident that he will get drunk also, seeing that drunkenness benefits the character, saving it from overstrain and undue intensity. For strong drink is likely to intensify natural tend- 171

PHILO

σφοδρύνειν ἔοικεν εἴτε καλὰ εἴτε καὶ τὰ ἐναντία, καθάπερ καὶ πολλὰ τῶν ἄλλων· ἐπεὶ καὶ χρήματα αἴτια μὲν ἀγαθῶν <ἀγαθῶ>, κακῶ δέ, ὡς ἔφη τις, κακῶν· καὶ πάλιν δόξα τοῦ μὲν ἄφρονος τὴν κακίαν ἐπιφανεστέραν, τοῦ δὲ δικαίου τὴν ἀρετὴν εὐκλεεστέραν ἐπιφαίνει. οὕτως οὖν καὶ ὁ ἄκρατος ἀναχυθεὶς τὸν μὲν πάθει κεχρημένον ἐμπαθέστερον,<sup>1</sup> τὸν δὲ εὐπαθείαις εὐμενέστερον καὶ ἴλεω μᾶλλον ἀπειργάσατο. τίς γε μὴν οὐκ οἶδεν, 172 ὅτι δυεῖν ἐναντίων ἐπειδὰν θάτερον εἶδος ἐφαρμόζη πλείοσι, καὶ θάτερον ἐξ ἀνάγκης συμβήσεται; οἶον λευκοῦ καὶ μέλανος ἐναντίων ὄντων, εἰ τὸ λευκὸν ἀστείοις τε καὶ φαύλοις, καὶ τὸ μέλαν ἐξ ἴσου δῆπουθεν ἀμφοτέροις, οὐχὶ μόνοις προσέσται τοῖς ἑτέροις. καὶ μὴν τό γε νήφειν καὶ τὸ μεθύειν ἐναντία, μετέχουσι δὲ τοῦ νήφειν, ὡς ὁ τῶν προτέρων λόγος, ἀγαθοί τε καὶ φαῦλοι· ὥστε καὶ τὸ μεθύειν ἑκατέρω τῶν εἰδῶν ἐφαρμόττει. μεθυσθήσεται τοιγάρτοι καὶ ὁ ἀστεῖος μηδὲν τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀποβαλὼν.

XLII. Εἰ δ' ὥσπερ ἐν δικαστηρίῳ μὴ μόνον 173 ταῖς ἐντέχνοις ἀποδείξεσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ταῖς ἀτέχνοις λεγομέναις χρηστέον, ὧν μία ἐστὶν ἢ διὰ τῶν μαρτυριῶν, πολλοὺς καὶ εὐδοκίμους μαρτυροῦντας παρεξόμεθα παῖδας ἰατρῶν καὶ φιλοσόφων, οὐ λόγοις μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ γράμμασι τὴν μαρτυρίαν σημαινομένους. μυρίας γὰρ ἀπολελοίपाσι συν- 174 τάξεις ἐπιγράψαντες περὶ μέθης, ἐν αἷς περὶ ψιλῆς αὐτὸ μόνον χρήσεως οἴνου σκοποῦσιν, οὐδὲν περὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εὐπαθέστερον.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 498.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 499.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 171-174

encies, whether good or the reverse, just as many other things do. Money, it has been said, is the cause of good things to a good man, of evil things to a bad man. Fame again makes the fool's badness more conspicuous, while it causes a brighter glory to rest upon the virtue of the righteous man. On this principle, therefore, a lavish use of strong drink places the man who has given the rein to his passions more completely at their mercy, while it makes him who has cherished right feelings <sup>a</sup> more kindly and well disposed. Again, all 172 know that when one of two opposite predicates is applicable to two or more sets of people, it cannot but be that the other is applicable also. For instance, black and white are opposites. If white is predicable of bad and good, black too will of course be equally so of both, not only of one of the two sets. So too soberness and drunkenness are opposites, and both bad and good men, so our forefathers said, partake of soberness. It follows that drunkenness also is predicable of both sorts. Accordingly the man of moral worth will get drunk as well as other people without losing any of his virtue.

XLII. If, just as in a court of law, we are to make 173 use, not only of the logical or dialectical proofs, but also of the modes of persuasion that are called "inartistic,<sup>b</sup>" one of which is that which employs evidence, we shall call as witnesses many distinguished physicians and philosophers, who ratify their evidence by writings as well as by words. For 174 they have left behind them innumerable treatises bearing the title "Concerning drunkenness," in which they deal with nothing but the subject of drinking wine at all, without adding a word of inquiry

PHILO

- τῶν ληρεῖν εἰωθότων προσεξετάζοντες, ἀλλ' ὅλον τὸ παροινίας παραπέμφαντες εἶδος· ὥστε καὶ παρὰ τούτοις σαφέστατα ἀνωμολογησθαι, ὅτι τὸ μεθύειν ἦν τὸ οἰνοῦσθαι. οἴνου δὲ σπάσαι πλείονος οὐκ ἂν εἶη χεῖρον ἐν καιρῷ σοφόν· οὐ τοίνυν
- [356] διαμαρτησόμεθα | λέγοντες ὅτι μεθυσθήσεται.
- 175 Ἐπεὶ δὲ οὐδεὶς καθ' αὐτὸν ἀγωνιζόμενος ἀναγράφεται νικῶν, εἰ δὲ ἀγωνίζεται, σκιαμαχεῖν μᾶλλον ἂν εἰκότως δόξαι, ἀνάγκη καὶ τοὺς τὸ ἐναντίον κατασκευάζοντας λόγους εἰπεῖν, ἵνα δικαιοσύνη γενηθῆ κρίσις, μηδετέρου μέρους ἐξ ἐρήμου καταδικασθέντος. ἔστι δὲ πρῶτος καὶ δυνατώτατος οὗτος· εἰ τῷ μεθύνοντι οὐκ ἂν τις εὐλόγως λόγον ἀπόρρητον παρακατάθοιτο, <τῷ δὲ ἀστείῳ παρακατατίθεται>, οὐκ ἄρα μεθύει ὁ ἀστεῖος. ἀλλ' οὖν<sup>1</sup> πρὶν ἢ τοὺς ἄλλους ἐξῆς συνείρειν, ἄμεινον καθ' ἕκαστον τῶν προτεινομένων ἀντιλέγειν, ἵνα μὴ μακρηγοροῦντες ἐπὶ πλέον
- 177 διοχλεῖν δοκῶμεν. φήσει δὴ τις ἐναντιούμενος, ὅτι κατὰ τὸν λεχθέντα λόγον ὁ σοφὸς οὔτε μελαγχολήσει ποτέ οὔτε κοιμηθήσεται οὔτε συνόλως ἀποθανεῖται· ὧ δὲ μὴ συμβαίνει τι τοιοῦτον, ἄψυχόν ἐστιν ἢ θεῖον, ἄνθρωπος δὲ οὐκ ἂν εἶη τὸ παράπαν. τὴν γὰρ ἀγωγὴν<sup>2</sup> τοῦ λόγου μιμησάμενος ἐφαρμόσει τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον τῷ μελαγχολῶντι ἢ κοιμωμένῳ ἢ ἀποθνήσκοντι· οὐκ ἂν τις εὐλόγως λόγον ἀπόρρητον τῷ τοιοῦτῳ παρακατάθοιτο, τῷ δὲ σοφῷ εὐλόγως· οὐτ' ἄρα<sup>3</sup> μελαγχολᾷ οὔτε κοιμᾶται οὔτε ἀποθνήσκει ὁ σοφός.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀρ' οὖν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τὴν παραγωγὴν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. οὐ γὰρ.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 499.

NOAH'S WORK AS A PLANTER, 174-177

regarding those who are in the habit of losing their heads ; thus giving the go-by altogether to intoxication as an aspect of the subject. Thus we find in these men too the most explicit acknowledgement that drunkenness was suffering from the effects of wine. But there would be nothing amiss in a wise man quaffing wine freely on occasion : we shall not be wrong, then, in saying that he will get drunk.

But, since no one is registered as victor if he has no 175 antagonist, and anyone engaged in such a contest would naturally be considered rather to be fighting a shadow, we must needs mention the arguments maintaining the contrary, in order that a perfectly fair decision may be reached, neither side being condemned by default.

Of such argu- 176 ments the first and most weighty is this.<sup>a</sup> If one would not act reasonably in entrusting a secret to a drunken man, and does entrust secrets to a good man, it follows that a good man does not get drunk. Well now, instead of the whole series of arguments one after another, it will be better, as each is advanced, to answer it, that we may not seem tedious through making too long a story of it.

A man may 177 counter the arguments just mentioned by saying that according to it the wise man will never be melancholy, never fall asleep, in a word, never die. But he whom nothing of this sort befalls would be an inanimate thing or a Divine Being, certainly not a man. For reproducing the conduct of the argument, he will apply it in this way to the case of the melancholy or sleeping or dying man : No one would act reasonably in entrusting a secret to one in such case, but would act reasonably in doing so to a wise man : therefore a wise man never falls into melancholy, or goes to sleep, or dies.

ON DRUNKENNESS
(DE EBRIETATE)

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THIS treatise <sup>a</sup> like its two predecessors is founded on Gen. ix. 20-29, particularly the last words, "And (Noah) drank of the wine and was drunken." Philo, however, from the first breaks away from this text and, having discussed at the end of the De Plantatione the various philosophical views on drunkenness, proceeds to consider the views of Moses on the subject. He lays down that Moses uses wine as a symbol for five things : (1) foolishness or foolish talking ; (2) complete "insensibility" <sup>b</sup> ; (3) greediness <sup>c</sup> ; (4) cheerfulness and gladness ; (5) nakedness (1-5). He then gives a short introductory explanation of each of these, dwelling particularly on one aspect of

<sup>a</sup> Both Jerome and Eusebius state that there were two treatises περι μέθης. Whether ours is the second of them, the De Plant. being the first (or perhaps De Plant. 134-end together with what has evidently been lost at the end of that treatise) or ours is the first, and the second contained the discussion of γυμνότης (see note b on opposite page) is an open question. The general opinion is in favour of the latter alternative. Adler, however, in his Studien zu Philon von Alexandria has recently argued for the former.

<sup>b</sup> This word, though by no means wholly satisfactory, seems the best equivalent for ἀναισθησία with which Philo generally couples παντελής. Literally ἀναισθησία is the stupor of complete intoxication, but "stupor" is not appropriate when the ἀναισθησία is transferred to the moral or mental sphere.

<sup>c</sup> Presumably, in general, any insatiable desire. But Philo in his later treatment reduces it to γαστριμαργία or gluttony.

ON DRUNKENNESS

“nakedness” as the truth which strips off all disguises from virtue and vice, and this leads to a short digression on the mutually exclusive nature of these two (6-10), a thought evidently suggested by Socrates’ fable of Pleasure and Pain in the Phaedo. He then proceeds to a detailed consideration of these five,<sup>a</sup> though as a matter of fact only the first three are treated in what has come down to us.<sup>b</sup>

I. First, “folly” or “foolish talking.” This with its digressions occupies from § 11 to § 153. Its chief cause is ἀπαίδευσία, that is defiance of or unsusceptibility to all educating influences (11-12). How abhorrent this is to Moses is shewn by the law in Deut. xxi. that the parents of a rebellious and profligate son must bring him for judgement before the elders. The development of this illustration occupies sections 13-98. This rebellious son, the type of the ἀπαίδευτος, has four charges brought against him by his parents, disobedience, contentiousness, “riotous feasting” and wine-bibbing (13-14). The two first are distinguished as being the one passive, the other active (15-19). In dealing with the third Philo ignores the derived meaning—riotous feasting—of the obscure

<sup>a</sup> The first three are clearly evil, while the fourth (gladness) is wholly good. As for “nakedness,” if the reading adopted in the text of § 4 is right, it is regarded as applicable to folly and ignorance and this will agree with Leg. All. ii. 54. On the other hand it is to be noted that the “causes” of nakedness in § 8 are either good or neutral.

<sup>b</sup> But not only does Philo promise to discuss all the five, but the opening words of De Sobrietate shew that there actually was such a discussion. Whether, however, “gladness” was treated at any length may be doubted. Philo may have passed it over rapidly, noting that while Moses used wine as a symbol for it, it could not be associated with drunkenness. Indeed there is a hint of such a view in § 223.

PHILO

word συμβολοκοπεῖν and confines himself to what he supposes to be the original meaning. Of the two elements of which it is compounded he takes the first συμβολαί to represent "contributions" or "combinations" for evil, while the other (κόπτειν) shews the "cutting" or destructive force of these contributions (20-24), against which we are warned in the words, "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil" (25). The fourth charge that he is "fired with wine" (οἶνοφλυγεί) represents a state in which the ἀπαιδευσία is inflaming the man's whole nature (27). That his natural protectors, his parents, should be his accusers is the just punishment of such a one (28-29). But "parents" means more than the literal father and mother. In one sense our father is God and our mother God's Wisdom, parents whose mercies and judgements alike are greater than we can receive (30-32). In another sense the father is "right reason" or philosophy, while the mother is custom, convention and secular education (33-34).<sup>a</sup> This idea Philo proceeds to develop (33-92) in what is, in spite of minor extravagances, a really fine allegory and does much to redeem the general inferiority of this treatise. These parents have four kinds of children, (1) and (2) those who obey one parent but not the other, (3) those who obey both, (4) those who obey neither (35). We first deal with those who disregard the father and love the mother, i.e. the votaries of convention. They are typified, first by Jethro here, as always in Philo, "the man of super-<sup>a</sup> Philo's conception of the "Encyclia" here seems to differ somewhat from his general view. Usually they are to be valued as an introduction to the higher παιδεία, i.e. philosophy. Here they are mainly a training in the conventional life.

ON DRUNKENNESS

fluity" or "unevenness" (36). The special sayings of his selected here are his advice to Moses on the conduct of his business in Exod. xviii. and his refusal to follow Israel in Num. x., and even his saying, "Now I know that the Lord is great above all gods" is turned to his discredit on the grounds that "now" should be "always" and that he still ascribes reality to non-existent gods (37-45). The second example of this class is Laban, the admirer, as always, of the material and external, but his special error is his saying "it is not our custom to give the younger (Rachel) before the elder (Leah)," for the younger daughter, the learning of the schools, should precede in time the elder, philosophy—and Jacob's reply to Laban is perversely construed to mean that he will never leave Leah (46-53). Some other texts are enlisted to shew the inferiority of the feminine element in mankind, as exemplified in Rachel, and her words about the "manner of women" in Gen. xxxi. (54-64), and we pass on to the next class, the father-lovers, the despisers of convention and followers of right reason only. These are especially represented by the Levites, who ignore and even as in Exod. xxxii. slay their kinsfolk and thus are murderers in the eyes of the conventional world, though not in the eyes of divine reason (65-67). The kinsfolk, etc., are interpreted to mean the body, the senses and rhetorical eloquence, all of which are sacrificed by the father-lover, and the final example of this class is Phinehas who slew the Midianitish woman (Num. xxv.) and whose story is interpreted in the same allegorical way with a short meditation on the rewards he received of "peace and priesthood" (73-76).

The class of those who reject both parents receives the appropriate denunciation (77-79) and we finally come to those who reverence both. Here we may be surprised to find that Philo after all regards this as the perfect way, in spite of his high praise of the pure philosopher (80-81). This obedience to both right reason and custom is held to deserve the name of Israel which supersedes that of Jacob (82-84), and Moses has approved this twofold excellence, in his institution of an external as well as an internal altar, and the two different robes for the priest. These robes are respectively simple and ornate, and the second shews us that life has many aspects (85-87). For true wisdom shews itself in various forms not only in religion, but also in the physical sciences, in ethics and politics and in social activities (88-92). That the two parents have other children besides the disobedient one is deduced from the phrase "this our son" and Philo takes various examples of such children from the great names of the Pentateuch (73-94).

PHILO

Philo now once more denounces the wickedness of the disobedient son and compares him to the degenerate Israelites who worshipped the golden calf, and thus he is led to quote the words of Joshua on that occasion, "There is a voice of war in the camp . . ." And Moses' reply, "that the sounds are not those of victory or defeat, but those of the wine-feast of men who shout over the wine that I hear" (95-96). This quotation carries Philo away at once to a disquisition on its various phrases. "There is a voice in the camp" signifies the tumult of passion in the camp of human life (97-104), and some illustrations of this thought are given (97-104). "It is not the voice of might (or "victory")" suggests a comparison with the words of Abraham after his victory over the nine kings (i.e. the four passions and the five senses), and this involves an explanation of Abraham's refusal to accept reward from the King of Sodom, as the wise soul's refusal to accept from any but God and a rebuke to idolaters (105-110). Another song of victory is that of Moses over Pharaoh's host (111) and the "Song of the Well" in Num. xxi. (112-113) which in its turn leads to a discussion of the allegorical meaning of various phrases in the speech of the victorious captains in Num. xxxi., particularly of "each one gave what he had found" (114-120). The "voice of the defeated" is passed over rapidly as indicating weakness rather than wickedness, and contrasted with the voice of those who shout over (or "lead") the wine, which voice indicates the deliberate madness of evil (121-123). Thus we are brought back for a moment to the main thought of drunkenness as moral folly, and reminded that freedom from this is true priesthood (124-126). This was the inner meaning of the command to Aaron to abstain from wine when he approached the tabernacle or the altar (127-129). In the literal sense this is sound enough, for what can be worse than a drunken worshipper (130-131), but in the deeper sense the tabernacle is the "idea" of incorporeal virtue, and the altar that of the particular virtues, and to him who approaches either of these folly is not so much forbidden as impossible (132-139). Similar morals are drawn from the concluding words of the same passages (140-143), and also from Samuel's lifelong abstinence (143-144), and the mention of Samuel leads to some thoughts on the words of Hannah (i.e. Grace) to those who thought her drunk, "I have drunk no wine and I will pour out my soul before the Lord," in which we have a parable of the truth that the "joy" of grace is as the Bacchant's inspiration and that freedom from folly makes the soul a fitting libation to God (145-152). This concludes the discussion of drunkenness as spiritual folly produced by ἀπαιδευσία (153).

ON DRUNKENNESS

PHILO

II. The second thing for which wine stood as a symbol was, we saw, "stupor" or "insensibility," and in the mental or moral sphere this is ignorance, which stands to the mind as blindness or deafness to the body, while knowledge is the eye and ear of the soul (154-161). But we must distinguish two kinds of ignorance, one mere non-knowledge, the other the belief that we know, when we do not (162-163). This last is represented by Lot with his wife, who is "Custom" ever looking back upon the past, and his two daughters who are "Deliberation" and "Assent." The statement that their daughters "gave their father wine to drink" means that the mind is hypnotized with the belief that it can by deliberation find out the truth and give a right judgment or assent, whereas in reality nothing of the sort is possible even to the educated <sup>a</sup> (164-168). The <sup>a</sup> The sections which follow are very extraordinary. Philo seems to jettison his general dogmatic principles and to enrol himself in the school of the Sceptics. In fact he reproduces so clearly several of the "ten tropes" of the famous sceptic Aenesidemus, as given by Diogenes Laertius and Sextus Empiricus, that he enables the historians of philosophy to lay down a terminus ad quem for the date of that philosopher, of which, till the attention of scholars was called to these chapters, nothing more was known than that he must have preceded Diogenes and Sextus. It will be seen that in 193-202 he extends ἀκαταληψία or impossibility of apprehension to moral questions, and thus seems to overthrow the basis of his philosophy.

ON DRUNKENNESS

fact that the same objects produce at different times different impressions on the mind shews that we cannot base certain judgements on these impressions (162-170). Philo then proceeds to enumerate the causes or rather "modes" of these uncertainties. The first is the difference in the habits and constitution of animals, which argues that they too receive different impressions from the same things, and with this he joins the changes which some of them, e.g. the chameleon and the elk, are supposed to exhibit in different environments (171-175). The second mode is the various feelings, likes and dislikes shewn by mankind, in which not only does one man differ from another, but even the individual from himself (175-180). The third mode is the optical illusions produced by the distances or situations of objects, such as "the straight staff bent in a pool" (181-183). The fourth is the observation that any two or more things, while remaining the same in substance, produce totally different results according to the proportions in which they are combined (184-185). The fifth is relativity, for since we only know one thing with reference to another, we cannot be said to know them at all (186-189). This is illustrated by the fact that colour, smell and the like are really the effect of the combination of something in the object with something in ourselves (190-191). Further, we are warned against forming moral judgements by the fact that on all such questions there is an infinite difference of opinion among various nations, states and individuals which forbids us to assert with certainty that any particular act is virtuous or not (192-197). Philo goes on to say that while he is not surprised that the vulgar should form positive judgements, he is surprised to find that philosophers can still be dogmatists and yet come to totally different opinions on vital questions, and he enumerates some of these, such as whether the universe is infinite or not, created or uncreated, ruled by providence or not, and whether morality is the only good or whether there are numerous goods (198-202). True indeed are the words of the text "he knew not when they (the daughters) slept and rose up," for both the counsels and the assents of the mind are utterly untrustworthy (203-205).

PHILO

III. The third idea suggested by wine or drunkenness, viz. greediness or gluttony, is treated by Philo in a comparatively literal manner. Such allegory as there is is chiefly drawn from the story of Pharaoh in Genesis (Egypt as usual representing the body), who on his birthday was reconciled with his chief butler, thereby representing the tendency of the sated sensualist to return to his excesses as soon as possible (206-209). From the statement (in the LXX) that all the three officers of Pharaoh's table—the chief butler, the chief baker and the chief cook<sup>a</sup>—were eunuchs, he draws the lesson that the ministers of pleasure are incapable of begetting wisdom, and this is also implied in the banishment by Moses of eunuchs from the congregation (210-213). Further the prefix of "chief" applied in Genesis to these three indicates the gourmand's excessive indulgence as compared with simple living, and Philo takes the opportunity to give a rhetorical description of these refinements of luxury (214-220). Also it was the chief cupbearer (not the other two) with whom Pharaoh was reconciled, and this shews that the passion for wine is the most persistent form which bodily indulgence takes (220-221). A text which he quotes in connexion with this from the Song of Moses, in which the phrase "the vine of Sodom" occurs, brings him back to the allegorical view of drunkenness as the symbol of folly in general. For the fool's "vine" or his foolish desires do not produce the gladness of true wine, but its roots are as ashes, and the treatise concludes with the prayer that our "vine" may be rather that of true and fruit-bearing instruction (222-end).

<sup>a</sup> In the LXX Potiphar is called the "chief cook."

ON DRUNKENNESS

ΠΕΡΙ ΜΕΘΗΣ

- [1.357] I. Τὰ μὲν τοῖς ἄλλοις φιλοσόφοις εἰρημένα περὶ <sup>1</sup> μέθης, ὡς οἶόν τε ἦν, ἐν τῇ πρὸ ταύτης ὑπεμνήσαμεν βίβλῳ, νυνὶ δὲ ἐπισκεψώμεθα τίνα τῶ πάντα μεγάλῳ καὶ σοφῶ νομοθέτῃ περὶ αὐτῆς δοκεῖ. πολλαχοῦ <sup>2</sup> γὰρ τῆς νομοθεσίας οἴνου καὶ τοῦ γεννώντος φυτοῦ τὸν οἶνον ἀμπέλου διαμέμνηται· καὶ τοῖς μὲν ἐμπνέειν ἐπιτρέπει, τοῖς δ' οὐκ ἐφήσει, καὶ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἔστιν ὅτε προστάττει τάναντία, οἴνω χρῆσθαι τε καὶ μῆ. οὔτοι μὲν οὖν εἰσιν οἱ τὴν μεγάλην εὐχὴν εὐξάμενοι, οἷς δὲ ἀκράτῳ χρῆσθαι ἀπείρηται οἱ λειτουργοῦντες ἱερεῖς, οἱ δὲ προσφερόμενοι τὸν οἶνον μυρίοι τῶν ἐπ' ἀρετῇ μάλιστα καὶ παρ' αὐτῶ τεθραυμασμένων. πρὶν δὲ περὶ τούτων <sup>3</sup> ἄρξασθαι λέγειν, τὰ συντείνοντα πρὸς τὰς κατα-σκευὰς αὐτῶν ἀκριβωτέον. ἔστι δ' ὡς γ' οἶμαι τάδε· II. σύμβολον τὸν ἄκρατον Μωυσῆς οὐχ <sup>4</sup> ἐνὸς ἀλλὰ πλειόνων εἶναι νομίζει, τοῦ ληρεῖν καὶ παραπαίειν, ἀναισθησίας παντελοῦς, ἀπληστίας ἀκορέστου καὶ δυσαρέστου, εὐθυμίας<sup>1</sup> καὶ εὐφροσύνης, τῆς τᾶλλα περιεχούσης καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς

<sup>1</sup> Wendland ἐπιθυμίας. In this case δυσαρέστου would agree with ἐπιθυμίας, and τῆς τᾶλλα περιεχούσης with εὐφροσύνης. See App. p. 500.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 500.

ON DRUNKENNESS

I. The views expressed by the other philosophers 1 on drunkenness have been stated by me to the best of my ability in the preceding book. Let us now consider what the great lawgiver in his never-failing wisdom holds on this subject. In many places of 2 his legislation he mentions wine and the plant whose fruit it is—the vine. Some persons he permits, others he forbids, to drink of it, and sometimes he gives opposite orders,<sup>a</sup> at one time enjoining and at another prohibiting its use to the same persons. These last are those who have made the great vow (Num. vi. 2), while those who are forbidden the use of strong drink are the ministering priests (Lev. x. 9) ; while of persons who take wine there are numberless instances among those whom he too holds in the highest admiration for their virtue.

But before we begin to discuss these matters, we 3 must carefully investigate the points which bear on our exposition. These points, I think, are the following. II. Moses uses strong liquor as a symbol 4 for more than one, in fact for several, things : for foolish talking and raving, for complete insensibility, for insatiable and ever-discontented greediness, for cheerfulness and gladness, for the nakedness which embraces the rest and manifests itself in all the

PHILO

[358] εἰρημένοις ἐμφαινομένης γυμνότητος ἢ τὸν Νῶε | μεθυσθέντα φησὶ χρήσασθαι. τὸν μὲν οὖν οἶνον 5 λέγεται ταῦτα ἐργάζεσθαι. μυριοὶ δὲ καὶ τῶν οὐ προσαψαμένων ἀκράτου νήφειν ὑπολαμβάνοντες τοῖς ὁμοίοις ἀλίσκονται· καὶ ἔστιν ἰδεῖν τοὺς μὲν αὐτῶν ἀφραίνοντάς τε καὶ ληροῦντας, τοὺς δ' ἀναισθησία παντελεῖ κατεσχημένους, τοὺς δὲ μηδέποτε πληρουμένους, αἰεὶ δὲ τῶν ἀνηνύτων διψῶντας διὰ χηρείαν ἐπιστήμης, τοὺς δ' ἔμπαλιν γανουμένους καὶ εὐφραينوμένους, τοὺς δὲ τῷ ὄντι 6 γυμνουμένους. τοῦ μὲν οὖν ληρεῖν αἴτιον ἢ ἐπιζήμιος ἀπαιδευσία—λέγω δ' οὐ τὴν παιδείας ἀνεπιστημοσύνην, ἀλλὰ τὴν πρὸς αὐτὴν ἀλλοτριώσιν—, τοῦ δ' ἀναισθητεῖν ἢ ἐπίβουλος καὶ πηρὸς ἄγνοια, ἀπληστίας δὲ ἢ ἀργαλεωτάτη παθῶν ψυχῆς ἐπι-θυμία, εὐφροσύνης δὲ κτῆσις ὁμοῦ καὶ χρήσις ἀρετῆς, γυμνότητος μέντοι πολλά, ἄγνοια τῶν ἐναντίων, ἀκακία καὶ ἀφέλεια ἡθῶν, ἀλήθεια ἢ τὰ τῶν συνεσκιασμένων πραγμάτων ἀνακαλυπτήρια ἄγουσα δύναμις, τῇ μὲν ἀπαμπίσχουσα ἀρετὴν, τῇ 7 δὲ κακίαν ἐν μέρει· ἅμα μὲν γὰρ οὐχ οἶον ἀποδύσασθαι, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐνσκευάσασθαι ταύτας δυνατόν· ἐπειδὰν δὲ τις ἀπορρίψῃ τὴν ἑτέραν, ἐξ ἀνάγκης τὴν ἐναντίαν ἀναλαβὼν ἐπαμπίσχεται.
 8 ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡδονὴν καὶ ἀλγηδόνα φύσει μαχομένας, ὡς ὁ παλαιὸς λόγος, εἰς μίαν κορυφὴν συνάψας ὁ

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. ii. 54, where three kinds of nakedness are distinguished: (a) that of the soul stripped of passion, a state which to Philo is true joy; (b) foolishness, as in the case of Noah (60 f.); (c) ignorance of good and evil, as in Adam and Eve (64 f.).

<sup>b</sup> The two epithets are explained in §§ 150-163. Ignorance

ON DRUNKENNESS, 4-8

qualities just mentioned,<sup>a</sup> in which condition Noah was, we read, when intoxicated. All these we are told are produced by wine. Yet thousands of those 5 who never touch strong drink and consider themselves sober are mastered by similar emotions. We may see them in some cases mad and foolish, in others under the dominion of complete insensibility, in others never filled but always thirsting for impossibilities through lack of knowledge, or on the other hand full of gladness and exultation, finally in the true sense naked.

The folly is caused by 6 indiscipline in its noxious form, by which I mean not the mere unacquaintance with discipline but aversion to it; insensibility is caused by ignorance (always) blind and (often) with a will for evil<sup>b</sup>; greediness by that most painful of the soul's passions, lust; while gladness arises both from the winning and the practice of virtue. Nakedness has many causes: incapacity for distinguishing between moral opposites, innocence and simplicity of manners, truth, that is, the power which unveils<sup>c</sup> what is wrapped in obscurity. At one moment it is virtue that she uncovers, at another vice in its turn. For we cannot 7 doff both of these at the same moment any more than we can don them. When we discard the one we necessarily adopt and assume its opposite.

The old story<sup>d</sup> tells us that God when He fastened 8 the naturally conflicting sensations of pleasure and is always blindness, but when under the delusion that it is knowledge it is actually mischievous (§ 163).

<sup>c</sup> Lit. "celebrating the unveiling" (of the bride), v. Dict. of Ant. ("Matrimonium").

<sup>d</sup> i.e. the fable suggested by Socrates (Phaedo 60 B) where we have much the same phrase as here, ἐκ μᾶς κορυφῆς συνημμένω δὲ θυτε, v. note (App.) on De Gig. 56.

PHILO

- θεὸς ἐκατέρας αἰσθησιν οὐκ ἐν ταυτῷ, διαλλάττουσι δὲ χρόνοις ἐνεργάσατο κατὰ τὴν φυγὴν τῆς ἐτέρας κάθοδον τῇ ἐναντία ψηφισάμενος, οὕτως ἀπὸ μιᾶς ρίζης τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ τά τε ἀρετῆς καὶ κακίας διττὰ ἀνέδραμεν ἔρνη μήτε βλαστάνοντα μήτε
- 9 καρποφοροῦντα ἐν ταυτῷ· ὁπότε μὲν γὰρ φυλλορροεῖ καὶ ἀφαναίνεται θάτερον, ἄρχεται ἀναβλαστάνειν καὶ χλοηφορεῖν τὸ ἐναντίον, ὡς ὑπολαβεῖν, ὅτι ἐκάτερον τῇ θατέρου δυσχεραῖνον εὐπραγία στέλλεται. δι' ἣν αἰτίαν φυσικώτατα<sup>1</sup> τὴν Ἰακώβ ἕξοδον εἰσοδον Ἰησαῦ παρίστησιν· “ἐγένετο” γάρ φησιν “ὅσον ἐξῆλθεν Ἰακώβ, ἦκεν
- 10 Ἰησαῦ ὁ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ.” μέχρι μὲν γὰρ ἐνσχολάζει καὶ ἐμπεριπατεῖ τῇ ψυχῇ φρόνησις, ὑπερόριος πᾶς ὁ ἀφροσύνης ἐταῖρος ἐκτετόξευται· ἐπειδὴν δὲ μεταναστῆ, γεγηθὼς κάτεισιν ἐκείνος, τῆς πολεμίου καὶ δυσμενοῦς δι' ἣν ἡλαύνετο καὶ ἐφυγαδεύετο μηκέτι τὸν αὐτὸν χῶρον οἰκούσης.
- 11 III. Τὰ μὲν οὖν ὡσανεὶ προοίμια τῆς γραφῆς ἀρκούντως λέλεκται, τὰς δ' ἀποδείξεις ἐκάστων προσαποδώσομεν, ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου πρώτον ἀρξά-
- [359] μνοι διδάσκειν· τὴν τοίνυν ἀπαιδευσίαν <τοῦ> | ληρεῖν καὶ ἀμαρτάνειν αἰτίαν ἔφαμεν εἶναι καθάπερ
- 12 μυρίοις τῶν ἀφρόνων τὸν πολὺν ἄκρατον. ἀπαιδευσία γὰρ τῶν ψυχῆς ἀμαρτημάτων, εἰ δεῖ τὰληθῆς εἰπεῖν, τὸ ἀρχέκακον, ἀφ' ἧς ὡσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς ρέουσιν αἱ τοῦ βίου πράξεις, πότιμον μὲν καὶ σωτήριον οὐδὲν οὐδενὶ νᾶμα ἐκδιδοῦσαι<sup>2</sup> τὸ παράπαν, ἀλμυρὸν δὲ νόσου καὶ φθορᾶς τοῖς χρησομένοις

<sup>1</sup> MSS. φυσικωτάτην.

<sup>2</sup> Wendland ἐκδιδοῦσα with some MSS. See App. p. 500.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 8-12

pain under a single head, caused them to be felt at different times and not at the same moment, and thus decreed that the banishment of the one should involve the restoration of the other. Just in the same way, from a single root in our dominant part spring the two shoots of vice and virtue, yet never sprouting or bearing fruit at the same moment. For when one 9 sheds its leaves and withers, its opposite begins to exhibit new life and verdure, so that we might suppose that each shrinks and shrivels in resentment at the thriving of the other. And so it is in full agreement with philosophical truth that Moses represents the outgoing of Jacob as being the incoming of Esau. "It came to pass," he says, "that as soon as Jacob went out Esau his brother came in" (Gen. xxvii. 30).<sup>a</sup> For so long as prudence has its 10 lodging and scene of action in the soul, so long is every friend of folly an outcast from her borders. But when prudence has changed her quarters, the other returns with glee now that the bitter enemy, who caused his expulsion and life of exile, no longer dwells where he did.

III. So much then for what we may call the pre- 11 liminaries of our treatise. I will now proceed to the demonstration of each head beginning with the first. Well, we agreed that indiscipline was the cause of folly and error, as wine when taken in large quantities is to so many foolish persons. Indiscipline is 12 indeed the prime cause of the soul's errors, and from it as from a spring flow those actions of our lives which give to none any sweet and salutary stream, but only briny waters fraught with plague and destruction to those who use them.

<sup>a</sup> We have the same use of the text in De Sac. 135.

PHILO

- 13 αἴτιον. οὕτως γοῦν κατὰ ἀναγώγων καὶ ἀπαιδευτῶν ὁ νομοθέτης φονᾶ, ὡς κατ' οὐδενὸς ἴσως ἑτέρου. τεκμήριον δέ· τίνες εἰσὶν οἱ μὴ ἐπιτηδεύσει μᾶλλον ἢ φύσει σύμμαχοι παρά τε ἀνθρώποις καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις γένεσι τῶν ζώων; ἀλλ' οὐδὲ μανεῖς ἑτέρουσ' ἂν εἴποι τις ἢ τοὺς τοκέας εἶναι· κήδεται γὰρ ἀδιδάκτω τῇ φύσει τὸ πεποιηκὸς αἰεὶ τοῦ γενομένου, καὶ σωτηρίας αὐτοῦ καὶ διαμονῆς τῆς εἰσάπαν πρόνοιαν ἔχει.
- 14 IV. τοὺς οὖν ἐκ φύσεως συναγωνιστὰς ὑπάρχοντας εἰς ἐχθρῶν μετελθεῖν τάξιν ἐσπούδασε κατηγοροῦς ἐπιστήσας τοὺς δεόντως ἂν συναγορεύοντας, πατέρα καὶ μητέρα, ἢν' ὑφ' ὧν εἰκὸς ἦν σώζεσθαι μόνων παραπόλωνται. “ἐὰν γάρ τινι” φησὶν “υἱὸς ἢ ἀπειθῆς καὶ ἐρεθιστῆς οὐχ ὑπακούων φωνῆς πατρὸς καὶ μητρός, καὶ παιδεύωσιν αὐτὸν καὶ μὴ εἰσακούῃ αὐτῶν, συλλαβόντες αὐτὸν ὁ πατήρ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡ μήτηρ ἐξάξουσιν εἰς τὴν γερουσίαν τῆς πόλεως αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν πύλην τοῦ τόπου αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐροῦσι τοῖς ἀνδράσι τῆς πόλεως αὐτῶν· ὁ υἱὸς ἡμῶν οὗτος ἀπειθεὶ καὶ ἐρεθίζει, οὐκ εἰσακούει τῆς φωνῆς ἡμῶν, συμβολοκοπῶν οἰνοφλυγεῖ. καὶ λιθοβολήσουσιν αὐτὸν οἱ ἄνδρες τῆς πόλεως, καὶ ἐξαρεῖς τὸν πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν.”
- 15 οὐκοῦν αἱ κατηγορίαι ἀριθμῶ τέτταρες, ἀπειθεια καὶ ἐρεθισμὸς καὶ συμβολῶν εἰσφορὰ καὶ μέθη. μεγίστη δ' ἡ τελευταία παραύξησιν ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης ἀπειθείας λαβοῦσα· ἀρξαμένη γὰρ ἀφηνιάζειν ἡ

<sup>a</sup> Or “should be the sole workers of his ruin”; μόνων may perhaps be taken with both verbs.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 500.

<sup>c</sup> Lit. “paying of contributions.”

ON DRUNKENNESS, 13-15

Thus it is against the untrained and undisciplined 13 more perhaps than against any other person that the lawgiver breathes slaughter. Here is our proof. Who play the part of protectors not so much by acquired habit as by nature amongst humankind and every other kind of animal? Surely it is the parents. Not even a madman would give a different answer. For nature ever instinctively prompts the maker to care for what he has made, and to take thought for its preservation and perpetual maintenance.

IV. Now when Moses set up those who would prop- 14 erly plead the cause of an offender, namely his father and mother, to appear as his accusers, thus providing that those who might be expected to preserve him against all others should actually work his ruin,<sup>a</sup> he shewed his desire that these natural supporters should be converted into enemies. "For if anyone," he says, "has a disobedient and contentious son who does not listen to the voice of his father and mother, and they discipline him and he does not hearken to them, his father and mother shall take him and bring him forth to the assembly of the elders of his city and to the gate of his place, and shall say to the men of their city, 'This our son is disobedient and contentious, he does not listen to our voice, he is a riotous liver<sup>b</sup> and a wine-bibber,' and the men of the city shall stone him with stones and thou shalt remove the evil one from among yourselves" (Deut. xxi. 18-21).

We see then that the accusa- 15
tions are four in number, disobedience, contentiousness, participation in riotous feasting<sup>c</sup> and drunkenness. But the last is the chief, rising to a climax from the first, disobedience. For when the soul has begun to cast off the reins and taken its onward

PHILO

ψυχὴ καὶ προελθοῦσα διὰ ἔριδος καὶ φιλονεικίας ἐπὶ ὕστατον ὄρον ἔρχεται, μέθην, τὴν ἐκστάσεως καὶ παραφροσύνης αἰτίαν. ἐκάστης δὲ τῶν κατηγοριῶν τὴν δύναμιν ἰδεῖν ἀναγκαῖον τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης λαβόντας.

- 16 V. Ἄνωμολόγηται τοῖνυν περιφανῶς, ὅτι τὸ εἶκειν καὶ πειθαρχεῖν ἀρετῇ καλὸν καὶ συμφέρον, ὥστε τὸ ἀπειθεῖν ἔμπαλιν αἰσχρὸν καὶ οὐ μετρίως ἀλυσιτελές· τὸ δὲ δὴ καὶ ἐρεθίζειν ὑπερβολὴν πᾶσαν κεχώρηκε τοῦ δεινοῦ· ὁ γὰρ ἀπειθῆς τοῦ φιλέριδος ἦττον μοχθηρὸς ἐστίν, ὁ μὲν αὐτὸ μόνον τῶν προσταττομένων ἀλογῶν, ὁ δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἐναντίοις
- 17 ἐγχειρεῖν σπουδῆν πεποιημένος. φέρει
 δ' ὡς ἔχει τοῦτο θεασώμεθα· νόμου κελεύοντος, εἰ
- [360] τύχοι, τοὺς | γονεῖς τιμᾶν, ὁ μὲν μὴ τιμῶν ἀπειθῆς, ὁ δ' ἀτιμάζων φίλερις. καὶ πάλιν τοῦ τὴν πατρίδα σώζειν ὄντος δικαίου τὸν μὲν πρὸς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ὄκνω χρώμενον ἀπειθῆ, τὸν δ' ἔτι καὶ προδιδόναι
- 18 διεγνωκότα δύσεριν καὶ φιλόνεικον λεκτέον. ὁ τε μὴ χαριζόμενός τιςιν ἐναντιούμενος τῷ φάσκοντι δεῖν ὠφελεῖν ἀπειθεῖ, ὁ δὲ πρὸς τῷ μὴ χαρίζεσθαι καὶ ὅσα βλάβης ἐστὶν ἐμποιῶν ἔριδι ἐπαιρόμενος ἀνίατα ἐξαρματάνει. καὶ μὴν ὁ γε ἱεουργίαις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ἀναφέρεται μὴ χρώμενος ἀπειθεῖ προστάξεις, ἃς ὁ νόμος εἴωθε περὶ τούτων προστάττειν, ἀνερεθίζει δ' ὁ πρὸς τοῦναντίον, ἀσέβειαν, ἀποκλίνας καὶ ἀθεότητος

ON DRUNKENNESS, 15-1

course through strife and dissension, it reaches its utmost limit in drunkenness, which produces frenzy and madness. We must take these accusations one by one and observe their full meaning, beginning with the first.

V. We have it as a clear and admitted fact that 16 submission and obedience to virtue is noble and profitable, and the converse follows, that disobedience is disgraceful and in a high degree unprofitable. But if contentiousness is added to disobedience, it involves a vast increase of the evil. The disobedient man is not on so low a moral level as the quarrelsome and strife-loving man, since he merely disregards the commands he receives and nothing more, while the other takes active pains to carry out what is opposed to these commands.

Let us consider how 17 this shews itself. The law, to take one instance, bids us honour our parents; he then who does not honour them is disobedient, he who actively dishonours them is a strife-lover. Again, it is a righteous action to save one's country. He who shirks this particular duty is to be classed as disobedient, he who actually purposes to betray it as a man of strife and contention. So too one who fails to do a kind- 18 ness to his neighbour, in opposition to another who tells him that it is his duty to give help, is disobedient. But one who, besides withholding his kindness, works all the harm he can is moved by the spirit of strife to deadly error. And again the man who fails to make use of the holy rites and all else that relates to piety is disobedient to the commandments which law and custom regularly prescribe in these matters, but rebellious or strife-stirrer is the name for him who turns aside to their direct opposite, impiety, and

PHILO

- 19 εἰσηγητήης. VI. οἶος ἦν ὁ φάσκων “ τίς ἐστὶν οὗ ὑπακούσομαι; ” καὶ πάλιν “ οὐκ οἶδα τὸν κύριον ”· διὰ μὲν οὖν τῆς προτέρας φωνῆς παρίστησιν, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστι τὸ θεῖον, διὰ δὲ τῆς ἔπειτα, ὅτι, εἰ καὶ ἔστιν, ἀλλά τοι ἀγνοεῖται, ὅπερ ἐκ τοῦ μὴ προνοεῖν συνάγεται· εἰ γὰρ προῦνόει, καὶ ἐγνώσκετο.
- 20 Συμβολάς γε μὴν καὶ ἐράνους φέρειν ἐπὶ μὲν τῇ τοῦ ἀρίστου κτήματος μετουσίᾳ, φρονήσεως, ἐπαινετὸν καὶ συμφέρον, ἔνεκα δὲ τῆς τοῦ ἀκροτάτου πάντων <κακοῦ>, ἀφροσύνης, ἀλυσιτελές
- 21 τε καὶ ψεκτόν. αἱ μὲν οὖν πρὸς τὸ ἄριστον συμβολαὶ πόθος ἀρετῆς, τῶν καλῶν ζῆλος, μελέται συνεχεῖς, ἀσκήσεις ἐπίμονοι,<sup>1</sup> ἄρτυτοι καὶ ἀκμηῆτες πόνοι, αἱ δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἐναντίον ἀνεσις, ῥαθυμία,
- 22 τρυφή, θρύψις, παντελής ἐκδιαίτησις. ἰδεῖν μέντοι καὶ τοὺς ἐπαποδουμένους πολυοινία καὶ καθ’ ἑκάστην ἡμέραν γυμναζομένους καὶ ἀθλοῦντας τοὺς ἐπ’ ἀπληστία γαστρὸς ἄθλους ἔστι συμβολὰς μὲν ὡς ἐπὶ τινι τῶν λυσιτελῶν εἰσφέροντας, ζημιου-μένους δὲ πάντα, χρήματα, σώματα, ψυχὰς· τὰ μὲν γὰρ εἰσφέροντες μειοῦσι τὴν οὐσίαν, τῶν δὲ σωμάτων διὰ τὸ ἀβροδίαιτον κατακλῶσι καὶ θρύπτουσι τὰς δυνάμεις, τὰς δὲ ψυχὰς ποταμοῦ χειμάρρου τρόπον ἀμετρία τροφῶν ἐπικλύζοντες
- 23 εἰς βυθὸν ἀναγκάζουσι δύεσθαι. τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον καὶ ὅσοι φέρουσιν ἐράνους ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει παιδείας, τὸ κυριώτατον τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς ζημιοῦσι, διάνοιαν, ἀποκόπτοντες αὐτῆς τὰ σωτήρια,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπίπονοι.

<sup>a</sup> Or “ who is it, whom I am to obey ? ”

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 500.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 19-23

becomes a leader in godlessness. VI. Such 19 was he who said, "who is He that I should obey Him,"<sup>a</sup> and again, "I know not the Lord" (Exod.
v. 2). In the first of these utterances he asserts that there is no God; in the second that even if there is a God he is not known to us, and this conclusion presupposes the assumption that there is no divine providence. For if there were such a thing as providence, God too would be known.

As for contributions or club subscriptions, when 20
the object is to share in the best of possessions, prudence, such payments are praiseworthy and profitable;
but when they are paid to obtain that supreme evil,
folly, the practice is unprofitable and blameworthy.
We contribute to the former object by desire for 21 virtue, by zeal for things noble, by continuous study therein, by persistent self-training, by unwearied and unflagging labour. We contribute to the opposite by slackness, indolence, luxury, effeminacy, and by complete irregularity of life.<sup>b</sup> We can see indeed 22 people preparing themselves to compete in the arena of wine-bibbing and every day exercising themselves and contending in the contests of gluttony. The contributions they make are supposed to be for a profitable purpose, but they are actually mulcting themselves in everything, in money, body and soul.
Their substance they diminish by the actual payments, their bodily powers they shatter and enfeeble by the delicate living, and by excessive indulgence in food they deluge their souls as with a winter torrent and submerge them perforce in the depths.
In just the same way those who pay their contri- 23 butions only to destroy training and education are mulcting their most vital element, the understanding, φρόνησιν καὶ σωφροσύνην, ἔτι δὲ ἀνδρείαν καὶ δικαιοσύνην. διό μοι δοκεῖ καὶ αὐτὸς ὀνόματι συνθέτω χρῆσθαι τῷ “συμβολοκοπῶν” πρὸς δήλωσιν ἐναργεστέραν τοῦ σημαινομένου, διότι τὰ κατὰ ἀρετῆς ἐπιχειρήματα ὡσπερ τινὰς συμβολὰς καὶ ἐράνους εἰσφέροντες τιτρώσκουσι καὶ διαιροῦσι καὶ συγκόπτουσι μέχρι παντελοῦς φθορᾶς τὰς φιληκόους καὶ φιλομαθεῖς ψυχάς. VII.

PHILO

24 ὁ μὲν οὖν σοφὸς Ἀβραὰμ ἐπανελθεῖν λέγεται “ἀπὸ τῆς κοπῆς τοῦ Χοδολλαγόμορ καὶ τῶν βασιλέων τῶν μετ’ αὐτοῦ,” ὁ δ’ Ἀμαλήκ ἔμπαλιν τοῦ ἀσκητοῦ “τὴν οὐραγίαν κόπτειν” ἀκολουθία φύσεως· ἐχθρὰ [361] γὰρ | τὰ ἐναντία καὶ τὸν ἐπ’ ἀλλήλοις ὄλεθρον αἰεὶ 25 μελετῶντα. τὸν δὲ κομίζοντα τὰς συμβολὰς καὶ ταύτῃ μάλιστ’ ἂν τις αἰτιάσαιτο, ὅτι οὐ μόνον ἀδικεῖν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συναδικεῖν ἔγνωκεν ἐτέροις ἀξιῶν τὰ μὲν αὐτὸς εἰσηγεῖσθαι, τὰ δ’ εἰσηγουμένων ἄλλων ἀκροᾶσθαι, ὅπως καὶ φύσει καὶ μαθήσει διαμαρτάνων μηδεμίαν εἰς σωτηρίαν ὑπολείπηται χρηστὴν ἐλπίδα ἑαυτῷ, καὶ ταῦτα νόμου διειρηκότος “μὴ γίνεσθαι μετὰ πολλῶν 26 ἐπὶ κακία.” τῷ γὰρ ὄντι πολύχουν μὲν καὶ πολυφορώτατον ἐν ἀνθρώπων ψυχαῖς τὸ κακόν, ἐσταλμένον δὲ καὶ σπάνιον τὰγαθόν. παραίνεσις οὖν ὠφελιμωτάτη μὴ τοῖς πολλοῖς, μεθ’ ὧν τὸ ἀδικεῖν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ὀλίγοις, μεθ’ ὧν τὸ δικαιοπραγεῖν, συμφέρεσθαι.

* κοπή, “rout,” literally is “cutting.”

ON DRUNKENNESS, 23-26

and cut away therefrom its safeguards, prudence and self-control, and indeed courage and justice to boot. It was for this reason, I think, that Moses himself used a compound word, "contribution cutting," to bring out more clearly the nature of the thing he was describing, because when men bring their efforts like contributions or club-money, so to speak, to bear against virtue, they wound and divide and cut in pieces docile and knowledge-loving souls, till they bring them to utter destruction. VII.

Thus we read that the wise Abraham returned from 24 the "cutting"<sup>a</sup> of Chedorlaomer and his fellow kings (Gen. xiv. 17), while on the other hand Amalek "cuts the rearguard" of the Practiser (Deut. xxv. 18). Both these are in accordance with natural truth, for there is a hostility between opposites and they are always meditating destruction of each other.

There is another charge, and that the greatest, which 25 could be brought against the provider of the contributions. He purposes not only to wrong, but to join with others in wrongdoing. He consents to initiate evil himself, and also to comply with what others initiate, that thus he may leave himself no ray of hope that may serve for his redemption, since his sin lies both in his nature and in what he has learnt from others. And this in spite of the direct injunction of the law, not "to go with the many to do evil" (Exod. xxiii. 2). For in very truth manifold 26 are the aspects and the products of evil in men's souls, while the good is narrowly confined and scanty. And so most excellent is the advice that we should not keep company with the many but with the few; for wrongdoing is the associate of the former, but right action of the latter.

PHILO

- 27 VIII. Τέταρτον τοίνυν καὶ μέγιστον ἔγκλημα ἦν τὸ μεθύειν, οὐκ ἀνειμένως, ἀλλὰ σφόδρα συντόνως· τὸ γὰρ οἰνοφλυγεῖν ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ τὸ παραίτιον ἀφροσύνης φάρμακον, ἀπαιδευσίαν, ἐντύφεσθαι καὶ ἀνακαίεσθαι καὶ ἀναφλέγεσθαι μηδέποτε σβεσθῆναι δυναμένην, ἀλλ' ὅλην δι' ὄλων αἰεὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἐμπιπρᾶσάν τε καὶ πυρπολοῦσαν.
- 28 εἰκότως οὖν ἔψεται δίκη πάντα μοχθηρὸν τρόπον ἐκκαθαίρουσα διανοίας· λέγεται γὰρ “ἐξαρεῖς τὸν πονηρόν,” οὐκ ἐκ πόλεως ἢ χώρας ἢ ἔθνους, ἀλλ' “ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν”· ἡμῖν γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐνυπάρχουσι καὶ ἐμφωλεύουσιν οἱ ὑπαίτιοι καὶ ἐπίληπτοι λογισμοί, οὓς, ὅποτε ἀνιάτως ἔχοιεν, ἀποκόπτειν
- 29 καὶ διαφθεῖρειν ἀναγκαῖον. τὸν οὖν ἀπειθῆ καὶ φίλεριν καὶ λόγων πιθανότητος ὥσπερ τινὰς συμβολὰς καὶ ἐράνους ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τοῦ καλοῦ πορίζοντα καὶ ἀκράτῳ φλεγόμενον καὶ καταμεθύοντα ἀρετῆς καὶ παροινίας ἐκτόπους<sup>1</sup> εἰς αὐτὴν παροινοῦντα δίκαιον ἦν κατηγοροῦς μὲν τοὺς ἄλλοις συμμάχους λαβεῖν, πατέρα καὶ μητέρα, <φθορὰν> δὲ ἐνδέξασθαι παντελεῆ πρὸς νουθεσίαν καὶ σωφρονισμόν τῶν οἶων τε σώζεσθαι.
- 30 Πατρός δὲ καὶ μητρός κοινὰ μὲν αἱ κλήσεις, διάφοροι δ' αἱ δυνάμεις. τὸν γοῦν τότε τὸ πᾶν ἐργασάμενον δημιουργὸν ὁμοῦ καὶ πατέρα εἶναι τοῦ γεγονότος εὐθύς ἐν δίκῃ φήσομεν, μητέρα δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκτόπως.

<sup>a</sup> Philo connects -φλυγεῖν with φλέγω, though the word is rather to be connected with φλύξω, “bubble.”

<sup>b</sup> Philo has in mind the (unquoted) conclusion of Deut. xxi. 21, “and the rest when they hear it shall fear.” Cf. also S.V.F. ii. 1175, where the Stoic idea of punishment as a deterrent of others is brought out.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 27-30

VIII. The fourth and greatest charge was that of 27 drunkenness—and drunkenness not of the milder but of the most intense sort. For the phrase here used, “fired with wine,” <sup>a</sup> is as much as to say that the poison which causes folly, indiscipline, smoulders within the man, then bursts into fire and flame impossible to quench, and consumes the soul through its whole being with the conflagration. Naturally, 28 therefore, will punishment follow, purging every base tendency out of the mind. For it says, “thou shalt remove the evil one,” not out of a city or a country or a nation but “out of yourselves” (Deut. xxi. 21).
For it is in ourselves that the vicious and culpable thoughts exist and have their lair, thoughts which we must cut away and destroy when their state is incurable.

We see then this man as dis- 29 obedient, as strife-loving, as providing in the form of persuasive arguments “contributions” and “club-money” for the subversion of morality, and finally inflamed with strong drink and making drunken assaults on virtue and directing his monstrous orgies against her. Surely it were just that such a one as he should find his accusers in those in whom others find their allies, namely in his father and mother, and be visited with complete destruction, to admonish and bring to their senses those who can be saved.<sup>b</sup>

Now “father and mother” is a phrase which can 30 bear different meanings.<sup>c</sup> For instance we should rightly say and without further question that the Architect who made this universe was at the same time the father of what was thus born, whilst its mother was the knowledge possessed by its Maker.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “the titles are common but the meanings different.”
See App. p. 500.

PHILO

- τὴν τοῦ πεποιηκότος ἐπιστήμην, ἣ συνῶν ὁ θεὸς οὐχ ὡς ἄνθρωπος ἔσπειρε γένεσιν. ἡ δὲ παραδεξαμένη τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ σπέρματα τελεσφόροις ᾠδίσι [362] τὸν μόνον καὶ ἀγαπητὸν αἰσθητὸν υἱὸν | ἀπεκύησε,
- 31 τόνδε τὸν κόσμον. εἰσάγεται γοῦν παρά τινι τῶν ἐκ τοῦ θείου χοροῦ ἢ σοφία περὶ αὐτῆς λέγουσα τὸν τρόπον τούτον· “ὁ θεὸς ἐκτήσατό με πρωτίστην τῶν ἑαυτοῦ ἔργων, καὶ πρὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος ἐθεμελίωσέ με.” ἦν γὰρ ἀναγκαῖον τῆς μητρὸς καὶ τιθῆνης τῶν ὄλων πάνθ’ ὅσα εἰς γένεσιν ἦλθεν εἶναι νεώτερα.
- 32 IX. τούτων οὖν τῶν γονέων τίς ἱκανὸς ὑποστήναι κατηγορίαν; ἀλλ’ οὐδὲ μετρίαν ἀπειλὴν ἢ ἐλαφροτάτην κατάμεμψιν. οὐδὲ γὰρ τῶν δωρεῶν ἱκανὸς οὐδεὶς χωρῆσαι τὸ ἄφθονον πλῆθος, ἴσως δὲ οὐδ’ ὁ κόσμος, ἀλλ’ οἷα βραχεῖα δεξαμένη μεγάλης ἐπιρρεούσης τῶν τοῦ θεοῦ χαρίτων πηγῆς τάχιστα ἀποπληρωθήσεται, ὡς ἀναβλύσαι τε καὶ ὑπερεκχεῖσθαι. εἰ δὲ τὰς εὐεργεσίας ἀδυνατοῦμεν δέχεσθαι, τὰς κολαστηρίους δυνάμεις πῶς ἐπι-
- 33 φερομένας οἴσομεν; τοὺς μὲν δὴ τοῦ παντὸς γονεῖς ὑπεξαιρετέον τοῦ παρόντος λόγου, τοὺς δὲ φοιτητὰς καὶ γνωρίμους αὐτῶν τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν εἰληχότας ψυχῶν, ὅσαι μὴ ἀνάγωγοι καὶ ἄμουσοι, νῦν ἐπισκεψώμεθα. πατέρα τοίνυν εἶναί φαμεν τὸν ἄρρενα καὶ τέλειον καὶ ὀρθὸν λόγον, μητέρα δὲ τὴν μέσσην<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐγκύκλιον χορείαν τε καὶ παιδείαν· οἷς καλὸν καὶ
- 34 συμφέρον ὡς ἂν ἔκγονον τοκεῦσι πείθεσθαι. τοῦ μὲν οὖν πατρός, ὀρθοῦ λόγου, παράγγελμα ἔπεσθαι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἴσην.

<sup>a</sup> Because there is another son not αἰσθητός, i.e. the νοητός κόσμος, cf. Quod Deus 31.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 501.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 30-34

With His knowledge God had union, not as men have it, and begat created being. And knowledge, having received the divine seed, when her travail was consummated bore the only beloved son who is apprehended by the senses,<sup>a</sup> the world which we see. Thus 31 in the pages of one of the inspired company, wisdom is represented as speaking of herself after this manner : " God obtained <sup>b</sup> me first of all his works and founded me before the ages " (Prov. viii. 22). True, for it was necessary that all that came to the birth of creation should be younger than the mother and nurse of the All. IX. If these parents accuse, who 32 is able to withstand their accusation, or even a mild threat or the lightest chiding? Why, even their gifts are so boundless in number that no one, not even, one may say, the world, can contain them, but like some small cistern it will quickly be filled to the brim by the influx from the fountain of God's gracious boons, and discharge the rest in an overflow. And if we are unable to contain their benefits. how shall we endure the visitation of their powers to chastise? But in the present discussion, 33 we must leave out of consideration the parents of the universe, and rather turn our eyes to the disciples, who have followed in their company,<sup>b</sup> to whom has been committed the care and guidance of such souls as are not without training or incapable of culture. I suggest, then, that the father is reason, masculine, perfect, right reason and the mother the lower learning of the schools, with its regular course or round of instruction. These two stand to us in the relation of parents to children, and it is good and profitable to obey them.

Now right reason, the father, bids us follow in the 34

PHILO

- καὶ ἀκολουθεῖν τῇ φύσει γυμνὴν καὶ ἀπημφια-σμένην ἀλήθειαν μεταδιώκοντας, παιδείας δέ, τῆς μητρὸς, θέσει δικαίοις προσέχειν, ἃ κατὰ πόλεις καὶ ἔθνη καὶ χώρας ἔθεντο οἱ πρῶτοι δόκησιν 35 πρὸ ἀληθείας ἀσπασάμενοι. τοῖς γονεῦσι τούτοις τέτταρες παίδων εἰσὶ τάξεις, ἡ μὲν ἀμφοτέροις καταπειθῆς, ἡ δ' οὐδετέρῳ προσέχουσα, ἐναντία τῇ προτέρα· τῶν δ' ἄλλων ἡμιτελῆς ἑκατέρα, ἡ μὲν γὰρ αὐτῶν φιλοπάτωρ σφόδρα γεγонуῖα τῷ μὲν προσέχει, μητρὸς δὲ καὶ τῶν ἐπισκήψεων<sup>1</sup> αὐτῆς ἀλογεῖ, ἡ δ' ἔμπαλιν φιλομήτωρ εἶναι δοκοῦσα τῇ μὲν πάντα ὑπηρετεῖ, τῶν δὲ τοῦ πατρὸς ἠκιστα φροντίζει. ἡ μὲν οὖν πρώτη τὰ κατὰ πάντων ἄθλα οἴσεται νικητήρια, ἡ δ' ἀντίπαλος ἦταν ὁμοῦ καὶ φθορὰν ἀναδέξεται, τῶν δ' ἄλλων ἑκατέρα, ἡ μὲν δευτερείων, ἡ δὲ τρίτων ἄθλων μεταποιήσεται, δευτερείων μὲν ἡ πειθαρχοῦσα πατρί, τρίτων δ' ἡ τῇ μητρί.
- 36 X. Τῆς μὲν οὖν φιλομήτορος ταῖς τῶν πολλῶν δόξαις ὑπεικούσης καὶ κατὰ τὰς πολυτρόπους τοῦ βίου ζηλώσεις παντοδαπὰς μεταβαλλούσης ἰδέας | [363] Αἰγυπτίου Πρωτέως τὸν τρόπον, ὃς τῷ πάνθ' ὅσα ἐν τῷ παντὶ πεφυκέναι γίνεσθαι τὸ ἀληθὲς ἀδηλού-μενον ἔσχεν εἶδος, τύπος ἐναργέστατος Ἰοθόρ, πλάσμα τύφου, πρὸς πόλιν καὶ πολιτείαν συγκλύδων καὶ μιγάδων ἀνθρώπων κεναῖς αἰωρουμένων δόξαις 37 μάλιστα ἀρμόττων. Μωυσέως γὰρ τοῦ σοφοῦ τὸν λέων ἅπαντα τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς εὐσέβειαν καὶ τιμὴν θεοῦ μετακαλοῦντος καὶ τὰς τε προστάξεις

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπισκέψεων.

<sup>a</sup> Or "opinion."

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 501.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 34-37

steps of nature and pursue truth in her naked and undisguised form. Education, the mother, bids us give ear to rules laid down by human ordinance, rules which have been made in different cities and countries and nations by those who first embraced the apparent <sup>a</sup> in preference to the true. These <sup>35</sup> parents have four classes of children. The first is obedient to both ; the second is the direct opposite, and gives heed to neither, while each of the other two lacks its half. One of them is heartily devoted to the father and gives ear to him, but disregards the mother and her injunctions. The other, on the contrary, appears devoted to the mother, and serves her in every way, but pays no heed to the words of the father. Of these four the first will carry off the palm of victory over all comers, while the second its opposite will receive defeat accompanied by destruction. Each of the others will claim a prize, one the second, the other the third ; the second belongs to the class which obeys the father, the third to the class which obeys the mother.

X. <sup>b</sup> This last kind which loves the mother, which <sup>36</sup> bows down to the opinions of the multitude and undergoes all manner of transformations in conformity with the ever-varying aspirations of human life, like the Egyptian Proteus, whose true form remained a matter of uncertainty through his power to become everything in the universe, is most clearly typified by Jethro. Jethro is a compound of vanity, closely corresponding with a city or commonwealth peopled by a promiscuous horde, who swing to and fro as their idle opinions carry them. See how he deals <sup>37</sup> with Moses. He in his wisdom was recalling the whole people of the soul to piety and to honouring

PHILO

καὶ τοὺς ἱερωτάτους νόμους ἀναδιδάσκοντος—φησὶ γὰρ ὅτι “ἐπειδὰν γένηται αὐτοῖς ἀντιλογία καὶ ἔλθωσι πρὸς μέ, διακρίνω ἕκαστον καὶ συμ-βιβάζω τὰ προστάγματα τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τὸν νόμον αὐτοῦ”—, παρελθὼν ὁ δοκησίσοφος Ἰοθόρ, τῶν μὲν θείων ἀμύητος ἀγαθῶν, τοῖς δὲ ἀνθρωπίους καὶ φθαρτοῖς μάλιστ’ ἐνωμιληκῶς δημαγωγεῖ καὶ νόμους ἐναντίους τοῖς τῆς φύσεως ἀναγράφει, πρὸς τὸ δοκεῖν ἀφορῶν ἐκείνων ἀναφερομένων πρὸς τὸ 38 εἶναι. καίτοι καὶ τοῦτον ἐλεήσας καὶ οἰκτισά-μενος τοῦ πολλοῦ πλάνου μεταδιδάσκειν οἶεται δεῖν καὶ ἀναπεῖθαι ἀποστήναι μὲν τῶν κενῶν δοξῶν, 39 ἀκολουθῆσαι δὲ παγίως τῷ ἀληθεῖ. “ἐξάραντες,” γάρ φησιν, ἡμεῖς καὶ ἀποκόψαντες τῆς διανοίας τὸν κενὸν τύφον μετανιστάμεθα εἰς τὸν ἐπιστήμης τόπον, ὃν χρησιμοῖς καὶ ὁμολογίαις θείαις λαμβάνομεν. “ἴθι δὴ μεθ’ ἡμῶν καὶ εὖ σε ποιήσομεν.” ἀποβαλεῖς μὲν γὰρ τὴν βλαβερωτάτην δόκησιν, 40 κτήσῃ δὲ τὴν ὠφελιμωτάτην ἀλήθειαν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ τοιαῦτα κατεπασθεῖς ἀλογήσει τῶν εἰρημένων καὶ ἐπιστήμη μὲν οὐδαμῇ οὐδαμῶς ἔψεται, ἀναχωρήσει δὲ καὶ ἀναδραμεῖται πρὸς τὸν ἴδιον καὶ κενὸν τύφον· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι εἶπε πρὸς αὐτόν· “οὐ πορεύσομαι ἀλλ’ εἰς τὴν γῆν μου καὶ τὴν γενεάν μου,” τουτέστι τὴν συγγενῇ ψευδοδοξοῦσαν<sup>1</sup> ἀπιστίαν, ἐπειδὴ τὴν
 ἀληθεύουσαν<sup>1</sup> ἀνδράσι φίλην πίστιν οὐκ ἔμαθε.
 41 XI. καὶ γὰρ ὅταν ἐπίδειξιν εὐσεβείας βουλόμενος ποιήσασθαι λέγῃ· “νῦν ἔγνω ὅτι μέγας

<sup>1</sup> Or ψευδοδοξοῦσιν . . . ἀληθεύουσιν (Adler).

<sup>a</sup> The LXX has ἐξαίρομεν ἡμεῖς εἰς τὸν τόπον ὃν εἶπε Κύριος, where ἐξαίρω, as often, is used intransitively. Philo, however, 338

God, and was teaching them the commandments and holy laws. His words are, "when they have a dispute and come to me, I judge between each of them and instruct them in the commandments of God and His law" (Exod. xviii. 16). And then comes forward Jethro the seeming wise, who has never learnt the secrets of the divine blessings, but his concern has been with little else than things human and corruptible. He plays the demagogue, and the laws which he lays down contradict the laws of nature; for his eyes are fixed on semblance, while they relate to real existence. Yet even on him Moses has com- 38 passion, and pities him for his great delusion; he feels that he should teach him a better lesson, and persuade him to depart from his empty opinions and follow truth stedfastly. We have "removed,"<sup>a</sup> he 39 says in effect, and excised from the mind its empty vanity and are passing over to the place of knowledge, which is ours through the oracles and promises of God. "Come with us and we will do thee good" (Num. x. 29). For you will lose the most harmful of evils, mere seeming, and gain the most profitable of blessings, truth. But even to words of such charm 40 as these Jethro will pay no heed, nor ever follow knowledge in any way, but will hasten to return to the empty vanity which is indeed his own. For we read that he said to Moses, "I will not go, but I will go to my land and my generation" (Num. x. 30); that is, to the unfaith of false opinion which is his kinsman, since he has not learnt the true faith, so dear to real men. XI. For when he 41 wishes to make a shew of piety and says "now I for his allegory uses it transitively. The English "remove" gives the double usage.

PHILO

κύριος παρὰ πάντας τοὺς θεοὺς," ἀσέβειαν παρὰ δικάζειν ἐπισταμένοις ἀνδράσιν ἑαυτοῦ κατηγορεῖ.
42 φήσουσι γὰρ αὐτῷ· νῦν ἔγνωσ, ἀνόσιε, πρότερον δ' οὐκ ἠπίστασο τὸ μέγεθος τοῦ παντός<sup>1</sup> ἡγεμόνος; ἦν γάρ τι πρεσβύτερον θεοῦ, ᾧ προεντετύχηκας;
ἢ τοῖς ἐκγόνοις οὐχ αἱ τῶν γονέων ἀρεταὶ πρό τῶν ἄλλων ἅπαξ ἀπάντων γνώριμοι; τοῦ δὲ παντός οὐκ ἄρα ἀρχηγέτης ὁ κτίστης καὶ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ;
ὥστ' εἰ νῦν ἐγνωκέναι φῆς σύ, οὐδὲ νῦν ἔγνωκας, 43 ὅτι οὐκ ἀπὸ γενέσεως ἀρχῆς. ἐλέγχῃ δ' οὐδὲν ἦττον ἐπιμορφάζων, ὅταν συγκρίνης τὰ ἀσύγκριτα καὶ λέγῃς παρὰ πάντας τοὺς θεοὺς τὸ μεγαλεῖον τοῦ ὄντος ἐγνωκέναι· εἰ γὰρ ἦδεις ἀληθεία τὸ ὄν, οὐδένα ἂν τῶν ἄλλων ὑπέλαβες εἶναι θεὸν αὐτεξού-
44 σιον. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἀνατείλας ὁ ἥλιος ἀποκρύπτει |
[364] τοὺς ἀστέρας τῶν ἡμετέρων ὄψεων ἀθρόον τὸ ἑαυτοῦ καταχέας φέγγος, οὕτως ὅταν τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμματι ἀμιγεῖς καὶ καθαρῶταται καὶ τηλαυγέσταται τοῦ φωσφόρου θεοῦ νοηταὶ ἐναστράψωσιν ἀυγαί, κατιδεῖν οὐδὲν ἕτερον δύναται· ἐπιλάμψασα γὰρ ἢ τοῦ ὄντος ἐπιστήμη πάντα περιαυγάζει, ὡς καὶ τοῖς λαμπροτάτοις ἐξ ἑαυτῶν εἶναι δοκοῦσιν ἐπισκοτεῖν. θεοῖς 45 οὖν τοῖς ψευδωνύμοις οὐκ ἂν τις τὸν<sup>2</sup> ἀληθῆ θεὸν συγκρίνειν ὑπέμενε, εἴπερ ἀψευδῶς ἐγίνωσκεν αὐτόν· ἀλλ' ἢ ἀνεπιστημοσύνη τοῦ ἐνόσ τὴν ἐπὶ πολλοῖς ὡς ὑπ-άρχουσι, πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐκ οὔσι, δόξαν εἰργάσατο.

<sup>1</sup> παντός is suspected on the grounds that while Philo often uses πάντων without the article, he regularly uses it with the singular. Perhaps read πάντων ἡγεμόνος, or πανηγεμόνος, or τοῦ τοῦ παντός ἡγεμόνος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πιστόν.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 501.

<sup>b</sup> Or "notwithstanding (all your professions)"; cf. the use of οὐχ ἦττον in § 64 and § 195.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 41-45

know that the Lord is great beyond all the gods" (Exod. xviii. 11), he does but charge himself with impiety in the eyes of men who knew how to judge. They will say to him " Blasphemer ! is it now that 42 you know this, and have you never till now understood the greatness of the ruler of all ? Did your past experience shew you anything more ancient or more venerable than God ? Are not the excellences of the parents known to the children, before those of any others ? Is not the Maker and Father of the Universe He who presided at its beginning ?<sup>a</sup> So if you say that you now know, not even now have you true knowledge, since it does not date from the beginning of your own existence. And you stand no less <sup>b</sup> con- 43 victed of mere feigning, when you compare two incomparables, and say that you know that the greatness of the Existent is beyond all the Gods. For if you had true knowledge of that which IS, you would not have supposed that any other god had power of his own." The sun when it rises hides from our sight 44 the light of the other stars by pouring upon them the flood of its own beams ; even so, when the rays of the Divine Day-star, rays visible to the mind only, pure from all defiling mixture and piercing to the furthest distance, flash upon the eye of the soul, it can descry nothing else. For when the knowledge of the Existent shines, it wraps everything in light, and thus renders invisible even bodies which seemed brightest in themselves. No one, then, could have the boldness 45 to compare the true God with those falsely so called, if he had any knowledge of Him which was free from falsehood. But your ignorance of the One produced your opinion of the existence of the Many whereas in real truth they had no existence.

PHILO

- 46 XII. τῆς αὐτῆς προαιρέσεώς ἐστι πᾶς, ὅτω τὰ μὲν ψυχῆς ἀπέγνωσται, τὰ δὲ περὶ σῶμά τε<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐκτὸς χρώμασι καὶ σχήμασι πεποικιλμένα πρὸς ἀπάτην αἰσθήσεως εὐπαραγώγου θαυμάζεται.
- 47 καλεῖ δὲ τὸν τοιοῦτον ὁ νομοθέτης Λάβαν, ὃς τοὺς ἀληθεῖς τῆς φύσεως νόμους οὐ κατιδὼν ψευδο-γραφεῖ τοὺς παρὰ ἀνθρώποις φάσκων· “οὐκ ἔστιν οὕτως ἐν τῷ τόπῳ ἡμῶν, δοῦναι τὴν νεωτέραν
- 48 πρὶν ἢ τὴν πρεσβυτέραν.” οὗτος μὲν γὰρ τὴν ἐν χρόνοις τάξιν φυλάττειν οἴεται δεῖν, τὰ πρεσβύτερα πρότερον καὶ τὰ νεώτερα αὖθις εἰς κοινωνίαν ἄγεσθαι δικαίων. ὁ δὲ σοφίας ἀσκητῆς εἰδὼς καὶ φύσεις ἀχρόνους ὑπαρχούσας ἐφίεται καὶ νεωτέρων προτέρων καὶ πρεσβυτέρων ὑστέρων.
- ἔχει δὲ καὶ τὸν ἡθοποιὸν λόγον ἑαυτῷ συναδόντα· τοῖς γὰρ ἀσκηταῖς ἀνάγκη πρότερον ἐντυχεῖν τῇ νεωτέρᾳ παιδείᾳ, ἵνα τῆς τελειοτέρας αὖθις ἀπ-
- 49 ὄνασθαι βεβαίως δυνηθῶσι. παρὸ καὶ μέχρι νῦν οἱ καλοκάγαθίας ἐρασταὶ οὐ πρότερον ἐπὶ τὰς τῆς πρεσβυτέρας ἀφικνοῦνται θύρας φιλοσοφίας, πρὶν ἢ ταῖς νεωτέραις ἐντυχεῖν, γραμματικῇ καὶ γεω-μετρῖᾳ καὶ τῇ συμπάσῃ τῶν ἐγκυκλίων μουσικῇ· αὗται γὰρ σοφίαν τοῖς ἀδόλως καὶ καθαρῶς μνω-
- 50 μένοις αἰεὶ προξενούσιν. ὁ δ' ἀντισοφίζεται βουλό-μενος τὴν πρεσβυτέραν ἡμᾶς ἀγαγέσθαι προτέραν, οὐχ ἵνα βεβαίως ἔχωμεν, ἀλλ' ἵνα τοῖς τῆς νεω-τέρας φίλτροις δελεασθέντες αὖθις τὸν ἐπ' ἐκείνη
- 51 πόθον ἐκλύσωμεν. XIII. καὶ σχεδὸν τοῦτο συν-έβη πολλοῖς τῶν ἀνοδία πρὸς παιδείαν χρησα-μένων. ἔτι γάρ, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ἀπ' αὐτῶν σπαρ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. σώματα.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 501.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 502.

XII. The same creed and rule is followed by every- 46 one who has rejected the things of the soul and set his admiration on the things of the body, and outside the body, with shapes and colours rife, decked out to deceive the senses which are so easily seduced. Such 47 a one is called by the lawgiver Laban, who, being blind to the true laws of nature, proclaims with false lips man-made law. "It is not so in our place," he says, "to give the younger in marriage before the elder" (Gen. xxix. 26). For Laban thinks that he 48 should maintain the order of time. He holds that older things should first be taken into our company, and younger things only later. But the Practiser of Wisdom, knowing that the timeless also exists in nature,<sup>a</sup> desires what is younger first and the elder afterwards.

And the laws of human character<sup>a</sup> as well as of nature agree with him in this ;
 for Men of Practice must first take up with the younger culture, that afterwards they may be able to have secure enjoyment of that which is more perfect. And therefore to this day the lovers of true 49 nobility do not attend at the door of the elder sister, philosophy, till they have taken knowledge of the younger sisters, grammar and geometry and the whole range of the school culture. For these ever secure the favours of wisdom to those who woo her in guilelessness and sincerity. But Laban with his so- 50 phistry will have it otherwise, and wishes us to wed the elder first, not that we may possess her in security, but that afterwards snared by the love-charms of the younger sister, we may abandon our desire of the elder.

XIII. <sup>b</sup>And this or something very like it happens 51 to many who have left the right path <sup>b</sup> in their search for culture. For from the very cradle, we may say, γάνων πρὸς τελειότατον ἐπιτήδευμα, φιλοσοφίαν, ἔλθόντες, ἀμύητοι τῶν ἐγκυκλίων εἰσάπαν οὐ δικαιοῦσαντες γενέσθαι ὄψε καὶ μόλις αὐτῶν ἄψασθαι διενοήθησαν. κᾶπειτα ἀπὸ τῆς μείζονος καὶ πρεσβυτέρας ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἐλαττόνων καὶ νεωτέρων θέαν καταβάντες ἐνεγῆρασαν αὐτοῖς, ὡς μηκέτ' ἀναδραμεῖν ὅθεν ὠρμησαν ἰσχύσαι.

PHILO

- 52
 [365] διὰ τοῦτ' οἶμαί φησι. “ συντέλεσον τὰ ἑβδομα ταύτης,” ἵσον τῷ | μὴ ἀτελεύτητον ἔστω σοι τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ἀγαθόν, ἀλλ' ὄρον ἐχέτω καὶ πέρας, ἵνα καὶ τῇ νεωτέρα τάξει τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐντύχῃς, ἣν σώματος κάλλος καὶ δόξα καὶ πλοῦτος
 53 καὶ τὰ ὁμοιότροπα κεκλήρωται. ὁ δὲ συντελέσει μὲν οὐχ ὑπισχνεῖται, “ ἀναπληρώσειν” δ' αὐτὴν ὁμολογεῖ, τουτέστι μηδέποτε ἐπιλείψει τὰ πρὸς αὔξησιν καὶ συμπλήρωσιν αὐτῆς ἐπιτηδεύων, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ περιέξασθαι,<sup>1</sup> κἂν μυρία τὰ
 54 ἀντισπῶντα καὶ ἀνθέλκοντα ἦ. πάνυ δ' ἐκδήλως τὸ τὰ ἔθνη γυναιξὶ μᾶλλον ἢ ἀνδράσιν ἐπιτηδεύεσθαι δοκεῖ μοι παρίστασθαι διὰ τῶν Ῥαχὴλ τῆς μόνα τὰ αἰσθητὰ θαυμαζούσης λόγων· φησὶ γὰρ πρὸς τὸν πατέρα ἑαυτῆς· “ μὴ βαρέως φέρε, κύριε· οὐ δύναμαι ἀναστῆναι ἐνώπιόν σου, ὅτι τὰ κατ' ἐθισμόν τῶν γυναικῶν μοί ἐστιν.”
 55 οὐκοῦν γυναικῶν ἴδιον τὸ ἔθεσι πείθεσθαι· καὶ γὰρ τῷ ὄντι ἀσθενεστέρας καὶ θηλυτέρας ψυχῆς τὸ ἔθος· ἀνδρῶν γάρ τοι ἡ φύσις, καὶ ἐρρωμένον καὶ ἄρρενος ὡς ἀληθῶς λογισμοῦ ἔπεσθαι φύσει.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. περιέσσεσθαι.

they betake themselves to the most perfect of studies, philosophy, and afterwards deeming it wrong that they should have no tincture at all of the school subjects, bethink themselves to make a belated and painful effort to grasp them. And then having made their descent from the greater and older branch, philosophy, to the contemplation of the lesser and younger branches, they grow old in their company and thus lose all power of retracing their course to the place from which they started. And 52 this, I think, is why Laban says, "bring to a consummation her week" (Gen. xxix. 27), meaning "let not the true good of the soul be thine unendingly, but let it have its term and limit, that so you may keep company with the younger order of goods in which are classed bodily beauty and glory and riches and the like." But Jacob does not promise to bring 53 her to a consummation, but agrees to "fulfil" (Gen. xxix. 28) her, that is never to cease pursuing what tends to her growth and completeness and always and everywhere to cleave to her, however great be the host of influences which draw and pull him in the opposite direction. That the rule of 54 custom is followed by women more than men is, I think, quite clearly shewn by the words of Rachel, who looks with admiration only on that which is perceived by the senses. For she says to her father, "Be not wroth, sir; I cannot rise before thee, because the custom of women is upon me" (Gen. xxxi. 35). So we see that obedience to custom is the 55 special property of women. Indeed, custom is the rule of the weaker and more effeminate soul. For nature is of men, and to follow nature is the mark of a strong and truly masculine reason.

PHILO

- 56 XIV. καταπέπληγμαι δὲ τὸ ἀψεudes τῆς ψυχῆς τῆς ἐν τοῖς ἑαυτῆς διαλόγοις ὁμολογούσης, ὅτι οὐ δύναται τῶν φαινομένων ἀγαθῶν κατεξανα-στηναί, ἀλλ' ἕκαστον αὐτῶν τέθηπε καὶ τιμῆ καὶ 57 μονοουχ ἑαυτῆς προκέκρικεν. ἐπεὶ τίς ἡμῶν ἀντιστατεῖ πλούτῳ; τίς δὲ πρὸς δόξαν κονίεται; τίς δὲ τιμῆς ἢ ἀρχῆς καταπεφρόνηκε σχεδὸν τῶν ἔτι φυρομένων ἐν κεναῖς δόξαις; οὐδὲ εἰς τὸ 58 παράπαν. ἀλλ' ἕως μὲν οὐδὲν τούτων πάρεστιν, ὑψηγοροῦμεν ὡς ὀλιγοδείας ἑταῖροι τὸν ἀνταρκέστατον καὶ δικαιοτάτον καὶ ἐλευθέρους καὶ εὐγενέσιν ἀρμόττοντα περιποιούσης βίον· ἐπειδὴν δέ τις τῶν εἰρημένων ἐλπίς ἢ ἐλπίδος αὐτὸ μόνον αὔρα βραχεῖα καταπνεύση, διελεγχόμεθα· ὑπέικοντες γὰρ εὐθὺς ἐνδίδομεν καὶ ἀντιβῆναι καὶ ἀντισχεῖν οὐ δυνάμεθα, προδοθέντες δ' ὑπὸ τῶν φίλων αἰσθήσεων ὅλην τὴν ψυχῆς συμμαχίαν ἐκλείπομεν καὶ οὐκέτι λανθάνοντες ἀλλ' ἤδη φανερώς αὐτο-59 μολοῦμεν· καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· ἔτι γὰρ ἡμῖν ἔθη τὰ γυναικῶν ἐπιπεπόλακεν οὕτω δυνηθείσι τὰ μὲν ἐκνύφασθαι, πρὸς δὲ τὴν ἀνδρῶνίτιν μεταδραμεῖν ἔστιαν, καθάπερ λόγος ἔχει τὴν φιλάρετον διάνοιαν, 60 ὄνομα Σάρραν· αὕτη γὰρ εἰσάγεται διὰ τῶν χρησμῶν “ τὰ γυναικεῖα πάντ' ἐκλιποῦσα,” ἥνικα τὸ αὐτομαθὲς γένος ὠδίνειν καὶ ἀποτίκτειν 61 ἔμελλεν, ἐπὶ κλησῶν Ἰσαάκ. λέγεται δὲ καὶ ἀμήτωρ γενέσθαι τὴν ἐκ πατρός, οὐ πρὸς μητρός, αὐτὸ μόνον κληρωσαμένη συγγένειαν, θήλεος γενεᾶς

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 502.

<sup>b</sup> Or “ all those who are allies of the soul.”

XIV. And how striking is the frank truthfulness of 56 that soul who, discoursing with herself,<sup>a</sup> confesses that she cannot rise up against apparent goods, but stands amazed before each of them, and honours them and continues to prefer them almost to her own self. For 57 which of us stands up to oppose riches? Who prepares himself to wrestle with glory? How many of those who still live in the mazes of empty opinions have come to despise honour and office? Not a single one. So long, indeed, as none of these things is with 58 us, we talk loftily as though our hearts were given to that frugal contentment which is the secret of a life completely self-sufficient and righteous, the life which befits the free and nobly born. But when we feel upon our cheeks the breath of hope for such things, though it be but the slightest breath and nothing more, we are shewn in our true colours, we straight-way submit and surrender and can make no effort of resistance. Betrayed by the senses which we love, we abandon all comradeship with the soul<sup>b</sup>; we desert and that no longer secretly, but without concealment. And surely that is natural. For the 59 customs of women still prevail among us, and we cannot as yet cleanse ourselves from them, or flee to the dwelling-place where the men are quartered, as we are told that it was with the virtue-loving mind, named Sarah. For the oracles 60 represent her as having left all the things of women (Gen. xviii. 11), when her travail was at hand and she was about to bring forth the self-taught nature, named Isaac. She is declared, too, to 61 be without a mother, and to have inherited her kinship only on the father's side and not on the mother's, and thus to have no part in female parentage. For

PHILO

- ἀμέτοχος. εἶπε γάρ πού τις· “καὶ γὰρ ἀληθῶς [366] ἀδελφή | μου ἔστιν ἐκ πατρός, ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἐκ μητρός.”
 οὐ γὰρ ἐξ ὕλης τῆς αἰσθητῆς συνισταμένης αἰεὶ καὶ λυομένης, ἣν μητέρα καὶ τροφὸν καὶ τιθήνην τῶν ποιητῶν ἔφασαν, οἷς πρώτοις σοφίας ἀν-εβλάστησεν ἕρνος, ἀλλ’ ἐκ τοῦ πάντων αἰτίου καὶ 62 πατρός. αὕτη μὲν οὖν ὑπερκύψασα τὸν σωμα-τοειδῆ πάντα κόσμον ὑπὸ τῆς ἐν θεῷ χαρᾶς γανωθεῖσα γέλωτα τὰς ἀνθρώπων θήσεται σπουδάς, ὅσαι περὶ τῶν κατὰ πόλεμον ἢ κατ’ εἰρήνην 63 πραγμάτων εἰσίν. XV. ἡμεῖς δὲ ἔτι ὑπὸ τῆς ἀνάνδρου καὶ γυναικώδους συνηθείας τῆς περὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις καὶ τὰ πάθη καὶ τὰ αἰσθητὰ νικώμενοι τῶν φανέντων οὐδενὸς κατεξαναστήναι δυνάμεθα, πρὸς πάντων δὲ καὶ τῶν ἐπιτυχόντων 64 οἱ μὲν ἄκοντες οἱ δὲ καὶ ἐκόντες ἐλκόμεθα. κἂν τὸ στίφος ἡμῶν τοῖς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπιτάγμασιν ἀδυνατοῦν ὑπηρετεῖν ἀλίσκεται, σύμμαχον οὐδὲν ἦττον ἔξει τὴν μητέρα, παιδείαν μέσην τὰ νομιζόμενα καὶ δοκοῦντα εἶναι δίκαια γράφουσιν κατὰ πόλεις καὶ ἄλλα ἄλλοις νομοθετοῦσαν.
 65 Εἰσὶ δὲ τινες, οἱ τῶν μητρῶν ὑπερορῶντες περιέχονται παντὶ σθένει τῶν πατρῶν, οὓς καὶ τῆς μεγίστης τιμῆς, ἱερωσύνης, ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος ἠξίωσε. κἂν τὰς πράξεις αὐτῶν διέλθωμεν, ἐφ’ αἷς τὸ γέρας τοῦτο εὖραντο, χλεύην ἴσως παρὰ

* i.e. Plato. The allusion is to the Timaeus, where ὕλη is described as the μητήρ τοῦ γεγονότος 51 A, cf. 50 D, and as τιθήνη 49 A and 52 D.

<sup>b</sup> An allusion to Sarah laughing in Gen. xviii. 12; cf. a

ON DRUNKENNESS, 61-65

we find it said, "Indeed she is my sister, the daughter of my father but not of my mother" (Gen. xx. 12). She is not born of that material substance perceptible to our senses, ever in a state of formation and dissolution, the material which is called mother or foster-mother or nurse of created things by those in whom first the young plant of wisdom grew<sup>a</sup>; she is born of the Father and Cause of all things. And 62 so, soaring above the whole world of bodily forms, and exulting in the joy that is in God, she will count as a matter for laughter<sup>b</sup> those anxious cares of men which are expended on human affairs, whether in war or peace.

XV. But we who are still under 63 the sway of habit, the unmanly and womanish habit, whose concern is with the senses and the objects of sense and the passions, cannot stand up against phenomena in any form, but all of them, even those of the common sort, draw us on sometimes with our free will, sometimes without it. Yet if our battalion 64 be unable to do service to the father's commands and thus suffer defeat,<sup>c</sup> it will none the less have an ally in the mother, the lower education, who enacts from city to city the ordinances which custom and opinion approve, her legislation differing with the different peoples.

But there are also some who despise the mother's 65 bidding, but cling with all their might to the father's words, and these right reason has judged worthy of the highest honour, the priesthood. And if we describe their deeds, for which they were thus rewarded, we shall perhaps incur the mockery of many, who are similar use of the incident, in defiance of its context, Leg. All. iii. 219.

<sup>c</sup> Or "be convicted as incapable of doing service."

PHILO

- πολλοῖς ὀφλήσομεν τοῖς ταῖς προχείροις φαντασίαις ἀπατωμένοις, τὰς δὲ ἀφανεῖς καὶ συνεσκιασμένας
- 66 δυνάμεις οὐ κατανοοῦσιν· οἱ γὰρ εὐχὰς καὶ θυσίας καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν ἀγιστείαν ἐγχειρισθέντες εἰσὶ, τὸ παραδοξότατον, ἀνδροφόνοι, ἀδελφοκτόνοι, τῶν οἰκειοτάτων καὶ φιλιότατων σωμάτων αὐτόχειρες, οὓς ἐχρῆν καθαρὸν καὶ ἐκ καθαρῶν, μηδενὸς ἄγους προσαιψαμένους, ἑκουσίου μὲν ἄπαγε, ἀλλὰ μηδ' ἄκουσίου χειροτονεῖσθαι·
- 67 λέγεται γάρ· “ἀποκτείνετε ἕκαστος τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ καὶ ἕκαστος τὸν πλησίον αὐτοῦ καὶ ἕκαστος τὸν ἐγγιστάτον αὐτοῦ. καὶ ἐποίησαν οἱ υἱοὶ Λευί, καθὰ ἐλάλησε Μωυσῆς, καὶ ἔπεσον ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ εἰς τρισχιλίους ἄνδρας.” καὶ τοὺς τοσαύτην ἀνηρηκότας πληθὺν ἐπαινεί φάσκων· “ἐπληρώσατε τὰς χεῖρας σήμερον κυρίῳ, ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ υἱῷ ἢ τῷ ἀδελφῷ, δοθῆναι ἐφ' ὑμᾶς εὐλογίαν.”
- 68 XVI. τί οὖν λεκτέον ἢ ὅτι οἱ τοιοῦτοι τοῖς μὲν κοινοῖς ἀνθρώπων ἔθεσιν ἀλίσκονται κατήγορον ἔχοντες τὴν πολιτευομένην καὶ δημαγωγὸν μητέρα συνήθειαν, τοῖς δὲ τῆς φύσεως διασώζονται συμμάχῳ χρώμενοι ὀρθῶ λόγῳ, τῷ πατρί;
- 69 καὶ γὰρ οὐδ', ὡς περ νομίζουσι τινες, ἀνθρώπους ἀναιροῦσιν οἱ ἱερεῖς, ζῶα λογικὰ ἐκ ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος συνεστῶτα, ἀλλ' ὅσα οἰκεία καὶ φίλα τῇ σαρκὶ
- [367] ἀποκόπτουσι τῆς διανοίας ἑαυτῶν,| εὐπρεπὲς εἶναι νομίζοντες τοῖς θεραπευταῖς τοῦ μόνου σοφοῦ γενησομένοις πάντων ὅσα γένεσιν εἴληχεν ἄλλοτριῦσθαι καὶ πᾶσιν ὡς ἐχθροῖς καὶ δυσμενεστάτοις
- 70 προσφέρεσθαι. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ “ἀδελφόν,” οὐκ ἀνθρώπον, ἀλλὰ τὸ ψυχῆς ἀδελφὸν σῶμα ἀποκτενοῦμεν, τουτέστι τοῦ φιλαρέτου καὶ θείου τὸ
- 350

ON DRUNKENNESS, 65-70

deceived by the semblances that lie ready before their eyes but do not descry the values which are unseen and wrapt in shadow. For they into whose charge 66 the work of prayer and sacrifice and all the worship of the temple was given, are actually—strange paradox—homicides, fratricides, slayers of the bodies which are nearest and dearest to them, though they should have come to their office, pure in themselves and in their lineage, having had no contact with any pollution even involuntary, far less voluntary. For 67 we read “slay each his brother and each his neighbour and each him that is nearest to him. And the children of Levi did as Moses spake, and there fell of the people on that day up to three thousand men” (Exod. xxxii. 27, 28). And he praises those who had slain this great multitude with these words, “ye have filled your hands to-day unto the Lord, each in his son or in his brother, that blessing should be given upon you” (Exod. xxxii. 29). XVI. What, then, can we 68 say but that such as these are condemned by the rules that obtain among men, for they have for their accuser their mother, custom, the politician and demagogue, but are acquitted by the laws of nature, for they have the support of their father, right reason? For it is not human beings, as some suppose, who are 69 slain by the priests, not living reasoning animals composed of soul and body. No, they are cutting away from their own hearts and minds all that is near and dear to the flesh. They hold that it befits those who are to be ministers to the only wise Being, to estrange themselves from all that belongs to the world of creation, and to treat all such as bitter and deadly foes. Therefore we shall kill our “brother”—not a 70 man, but the soul’s brother, the body; that is, we shall

- φιλοπαθῆς καὶ θνητὸν διαζεύξομεν. ἀποκτενοῦμεν καὶ τὸν “πλησίον,” πάλιν οὐκ ἄνθρωπον, ἀλλὰ τὸν <αἰσθήσεων> χορὸν καὶ θίασον· οὗτος<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ψυχῆς ἔστιν ὁμοῦ καὶ οἰκείος καὶ δυσμενῆς, δελέατα καὶ παγίδας ἐπ’ αὐτῇ τιθεῖς, ἵνα τοῖς ἐπιρρέουσιν αἰσθητοῖς κατακλυζομένη μηδέποτε πρὸς οὐρανὸν ἀνακύψῃ μηδὲ τὰς νοητὰς καὶ θεοειδεῖς φύσεις ἀσπάσῃται. ἀποκτενοῦμεν καὶ “τὸν ἔγγιστα.” ὁ δ’ ἐγγυτάτω διανοίας ὁ κατὰ προφορὰν ἔστι λόγος, εὐλόγοις καὶ εἰκόσι καὶ πιθανότησι δόξας ψευδεῖς ἐντιθεῖς ἐπ’ ὀλέθρῳ τοῦ κρατίστου κτήματος
- 71 ἀληθείας. XVII. διὰ τί οὖν οὐχὶ καὶ τοῦτον σοφιστὴν ὄντα καὶ μιαρὸν ἀμννούμεθα τὸν ἀρμόττοντα αὐτῷ καταψηφισάμενοι θάνατον, ἡσυχίαν—λόγου γὰρ ἡσυχία θάνατος—, ἵνα μηκέτ’ ἐνσοφιστεύοντος ὁ νοῦς μεθέλκηται, δύνηται δ’ ἀπηλλαγμένος πάντως τῶν κατὰ τὸ “ἀδελφὸν” σῶμα ἡδονῶν, τῶν κατὰ τὰς “πλησίον” καὶ ἀγχιθύρους αἰσθήσεις γοητειῶν, τῶν κατὰ τὸν “ἔγγιστα” λόγον σοφιστειῶν ἐλεύθερος καὶ ἄφετος ἕαθεις καθαρῶς τοῖς νοητοῖς ἅπασιν ἐπιβάλλειν;
- 72 οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ “λέγων τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῇ μητρὶ,” τοῖς θνητοῖς γονεῦσιν, “οὐχ εἴωρακα ὑμᾶς,” ἀφ’ οὗ τὰ θεῖα εἶδον, ὁ “μὴ γνωρίζων τοὺς υἱούς,” ἀφ’ οὗ γνώριμος σοφίας ἐγένετο, ὁ “ἀπογινώσκων τοὺς ἀδελφούς,” ἀφ’ οὗ μὴ ἀπεγνώσθη παρὰ θεῶ, ἀλλὰ σωτηρίας ἠξιώθη παντελοῦς.
- 73 οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ “τὸν σειρομάστην λαβών,” τουτέστιν ὁ μαστεύσας καὶ ἀναζητήσας

<sup>1</sup> Or perhaps, as Mangey, τὸν χορὸν αἰσθήσεων· οὗτος.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 502.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. “pit-searcher”; see footnote to De Post. 182.

dissever the passion-loving and mortal element from the virtue-loving and divine. We shall kill, too, our "neighbour," again no man, but the troop and company of the senses. That company is at once the close intimate and the enemy of the soul, spreading its gins and snares for her, in order that, overwhelmed by the flood of sense-perceived objects, she may never lift her head heavenwards nor welcome those natures whose divine forms are grasped only by the mind. Again we shall kill our "nearest"; and nearest to the understanding is the uttered word,<sup>a</sup> which through the specious, the probable and the persuasive implants in us false opinions for the destruction of our noblest possession, truth. XVII. Why, then, should 71 we not at once take vengeance on him too, sophist and miscreant that he is, by sentencing him to the death that befits him—that is to silence, for silence is the death of speech? Thus will he no longer ply his sophistries within the mind, nor will that mind be led astray, but absolutely released from the pleasures of his "brother," the body, and from the witcheries of the senses, the "neighbours" at his gates, and from the sophistries of the speech which is "nearest" to him, he will be able to devote his unhampered liberty to the world of mental things. It is this 72 Mind who "says to his father and mother"—his mortal parents—"I have not seen you," from the day when I saw the things of God; it is this Mind who no longer knows his sons, ever since he came to the knowledge of wisdom; it is this Mind who renounces his brethren (Deut. xxxiii. 9), ever since he was not renounced before God, but judged worthy of full salvation. It is this same Mind who 73 "took the lance,"<sup>b</sup> that is probed and searched the τὰ τῆς φθαρτῆς γενέσεως, ἧς ἐν σιτίοις καὶ ποτοῖς τὸ εὐδαιμον τεθησαύρισαι, καὶ “ εἰς τὴν κάμινον,” ὡς φησι Μωυσῆς, “ εἰσελθών,” τὸν καίομενον καὶ φλεγόμενον ὑπερβολαῖς ἀδικημάτων καὶ μηδέποτε σβεσθῆναι δυνάμενον ἀνθρώπων βίον, κάπειτα ἰσχύσας καὶ τὴν “ γυναῖκα διὰ τῆς μήτρας ” ἀνατεμεῖν, ὅτι αἰτία τοῦ γεννᾶν ἔδοξεν εἶναι πάσχουσα πρὸς ἀλήθειαν μᾶλλον ἢ δρῶσα, καὶ πάντα “ ἀνθρώπον ” καὶ λογισμὸν τὸν ἐπακολουθήσαντα τῆδε τῇ δόξῃ τῇ <τὰ> τοῦ μόνου τῶν γινομένων αἰτίου θεοῦ περιαιπούση παθηταῖς οὐσίαις. XVIII.

PHILO

74 ἄρ' οὐχὶ καὶ οὗτος ἀνδροφόνος παρὰ πολλοῖς ἄν
[368] εἶναι νομισθεῖη τοῖς | πρὸς γυναικῶν ἔθεσιν ἀλισκό-μενος<sup>1</sup>; ἀλλὰ παρά γε θεῶ τῷ πανηγεμόνι καὶ πατρὶ μυρίων ἐπαίνων καὶ ἐγκωμίων καὶ ἀναφαιρέτων ἄθλων ἀξιωθήσεται· τὰ δ' ἄθλα μεγάλα

75 καὶ ἀδελφά, εἰρήνη καὶ ἱερωσύνη. - τό τε γὰρ τὴν ἐν τῷ σπουδαζομένῳ παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀνθρώποις βίῳ δυσάλωτον στρατείαν καὶ τὸν ἐν ψυχῇ τῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν ἐμφύλιον πόλεμον καταλῦσαι δυνηθέντα εἰρήνην βεβαιώσασθαι μέγα καὶ λαμπρὸν ἔργον, τό τε μηδὲν ἄλλο, μὴ πλοῦτον, μὴ δόξαν, μὴ τιμὴν, μὴ ἀρχήν, μὴ κάλλος, μὴ ἰσχύν, μὴ ὅσα σώματος πλεονεκτήματα, μηδ' αὖ γῆν ἢ οὐρανὸν ἢ τὸν σύμπαντα κόσμον, ἀλλὰ τὸ πρεσβύτατον τῶν αἰτίων τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν θεραπείας καὶ τῆς ἀνωτάτω

<sup>1</sup> Wendland τοῖς τρόπον γυναικῶν ἔθεσιν ἀλισκομένοις. See App. p. 503.

<sup>a</sup> A.V. “tent,” R.V. “pavilion” (marg. “alcove”). No reason seems to be known for the LXX translation. κάμινος elsewhere always means “furnace,” a sense impossible in this context.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 502.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 73-75

secrets of corruptible creation, which finds in food and drink the treasure-house of its happiness; who "entered," as Moses tells us, "the furnace" <sup>a</sup>—the furnace of human life, which burns so fiercely and unquenchably, fed with the exceeding multitude of our transgressions; who then received strength to "pierce" both the woman and the man—"the woman through the womb," because she believed herself to be the cause of generation, though in reality her part is passive rather than active—"the man" as representing every thought which followed this belief—the belief which invests the natures which are but the subjects of God's action with the dues which belong only to Him who alone is the cause of all that comes into being (Num. xxv. 7, 8).<sup>b</sup> XVIII. Surely such a one must pass for a murderer <sup>74</sup> in the judgement of the multitude, and be condemned by custom the woman-like, but in the judgement of God the all-ruling Father he will be held worthy of laud and praise beyond reckoning and of prizes that cannot be taken from him—two great and sister prizes, peace and priesthood (Num. xxv. 2, 13).

For to be able to stay the fierce per- <sup>75</sup> sistent warfare of the outward life which the multitude so eagerly pursues, and the intestine battling of lust against lust in the soul, and there establish peace, is a great and glorious feat. And to have learnt that nothing else, neither wealth, nor glory, nor honour, nor office, nor beauty, nor strength, nor all bodily advantages, nor earth nor heaven, nor the whole world, but only the true cause, the Cause supreme among causes, deserves our service and highest honour, and thereby to have attained the rank of

PHILO

- τιμῆς ἀξιώσαντα μόνον τὴν ἱερωσύνης λαβεῖν τάξιν 76 θαυμαστὸν καὶ περιμάχητον. ἀδελφὰ δ' ἔφην τὰ ἄθλα οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ, ἀλλ' εἰδὼς ὅτι οὐτ' ἂν ἱερεὺς γένοιτο πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἔτι τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην καὶ θνητὴν στρατευόμενος στρατείαν, ἐν ἣ ταγματαρχούσιν αἱ κεναὶ δόξαι, οὐτ' ἂν εἰρηνικὸς ἀνὴρ μὴ τὸ μόνον ἀμέτοχον πολέμου καὶ τὴν αἰώνιον εἰρήνην ἄγον ἀψευδῶς καὶ ἀπλῶς θεραπεύων.
- 77 XIX. Τοιοῦτοι μὲν εἰσιν οἱ τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὰ τοῦ πατρὸς τιμῶντες, μητρὸς δὲ καὶ τῶν ἐκείνης ἤκιστα φροντίζοντες. τὸν δ' ἀμφοτέροις πολεμωθέντα τοῖς γονεῦσι διασυνίστησιν εἰσαγαγὼν λέγοντα· “οὐκ οἶδα τὸν κύριον, καὶ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ οὐκ ἔξαποστέλλω” οὗτος γὰρ ἔοικε καὶ τοῖς πρὸς θεὸν ὀρθῶ λόγῳ βραβευομένοις καὶ τοῖς πρὸς γένεσιν παιδεία βεβαιουμένοις ἐναντιοῦσθαι καὶ 78 συγχεῖν πάντα διὰ πάντων. εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ ἔτι νῦν—οὐπω γὰρ τὸ ἀνθρώπων γένος τὴν ἄκρατον κακίαν ἐκαθήρατο—μήτε τῶν εἰς εὐσέβειαν μήτε τῶν εἰς κοινωνίαν μηδὲν ἀπλῶς δρᾶν ἐγνωκότες, ἀλλὰ τοῦναντίον ἀσεβείας μὲν καὶ ἀθεότητος ἐταῖροι, 79 πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ὁμοίους ἄπιστοι. καὶ περινοστοῦσιν αἱ μέγιστα τῶν πόλεων κῆρες οὗτοι, τὰ ἴδια καὶ τὰ κοινὰ ὑπὸ φιλοπραγμοσύνης διέποντες, μᾶλλον δ', εἰ χρή τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἀνατρέποντες· οὓς ἐχρῆν ὥσπερ μεγάλην νόσον, λιμὸν ἢ λοιμὸν ἢ τι κακὸν ἄλλο θεήλατον, εὐχαῖς καὶ θυσίαις ἀποτρέπεσθαι· φθοραὶ γὰρ οὗτοι μεγάλαι τοῖς ἐντυχούσι. παρὸ καὶ Μωυσῆς τὸν ὄλεθρον αὐτῶν ἄδει πρὸς τῆς

<sup>a</sup> Apparently the thought is that the sea which blocked the way of the Israelites was Pharaoh's ally. For "swallowed up" cf. Ex. xv. 4 (LXX κατεπόθησαν).

ON DRUNKENNESS, 75-79

priesthood—this is a privilege as marvellous as it is worthy of all our efforts. But when I called these 76 two prizes sisters, I did not miscall them. I knew that none could be a true priest, who was still a soldier in that war of mortal men, in which the ranks are led by vain opinions, and that none could be a man of peace who did not worship in truth and sincerity that Being who alone is exempt from war and dwells in eternal peace.

XIX. Such are they who honour the father and 77 what is his, but disregard the mother and what is hers. But the son who is at enmity with both his parents is shewn to us by Moses, when he represents him as saying, “ I know not the Lord and I do not send Israel forth ” (Exod. v. 2). Such a one, we may expect, will oppose both what right reason rules to be our duty to God and what training and education establish for our dealings with the world of creation ; and thus he will work universal confusion. The 78 human race has never purged itself of the wickedness which is unmixed with good, and there are still those whose will and purpose is to do no action whatever that can tend to piety or human fellowship, who on the contrary keep company with impiety and godlessness, and also keep no faith with their fellows. And 79 these are the chief pests which haunt cities, controlling or, to speak more truly, upsetting private and public life with their restless intrigues. We might well treat them like some great plague or famine or murrain, or any other heaven-sent curse, and endeavour to avert them by prayers and sacrifices. For great is the havoc they work among those whom they meet. And therefore Moses sings of their destruction ; how they fell through their own allies <sup>a</sup>

PHILO

ιδίου συμμαχίας ἀλόντων καὶ ὡσπερ τρικυμίας ταῖς ἰδίαις δόξαις ἐγκαταποθέντων.

- 80 XX. Λέγωμεν τοῖνυν ἐξῆς καὶ περὶ τῶν τούτοις μὲν ἐχθρῶν, παιδείαν δὲ καὶ ὀρθὸν λόγον ἐκτετιμηκότων, ὧν ἦσαν οἱ τῷ ἑτέρῳ τῶν γονέων προσ-
- [369] κείμενοι τὴν ἀρετὴν | ἡμιτελεῖς χορευταί.<sup>1</sup> οὗτοι τοῖνυν καὶ νόμων, οὓς ὁ πατήρ, ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος, ἔθηκεν, ἄριστοι φύλακες καὶ ἐθῶν πιστοὶ ταμίαι,
- 81 ἅπερ ἡ παιδεία, μήτηρ αὐτῶν, εἰσηγήσατο. ἐδιδάχθησαν δὲ ὑπὸ μὲν ὀρθοῦ λόγου, πατρός, τὸν πατέρα τῶν ὄλων τιμᾶν, ὑπὸ δὲ παιδείας, τῆς μητρός, τῶν θέσει καὶ νομιζομένων παρὰ πᾶσιν εἶναι
- 82 δικαίων μὴ ὀλιγωρεῖν. ἡνίκα γοῦν ὁ ἀσκητῆς Ἰακώβ καὶ τοὺς ἀρετῆς ἄθλους διαθλῶν ἔμελλεν ἀκοὰς ὀφθαλμῶν ἀντιδιδόναι καὶ λόγους ἔργων καὶ προκοπὰς τελειότητος, τοῦ φιλοδώρου θεοῦ βουλευθέντος αὐτοῦ τὴν διάνοιαν ἐνομματῶσαι, ἵνα ταῦτ' ἐναργῶς ἴδῃ ἅ πρότερον ἀκοῇ παρελαμβανε—πιστοτέρα γὰρ ὄψις ὤτων—, ἐπήχησαν οἱ χρησμοί. “οὐ κληθήσεται τὸ ὄνομα σου Ἰακώβ, ἀλλ' Ἰσραὴλ ἔσται σου τὸ ὄνομα, ὅτι ἰσχυσας μετὰ θεοῦ καὶ μετὰ ἀνθρώπων δυνατός.” Ἰακώβ μὲν οὖν μαθήσεως καὶ προκοπῆς ὄνομα, ἀκοῆς ἐξηρητημένων δυνάμεων, Ἰσραὴλ δὲ τελειότητος.
- 83 ὅρασι γὰρ θεοῦ μηνύει τοῦνομα. τελειότερον δὲ τί ἂν εἶη τῶν ἐν ἀρεταῖς ἢ τὸ ὄντως ὄν ἰδεῖν; ὁ δὴ κατιδὼν τὰγαθὸν τοῦτο παρ' ἀμφοτέροις

<sup>1</sup> Wendland suggested <ύστέρ>ησαν, and τῆς ἀρετῆς, but Adler's argument for the ms. text, taking ὧν as dependent on χορευταί and ἀρετὴν as acc. of respect, is convincing. The phrase ἡμιτελεῖς τὴν ἀρετὴν recurs De Decal. 110.

• The connexion lies in the words “strong with God and 358

ON DRUNKENNESS, 79-83

and were swallowed up by the heavy sea of their own imaginations.

XX. Let us then speak next of those who are the 80 enemies of these last, but have given due honour to both education and right reason, of whom those who attach themselves to one parent only were but half-hearted followers in virtue. This fourth class are valiant guardians of the laws which their father, right reason, has laid down, and faithful stewards of the customs which their mother, instruction, has introduced. Their father, right reason, has taught them 81 to honour the Father of the all; their mother, instruction, has taught them not to make light of those principles which are laid down by convention and accepted everywhere.

Consider the case 82 of Jacob.<sup>a</sup> The Man of Practice was now in the last bout of his exercises in virtue, about to exchange hearing for eyesight, words for deeds, and progress for perfection, since God in his bounty had willed to plant eyes in his understanding that he might see clearly what before he had grasped by hearing, for sight is more trustworthy than the ears. Then it was that the oracles rang out their proclamation, "Thy name shall not be called Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name, because thou hast been strong with God and mighty with men" (Gen. xxxii. 28). Now Jacob is a name for learning and progress, gifts which depend upon the hearing; Israel for perfection, for the name expresses the vision of God. And 83 what among all the blessings which the virtues give can be more perfect than the sight of the Absolutely Existent? He who has the sight of this blessing has mighty with men." Philo equates God with the father "reason" and men with the mother "convention."

PHILO

- ἀνωμολόγηται τοῖς γονεῦσιν εὐδόκιμος, ἰσχὺν μὲν τὴν ἐν θεῷ, δύναμιν δὲ τὴν παρὰ ἀνθρώποις 84 εὐράμενος. εὖ μοι δοκεῖ καὶ ἐν Παροι-μίαις εἰρησθαι “προνοούντων<sup>1</sup> καλὰ ἐνώπιον κυρίου καὶ ἀνθρώπων,” ἐπειδὴ δι’ ἀμφοτέρων παντελῆς ἢ κτῆσις τὰγαθοῦ περιγίνεται· διδαχθεῖς γὰρ φυλάσσειν νόμους πατρὸς καὶ μὴ ἀπωθεῖσθαι θεσμούς μητρὸς θαρρήσεις ἐπισεμννόμενος εἰπεῖν· “υἱὸς γὰρ ἐγενόμην καὶ γὰρ πατρὶ ὑπήκοος καὶ ἀγαπώμενος ἐν προσώπῳ μητρὸς.” XXI. ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἔμελλες, εἴποιμ’ ἂν αὐτῷ, στέργεσθαι φυλάττων μὲν τὰ παρὰ γενητοῖς καθεστῶτα νόμιμα διὰ πόθον κοινωνίας, φυλάττων δὲ καὶ τοὺς τοῦ ἀγενήτου θεσμούς δι’ εὐσεβείας ἔρωτα καὶ ζῆλον;
- 85 τοιγάρτοι καὶ θεοπρόπος Μωυσῆς διὰ τῆς τῶν κατὰ τὸν νεὼν δημιουργίας ἱερῶν τὴν ἐν ἀμφοτέροις τελειότητα διαδείξει· οὐ γὰρ ἀπερισκέπτως ἡμῖν τὴν κιβωτὸν ἔνδοθεν τε καὶ ἔξωθεν χρυσῷ περιамπίσχει, οὐδὲ στολὰς τῷ ἀρχιερεῖ διττὰς ἀναδίδωσιν, οὐδὲ βωμοὺς δύο, τὸν μὲν ἔξω πρὸς τὰ ἱερεῖα, τὸν δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἐπιθυμιᾶν ἔνδον δημιουργεῖ, ἀλλὰ βουλόμενος διὰ συμβόλων τούτων τὰς καθ’ ἑκάτερον 86 εἶδος ἀρετὰς παραστήσαι. τὸν γὰρ σοφὸν καὶ τοῖς κατὰ ψυχὴν ἔνδον ἀοράτοις καὶ τοῖς ἔξω περιφαινομένοις δεῖ τῇ παντὸς τιμιωτέρᾳ χρυσοῦ φρονήσει κεκοσμηθῆσαι, καὶ ὁπότε μὲν τῶν ἀνθρωπείων σπουδασμάτων ὑποκεχώρηκε τὸ ὄν θεραπεύων μόνον, τὴν ἀποίκιον ἀληθείας ἐνδύεσθαι

<sup>1</sup> The LXX has προνοοῦ, which perhaps should be read here.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 503.

<sup>b</sup> Or “we must not fail to observe that he did.”

his fair fame acknowledged in the eyes of both parents, for he has gained the strength which is in God and the power which avails among men.

Good also, I think, is that saying in the Proverbs, 84

“ Let them provide things excellent in the sight of the Lord and men ” (Prov. iii. 4), since it is through both these that the acquisition of excellence is brought to its fullness. For if you have learnt to observe the laws of your father and not to reject the ordinances of your mother,<sup>a</sup> you will not fear to say with pride, “ For I too became a son obedient to my father and beloved before the face of my mother ” (Prov. iv. 3). XXI. Aye indeed, I would say to such a one, “ How could you fail to win affection, if in your desire for human fellowship you observe the customs that hold among created men, and in your zeal and passion for piety observe also the ordinances of the Uncreated ?

And therefore Moses, God's 85 interpreter, will use the sacred works that furnished the tabernacle to shew us the twofold perfection. For it is not without a well-thought purpose for us <sup>b</sup> that he covers the ark both inside and outside with gold (Exod. xxv. 10) and gives two robes to the high-priest (Exod. xxviii. 4), and builds two altars, one without for the sacrificial ritual, the other within for burning incense (Exod. xxvii. 1, xxx. 1). No, he wished by these symbols to represent the virtues of either kind.

For the wise man must be 86 adorned with the prudence that is more precious than all gold, both in the inward invisible things of the soul and in the outward which are seen of all men. Again, when he has retired from the press of human pursuits and worships the Existent only, he must put on the unadorned robe of truth which nothing mortal

PHILO

- [370] στολήν, ἧς | οὐδὲν ἐφάμεται θνητόν—καὶ γὰρ ἔστι λινῆς ὕλης ἐξ οὐδενὸς τῶν πεφυκότων ἀποθνήσκειν γεννωμένης—, ὁπότε δὲ μέτεισι πρὸς πολιτείαν, τὴν μὲν ἔνδον ἀποτίθεται, ποικιλωτάτην δὲ καὶ ὀφθῆναι θαυμασιωτάτην ἑτέραν ἀναλαμβάνειν· πολύτροπος γὰρ ὢν ὁ βίος ποικιλωτάτου δέχεται τὴν σοφίαν τοῦ πηδαλιουχήσοντος κυβερνή-
- 87 του. οὗτος κατὰ μὲν τὸν περιφανῆ βωμὸν ἢ βίον καὶ δορᾶς καὶ σαρκῶν καὶ αἵματος καὶ πάντων ὅσα περὶ σῶμα δόξει πολυγὴν ποιεῖσθαι πρόνοιαν, ὡς μὴ μυρίοις ἀπέχθοιτο κρίνουσιν ἀγαθὰ μετὰ τὰ ψυχῆς δευτερείοις τετιμημένα τὰ περὶ σῶμα, κατὰ δὲ τὸν ἔνδον πᾶσιν ἀναίμοις, ἀσάρκοις, ἀσωμάτοις, τοῖς ἐκ λογισμοῦ μόνοις χρήσεται, ἃ λιβανωτῶ καὶ τοῖς ἐπιθυμιωμένοις ἀπεικάζεται· ὡς γὰρ ταῦτα ῥίνας, ἐκεῖνα τὸν ψυχῆς ἅπαντα
- 88 χῶρον εὐωδίας ἀναπλήρησι. XXII.
- χρῆ μέντοι μηδὲ τοῦτ' ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι ἡ σοφία τέχνη τεχνῶν οὐσα δοκεῖ μὲν ταῖς διαφόροις ὕλαις ἐναλλάττεσθαι, τὸ δ' αὐτῆς ἀληθὲς εἶδος ἄτρεπτον ἐμφαίνει τοῖς ὀξυδορκοῦσι καὶ μὴ τῶ περικεχυμένῳ τῆς οὐσίας ὄγκῳ μεθελκομένοις, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἐνεσφραγισμένον ὑπὸ τῆς τέχνης αὐτῆς χα-
- 89 ρακτῆρα διορῶσι. τὸν ἀνδριαντοποιὸν Φειδίαν ἐκεῖνον καὶ χαλκὸν λαβόντα φασὶ καὶ ἐλέφαντα καὶ χρυσὸν καὶ ἄλλας διαφόρους ὕλας ἀνδριάντας ἀπεργάσασθαι καὶ ἐν ἅπασιν τούτοις μίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἐνσημῆνασθαι τέχνην, ὡς μὴ μόνον ἐπιστήμονας, ἀλλὰ καὶ λίαν ἰδιώτας τὸν δημιουργὸν
- 90 ἀπὸ τῶν δημιουργηθέντων γνωρίσαι· καθάπερ γὰρ

<sup>a</sup> i.e. not of wool. The same contrast is made De Spec. Leg. i. 84.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 86-90

shall touch. For the stuff of which it is made is linen, not the produce of animals whose nature is to perish.<sup>a</sup> But when he passes to the citizen's life, he must put off that inner robe and don another,<sup>b</sup> whose manifold richness is a marvel to the eye. For life is many-sided, and needs that the master who is to control the helm should be wise with a wisdom of manifold variety. Again, that master as he stands at the outer, 87 the open and visible altar, the altar of common life, will seem to pay much regard to skin and flesh and blood and all the bodily parts lest he should offend the thousands who, though they assign to the things of the body a value secondary to the things of the soul, yet do hold them to be good. But when he stands at the inner altar, he will deal only with what is bloodless, fleshless, bodiless and is born of reason, which things are likened to the incense and the burnt spices. For as the incense fills the nostrils, so do these pervade the whole region of the soul with fragrance.

XXII. This too we must not fail 88 to know, that wisdom which is the art of arts <sup>c</sup> seems to change with its different subject matters, yet shews its true form unchanged to those who have clearness of vision and are not misled by the dense and heavy wrappings which envelop its true substance, but describe the form impressed by the art itself. They say 89 that the great sculptor Pheidias would take brass and ivory and gold and various other materials to make his statues, and yet on all these he so stamped the impress of one and the same art, that not only adepts, but those who were totally ignorant of such matters, recognized the artist from his work. For as nature 90

<sup>b</sup> The reference is to Lev. xvi. 4 and 23, 24.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 503.

PHILO

- ἐπὶ τῶν διδύμων ἢ φύσις χρησαμένη τῷ αὐτῷ πολλάκις χαρακτῆρι παρὰ μικρὸν ἀπαραλλάκτους ὁμοιότητος ἐτύπωσε, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἡ τελεία τέχνη, μίμημα καὶ ἀπεικόνισμα φύσεως οὔσα, ὅταν διαφόρους ὕλας παραλάβῃ, σχηματίζει καὶ ἐνσφραγίζεται τὴν αὐτὴν ἀπάσαις ἰδέαν, ὡς ταύτη μάλιστα συγγενῇ καὶ ἀδελφὰ καὶ διδυμα τὰ δη-91 μιουργηθέντα γενέσθαι. ταῦτὸν οὖν καὶ ἡ ἐν τῷ σοφῷ δύναμις ἐπιδείξεται· πραγματευομένη γὰρ τὰ περὶ τοῦ ὄντος εὐσέβεια καὶ ὁσιότης ὀνομάζεται, τὰ δὲ περὶ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν φυσιολογία, μετεωρολογικὴ δὲ τὰ περὶ τὸν ἄερα καὶ ὅσα κατὰ τὰς τροπὰς αὐτοῦ καὶ μεταβολὰς ἐν τε ταῖς ὀλοσχερέσιν ἐτησίοις ὥραις καὶ ταῖς ἐν μέρει κατὰ τε μηνῶν καὶ ἡμερῶν περιόδους πέφυκε συνίστασθαι, ἠθικὴ δὲ τὰ πρὸς ἀνθρωπίνων ἐπανόρθωσιν ἠθῶν, ἧς ἰδέαι πολιτικὴ τε ἡ περὶ<sup>1</sup> πόλιν καὶ ἡ περὶ οἰκίας ἐπιμέλειαν οἰκονομικὴ, συμποτικὴ [371] | τε ἡ περὶ τὰ συμπόσια καὶ τὰς εὐωχίας, ἔτι δ' αὖ ἡ μὲν περὶ ἀνθρώπων ἐπιστάσιαν βασιλική, ἡ δὲ περὶ 92 προστάξεις καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεις νομοθετικὴ· πάντα γὰρ ταῦτα ὁ πολύφημος ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ πολυώνυμος σοφὸς κεχώρηκεν, εὐσέβειαν, ὁσιότητα, φυσιολογίαν, μετεωρολογίαν, ἠθοποιίαν, πολιτείαν, οἰκονομίαν, βασιλικήν, νομοθετικὴν, ἄλλας μυρίας δυνάμεις, καὶ ἐν ἀπάσαις ἐν εἶδος καὶ ταῦτὸν ἔχων ὀφθῆσεται.
- 93 XXIII. Διειλεγμένοι δὲ περὶ τῶν ἐν τοῖς ἐκγόνοις τεττάρων τάξεων οὐκ ἂν οὐδὲ ἐκεῖνο παρίδοιμεν, ὃ γένοιτ' ἂν τῆς διαιρέσεως καὶ τομῆς τῶν κεφαλαίων ἐναργεστάτη πίστις· τοῦ γὰρ μετεωρισθέντος καὶ φυσηθέντος ὑπ' ἀνοίας παιδὸς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πρὸς.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 90-93

so often in the case of twins by using the same stamp shapes likenesses which are almost identical, so too that perfect art, which is the copy and effigies of nature, may take different materials and yet mould them and impress on them all the same form, and this it is which chiefly makes the products of its work to be as kinsfolk, brothers, twins to each other.

We shall find the same thing happening with the 91 power which resides in the Sage. Under the name of piety and holiness it deals with the attributes of the Really Existent; under that of nature-study, with all that concerns the heavens and the heavenly bodies; as meteorology, with the air and the consequences which result through its changes and variations both at the main seasons of the year and those particular ones which follow cycles of months and days; as ethic, with what tends to the improvement of human conduct, and this last takes various forms; politic, dealing with the state; economic, with the management of a house; sympotic, or the art of conviviality, with banquets and festivities; and further we have the kingly faculty dealing with the control of men, and the legislative with commands and prohibitions. All these—piety, holiness, nature-study, 92 meteorology, ethic, politic, economic, king-craft, legislator-craft and many other powers—find their home in him who is in the truest sense many-voiced and many-named, even the Sage, and in all he will be seen to have one and the same form.

XXIII. After discussing the four classes of sons, 93 we must not overlook the following point, which will be the clearest proof that our classification is based on a correct division. The son who is puffed up and carried away by his folly is denounced by his

PHILO

- οἱ γονεῖς τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον κατηγορήσαν εἰπόντες “ὁ υἱὸς ἡμῶν οὗτος,” δεικνύντες τὸν ἀπειθῆ καὶ 94 ἀπαυχενίζοντα. διὰ γὰρ τῆς δείξεως τῆς “οὗτος” ἐμφαίνουσιν ὅτι καὶ ἑτέρους ἐγέννησαν, τοὺς μὲν τῷ ἑτέρῳ, τοὺς δ’ ἀμφοτέροις καταπειθεῖς, λογι-σμοὺς εὐφυεῖς, ὧν παράδειγμα Ῥουβὴν· φιληκόους καὶ φιλομαθεῖς ἑτέροις, ὧν ἔστι Συμεῶν, ἀκοὴ γὰρ οὗτος ἐρμηνεύεται· πρόσφυγας καὶ ἰκέτας θεοῦ, Λευιτῶν ὁ θίασος οὗτος· τὸν εὐχαριστητικὸν ὕμνον ἄδοντας οὐ γεγωνῶ φωνῇ μᾶλλον ἢ διανοίᾳ, ὧν ἔξαρχος Ἰούδας· διὰ τὴν μετὰ πόνων ἀρετῆς κτήσιν ἐκούσιον μισθῶν καὶ δωρεῶν ἀξιωθέντας, ὥσπερ Ἰσάχαρ· μετανάστας ἀπὸ τῆς Χαλδαϊκῆς μετεωρολογικῆς θεωρίας γεγονότας εἰς τὴν περὶ τοῦ ἀγεινήτου σκέψιν, ὡς Ἀβραάμ· αὐτήκοον καὶ αὐτομαθῆ κτησαμένους ἀρετῆν, ὥσπερ Ἰσαάκ· λήματος καὶ ἰσχύος πλήρεις καὶ φίλους τῷ θεῷ, καθάπερ Μωυσῆν τὸν τελειότατον.
- 95 XXIV. Εἰκότως οὖν τὸν ἀπειθῆ καὶ ἐρεθιστὴν καὶ συμβολὰς εἰσφέροντα, τουτέστι συμβάλλοντα καὶ συνάπτοντα ἁμαρτήματα ἁμαρτήμασι, μεγάλα μικροῖς, νέα παλαιοῖς, ἐκούσια ἀκουσίοις, καὶ ὥσπερ ὑπ’ οἴνου φλεγόμενον ἄληκτον καὶ ἀνεπί-σχετον μέθην τοῦ βίου παντὸς καταμεθύνοντα καὶ παροινούντα διὰ τὸ τοῦ τῆς ἀφροσύνης πόματος ἀκράτου καὶ πολλοῦ σπάσαι καταλεύειν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος δικαιοῖ, ὅτι καὶ τὰς ὀρθοῦ λόγου προστάξεις τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τὰς παιδείας τῆς μητρὸς νομίμους ὑφηγήσεις ἀνεῖλε καὶ παράδειγμα ἔχων τὸ καλο-

---

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “injunctions conforming to law or custom.”

ON DRUNKENNESS, 93-95

parents as "this son of ours," and it is in these words that they indicate his disobedience and recalcitrance. By using the word "this" in thus indicating him, <sup>94</sup> they suggest that they have other children, who are obedient either to one or both of their parents. Such are the reasonings of the naturally gifted, of which Reuben is a type; the docile scholar, as Simeon, for his name means "hearing"; the suppliants who take refuge with God, and this is the company of the Levites; those who raise the hymn of thankfulness with their hearts rather than with their voices, and the leader of that choir is Judah; those who have been judged worthy of rewards and prizes because of their own free will they have toiled in the acquisition of virtue, as Issachar; those who have abandoned the Chaldean research of the supra-terrestrial to engage in the contemplation of the Uncreated, as Abraham; those who have acquired virtue through no other voice but their own and no teacher but themselves, as Isaac; those who are full of courage and strength and are dear to God, as Moses the most perfect of men.

XXIV. It is with good reason, then, that the dis- <sup>95</sup>obedient and contentious man who "brings contributions," that is contributes and adds sins to sins, great to small, new to old, voluntary to involuntary, and as though inflamed by wine drowns the whole of life in ceaseless and unending drunkenness, sodden with drinking deep of the unmixed cup of folly, is judged by the holy word to be worthy of stoning. Yes, for he has made away with the commands of right reason, his father and the observances enjoined by instruction,<sup>a</sup> his mother, and though he had before him the example of true nobility in his brothers

PHILO

- καγαθίας, τοὺς τοῖς γονεῦσιν εὐδοκίμους ἀδελφούς, τὴν τούτων ἀρετὴν οὐκ ἐμμήσατο, τὸναντίον δὲ καὶ προσεπιβαίνειν ἠξίωσεν, ὡς θεοπλαστεῖν μὲν τὸ σῶμα, θεοπλαστεῖν δὲ τὸν παρ' Αἰγυπτίοις μάλιστα τιμώμενον τύφον, οὗ σύμβολον ἢ τοῦ
- [372] χρυσοῦ ταύρου | κατασκευή, περὶ ὃν χοροὺς ἰστάντες οἱ φρενοβλαβεῖς ἄδουσι καὶ ἐξάρχουσιν, οὐ παροίνιον καὶ κωμαστικὸν οἶα ἐν ἑορταῖς καὶ θαλίαις ἡδιστον μέλος, ἀλλὰ τὸν ὡς ἐπὶ τεθνεῶσιν ἀληθῆ θρήνον αὐτοῖς, ὥσπερ ἕξοινοι καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς τὸν τόνον ὑπεκλύσαντές τε καὶ φθείραντες·
- 96 λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ἀκούσας Ἰησοῦς <τῆς φωνῆς > τοῦ λαοῦ κεκραγόντων εἶπε πρὸς Μωυσῆν· φωνὴ πολέμου ἐν τῇ παρεμβολῇ. καὶ λέγει· οὐκ ἔστι φωνὴ ἐξαρχόντων κατ' ἰσχύν οὐδὲ φωνὴ ἐξαρχόντων τροπῆς, ἀλλὰ φωνὴν ἐξαρχόντων οἴνου ἐγὼ ἀκούω. καὶ ἡνίκα ἠγγιζε τῇ παρεμβολῇ, ὄρα τὸν μόσχον καὶ τοὺς χορούς.” ἃ δὲ διὰ τούτων αἰνίττεται, παραστήσωμεν, ὡς ἂν οἰοί τε ὦμεν.
- 97 XXV. Τὰ περὶ ἡμᾶς τοτὲ μὲν ἡρεμεῖ, τοτὲ δὲ ὄρμαῖς καὶ ἐκβοήσεσιν ἀκαίροις ὡσανεὶ χρῆται· καὶ ἔστιν ἢ μὲν ἡσυχία τούτων εἰρήνη βαθεῖα, τὰ δὲ ἐναντία πόλεμος ἄσπονδος. μάρτυς δ' ὁ
- 98 πεπονθὼς ἀψευδέστατος· ἀκούσας γὰρ τῆς φωνῆς τοῦ λαοῦ κεκραγόντων λέγει πρὸς τὸν σκεπτικὸν καὶ ἐπίσκοπον τῶν πραγμάτων· “ φωνὴ πολέμου ἐν τῇ παρεμβολῇ.” ἕως μὲν γὰρ οὐκ ἐκινούντο καὶ ἐκεκράγεσαν ἐν ἡμῖν αἱ ἄλογοι ὄρμαί, σταθερώ-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 503.

<sup>b</sup> ἕξοινος is contrasted with παροίνιος, a word which has not necessarily any unfavourable sense, in this differing from παραινέιν and παροινία.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 95-98

whom the parents honoured, he did not imitate their virtue, but contrariwise determined to be the aggressor in wickedness.<sup>a</sup> And thus he made a god of the body, a god of the vanity most honoured among the Egyptians,<sup>a</sup> whose symbol is the image of the golden bull. Round it the frenzied worshippers make their dances and raise and join in the song, but that song was not the sweet wine-song of merry revellers as in a feast or banquet, but a veritable dirge, their own funeral chant, a chant as of men maddened by wine,<sup>b</sup> who have loosened and destroyed the tone and vigour which nerved their souls. For we 96 are told that “when Joshua heard the voice of the people as they shouted, he said to Moses : ‘There is a voice of war in the camp, and he<sup>a</sup> said ‘It is not the voice of men raising the shout<sup>c</sup> through might, nor of those who raise it for being overcome, but it is the voice of men who raise the shout over the wine that I hear.’ And when he drew nigh to the camp, he saw the calf and the dances” (Exod. xxxii. 17-19). Let us shew as well as we can what he shadows forth under this figure.

XXV. Our being 97
is sometimes at rest, at other times is subject to impulses or, as we may call them, ill-timed outcries. When these are still we have profound peace, when it is otherwise we have relentless wars. To this 98 there can be no testimony so certain as that of personal experience. Such a person hears the voice of the people shouting and says to the one who watches and observes the course of events,<sup>a</sup> “There is a voice of war in the camp.” For so long as the unreasoning impulses did not stir and “shout” within us, the

<sup>c</sup> Or, as the allegorical treatment implies, “raise (or lead) the song.”

PHILO

- τερον ὁ νοῦς ἰδρυτο· ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἤρξαντο πολύφωνον καὶ πολύηχον ἀπεργάζεσθαι τὸ ψυχῆς χωρίον τὰ πάθη συγκαλοῦσαι καὶ ἀνεγείρουσαι, στάσιν ἐμ-99 φύλιον ἐγέννησαν. ἐν δὲ τῷ στρατοπέδῳ ὁ πόλεμος, φυσικώτατα· ποῦ γὰρ ἀλλαχόθι ἔριδες, μάχαι, φιλονεικίαι, πάνθ' ὅσα ἔργα ἀκαθαιρέτου πολέμου, πλὴν ἐν τῷ μετὰ σώματος βίῳ, ὃν ἀλληγορῶν καλεῖ στρατόπεδον; τοῦτον εἴωθεν ἀπολιπεῖν ὁ νοῦς, ὅταν θεοφορηθεῖς πρὸς αὐτῷ τῷ ὄντι γένηται καταθεώμενος τὰς ἀσωμάτους 100 ιδέας· “λαβὼν” γάρ φησι “Μωυσῆς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ σκηνὴν ἔπηξεν ἔξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς,” καὶ οὐ πλησίον, ἀλλὰ πορρωτάτω καὶ “μακρὰν ἀπὸ τῆς παρεμβολῆς.” αἰνίττεται δὲ διὰ τούτων, ὅτι ὁ σοφὸς μέτοικος καὶ μετανάστης ἐστὶν ἀπὸ πολέμου πρὸς εἰρήνην καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ θνητοῦ καὶ πεφυρμένου στρατοπέδου πρὸς τὸν ἀπόλεμον καὶ εἰρηναῖον λογικῶν καὶ εὐδαιμόνων ψυχῶν βίον θεῖον.
- 101 XXVI. λέγει δὲ καὶ ἐτέρωθι ὅτι “ἐπειδὴν ἐξέλθω τὴν πόλιν, ἐκπετάσω τὰς χεῖρας πρὸς τὸν κύριον, καὶ αἱ φωναὶ παύσονται.” μὴ νομίσης δὲ τὸν διαλεγόμενον ἄνθρωπον εἶναι, τὸ ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος ὕφασμα ἢ πλέγμα ἢ κράμα ἢ ὅ τι ποτὲ χρή καλεῖν τουτὶ τὸ σύνθετον ζῶον, ἀλλὰ νοῦν εἰλικρινέστατον καὶ καθαρώτατον, ὃς ἐν μὲν τῇ πόλει τοῦ σώματος καὶ τοῦ θνητοῦ βίου περιεχόμενος ἕσταλται καὶ συνείληπται καὶ ὥσπερ ἐν δεσμωτηρίῳ καθειργμένος μηδὲ ἐλευθέρου δύνασθαι σπᾶν ἀέρος ἀντικρυς ὁμολογεῖ, ἐπειδὴν δὲ ἐξέλθῃ τὴν πόλιν ταύτην, καθάπερ πόδας καὶ χεῖρας οἱ δεσμῶται τὰς ἐννοίας [373] | αὐτὸς καὶ διανοήσεις λυθεὶς ἀφέτοις καὶ ἀπ-ελευθεριαζούσαις χρήσεται ταῖς ἐνεργείαις, ὡς τὰς 370

ON DRUNKENNESS, 98-101

mind stood firm and stedfast. But when they begin to fill the region of the soul with manifold sounds and voices, when they summon the passions and rouse them to action, they create the discord of civil war. "The war is in the camp." True 99 indeed. For where else do we find contentions, combats, hostilities and all the works that go with bitter and persistent war, but in the life of the body which in his parable he calls the camp? That camp the mind is wont to leave, when, filled with the divine, it finds itself in the presence of the Existent Himself and contemplates the incorporeal ideas. For 100

"Moses," we read, "took his tent and pitched it outside the camp," not near, but very far, "at a distance from the camp" (Exod. xxxiii. 7). Under this figure he suggests that the Sage is a pilgrim who travels from peace to war, and from the camp of mortality and confusion to the divine life of peace where strife is not, the life of reasonable and happy souls.

XXVI. Elsewhere he says "When 101
I have gone out of the city I will spread out my hands to the Lord and the sounds shall cease" (Exod. ix. 29). Do not suppose that the person who speaks thus in a man—this compound animal in which soul and body are woven or twined or mingled (use any word you will). No, it is the mind pure and unalloyed. While it is cooped up in the city of the body and mortal life, it is cabined and cribbed and like a prisoner in the gaol declares roundly that it cannot even draw a breath of free air; but when it has gone out of this city, its thoughts and reflections are at liberty, like the hands and feet of the unbound prisoner, and it finds free scope and range for the employment of its active powers, so that the

PHILO

- 102 ἐπικελεύσεις τῶν παθῶν εὐθύς ἐπισχεθῆναι. ἢ οὐχ ἡδονῆς μὲν ἀνατεταμέναι αἱ ἐκβοήσεις, δι' ὧν τὰ ἑαυτῆ φίλα εἴωθε προστάττειν, ἐπιθυμίας δὲ ἄρρηκτος ἢ φωνῆ χαλεπὰς ἀπειλὰς κατὰ τῶν μὴ ὑπηρετούντων ἀπειλούσης, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἐκάστου
- 103 πολύηχος καὶ μεγαλόφωνός τις ἢ γῆρυς; ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐδ' εἰ μυρίοις στόμασι καὶ γλώτταις ἕκαστον τῶν παθῶν <ἐν> τῷ κατὰ τοὺς ποιητὰς λεγομένῳ χρῆσαιτο ὁμάδῳ, τὰς τοῦ τελείου δύναται' ἂν ἀκοὰς συγχέαι μετελληλυθότος ἤδη καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἐκείνοις πόλιν μηκέτ' οἰκεῖν ἐγνώκότος.
- 104 XXVII. Φαμένου δὴ τοῦ πεπονθότος, ὅτι ἐν τῷ σωματικῷ στρατοπέδῳ τὰς τοῦ πολέμου φωνὰς εἶναι πάσας συμβέβηκε τῆς εἰρήνῃ φιλῆς ἡσυχίας μακρὰν ἀπεληλαμένης, ὁ ἱερός συναινεῖ λόγος· οὐ γὰρ λέγει μὴ εἶναι πολέμου φωνήν, ἀλλὰ μὴ τοιαύτην, ὁποῖαν ἔνιοι νομίζουσιν ἢ νενικηκότων ἢ κεκρατημένων, ἀλλ' ἥτις ἂν γένοιτο βεβαρημένων
- 105 καὶ πεπιεσμένων οἴνω· τὸ γὰρ “ οὐκ ἔστι φωνῆ ἐξαρχόντων κατ' ἰσχύν ” ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ περιγεγενημένων τῷ πολέμῳ· ἰσχύς γὰρ τοῦ κρατεῖν αἴτιον. οὕτως τὸν σοφὸν Ἀβραὰμ μετὰ τὴν τῶν ἐννέα καθαίρεσιν βασιλέων, παθῶν μὲν τεττάρων, πέντε δὲ αἰσθητικῶν δυνάμεων, αἱ παρὰ φύσιν ἐκινουῦντο, εἰσάγει τὸν εὐχαριστητικὸν ὕμνον ἐξάρχοντα καὶ φάσκοντα ταυτί· “ ἐκτενῶ τὴν χεῖρά μου πρὸς τὸν θεὸν τὸν ὑψιστον, ὃς ἔκτισε τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν, εἰ ἀπὸ σπαρτίου ἕως σφαιρωτῆρος ὑποδήματος λήψομαι ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν σῶν.”
- 106 δείκνυσι δ', ὡς γ' ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ, τὸ γεγονὸς πᾶν, οὐρανόν, γῆν, ὕδωρ, πνεῦμα, ζῶα

ON DRUNKENNESS, 101-106

clamours of the passions are at once restrained. How shrill are the outcries of pleasure, wherewith 102 it is wont to command what it wills! How continuous is the voice of desire, when it thunders forth its threats against those who do not minister to its wants! How full-toned and sonorous is the call of each of the other passions! Yet though each of 103 them should have a thousand tongues and mouths with which to swell the war-shout, to use the poet's phrase, yet it could not confuse the ears of the perfect Sage, who has passed elsewhere and resolved no longer to dwell in the same city as they.

XXVII. When the subject of that experience says 104 that he feels that in the camp of the body all the sounds are sounds of war, and that the quietness which is so dear to peace has been driven far away, the holy word does not dissent. For it does not say that the sound is not the sound of war but that it is not such a sound as some think it to be, such as would be made by the victorious or the defeated, but such as would proceed from those who are overpressed and weighed down by wine. For in the phrase "it is not the sound 105 of those who raise the song through might" the last words mean "those who have been victorious in war." For might is what causes victory. Thus wise Abraham, when he had routed the nine kings, the four passions that is and the five sense-faculties, which were rising in unnatural rebellion, is represented as raising the hymn of thanksgiving in these words, "I will stretch forth my hand to the most high God who made heaven and earth, if I will take from a rope to a shoe's latchet of all that is thine" (Gen. xiv. 22, 23). He points in these last words, I 106 think, to the whole of creation, heaven, earth, water,

PHILO

ὁμοῦ καὶ φυτά· ἐκάστῳ γὰρ αὐτῶν ὁ τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς ἐνεργείας πρὸς θεὸν τείνας καὶ παρ' αὐτοῦ μόνου τὰς ὠφελείας ἐπελπίζων δεόντως ἂν εἴποι· <παρ' > οὐδενὸς λήψομαι τῶν σῶν, οὐ παρ' ἡλίου τὸ μεθήμερινόν, οὐ παρὰ σελήνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων τὸ νυκτὶ φέγγος, οὐ παρὰ ἀέρος καὶ νεφελῶν ὑετούς, οὐ παρὰ ὕδατος καὶ γῆς ποτὰ καὶ σιτία, οὐ παρὰ ὀφθαλμῶν τὸ ὄρᾱν, οὐ τὸ ἀκούειν παρὰ ὠτων, οὐ παρὰ μυκτῆρων ὀσμάς, οὐ παρ' ἐνστομίου χυλοῦ τὸ γεύεσθαι, οὐ παρὰ γλώττης τὸ λέγειν, οὐ παρὰ χειρῶν τὸ διδόναι καὶ λαμβάνειν, οὐ τὸ προσέρχεσθαι καὶ ἐξαναχωρεῖν παρὰ ποδῶν, οὐκ ἀναπνοὴν παρὰ πνεύμονος, οὐ πέψιν παρ' ἥπατος, οὐ παρὰ τῶν ἄλλων σπλάγχχνων τὰς καθ' ἕκαστον οἰκείους ἐνεργείας, οὐ παρὰ δένδρων καὶ σπαρτῶν τοὺς ἐτησίους καρπούς, ἀλλὰ πάντα παρὰ τοῦ μόνου σοφοῦ τὰς αὐτοῦ χαριστηρίους 107 δυνάμεις πάντῃ τείναντος καὶ διὰ τούτων ὠφελοῦν-
 [374] τος. XXVIII. ὁ μὲν οὖν τοῦ ὄντος | ὀρατικὸς τὸν αἴτιον ἐπιστάμενος τὰ ὧν ἔστιν αἴτιος δεύτερα μετ' ἐκεῖνον τετίμηκεν ὁμολογῶν ἀκολακεύτως τὰ προσόντα αὐτοῖς. ἡ δὲ ὁμολογία δικαιοτάτη· παρ' ὑμῶν μὲν οὐδέν, παρὰ δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ λήψομαι, οὐ κτήματα τὰ πάντα, δι' ὑμῶν δὲ ἴσως· ὄργανα γὰρ ὑπηρετήσοντα ταῖς ἀθανάτοις αὐτοῦ χάρισι 108 γεγένησθε. ὁ δὲ ἀπερίσκεπτος διάνοιαν τυφλωθεὶς, ἦ τὸ ὄχ μόνῃ καταληπτὸν ἔστιν, αὐτὸ μὲν οὐδαμῆ οὐδαμῶς εἶδε, τὰ δὲ ἐν κόσμῳ σώματα αἰσθήσει ταῖς ἑαυτοῦ, ἃ δὴ πάντων ἐνόμισε γινομένων αἴτια.
 374

the air we breathe, to animals and plants alike. To each of them he who has braced the activities of his own soul to stretch Godwards, and who hopes for help from Him alone, would rightly say, "I will take nothing from aught of thy creatures, not the light of day from the sun, nor the light of night from the moon and the other stars, nor rain from the air or the clouds, nor drink and food from water and earth, nor sight from the eyes, nor hearing from the ears, nor smell from the nostrils, nor taste from the juices of the palate, nor speech from the tongue, nor giving and receiving from the hands, nor moving forwards and backwards from the feet, nor respiration from the lungs, nor digestion from the liver, nor from the other inward parts the functions proper to each, nor their yearly fruits from the trees and seedlings, but I will take them all from the only wise Being who has extended His beneficent power every whither, and through them renders me help." XXVIII. He then 107 who has the vision of the Existent knows Him who is the Cause, and honours the things of which He is the cause only as second to Him. He will use no words of flattery, yet acknowledges what is their due. This acknowledgement is most just. I will take nothing from you, but I will take from God, the possessor of all things; yet it may be that I will take through you, for you have been made instruments to minister to His undying acts of grace. But the man 108 of no discernment, whose understanding, by which alone the Existent can be comprehended, is blinded, has never anywhere seen that Existence, but only the material contents of this world as shewn to him by his senses, and these material things he believes to be the causes of all that comes into being.

PHILO

- 109 παρὸ καὶ θεοπλαστεῖν ἀρξάμενος ἀγαλμάτων καὶ ξοάνων καὶ ἄλλων μυρίων ἀφιδρυμάτων ὕλαις διαφόροις τετεχνιτευμένων κατέπλησε τὴν οἰκουμένην, γραφεῦσι καὶ πλάσταις, οὓς ὑπερορίους ὁ νομοθέτης τῆς κατ' αὐτὸν πολιτείας ἤλασεν, ἀλλά τε μεγάλα καὶ τιμὰς ὑπερβαλλούσας ἰδία τε καὶ κοινῇ ψηφισάμενος, <καὶ> κατειργάσατο τούναντίον οὐ προσεδόκησεν, ἀντὶ ὁσιότητος ἀ-
- 110 σέβειαν· τὸ γὰρ πολύθεον ἐν ταῖς τῶν ἀφρόνων ψυχαῖς ἀθεότητα <κατασκευάζει>, καὶ θεοῦ τιμῆς ἀλογοῦσιν οἱ τὰ θνητὰ θειώσαντες· οἷς οὐκ ἐξήρκεσεν ἡλίου καὶ σελήνης, εἰ δὲ ἐβούλοντο, καὶ γῆς ἀπάσης καὶ παντὸς ὕδατος εἰκόνας διαπλάσασθαι, ἀλλ' ἤδη καὶ ἀλόγοις ζώοις καὶ φυτοῖς τῆς τῶν ἀφθάρτων τιμῆς μετέδωκαν. ὁ δὲ τούτοις ἐπιτιμῶν τὸν ἐπινίκιον ὕμνον ἐξάρχων ἐδείχθη.
- 111 XXIX. καὶ Μωυσῆς μέντοι κατὰ ταῦτα, ἐπειδὴν ἴδῃ τὸν βασιλέα τῆς Αἰγύπτου, τὸν ὑπέραυχον νοῦν, σὺν τοῖς ἐξακοσίοις ἄρμασι, ταῖς τοῦ ὀργανικοῦ σώματος ἐξ κινήσεσιν ἡρμοσμέναις τοῖς ἐπιβεβηκόσι τριστάταις, οἱ μηδενὸς τῶν κατὰ γένεσιν πεφυκότος ἐστάναι περὶ πάντων οἴονται δεῖν ὡς ἂν παγίως ἰδρυμένων καὶ μηδεμίαν δεχομένων μεταβολὴν ἀποφαίνεσθαι, δίκην ἀξίαν τῆς ἀσεβείας ὑποσχόντα καὶ τὸν ἀσκητικὸν ἔμπαλιν τὰς ἐπιδρομὰς τῶν πολεμίων ἐκφυγόντα καὶ ἀνὰ κράτος ἀπροσδοκῆτως διασωθέντα, τὸν δίκαιον καὶ ἀληθῆ βραβευτὴν ὕμνεῖ θεὸν τὰ πρεπωδέστατα καὶ οἰκειότατα ταῖς συντυχίαις ἐξάρχων ἄσματα, διότι "ἵππον καὶ ἀναβάτην ῥίψας εἰς θάλασσαν," τὸν

<sup>a</sup> In Philo's elastic philosophy of numbers 600 easily = 6. For the six movements see Leg. All. i. 4.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 109-111

And therefore he started fashioning gods and filled 109 the inhabited world with idols of stone and wood and numberless other figures wrought in various materials, and decreed great prizes and magnificent honours public and private to painters and sculptors, whom the lawgiver had banished from the boundaries of his commonwealth. He expected to produce piety ;
what he accomplished was its opposite, impiety.
For polytheism creates atheism in the souls of the 110 foolish, and God's honour is set at naught by those who deify the mortal. For it did not content them to fashion images of sun or moon, or, if they would have it so, of all the earth and all the water, but they even allowed irrational plants and animals to share the honour which belongs to things imperishable. Such persons did Abraham rebuke and we shewed that it was with this thought that he raised his hymn of victory.

XXIX. So, too, with the song 111 of Moses. He has seen the king of Egypt, the boastful mind with his six hundred <sup>a</sup> chariots (Exod. xiv. 7), that is the six movements of the organic body, adjusted for the use of the princes who ride upon them (Exod. xv. 4) who, though no created object can be stable, think it right to aver that all such are firmly established and unsusceptible of change. He has seen that mind suffer the penalty due to its impiety while the Votary of Practice has escaped the onset of his enemies and been brought with might to unlooked-for safety. So then he hymns God the righteous and true dispenser of events and the song which he raises is most fitting and suited to the occasion. "The horse and his rider He has thrown into the sea" (Exod. xv. 1), that is, He has buried

PHILO

- ἐποχοῦμενον νοῦν ταῖς τοῦ τετράποδος καὶ ἀφηνιαστοῦ πάθους ἀλόγοις ὀρμαῖς ἀφανίσας, βοηθός καὶ ὑπερασπιστῆς ἐγένετο τῆς ὀρατικῆς ψυχῆς, ὡς
- 112 χαρίσασθαι παντελῆ σωτηρίαν αὐτῇ. ὁ δὲ αὐτὸς καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ φρέατος ἐξάρχει, οὐκέτι μόνον ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τῶν παθῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ τὸ κάλλιστον κτημάτων, σοφίαν, ἀνανταγώνιστον ἰσχυῶσαι λαβεῖν, ἣν ἀπεικάζει φρέατι· βαθεῖα γὰρ
- [375] καὶ οὐκ ἐπιπόλαιος, γλυκὴ ἀναδιδούσα νᾶμα καλοκάγαθίας | διψῶσαις ψυχαῖς, ἀναγκαιότατον ὁμοῦ
- 113 καὶ ἡδιστον ποτόν· ἰδιώτη δὲ οὐδενὶ παιδείας ἐφέϊται τοῦτο τὸ φρέαρ ὀρύττειν, μόνοις δὲ βασιλεῦσιν, ἧ φησιν· “ἐλατόμησαν αὐτὸ βασιλεῖς”· μεγάλων γὰρ ἡγεμόνων ἀναζητῆσαι καὶ κατεργάσασθαι σοφίαν, οὐχὶ τῶν ὄπλοις γῆν καὶ θάλατταν ὑπηγμένων, ἀλλὰ τῶν ψυχῆς δυνάμεσι τὸν πολύτροπον αὐτῆς καὶ μιγάδα καὶ πεφορημένον
- 114 ὄχλον κατηγωνισμένων. XXX. τούτων φοιτητὰς καὶ γνωρίμους εἶναι συμβέβηκε τοὺς λέγοντας· “οἱ παῖδες σου εἰλήφασι τὸ κεφάλαιον τῶν ἀνδρῶν τῶν πολεμιστῶν τῶν μεθ’ ἡμῶν, οὐ διαπεφώνηκεν ἀπ’ αὐτῶν οὐδὲ εἰς· προσαγηόχαμεν
- 115 τὸ δῶρον κυρίῳ ἀνῆρ, ὃ εὗρεν”· εἰκόσιν γὰρ καὶ οὗτοι πάλιν ἐπινίκιον ἄσμα ἐξάρχειν τελείων καὶ ἡγεμονικῶν δυνάμεων ἐφιέμενοι—τὸν γὰρ συντιθέντα τὸ κεφάλαιον καὶ πλείστον ἀριθμὸν τῶν κατ’ ἀνδρείαν λόγων φασὶ λαβεῖν—, οὗς ἐκ φύσεως εἶναι πολεμικοὺς συμβέβηκε δυσὶν ἀντιτεταγμένους τέλεσιν, ἐνὶ μὲν οὗ ἢ δυσθεράπευτος<sup>1</sup> ἀφηγεῖται

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δυσθήρατος.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 503.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 504.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. learning from the leaders to be leaders themselves.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 111-115

out of sight the mind which rode upon the unreasoning impulses of passion, that four-footed beast which knows not the rein, and has shewn Himself the helper and champion of the soul which can see, to bestow on it full salvation. Again Moses 112 leads the song at the well, and this time his theme is not only the rout of the passions, but the strength invincible which can win that most beautiful of possessions, wisdom, which he likens to a well. For wisdom lies deep below the surface and gives forth a sweet stream of true nobility for thirsty souls, and that draught is at once needful and delicious above all things. But to none of those who in instruction 113 are but of the common herd is it permitted to dig this well, only to kings, as he says "kings hewed it" (Num. xxi. 16-18).<sup>a</sup> For it belongs to great leaders to search for and accomplish wisdom, not leaders who have subdued sea and land with arms, but those who through the powers of the soul have conquered the medley and confusion of the multitude which beset it.

XXX. <sup>b</sup> These leaders prove to have 114 followers and disciples <sup>b</sup> in those who say "thy servants have taken the sum of the warriors who were with us. Not one of them is in discord. We have brought our gift to the Lord, every man what he found" (Num. xxxi. 49, 50). It would seem that 115 these too are raising a song of victory in their desire for the perfect powers that befit the leaders. For they say that they have taken the largest number, that which completes the sum, of the different aspects of courage. They are by nature combatants, marshalled to fight against two battalions <sup>b</sup> of the enemy, one led by cowardice, a quality so difficult to cure, the other by rashness inspired by the frenzy of battle,

PHILO

- δειλία, ἐτέρω δὲ οὐ ἠ ἀρειμάνιος θρασύτης· ἀμφό-116 τεραι δὲ γνώμης ἀγαθῆς ἀμέτοχοι. παγκάλως δ' εἴρηται τὸ μηδένα διαπεφωνηκέναι πρὸς ὀλοκλήρου καὶ παντελοῦς μετουσίαν ἀνδρείας· καθάπερ <γὰρ> λύρα καὶ πᾶν μουσικῆς ὄργανον ἐκμελές μὲν, κἂν εἰς αὐτὸ μόνον ἀπωδὸς ἢ φθόγγος, ἡρμοσμένον δ', ὅταν μιᾷ πλήξει συνηχώσι τὴν αὐτὴν συμφωνίαν ἀποτελοῦντες, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τὸ ψυχῆς ὄργανον ἀσύμφωνον μὲν, ὅταν ἢ θράσει σφόδρα ἐπιτεινόμενον πρὸς τὸ ὀξύτατον βιάζεται ἢ δειλία πλέον τοῦ μετρίου ἀνιέμενον πρὸς τὸ βαρύτατον χαλᾶται, σύμφωνον δ', ὅταν οἱ τῆς ἀνδρείας καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς τόνοι πάντες ἀνα-
 117 κραθέντες ἐν εὐάρμοστον ἀπογεννήσωσι μέλος. τῆς δὲ συμφωνίας καὶ εὐαρμοστίας μέγα τεκμήριον τὸ προσαηγοχέναι τὸ δῶρον τῷ θεῷ, τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ τιμῆσαι πρεπόντως τὸ ὄν διὰ τοῦ σαφέστατα ὠμολογηκέναι, ὅτι δῶρόν ἐστιν αὐτοῦ τὸδε τὸ πᾶν·
 118 λέγει γὰρ φυσικώτατα· “ ἀνὴρ ὁ εὖρε, τοῦτο προσήνεγκε δῶρον.” ἕκαστος δ' ἡμῶν γενόμενος εὐθύς εὕρισκει τὸ μέγα δῶρον θεοῦ τὸν παντελῆ κόσμον, <ὄν> αὐτὸν<sup>1</sup> ἑαυτῷ καὶ τοῖς ἀρίστοις μέρεσιν
 119 [ὄρεσιν] ἐχαρίσατο. XXXI. εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ
 [376] ἐν μέρει δωρεαί, ἃς θεῷ τε | δοῦναι καὶ λαβεῖν ἀνθρώποις ἐμπρεπές. αὐταὶ δ' ἂν εἰεν ἀρεταὶ καὶ αἱ κατ' αὐτὰς ἐνέργειαι, ὧν τὴν εὖρεσιν σχεδὸν ἄχρονον οὖσαν διὰ τὸ ὑπερβάλλον τοῦ χαριζομένου τάχος ἐν οἷς εἴωθε δωρεῖσθαι πᾶς καταπέπληκται, 120 καὶ ὅτω μηδὲν μέγα τῶν ἄλλων ὑπείληπται. διὸ καὶ πυνθάνεται· “ τί τοῦτο ὁ ταχὺ εὖρες, ὦ τέκνον;”

<sup>1</sup> Or, as Adler, αὐτὸν γὰρ. Wendland proposed δν, omitting

ON DRUNKENNESS, 115-120

and neither has any element of good judgement. Now it is a fine saying that "none is at discord" or thus failing to partake of courage perfect and complete. For as the lyre or any musical instrument is out of harmony if even a single note and nothing more be out of tune, but in harmony when, under a single stroke of the bow, the strings join in yielding the same symphony, so it is with the instrument of the soul. It is out of harmony when it is strained too far by rashness and forced to the highest pitch of the scale, or when it is relaxed too much by cowardice and weakened to the lowest. It is in harmony when all the strings of courage and every virtue combine to produce a single tuneful melody. The harmony and tunefulness in this case is mightily attested by the words which say that they have offered their gift to God, that is, that they have duly honoured the Existent by clearly acknowledging that this universe is His gift. For it says in words most agreeable to the truth of things, "what a man found, this he offered as a gift." Each of us, that is, finds at our birth that great gift of God, the complete universe which He bestowed on itself and on its highest members.

XXXI. There are also partial and particular gifts which it is fitting for God to give and for man to receive. These we shall find are the virtues and the activities which correspond to them. Our discovery of them one may almost say is timeless, because of the exceeding swiftness with which the Donor bestows His wonted gifts to the amazement of all, even of those who find nothing great in other things. Thus Isaac asks, "what is this which thou

---

αὐτὸν, but the juxtaposition of αὐτὸν to ἑαυτῷ is very common and emphasis would be lost by its omission.

PHILO

τεθραυμακῶς τῆς σπουδαίας διαθέσεως τὴν ὀξύτητα· ὁ δὲ εἶ παθῶν εὐθυβόλως ἀποκρίνεται· “ὁ παρέδωκε κύριος ὁ θεός.” παραδόσεις γὰρ καὶ ὑφηγήσεις βραδείαι μὲν αἱ δι’ ἀνθρώπων, ὀξύταται δ’ αἱ διὰ θεοῦ, φθάνουσαι καὶ τὴν ὀξύτάτην χρόνου κίνησιν.

- 121 Οἱ μὲν οὖν κατ’ ἰσχὺν καὶ δύναμιν ἕξαρχοι καὶ ἡγεμόνες τοῦ τὸν ἐπινίκιον καὶ εὐχαριστικὸν ὕμνον ᾄδοντος χοροῦ οἱ λεχθέντες εἰσίν, οἱ δὲ κατὰ τροπὴν καὶ ἀσθένειαν τοῦ τὸν ἐφ’ ἧτταις θρηῆνον σφαδάζοντος ἕτεροι, οὓς οὐ κακίζειν μᾶλλον ἢ οἰκτιρίζεσθαι χρὴ καθάπερ τοὺς τὰ σώματα ἐκ φύσεως ἐπικήρως ἔχοντας, οἷς καὶ ἡ τυχοῦσα νόσου πρόφασις μέγα ἐμπόδιον πρὸς τὸ σώζεσθαι.
- 122 ἔτιοι δ’ οὐ τῷ μαλθακωτέροις τοῖς ψυχῆς κεκρηῆσθαι τόνοις ἀνέπεσον ἄκοντες ὑπ’ ἐρρωμενεστέρας τῶν ἀντιπάλων ἰσχύος πιεσθέντες, ἀλλὰ μιμησάμενοι τοὺς ἐθελοδούλους ἐκόντες ἑαυτοὺς πικροῖς δεσπότηαι ὑπέρριψαν γένος ὄντες ἐλεύθεροι· διὸ μὴ δυνάμενοι πεπρᾶσθαι, τὸ παραλογώτατον, αὐτοὶ δεσπότηαι ὠνούμενοι προσεκτῶντο, ταῦτ’ ὀδρῶντες τοῖς ἐμφορουμένοις ἀπλήστως πρὸς μέθην οἴνου—
- 123 καὶ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι γνώμη τὸν ἄκρατον, οὐ βιασθέντες προσφέρονται—, ὥστε καὶ γνώμη τὸ μὲν νηφάλιον ἐκτέμνουσι τῆς ψυχῆς, τὸ δὲ παράληρον αἰροῦνται· “φωνὴν” γὰρ φησιν “ἕξαρχόντων [ὑπ’] οἴνου

<sup>a</sup> Between ἀσθένειαν and τοῦ understand ἕξαρχοι καὶ ἡγεμόνες.

<sup>b</sup> Or “with whom any trifling occasion of sickness is a mighty obstacle to their well-being.”

<sup>c</sup> Here begins the description of those “who raise the song over the wine.”

ON DRUNKENNESS, 120-123

hast found quickly, my son?" marvelling at the speed with which the virtuous disposition has been attained. The receiver of God's benefit answered rightly, "it is what the Lord God delivered to me" (Gen. xxvii. 20). For the instructions and injunctions delivered through men are slow, but those that come through God are exceeding swift, outrunning even the swiftest movement of time.

Now those described above are those who lead the 121 song of prevailing might, the precentors of the choir which sings the hymn of victory and thanksgiving, while they who raise the song of weakness and defeat,<sup>a</sup> leaders of the choir which sobs forth the wailing of the routed, are of another sort, men who deserve pity rather than reproaches, even as we pity those whose bodies are fatally stricken by nature, with whom the misfortune of their malady ever stands to prevent their finding health and safety.<sup>b</sup>

But some <sup>c</sup> have failed not involuntarily, not because 122
the nerves of their souls were feebler and because they were overpressed by the stouter might of their opponents, but because imitating those who hug their chains, they have voluntarily laid themselves at the feet of cruel masters, though they were born to freedom. And since in virtue of their free birth they could not be sold, they have—strange contrast—purchased and taken to them masters. Thus they are on a level with those who swill themselves insatiably with wine to the pitch of intoxication. For such de- 123 liberately and under no compulsion put the cup of strong drink to their lips, and so it is also with full deliberation that these men eliminate soberness from their soul and choose madness in its place. For so runs the text, "It is the voice of those who raise

PHILO

- ἐγὼ ἀκούω," τουτέστιν οὐκ ἀκούσιον ἐνδεδειγμένων<sup>1</sup> μανίαν, ἀλλ' ἐκουσίῳ φρενοβλαβείᾳ βε-124 βακχευμένων. XXXII. πᾶς δ' ὁ συνεγγίζων τῇ παρεμβολῇ " τὸν μόσχον ὄρα καὶ τοὺς χορούς," ἢ καὶ αὐτὸς διασυνίστησι· τύφῳ γὰρ καὶ τοῖς τύφου χορευταῖς ἐντυγχάνομεν, ὅσοι πλησίον ἴστασθαι τοῦ σωματικοῦ στρατοπέδου διανοούμεθα γνώμη· ἐπεὶ τοῖς τε φιλοθεάμοσι καὶ τὰ ἀσώματα ὄραν γλιχομένοις, ἅτε ἀτυφίας οὖσιν ἀσκηταῖς, πορρωτάτῳ τοῦ σώματος ἔθος διοικίζεσθαι.
- 125 εὐχου δὴ τῷ θεῷ μηδέποτε ἕξαρχος οἴνου γενέσθαι, τουτέστι μηδέποτε ἐκὼν ἀφηγήσασθαι τῆς εἰς ἀπαιδευσίαν καὶ ἀφροσύνην ἀγούσης ὁδοῦ· τὰ γὰρ ἀκούσια ἡμίσεα κακῶν καὶ κουφότερα, καθαρῷ τῷ 126 τοῦ συνειδότος ἐλέγχῳ μὴ βαρυνόμενα. τελεσφορηθεισῶν δέ σοι τῶν εὐχῶν ιδιότης μὲν ἔτι μένειν οὐκ ἂν δύναιο, τὴν δὲ μεγίστην ἡγεμονιῶν ἀρχήν, ἱερωσύνην, κτήση. σχεδὸν γὰρ ἱερέων καὶ θεραπευτῶν θεοῦ μόνων τὸ ἔργον |
 [377] νηφάλια θύειν, οἴνου καὶ παντὸς ὃ τοῦ ληρεῖν αἴτιον 127 βεβαιότητι διανοίας κατεξανισταμένων· " ἐλάλησε " γὰρ φησι " κύριος τῷ Ἰακώβ λέγων· οἴνον καὶ σίκερα οὐ πίεσθε σὺ καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ σου μετὰ σέ,<sup>2</sup> ἥνικα ἂν εἰσπορεύηθε εἰς τὴν σκηνὴν τοῦ μαρτυρίου ἢ προσπορεύησθε τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ, καὶ οὐ μὴ ἀποθάνητε· νόμιμον αἰώνιον εἰς τὰς γενεὰς ὑμῶν διαστεῖλαι ἀνὰ μέσον ἀγίων καὶ βεβήλων καὶ ἀνὰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐνδεδειγμένων.

<sup>2</sup> Possibly μετὰ σοῦ as in LXX, and also in § 138.

---

<sup>a</sup> The translation takes καθαρὸς in the sense of "unmixed," i.e. with nothing to lighten its force. Possibly "in all its purity."

ON DRUNKENNESS, 123-127

the song of wine that I hear," that is, not the song of those on whom insanity has fallen through no will of their own, but of those who are possessed with the frenzy which they themselves have willed.

XXXII. Now everyone who comes near to the camp 124
"sees the calf and the dance" (Exod. xxxii. 19), as Moses himself shews. For all of us who have the deliberate purpose to stand close to the camp of the body find themselves in the company of vanity and its band of revellers. Whereas those who yearn for the Vision and long to behold things incorporeal are practisers of simplicity, and therefore it is their custom to make their dwelling as far as may be from the body.

Pray then to God that thou 125 mayest never become a leader in the wine song, never, that is, voluntarily take the first steps on the path which leads to indiscipline and folly. Voluntarily, I say, for involuntary evils are but half evils and lighter matters, since they have not upon them the sheer <sup>a</sup> weight of convicting conscience. But if thy 126 prayers are fulfilled thou canst no longer remain a layman, but wilt obtain the office which is the greatest of headships, the priesthood.

For it is the task of priests and ministers of God alone, or of hardly any others, to make the offering of sobriety, and in stedfastness of mind to resist the wine-cup and everything which causes folly. For 127
"the Lord spake unto Aaron," we read, "saying, Wine and strong liquor ye shall not drink, thou and thy sons after thee, whenever ye enter into the tabernacle of testimony, or approach the altar, and ye shall not die. It is an everlasting ordinance unto your generations, to make a difference between the holy and the profane and between the clean and the un-

PHILO

- 128 μέσον καθαρῶν καὶ ἀκαθάρτων.” Ἁαρὼν δέ ἐστιν ὁ ἱερεὺς, καὶ τοῦνομα ὀρεινὸς ἐρμηνεύεται, μετέωρα καὶ ὑψηλὰ φρονῶν λογισμὸς, οὐ διὰ μεγαλαυχίας κενοῦ φύσηματος ὑπόπλεων ὄγκον, ἀλλὰ διὰ μέγεθος ἀρετῆς, ἣ τὸ φρόνημα ἐξαίρουσα πέραν οὐρανοῦ ταπεινὸν οὐδὲν ἐὰ λογίζεσθαι. διακείμενος
- 129 δ’ οὕτως ἄκρατον καὶ πᾶν ἀφροσύνης φάρμακον ἐκὼν οὐποτε προσήσεται. ἀνάγκη γάρ ἐστιν ἡ ἀρρηφοροῦντα αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν σκηνὴν εἰσιέναι τὰς ἀοράτους ἐπιτελέσοντα τελετὰς ἡ τῷ βωμῷ προσιόντα θυσίας ὑπὲρ τε τῶν ἰδίων καὶ κοινῶν
- 130 χαριστηρίους ἀναγαγεῖν· νήψεως δὲ καὶ περιττῆς ἀγχινοίας ταῦτα δείται. XXXIII. θαυμάσαι μὲν οὖν εἰκότως ἂν τις καὶ τὸ ῥητὸν τῆς προστάξεως. πῶς γὰρ οὐ σεμνὸν νήφοντας καὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ὄντας πρὸς εὐχὰς καὶ ἱερουργίας χωρεῖν,
- 131 ὡς ἔμπαλιν ἀμφότερα, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, παρεμμένους ὑπὸ οἴνου καταγέλαστον; ἡ δεσπόταις μὲν καὶ γονεῦσι καὶ ἄρχουσιν οἰκέται καὶ υἱοὶ καὶ ὑπήκοοι μέλλοντες προσέρχεσθαι πρόνοιαν ἔξουσι τοῦ νήφειν, ὡς μήτε ἐν τοῖς λεγομένοις καὶ πραττομένοις διαμάρτοιεν μήθ’ ὡς καταπεφρονηκότες τῆς ἐκείνων ἀξιώσεως κολασθεῖεν ἢ, τὸ γοῦν ἐπιεικέστατον, χλεύην ὄφλοιεν· τὸν δὲ τοῦ παντὸς ἡγεμόνα καὶ πατέρα τις θεραπεύειν δικαίων οὐ καὶ σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν καὶ ὕπνου καὶ πάντων ὅσα ἀναγκαῖα τῇ φύσει περιέσται, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ ἀβροδίατον ἀποκλίνας τὸν τῶν ἀσώτων ζηλώσει βίον, καὶ βεβαρημένος τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς ἀπ’ οἴνου καὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν παραβάλλων καὶ τὸν αὐχένα ἐγκάρσιον πλαγιάζων καὶ ὑπ’ ἀμετρίας ἐρευγόμενος καὶ ὄλω διαρρέων τῷ σώματι χέρνιβος ἡ βωμῶν

ON DRUNKENNESS, 128-131

clean " (Lev. x. 8-10). Now Aaron is the 128 priest and his name means "mountainous." He is the reason whose thoughts are lofty and sublime, not with the empty inflated bigness of mere vaunting, but with the greatness of virtue, which lifts his thinking above the heaven and will not let him cherish any reasoning that is mean and low. And being so minded he will never willingly allow strong wine or any potion which breeds folly to approach him. For 129 he must either himself enter the tabernacle in mystic procession to accomplish the unseen rites, or come to the altar and there offer sacrifices of thanksgiving for private and public blessings. And these need sober abstinence and a close and ready attention.

XXXIII. In a literal sense too, this 130 command deserves our admiration. For surely it is seemly that men should come to prayers and holy services sober and with full control of themselves, just as on the other hand to come with both body and soul relaxed with wine is a matter for scorn and ridicule. We know that when servants are about 131 to approach their masters, or sons their parents, or subjects their rulers, they will take careful thought to be sober that they may not transgress in word and deed, and thus either receive punishment for having shewn contempt for the dignity of their betters, or at the best become an object of scorn. And shall he who claims to serve the Lord and Father of all, instead of rising superior to food and drink and all other natural necessities, fall away to luxury and affect the life of the dissolute? Shall he, with his eyes heavy with wine and his head lolling and his neck bent awry, come belching from his intemperance, limp and flabby in every limb, to touch the holy water or the altars or

PHILO

- ἢ θυσιῶν προσάβεται; ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὴν ἱεράν ἐξ ἀπόπτου φλόγα θεάσασθαι τῷ τοιούτῳ θέμις.
- 132 εἰ μέντοι μήτε σκηνην μήτε θυσιαστήριον ὑπολάβοι τις λέγεσθαι τὰ ὁρώμενα ἐκ τῆς αἰψύχου καὶ φθαρτῆς δημιουργηθέντα ὕλης, ἀλλὰ τὰ [378] ἀόρατα καὶ [τὰ] νοητὰ | θεωρήματα, ὧν αἰσθηταὶ ταῦτα εἰκόνες, καταπλαγήσεται μᾶλλον τὴν ὑφ-
- 133 ἡγήσιν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ παντὸς τὸ μὲν παράδειγμα, τὸ δὲ μίμημα ὁ ποιῶν ἐποίει, καὶ ἀρετῆς τὴν μὲν ἀρχέτυπον σφραγίδα εἰργάζετο, τὸν δὲ ἀπὸ ταύτης ἐνεσημαίνετο ἐμφερέστατον χαρακτῆρα· ἢ μὲν οὖν ἀρχέτυπος σφραγὶς ἀσώματός ἐστιν ἰδέα, ἢ δὲ χαραχθεῖσα εἰκὼν σῶμα ἤδη, φύσει μὲν αἰσθητόν, οὐ μὴν εἰς αἴσθησιν ἐρχόμενον· καθάπερ καὶ τὸ ἐν τῷ βαθυτάτῳ τοῦ Ἀτλαντικοῦ πελάγους ξύλον εἴποι τις ἂν πεφυκέναι μὲν πρὸς τὸ καίεσθαι, μηδέποτε δ' ὑπὸ πυρὸς ἀναλωθήσεσθαι διὰ τὴν
- 134 τῆς θαλάττης ἀνάχυσιν. XXXIV. τὴν οὖν σκηνην καὶ τὸν βωμὸν ἐννοήσωμεν ἰδέας,<sup>1</sup> τὴν μὲν ἀρετῆς ἀσωμάτου, τὸν δὲ αἰσθητῆς εἰκόνας εἶναι σύμβολον. τὸν μὲν γε βωμὸν καὶ τὰ ἐπ' αὐτοῦ ῥάδιον ἰδεῖν—ἕξω τε γὰρ ἔχει τὴν κατασκευὴν καὶ ἀσβέστῳ πυρὶ . . . ἀναλίσκεται, ὡς μὴ μεθ' ἡμέραν μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ νύκτωρ περιλάμ-
- 135 πεσθαι—, ἢ δὲ σκηνην καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ πάντα ἀθέατα, οὐχὶ τῷ μόνον ἐσωτάτῳ καὶ ἐν ἀδύτοις ἰδρῦσθαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ τὸν προσαιψάμενον ἢ διὰ περιεργίαν

<sup>1</sup> Or perhaps, as Adler, the comma may be placed before ιδέας, which will then be taken as gen. sing.; see App. p. 505.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 504.

<sup>b</sup> The lacuna in the text may be filled up with some such words as τὰ ἱεουργούμενα.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 131-135

the sacrifices ? Nay, for such a one it were a sacrilege that he should even from a distance behold the sacred fire. But if we suppose that no actual 132 tabernacle or altar is meant, that is the visible objects fashioned from lifeless and perishable material, but those invisible conceptions perceived only by the mind, of which the others are copies<sup>a</sup> open to our senses, he will be still more lost in admiration at the ordinance. For since the Creator made both the 133 pattern and the copy in all that He made, virtue was not excepted : He wrought its archetypal seal, and He also stamped with this an impression which was its close counterpart. The archetypal seal is an incorporeal idea, but the copy which is made by the impression is something else—a material something, naturally perceptible by the senses, yet not actually coming into relation with them ; just as we might say that a piece of wood buried in the deepest part of the Atlantic ocean has a natural capacity for being burnt, though actually it will never be consumed by fire because the sea is around and above it.

XXXIV. <sup>a</sup> Let us conceive, then, of the tabernacle 134
and altar as “ ideas,” the first being a symbol of incorporeal virtue, the other of its sensible image. Now the altar and what is on it can be easily seen. For it is constructed out of doors, and the fire which consumes the offerings is never extinguished,<sup>b</sup> and thus by night as well as by day it is in bright light. But the tabernacle and all its contents are unseen, 135 not only because they are placed right inside and in the heart of the sanctuary, but because anyone who touched them, or with a too curious eye looked upon them, was punished with death according to the

PHILO

- ὀφθαλμῶν ἰδόντα ἀπαραιτήτῳ δίκῃ θανάτου κατὰ πρόσταξιν νόμου κολάζεσθαι, πλὴν εἰ μὴ τις ὀλόκληρος καὶ παντελής εἴη, περὶ μηδέν, μὴ μέγα, μὴ μικρόν, ἀπλῶς κηραίνων πάθος, ἀλλ' ἀρτίῳ καὶ πλήρει καὶ πάντα τελειοτάτῃ κεκρημένος τῇ
- 136 φύσει. τούτῳ γὰρ ἐπιτέτραπται δι' ἔτους ἅπαξ εἰσιόντι ἐπισκοπεῖν τὰ ἀθέατα ἄλλοις, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἐξ ἀπάντων μόνῳ ὁ τῶν ἀσωμάτων καὶ ἀφθάρτων ἀγαθῶν πτηνὸς καὶ οὐράνιος ἔρως ἐνδαιτᾶται.
- 137 ὅταν οὖν ὑπὸ τῆς ἰδέας πληχθεῖς ἔπηται τῇ τὰς κατὰ μέρος ἀρετὰς τυπούση σφραγίδι κατανοῶν καὶ καταπληττόμενος αὐτῆς τὸ θεοειδέστατον κάλλος ἢ τινι προσέρχεται δεξαμένη τὸν ἐκείνης χαρακτηῖρα, λήθη μὲν ἀμαθίας καὶ ἀπαιδευσίας, μνήμη δὲ παιδείας καὶ ἐπιστήμης εὐθὺς ἐγγίνεται.
- 138 διὸ λέγει· “οἶνον καὶ σίκερα οὐ πίεσθε, σὺ καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ σου μετὰ σέ, ἡνίκα ἂν εἰσπορεύησθε εἰς τὴν σκηνὴν τοῦ μαρτυρίου ἢ προσπορεύησθε τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ.” ταῦτα δ' οὐκ ἀπαγορεύων μᾶλλον ἢ γνώμην ἀποφαινόμενος διεξέρχεται· τῷ μὲν γε ἀπαγορεύοντι οἰκεῖον ἦν εἰπεῖν· οἶνον, ὅταν ἱεουργῆτε, μὴ πίνετε, τῷ δὲ γνώμην ἀποφαινομένῳ τὸ “οὐ πίεσθε.” καὶ γὰρ ἔστιν ἀμήχανον τὸ μέθης καὶ παροιρίας ψυχῆς αἴτιον, ἀπαιδευσίαν, προσίεσθαι τὸν ταῖς γενικαῖς καὶ κατ' εἶδος ἀρεταῖς ἐμμελετῶντα καὶ ἐγ-139 χορεύοντα. τὴν δὲ σκηνὴν “μαρτυρίου” καλεῖ πολλάκις, ἥτοι παρόσον ὁ ἀψευδὴς θεὸς ρετῆς ἐστι μάρτυς, ᾧ καλὸν καὶ σύμφορον

ON DRUNKENNESS, 135-139

ordinance of the law, and against that sentence there was no appeal. The only exception made is for one who should be free from all defects, not wasting himself with any passion great or small, but endowed with a nature sound and complete and perfect in every respect. To him it is permitted to enter once 136 a year and behold the sights which are forbidden to others, because in him alone of all resides the winged and heavenly yearning for those forms of good which are incorporeal and imperishable. And so, when 137 smitten by its ideal beauty he follows that archetype which creates by impress the particular virtues, beholding with ecstasy its most divine loveliness, or when he approaches some virtue which has received its impress, ignorance and the condition of the uninstructed are forgotten, and knowledge and instruction are at once remembered. And there- 138 fore he says "Wine and strong liquor ye shall not drink, thou and thy sons after thee, when ye enter into the tabernacle of testimony or approach the altar." In these words he speaks not so much by way of prohibition as stating what he thinks will happen. If a prohibition were intended, it would have been natural to say "do not drink wine when you perform the rites"; the phrase "you shall not" or "will not" drink is naturally used, when the speaker is stating what he thinks. For it is impossible that anyone, whose study and association lie among the general and specific virtues, should let indiscipline, which is the cause of drunkenness and the symptoms which follow it in the soul, have entry to him.

And he frequently calls the tabernacle "the taber- 139 nacle of testimony," either because God who cannot lie gives His testimony to virtue, a testimony to

PHILO

- προσέχειν, ἢ παρόσον ἢ ἀρετὴ βεβαιότητα ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἐντίθησι τοὺς ἐνδοιάζοντας καὶ ἐπαμφοτερίζοντας λογισμοὺς ἀνὰ κράτος ἐκτέμνουσα καὶ
- [379] ὡσπερ ἐν δικαστηρίῳ | τῷ βίῳ τάληθές ἀνα-
 140 καλύπτουσα. XXXV. λέγει δὲ ὅτι οὐδ' ἀποθανεῖται ὁ νηφάλια θύων, ὡς ἀπαιδευσίας μὲν θάνατον ἐπιφερούσης, παιδείας δὲ ἀφθαρσίαν· καθάπερ γὰρ ἐν τοῖς σώμασιν ἡμῶν νόσος μὲν διαλύσεως, ὑγεία δὲ σωτηρίας αἰτία, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἐν ταῖς ψυχαῖς τὸ μὲν σῶζόν ἐστι φρόνησις—ὑγεία γάρ τις αὕτη διανοίας—, τὸ δὲ φθεῖρον ἀφροσύνη νόσον ἀνίατον <ἐγ>κατα-
 141 σκήπτουσα.<sup>1</sup> τοῦτο δὲ “ νόμιμον αἰώνιον εἶναί ” φησιν, ἄντικρυς ἀποφαινόμενος· ὑπολαμβάνει γὰρ νόμον ἀθάνατον ἐν τῇ τοῦ παντὸς ἐσθηλιτεῦσθαι φύσει ταυτὶ περιέχοντα, ὅτι ὑγιεινὸν μὲν καὶ σωτήριον χρῆμα παιδεία, νόσου δὲ καὶ
 142 φθορᾶς αἴτιον ἀπαιδευσία. παρεμφαίνει δέ τι καὶ τοιοῦτον· τὸ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν νόμιμον εὐθύς ἐστιν αἰώνιον, ἐπεὶ καὶ ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος, ὃς δὴ νόμος ἐστίν, οὐ φθαρτός· καὶ γὰρ αὐτὸ τούναντίον <τὸ> παράνομον ἐφήμερόν τε καὶ εὐδιάλυτον ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ παρὰ 143 τοῖς εὖ φρονούσιν ἀνωμολόγηται. νόμου δὲ καὶ παιδείας ἴδιον βέβηλα ἀγίων καὶ ἀκάθαρτα καθαρῶν “ διαστέλλειν, ” ὡς ἔμπαλιν ἀνομίας καὶ ἀπαιδευσίας εἰς ταῦτὸν ἄγειν τὰ μαχόμενα βιάζεσθαι<sup>2</sup> φουρούσης τὰ πάντα καὶ συγχεούσης.

<sup>1</sup> The uncompounded verb κατασκήπτω is not found in this sense.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. wished to omit βιάζεσθαι, but the construction may be paralleled by βλάψαι βιαζόμενον § 185. Cf. also De Sobr. 6.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “ declaring (his opinion) outright.” The thought 392

ON DRUNKENNESS, 139-143

which it is excellent and profitable to give ear, or because virtue implants constancy in the souls of men, eradicating with a strong hand the reasonings which doubt and waver, and thus witness-like revealing the truth in the court of human life.

XXXV. Again, he says that he whose offerings are wineless shall not even die ; meaning that instruction entails immortality, but its absence entails death. For as in our bodies disease is the cause of dissolution, while health preserves them, so in our souls the preserving element is prudence, which is, so to speak, mental health, while the destroying element is folly inflicting incurable malady.

This, he says, is " an eternal statute," and the words mean what they say.<sup>a</sup> For he does hold that there is a deathless law engraved in the nature of the universe which lays down this truth, that instruction is a thing which gives health and safety, while its absence is the cause of disease and destruction. But there is also a further explanation in the words to this effect. A statute which is law in the true sense is thereby eternal, since right reason, which is identical with law,<sup>b</sup> is not destructible ; for that its opposite, the unlawful, is ephemeral and of itself subject to dissolution is a truth acknowledged by men of good sense.

Again, it is the special task of law and instruction to " distinguish " the profane from the sacred and the impure from the pure, just as conversely it is the way of lawlessness and indiscipline to mix and confuse everything and thus force under the same head things which are in conflict with each other.

seems to be that we may learn from the words not only that this particular law is eternal, but that all law in the true sense is necessarily (εὐθὺς) so.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 505.

PHILO

XXXVI. διὰ τοῦτο ὁ καὶ βασιλέων καὶ προφητῶν μέγιστος Σαμουὴλ “ οἶνον καὶ μέθυσμα,” ὡς ὁ ἱερός λόγος φησίν, “ ἄχρι τελευτῆς οὐ πίεται”· τέτακται γὰρ ἐν τῇ τοῦ θείου στρατοπέδου τάξει, ἣν οὐδέποτε λείπει προμηθεΐα τοῦ σοφοῦ ταξιάρχου. Σαμουὴλ δὲ γέγονε μὲν ἴσως ἄνθρωπος, παρείλη-144 πται δ’ οὐχ ὡς σύνθετον ζῶον, ἀλλ’ ὡς νοῦς λατρεία καὶ θεραπεία θεοῦ μόνῃ χαίρων· ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ τεταγμένος θεῷ διὰ τὰς πράξεις ὅσαι κατὰ κενὰς δόξας συνίστανται χαλεπὴν ἀταξίαν εἶναι νομίζειν. οὗτος μητρός γεγονεν Ἄννης, 145 ἣς τοῦνομα μεταληφθέν ἐστι χάρις· ἄνευ γὰρ θείας χάριτος ἀμήχανον ἢ λιποτακτῆσαι τὰ θνητὰ ἢ τοῖς ἀφθάρτοις αἰεὶ παραμεῖναι· χάριτος δ’ ἦτις ἂν
 146 πληρωθῆ ἡ ψυχὴ, γέγηθεν εὐθύς καὶ μειδιᾷ καὶ ἀνορχεῖται· βεβᾶκχεται γάρ, ὡς πολλοῖς τῶν ἀνοργιάστων μεθύειν καὶ παρακινεῖν<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἐξ-εστάναι ἂν δόξαι. διὸ καὶ λέγεται πρὸς αὐτὴν ὑπὸ παιδαρίου τινός, οὐχ ἐνός, ἀλλ’ ὑπὸ παντός τοῦ νεωτερίζειν καὶ τὰ καλὰ χλευάζειν ἀκμὴν ἔχοντος· “ ἕως πότε μεθυσθήσῃ; περιελοῦ | τὸν οἶνόν σου.”
 [380] φιλεῖ γὰρ τοῖς θεοφορήτοις οὐχ ἡ ψυχὴ μόνον 147 ἐγείρεσθαι καὶ ὡσπερ ἐξοιστρᾶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἐνερευθές εἶναι καὶ πεπυρωμένον τῆς ἔνδον ἀναχεούσης καὶ χλαινουσῆς χαρᾶς τὸ πάθος εἰς τὸ ἔξω διαδιδούσης· ὑφ’ οὗ πολλοὶ τῶν ἀφρόνων ἀπατηθέντες τοὺς νήφοντας μεθύειν ὑπετόπασαν.

<sup>1</sup> Wendland corrected to παροινεῖν, but see App. p. 505.

<sup>a</sup> In what sense is Samuel a king? Perhaps as the hero of the First Book of Kings and the king-maker.

<sup>b</sup> So the LXX. The words οἶνον καὶ μέθυσμα οὐ πίεται have nothing corresponding to them in the Hebrew.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 143-147

XXXVI. Therefore Samuel too, the greatest of kings<sup>a</sup> and prophets, "will never," as the scripture tells us, "drink wine or intoxicating liquor till his dying day" (1 Sam. i. 11).<sup>b</sup> For his place has been ordered in the ranks of the divine army, and through the providence of the wise commander he will never leave it. Now 144 probably there was an actual man called Samuel; but we conceive of the Samuel of the scripture, not as a living compound of soul and body, but as a mind which rejoices in the service and worship of God and that only. For his name by interpretation means "appointed or ordered to God," because he thinks that all actions that are based on idle opinions are grievous disorder. His mother is Hannah, 145 whose name means in our language "grace." For without divine grace it is impossible either to leave the ranks of mortality, or to stay for ever among the immortal. Now when grace fills the soul, that 146 soul thereby rejoices and smiles and dances, for it is possessed and inspired, so that to many of the unenlightened it may seem to be drunken, crazy and beside itself. And therefore she is addressed by a "boy,"<sup>c</sup> not meaning a single boy, but everyone whose age is ripe for restlessness and defiance and mockery of excellence, in these words: "How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee" (1 Sam. i. 14). For with the God-possessed not only 147 is the soul wont to be stirred and goaded as it were into ecstasy but the body also is flushed and fiery, warmed by the overflowing joy within which passes on the sensation to the outer man, and thus many of the foolish are deceived and suppose that the sober <sup>a</sup> So the LXX. In the Hebrew the words are spoken by Eli.

PHILO

- 148 καίτοι γε ἐκείνοι μὲν τρόπον τινὰ μεθύουσιν οἱ νήφοντες τὰ ἀγαθὰ ἀθρόα ἡκρατι-σμένοι καὶ τὰς προπόσεις παρὰ τελείας ἀρετῆς δεξάμενοι, οἱ δὲ τὴν ἀπὸ οἴνου μεθύοντες μέθην ἄγευστοι φρονήσεως διετέλεσαν νηστείαν συνεχῆ 149 καὶ λιμὸν αὐτῆς ἄγοντες. εἰκότως οὖν ἀποκρίνεται πρὸς τὸν νεωτεροποιὸν καὶ γέλωτα τίθεσθαι οἰό-μενον<sup>1</sup> τὸν σεμνὸν καὶ αὐστηρὸν αὐτῆς βίον· ὦ θαυμάσιε, “ γυνὴ ἢ σκληρὰ ἡμέρα ἐγὼ εἶμι, καὶ οἶνον καὶ μέθυσμα οὐ πέπωκα, καὶ ἐκχεῶ τὴν ψυχὴν μου ἐνώπιον κυρίου ”· παμπόλλη γε παρρησία τῆς ψυχῆς, ἢ τῶν χαρίτων τοῦ θεοῦ πε-150 πλήρωται. πρῶτον μὲν γε “ σκληρὰν ἡμέραν ” εἶπεν ἑαυτὴν πρὸς τὸ χλευάζον ἀπιδουσα παιδάριον —τούτῳ γὰρ καὶ παντὶ ἄφρονι τραχεῖα καὶ δύσβατος καὶ ἀργαλεωτάτη νενόμισται ἢ ἐπ’ ἀρετὴν ἄγουσα ὁδός, καθὰ καὶ τῶν παλαιῶν τις ἐμαρ-τύρησεν εἰπών·

τὴν μέντοι κακότητα καὶ ἰλαδὸν ἔστιν ἐλέσθαι.
 τῆς δ’ ἀρετῆς ἰδρῶτα θεὸς προπάροιθεν ἔθηκεν ἀθάνατος, μακρὸς δὲ καὶ ὄρθιος οἶμος ἐς αὐτὴν καὶ τρηχὺς τὸ πρῶτον· ἐπὴν δ’ εἰς ἄκρον ἵκηαι, ῥηιδίῃ δὴ ’πειτα πέλει χαλεπὴ περ εἴουσα—.

- 151 XXXVII. εἶτα οἶνον καὶ μέθυσμα οὐ φησι προσενέγκασθαι τῷ συνεχῶς καὶ παρὰ πάντα τὸν βίον νήφειν ἐπαυχούσα· καὶ γὰρ ὄντως ἀφέτω καὶ ἐλευθεριάζοντι καὶ καθαρῶ χρῆσθαι λογισμῶ πρὸς μηδεὸς πάθους παροινουμένῳ μέγα καὶ 152 θαυμαστὸν ἦν ἔργον. ἐκ τούτου δὲ συμβαίνει νή-

<sup>1</sup> Wendland corrects unnecessarily to τιθέμενον.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 148-152

are drunk.                    Though, indeed, it is true 148 that these sober ones are drunk in a sense, for all good things are united in the strong wine on which they feast, and they receive the loving-cup from perfect virtue ; while those others who are drunk with the drunkenness of wine have lived fasting from prudence without ceasing, and no taste of it has come to their famine-stricken lips. Fitly, then, does she answer 149 the reckless one who thinks to mock her stern and austere life, Sirrah, " I a woman am the hard day,<sup>a</sup> I have drunk no wine or strong drink, and I will pour out my soul before the Lord " (1 Sam. i. 15).
 How vast is the boldness of the soul which is filled with the gracious gifts of God ! First, we see, she 150 calls herself a " hard day," taking the view of the varlet who thought to make a mock of her, for to him and to every fool the way to virtue seems rough and painful and ill to tread, and to this one of the old writers has testified in these words :

Vice you may take by squadrons ; but there lies 'Twixt you and virtue (so hath God ordained) Sore travail. Long and steep the road to her,
 And rough at first ; but—reach the top—and she,
 So hard to win, is now an easy prize.<sup>b</sup>

XXXVII. Secondly, she declares that she 151 has not partaken of wine or strong liquor, glorying that her whole life has been one of unbroken abstinence. And rightly, for indeed it was a great and wonderful feat to follow reason, the free, the unshackled, the pure, which no passion inebriates. And 152

<sup>a</sup> Or, as Philo may have understood the words, " hard and easy," taking ἡμέρα from ἡμερος, see App. p. 505. The E.V. has " of a sorrowful spirit."

<sup>b</sup> Hesiod, Works and Days, 287, 289-292.

PHILO

- ψεως ἀκράτου τὸν νοῦν ἐμφορηθέντα σπονδὴν ὄλον δι' ὄλων γίνεσθαι τε καὶ σπένδεσθαι θεῶ· τί γὰρ ἦν τὸ “ ἐκχεῶ<sup>1</sup> τὴν ψυχὴν μου ἐναντίον κυρίου ” ἢ σύμπασαν αὐτὴν ἀνιερῶσω, δεσμὰ μὲν οἷς πρότερον ἐσφίγγετο, ἃ περιήψαν αἱ τοῦ θνητοῦ βίου κεναὶ σπουδαί, πάντα λύσας, προαγαγὼν δὲ ἔξω καὶ τείνας καὶ ἀναχέας τοσοῦτον, ὡς καὶ τῶν τοῦ παντὸς ἄψασθαι περάτων καὶ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ἀγενήτου παγκάλην καὶ αἰοίδιμον θέαν ἐπειχθῆναι;
- 153 [381] Νηφόντων μὲν οὖν ὁ | χορὸς οὗτος παιδείαν προστησαμένων ἡγεμονίδα, μεθύοντων δ' ὁ πρότερος, 154 οὐπερ ἦν ἔξαρχος ἀπαιδευσία. XXXVIII. ἐπεὶ δὲ τὸ μεθύειν οὐ μόνον ἐδήλου τὸ ληρεῖν, ὁ δημιουργὸν ἀπαιδευσίαν εἶχεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ παντελῶς ἀναισθητεῖν, ἀναισθησίας δὲ τῆς μὲν κατὰ τὸ σῶμα δημιουργὸς οἶνος, τῆς δὲ κατὰ ψυχὴν ἄγνοια τούτων ὧν εἰκὸς ἦν ἐπιστήμην ἀνεληφέναι, λεκτέον καὶ περὶ ἀγνοίας βραχέα αὐτὰ τὰ καίρια 155 ὑπομιμνήσκοντας. τίνοι οὖν ἀπεικάζωμεν τῶν ἐν τῷ σώματι τὸ ἐν ψυχῇ πάθος ὃ κέκληται ἄγνοια ἢ τῇ τῶν αἰσθητηρίων πηρώσει; οὐκοῦν ὅσοι ὀφθαλμοὺς καὶ ὠτα ἐβλάβησαν, οὐδὲν ἔτι <οὔτ' > ἰδεῖν οὔτ' ἀκοῦσαι δύνανται, ἡμέραν μὲν καὶ φῶς, ὧν ἔνεκα μόνων, εἰ χρή τάλθηθές εἰπεῖν, τὸ ζῆν αἰρετόν, οὐκ εἰδότες, μακρῶ δὲ σκότῳ καὶ νυκτὶ αἰωνίῳ συνοικοῦντες, πρὸς πάντα καὶ μικρὰ καὶ μείζω κεκωφημένοι, οὗς εἰκότως ὁ βίος ἀδυνάτους 156 εἴωθε καλεῖν· κἄν γὰρ αἱ τοῦ ἄλλου σώματος ἀπασαι δυνάμεις ἐπ' αὐτὸ δὴ τὸ πέρασ ἰσχύος

<sup>1</sup> The LXX has ἐκχεῶ. But that Philo read the future is shewn by ἀνιερῶσω.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 152-156

the result of this is that the mind, which has drunk deep of abstinence unmixed, becomes a libation in its whole being, a libation which is poured out to God. What else was meant by the words, " I will pour out my soul before the Lord " but " I will consecrate it all to him, I will loosen all the chains that bound it tight, which the empty aims and desires of mortal life had fastened upon it ; I will send it abroad, extend and diffuse it, so that it shall touch the bounds of the All, and hasten to that most glorious and loveliest of visions—the Vision of the Uncreated " ?

This, then, is the company of the sober who have 153 set before them instruction as their head, while the former was the company of the drunken, whose leader was indiscipline. XXXVIII. But drunken- 154 ness, we saw, does not only signify folly, which is the work of this rejection of discipline, but it also signifies complete insensibility. In the body this is produced by wine, but in the soul by ignorance of things of which we should naturally have acquired knowledge. Consequently on the subject of ignorance I must say a few words, only just what is needful, by way of reminder. Now what we call ignorance is an affection of the soul. To what affec- 155 tion of the body can we liken it, but to the incapacitation of the sense-organs ? All who have lost the use of eyes and ears can no longer see or hear and have no knowledge of day and light, which alone in truth make life desirable, but are surrounded by enduring darkness and everlasting night, thus rendered helpless in regard to every issue great or small. These persons are in common life generally and with good reason called "incapable." For even if all the 156 faculties of the rest of the body should attain the ἔλθωσι καὶ ῥώμης, ὑποσκελισθεῖσαι πρὸς ὀφθαλμῶν καὶ ὧτων πηρώσεως μέγα πτώμα πίπτουσιν, ὡς μηκέτ' ἀναστῆναι δύνασθαι· τὰ γὰρ ὑπερείδοντα καὶ στηρίζοντα ἄνθρωπον λόγῳ μὲν αἱ βάσεις εἰσὶν, ἔργῳ δὲ ἀκοαί τε καὶ ὄψεις, ἃς ἔχων μὲν τις ὀλοκλήρους ἐγγήγερται καὶ ἀνωρθίασται, στερόμενος δὲ αὐτῶν κλίνεται καὶ εἰσάπαν καθαιρεῖται.

PHILO

- 157 τὸ παραπλήσιον οὖν ἐν ψυχῇ πάντως<sup>1</sup> ἄγνοια ἐργάζεται τὰ βλέποντα καὶ ἀκούοντα αὐτῆς λυμαινομένη καὶ μήτε φῶς μήτε λόγον παρεισελθεῖν ἐῷσα, τὸν μὲν, ἵνα μὴ διδάξῃ, τὸ δέ, ἵνα μὴ δείξῃ τὰ ὄντα, βαθὺ δὲ σκότος καὶ πολλὴν ἀλογίαν καταχέασα κωφὴν λίθον τὸ περικαλλέστατον εἶδος 158 ψυχῆς εἰργάσατο. XXXIX. καὶ γὰρ τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ τὸ ἐναντίον, ἢ ἐπιστήμη, τρόπον τινα ψυχῆς καὶ ὀφθαλμοὶ καὶ ὠτά ἐστι· καὶ γὰρ τοῖς λεγομένοις προσέχει τὸν νοῦν καὶ καταθεᾶται τὰ ὄντα καὶ οὐδὲν οὔτε παρορᾶν οὔτε παρακούειν ὑπομένει, πάντα δ' ὅσα ἀκοῆς καὶ θέας ἄξια περισκοπεῖ καὶ περιβλέπεται, κἂν εἰ πεζεύειν καὶ πλεῖν δεῖ, γῆς καὶ θαλάττης ἄχρι τῶν περάτων ἀφικνεῖται, ἵνα 159 ἴδῃ τι πλεον ἢ ἀκούσῃ καινότερον. ἀκονότατον γὰρ ὁ ἐπιστήμης ἔρως, ἐχθρὸς μὲν ὕπνου, φίλος δὲ ἐργηγόρσεως· διανιστὰς οὖν καὶ ἀνεγεύρων καὶ παραθήγων αἰεὶ διάνοιαν πανταχόσε περιφοιτᾶν ἀναγκάζει λίχνον ἀκοῆς ἐργαζόμενος καὶ μαθήσεως 160 δῶψαν ἄληκτον ἐντήκων. οὐκοῦν ἐπιστήμη μὲν τὸ βλέπειν καὶ ἀκούειν περιποιεῖ, δι' ὧν αἱ κατορθώσεις· ὁ γὰρ ἰδὼν καὶ ἀκούσας, γνοὺς
382] | τὸ συμφέρον, τὸ μὲν ἐλόμενος, τὸ δὲ ἐναντίον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πάνθ' ὅσα.

<sup>a</sup> Or "word . . . wordlessness." See App. p. 505.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 156-160

utmost limit of strength and capacity, yet if they are handicapped by the crippling of eyes and ears they fall, and great is that fall, making any reinstatement impossible. For, though we speak of the feet as the support which upholds the man, in reality that is done by the faculties of sight and hearing : possessed of these in their fullness, the man stands uprisen and erect ; deprived of them, he gives way and is utterly prostrated. An exactly similar result in 157 the soul is produced by ignorance, which destroys its powers of seeing and hearing, and suffers neither light, which might shew it realities, nor reason,<sup>a</sup> which might be its teacher, to find their way in ; but sheds about it profound darkness and a flood of unreason,<sup>a</sup> and turns the soul's fair and lovely form into a senseless block of stone. XXXIX. Similarly know- 158 ledge, the opposite of ignorance, may be called the eyes and the ears of the soul. For it fixes the attention on what is said and contemplates what is, and allows no mis-seeing or mis-hearing,<sup>b</sup> but surveys and observes all that is worthy to be heard and seen. And if it be necessary to travel or take ship, it makes its way to the ends of the earth or ocean, to see something more or hear something new. For nothing 159 is so active as the passion for knowledge ; it hates sleep and loves wakefulness. So it ever arouses and excites and sharpens the intellect, and compelling it to range in every direction makes it greedy to hear, and instils an incessant thirst for learning. Knowledge, then, provides <sup>c</sup> that sight or hearing, to 160 which we owe each case of right conduct. For he who sees and hears in the moral sense, knows what is good for him, and by choosing this and rejecting

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 505.

<sup>c</sup> Or "preserves."

PHILO

- ἀποστραφεῖς ὠφέληται. ἄγνοια δὲ χαλεπωτέραν τῆς ἐν τῷ σώματι πῆρῳσι ἐπιφέρουσα τῇ ψυχῇ πάντων ἁμαρτημάτων αἰτία γίνεται, μηδὲν μὴτ' ἐκ τοῦ προϋδέσθαι μὴτ' ἐκ τοῦ προακοῦσαι δυναμένη λαβεῖν ἕξωθεν βοήθημα· διὰ γοῦν τὴν πολλὴν ἐρημίαν ἑαυτῆς ἀφρούρητος καὶ ἀφύλακτος ἑαθείσα [καὶ] πρὸς τῶν ἐπιτυχόντων ἀνθρώπων τε ὁμοῦ
- 161 καὶ πραγμάτων ἐπιβουλεύεται. μηδέποτ' οὖν μὴτ' ἄκρατον προσενεγκώμεθα τοσοῦτον, ὡς ἀπραξίαν ἐμποιῆσαι ταῖς αἰσθήσεσι, μήτε τοσοῦτον ἐπιστήμης ἀλλοτριωθῶμεν, ὡς ἄγνοιαν, τὸ μέγα καὶ βαθὺ σκότος, τῆς ἑαυτῶν ψυχῆς κατασκεδάσαι.
- 162 XL. Διττὸν δὲ τὸ ἀγνοίας γένος, τὸ μὲν ἀπλοῦν, ἢ παντελῆς ἀναισθησία, τὸ δὲ διπλοῦν, ὅταν μὴ μόνον ἀνεπιστημοσύνη τις συνέχεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἴηται εἰδέναί ἃ μηδαμῶς οἶδε δόξῃ ψευδεὶ σοφίας
- 163 ἐπαιρόμενος. τὸ μὲν οὖν πρότερον κακὸν ἔλαττον—κουφοτέρων γὰρ ἁμαρτημάτων καὶ τάχα ἀκουσίων αἰτιῶν—, τὸ δὲ δεύτερον μείζον· μεγάλα γὰρ ἀποτίκτει καὶ οὐκ ἀκούσια μόνον ἀλλ' ἤδη κακ
- 164 προνοίας ἀδικήματα. περὶ ταῦτά μοι δοκεῖ Λὼτ ὁ θυγατροποιὸς μάλιστα κηραίνειν ἄρρεν καὶ τέλειον ἐν ψυχῇ φυτὸν ἀναθρέψαι μὴ δυνάμενος· δύο γὰρ θυγατέρας ἐκ τῆς λιθουμένης γυναικὸς ἔσχηκεν, ἣν εὐθυβόλῳ χρησάμενος ὀνόματι καλέσειεν ἂν τις συνήθειαν, ἐχθρὰν φύσιν ἀληθείας, καὶ ὅποτε ἄγοι τις αὐτήν, ὑστερίζουσαν καὶ περιβλεπομένην τὰ ἀρχαῖα καὶ σύντροφα καὶ ἀψύχου τρόπον στήλης ἐν μέσοις αὐτοῖς κατα-
- 165 μένουσαν. τῶν δὲ θυγατέρων ἢ μὲν πρεσβυτέρα κεκλήσεται βουλή, συναίνεσις δὲ ἢ

its opposite, finds himself benefited. But ignorance entails a more severe disablement to the soul than the disablement of the body, and thus is the cause of all its wrongdoing, since it cannot draw help from outside itself through the warnings which seeing and hearing might give it. Thus, standing utterly alone, and left unguarded and unprotected, it is a butt for the haphazard hostility of men and circumstances alike. Let us, then, never drink so deep of strong 161 liquor as to reduce our senses to inactivity, nor become so estranged from knowledge as to spread the vast and profound darkness of ignorance over our soul.

XL. Now ignorance as a whole is of two different 162 kinds ; one single, that is complete insensibility, the other twofold, that is when a man is not merely the victim of a want of knowledge, but also, encouraged by a false idea of his own wisdom, thinks he knows what he does not know at all. The former is the 163 lesser evil, for it is the cause of less serious and perhaps involuntary errors, and the second is the greater, for it is the parent of great iniquities, not only those which are involuntary, but such as are actually premeditated.

It was this especially which 164 brought trouble to Lot—Lot who was the parent of daughters only and could rear no male or perfect growth within his soul. Two daughters he had and their mother was she who was turned into stone, whom we might call “ custom,” if we gave her her right name ; her nature is hostile to truth, and if we take her with us, she lags behind and gazes round at the old familiar objects and remains among them like a lifeless monument.

The elder of these 165 daughters will bear the name of Deliberation, and

PHILO

νεωτέρα· τῷ μὲν γὰρ βουλευσασθαι τὸ συναινεῖν ἔπεται, συναινέσας δ' οὐδὲ εἰς ἔτι βουλεύεται.
 καθίσας οὖν ὁ νοῦς ἐν τῷ ἑαυτοῦ συνεδρίῳ διακινεῖν ἄρχεται τὰς θυγατέρας καὶ μετὰ μὲν τῆς πρεσβυτέρας, βουλήs, σκοπεῖσθαι τε καὶ διερευνᾶν ἕκαστα, μετὰ δὲ τῆς νεωτέρας, συναινέσεως, ἐπινεύειν ῥαδίως τοῖς ἐπιτυχοῦσι καὶ ὡς φίλα τὰ ἐχθρὰ ἀσπάζεσθαι, δέλεαρ εἶ τι μικρὸν ἡδονῆs 166 αὐτὸ μόνον ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν ἐνδιδῶη. ταῦτα δὲ νήφων μὲν λογισμὸς οὐκ ἀνέχεται, μέθη δὲ κατεσχημένος καὶ ὡσπερ ἕξοιμος ὢν· ΧLII. διὸ λέγεται· “ἐπότισαν τὸν πατέρα οἶνον.” ἀναισθησία παντελής, ἱκανὸν δοκεῖν εἶναι βουλεύεσθαι τὸν νοῦν ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ τὰ συμφέροντα ἢ τοῖς ὁπωσοῦν φανείσιν, ὡς τὸ ἀληθὲς πάγιον ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἔχουσι, συναινέσαι, τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως μηδαμῆ μη-δαμῶς ἱκανῆs οὕσης ἢ ἐκ περισκέψεως τὸ σαφὲς εὔρειν ἢ τὰ μὲν ὡς ἀληθῆ καὶ συμφέροντα ἐλέσθαι, [383] τὰ δ' ὡs<sup>1</sup> ψευδῆ καὶ βλάβης αἷτια | ἀποστραφῆναι.
 167 πολὺ γὰρ σκότος τῶν ὄντων καὶ σωμάτων καὶ πραγμάτων κατακεχυμένον οὐκ ἐᾷ τὴν ἐκάστου φύσιν ἰδεῖν, ἀλλὰ κἂν βιασάμενός τις ὑπὸ περιεργίας ἢ τοῦ φιλομαθοῦs ἐθελήsη διακῦψαι, καθάπερ οἱ πεπηρωμένοι προσπταίων τοῖς ἐν ποσί, πρὶν τι λαβεῖν, ἀναπεσῶν ὑστερίζει ἢ ταῖς χερσὶν ἐφαπτόμενος τὰ ἄδηλα εἰκάζει στοχασμὸν πρὸ ἀληθείας 168 κτώμενος. οὐδὲ γὰρ εἰ δαδουχοῦσα παιδεία παρα-πέμποι τὸν νοῦν φῶs ἀψαμένη τὸ οἰκεῖον ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ὄντων θέαν, ὀνήsαι δύναιτ' ἂν μᾶλλον ἢ βλάψαι· τὸ γὰρ βραχὺ φέγγος ὑπὸ πολλοῦ σκότους

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἢ ὡs.

<sup>a</sup> Or “to examine.”

ON DRUNKENNESS, 165-168

the younger of Assent. For assent follows deliberation, and no one who has given his assent continues to deliberate. The mind then taking his seat in his council begins to make his daughters busy.<sup>a</sup> With the elder, Deliberation, he proceeds to discuss and examine every point ; with the younger, Assent, he readily agrees to every suggestion, giving a friendly welcome to any however hostile, if what they have to give offers any enticement of pleasure however small. In its sober condition the mind does not tolerate this, 166 only when it has succumbed to intoxication and is as though overcome by wine. XLI. And so we read, "They gave their father wine to drink" (Gen. xix. 33).

Now this is complete insensibility, that the mind should think itself competent to deliberate by itself on what is to its interests, or to assent to presentations of any kind as though they were a vehicle of solid truth, for human nature is ever quite unable, either by circumspection to discover certainty, or to choose some things as true and profitable, and to reject others as false and injurious. For the vastness of the darkness which overspreads 167 the world of bodies and affairs forbids us to see the nature of each ; and though curiosity or love of learning may give us the wish to force our way and peer through the curtain, we shall like blind men stumble over the obstacles before us, lose our footing and miss our object, or if our hands do lay hold of it, we are but guessing at uncertainties and it is not truth but conjecture that is in our grasp. For even 168 if instruction, torch in hand, should go before the mind, shedding her own particular light to give it sight of realities, it would do more harm than good. For its little beam is bound to be extinguished by

PHILO

- σβέννυσθαι πέφυκε, σβεσθέντος δὲ ἀνωφελῆς πᾶσα 169 ὄψις. τὸν μέντοι σεμννόμενον ἢ ἐπὶ τῷ βουλευέσθαι ἢ ἐπὶ τῷ τὰ μὲν αἰρεῖσθαι τὰ δὲ φεύγειν ἰκανῶς δύνασθαι διὰ τούτων ὑπομνηστέον· εἰ μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν αὐτῶν τὰς αὐτὰς αἰεὶ συνέβαινε προσπίπτειν ἀπαρλλάκτους φαντασίας, ἣν ἴσως ἀναγκαῖον τά τε ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς φύσει κατασκευασθέντα διττὰ κριτήρια, αἴσθησίην τε καὶ νοῦν, ὡς ἀψευδῆ καὶ ἀδέκαστα θαυμάζειν καὶ περὶ μηδενὸς ἐνδοιάζοντας ἐπέχειν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἅπαξ φανέισι πιστεύοντας τὰ μὲν αἰρεῖσθαι, τὰ δὲ ἔμπαλιν 170 ἀποστρέφεισθαι. ἐπειδὴ δὲ διαφόρως ἀπ' αὐτῶν εὑρισκόμεθα κινούμενοι, βέβαιον περὶ οὐδενὸς οὐδὲν ἂν ἔχοιμεν εἰπεῖν, ἅτε μὴ ἐστῶτος τοῦ φανέντος, ἀλλὰ πολυτρόποις καὶ πολυμόρφοις χρωμένου ταῖς μεταβολαῖς. XLII. ἀνάγκη γὰρ ἀνιδρύτου τῆς φαντασίας οὔσης ἀνίδρυτον εἶναι καὶ τὴν ἐπ' αὐτῇ κρίσιν.
- 171 Αἴτια δὲ τούτου πολλά· πρῶτον μὲν αἰ ἐν τοῖς ζώοις οὐ καθ' ἓν μέρος ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν περὶ πάντα ἀμύθητοι διαφοραί, αἰ περὶ τὴν γένεσιν καὶ κατα-σκευὴν αὐτῶν, αἰ περὶ τὰς τροφὰς καὶ διαίτας, αἰ περὶ τὰς αἰρέσεις καὶ φυγὰς, αἰ περὶ τὰς αἰσθητικὰς ἐνεργείας τε καὶ κινήσεις, αἰ περὶ τὰς τῶν κατὰ σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν ἀμυθήτων παθῶν ιδιότητας.
- 172 χωρὶς γὰρ τῶν κρινόντων ἴδε καὶ τῶν κρινομένων ἔνια, οἷα τὸν χαμαιλέοντα, τὸν πολυ-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 505.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 506.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 168-172

the vast darkness, and when it is extinguished all power of sight is useless. He who prides 169 himself on his judgement in deliberation, or flatters himself that he is competent to choose this and shun that, should be brought to a recollection of the truth by the following thoughts. If it were always the case that the same objects produced the same impressions on the mind without any variation, it would perhaps be necessary that the two instruments of judgement which nature has established in us, sense and mind, should be held in high esteem as veracious and incorruptible, and that we should not suspend our judgement on any point through doubt but accept a single presentation of two different objects, and on the faith of this choose one and reject the other. But 170 since we prove to be differently affected by them at different times, we can say nothing with certainty about anything, because the picture presented to us is not constant, but subject to changes manifold and multiform. XLII. Since the mental picture is variable, the judgement we form of it must be variable also. There are many reasons for this.<sup>a</sup>

In the first place<sup>b</sup> there are the innumerable differences 171 in living creatures, differences concerned not with a single aspect, but practically with all; differences in birth, in structure and equipment; differences in food and mode of life; differences in predilections and aversions; differences in their sense-activities and sense-movements; differences in the peculiarities which arise from the innumerable ways in which body and soul are affected. For 172 leaving out of sight for the moment those who form judgements,<sup>b</sup> consider examples<sup>b</sup> among the objects of such judgements. Take for instance the chameleon

PHILO

- ποδα· τὸν μὲν γέ φασι τὴν χροάν ἀλλάττοντα τοῖς ἐδάφεσιν ὁμοιοῦσθαι καθ' ὧν εἴωθεν ἔρπειν, τὸν δὲ ταῖς κατὰ θαλάττης πέτραις, ὧν ἂν περιδράξῃται, τάχα που τῆς σωτηρίου φύσεως ἀλεξίκακον συλλήψεως δωρησαμένης τὴν εἰς τὸ πολυχρώματον
- 173 αὐτοῖς τροπὴν φάρμακον. τὸν δε αὐχένα τῆς περιστερᾶς ἐν ἡλιακαῖς αὐγαῖς οὐ κατενόησας μυρίας χρωμάτων ἀλλάττοντα ιδέας; ἢ οὐχι φοινικοῦν καὶ κυανοῦν, πυρωπὸν τε αὐ καὶ ἀνθρακοειδές, ἔτι δὲ ὠχρὸν καὶ ἐρυθρὸν καὶ ἄλλα παντοδαπὰ ἴσχει χρώματα, ὧν οὐδὲ τὰς κλήσεις
- 174 ῥᾶδιον ἀπομνημονεῦσαι; φασι μέντοι καὶ ἐν Σκύ-
[384] θαις τοῖς | καλουμένοις Γελώοις θαυμασιώτατόν τι γίνεσθαι σπανίως μὲν, γίνεσθαι δ' ὅμως θηρίον, ὃ καλεῖται τάρανδρος, μέγεθος μὲν βοῶς οὐκ ἀποδέον, ἐλάφῳ δὲ τὸν τοῦ προσώπου τύπον ἐμφερέστατον· λόγος ἔχει τοῦτο μεταβάλλειν αἰετὰς τρίχας πρὸς τε τὰ χωρία καὶ τὰ δένδρα καὶ πάνθ' ἀπλῶς οἷς ἂν ἐγγὺς ἰσθῆται, ὡς διὰ τὴν τῆς χροᾶς ὁμοιότητα λανθάνειν τοὺς ἐντυγχάνοντας καὶ ταύτη μᾶλλον ἢ τῇ
- 175 περὶ σῶμα ἀλκῇ δυσθήρατον εἶναι. ταῦτα δὴ καὶ τὰ τούτοις ὅμοια πίστεις ἐναργεῖς ἀκαταληψίας εἰσίν.

XLIII. Ἐπειτα δὲ αἱ μηκέτι τῶν ζώων ἀπάντων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀνθρώπων ἰδίᾳ πρὸς ἀλλήλους

176 περὶ πάντα ποικιλίαι. οὐ γὰρ μόνον ἄλλοτε ἄλλως τὰ αὐτὰ κρίνουσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἑτέρως ἕτεροι, ἡδονὰς τε καὶ ἀηδίας ἔμπαλιν τῶν αὐτῶν λαμβάνοντες· οἷς γὰρ δυσηρέστησαν ἔνιοι, ἐτέρφθησαν ἄλλοι, καὶ κατὰ τούναντίον ἅπερ ὡς φίλα καὶ οἰκεῖα ἐπισπασάμενοί<sup>1</sup> τινες ἐδεξιώσαντο, ταῦθ' ἕτεροι ὡς

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Adler, ἀσπασάμενοι. See App. p. 507.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 506.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 507.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 172-176

and the polypus. The former, we are told, changes its colour and grows like the kinds of soil over which it is its habit to crawl; the latter grows like the rocks to which it clings in the sea, and we may fairly suppose that this power of changing to various colours is given them by protecting nature as a remedy against the danger of capture. Again, have we not 173 seen the dove's neck<sup>a</sup> change in the sun's rays into a thousand different hues, sometimes scarlet and dark blue, or fiery or like red-hot coal, again yellow and then ruddy, and all other kinds of colour, so numerous that it would be difficult to give even their names in full? Indeed it is said that in the land of the 174 Scythians who are known as the Geloans a most extraordinary animal is actually, though no doubt rarely, found called the elk, in size equal to an ox, but with a face shaped very like a deer. The account given of this creature is that it always changes the colour of its hair into that of the places, trees, or any imaginable thing near which it stands, and owing to this similarity of colour, we are told, it is not observed by passers-by, and this fact rather than its bodily strength makes it difficult to catch. These and similar phenomena are clear proofs of the 175 impossibility of apprehension.<sup>a</sup>

XLIII. Secondly,<sup>b</sup> there are the diversities on all subjects which, to pass from animals in general, we find also in men in particular. Not only do their judge- 176 ments<sup>b</sup> on the same objects vary at different times, but different persons receive different impressions of pleasure or its reverse from the same things. For what is disliked by some is enjoyed by others, and contrariwise what some receive with open arms as acceptable and agreeable to their nature is utterly

PHILO

- ἀλλότρια καὶ δυσμενῆ μακρὰν ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν ἐσκο-177 ράκισαν. ἤδη γοῦν ἐν θεάτρῳ πολλάκις παρατυχῶν εἶδον ὑφ' ἐνὸς μέλους τῶν ἀγωνιζομένων ἐπὶ τῆς σκηνῆς τραγωδῶν ἢ κιθαρωδῶν τοὺς μὲν οὕτως ἀχθέντας, ὡς ἀνεγειρομένους καὶ συνηχοῦντας ἀκοντας τὰ πρὸς ἔπαινον ἐκφωνεῖν, τοὺς δὲ οὕτως ἀτρώ-τως ἔχοντας, ὡς μηδὲν τῶν ἀψύχων βάθρων ἐφ' οἷς καθέζονται ταύτῃ γοῦν διαφέρειν ἂν νομισθῆναι, ἐνίους δ' οὕτως ἀλλοτριωθέντας, ὡς καὶ τὴν θέαν οἴχεσθαι καταλιπόντας, ἔτι καὶ προσαποκλειομένους<sup>1</sup> ἑκατέρᾳ τῶν χειρῶν τὰ ὦτα, μὴ ἄρα τι ἔναυλον ἀπολειφθὲν ἀηδίαν ὑπηχοῦν δυσκόλοις καὶ δυσαρέστοις ψυχαῖς ἐργάσεται.
- 178 Καίτοι τί ταῦτά φαμεν; αὐτός τις εἰς ὧν ἕκαστος ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ, τὸ παραδοξότατον, μυρίας μεταβολὰς καὶ τροπὰς δεχόμενος κατὰ τε σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν τοτὲ μὲν αἰρεῖται, τοτὲ δ' ἀποστρέφεται οὐδαμῶς μεταβάλλοντα, μένειν δ' ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς πεφυκότα
- 179 κατασκευῆς· οὐ γὰρ τὰ αὐτὰ ὑγιαίνουσι καὶ νοσοῦσι προσπίπτειν φιλεῖ, οὐδὲ ἐγρηγοροῦσι καὶ κοιμω-μένοις, οὐδὲ ἠβῶσι καὶ γεγηρακόσι· καὶ ἐστὼς μέντοι καὶ κινούμενός τις ἑτέρας ἔλαβε φαν-τασίας, καὶ θαρρῶν καὶ δεδιώς ἔμπαλιν, ἔτι μέντοι λυπούμενός τε καὶ χαίρων, καὶ φιλῶν καὶ
- 180 τοῦναντίον μισῶν. καὶ τί δεῖ μακρηγοροῦντα περὶ τούτων ἐνοχλεῖν; συνελόντι γὰρ φράσαι πᾶσα ἢ σώματος καὶ ψυχῆς κατὰ φύσιν τε αὐ καὶ παρὰ |
 [385] φύσιν κίνησις αἰτία τῆς περὶ τὰ φαινόμενα ἀστάτου

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προσαποσειομένους, which Wendland defends on the strange ground that "shaking off their ears" may describe the action of men trying to brush away the sound of the music out of their ears. Cohn preferred ἀποσαττομένους, which would give the same sense as ἀποκλειομένους (Mangey).

ON DRUNKENNESS, 177-180

scouted by others as alien and repugnant. For 177 example, I have often when I chanced to be in the theatre noticed the effect produced by some single tune sung by the actors on the stage or played by the musicians. Some of the audience are so moved, that in their excitement they cannot help raising their voices in a chorus of acclamation.<sup>a</sup> Others are so unstirred that, as far as this is concerned, you might suppose them on a level of feeling with the senseless benches on which they sit. Others, again, are so repelled that they are off and away from the performance, and indeed, as they go, block their ears with both hands for fear that some echo of the music should remain to haunt them and produce a sense of discomfort to irritate and pain their souls.

<sup>b</sup> But it is needless to quote such cases as these. 178
Every single individual in his own person is subject, extraordinary though it be, to numberless changes and variations in body and soul, and chooses at one time and rejects at another things which do not change, but retain the natural constitution which they have had throughout. The same feelings are 179 not experienced in health as in sickness, in wakefulness as in sleep, in youth as in age. And people receive different mental impressions according as they are standing or moving, confident or affrighted, sad or joyful, loving or hating. And why tediously 180 pursue the subject? For to put it shortly, our bodies and souls are in a state of motion, natural or unnatural, which considered as a whole produces that ceaseless change in the mental pictures pre-

<sup>a</sup> Or (not so probably) ἀνεγειρομένους "starting from their seats," συνηχοῦντας "taking up the tune."

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 507.

PHILO

φορᾶς γίνεται μαχόμενα καὶ ἀσύμφωνα προσβαλλούσης ὀνειράτα.

- 181 XLIV. Γίνεται δ' οὐχ ἥκιστα τὸ περὶ τὰς φαντασίας ἄστατον καὶ παρὰ τὰς θέσεις καὶ παρὰ τὰ διαστήματα καὶ παρὰ τοὺς τόπους, οἷς ἕκαστα
- 182 ἐμπεριέχεται. ἢ τοὺς κατὰ θαλάττης ἰχθύς οὐχ ὀρώμεν, ὅποτε τὰς πτέρυγας διατείνοντες ἐννήχονται, μείζους αἰετῆς φύσεως προφαινομένους; καὶ τὰς εἰρεσίας μέντοι, κἂν σφόδρα ὤσιν εὐθυτενεῖς, κεκλασμένας ὀρᾶσθαι συμβαίνει καθ' ὕδατος.
- 183 τὰ γε μὴν πορρωτάτω ψευδεῖς προσβάλλοντα φαντασίας τὸν νοῦν εἴωθεν ἀπατᾶν· ἄψυχα γὰρ ἔστιν ὅτε ὄντα ὑπετοπήθη ζῶα εἶναι καὶ τούναντίον τὰ ἔμψυχα ἄψυχα, ἔτι δὲ τὰ ἐστῶτα κινεῖσθαι καὶ τὰ κινούμενα ἐστάναι καὶ τὰ μὲν προσιόντα ἐξαναχωρεῖν, τὰ δὲ ἀπίοντα πάλιν προσέρχεσθαι, καὶ βραχύτατα μὲν τὰ περιμηκέστατα, περιφερῆ δ' αὖ τὰ πολυγώνια. καὶ μυρία ἄλλα ὑπὸ τῆς φανεράς ὄψεως ψευδογραφεῖται, οἷς οὐκ ἂν τις εὐφρονῶν ὡς βεβαίως συνεπιγράψαιτο.
- 184 XLV. Τί δ' αἰ ἐν τοῖς σκευαζομένοις ποσότητες; παρὰ γὰρ τὸ πλεόν ἢ ἔλαττον αἶ τε βλάβαι καὶ ὠφέλειαι συνίστανται, καθάπερ ἐπὶ μυρίων ἄλλων καὶ μάλιστα τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἰατρικὴν ἐπιστήμην
- 185 ἔχει φαρμάκων· ἢ γὰρ ἐν ταῖς συνθέσεσι ποσότης ὅροις καὶ κανόσι μεμέτρηται, ὧν οὔτε ἐντὸς κάμψαι οὔτε περαιτέρω προελθεῖν ἀσφαλές—τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἔλαττον χαλᾶ, τὸ δὲ πλεόν ἐπιτείνει τὰς δυνάμεις· βλαβερόν δ' ἐκάτερον, τὸ μὲν ἀδυνατοῦν ἐνεργῆσαι δι' ἀσθένειαν, τὸ δὲ βλάψαι βιαζόμενον διὰ καρ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παρὰ.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 180-185

sented to us which makes us the victim of conflicting<sup>a</sup> and incongruous dreams.

XLIV. <sup>b</sup>But the inconstancy of impressions is particularly caused by the positions and surroundings of the several objects and their distances from the observer. We see that fishes in the sea, when they swim with their fins stretched, always look larger than nature has made them, and oars, however straight they are, appear bent below the water. Still more—the mind is often misled by distant objects which create false impressions. Sometimes we suppose lifeless objects to be living objects or the converse. And we have similar illusions about things stationary and moving, advancing and receding, short and long, circular and multilateral. And numberless other distortions of the truth are produced even when sight is unimpeded, which no sane person would accept as trustworthy.

XLV. <sup>b</sup>What again of quantities in prepared mixtures? Their powers of benefiting or injuring depend on the relative quantity of the various ingredients, as we see in numberless cases and particularly in the drugs used by medical science. For quantity in compounds is measured by regular standards, and we cannot with safety stop short of or go beyond what they prescribe; for anything smaller or greater than this respectively overweakens or overstrains the force of the preparation. In both cases harm is done. In the former case the medicine is incapable through its weakness of producing any effect, while in the latter its high degree of potency makes it a force of active mischief. And again accord-

<sup>a</sup> Or "which act upon us like conflicting," etc.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 507.

PHILO

τερωτάτην ἰσχύν—, λειότησί τε αὖ καὶ τραχύτησι, πυκνότησί τε αὖ καὶ πιλήσεισι καὶ τοῦναντίον μανότησι καὶ ἔξαπλώσεισι τὸν εἰς βοήθειαν καὶ βλάβην ἔλεγχον ἐναργῶς διασυνίστησιν.

- 186 Ἄλλὰ μὴν οὐδὲ ἐκεῖνό τις ἀγνοεῖ, ὅτι τῶν ὄντων σχεδὸν ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ καθ' αὐτὸ νενόηται τὸ παράπαν οὐδέν, τῇ δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἐναντίον παραθέσει δοκιμάζεται, οἷον τὸ μικρὸν παρὰ τὸ μέγα, τὸ ξηρὸν παρὰ τὸ ὑγρὸν, παρὰ τὸ ψυχρὸν τὸ θερμόν, παρὰ τὸ βαρὺ τὸ κοῦφον, τὸ μέλαν παρὰ τὸ λευκόν, τὸ ἀσθενὲς παρὰ τὸ ἰσχυρόν, τὰ ὀλίγα παρὰ τὰ πολλά.
- 187 κατὰ τὸ παραπλήσιον μέντοι καὶ ὅσα ἐπ' ἀρετὴν ἢ κακίαν ἀναφέρεται, τὰ ὠφέλιμα διὰ τῶν βλαβερῶν γνωρίζεται, τὰ καλὰ τῇ τῶν αἰσχυρῶν ἀντιθέσει, τὰ δίκαια καὶ κοινῶς ἀγαθὰ τῇ τῶν ἀδίκων καὶ κακῶν παραθέσει, καὶ πάντα μέντοι τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα ἐν κόσμῳ σκοπῶν ἄν τις εὔροι κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν τύπον λαμβάνοντα τὴν ἐπίκρισιν· ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ μὲν γὰρ ἕκαστον ἀκατάληπτον, ἐκ δὲ τῆς
- 188 πρὸς ἕτερον συγκρίσεως γνωρίζεσθαι δοκεῖ. τὸ [386] δὲ μὴ ἑαυτῷ μαρτυρεῖν | ἰκανόν, τῆς δὲ ἀφ' ἑτέρου χρήζον συνηγορίας, ἀβέβαιον εἰς πίστιν· ὥστε καὶ ταύτη τοὺς εὐχερῶς ὁμολογοῦντας ἢ ἀρνούμενους περὶ παντὸς οὐτιμοσ<οῦν> ἐλέγχεσθαι.
- 189 Καὶ τί θαυμαστόν; προσωτέρω γάρ τις χωρήσας τῶν πραγμάτων καὶ εἰλικρινέστερον αὐτὰ ἀυγασάμενος εἴσεται τοῦθ', ὅτι ἐν οὐδέν καθ' ἀπλήν ἡμῖν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ προσπίπτει φύσιν, ἀλλὰ πάντα μίξεις πολυπλοκωτάτας ἔχοντα καὶ κράσεις.
- 190 XLVI. αὐτίκα τῶν χρωμάτων ἀντιλαμβανόμεθα πῶς; ἄρ' οὐ σὺν ἀέρι καὶ φωτί, τοῖς ἐκτός, καὶ τῷ κατ' αὐτὴν τὴν ὄψιν ὑγρῷ; γλυκὺ δὲ καὶ

ON DRUNKENNESS, 185-190

ing to its roughness or smoothness, and its density and compactness on the one hand, or its sponginess and dilatation on the other, it exhibits clearly the means of testing its power of helping or harming.

<sup>a</sup> Again, everyone knows that practically nothing at 186
all which exists is intelligible by itself and in itself, but everything is appreciated only by comparison with its opposite ; as small by comparison with great, dry with wet, hot with cold, light with heavy, black with white, weak with strong, few with many. The same rule holds with all that concerns virtue and vice. We only know the profitable through the hurtful, the 187 noble by contrast with the base, the just and the good in general by comparison with the unjust and evil. And indeed if we consider we shall see that everything else in the world is judged on the same pattern. For in itself each thing is beyond our apprehension, and it is only by bringing it into relation with something else that it seems to be known. Now that which is 188 incapable of attesting itself and needs to be vouched for by something else, gives no sure ground for belief. And it follows that on this principle we can estimate at their true value lightly-made affirmations and negations on any subject whatever.

Nor is this strange. For anyone who penetrates 189 deeper into things and views them in a purer light, will recognize that no single thing presents itself to us in its own absolute nature but all contain interlacings and intermixtures of the most complicated kind.

XLVI. <sup>a</sup> For instance, how do we 190 apprehend colours ? Surely by means of the externals, air and light, and the internal moisture in the eye itself. How do we discriminate between sweet

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 508.

PHILO

- πικρὸν τίνα τρόπον δοκιμάζεται; μὴ δίχα τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἐνστομίῳν χυλῶν ὅσοι κατὰ φύσιν ἢ παρὰ φύσιν; οὐ δήπου. τί δ'; αἱ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπιθυμιωμένων ὄσμαι μὴ τὰς ἀπλᾶς <καὶ> εἰλικρινεῖς τῶν σωμάτων φύσεις παριστᾶσιν; ἢ τὰς κεκραμένας ἔκ τε αὐτῶν καὶ ἀέρος, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ τοῦ τήκοντος τὰ σώματα πυρὸς καὶ τῆς
- 191 κατὰ τοὺς μυκτῆρας δυνάμεως; ἔκ δὴ τούτων συνάγεται, ὅτι οὔτε χρωμάτων ἀντιλαμβανόμεθα, ἀλλὰ τοῦ συνισταμένου κράματος ἔκ τε τῶν ὑποκειμένων καὶ φωτός, οὔτε ὄσμων, ἀλλὰ μίγματος, ὅπερ συνέστη διὰ τε τοῦ ῥύεντος ἀπὸ τῶν σωμάτων καὶ τοῦ πανδεχοῦς ἀέρος, οὔτε χυλῶν, ἀλλὰ τοῦ γενομένου διὰ τε τοῦ προσιόντος γευστοῦ καὶ τῆς κατὰ τὸ στόμα ὑγρᾶς οὐσίας.
- 192 XLVII. τούτων δὴ τοῦτον ἔχόντων τὸν τρόπον εὐθήθειαν ἢ προπέθειαν ἢ ἀλαζονείαν ἄξιον καταγνώσκειν τῶν ἢ ὁμολογεῖν ἢ ἀρνεῖσθαι περὶ παντὸς οὐτινοσοῦν ῥαδίως ὑπομενόντων. εἰ μὲν γὰρ αἱ ἀπλαῖ δυνάμεις ἐκποδῶν, αἱ δὲ μικταὶ καὶ ἐκ πλειόνων συνηρατισμέναι προὔπτοι, ἀμήχανον δὲ καὶ τὰς ἀοράτους ἰδεῖν καὶ διὰ τῶν κεκραμένων τὸν ἐκάστης τῶν συνηρατισθεισῶν τύπον ἰδίᾳ κατανοῆσαι, τί ἂν εἴη λοιπὸν ἢ τὸ ἐπέχειν [ἀναγκαῖον];
- 193 Ἐκεῖνα<sup>1</sup> δ' ἡμᾶς οὐ παρακαλεῖ μὴ λίαν τοῖς ἀφανέσι προπιστεύειν, ἃ σχεδὸν κατὰ πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην ἀνακέχυται κοινὸν Ἑλλησιν ὁμοῦ καὶ βαρβάροις ἐπάγοντα τὸν ἐκ τοῦ κρίνειν ὄλισθον; τίνα οὖν ταῦτ' ἐστίν; ἀγωγαὶ δήπουθεν αἱ ἐκ and bitter? Can we do so without the juices in the mouth, both those which are in accord with nature<sup>a</sup> and those which are not? Surely not. Again, do the odours produced by burning incense present to us the natures of the substances in a pure and simple form, or in a combination, in which themselves and air, or sometimes also the fire which dissolves the material, are joined with the faculty possessed by the nostrils? From this we deduce that we do not apprehend 191 colours, but only the combination produced by the light and the material substances to which the colours belong, nor smells, but only the mixture of the emanation from the substances with the all-admitting air; nor flavours, but only the something produced by the application of what we taste to the moisture in our mouths.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκεῖνο ἢ ἐκεῖ.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 508.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 190-193

XLVII. Since these things are 192 so, those who do not shrink from facile affirmation or negation of anything whatsoever deserve to be held guilty of folly or rashness or imposture. For if the properties of things by themselves are beyond our ken, and if it is only the mixture formed by the contribution of many factors which is open to our vision; if, once more, it is as impossible to discern through the combinations the particular form of each of the contributing factors as it is to see them in their invisibility, what course is left to us but to suspend our judgement?

<sup>a</sup>And are we not warned against giving over-ready 193 credence to uncertainties by other considerations? I allude to certain facts, the evidence for which is found practically over the whole world as known to us—facts which entail on Greek and barbarian alike the universal tendency to error which positive judgement brings. By these I mean of course ways of life<sup>a</sup>

PHILO

- παίδων καὶ ἔθῃ πάτρια καὶ παλαιοὶ νόμοι, ὧν ἐν οὐδὲν ὁμολογεῖται ταῦτὸν εἶναι παρὰ πᾶσιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ χώρας καὶ ἔθνη καὶ πόλεις, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ κατὰ κώμην καὶ οἰκίαν ἐκάστην, ἀνδρα μὲν οὖν καὶ γυναῖκα καὶ νήπιον παῖδα τοῖς ὅλοις δια-194 κέκριται· τὰ γοῦν αἰσχρὰ παρ' ἡμῖν ἑτέροις καλά, καὶ τὰ πρόποντα ἀπρεπῆ, καὶ τὰ δίκαια ἄδικα, καὶ ἀνόσια μὲν τὰ ὅσια, νόμιμα δ' αὖ τὰ παράνομα, ἔτι δὲ ψεκτὰ τὰ ἐπαινετὰ καὶ ὑπόδικα τὰ τιμῆς 195 ἄξια καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ἐναντία ταῦτα νομίζουσι.
 [387] καὶ τί δεῖ μακρηγορεῖν τὸν ὑπὸ | ἑτέρων ἀναγκαιοτέρων μεθελκόμενον; εἰ μέντοι βουλευθεῖη τις ὑπὸ μηδεμιᾶς ἄλλης καινοτέρας θεᾶς ἀγόμενος, ἐνευκαιρήσας τῷ προτεθέντι κεφαλαίῳ τὰς ἐκάστων ἀγωγὰς καὶ ἔθῃ καὶ νόμους ἐπιέναι χωρῶν, ἔθνῶν, πόλεων, τόπων, ὑπηκόων ἡγεμόνων, ἐνδόξων ἀδόξων, ἐλευθέρων οἰκετῶν, ἰδιωτῶν ἐπιστημόνων, οὐχ ἡμέραν μίαν οὐδὲ δύο, ἀλλὰ οὐδὲ μῆνα ἢ ἑνιαυτόν, τὸν δὲ ἅπαντα ἑαυτοῦ κατατρίψει βίον, κἂν αἰῶνι χρήσῃται μακρῶ, καὶ οὐδὲν ἦττον πολλὰ ἀδιερεύνητα καὶ ἀπερίσκεπτα καὶ ἄφωνα λήσει 196 καταλιπών. οὐκοῦν ἄλλων παρ' ἄλλοις οὐ βραχεῖ μόνον διεστηκότων, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ὅλοις ἀπ-αδόκτων, ὡς ἀντιστατεῖν καὶ διαμάχεσθαι, ἀνάγκη καὶ τὰς προσπιπούσας διαφέρειν φαντασίας καὶ τὰς κρίσεις ἀλλήλαις πεπολεμῶσθαι. XLVIII.
 197 ὧν ὑπαρχόντων τίς οὕτως ἔκφρων ἐστὶ καὶ παράληρος, ὡς φάναι παγίως, ὅτι τὸ τοιούδε ἐστὶ δίκαιον ἢ φρόνιμον ἢ καλὸν ἢ συμφέρον; ὁ γὰρ

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "accepted to be the same with all."

<sup>b</sup> The last words, if expressed in full, would run ὅσα ἄλλα ἐναντία τῶν ὑφ' ἡμῶν νομιζομένων ταῦτα νομίζουσ'.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 193-197

from boyhood upwards, traditional usages, ancient laws, not a single one of which is regarded in the same light universally,<sup>a</sup> but every country, nation and city, or rather every village and house, indeed every man, woman and infant child takes a totally different view of it. As a proof of this we see that what is base 194 with us is noble with others, what is seemly and just with us is unseemly or unjust with them, our holy is their unholy, our lawful their unlawful, our laudable their blameworthy, our meritorious their criminal, and in all other matters their judgement is the opposite of ours.<sup>b</sup> And why prolong the 195 subject when our attention is called elsewhere by more vital matters? Still if anyone undistracted by some newer subject of contemplation should care to devote his leisure to the subject which has been before us, and to examine the ways of life, usages and customs of different countries, nations, cities and places, subjects and rulers, high and low, freemen and slaves, ignorant and learned, it will occupy not only a day or two, not only a month or a year, but his whole lifetime, even though his years be many, and all the same he will leave behind him many such questions, which he knows not of, unexamined, unconsidered and unheard. Since then the divers customs of divers 196 persons are not distinguished merely by some slight difference, but exhibit an absolute contrast, amounting to bitter antagonism, it is inevitable that the impressions made upon the mind should differ and that the judgements formed should be at war with each other. XLVIII. In view of these facts, who is so 197 senseless and deranged as to assert positively that any particular thing is just or prudent or honourable or profitable? For what one determines to be such, ἂν οὗτος ὄριση, τάναντία μεμελετηκῶς ἐκ παίδων ἕτερος ἀκυρώσει.

PHILO

- 198 Ἐγὼ δ' οὐ θαύμακα, εἰ πεφορημένος καὶ μιγὰς ὄχλος, ἐθῶν καὶ νόμων τῶν ὅπως οὖν εἰσηγμένων ἀκλεῆς δούλος, ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἔτι σπαργάνων ὑπακούειν ὡς ἂν δεσποτῶν ἢ τυράννων ἐκμαθῶν, κατακεκονδυλισμένος τὴν ψυχὴν καὶ μέγα καὶ νεανικὸν φρόνημα λαβεῖν μὴ δυνάμενος πιστεύει τοῖς ἅπαξ παραδοθείσι καὶ τὸν νοῦν ἐάσας ἀγύμναστον ἀδιερευνητοῖς καὶ ἀνεξετάστοις συναινέσεσί τε καὶ ἀρνήσεσι χρῆται, ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ τῶν λεγομένων φιλοσόφων ἢ πληθὺς τὸ ἐν τοῖς οὖσι σαφές καὶ ἀψευδές ἐπιμορφάζουσα θηρᾶν κατὰ στίφη καὶ λόχους διακέκριται, καὶ δόγματα ἀσύμφωνα πολλάκις δὲ καὶ ἐναντία οὐ περὶ ἑνὸς τίθεται τοῦ τυχόντος, ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν περὶ πάντων μικρῶν τε καὶ
- 199 μεγάλων, ἐν οἷς αἱ ζητήσεις συνίστανται· οἱ γὰρ ἄπειρον τὸ πᾶν εἰσηγούμενοι τοῖς πεπερασμένον εἶναι λέγουσιν ἢ οἱ τὸν κόσμον ἀγένητον τοῖς γενητὸν ἀποφαινομένοις ἢ οἱ χωρὶς ἐπιστάτου καὶ ἡγεμόνος ἀλόγου καὶ ἀπαυτοματιζούσης ἐξάψαντες φορᾶς τοῖς ὑπολαμβάνουσι πρόνοιαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν ὄλου καὶ τῶν μερῶν θαυμαστὴν τιν' εἶναι ἡμιοχοῦντος καὶ κυβερνῶντος ἀπταίστως καὶ σωτηρίως θεοῦ πῶς ἂν δύναιντο τὰς αὐτὰς καταλήψεις τῶν ὑποκειμένων ποιεῖσθαι πραγμάτων;
- 200 αἱ δὲ περὶ τὴν τὰγαθοῦ σκέψιν φαντασῆαι ἄρ' οὐκ ἐπέχειν μᾶλλον ἢ ὁμολογεῖν βιά-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 508.

<sup>b</sup> Or "whatever their source" (or "authority").

<sup>c</sup> It should be observed that the datives throughout this sentence are governed by τὰς αὐτὰς at the end.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 197-200

will be repudiated by another who has practised the opposite from childhood.

<sup>a</sup> Now I for my part do not wonder that the chaotic 198 and promiscuous multitude who are bound in inglorious slavery to usages and customs introduced anyhow,<sup>b</sup> and who are indoctrinated from the cradle with the lesson of obedience to them, as to masters and despots, with their souls buffeted into subjection and incapable of entertaining any high or generous feeling, should give credence to traditions delivered once for all, and leaving their minds unexercised, should give vent to affirmations and negations without inquiry or examination. But I do wonder that the multitude of so-called philosophers, who feign to be seeking for exact and absolute certainty in things, are divided into troops and companies and propound dogmatic conclusions widely different and often diametrically opposite not on some single chance point, but on practically all points great or small, which constitute the problems which they seek to solve.

<sup>a</sup> When some assert that the universe 199 is infinite, others that it is finite, and some declare it to be 'created, others uncreated ; when some refuse to connect it with any ruler or governor, but make it dependent on the automatic action of an unreasoning force, while others postulate a marvellous providence, caring for the whole and each part, exerted by a deity who guides and steers it and makes safe its steps, it is impossible that the substance of things should be apprehended by them in the same form.<sup>c</sup>

Again, when the nature of the good is the subject 200 of inquiry, do not the ideas which present themselves compel us to withhold judgement rather than give

PHILO

- ζονται τῶν μὲν ἀγαθὸν εἶναι νομιζόντων μόνον τὸ καλὸν καὶ θησαυριζομένων αὐτὸ ἐν ψυχῇ, τῶν δὲ πρὸς πλείω κατακερματιζόντων καὶ ἄχρι σώματος
- 201 καὶ τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀποτεινόντων; οὗτοι λέγουσι τὰς μὲν τυχηρὰς εὐπραγίας δορυφόρους εἶναι σώματος,
- [388] ὑγείαν δὲ καὶ ἰσχὺν καὶ τὸ | ὀλόκληρον καὶ ἀκρίβειαν αἰσθητηρίων καὶ ὅσα ὁμοιότροπα τῆς βασιλίδος ψυχῆς· τρισὶ γὰρ τῆς τὰγαθοῦ φύσεως κεχημένης τάξεσι τὴν μὲν τρίτην καὶ ἐξωτάτην τῆς δευτέρας καὶ ὑπεικούσης<sup>1</sup> πρόμαχον εἶναι, τὴν δὲ δευτέραν τῆς πρώτης μέγα πρόβλημα καὶ φυ-
- 202 λακτήριον γεγενῆσθαι. καὶ περὶ αὐτῶν τούτων μέντοι καὶ βίων διαφορᾶς καὶ τελῶν πρὸς ἃ χρῆ τὰς πράξεις ἀπάσας ἀναφέρεσθαι καὶ μυρίων ἄλλων ὅσα τε ἡ λογικὴ καὶ ἠθικὴ καὶ φυσικὴ πραγματεία περιέχει γεγόνασι σκέψεις ἀμύθητοι, ὧν ἄχρι τοῦ παρόντος οὐδεμία παρὰ πᾶσι τοῖς σκεπτικοῖς συμπεφώνηται.
- 203 XLIX. Οὐκ εἰκότως οὖν τῶν δυεῖν θυγατέρων, βουλῆς τε καὶ συναιρέσεως, ἄρμοσθεισῶν καὶ συνευνασθεισῶν ὁ νοῦς ἀγνοία ἐπιστήμης<sup>2</sup> χρώμενος εἰσάγεται; λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “οὐκ ἦδει ἐν τῷ
- 204 κοιμηθῆναι αὐτὰς καὶ ἀναστῆναι”· οὔτε γὰρ ὕπνον οὔτε ἐγρήγορσιν οὔτε σχέσιν οὔτε κίνησιν ἔοικε σαφῶς καὶ παγίως καταλαμβάνειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅποτε ἄριστα βεβουλεύσθαι δοκεῖ, τότε μάλιστα ἀβουλότατος ὧν εὐρίσκεται τῶν πραγμάτων μὴ

<sup>1</sup> mss. ὑπ(ἀπ)ειλούσης. The correction ὑπεικούσης has been universally accepted, but the phrase, “the second and yielding one,” is odd. The translator suggests ὑπ’ εἰλ(αρ) οὔσης, i.e. “which is thus under shelter.” The word εἰλαρ as used in Iliad ii. 338 etc. is very appropriate to the context, and Philo is fond of introducing Homeric words.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 200-204

assent? For some hold that the morally beautiful is the only good and make the soul its repository, while others split up the good into subdivisions and extend it to include the body and things outside the body. These persons say that fortunate circumstances are 201 the guards and attendants of the body, and that health and strength and soundness and exactness of perception in the sense-organs and all other things of the kind serve the same purpose to the sovereign soul. The nature of the good, they hold, divides itself into three classes, of which the third and outermost protects the weakness of the second, which again proves to be a strong bulwark and safeguard of the first. And with regard to these, as well as to the 202 relative value of different ways of living, and the ends to which all our actions should be referred, and numberless other points, which are included in the study of logic, ethics and physics, a host of questions have arisen on none of which hitherto have the inquirers arrived at unanimity.

XLIX. We see then that the mind is fitly repre- 203 sented as labouring under absence of knowledge, when its two daughters, Deliberation and Assent, are in contact with it and become its bed-fellows. For we are told, "He knew not when they slept and rose up" (Gen. xix. 33, 35). The mind, it seems, 204 does not grasp clearly or firmly either sleeping or waking, or yet rest or motion,<sup>a</sup> but it is just when it thinks it has shewn its powers of deliberation at their best, that it proves to be most lacking in that power,

<sup>a</sup> Or "that is, either rest or motion."

---

<sup>a</sup> "ignorance of knowledge" is a strange expression. Adler proposes χηρούμενος for χρώμενος. Perhaps ἀγνοία (ἀντ') ἐπιστήμης.

PHILO

- ὅμοιον τοῖς προσδοκηθεῖσι λαβόντων τὸ τέλος· 205 καὶ ὅποτε συνεπιγράφεσθαι τισιν ὡς ἀληθέσιν ἔδοξε, τὴν ἐπ' εὐχερεία καρποῦται κατάγνωσιν, ἀπίστων καὶ ἀβεβαίων, οἷς πρότερον ὡς βεβαιοτάτοις ἐπίστευε, φαινομένων· ὥστε εἰς τὰ ἐναντία, ὧν ὑπετόπησέ τις, εἰωθότων περιστάσθαι τῶν πραγμάτων ἀσφαλέστατον τὸ ἐπέχειν εἶναι.
- 206 L. Διειλεγμένοι δὴ περὶ τούτων ἰκανῶς ἐπὶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα τῷ λόγῳ τρεψώμεθα. ἔφαμεν τοίνυν ἐκ τοῦ μεθύειν καὶ τὴν πολλοὺς πολλάκις μεγάλα βλάπτουσαν γαστριμαργίαν δηλοῦσθαι, ἧ τοὺς χρωμένους ἔστιν ἰδεῖν, κἂν τὰς τοῦ σώματος δεξαμενὰς ἀποπληρωθῶσι πάσας, ἔτι κενοὺς τὰς 207 ἐπιθυμίας ὄντας· οὗτοι κἂν ὑπὸ πλήθους ὧν ἐνεφορήσαντο διακορεῖς γενόμενοι πρὸς ὀλίγον χρόνον καθάπερ οἱ πεπονηκότες ἀθληταὶ τὰ σώματα διαπνεύσωσι, πάλιν ἐπαποδύονται τοῖς 208 αὐτοῖς ἀγωνίσμασιν. ὁ γοῦν βασιλεὺς τῆς Αἰγυπτίας χώρας, τοῦ σώματος, τῷ μέθης ὑπηρέτῃ δόξας οἰνοχόῳ δυσχερᾶναι πάλιν οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν καταλλαττόμενος ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις εἰσάγεται τοῦ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας ἀναρρηγνύντος πάθους ὑπομνησθεῖς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ γενέσεως φθαρτῆς, οὐκ ἐν ἀφθάρτῳ τοῦ ἀγενήτου φωτός<sup>1</sup>. λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ἡμέρᾳ γενέσεως ἦν Φαραώ,” ἠνίκα ἐκ τοῦ δεσμωτηρίου τὸν ἀρχιοινοχόον ἐπὶ σπονδαῖς μετ-209 ἐπέμψατο· τοῦ γὰρ φιλοπαθοῦς ἴδιον λαμπρὰ τὰ
 [389] | γενητὰ καὶ φθαρτὰ ἠγγεῖσθαι διὰ τὸ νυκτὶ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Adler proposes φωτί.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 509.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 204-209

for the issue of events bears no resemblance to its expectations. And again when it has been pleased 205 to subscribe to anything as true, it earns the condemnation passed on reckless thinking, for it appears that what it once believed in and thought to be most firmly established is really untrustworthy and insecure. The conclusion is that since things so often turn out the opposite of what we expect, the safest course is to suspend judgement.

L. This topic has now been sufficiently discussed. 206 Let us turn our discussion to what follows next. We said that one thing signified by drunkenness is that gluttony<sup>a</sup> whose great power for mischief is so widespread and constant, which leaves those who indulge in it, as we may see, with a void in their desires, even though they have every vacant place in their bodies filled. Such persons, when glutted and satiated by the 207 quantities they have engorged, may for a while like weary-limbed athletes give their bodies a breathing-space, but ere long they make themselves ready to take part in the same encounter. So we 208 see the King of Egypt, that is of the body, though he seemed to be angry with the cup-bearer who ministered to his drunkenness, represented in the holy books as being reconciled to him after a short time. He remembered the passion which excited his desires on his birthday—the day of his birth into a being destined to perish—not on the day of the light, which has no birth, a day which perishes not. For we are told that it was Pharaoh's birthday (Gen. xl. 20) when he sent for the chief cup-bearer from the prison to pour the cup of reconciliation.<sup>a</sup> It is characteristic of 209 the friend of passion that things created and perishable seem to him bright and shining, because in reσκοτώ κεχρηῆσθαι βαθεῖ πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀφθάρτων ἐπιστήμην· οὐ χάριν εὐθὺς τὴν ἐξάρχουσαν ἡδονῆς<sup>1</sup> μέθην καὶ τὸν ὑπηρέτην αὐτῆς δεξιούται.

PHILO

- 210 LI. τρεῖς δ' εἰσὶν οἱ τῆς ἀκολάστου καὶ ἀκράτορος ψυχῆς ἐστιοῦχοί τε καὶ θεραπευταί, ἀρχισιτοποιός, ἀρχιοινοχόος, ἀρχιμάγειρος, ὧν ὁ θαυμασιώτατος μέμνηται Μωυσῆς διὰ τούτων· “καὶ ὠργίσθη Φαραὼ ἐπὶ τοῖς δυσὶν εὐνούχοις, ἐπὶ τῷ ἀρχιοινοχῶ καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ ἀρχισιτοποιῷ, καὶ ἔθετο αὐτοὺς ἐν φυλακῇ παρὰ τῷ ἀρχιδεσμοφύλακι.<sup>2</sup>” ἔστι δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀρχιμάγειρος εὐνούχος· λέγεται γὰρ ἐτέρωθι· “κατήχθη δὲ Ἰωσήφ εἰς Αἴγυπτον, καὶ ἐκτίσατο αὐτὸν εὐνούχος Φαραὼ, ἀρχιμάγειρος,” καὶ πάλιν· “ἀπέδοντο τὸν Ἰωσήφ τῷ σπάδοντι
- 211 Φαραὼ, ἀρχιμαγεῖρω.” τίνος δὴ χάριν οὗτ' ἀνὴρ οὔτε γυνή τῶν λεχθέντων οὐδὲν ἀπλῶς ἐπιτέτραπται; ἢ ὅτι σπείρειν μὲν ἄνδρες γονὰς ὑποδέχασθαι δὲ γυναῖκες ἐκ φύσεως πεπαίδευνται, ὧν τὴν εἰς ταῦτὸ σύνοδον αἰτίαν γενέσεως καὶ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς διαμονῆς εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ἀγόνου δὲ καὶ ἐστερωμένης, μᾶλλον δὲ ἐξευνουχισμένης ψυχῆς σιτίοις πολυτελέσι καὶ ποτοῖς καὶ ὄψων περιέργοις παραρτύσεισι χαίρειν μῆτε τὰ ἀρετῆς ἄρρενα ὡς ἀληθῶς σπέρματα καταβάλλεσθαι δυναμένης μῆτε τὰ καταβληθέντα παραδέξασθαι καὶ ἀναθρέψασθαι, ἀλλ' οἷα λυπρὰν ἄρουραν καὶ λιθῶδη πρὸς διαφθορὰν μόνον πεφυκέναι τῶν αἰεὶ ζῆν
- 212 ὀφειλόντων; δόγμα δὴ τίθεται κοινωφελέστατον, ὅτι πᾶς ὁ δημιουργὸς ἡδονῆς σοφίας ἐστὶν ἄγονος οὔτε ἄρρην ὧν οὔτε θήλεια, διὰ τὸ μῆτε διδόναι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐξ ἀρχόντων ἡδονῆν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀρχιμαγεῖρω.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 209-212

lation to knowledge of things imperishable, he dwells in night and profound darkness, and therefore at once he welcomes the drunkenness which brings pleasure in its train and him who is the minister of drunkenness.

LI. The weak-willed incontinent soul has 210 three servants who provide its feasts, the chief baker, the chief butler and the chief cook, whom our most admirable Moses mentions in these words, "And Pharaoh was wroth with his two eunuchs, with the chief butler and the chief baker, and he put them in prison under the chief gaoler" (Gen. xl. 2,3). But the chief cook is also a eunuch, for we have in another place, "and Joseph was brought down into Egypt and became the property of the eunuch of Pharaoh, the chief cook" (Gen. xxxix. 1), and again "they sold Joseph to the eunuch of Pharaoh, the chief cook" (Gen. xxxvii. 36).

Why is it that not a 211 single one of these offices is entrusted to a real man or woman? Is it not because nature has trained men to sow the germs of life and women to receive them, and the mating of these two is the cause of generation and of the permanence of the All, while on the other hand it is the nature of the soul which is impotent and barren, or rather has been made so by emasculation, to delight in costly bakemeats and drinks and dishes elaborately prepared? For such a soul is neither able to drop the truly masculine seeds of virtue nor yet to receive and foster what is so dropped, but like a sorry stony field is only capable of blighting the successive growths, which were meant to live. In fact we have a doctrine laid down 212 most profitable to us all, that every craftsman whose work is to produce pleasure can produce no fruit of wisdom. He is neither male nor female, for he is inμήτε λαμβάνειν τὰ πρὸς ἀφθαρσίαν ἱκανὸς εἶναι σπέρματα, μελετᾶν δ' αἰσχίστην κατὰ τοῦ βίου μελέτην, φθείρειν τὰ ἄφθαρτα καὶ σβεννύναι τὰ 213 μένοντα τῆς φύσεως λαμπάδια ἄσβεστα. τῶν τοιούτων οὐδενὶ ἐπιτρέπει Μωυσῆς εἰς ἐκκλησίαν ἀφικνεῖσθαι θεοῦ· λέγει γὰρ ὅτι “θλαδίας καὶ ἀποκεκομμένος οὐκ εἰσελεύσεται εἰς ἐκκλησίαν κυρίου.” LII. τί γὰρ τῷ σοφίας ἀγόνῳ λόγῳ ἀκροάσεως ἱερῶν ὄφελος ἐκτετμημένῳ πίστιν καὶ παρακαταθήκην βιωφελεστάτων δογμάτων φυλάξει 214 μὴ δυναμένῳ;                      τρεῖς δ' ἄρ' εἰσὶν ἀν-θρώπων γένους ἐστιάτορες, σιτοποιός,<sup>1</sup> οἰνοχόος, ὄψαρτυτής, εἰκότως, ἐπειδὴ τριῶν χρήσεώς τε καὶ ἀπολαύσεως ἐφίεμεθα, σιτίων, ὄψου, ποτῶν· ἀλλ' οἱ μὲν μόνων τῶν ἀναγκαίων, οἷς πρὸς τε τὸ ὑγιεινῶς καὶ μὴ ἀνελευθέρως ζῆν ἐξ ἀνάγκης χρῶμεθα, οἱ δὲ ἀμέτρων καὶ σφόδρα περιττῶν, ἃ τὰς ὀρέξεις ἀναρρηγνύντα καὶ τὰς τοῦ σώματος δεξαμενὰς πλήθει βαρύνοντα καὶ πιέζοντα μεγάλα

PHILO

 [390] καὶ | παντοδαπὰ τίκτειν νοσήματα φιλεῖ. οἱ μὲν 215 οὖν ἡδονῆς καὶ ἐπιθυμίας καὶ παθῶν ἰδιῶται καθάπερ οἱ ἐν ταῖς πόλεσι δημοτικοὶ ἀμισῆ καὶ ἀνεπαχθῆ βίον ζῶντες, ἅτε ὀλιγοδεεῖς ὄντες, οὐ ποικίλων καὶ περιέργων τὴν τέχνην δέονται ὑπηρετῶν, ἀλλ' ἀποκίλῳ χρωμένων ὑπηρεσία, 216 μαγείρων, οἰνοχόων, σιτοποιῶν· οἱ δὲ ἡγεμονίαν καὶ βασιλείαν νομίζοντες εἶναι τὸ ἡδέως ζῆν καὶ πάντα καὶ μικρὰ καὶ μείζω πρὸς τοῦτ' ἀναφέροντες

<sup>1</sup> σιτοποιός Tr. : mss. and Wendland ἀρχισιτοποιός.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 509.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 212-216

capable of either giving or receiving the seeds whence spring the growth that perishes not, and the base craft he practises is aimed against human life. He destroys the indestructible and quenches the unquenchable ever-abiding lamps of nature. None 213 such does Moses permit to enter the congregation of God, for he says, "He who has lost the organs of generation<sup>a</sup> shall not come into the congregation of the Lord" (Deut. xxiii. 1). LII. For what use can he find in listening to holy words, who can beget no offspring of wisdom, when the knife has cut away the power of faith, and the store of truths which might best profit human life he cannot keep in his charge?

Now mankind, as we have seen, has 214 three caterers, the baker, the cup-bearer and the cook. This is natural enough since we desire the use and enjoyment of these three things, bread, flesh and drink. But some desire only the bare necessities, the use of which is needed to keep life from being unhealthy and sordid; while others seek them in luxurious forms, which excite the cravings of the appetite, and in extravagant quantities, which oppress and overload the receptacles of the body, and often produce grave disorders of every kind. The first of 215 these classes who are not specialists in pleasure or voluptuousness or passion are like the ordinary public in a city who live an inoffensive and innocuous life, who have few wants and therefore do not require versatile and highly-skilled artists to serve them, but only those who attempt no more than a plain and simple form of service, just cooks, cup-bearers and bakers. But the second class, holding that pleasant 216 living is sovereignty and kingship, and judging all things great and small by this standard, consider it

PHILO

- ἀρχιμαγείροις καὶ ἀρχιοινοχόοις καὶ ἀρχισιτοποιοῖς ὑπηρέταις ἀξιοῦσι χρῆσθαι, τουτέστιν ἄκρως ἐκπεπονηκόσιν ἕκαστον ὧν ἐπετήδευσαν.
- 217 τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἀμῆτων καὶ μελιπήκτων καὶ ἄλλων ἀμυθῆτων περμάτων ποικιλώτατα γένη οὐ μόνον ταῖς τῆς ὕλης διαφοραῖς, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ τρόπῳ τῆς κατασκευῆς καὶ τοῖς σχήμασι πρὸς οὐ μόνον τὴν γεύσεως ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ὄψεως ἀπάτην περιεργασμένα οἱ περὶ σιτοποιίαν ἄκροι μελετῶσι.
- 218 τὰ δὲ περὶ ἐξέτασιν οἴνου θάττον ἀναδιδομένου καὶ μὴ κεφαλαλοῦς καὶ τούναντίον ἀνθίμου καὶ εὐωδεστάτου, πολλὴν ἢ ὀλίγην ἀναδεχομένου τὴν μεθ' ὕδατος κρᾶσιν εἰς σφοδρὸν καὶ σύντονον ἢ πρᾶον καὶ ἀνειμένον ἐπιτηδεῖον πότον<sup>1</sup> καὶ ὅσα τοιουτότροπα ἀρχιοινοχόων ἐπιτηδεύματα ἐπ' αὐτὸ δὴ τῆς τέχνης ἀφιγμένων τὸ τέλος·
- 219 ἰχθύας δὲ καὶ ὄρνεις καὶ τὰ παραπλήσια ποικίλως ἀρτύσαι καὶ κατασκευάσαι καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ὄψα ἡδύναι περιττοὶ τὴν ἐπιστήμην εἰσὶν εὐτρεπεῖς ὀψαρτυταί, μυρία χωρὶς ὧν ἤκουσαν ἢ εἶδον ἄλλ' ἐκ τῆς συνεχοῦς μελέτης καὶ τριβῆς τῶν εἰς ἀβροδίαιτον καὶ τεθρυμμένον τὸν ἀβίωτον βίον ἐπινοῆσαι δεινοί.
- 220 LIII. Ἄλλα γὰρ οὗτοι πάντες ἐδείχθησαν εὐνοῦχοι, σοφίας ἄγονοι· πρὸς ὧν δὲ συμβατηρίους τίθεται σπονδὰς ὁ γαστρὸς βασιλεὺς νοῦς οἰνοχόος ἦν· φίλοιον γὰρ ὑπερφυῶς τὸ ἀνθρώπων γένος καὶ πρὸς μόνον τοῦτο διαφερόντως ἀκόρεστον, εἴ γε ὕπνου μὲν καὶ ἐδωδῆς καὶ συνουσίας καὶ τῶν ὁμοίων ἀπλήρωτος οὐδεὶς, ἀκράτου δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ποτόν (drink), which Adler would retain.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 509.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 216-220

their due to employ chief cooks, chief butlers, chief bakers, that is those who have worked up to a high pitch of refinement the arts which they severally profess. Milk cakes, honey cakes, num- 217 berless other kinds of bakemeats in the greatest possible variety, elaborately calculated to beguile the eye as well as the palate, not only with diversities of material, but also by the way in which the constituents are proportioned and the shapes in which they appear, engage the care and attention of the master-hands in confectionery.

As for wine, whether 218 it is such as is quickly digested and leaves no headache, whether on the other hand it has a fine bouquet<sup>a</sup> and fragrance, whether it needs a small or great dilution to fit it for a fierce and heated carousal or a mild and quiet festivity, these and all such questions are the study of chief butlers, who have reached the very summit of their art.

Again, the 219 skilful dressing and preparation of fishes, birds and the like, and the flavouring of other savoury dishes, is a task readily accomplished by highly scientific professionals, whose constant drill and practice in catering for the life, which all its voluptuous luxury cannot make worth living, has given them the ingenuity to invent hundreds of other delicacies besides those which they have seen and heard of.

LIII. Observe that while all these three were 220 shewn to be eunuchs and unable to beget wisdom, it was the butler with whom the mind, whose kingdom is the belly, made his compact of peace. For the passion for wine is extraordinarily strong in mankind, and is unique in this, that it does not produce satiety. For whereas everyone is satisfied with a certain amount of sleep and food and sexual intercourse and

PHILO

- σχεδὸν ἅπαντες καὶ μάλισθ' οἷς τὸ πρᾶγμα ἀσκεῖται· 221 πίνοντες γὰρ ἔτι διψῶσι καὶ ἄρχονται μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν βραχυτέρων κυάθων, προϊόντες δὲ ταῖς μείζουσιν οἰνοχοαῖς ἐγχεῖν παραγγέλλουσιν· ἐπειδὴν <δ'> ἀκροθώρακες γενόμενοι χλιανθῶσιν, οὐκέτι κρατεῖν ἑαυτῶν δυνάμενοι τὰς οἰνηρύσεις καὶ τὰς ἀμύστεις καὶ τοὺς κρατήρας ὅλους προσενεγκάμενοι ἀκράτου [391] σπῶσιν ἀθρόως, | μέχρῃς ἂν ἡ βαθεῖ ὑπνω δαμα-σθῶσιν ἢ τῶν ὄγκων ἀποπληρωθέντων ὑπερβλύσῃ 222 τὸ ἐπεισχεόμενον. ἀλλὰ καὶ τότε ὁμῶς ἢ ἄπληστος ἐν αὐτοῖς ὄρεξις ὥσπερ ἔτι λιμώττουσα μαιμάζει<sup>1</sup>. “ἐκ γὰρ τῆς ἀμπέλου Σοδόμων ἢ ἄμπελος αὐτῶν” ἢ φησι Μωυσῆς “καὶ ἡ κληματὶς αὐτῶν ἐκ Γομόρρας· ἢ σταφυλὴ αὐτῶν σταφυλὴ χολῆς, βότρυς πικρίας αὐτοῖς· θυμὸς δρακόντων ὁ οἶνος αὐτῶν, καὶ θυμὸς ἀσπίδων ἀνίατος.” Σόδομα μέντοι στείρωσις καὶ τύφλωσις ἐρμηνεύεται, ἀμπέλω δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἐξ αὐτῆς γινομένοις ἀπικιάζει τοὺς οἰνοφλυγίας καὶ λαιμαργίας καὶ τῶν αἰσχίστων 223 ἡδονῶν ἥττους. ἃ δὲ αἰνίττεται, τοιαυτ' ἐστίν· εὐφροσύνης μὲν ἀληθοῦς οὐδὲν ἐμπέφυκε τῇ τοῦ φαύλου ψυχῇ φυτὸν ἅτε οὐχ ὑγιαινούσαις κεκρημένῃ ρίζαις, ἀλλὰ ἐμπερησμέναις καὶ τεφρω-θείσαις, ὅποτε ἀνθ' ὕδατος τὰς κεραυνίους φλόγας θεοῦ τὴν κατὰ ἀσεβῶν καλῶς δικάσαντος δίκην ὁ οὐρανὸς ἀσβέστους ἔνιφεν, ἀκράτορος δὲ ἐπι-θυμίας τῆς ἐστερωμένης τὰ καλὰ καὶ πεπηρω-μένης πρὸς πάντα τὰ θεᾶς ἄξια, ἣν ἀμπέλω παρα-βέβληκεν, οὐχὶ τῇ καρπῶν ἡμέρων μητρί, ἀλλὰ ἥτις πικρίας καὶ πονηρίας καὶ πανουργίας ὀργῆς τε καὶ θυμοῦ καὶ ἀκραχολωτάτων ἡθῶν οἰστικῆ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μαιράζει.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 220-223

the like, this is rarely so with strong drink, particularly among practised toppers. They drink but do not slake their thirst and, while they begin with smaller cups, as they advance they call for the wine to be poured in larger goblets. And when they get mellow and well warmed, they lose all control of themselves, and put beakers and cans and whole basins to their lips and drain them at a draught until either they are overcome with deep sleep, or the influx of the liquor fills up the cavities<sup>a</sup> and overflows. But even then the insatiable craving within them rages<sup>221</sup> as if it were still starving. "For their vine is of the vine of Sodom," as Moses says, "and their tendrils of Gomorrah, their grapes are grapes of gall, a cluster of bitterness to them. Their wine is the wrath of dragons and the incurable wrath of asps" (Deut. xxxii. 32, 33). Sodom is indeed by interpretation barrenness and blindness, and Moses here likens to a vine and its produce those who are under the thrall of wine-bibbing and gluttony and the basest of pleasures.

His inner meaning is of<sup>223</sup> this kind. No plant of true gladness grows in the soul of the wicked, since it has no healthy roots, but such as were burnt to ashes, when God passed well-deserved sentence upon the impious, and the heavens rained instead of water the unquenchable flames of the thunderbolt. In such a soul all that grows is the lust which is barren of excellence, and blinded to all that is worthy of its contemplation, and this lust he compares to a vine; not that which is the mother of kindly fruits, but a vine which proves to be the bearer of bitterness and wickedness and villainy and wrath and anger and savage moods and tempers, the

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 509.

PHILO

γέγονε, δάκνουσα τὴν ψυχὴν ἔχειν καὶ ἀσπίδων τρόπον ἰοβόλων καὶ παντελῶς ἀνίατα.

- 224 ὦν ἀποτροπὴν εὐχόμεθα γενέσθαι τὸν πάντα ἴλεω ποτινῶμενοι θεόν, ἵνα καὶ τὴν ἀγρίαν ταύτην ἄμπελον διολέσῃ καὶ τοῖς εὐνούχοις καὶ πᾶσιν ἀγόνοις ἀρετῆς αἶδιον ψηφίσηται φυγὴν, ἀντὶ δὲ τούτων ἡμερὰ μὲν ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἡμῶν δένδρα τὰ παιδείας ὀρθῆς ἐμφυτεύσῃ, γενναίους δὲ καὶ ἄρρενας ὡς ἀληθῶς καρπούς καὶ λόγους χαρίσῃται δυναμένους μὲν σπεῖρειν καλὰς πράξεις, δυναμένους δὲ συναύξειν ἀρετάς, ἱκανοὺς δὲ τὴν εὐδαιμονίας ἅπασαν συνέχειν καὶ διαφυλάττειν εἰς αἰὲν συγγένειαν.

ON DRUNKENNESS, 223-224

vine which stings the soul like vipers and venomous asps, and that sting none can cure. Let 224 us pray that these may be averted, and implore the all-merciful God to destroy this wild vine and decree eternal banishment to the eunuchs and all those who do not beget virtue, and that while in their stead He plants in the garden of our souls the trees of right instruction, He may grant us fruits of genuine worth and true virility, and powers of reason, capable of begetting good actions and also of bringing the virtues to their fullness, gifted too with the strength to bind together and keep safe for ever all that is akin to real happiness.

ON THE PRAYERS AND CURSES UTTERED BY NOAH WHEN HE BECAME SOBER
(DE SOBRIETATE)

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

IN this short treatise Philo concludes his discussion of Gen. ix. 20-27, which describe Noah's husbandry, vine-planting, drinking the wine, intoxication and nakedness, return to sobriety, and cursing or blessing his children. The verses here treated (24-27) run as follows :

I. (sections 1-20 of this treatise) And Noah returned to soberness from the wine and knew what his younger son had done to him.

II. (30-50) And he said, "Cursed be Canaan; a servant and bondman shall he be to his brethren."

III. (51-58) And he said, "Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be a servant, a bondman of him."

IV. (59-end) And he said, "May God widen for Japhet, and let him dwell in the houses of Shem and let Canaan become his servant."

I. This raises two points, the meaning of "becoming sober" and that of the "younger son." The former is treated briefly. Sobriety is conceived of mainly as sobriety of soul, which takes the same place in the soul as clear vision in the body, and thus provides it with thoughts which in their turn lead to good actions (1-5).

The word "younger" starts Philo on a discussion of the use made in the Pentateuch of words literally

ON SOBRIETY

denoting age, to shew moral relations. Ham is "younger" because his unfilial and indecent action proved his spirit of (youthful)<sup>a</sup> rebelliousness (νεωτεροποιία) (6). And so Ishmael is called a "child" when, as a little calculation will shew, he was twenty years old, because as a type of the falsely wise or sophist, he is, compared with the wise Isaac, a mere child (7-9). So too Moses calls the rebellious Israelites "blameworthy children" (10-11). Rachel (bodily beauty) is called younger than Leah (beauty of soul) (12). Joseph's "youth" in the moral sense is shewn by his staying in Egypt (the body) and his association with his illegitimate brethren (12-15). Conversely the wise Abraham is called the "elder," though the history represents him as less long-lived than his ancestors (16-18). The elders Moses is directed to choose mean those whose sterling worth he has proved (19-20). In particular the enactment forbidding the disinheritance of the firstborn son of the hated wife in favour of the younger son of the beloved wife, which gave rise to the long allegory of De Sacrificiis, 19-44 is audaciously pressed into service. As in De Sacrificiis the beloved wife is Pleasure, the hated Virtue, but as Moses mentioned the parenthood of Pleasure first, her child is first-born in point of time and the name only belongs to the child of virtue in consideration of his moral superiority (21-26). So the younger in age Jacob takes the birthright from the elder Esau, and Jacob sets Ephraim who represents the faculty of memory, which comes later and is therefore younger, above Manasseh, who represents the more childish faculty of recollection, which is earlier and therefore older <sup>a</sup> See note on § 6.

PHILO

(27-29). This division ends with a statement of the justice of cursing the "younger" (30).

II. But why did Noah curse Ham's son Canaan, against whom nothing is alleged, instead of Ham? (31-33). Because while Ham is evil potential or "in rest," Canaan is evil active or "in motion." To understand this we must consider these terms "rest" and "motion" with their respective congeners, "habit" or "faculty" (εξέλις) and "activity" (33-34). Now every workman or artist is called by such a name, even when he is not making anything, because he still has the faculty. But it is only when he is actually plying his trade or art that he incurs praise or blame (35-37). So too in the moral sphere. The possessor of good or bad qualities may have no opportunity for displaying them, but the qualities are still there (38-43). Ham means "heat," i.e. the latent disease in the soul, Canaan means "tossing," which represents the same in active motion. As no ruler punishes qualities till they actually produce crimes, Canaan properly incurs the curse, though, as one passes into the other, one may say that Ham is cursed through Canaan (44-47). Actual sin is the child of potential sin, and this is the real meaning of "visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children" (48). The same lesson is taught by the law of leprosy that only when the "bright spot" ceases to be stationary does the man become unclean (49), and also by God's word to Cain, "thou hast sinned; be still" (50).

III. The prayer for Shem speaks of the "Lord, the God of Shem." Shem is "the good" in its generic not in any of its special forms, and therefore to assert that God is Shem's God is to put the good man on a level with God's work, the Universe (51-54). And since "God" indicates the loving side of the Divine Nature, to say that the Lord is "Shem's God" is to say that, like Abraham, he is God's friend (55). And here Philo, adapting the well-known Stoic paradox, lays down that such a one alone is noble, rich, king and free (56-57). Finally the word "blessed" applied to God means that he who is thus blest can only repay God by blessing Him (58).

ON SOBRIETY

IV. In interpreting the prayer for Japhet Philo passes for a moment into one of his less austere moods. He suggests that the word "widen" means that Japhet may find good not only in the morally beautiful (τὸ καλόν) but in the "preferable indifferents" of the Stoics, bodily and external advantages (59-61). As to the last half, "let him dwell in the houses of Shem," the "him" may be God (Philo ignores the fact that in this case it could not be a prayer for Japhet), for God's fitting dwelling is in the good man's soul in the sense that it is especially under His care (62-64). And so in the literal narrative Shem is very properly represented as the ancestor of the Twelve Tribes who are called God's "palace" (65-66). If "him" is Japhet we may see a correction of the prayer for his "widening," a prayer that though for a time he may find good elsewhere, his final home may be the excellence of the soul (67-68). The treatise concludes with a few lines on "Canaan shall be their servant." The fool is indeed the slave of the virtues, if possible, for his reformation and emancipation, if otherwise, for chastisement (69).

ΠΕΡΙ ΩΝ ΝΗΨΑΣ Ο ΝΩΕ ΕΥΧΕΤΑΙ
ΚΑΙ ΚΑΤΑΡΑΤΑΙ

- <sup>1</sup>
[392] Ι. Τὰ περὶ μέθης καὶ τῆς ἐπομένης αὐτῇ γυμνό-τητος εἰρημένα τῷ νομοθέτῃ διεξεληλυθότες πρότερον ἀρξώμεθα τοῖς λεχθεῖσι τὸν ἐξῆς προσαρμοό-τειν λόγον· περίεστι τοίνυν ἐν τοῖς χρησιμοῖς ἀκόλουθα τάδε· “ ἐξένηψε δὲ Νῶε ἀπὸ τοῦ οἴνου καὶ ἔγνω ὅσα ἐποίησεν αὐτῷ ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ ὁ νεώ-<sup>2</sup>τερος.” τὸ νήφειν οὐ μόνον ψυχαῖς ἀλλὰ καὶ σώμασιν ὠφελιμώτατον ἀνωμολόγηται· τὰς τε γὰρ ἐξ ἀμέτρου πλησμονῆς γινομένας νόσους ἀπωθεῖται καὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις πρὸς ἄκρας ὀξύτητας ἀκονᾶ καὶ ὅλα μέντοι τὰ σώματα οὐκ ἐᾶ βαρυνόμενα πίπτειν, ἀλλ’ ἐξαίρει καὶ ἐπικουφίζει καὶ πρὸς τὰς οἰκείους ἐνεργείας ἀνακαλεῖ πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν ἐτοιμότητα ἐντίκτον· καὶ συνόλως ὅσων δημιουργὸς κακῶν ἢ μέθης, τοσοῦτων ἔμπαλιν ἀγαθῶν τὸ νηφάλιον.
<sup>3</sup> ὅπότ’ οὖν καὶ σώμασιν, οἷς ἡ οἴνου πόσις οἰκείον, λυσιτελέστατον τὸ νήφειν, οὐ πολὺ μᾶλλον ψυχαῖς, ὧν φθαρτὴ τροφή πᾶσα ἀλλότριον ; νηφούσης γὰρ διανοίας τί τῶν παρὰ ἀνθρώποις μεγαλειότερον; τίς δόξα; τίς πλοῦτος; τίς δυνα-

---

<sup>a</sup> See Introduction to De Ebr. p. 309, note b.

ON THE PRAYERS AND CURSES UTTERED BY NOAH WHEN HE BECAME SOBER

I. Having in the foregoing pages dealt fully with the 1 words of the lawgiver on drunkenness and the nakedness which followed it,<sup>a</sup> let us proceed to carry on the thread of our discussion by treating of the topic which comes next in order, "And Noah returned to soberness from the wine and knew what his younger son had done to him" (Gen. ix. 24).
We are all agreed that soberness is most profitable 2 not only to souls but to bodies. For it repels the diseases which arise from excessive self-indulgence ; it sharpens the senses to their utmost acuteness and acts indeed upon the whole of our bodies by engendering readiness in every part and thus prevents them from succumbing in weariness, and lifts them up and relieves them and recalls them to their proper activities. In fact, every evil which has drunkenness for its author has its counterpart in some good 3 which is produced by soberness. Since 3 then sobriety is a source of the greatest profit to our bodies, to which the use of wine is a natural practice, how much more is it profitable to our souls, which have no relation to any perishable food? What human gift or possession is greater than a sober understanding? What form of glory—or of wealth

PHILO

στεία; τίς ἰσχὺς; τί τῶν πάντων ὅσα θαυμάζεται; φέρε μόνον τὸ ψυχῆς ὄμμα ὄλον ἰσχυῖσαι δι' ὄλων διοιχθῆναι καὶ μηδὲν οἶα ὑπὸ ρεύματος συγχυθῆναι μέρος ἢ καταμῦσαι· τότε γὰρ μάλιστα ὄξυωπῆσαν, σύνεσιν καὶ φρόνησιν αὐτὴν ἐμβλέπον, τοῖς νοητοῖς | [393] ἀγάμμασιν ἐντεύξεται, ὧν ἡ θέα ψυχαγωγούσα πρὸς οὐδὲν ἔτι τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἀπονεύειν ἐάσει.

4 καὶ τί θαυμάζομεν, εἰ τῷ νηφαλίῳ τῆς ψυχῆς καὶ βλέποντι ὄξυωπέστατα τῶν γένεσιν λαχόντων μηδὲν ἔστιν ἰσότιμον; καὶ γὰρ οἱ τοῦ σώματος ὀφθαλμοὶ καὶ τὸ αἰσθητὸν φῶς περιττῶς πρὸς ἡμῶν πάντων τετίμηται· πολλοὶ γοῦν τῶν τὰς ὄψεις ἀποβαλόντων καὶ τὸ ζῆν ἐκουσίως προσὰπ-
 5 βεβαλον κουφότερον κακὸν πηρώσεως θάνατον εἶναι δικάσαντες ἑαυτοῖς. ὅσω τοίνυν ψυχὴ σώματος κρείττων, τοσοῦτω καὶ νοῦς ὀφθαλμῶν ἀμείνων. ὃς εἶπερ ἀπήμων εἶη καὶ ἀζήμιος πρὸς μηδενὸς τῶν μέθην παράφορον ἐργαζομένων ἀδικημάτων ἢ παθῶν πιεσθεῖς, ὕπνω μὲν ἀποτάξεται λήθην καὶ ὄκνον ἐμποιοῦντι τῶν πρακτέων, ἐργήγορσιν δὲ ἀσπασάμενος πρὸς τὰ θεῶν ἄξια πάντα ὄξυδορκήσει, μνήμαις μὲν ὑποβαλλούσαις ἐγειρόμενος, πράξεισι δὲ τοῖς γνωσθεῖσιν ἐπομέναις χρώμενος.

6 Π. Τοῦ μὲν δὴ νήφοντος κατάστασις ἔστι τοιαύτη. “νεώτερον” δ’ ὅταν φῆ “υἰόν,” οὐχ ἡλικίας ὄνομα ἀναγράφει, νεωτεροποιῖαν δὲ ἀγα-

ON SOBRIETY, 3-6

or of political power—or bodily strength—or what among all the objects of human admiration, if only we may assume that the soul's eye is nowhere suffused as by rheum or closed, but is able to open itself fully and completely? For at such times when with clarity of vision it gazes upon good sense and prudence in their true selves, it will have within its ken those ideal forms which are intelligible only to the mind, and in the contemplation of these will find a spell which will not suffer it to turn aside any more to aught of the objects of sense. And why should 4 we wonder that sobriety and clear-sightedness in the soul is of higher worth than anything whose lot is cast among things created, for the bodily eyes and the light which our senses perceive are valued above measure by us all? We know indeed that many who have lost their eyes have lost their lives as well by their own free action, because they judged that death was a lighter evil to them than blindness. Well then, the mind has the same superiority to the 5 eyes, as the soul has to the body. And if the mind be safe and unimpaired, free from the oppression of the iniquities or passions which produce the frenzy of drunkenness, it will renounce the slumber which makes us forget and shrink from the call of duty and welcoming wakefulness will gaze clear-eyed on all that is worthy of contemplation. The suggestions of memory will arouse it to decision and the actions to which these decisions lead will become its employment.

II. Such then is the condition of the sober. But 6 when Moses speaks of the "younger son," the words do not denote any particular degree of age, but suggest the tendency of the temperament which πῶντος ἐμφαίνει τρόπου διάθεσιν. ἐπεὶ πῶς ἂν ἢ τὰ ἀθέατα κατιδεῖν παρὰ νόμον καὶ δίκην ἐβίασατο ἢ ἐκλαλήσαι τὰ ὀφείλοντα ἡσυχάζεσθαι ἢ εἰς τοῦμ-φανές προενεγκεῖν τὰ δυνάμενα οἴκοι συσκιάζε-σθαι καὶ τοὺς ψυχῆς ὄρους μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν, εἰ μὴ νεωτέρων πραγμάτων ἤπτετο γελῶν τὰ ἑτέροις συμπίπτοντα, δέον ἐπιστένειν καὶ μὴ χλευάζειν ἐφ' οἷς εἰκὸς ἦν καὶ εὐλαβούμενον τὸ μέλλον σκυθρω-7 πάζειν;                      πολλαχοῦ μέντοι τῆς νομοθεσίας καὶ τοὺς ἡλικία προήκοντας νέους καὶ τοὺς μηδέπω γεγηρακότας ἔμπαλιν ὀνομάζει πρεσβυτέ-ρους, οὐκ εἰς πολυετίαν <καὶ ὀλιγοετίαν> ἀφορῶν ἢ βραχὺν καὶ μήκιστον χρόνον, ἀλλ' εἰς ψυχῆς 8 δυνάμεις κινουμένης εὖ τε καὶ χεῖρον· τὸν γοῦν Ἰσμαῆλ εἰκοσαετίαν ἤδη που βεβιωκότα σχεδὸν κατὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸν ἐν ἀρεταῖς τέλειον Ἰσαὰκ σύγκρισιν ὀνομάζει παιδίον· “ ἔλαβε ” γάρ φησιν “ ἄρτους καὶ ἀσκὸν ὕδατος καὶ ἔδωκεν Ἄγαρ, καὶ ἐπέθηκεν ἐπὶ τὸν ὦμον καὶ τὸ παιδίον, ” ἠνίκα αὐτοὺς οἰκοθεν Ἀβραὰμ ἐξέπεμψε, καὶ πάλιν “ ἔρριψε τὸ παιδίον ὑποκάτω μιᾶς ἐλάτης, ” καὶ “ οὐ μὴ ἴδω τὸν θάνατον τοῦ παιδίου ”· καίτοι πρὸ μὲν τῆς γενέσεως Ἰσαὰκ τρισκαίδεκα γεγονὼς ἐτῶν Ἰσμαῆλ περιτέμνεται, περὶ δὲ τὴν ἑπταετίην ἡλικίαν παυσάμενον τῆς ἐν γάλακτι τροφῆς ἐκείνου τῷ τὴν ἐν παιδιαῖς ἰσότητα φέρεσθαι νόθος γνησιῶ

PHILO

 [394] | φύγαδεύεται σὺν τῇ τεκούσῃ. ἀλλ' ὁμως παιδίον
 9

<sup>a</sup> Philo reads into νεωτεροποιία, in which νεωτερο- means “innovation,” the idea of νεώτερος, “younger.”

<sup>b</sup> βιάζεσθαι followed by the inf. is used by Philo in the sense of “to do a thing violently,” cf. note on De Ebr. 143.

ON SOBRIETY, 6-9

loves rebelliousness and defiance.<sup>a</sup> For how could Ham thus roughly <sup>b</sup> defying custom and right have looked where he should not look, or how could he loudly proclaim what ought to be passed in silence, or expose to public view what might well be hidden in the secrecy of the home and never pass the boundaries of his inward thoughts, if he had not set his hand to deeds of defiance, if he had not mocked at the troubles of another, when he should rather bewail, instead of jeering at sights which call for the gloomy face that dreads the worse to come?

Often indeed does Moses in his laws give the name of 7 the "younger" to those who are advanced in years, and the name of "elders" on the other hand to those who have not yet reached old age, for he does not consider whether the years of men are many or few, or whether a period of time is short or long, but he looks to the faculties of the soul whether its movements are good or ill. Accordingly when Ishmael 8 had apparently lived about twenty years, Moses calls him a child by comparison with Isaac, who is full grown in virtues. For we read that when Abraham sent Hagar and Ishmael from his home, "he took loaves and a skin of water, and gave them to Hagar and put also the 'child' on her shoulder," and again "she cast down the 'child' under a single pine," and "I will not see the death of the 'child'" (Gen. xxi. 14-16). And yet Ishmael was circumcised at the age of thirteen years, before the birth of Isaac, and when the latter at about the age of seven ceased to be fed with milk, we find Ishmael banished with his mother, because he, the bastard, claimed to play on equal terms with the true-born. Still all 9 the same, grown up as he was, he is called a child, νεανίας ὧν ἦδη καλεῖται ὁ σοφιστῆς ἀντεξεταζόμενος σοφῶ· σοφίαν μὲν γὰρ Ἰσαάκ, σοφιστείαν δὲ Ἰσμαὴλ κεκλήρωται, ὡς, ἐπειδὴν ἑκάτερον χαρακτηρίζωμεν, ἐν τοῖς ἰδίᾳ λόγοις ἐπιδείκνυμεν. ὄν γὰρ ἔχει λόγον κομιδῆ νήπιον παιδίον πρὸς ἄνδρα τέλειον, τοῦτον καὶ σοφιστῆς πρὸς σοφὸν καὶ τὰ ἐγκύκλια τῶν μαθημάτων πρὸς τὰς ἐν ἀρεταῖς

PHILO

- 10 ἐπιστήμας. III. καὶ ἐν ᾧδῇ μέντοι μείζονι τὸν λεῶν ἅπαντα, ὁπότε νεωτερίζοι, τὸ τῆς ἄφρονος καὶ νηπίας ὄνομα ἡλικίας, τέκνα, καλεῖ· “ δίκαιος ” γὰρ φησι “ καὶ ὁσιος ὁ κύριος· ἡμάρτον οὐκ αὐτῷ τέκνα μωμητά; γενεὰ σκολιὰ καὶ διεστραμμένη, ταῦτα κυρίῳ ἀνταποδίδοτε; οὕτως λαὸς 11 μωρὸς καὶ οὐχὶ σοφός; ” οὐκοῦν τέκνα ἐναργῶς ὠνόμακε τοὺς μώμους ἔχοντας ἄνδρας ἐν ψυχῇ καὶ μωρία καὶ ἀνοία τὰ πολλὰ σφαλλομένους ἐν ταῖς κατὰ τὸν ὀρθὸν βίον πράξεσιν, οὐκ εἰς τὰς ἐν παισὶ σώματος ἡλικίας ἀπιδῶν, ἀλλ’ εἰς τὸ τῆς διανοίας ἀλόγιστον καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν βρεφῶδες.
12 οὕτως μέντοι καὶ Ῥαχὴλ, ἡ σώματος εὐμορφία, νεωτέρα Λείας, τοῦ κατὰ ψυχὴν κάλλους, ἀναγράφεται· ἡ μὲν γὰρ θνητῆ, τὸ δ’ ἐστὶν ἀθάνατον, καὶ ὅσα μέντοι τίμια πρὸς αἴσθησιν, ἐνὸς μόνου τοῦ κατὰ ψυχὴν κάλλους ἀτελέστερα. οἷς ἀκολουθεῖ καὶ τὸν Ἰωσήφ νέον τε καὶ νεώτατον αἰεὶ λέγεσθαι· καὶ γάρ, ὅταν ἐπιστατῆ τῆς ποιμένης μετὰ τῶν νόθων ἀδελφῶν, νέος προσαγορεύεται, καὶ ὅταν εὐχῆται ὁ πατὴρ αὐτῷ φησὶν· “ υἱὸς

<sup>a</sup> Exod. xv. being the “ lesser song ” of Moses; cf. De Plant. 59.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 510.

ON SOBRIETY, 9-12

thus marking the contrast between the sophist and the sage. For wisdom is Isaac's inheritance and sophistry Ishmael's, as we propose to shew in the special treatise, when we deal with the characteristics of the two. For the mere infant bears the same relation to the full-grown man as the sophist does to the sage, or the school subjects to the sciences which deal with virtues. III. And indeed in the 10 Greater Song,<sup>a</sup> he calls the whole people when they shew a rebellious spirit, by the name which belongs to the age of folly and babyhood, that is "bairns." "The Lord is just and holy," he says; "have not the blameworthy bairns sinned against him? a crooked and perverse generation, is it thus that ye requite the Lord? Are ye a people thus foolish and not wise?" (Deut. xxxii. 4-6). We see clearly that he has 11 given the name of "bairns" or "children" to men within whose souls are grounds for blame, men who so often fall through folly and senselessness and fail to do what the upright life requires. And in this he had no thought of literal age in the sense in which we use it of the bodies of the young, but of their truly 'infantine lack of a reasonable understanding.

Thus Rachel, who is comeliness of the 12 body, is described as younger than Leah, that is beauty of soul. For the former is mortal, the latter immortal, and indeed all the things that are precious to the senses are inferior in perfection to beauty of soul,<sup>b</sup> though they are many and it but one.

It is in accordance with this that Joseph is always called the young and youngest. For when he is keeping the flock with his bastard brothers,<sup>b</sup> he is spoken of as young (Gen. xxxvii. 2), and when his father prays for him he says, "my youngest son,

PHILO

- 13 ηὐξημένος νεώτατος πρὸς μὲ ἀνάστρεψον.” οὗτος δέ ἐστιν ὁ τῆς περὶ τὸ σῶμα ἀπάσης ὑπέρμαχος δυνάμεως καὶ ὁ τῆς τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀφθονίας ἀκολάκευτος ἑταῖρος, ὁ <τὸ> τῆς πρεσβυτέρας ψυχῆς πρεσβύτερον καὶ τιμιώτερον ἀγαθὸν μήπω τέλειον εὐρημένος. εἰ γὰρ εὖρητο, κἂν ὄλην Αἴγυπτον ἀμεταστρεπτὶ φεύγων ᾤχετο· νυνὶ δὲ ἐπὶ τῷ τρέφειν αὐτὴν καὶ τιθηνοκομεῖν μάλιστα σεμνύνεται, ἧς τὸ μάχιμον καὶ ἡγεμονεῦον ὅταν ἴδῃ ὁ ὀρώων καταπεποντωμένον καὶ διεφθαρμένον, ὕμνον
- 14 εἰς τὸν θεὸν ᾄδει. νέος μὲν οὖν τρόπος ὁ μήπω δυνάμενος μετὰ τῶν γνησίων ἀδελφῶν<sup>1</sup> ποιμαίνειν, τὸ δ' ἐστὶ τῆς κατὰ ψυχὴν ἀλόγου φύσεως ἄρχειν τε καὶ ἐπιτροπεύειν, ἀλλ' ἔτι μετὰ τῶν <νόθων, οἷς τῶν> ἀγαθῶν τὰ δοκῆσει<sup>2</sup> πρὸ τῶν γνησίων καὶ τῷ
- 15 εἶναι παραριθμουμένων τετίμηται. νεώτατος δέ, κἂν ἐπίδοσιν καὶ αὐξήσιν πρὸς τὸ ἄμεινον λάβῃ, παρὰ τῷ τελείῳ νενόμισται μόνον ἀγαθὸν ἡγουμένῳ τὸ καλόν· οὐ χάριν προτρέπων φησί· “πρὸς μὲ ἀνάστρεψον,” ἴσον τῷ πρεσβυτέρας γνώμης ὀρέχθητι, μὴ πάντα νεωτέριζε, ἤδη ποτὲ τὴν ἀρετὴν δι'
- [395] αὐτὴν μόνην | στέρξον, μὴ καθάπερ παῖς ἄφρων τῇ τῶν τυχηρῶν λαμπρότητι περιουγαζόμενος ἀπάτης καὶ ψευδοῦς δόξης ἀναπίμπλασο.
- 16 IV. Ὡς μὲν τοίνυν πολλαχοῦ νέον οὐκ εἰς τὴν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀρετῶν or εὐρετῶν: Adler suggests ἀρετῆς νίων.

<sup>2</sup> Wendland reads for the μετὰ τῶν ἀγαθῶν τὰ δοκῆσει of the MSS. μετὰ τῶν νόθων <οἷς> τὰ δοκῆσει and inserts ἀγαθῶν after παραριθμουμένων, producing the same meaning as the text here printed (after Adler), but with less transcriptional probability.

<sup>a</sup> So, with slight differences, the LXX. The Hebrew is entirely different.

ON SOBRIETY, 12-16

though grown, return to me" (Gen. xlix. 22).<sup>a</sup> Now Joseph is the champion of bodily ability of 13 every kind, and the staunch and sincere henchman of abundance in external things, but the treasure which ranks in value and seniority above these, the seniority of the soul, he has never yet gained in its fullness. For if he had gained it, he would have fled quite away from the length and breadth of Egypt, and never turned to look back. But as it is, he finds his chief glory in cherishing and fostering it—this Egypt over which the Man of Vision sings his hymn of triumph to God when he sees its fighters and its leaders sunk in the sea and sent to perdition. The 14 "young" disposition, then, is one which cannot as yet play the part of shepherd with its true-born brothers, that is, rule and keep guard over the unreasoning element in the soul, but still consorts with the base-born, who honour as goods such things as are good in appearance rather than the genuine goods which are reckoned as belonging to true existence. And "youngest" too this youth is held 15 to be, even though he has received improvement and growth to something better,<sup>b</sup> when compared with the perfect or full-grown mind which holds moral beauty to be the only good. And therefore Jacob uses words of exhortation: "return to me," he says, that is, desire the older way of thinking. Let not your spirit in all things be the spirit of restless youth. The time is come that you should love virtue for its own sake only. Do not like a foolish boy be dazzled by the brightness of fortune's gifts and fill yourself with deceit and false opinion.

IV. We have shewn, then, that it is Moses' wont 16

<sup>b</sup> These words interpret the ἡὺξήμενος of the quotation.

PHILO

- σώματος ἀκμήν, ἀλλ' εἰς τὴν ψυχῆς νεωτεροποιίαν ἀφορῶν εἴωθε καλεῖν, ἐπιδέδεικται. ὡς δὲ καὶ πρεσβύτερον οὐ τὸν γῆρα κατεσχημένον, ἀλλὰ τὸν
- 17 γέρως καὶ τιμῆς ἄξιον ὀνομάζει, δηλώσομεν. τίς οὖν ἀγνοεῖ τῶν ἐντετυχηκότων ταῖς ἱερωτάταις βίβλοις, ὅτι σχεδὸν τῶν προγόνων ἑαυτοῦ πάντων ὁ σοφὸς Ἀβραὰμ ὀλιγοχροινιώτατος εἰσάγεται; κἀκείνων μὲν, οἶμαι, οἱ μακροβιώτατοι γεγόνασιν, οὐδὲ εἰς, οὐτοσί δὲ ἀναγέγραπται πρεσβύτερος· φασὶ γοῦν οἱ χρησμοί, ὅτι “Ἀβραὰμ ἦν πρεσβύτερος προβεβηκῶς καὶ κύριος εὐλόγησε τὸν
- 18 Ἀβραὰμ κατὰ πάντα.” τοῦτό μοι δοκεῖ τὸ προκείμενον αἰτίας ἀπόδοσις εἶναι, δι' ἣν πρεσβύτερος ἐλέχθη ὁ σοφός· ἐπιφροσύνῃ γὰρ θεοῦ τὸ λογικὸν τῆς ψυχῆς μέρος ὅταν εὖ διατεθῆ καὶ μὴ καθ' ἓν εἶδος ἀλλὰ κατὰ πάσας τὰς ἐπιβολὰς εὐλογιστῆ, πρεσβυτέρα χρώμενον γνώμη καὶ αὐτὸ
- 19 δῆπου πρεσβυτέρον ἐστίν. οὕτως καὶ τοὺς συνέδρους τοῦ θεοφιλοῦς τὸν δέκα<sup>1</sup> ἑβδομάδων ἀριθμὸν εἰληχότας πρεσβυτέρους ὀνομάζειν ἔθος· λέγεται γάρ· “συνάγαγέ μοι ἑβδομήκοντα ἄνδρας ἀπὸ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων Ἰσραὴλ, οὓς αὐτὸς σὺ
- 20 οἶδας ὅτι οὗτοί εἰσι πρεσβύτεροι.” οὐκοῦν οὐ τοὺς ὑπὸ τῶν τυχόντων γέροντας νομιζομένους ὡς ἱεροφάντας, ἀλλ' οὓς ὁ σοφὸς οἶδε μόνος, τῆς τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔνδεκα.

<sup>a</sup> There is a play here on γήρας and γέρας. If it is worth keeping, we might translate “by advance of years—of advance in honour.” Cf. Quis Rer. Div. Her. 291, where γήρας is said to be τὸ γέρως ἀδελφὸν καὶ παρώνυμον.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 510.

<sup>c</sup> The sense would be clearer without ὡς ἱεροφάντας.

ON SOBRIETY, 16-20

in many places to call a person young, thinking not of his bodily vigour, but only of his soul, and the spirit of rebelliousness which it displays. And now we will go on to shew that he applies the name of elder not to one who is bowed down with old age, but to one who is worthy of precedence<sup>a</sup> and honour. Everyone who is versed in the sacred books knows 17 that the wise Abraham is represented as more short-lived than almost all his forefathers. And yet, I think, to not a single one of these, long though their span of life beyond comparison was, is the term elder applied, but only to Abraham. This is seen by the words of the oracles, "Abraham was an elder advanced in years, and God blessed him in everything" (Gen. xxiv. 1). The phrase thus set before us<sup>b</sup> seems 18 to me to be an explanation of the reason why the Sage is called elder. For when through the watchful care of God the rational part of the soul is brought into a good condition and reasons rightly not merely in one direction, but wherever it applies itself, the thoughts which it thinks are "older" and itself must needs be older also. Thus too it is Moses' 19 way to give the name of "elder" to those counsellors of the God-beloved, whose apportioned number was that of seven times ten. For we find "gather to me seventy men from the elders of Israel, whom thou thyself knowest that these are elders" (Numb. xi. 16). We see then that not the men of senior age, 20 whom the common herd regard as initiators to the holy mysteries,<sup>c</sup> but those whom the Sage alone knows were held worthy by God of the title of

As it stands, it must mean that the common opinion looks upon the old in age as the proper persons for such high functions. But νομίσειν ὡς is a rare construction.

PHILO

πρεσβυτέρων ἠξίωσε προσήσεως· οὓς μὲν γὰρ ἂν οὗτος ἀποδοκιμάσῃ καθάπερ ἀργυραμοιβὸς ἀγαθὸς ἐκ τοῦ τῆς ἀρετῆς νομίσματος, κεκιβδηλευμένοι νεωτεροποιοὶ τὰς ψυχὰς ἅπαντες· οὓς δ' ἂν γνωρίμους ἐθέλῃσῃ ποιήσασθαι, δόκιμοί τε καὶ τὸ φρόνημα πρεσβύτεροι κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖόν εἰσιν.

21 V. ἐνὶ μέντοι νόμου διατάγματι τοῖς ἀκούειν ἐπισταμένοις ἐκάτερον ὧν εἶπον ἐναργέστερον φανέται δεδηλωκώς· “ἐὰν γὰρ γένωνται” φησὶν “ἀνθρώπῳ δύο γυναῖκες, ἡγαπημένη καὶ μισουμένη, καὶ τέκωσιν αὐτῷ ἢ ἡγαπημένη καὶ ἢ μισουμένη, καὶ γένηται υἱὸς πρωτότοκος τῆς μισουμένης, ἣ ἂν ἡμέρα κληροδοτῇ τοῖς υἱοῖς τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, οὐ δυνήσεται πρωτοτοκεῦσαι τῷ υἱῷ τῆς ἡγαπημένης ὑπεριδὼν τὸν υἱὸν τῆς μισουμένης τὸν πρωτότοκον· ἀλλὰ τὸν πρωτότοκον υἱὸν τῆς μισουμένης ἐπιγνώσεται, δοῦναι αὐτῷ διπλᾶ ἀπὸ πάντων ὧν ἐὰν εὐρεθῇ αὐτῷ, ὅτι οὗτός ἐστιν ἀρχὴ τέκνων αὐτοῦ καὶ τούτῳ καθήκει τὰ πρωτοτόκια.”

22 [396] | παρατετήρηκας ἤδη, ὅτι τὸν μὲν τῆς στεργομένης υἱὸν οὐδέποτε πρωτότοκον ἢ πρεσβύτερον καλεῖ, τὸν δὲ τῆς μισουμένης πολλάκις· καίτοι τοῦ μὲν τὴν γένεσιν προτέρου, τοῦ δὲ ἐκ τῆς στυγουμένης ὑστέρου δεδήλωκεν εὐθύς ἀρχόμενος τῆς προστάξεως· “ἐὰν γὰρ τέκωσι” φησὶν “ἢ ἡγαπημένη καὶ ἢ μισουμένη.” ἀλλ' ὅμως τὸ μὲν τῆς προτέρας γέννημα, κἂν πολυχρονιώτερον ἢ, νεώτερον παρ' ὀρθῷ λόγῳ δικάζοντι νενόμισται, τὸ δὲ τῆς ὑστέρας,

<sup>a</sup> Or “take as his familiars.”

<sup>b</sup> Philo argues that the age (in the literal sense) of the two sons is shewn by the order in which the motherhood of “elders.” For those whom the Sage like a good money-changer rejects from the currency of virtue are all men of dross, men with the spirit of youth-like rebellion in their souls. But those whom he has willed to consider as known to him <sup>a</sup> are tested and approved and must needs be elders in heart and mind.

ON SOBRIETY, 20-22

V. Indeed there is one command-<sup>21</sup>ment of the law in which those who have ears to hear will perceive that he sets before us still more clearly the two truths of which I have spoken. For we read “if a man has two wives, one loved and the other hated, and the beloved and the hated each bear a son to him, and the son of her that is hated is the firstborn, it shall be that on the day on which he allots his goods to his sons, he shall not be able to give the right of the firstborn to the son of her whom he loves, and set aside the firstborn, the son of her whom he hates, but he shall acknowledge the firstborn, the son of her whom he hates, to give him a double portion of all that he has gotten; for he is the beginning of his children and to him belong the rights of the firstborn” (Deut. xxi. 15-17). You observe at once that the son of the beloved wife<sup>22</sup> is never called by him “firstborn” or “elder,” but the son of the hated wife is so called often. And yet at the very beginning of the commandment he has shewn us that the birth of the former comes first and the birth of the latter afterwards.<sup>b</sup> For he writes, “if the beloved and the hated bear children.” But all the same the issue of the wife mentioned first, though his years be more, is counted as younger in the judgement of right reason, while the child of the two wives is mentioned. This meaning would come out more clearly if we read πρωτέρων . . . ὑστέραν.

PHILO

- κὰν ἐν τοῖς κατὰ τὴν γένεσιν χρόνοις ὑστερίζη, τῆς μείζονος καὶ πρεσβυτέρας μοίρας ἠξίωται.
- 23 διὰ τί; ὅτι τῶν γυναικῶν τὴν μὲν στεργομένην ἠδονῆς, τὴν δὲ στυγουμένην φρονήσεως εἶναί φαμεν σύμβολον· τῆς μὲν γὰρ ὁ πολὺς ὄμιλος ἀνθρώπων τὴν συνουσίαν ὑπερφυῶς ἀγαπᾷ δελέατα καὶ φίλτρα ἐξ ἑαυτῆς ἐπαγωγότατα ἐνδιδούσης ἀπὸ γενέσεως ἀρχῆς ἄχρι πανυστάτου γήρως, τῆς δὲ ἐκτόπως τὸ αὐστηρὸν καὶ περίσεμνον διαμεμίσηκε καθάπερ οἱ ἄφρονες παῖδες τὰς τῶν γονέων καὶ τρεφόντων ὠφελιμωτάτας μὲν ἀτερπεστάτας δὲ
- 24 ὑφηγῆσεις. τίκτουσι δ' ἀμφότεροι, ἡ μὲν τὸν φιλήδονον, ἡ δ' αὖ τὸν φιλάρετον ἐν ψυχῇ τρόπον.
 ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν φιλήδονος ἀτελής καὶ ὄντως αἰεὶ παῖς ἐστὶ, κὰν εἰς πολυετίας αἰῶνα μήκιστον ἀφίκηται, ὁ δ' αὖ φιλάρετος ἐν γερουσίᾳ τῆς φρονήσεως ἐξ ἔτι σπαργάνων, τὸ τοῦ λόγου δὴ τοῦτο, ἀγήρως
- 25 ὧν τάττεται· παρὸ καὶ λίαν ἐμφαντικῶς εἴρηκεν ἐπὶ τοῦ τῆς μισουμένης ὑπὸ τῶν πολλῶν ἀρετῆς γεγονότος, ὅτι “ οὗτός ἐστιν ἀρχὴ τέκνων,” καὶ τάξει καὶ ἡγεμονίᾳ δήπου πρῶτος ὧν, “ καὶ τούτῳ καθήκει τὰ πρωτοτόκια ” νόμῳ φύσεως, οὐκ ἀνομίᾳ τῇ παρ' ἀνθρώποις.
- 26 VI. Ἐπόμενος οὖν αὐτῷ καὶ ὡσπερ ἐπὶ προτεθέντα σκοπὸν ἀφιεῖς εὐστόχως τὰ βέλη κατὰ ἀκολουθίαν εἰσάγει τὸν Ἰακώβ γενέσει μὲν τοῦ Ἡσαῦ νεώτερον—ὅτι ἀφροσύνη μὲν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐστὶν ἡμῖν σύντροφος, ὀψίγονος δ' ὁ τοῦ καλοῦ ζῆλος—, δυνάμει δὲ πρεσβύτερον· παρὸ καὶ

<sup>a</sup> See De Ebr. 48 (and note).

ON SOBRIETY, 22-26

the wife mentioned afterwards, though he be later in the date of his birth, is held worthy of the greater and senior portion. Why? Because we declare that in the beloved wife we have a figure of pleasure and in the hated wife a figure of prudence. For pleasure's company is beloved beyond measure by the great mass of men, because from the hour of their birth to the utmost limits of old age she produces and sets before them such enticing lures and love-charms; while for prudence, severe and august as she is, they have a strange and profound hatred, as foolish children hate the most wholesome but most distasteful directions of their parents and those who have the charge of them. Both are mothers; pleasure of the pleasure-loving, prudence of the virtue-loving tendency in the soul. But the former is never full grown but always in reality a child, however long and never-ending the tale of years to which he attains. But the other—the virtue-lover—is exempt from old age, yet “from the cradle,” as the phrase goes, he ranks as an elder in the senate of prudence. And therefore he says—and very forcible are his words—of the son of the hated wife—virtue who is hated by the multitude—that he is “the beginning of his children,” and truly so, because he is first in rank and precedence—and again, “to him belong the rights of the firstborn,” by the law of nature,<sup>a</sup> not by the no-law which prevails among men.

VI. Following this law consistently and aiming his arrows skilfully at the mark he has set before him, Moses shews us Jacob as younger in years than Esau, but older in worth and value, since folly is congenital to us from our earliest years, but the desire for moral excellence is a later birth, and

PHILO

- τῶν πρωτοτοκίων ὁ μὲν Ἡσαῦ ἐξίσταται, μετα-27 ποιείται δ' οὗτος εἰκότως. τούτοις συνάδει καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῶν υἱῶν Ἰωσήφ ἐκ πολλῆς περισκέψεως ἀνεζητημένα, ἥνικα ἐνθουσιῶν ὁ σοφὸς ἀντικρὺς παρεστηκότων οὐκ ἐπιτίθησι ταῖς κεφαλαῖς ἐξ ἐναντίας καὶ κατ' εὐθὺ τὰς χεῖρας ἐπενεγκῶν, ἀλλ' ἐναλλάξας, ὅπως τῇ μὲν εὐωνύμῳ τοῦ πρεσβυτέρου δοκοῦντος εἶναι, τοῦ δὲ νεωτέρου 28 τῇ δεξιᾷ ψαύσῃ. καλεῖται δ' ὁ μὲν [ἐν] γενέσει πρεσβύτερος Μανασσῆς, ὁ δὲ νεώτερος Ἐφραῖμ· ταῦτα δ' εἰ μεταληφθεῖη τὰ ὀνόματα εἰς Ἑλλάδα γλῶτταν, μνήμης καὶ ἀναμνήσεως εὐρεθήσεται [397] σύμβολα· ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ | Μανασσῆς μὲν “ἐκ λήθης” — τὸ δ' ἐστὶν ὀνόματι ἐτέρῳ καλούμενον ἀνάμνησις· ὁ γὰρ ὢν ἐπελάθετο εἰς ἀνάμνησιν ἐρχόμενος ἔξω πρόεισι τῆς λήθης—, Ἐφραῖμ δὲ καρποφορία, μνήμης πρόσρησις οἰκειοτάτη, διότι καρπὸς ὠφελιμώτατος καὶ τῷ ὄντι ἐδώδιμος ψυχαῖς τὸ ἄληστον ἐν ταῖς ἀδιαστάτοις <μνήμῃαι>.<sup>1</sup> 29 μνήμῃαι μὲν οὖν ἠνδρωμένοις ἤδη καὶ παγίοις συντυγχάνουσι, παρὸ καὶ νεώτεραι ἐνομίσθησαν ὀψὲ φυόμεναι· λήθη δὲ καὶ ἀνάμνησις ἐπαλλήλως σχεδὸν ἐκ πρώτης ἡλικίας ἐκάστω σύνεισιν, οὐ ἔνεκα τὰ χρόνου πρεσβεῖα εὐρηνται καὶ ἐπ' εὐωνύμοις παρὰ σοφῶ ταξιαρχοῦντι τάττονται· τῶν δὲ ἀρετῆς αἱ μνήμῃαι κοινωνήσουσι πρεσβείων, ἃς ὁ θεοφιλῆς δεξιωσάμενος τῆς ἀμείνονος παρ' ἑαυτῷ μοίρας ἀξιώσει.
- 30 Νήψας οὖν ὁ δίκαιος καὶ γνοὺς ὅσα “ἐποίησεν

<sup>1</sup> Wendland ἐν μνήμῃαι ἀδιαστάτοις.

ON SOBRIETY, 26-30

therefore Esau is forced to surrender the inheritance of the firstborn to the rightful claims of Jacob.

The same truth is borne out by the 27 story of the sons of Joseph, a story which shews rich and careful thought.<sup>a</sup> The sage, we read, under inspiration lays his hands on the heads of the boys who stood opposite him, but lays them not straight in front but crosswise, meaning to touch with his left hand the boy who seemed the elder and the younger with his right (Gen. xlviii. 13, 14). Now the 28 elder boy is called Manasseh and the younger Ephraim—and if these names are translated into Greek we shall find they represent “reminiscence” and “memory.” For Manasseh is by interpretation “from forgetfulness,” another name for which is reminiscence, since anyone who is reminded of what he has forgotten, issues from a state of forgetfulness. Ephraim on the other hand is “fruit-bearing,” a very suitable title for memory; since truth unforgotten, because memory has been unbroken, is a fruit most profitable, a real food to souls. Now memories belong to those who have 29 reached settled manhood and therefore as being late-born are accounted younger. But forgetfulness and recollection follow in succession in each of us almost from our earliest years. And therefore theirs is the seniority in time and a place on the left, when the Sage marshals his ranks. But in seniority of virtue memories will have their share, and the God-beloved will lay on them his right hand and adjudge them worthy of the better portion which is his to give.

To resume. When the just man has returned to 30

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. iii. 90-93.

PHILO

- αὐτῷ ὁ νεώτερος αὐτοῦ υἱὸς ᾧ ἀρὰς χαλεπωτάτας τίθεται· τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ὅταν ὁ νοῦς ἠψῆθῃ, κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον εὐθύς αἰσθάνεται ὅσα ἢ νεωτεροποιὸς ἐν αὐτῷ κακία πρότερον εἰργάζετο, ἃ μεθύων
- 31 ἀδυνάτως καταλαβεῖν εἶχε. VII. τίνι μέντοι καταραῖται, σκεπτέον· ἐν γάρ τι καὶ τοῦτο τῶν ἐρεύνης ἀξίων ἐστίν, ἐπειδήπερ οὐ τῷ δοκοῦντι ἡμαρτηκέναι παιδί, ἀλλὰ τῷ ἐκείνου μὲν υἱῷ, ἑαυτοῦ δὲ υἰώνῳ, οὗ φανερόν οὐδὲν εἶς γε τὸ παρὸν ἀδίκημα,
- 32 οὐ μικρὸν οὐ μέγα, δεδήλωκεν· ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἐκ περιεργίας ἰδεῖν τὸν πατέρα γυμνὸν ἐβελήσας καὶ γελάσας ἃ εἶδε καὶ ἐκλαλήσας<sup>1</sup> τὰ δεόντως ἡσυχασθέντα ὁ υἱὸς ἦν τοῦ Νῶε Χάμ, ὁ δὲ ἐφ' οἷς ἕτερος ἠδίκησε τὰς αἰτίας ἔχων καὶ τὰς ἀρὰς καρπούμενος Χαναάν ἐστι· λέγεται γὰρ “ἐπικατάρατος Χαναάν· παῖς οἰκέτης [δούλος δούλων]<sup>2</sup> ἔσται τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς
- 33 αὐτοῦ.” τί γὰρ ἡμάρτηκεν, ὡς ἔφην, οὗτος; ἀλλ' ἐσκέψαντο μὲν ἐφ' ἑαυτῶν ἴσως οἷς ἔθος ἀκριβοῦν τὰς ῥητὰς καὶ προχείρους ἀποδόσεις ἐν τοῖς νόμοις· ἡμεῖς δὲ πειθόμενοι τῷ ὑποβάλλοντι ὀρθῶ λόγῳ τὴν ἐγκειμένην ἀπόδοσιν διερμηνεύσωμεν ἐκεῖνα ἀναγκαίως προειπόντες·
- 34 VIII. σχέσις καὶ κίνησις διαφέρουσιν ἀλλήλων· ἡ μὲν γὰρ ἐστὶν ἡρεμία, φορὰ δὲ ἡ κίνησις· ἥς εἶδη δύο, τὸ μὲν μεταβατικόν, τὸ δὲ περὶ τὸν αὐτὸν τόπον εἰλούμενον. σχέσει μὲν οὖν | ἀδελφὸν ἕξις,
- [398] κινήσει δ' ἐνέργεια. τὸ δὲ λεγόμενον
- 35 παραδείγματι οἰκείῳ γνωριμώτερον γένοιτ' ἂν·

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκ(ἐγ)γελάσας.

<sup>2</sup> See App. p. 510.

* See App. p. 511.

ON SOBRIETY, 30-35

soberness and knows " what his younger son has done to him," he utters curses stern and deep. For indeed when the mind becomes sober, it must follow that it at once perceives the former doings of the young rebellious wickedness within it, doings which in its drunken state it was incapable of comprehending.

VII. But who is it that he curses? Let us con- 31 sider this, for this too is one of the questions which deserve our careful search, seeing that the person cursed is not the apparent sinner, Noah's son, but that son's son, Noah's grandson, though up to this point no clear wrongdoing great or small on his part has been indicated by Moses. It was Noah's son 32 Ham, who from idle curiosity wished to see his father naked, and laughed at what he saw and proclaimed aloud what it was right to leave untold. But it is Canaan who is charged with another's misdeeds and reaps the curses. For it is said, " Cursed be Canaan ; a servant, a bondman shall be to his brethren " (Gen. ix. 25).

What, I repeat, 33 was his offence? Perhaps this question has been considered on their own principles by those who are used to discuss in details the literal and outward interpretation of the laws. Let us rather in obedience to the suggestions of right reason expound in full the inward interpretation. Something, however, must be said by way of preface.

VIII. The 34 state of rest <sup>a</sup> and the state of motion differ from each other. While the former is static, the latter is dynamic and is of two kinds, one passing from point to point, the other revolving round a fixed place. Habit is akin to rest, as activity is to motion.

These remarks might be made 35 more intelligible by a suitable illustration. The car-

PHILO

- τέκτονα καὶ ζωγράφου καὶ γεωργὸν καὶ μουσικὸν καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους <sup>ἀνθρώπων</sup> τεχνίτας, κἄν ἡσυχίαν ἄγωσι μηδὲν τῶν κατὰ τὰς τέχνας ἐνεργοῦντες, οὐδὲν ἤττον τοῖς εἰρημένοις ἔθος καλεῖν ὀνόμασιν, ἐπεὶ τὴν ἐν ἑκάστοις ἐμπειρίαν καὶ ἐπιστήμην ἀνειλη-
- 36 φότες ἔχουσιν. ἐπειδὴν δὲ ὁ τεκτονικὸς ξύλων ὕλην ἐργάζεται λαβῶν, ὁ δὲ ζωγράφος τὰ οἰκεία κερασάμενος χρώματα ἐπὶ τοῦ πίνακος διαγράφη τοὺς τύπους ὧν ἂν διανοῆται, ὁ δ' αὖ γεωργὸς ἀνατέμνων γῆς αὐλακας καταβάλλη τὰ σπέρματα, κληματίδας δὲ καὶ μοσχεύματα δένδρων ἐμφυτεύη, ἅμα δὲ τροφήν ἀναγκαιοτάτην ἄρρη καὶ ἐποχετεύη τοῖς φυτευθεῖσι καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὅσα γεωργικὰ πᾶσιν ἐγχειρῆ, ὁ δ' αὖ μουσικὸς αὐλοῖς καὶ κιθάραις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ὀργάνοις μέτρα καὶ ρυθμοὺς καὶ πάσας μέλους ἰδέας ἀρμόττη—δύναται<sup>1</sup> δὲ καὶ δίχα τῶν χειροκμήτων τῷ τῆς φύσεως ὀργάνῳ χρῆσθαι διὰ φωνῆς ἡρμσοσμένης πᾶσι τοῖς φθόγγοις—καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἕκαστος τεχνιτῶν εἶπερ ἐγχειρεῖ, τοῖς κατὰ τὰς ἐπιστήμας ἕτερα ἐξ ἀνάγκης οἰκεία τοῖς προτέροις ὀνόματα προσγίνεται, τῷ μὲν τέκτονι τὸ τεκτονεῖν, τῷ δὲ ζωγράφῳ τὸ ζωγραφεῖν ἤδη, καὶ τὸ γεωργεῖν μέντοι τῷ γεωργῷ, καὶ τὸ αὐλεῖν ἢ κιθαρίζειν ἢ ἄδειν ἢ τι τῶν παραπλησίων ποιεῖν τῷ μουσικῷ.
- 37 τίσιν οὖν οἱ ψόγοι καὶ οἱ ἔπαινοι παρακολουθοῦσιν; ἄρ' οὐχὶ τοῖς ἐνεργοῦσι καὶ δρώσι; κατορθοῦντες μὲν γὰρ ἔπαινον, ψόγον δ' ἔμπαλιν καρποῦνται

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δύνηται.

ON SOBRIETY, 35-37

penter, the painter, the husbandman, the musician and those who practise the other arts may be unoccupied and not employing any of the activities which belong to their arts, yet none the less we are accustomed to call them by the aforesaid names, because they have the knowledge and experience which they have acquired in their respective professions. But there are times when the carpenter 36 takes and carves a piece of timber, or the painter after mixing the proper colours delineates on the canvas the forms which he has in mind, or the husbandman ploughs furrows in the land and drops the seed into them, and plants sprigs and suckers from the trees, and also supplies by watering and irrigation the nourishment so necessary to his plants, and sets his hand to all the other works of husbandry. Again there are times when the musician adjusts his metre and rhythm and any form of melody to his flute or harp or any other instrument, or he may perhaps use the natural without the handmade instrument and adapt his voice to all the notes of the gamut, At such times or when each of the other kinds of craftsmen takes his work in hand, we necessarily supplement the first set of names, which are based on the several kinds of knowledge, by others corresponding to them. We speak not only of carpenters, but of practising carpentry, not only of painters but of painting, not only of husbandmen, but of farming, not only of musicians, but of flute-playing, harp-playing, singing or some similar performance. Now which of the two 37 categories is the subject of praise or blame? Surely those who are actually engaged in doing something. They it is whose success or failure entail respectively

PHILO

- διαμαρτάνοντες... οἱ δ' ἄνευ τοῦ τι ποιεῖν ἐπι-στήμονες αὐτὸ μόνον, ἀκίνδυνον γέρας εἰληφότες 38 ἡσυχίαν ἤρεμοῦσιν. IX. ὁ αὐτὸς τοίνυν λόγος ἐφαρμόττει καὶ τοῖς κατ' ἀφροσύνην<sup>1</sup> καὶ συνόλως τοῖς κατ' ἀρετὴν τε καὶ κακίαν· οἱ φρόνιμοί τε καὶ σώφρονες καὶ ἀνδρείοι καὶ δίκαιοι τὰς ψυχὰς μυρίοι γεγόνασι φύσεως μὲν εὐμοιρία, νομίμοις δ' ὑφήγησεν, πόνοις δ' ἀηττήτοις καὶ ἀοκνοτάτοις χρησάμενοι, τὸ δὲ κάλλος τῶν ἐν ταῖς διανοίαις ἀγαλμάτων οὐκ ἴσχυσαν ἐπιδείξασθαι διὰ πενίαν ἢ ἀδοξίαν ἢ νόσον σώματος ἢ τὰς ἄλλας κήρας ὅσαι τὸν ἀνθρώπινον περιπολοῦσι βίον.
 39 οὐκοῦν οὗτοι μὲν ὥσπερ δεδεμένα καὶ καθειργμένα ἐκτήσαντο ἀγαθὰ, ἕτεροι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ λελυμένοι καὶ ἀφέτοις καὶ ἐλευθέρους ἐχρήσαντο πᾶσι τὰς εἰς ἐπίδειξιν ὕλας ἀφθονωτάτας προσ-40 λαβόντες· ὁ μὲν φρόνιμος ἰδίων τε καὶ κοινῶν προστασίαν<sup>2</sup> πραγμάτων, οἷς σύνεσιν καὶ εὐβουλίαν ἐνεπιδείξεται· ὁ δὲ σώφρων τὸν εἰς ἀσωτίαν δεινὸν ἐπᾶραι καὶ παρακαλέσαι τυφλὸν πλοῦτον, ἵνα βλέποντα ἀποδείξῃ· ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἀρχὴν, δι' ἧς τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν ἀπονέμειν ἐκάστῳ τῶν <ὑ>όντων<sup>3</sup> ἀκωλύτως δυνατὸς ἔσται· ὁ δ' ἀσκητῆς εὐσεβείας [399] ἱερωσύνην καὶ χωρίων | ἱερῶν καὶ τῆς ἐν τούτοις
 41 ἀγιστείας ἐπιμέλειαν. ἄνευ δὲ τούτων ἀρεταὶ μὲν εἰσιν, ἀκίνητοι δὲ ἀρεταὶ καὶ ἡσυχίαν ἄγουσαι,

<sup>1</sup> Conj. Tr. κατ' ἀφροσύνην <καὶ σύνεσιν>. The last two words, which are needed for antithesis, may easily have fallen out before καὶ συνόλως.

<sup>2</sup> So Wendland for ms. περιουσίαν, which perhaps in the sense of "abundance" is not quite impossible: Cohen παρουσίαν.

<sup>3</sup> Conj. Tr.: Wendland ὑπηκόων: Adler πολιτών.

<sup>a</sup> Here we have Philo's favourite idea of the three elements 464

ON SOBRIETY, 37-41

praise or blame. Those who possess the knowledge and nothing more, and are not actually doing anything remain in peace and find in their inactivity the privilege of security. IX. The same prin- 38

ciple then holds when the quality predicated is folly or virtue and vice in general. Those whose souls are prudent, or temperate, or courageous or just, have become so in numberless cases partly by happy natural gifts, partly by the directing influence of custom, partly by their own persistent and unsparing efforts,<sup>a</sup> but poverty or obscurity or bodily disease, or the other mischiefs which beset human life, have made it impossible for them to manifest the beauty of the qualities <sup>b</sup> which adorn their minds.

These, then, possess their good qualities, as it were, in 39 chains and durance. But there are others who find them entirely free, unconfined, unshackled in their hands, because in their case these gifts have been supplemented by rich and abundant material for their display. The man of prudence may have the 40 charge of public or private business, in which he can shew his shrewdness and good judgement. The temperate man may have wealth, and while blind wealth is strong to incite and urge its possessors to licence, he may turn that blindness into eyesight. The just man may hold office, which will enable him to render without hindrance their several dues to all who are under his authority. The practiser of religion may have priesthood and the charge of holy places and the rites there performed. Virtues they 41 still are apart from these opportunities, but they are of education, φύσις, διδασκαλία, άσκησις, usually typified by Isaac, Abraham and Jacob. Cf. note on De Sac. 5-7 (Vol. I. App. p. 488).

<sup>b</sup> Or possibly άγαλμάτων may mean the "ideas," cf. § 3.

PHILO

- καθάπερ ὁ τεθησαυρισμένος ἐν ἀφανέσι γῆς μυχοῖς ἄργυρός τε καὶ χρυσὸς οὐδὲν χρήσιμος.
- 42 πάλιν τοίνυν κατὰ τὰ ἐναντία μυρίους ἔστιν ἰδεῖν ἀνάνδρους, ἀκολάστους, ἄφρονas, ἀδίκους, ἀσεβεῖς ἐν ταῖς διανοαῖς ὑπάρχοντας, τὸ δὲ κακίας ἐκάστης αἰσχος ἀδυνατοῦντας ἐπιδείκνυσθαι δι' ἀκαιρίαν τῶν εἰς τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν καιρῶν, ἐπειδὴν δὲ τοῦ δύνασθαι πολλή καὶ μεγάλη κατασκήψη φορά, γῆν καὶ θάλατταν ἄχρι τερμάτων ἀμυθῆτων ἀναπιμπλάντας κακῶν καὶ μηδέν, μὴ μικρὸν μὴ μέγα, ἀζήμιον ἐῶντας, ἀλλὰ ρύμη μιᾷ ἀνατρέποντάς τε
- 43 καὶ φθείροντας· ὥσπερ γὰρ τοῦ πυρός ἡ δύναμις ἀπουσία μὲν ὕλης ἡσυχάζει, παρουσία δὲ ἀνακαίεται, οὕτως καὶ ὅσαι πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἢ κακίαν ψυχῆς δυνάμεις ἀφορῶσι, σβέννυνται μὲν ἀκαιρίαις, καθάπερ ἔφην, καιρῶν, τυχηραῖς δ' εὐπορίαις ἀναφλέγονται.
- 44 X. Τίνος δὴ ταῦθ' εἶνεκα εἶπον ἢ τοῦ διδάξαι χάριν, ὅτι ὁ μὲν υἱὸς τοῦ Νῶε Χάμ ἡρεμούσης κακίας ἐστὶν ὄνομα, ὁ δὲ υἱὸς ἤδη καὶ κινουμένης; ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ θέρμη μὲν Χάμ, σάλος
- 45 δὲ Χαναάν. θέρμη δὲ ἐν μὲν σώματι πυρετὸν ἐμφαίνει, κακίαν δὲ ἐν ψυχαῖς· ὡς γάρ, οἶμαι, καταβολὴ πυρετοῦ νόσος ἐστὶν οὐ μέρους ἀλλ' ὅλου σώματος, οὕτως ὅλης τῆς ψυχῆς ἀρρώστημά ἐστι κακία. ἀλλ' ὅτε μὲν ἡρεμεῖ, ὅτε δὲ κινεῖται· τὴν δὲ κίνησιν αὐτῆς ὀνομάζει σάλον, ὃς Ἑβραίων
- 46 γλώττῃ Χαναάν καλεῖται. νομοθετῶν δὲ οὐδεὶς ἐπιτίμιον ὀρίζει κατὰ ἀδίκων ἡρεμούντων, ἀλλὰ δὴ<sup>1</sup> κινουμένων καὶ τοῖς κατὰ ἀδικίαν ἔργοις χρωμένων, καθάπερ οὐδὲ τῶν δακετῶν οὐδὲν ἀνήρ static and inactive virtues, like gold and silver laid up in hidden recesses of the earth where none can use them. Conversely we may see 42 thousands who are cowardly, intemperate, foolish, unjust and irreligious at heart, but unable to display the ugliness of each vice, because of the inconvenience of their opportunities for sin. But when such possibility suddenly descends upon them in all its impetuous force, they fill land and sea to their utmost bounds with an untold host of evil deeds. They leave nothing great or small unharmed but work wrack and ruin in one concentrated outburst. For 43 just as the capacity of fire is dormant or kindled into activity according as fuel is absent or present, so the powers of the soul which have vice or virtue in view are quenched by inconvenience of opportunities (to repeat the phrase), but burst into flame when chance throws facilities in their way.

<sup>1</sup> Wendland conj. ἀλλ' ἤδη.

ON SOBRIETY, 41-46

X. These remarks have been made solely for the 44 purpose of shewing that Ham the son of Noah is a name for vice in the quiescent state and the grandson Canaan for the same when it passes into active movement. For Ham is by interpretation "heat," and Canaan "tossing." Now heat is a sign of fever 45 in the body and of vice in the soul. For just as an attack of fever is a disease not of a part but of the whole body, so vice is a malady of the whole soul. Sometimes it is in a state of quiescence, sometimes of motion, and its motion is called by Moses "tossing," which in the Hebrew tongue is Canaan. Now 46 no legislator fixes a penalty against the unjust when in the quiescent state, but only when they are moved to action and commit the deeds to which injustice prompts them, just as in the case of animals

PHILO

μέτριος κτείνειν ἂν ἐθελήσαι μὴ μέλλον δάκνειν· λόγου<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ὑπεξαιρετέον ψυχῆς ὠμότητα φύσει 47 [καί] κατὰ πάντων φονῶσαν. εἰκότως οὖν ὁ δίκαιος τὰς ἀρὰς τῷ νύωνῳ Χαναὰν δόξει τίθεσθαι· δόξει δὲ εἶπον, ὅτι δυνάμει τῷ νύῳ Χάμ δι' ἐκείνου καταρᾶται· κινηθεῖς γὰρ πρὸς τὸ ἀμαρτάνειν Χάμ αὐτὸς γίνεται Χαναὰν. ἐν γὰρ τὸ ὑποκείμενον κακία, ἧς τὸ μὲν ἐν σχέσει, τὸ δὲ ἐν κινήσει θεωρεῖται· πρεσβύτερον δὲ κινήσεως σχέσις, ὡς ἐγγόνου λόγον ἔχειν τὸ κινούμενον πρὸς τὸ 48 ἰσχόμενον· παρὸ καὶ τοῦ Χάμ υἱὸς ὁ Χαναὰν
 [400] φυσικῶς ἀναγράφεται, σάλος ἡρεμίας, ἵνα καὶ | τὸ ἐτέρωθι λεχθέν ἐπαληθεύῃ τὸ “ ἀποδιδούς ἀνομίας πατέρων ἐπὶ υἱούς, ἐπὶ τρίτους καὶ ἐπὶ τετάρτους”· ἐπὶ γὰρ τὰ ἀποτελέσματα καὶ ὡς ἂν ἔγγονα τῶν λογισμῶν στείχουσιν αἱ τιμωρίαι, καθ’ αὐτοὺς<sup>2</sup> ἐκείνων, εἰ μηδεμίᾳ προσγένειτο πρᾶξις ἐπίληπτος, 49 ἀποδιδρασκόντων τὰ ἐγκλήματα. διὰ τοῦτο μέντοι κὰν τῷ νόμῳ τῆς λέπρας ὁ μέγας πάντα Μωυσῆς τὴν μὲν κίνησιν καὶ ἐπὶ πλέον αὐτῆς φορὰν καὶ χύσιν ἀκάθαρτον, τὴν δ’ ἡρεμίαν καθαρὰν ἀναγράφει· λέγει γὰρ ὅτι “ ἐὰν διαχέηται ἐν τῷ δέρματι, μιανεῖ ὁ ἱερεὺς. ἐὰν δὲ κατὰ χώραν μείνῃ τὸ τηλαύγημα καὶ μὴ διαχέηται, καθαριεῖ” ὥστε τὴν μὲν ἡσυχίαν, ἐκ τοῦ<sup>3</sup> εἶναι μονῆν κακιῶν καὶ παθῶν τῶν κατὰ ψυχὴν,—

<sup>1</sup> So mss. Wendland needlessly changed to λόγῳ, i.e. savagery must be eliminated by reason, but see De Ebr. 33.

<sup>2</sup> So Wendland conjectures, though he prints the ms. κατ’ αὐτοὺς. Grammatical usage seems to demand the change.

<sup>3</sup> Conj. Tr.: mss. ἐκτὸς: Wendland from Nicetes Serranus (see App. p. 511) ἡσυχίαν καὶ μονῆν.

that bite, unless they are going to bite, no wish to kill them would be felt by any right-minded person ; for we must leave out of consideration the savagery which has a natural craving for indiscriminate slaughter. It is natural enough, then, 47 that the just man should appear to lay his curses on the grandson Canaan. I say "appear," because virtually he does curse his son Ham in cursing Canaan, since when Ham has been moved to sin, he himself becomes Canaan, for it is a single subject, wickedness, which is presented in two different aspects, rest and motion. But rest takes precedence in point of age to motion, and thus the moving stands to the stationary in the relation of child to parent. Thus it agrees 48 with the verities of nature when Canaan or tossing is described as the son of Ham or quiescence, and this serves to shew the truth of what is said elsewhere, "visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation" (Exod. xx. 5). For it is upon the effects of our reasonings, what we may call their descendants, that punishments fall, while those reasonings taken by themselves go scot-free from arraignment, if no culpable action supervene. And there- 49 fore, too, in the law of leprosy Moses with his never-failing greatness lays down that the movement and wider extension and diffusion of the disease is unclean, but the quiescence is clean. For he says, "if it spread abroad in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him unclean. But if the bright spot stay in one place and be not spread abroad, he shall pronounce him clean" (Lev. xiii. 22, 23). Thus the state of repose, because it is a standing-still of the vices and passions in the soul (and it is these which ταῦτα γὰρ αἰνίττεται διὰ τῆς λέπρας—οὐχ ὑπαίτιον εἶναι, τὴν δὲ κίνησιν καὶ φορὰν ὑποχον δέοντως.

PHILO

50 τὸ παραπλήσιον καὶ ἐν τοῖς περὶ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς γενέσεως<sup>1</sup> χρησθεῖσι λογίοις περιέχεται σημειωδέστερον· λέγεται γὰρ πρὸς τὸν φαῦλον<sup>1</sup> ὦ οὗτος, “ἡμαρτες, ἡσύχασον,” τοῦ μὲν ἀμαρτάνειν, ὅτι κινεῖσθαι καὶ ἐνεργεῖν κατὰ τὴν κακίαν ἦν, ὄντος ἐνόχου, τοῦ δ’ ἡσυχάζειν, ὅτι ἰσχεσθαι καὶ ἡρεμεῖν, ἀνυπαίτιου καὶ σωτηρίου.

51 XI. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἱκανῶς γε, οἶμαι, προεῖρηται. τὰς δ’ ἀρὰς [ἔχοντα]<sup>2</sup>, ὃν ἔχουσι λόγον, ἴδωμεν· “ἐπικατάρατος” φησί “Χαναάν· παῖς οἰκέτης ἔσται τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς αὐτοῦ” καὶ “εὐλογητὸς κύριος ὁ θεὸς Σὴμ, καὶ ἔσται Χαναάν δοῦλος 52 αὐτοῖς.” ἔφαμεν πάλαι, ὅτι Σὴμ ἐπώνυμός ἐστιν ἀγαθοῦ, καλούμενος οὐκ ὀνόματος εἶδει, ἀλλ’ ὄλον τὸ γένος αὐτοῦ ὄνομα, παρόσον τὸ ἀγαθὸν ὀνομαστὸν μόνον καὶ εὐφημίας καὶ εὐκλείας ἄξιον, ὡς ἔμπαλιν ἀνώνυμον καὶ δυσώνυμον τὸ κακόν.

53 τίνος οὖν τὸν τῆς φύσεως τἀγαθοῦ μεμοιραμένον εὐχῆς ἀξιοῖ; τίνος; καινοτάτης καὶ παρηλλαγ-

<sup>1</sup> Wendland πρὸς τὸν Κάιν, and αὐτὸν for τὸν φαῦλον. See App. p. 511.

<sup>2</sup> For the meaningless ἔχοντα, ἐξῆς or ἐχομένως or εὐχὰς τε have been suggested. The last suits the sense well, as the sequel deals with the blessing more than the curses. The Translator suggests as better accounting for the corruption τὰς δ’ ἀρὰς <καὶ τὰ μὴ ἀρὰς> ἔχοντα.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 511.

<sup>b</sup> In the LXX, as usually and rightly printed, ἡμαρτες is the apodosis of οὐκ ἐὰν ὀρθῶς προσενέγκης, ὀρθῶς δὲ μὴ διέλθης. Philo here and in De Mut. 195, takes it as beginning a fresh sentence. Cf. De Agr. 127. So in Quaest. Gen. i. 64, 65 “Quid est, non quod non recte offeras, sed quod recte non dividas? . . . Quid est ‘peccasti, quiesce’?”

ON SOBRIETY, 49-53

are figured by leprosy), is exempt from indictment, while the state of motion and progression is rightly held liable to arraignment. And a 50 similar lesson is contained in a more striking form in the oracles in Genesis.<sup>a</sup> For God says to the wicked one, "man, thou hast sinned, be still" <sup>b</sup> (Gen. iv. 7). This implies that while sin, inasmuch as it is movement and activity with vice as its motive, is liable to punishment, stillness, because it is stationary and quiescent, is exempt from arraignment and a means of safety.

XI. This is enough, I think, by way of preface. 51 Let us now observe the form which the curses take. "Cursed," he says, "is Canaan; a servant, a bondman, shall he be to his brethren," and "blessed is the Lord, the God of Shem,<sup>a</sup> and Canaan shall be their slave." We have said before <sup>c</sup> that Shem bears 52 a name which means "good," that is to say, the name which he bears is not any specific name or noun, but is just "name," the whole genus, thus representing good, because good alone is a thing of name and is worthy of fair speech and fair report, just as bad on the other hand is nameless and of evil name.<sup>d</sup> What, then, is the prayer 53 which Moses deems worthy of this participant in the nature of the good? What indeed? Surely a prayer unparalleled and unprecedented, to which

<sup>a</sup> Probably, as Adler suggests, in the lost discourse on Noah's "nakedness." See Introduction to De Ebr. p. 309.

<sup>d</sup> i.e. Shem is by interpretation ὄνομα, which may mean either "name" or "noun." In either case as representing the generic as opposed to the specific names or nouns, it is equivalent to the best of the genus. Cf. a similar argument, Leg. All. iii. 175. See App. p. 512.

PHILO

μένης, ἢ θνητὸς οὐδεὶς ὑπηρετῆσαι δυνατός, ἀφ' ἧς σχεδὸν ὡσπερ ἀπ' ὠκεανοῦ ρέουσιν αἱ ἄφθονοι καὶ ἀέναοι πλημμυροῦσαι καὶ ἀναχεόμεναι τῶν καλῶν πηγαί. τὸν γὰρ κύριον καὶ θεὸν τοῦ τε κόσμου καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐτῷ πάντων ἰδίᾳ θεὸν κατ' 54 ἐξαίρετον χάριν τοῦ Σῆμ ἀνακαλεῖ. καὶ ὄρα· τίνας ὑπερβολὰς τοῦτο οὐχ ὑπερβάλλει; σχεδὸν γὰρ ἰσότημος ὁ τούτου λαχὼν γίνεται κόσμῳ· ὅτε γὰρ τὸ ἐπιστατοῦν καὶ κηδόμενον ἀμφοῖν ταῦτόν, καὶ τὰ ἐπιτροπευόμενα κατ' ἀναγκαῖον εὐθύς ἐστιν 55 ἰσότημα. μήποτε δὲ καὶ ἐπιδιαικλιεῖται
 τὰ τῶν δωρεῶν· τοῦ μὲν γὰρ | αἰσθητοῦ κόσμου [401] δεσπότης καὶ εὐεργέτης ἀνείρηται διὰ τοῦ κύριος καὶ θεός, τοῦ δὲ νοητοῦ ἀγαθοῦ σωτῆρ καὶ εὐεργέτης αὐτὸ μόνον, οὐχὶ δεσπότης ἢ κύριος· φίλον γὰρ τὸ σοφὸν θεῷ μᾶλλον ἢ δοῦλον. παρὸ καὶ 56 σαφῶς ἐπὶ Ἀβραάμ φάσκει· “ μὴ ἐπικαλύψω ἐγὼ ἀπὸ Ἀβραάμ τοῦ φίλου μου; ” ὁ δὲ ἔχων τὸν κληρὸν τούτου πέραν ὄρων ἀνθρωπίνης εὐδαιμονίας προελήλυθε· μόνος γὰρ εὐγενῆς ἄτε θεὸν ἐπιγεγραμμένος πατέρα καὶ γεγωνῶς εἰσποιητὸς αὐτῷ μόνος υἱός· οὐ πλούσιος, ἀλλὰ πάμπλουτος, ἐν ἀφθόνοις καὶ γνησίοις, οὐ χρόνῳ παλαιουμένοις, καινουμέ-57 νοις δὲ καὶ ἡβῶσιν αἰεὶ τρυφῶν ἀγαθοῖς μόνοις· οὐκ ἔνδοξος, ἀλλ' εὐκλεής, τὸν μὴ κολακείᾳ νοθοῦμενον, ἀλλὰ βεβαιούμενον ἀληθείᾳ καρπούμενος ἔπαινον· μόνος βασιλεύς, παρὰ τοῦ πανηγεμόνος λαβὼν τῆς ἐφ' ἅπασιν ἀρχῆς τὸ κράτος ἀνανταγώνιστον· μόνος

<sup>a</sup> The LXX has “ My servant ” (τοῦ παιδός μου), which Philo uses in Leg. All. iii. 27. The Hebrew has no equivalent. See App. p. 512.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 512.

ON SOBRIETY, 53-57

no mortal can act as ministrant, a prayer from which, almost as though it were from the very ocean, there pour forth fountains of things excellent, welling up and running over, unmeasured and inexhaustible. It is the Lord and God of the world and all that is therein, whom he declares to be peculiarly the God of Shem by special grace. And 54 consider! What transcendency is not here transcended? For we may well say that he to whom this belongs is put on a level of value with the world; since when the same power rules and cares for both, the objects of this guardianship must needs by that very fact be of equal value. Surely, too, 55

His gifts are such as shew a lavish hand. For while the words "Lord and God" proclaim Him master and benefactor of the world which is open to our senses, to that goodness which our minds perceive He is saviour and benefactor only, not master or lord. For wisdom is rather God's friend than His servant. And therefore He says plainly of Abraham, "shall I hide anything from Abraham My friend?"<sup>a</sup> 56 (Gen. xviii. 17). But he who has this portion has passed beyond the bounds of human happiness. He alone is nobly born,<sup>b</sup> for he has registered God as his father and become by adoption His only son, the possessor not of riches, but of all riches, faring sumptuously where there is nought but good things, unstinted in number and sterling in worth, which alone wax not old through time, but ever renew their youth; not merely of high repute, but glorious, for 57 he reaps the praise which is never debased by flattery, but ratified by truth; sole king, for he has received from the All-ruler the sceptre of universal sovereignty, which none can dispute; sole freeman,

PHILO

- ἐλεύθερος, ἀφειμένος ἀργαλεωτάτης δεσποίνης, κενῆς δόξης, ἦν ὑπέραυχον οὖσαν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀκροπόλεως ἄνωθεν ὁ ἐλευθεροποιὸς καθεῖλε θεός.
- 58           τούτῳ δὴ τῷ τοσοῦτων καὶ οὕτως ὑπερβαλλόντων καὶ ἀθρόων ἀξιωθέντι ἀγαθῶν τί προσήκει ποιεῖν ἢ λόγοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς καὶ ὕμνοις τὸν εὐεργέτην ἀμείβεσθαι; τοῦτ' ἔσθ', ὡς ἔοικεν, ὁ αἰνίττεται διὰ τοῦ<sup>1</sup> “εὐλογημένος κύριος ὁ θεὸς Σῆμ,” ἐπειδὴ τῷ τὸν θεὸν ἔχοντι κλῆρον εὐλογεῖν καὶ ἐπαινεῖν αὐτὸν ἀρμόττει μόνον τοῦτ' ἀντιπαρασχεῖν δυναμένῳ, τὰ δ' ἄλλα ἀνὰ κράτος πάνθ' ἀπλῶς ἀδυνατοῦντι.
- 59   XII. Τῷ μὲν δὴ Σῆμ εὐχεται ταῦτα· τῷ δ' Ἰάφεθ ὁποῖα, θεασώμεθα· “πλατύναι” φησὶν “ὁ θεὸς τῷ Ἰάφεθ, καὶ κατοικησάτω ἐν τοῖς οἴκοις τοῦ Σῆμ, καὶ γενέσθω Χαναὰν δοῦλος
- 60 αὐτοῖς.” τοῦ ἀγαθὸν ἠγουμένου τὸ καλὸν μόνον ἔσταλται καὶ συνῆκται τὸ τέλος—ἐνὶ γὰρ μυρίων ὄντων τῶν περὶ ἡμᾶς τῷ ἠγεμόνι νῶ συνέζευκται—, τοῦ δὲ τρισὶν ἐφαρμόζοντος αὐτὸ γενέσειν, τῷ περὶ ψυχὴν, τῷ περὶ σῶμα, τῷ περὶ τὰ ἐκτός, ἅτ' εἰς πολλὰ καὶ ἀνόμοια κατακερματιζόμενον
- 61 εὐρύνεται. διόπερ οἰκείως εὐχεται τούτῳ προσγενέσθαι πλάτος, ὅπως καὶ ταῖς περὶ ψυχὴν ἀρεταῖς, φρονήσει καὶ σωφροσύνῃ καὶ ἐκάστη τῶν ἄλλων, χρῆσθαι δύναιτο καὶ ταῖς σώματος, ὑγείᾳ καὶ εὐαισθησίᾳ δυνάμει τε καὶ ῥώμῃ καὶ ταῖς τούτων συγγενέσι, ἔτι μέντοι καὶ τοῖς ἐκτὸς πλεον-

<sup>1</sup> διὰ τοῦ] mss. αὐτοῦ or αὐτῷ : Mang. ἐν τῷ.

for he is released from the most tyrannous of mistresses, vain opinion, whom God the liberator has cast down from her citadel on the hill and humbled all her pride.

What, then, of him who has 58 been deemed worthy of blessings so great, so transcendent, so multitudinous? What should he do but requite his Benefactor with the words of his lips with song and with hymn? That is, it seems, the inner meaning of the saying, "blessed be the Lord, the God of Shem."<sup>a</sup> For it is meet that he who has God for his heritage should bless and praise Him, since this is the only return that he can offer, and all else, strive as he will, is quite beyond his power.

XII. This then is Noah's prayer for Shem. Let 59 us now consider the nature of his prayer for Japhet. "May God widen for Japhet," he says, "and let him dwell in the houses of Shem, and let Canaan become their servant" (Gen. ix. 27). <sup>a</sup> If we hold 60 that moral beauty is the only good, the end we seek is contracted and narrowed, for it is bound up with only one of our myriad environments, namely, with the dominant principle, the mind. But if we connect that end with three different kinds of interests, the concerns of the soul, those of the body and those of the external world, the end is split up into many dissimilar parts and thus broadened. And therefore 61 there is a fitness in the prayer that breadth should be added to Japhet, that he may be able to use not only the virtues of the soul, prudence, temperance, and each of the others, but also those of the body, health, efficiency of the senses, dexterity of limb and strength of muscle, and such as are akin to these; and once again that he may have all the external

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 512.

PHILO

εκτήμασιν, ὅσα εἰς πλοῦτον καὶ δόξαν ἀπόλαυσίν τε καὶ χρήσιν τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἡδονῶν ἄγεται.<sup>1</sup> |

[402] XIII. Περὶ μὲν τοῦ πλάτους ταῦτα. τίνα δὲ ἐν 62 τοῖς οἴκοις εὔχεται τοῦ Σῆμ κατοικῆσαι, σκεπτέον· σαφῶς γὰρ οὐ μεμήνηκεν. ἔνεστι μὲν δὴ φάναι, ὅτι τὸν ἡγεμόνα τοῦ παντός. τίς γὰρ οἶκος παρὰ γενέσει δύναιτ' ἂν ἀξιοπρεπέστερος εὑρεθῆναι θεῷ πλήν ψυχῆς τελείως κεκαθαρμένης καὶ μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἡγουμένης ἀγαθόν, τὰ δὲ ἄλλα ὅσα 63 νενόμισται ἐν δορυφόρων καὶ ὑπηκόων λόγῳ οὐχ ὡς ἐν τόπῳ—περιέχει γὰρ τὰ πάντα πρὸς μηδενὸς περιεχόμενος—, ἀλλ' ὡς πρόνοιαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν ἐκείνου τοῦ χωρίου διαφερόντως ποιού-64 μενος· παντὶ γὰρ τῷ δεσπόζοντι οἰκίας ἢ ταύτης κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ἀνήπται φροντίς. εὐχέσθω δὴ πᾶς θεῷ, ὅτῳ τὸ θεοφιλὲς ὤμβρησεν ἀγαθόν, οἰκήτορος λαχεῖν τοῦ πανηγεμόνος, ὃς τὸ βραχὺ τοῦτο οἰκοδόμημα, τὸν νοῦν, ἐξαίρων εἰς ὕψος ἀπὸ 65 γῆς τοῖς οὐρανοῦ συνάψει πέρασι. καὶ τὸ ῥητὸν μέντοι συνάδειν ἔοικεν· ὁ γὰρ Σῆμ ὡσανεὶ ρίζα καλοκαγαθίας ὑποβεβληται, δένδρον δ' ἡμερο-τοκοῦν ἐκ ταύτης ὁ σοφὸς Ἄβρααμ ἀνέδραμεν, οὗ τὸ αὐτήκοον καὶ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, Ἰσαάκ, ὁ καρπὸς ἦν, ἀφ' οὗ πάλιν αἱ διὰ πόνων ἀρεταὶ κατασπεύρονται, ὧν ἀθλητῆς ἐστὶν ὁ τὴν πρὸς πάθῃ πάλην γεγυμνασμένος Ἰακώβ, ἀγγέλοις

<sup>1</sup> Wendland suggests ἀναφέρεται.

ON SOBRIETY, 61-65

advantages which have their source in wealth and reputation and the means of enjoying and using such pleasures as are necessary.

XIII. So much for the "widening." But we must 62 also consider who is meant, when he prays that "he" should dwell in the houses of Shem. For this is not clearly shewn. On the one hand, we may suggest that "he" is the Ruler of the universe. For what more worthy house could be found for God throughout the whole world of creation, than a soul that is perfectly purified, which holds moral beauty to be the only good and ranks all others which are so accounted, as but satellites and subjects? But God 63 is said to inhabit a house not in the sense of dwelling in a particular place, for He contains all things and is contained by none, but in the sense that His special providence watches over and cares for that spot. For every master of a house must needs have the care of that house laid on him as a charge. Verily let 64 everyone on whom the goodness of God's love has fallen as rain, pray that he may have for his tenant the All-ruler who shall exalt this petty edifice, the mind, high above the earth and join it to the ends of heaven.

And indeed the literal story 65 seems to agree with this interpretation. For in Shem we have the foundation, the root, as it were, of noble qualities and from that root sprung up wise Abraham, a tree yielding sweet nutriment, and his fruit was Isaac, the nature that needs no voice to teach him but his own, and from Isaac's seed again come the virtues of the laborious life in which Jacob exercised himself to mastery, Jacob trained in the wrestling-bout with the passions, with the angels of

PHILO

- 66 ἀλείπταις, λόγοις, χρώμενος. οὗτος τῶν δώδεκα κατάρχει φυλῶν, ἃς οἱ χρησμοὶ “ βασιλείον καὶ ἱεράτευμα θεοῦ ” φασιν εἶναι κατὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸν πρῶτον Σῆμ ἀκολουθίαν<sup>1</sup> οὐ τοῖς οἴκοις ἦν εὐχή τὸν θεὸν <ἐν>οικῆσαι· βασιλείον γὰρ ὁ βασιλέως δήπουθεν οἶκος, ἱερὸς ὄντως καὶ μόνος ἄσυλος.
- 67 Ἴσως μέντοι τὰ τῆς εὐχῆς καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰάφεθ ἀναφέρεται, ὅπως ἐν τοῖς οἴκοις τοῦ Σῆμ ποιῆται τὰς διατριβάς· τῷ γὰρ καὶ τὰ σώματος καὶ τὰ ἐκτὸς πλεονεκτήματα ἀγαθὰ ἡγουμένῳ καλὸν εὐξασθαι πρὸς μόνον τὸ ψυχῆς ἀναδραμεῖν καὶ μὴ μέχρι τοῦ παντὸς αἰῶνος ἀληθοῦς δόξης διαμαρτεῖν, ἃ κοινὰ καὶ τῶν ἐπαρατοτάτων καὶ κακίστων ἐστίν, ὑγίειαν ἢ πολυχρηματίαν ἢ ὅσα ὁμοίотροπα, νομίσαντα εἶναι ἀγαθὰ, τῆς ἀψευδοῦς τῶν ἀγαθῶν μερίδος οὐδενὶ φαύλῳ συνταπτομένης· ἀκοινώνητον
- 68 γὰρ φύσει κακῷ τὸ ἀγαθόν. διὰ τοῦτ’ ἐν ψυχῇ μόνῃ τεθησαύρισαι, ἧς τοῦ κάλλους οὐδενὶ μέτεστι τῶν ἀφρόνων. τοῦτο ὃ γε προ<φητικὸς> λόγος<sup>2</sup> τὸν σπουδαῖον ἔγραψεν<sup>3</sup> εὐχεσθαί τινι τῶν ἑαυτοῦ γνωρίμων λέγοντα “ πρὸς μὲ ἀνάστρεψον,”
- [403] ἵνα ἐπὶ τὴν αὐτοῦ γνώμην ἐπανελθῶν, | τὸ καλὸν ὡς ἀγαθὸν μόνον δεξιωσάμενος, τὰς τῶν ἑτερο-

<sup>1</sup> Wendland changed this to εὐλογίαν, but the ms. reading makes quite fair sense.

<sup>2</sup> So Cohn and Wendland. The πρόλογος of the mss. does not make sense. For the correction cf. De Plant. 117.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἔγραψε μὲν: Wendland suggests τῶν σπουδαίων ἔγραψεν ἕνα.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or “God’s thought,” the Divine Logos being here regarded as plural. The allusion is to Gen. xxxii. 1, “The angels of God met him,” which comes shortly before the story of the wrestling in verses 24 f.

ON SOBRIETY, 66-68

reason <sup>a</sup> to prepare him for the conflict. Once more <sup>66</sup> Jacob is the source of the twelve tribes, of whom the oracles say that they are "the palace and priesthood of God" (Exod. xix. 6),<sup>b</sup> thus following in due sequence the thought originated in Shem, in whose houses it was prayed that God might dwell. For surely by "palace" is meant the King's house, which is holy indeed and the only inviolable sanctuary.

Perhaps, however, the words of the prayer refer <sup>67</sup> to Japhet also, that he may make the houses of Shem his resort. For it is well to pray on behalf of him who holds bodily and external advantages to be forms of the good, that he should return to one only, even that which belongs to the soul, and not throughout his whole life fail to gain the true conception, nor think that health or wealth or the like, which are shared by the most wicked and abominable of men, are true goods. No, such participation in the good as is real and true is never found in association with what is worthless, for good by its very nature can have no partnership with evil. And that is why <sup>68</sup> this treasure is laid up in one place only—the soul—for in beauty of soul none of the foolish has part or lot.

This is the prayer which the prophetic scripture declares should be the prayer of the man of worth for anyone <sup>c</sup> of those who are his familiars—even "return to me" (Gen. xlix. 22)—the prayer that he may return to the mind of him who prays, and, welcoming moral beauty as the only good, leave behind him in the race those conceptions

<sup>b</sup> In the LXX βασιλείον ιεράτευμα, where βασιλείον no doubt means "royal." Philo's interpretation is, however, grammatically possible.

<sup>c</sup> Or "describes the man of worth as praying for one" etc.

PHILO

δόξων παραδράμη περὶ τὰγαθοῦ φήμας. ἐν οὖν τοῖς οἴκοις τῆς ψυχῆς τοῦ λέγοντος μόνον εἶναι τὸ καλὸν ἀγαθὸν κατοικησάτω, παροικήσας ἐν τοῖς τῶν ἑτέρων, οἷς καὶ τὰ σωματικὰ καὶ τὰ ἐκτὸς τετίμῃται.

- 69 Εἰκότως μέντοι καὶ δοῦλον τὸν ἄφρονα τῶν ἀρετῆς μεταποιοιμένων ἀνέγραψεν, ἵν' ἢ κρείττονος ἐπιστασίας ἀξιωθεὶς ἀμείνων βίῳ χρήσῃται ἢ ἐπιμένων τῷ ἀδικεῖν μετ' εὐμαρείας αὐτοκράτορι ἡγεμόνων ἀρχῇ τῶν δεσποτῶν κολάζεται.

ON SOBRIETY, 68-69

of the good which are voiced by the perversely minded. Let him then dwell in the houses of the soul of him who holds that moral beauty is the only good, and merely sojourn in the houses of the others, who value also bodily and external things.

One point further. It is with good reason that 69 Moses writes down the fool as the slave of them who lay claim to virtue, either that promoted to serve under a higher control he may lead a better life, or that, if he cling to his iniquity, his masters may chastise him at their pleasure with the absolute authority which they wield as rulers.

APPENDIX TO QUOD DEUS SIT IMMUTABILIS

§ 3. Bounds which the lustral water has consecrated. For this use of περιρραντήρια see De Cher. 96 (and footnote). Below (8) it is used for the purification itself, as in Quod Det. 20.

§ 6. I give him to thee a gift. The stress which Philo lays on δίδωμι and δοτόν suggests that he had in mind a different version of the text from that of the LXX, where, though in v. 27 we have "the Lord gave me my request," v. 28 runs "I lend him (κίχρῳ) to the Lord, a loan (χρησιν) to the Lord."

§ 14. Multiplied a thousand-fold. For this way of taking μυρία (as sing. fem.) it may be argued that it follows up the thought of ἡ δὲ πολλή. On the other hand the words may be a reminiscence of Theaetetus 156 A, where Plato, speaking of the product of the union of τὸ ποιεῖν with τὸ πάσχειν, says γίνεται ἕκγονα πλήθει ἄπειρα, in which case it would be better to take μυρία as plur. neut.

§ 18. Some future pleasure. A hit at the Epicureans; see note on Quod Det. 157; cf. also S. V. F. iii. 21.

§ 22. Indeed some maintain, etc. Evidently this refers to the Stoic doctrine of the constancy of the Sage; see quotation from Stobaeus in S. V. F. iii. 548, particularly the words οὐδὲ μεταβάλλεσθαι δὲ κατ' οὐδένα τρόπον οὐδὲ μετατίθεσθαι οὐδὲ σφάλεσθαι.

§ 24. Like a lyre. For the figure cf. De Sacr. 37. There is a hint of this thought (which should be distinguished from that of the soul as a harmony) in Rep. 554 F and Laws 653 B.

Ibid. The insertion suggested by Wendland is also advocated by him in De Ebr. 6. But though easy enough it is not required, and would be impossible in Quis Rer. Div. Her.

PHILO

207 ff. where τὴν τῶν ἐναντίων ἐπιστήμην is followed by a long excursus showing the universality of opposites and noting that the doctrine was taught by Heraclitus.

§ 27. So for example. οὕτως, which otherwise seems rather otiose, is perhaps used in the same idiomatic way as in Plato and elsewhere = "without more ado" i.e. "we often just turn from them."

§ 31. Time. These two sections are reminiscent of Timaeus 37-38 B, though there time is represented as coming into existence with the universe.

§ 32. The archetype and pattern of time. So in Timaeus 37 D "so he bethought him to make a moving image of eternity (εἰκὼ κινητὸν αἰῶνος) . . . moving according to number, even that which we have called time"; 38 B time was made after the pattern of the eternal nature (κατὰ τὸ παράδειγμα τῆς διαίωνα φύσεως).

§ 34. Thought quiescent in the mind. This definition of ἐννοια as ἀποκειμένη νόησις is Stoic (S.V.F. ii. 847). The definition of διανόησις as "thought brought to an issue" or "working out of the thought" is perhaps invented by Philo to fit the διενοήθη of his text. He means presumably that an ἐννοια becomes a διανόησις when it becomes the subject of active deliberation.

§ 43. Like a ring . . . it stamps. There seems some confusion here between the imprint and the power which makes it. This might perhaps be avoided by taking ἐκάστη τῶν αἰσθήσεων as subject to ἐναπεμάξατο.

§ 44. Sometimes of an appropriate kind. Cf. Plut. Adv. Coloten 1122 C τὸ δὲ ὀρμητικὸν ἐγχειρόμενον ὑπὸ τοῦ φανταστικοῦ πρὸς τὰ οἰκεία πρακτικῶς κινεῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον. In adding to "sometimes the reverse," "this condition of the soul is called ὀρμή," Philo seems to be writing rather loosely, for when the impression is contrary to the nature of the animal, the resulting impulse was called ἀφορμή (aversion); see S.V.F. iii. 169.

Ibid. First movement. Another name for ὀρμή is φορὰ διανοίας ἐπὶ τι, while an ἀφορμή is φορὰ διανοίας ἀπὸ τινος. In using the phrase πρώτη κίνησις, which does not seem to appear elsewhere in our sources, Philo is perhaps thinking of the πρώτη ὀρμή of animals defined as the instinct of self-preservation; see Diog. Laert. vii. 88.

§ 46. Mind is the sight of the soul. So Aristot. Top. 17,

APPENDICES

p. 108 a, 11 ὡς ἔψις ἐν ὀφθαλμῷ νοῦς ἐν ψυχῇ, cf. Eth. Nic. i. 6, p. 1096 b 28. The saying is, however, older than Aristotle, who quotes as example of a metaphor from some unknown writer or speaker ὁ θεὸς φῶς ἀνῆψεν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ (Rhet. iii. 10. 7, p. 1411 b, 73).

Ibid. Something better and purer. i.e. the πέμπτη οὐσία, an idea which, originally Pythagorean, was adopted by Aristotle. Cf. Reid on Cic. Acad. i. 26. It is definitely referred to under that name by Philo, Quis Rer. Div. Her. 283.

§ 53. Laws in the proper sense of the word. Because νόμος is used in a wider sense for custom and the like. So in De Praemiis 55 νόμος δὲ οὐδὲν ἐστὶν ἢ λόγος προστάτων ἢ χρῆ καὶ ἀπαγορεύων ἢ μὴ χρῆ.

Ibid. Leading statements. Or perhaps "principles." Cf. 62. Philo can hardly have regarded Balaam's words in Num. xxiii. 19 as being part of the actual legislation. He thinks of them rather as summing up the ideas upon which the law is based. Thus, in a parallel use of the two texts in De Som. i. 237, they are called "the sole two ways of all the legislation." Every command or prohibition appeals either to love or fear.

§ 57. Out of care for health. Cf. Aristot. Phys. ii. 3, p. 194 b 32 τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ τὸ οὐ ἔνεκα, οἷον τοῦ περιπατεῖν ἢ ὑγίεια. διὰ τί γὰρ περιπατεῖ; φημὲν ἵνα ὑγιέλῃ.

§ 59. The reading ἀποπατεῖ might seem to be supported by De Plant. 35. But not only are the terms used for the excretory process less offensive there, but any such meaning is practically given here clearly enough by καὶ τἄλλα . . . εἴποιμι. Wendland ultimately (Rhein. Mus. 82, p. 480) proposed παύεται, ἀποπανσάμενος δὲ, but the ms. ἀποπαύεται is quite tenable.

§ 62. As the heavens or the universe. This is partly at least aimed at the Stoics, see Diog. Laert. vii. 148 (S.V.F. i. 164) where Zeno, Chrysippus, and Posidonius are all credited with holding τὸν ἔσλον κόσμον καὶ τὸν οὐρανὸν as being οὐσίαν θεοῦ. Cf. ib. vii. 137.

§§ 65 ff. The thought of these sections has already been brought out in De Cher. 15, but with a different purpose. There it was used to illustrate the truth that the motive of the doer determines whether his action is right or wrong, here to show that falsehood may often be salutary to the person to whom it is said. In the note on De Cher. 15 it was pointed out that the thought might be drawn from Rep. 389 B. It should be added that it was adopted by the Stoics, see S. V. F. iii. 554, 555, where the cases of deceiving the sick and the enemy are specially mentioned.

PHILO

§ 66. He will gladly endure. If the ms. reading is retained and ἀσμενος is taken with ἀπερεί, we must understand the latter as = "declines" and might translate the former by "only too gladly." But the thought is strange. Wendland suggests removing ἀσμενος to a later place in the sentence, but the slight alteration suggested seems to the translator simpler.

§§ 70-73. The argument in these sections is very strange. The discussion in 51-69 would naturally lead up to the first explanation given in Quaest. Gen. i. 95 that the words "I was wroth because I made them" is a hyperbolical way of saying that the sins of men grew so great that they might be expected to anger even Him who knew no anger. But the explanation here given, which appears in an even less intelligible form in the Quaest., is something different. Philo seems to take the words as meaning "it was in anger that I made them," and to explain them in the sense that since when men do evil, it is due to anger (and similar passions), and since the creation of men has actually resulted in evil, the creation may be said to be due to God's anger. But not only is the explanation exceedingly strained, but it can only be got by using ὅτι in a way not known to those "who settle Hoti's business." The suggestion that by putting ἐθυμώθη before ὅτι ἐποίησα instead of after it the writer meant to indicate that the wrath was coincident with the creation, instead of after it, is still wilder. There is a strong likeness, which may only be superficial, to Leg. All. ii. 78.

§ 78. A condensed mass of ether. Cf. De Cher. 26, where the sun is φλογὸς πύλημα πολλῆς. That αἰθέριον means "of ether" not "in ether" is shown by Plut. Mor. 928 C (S. V. F. ii. 668). "The Stoics say that τοῦ αἰθέρος τὸ μὲν αὐγοειδὲς . . . οὐρανὸν γεγενῆσθαι, τὸ δὲ πυκνωθὲν καὶ συνειληθὲν ἄστρα." So ps.-Justin, Quaest. et Resp. ad Graecos 172 C ὁ ἥλιος πύλημα αἰθεροειδὲς τῆ οὐσίας.

§ 79. Friend and kinsman. Cf. Timaeus, 45 B, C, where the fire in the eyes is called ἀδελφόν to that of the daylight and forms with it ἐν σώμα οικειωθέν, whence vision is produced.

APPENDICES

§ 84. For the breath, etc. This is the Stoic theory of hearing, cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 158 (S. V. F. ii. 872): "We hear when the air between the sonant body and the organ of hearing suffers concussion" (πληττόμενον) (Hicks's translation). Also the definition in S. V. F. ii. 836 ἀκοή δὲ πνεύμα διατεῖνον ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ μέχρις ὠτων. For πλήξας cf. the derivation commonly given by ancient philologists, "verbum ab aere verberato."

Ibid. For the consonance. One may suspect that for γάρ we should read δέ or καί, as we seem to have a second reason for the view that "we hear through a dyad," founded apparently on Timaeus 80 B, where the two different notes μιαν ἐξ ὀξείας καὶ βαρείας συνεκράσαντο πάθην.

§ 89. Philo's interpretation of the Nazarite vow has already been partially given in Leg. All. i. 17. When the Nazarite lets his hair grow, it signifies the growth of virtuous thoughts. The contact with the corpse which defiles the Nazarite and interrupts his vow is that temporary contact with spiritual death which may befall even the good. The hair is cut off, that is, the good thoughts are forgotten, but they will grow again. We find again what we have lost and the days of defecation are blotted out.

§ 92. Asked him . . . of the source of his knowledge. The genitive (of the subject of the question) after πυνθάνομαι is certainly strange. If we accept "the father of his knowledge" we must suppose that Philo thinks of a father as being the father of the son's qualities. Cohn compares "the grandfather of his education," De Sacr. 43, where see note, and also De Som. i. 47 ὁ πάππος αὐτοῦ τῆς ἐπιστήμης.

§ 97. Miserable are those. This thought of the fruitlessness of effort, where ability is wanting, has been worked out more fully in De Sacr. 113-117. There, however, one important exception is made. In 115 Philo laid down that moral effort is never wasted. He does not deny this here but confines himself to the practical and intellectual life.

§ 100. Achieve righteousness. Ἀ καθήκον or common duty does not become a κατόρθωμα unless done with a right motive and perhaps not even then, unless it is part of a generally virtuous course of conduct; see Zeller, Stoics, p. 265.

PHILO

§ 101. <τῶν>. This insertion turns this difficult sentence into good sense, i.e. to pay a large sum duly, unless it is done willingly, shows no more real honesty than the admittedly dishonest course of paying some small deposit in the hope of inducing the depositor to entrust some large sum, which the person thus trusted will be able to embezzle. This "confidence trick" has been already mentioned in De Cher. 14, and appears again in De Plant. 101. In the absence of any complete banking-system, the depositing of property with individuals and their honesty and dishonesty in discharging the debt played a great part in commercial life.

§ 108. ἥτις . . . ἑαυτῆ. The correction suggested in the footnote has this advantage over Wendland's that the scribe is more likely to have been misled by the repeated χαρίτων than by the repeated τῶν, and that αὐτῆ is a less violent change from ἑαυτῆ than πηγῆ. For the thought that the ἀγαθότης is itself a χάρις cf. Leg. All. iii. 78, where the ἀγαθότης καὶ χάρις is said to be the ἀρχὴ γενέσεως. For the coupling of πρεσβυτάτη with χάρις cf. De Cong. 38.

§§ 111-116. This allegory is evidently founded on Gen. xxxix., where in verse 1 of the LXX Potiphar is described as a chief cook and eunuch, while in verse 21 Joseph is said to find favour with the chief gaoler. Philo, of course, takes great liberties with the story, making Joseph an eunuch himself and ignoring the statement that it was the Lord who gave him this favour with the gaoler. Presumably he is so anxious to get an antithesis to Noah's finding favour with God, that he seizes on these words in verse 21, couples them with the convenient parts of the story, viz. that the person who found favour with the gaoler was the slave of the eunuch and instrument of pleasure, and ignores all the rest. It may be said in excuse that by so ignoring them he manages to find a text for a very impressive sermon.

§ 111. [σύλλογοι καί]. σύλλογοι is coupled with ἐκκλησία in De Som. ii. 184 (a closely parallel passage), cf. also Leg. All. iii. 81. But "meetings" or "gatherings" does not fit in well with μελετῶνται, and Wendland (who also suggests διάλογοι) may be right in omitting the words. It should be noted, however, the phrase σύλλογοι καὶ λόγοι ἐγίγνωτο κατὰ τὴν ἀγοράν, i.e. gatherings and conversations after the assembly had broken up, actually occurs in Dem. De Falsa Leg. 133. Philo, who often shows a close acquaintance with Demosthenes, may have adopted the phrase, though somewhat straining it. If the words are retained we might translate "it is ever the practice to meet and talk of virtue."

APPENDICES

§ 129. Does not use it as its pilot. Philo has evidently in his mind the similar but much more elaborate parable in Rep. 488 B-489 C, where the pilot is the true philosopher, and the inexperienced sailor the politicians, who obtain the mastery of the ship.

§ 135. Defiles all these. Philo again treats his text in a very arbitrary way. Instead of the things being cleared out, before the priest enters, to prevent their defilement, they are cleared out because they are defiled.

§§ 155 and 156. The contrast between the earthly and the heavenly goods is expressed in the allegory of the well-water and the rain. The former is earthly, scanty, obtained by labour; the latter heavenly, abundant, and showered on us without effort of our own. To labour for the former is an ἔργον δυσελπιστίας because it shows that we lack the higher hope. For δυσελπιστία cf. Leg. All. iii. 164. Elsewhere, as in De Post. 136 ff. and De Ebr. 112 ff., the figure of the well calls up more favourable ideas to Philo.

§§ 162-165. Here we have, of course, Aristotle's doctrine of the Mean, cf. particularly Eth. Nic. ii. 6 and 7, where both Philo's first two examples are given. Cf. De Mig. 147, where the doctrine is ascribed to the "gentle and sociable philosophy," meaning apparently the Peripatetic.

§ 167. Its essential nature. Observe how closely this peculiarly Aristotelian expression (τὸ τί ἦν εἶναι) follows on the Aristotelian doctrine of the Mean.

§ 176. The best of constitutions, democracy. Philo several times speaks in this way of democracy (De Agr. 45, De Conf. 108, De Abr. 242, De Spec. Leg. iv. 237, De Virt. 180). In three of these places he contrasts it with ochlocracy, or mob-rule, while in De Conf. he gives as its ruling characteristic that it honours equality. He does not seem to have got this view, at any rate of the name democracy, from the schools. Neither Plato nor Aristotle speak of it with such favour, and the Stoics held that the best form of government was a mixture of democracy, aristocracy and monarchy (Diog. Laert. vii. 131). Here apparently the democracy which the world enjoys consists in each getting its turn.

APPENDIX TO DE AGRICULTURA

§ 13. But contribute nothing to the improvement of character. The ἄσα implies that some parts of dialectic and mathematics do contribute something. With regard to dialectic, this is explained in the sequel. With regard to "geometry," apart from its use as a προβαλδευμα, Philo would probably have held that, as it included arithmetic, the lore of sacred numbers gave it a higher and spiritual value. This appears very markedly in the disquisition on Four in this treatise.

§ 14. With its threefold division. This fundamental Stoic doctrine is given in Diog. Laert. vii. 40, with the same illustration as here. Another comparison given there and elsewhere is to the egg-shell, the white and the yolk. See Leg. All. i. 57 and note.

§ 41. They are the only real kings. For this well-known Stoic paradox see S. V. F. iii. 617 ff.; cf. De Sobr. 57.

§ 43. Uneven. This word perhaps gives the idea better than "superfluous." πεπλοσος is the regular name for "odd" numbers, i.e. those which are something over and above the right or even numbers (ἄπριος). Other passages in which Jethro is described (De Ebr. 37 and De Mut. 103) were referred to in the note on De Sacr. 50, where, however, the translation "worldling" was perhaps too loose.

§ 73. οικόστροφος. Here and in De Plant. 104 Philo uses this word in a disparaging way, which does not appear in the examples quoted from other authors. Usually it means "living at his own expense." There is, however, an approach to it in Lucian, Somm. 1, where it is applied to a youth who is not yet earning his own living.

§ 80. Sense-perception made pure and clean. In Leg. All. ii. 66 and iii. 103, Miriam stood for rebellious sense.

§ 81. So we find. Here γούνη as often introduces the scriptural story on which the allegory is founded, the main point of which is the concluding words "horse and rider he threw into the sea." But there is also an allusion to the opening words, "Then sang Moses and the sons of Israel," which, as usual, he interprets as "those who see." The contrast, however, between "all the men" or "all that are men," and "the best women" is curious, for in Ex. xv. 20 all the women sing the song. Perhaps Philo's memory of the passage misled him.

APPENDICES

§ 94. For these are able, etc. There seems to be an illogicality in the sequel. The prayer which follows is not as we should expect, that the horseman should be able to control the horse, but that he should fall off. The best one can make of it is that, though it is meritorious to control passion, complete safety lies in getting rid of it.

§§ 95 ff. The parable of Dan has already been worked out in Leg. All. ii. 94 ff. The principal difference is that there the way (which as here is distinguished from the track) is the soul itself, instead of the road on which the soul travels.

§ 114. An iron-bound thong. The use in boxing of the caestus or leathern thong loaded with lead or iron is best known from the description in Aen. v. 405 ff. Mr. Whitaker's ingenious suggestion of σιδηροῦν τροπὸν for σιδήρου τρόπον ("like iron") may perhaps be questioned on the ground that τροπός is the thong used for fastening the oar to the thole. But it may have been used more generally, and if so gives an excellent sense. The construction of the ordinary reading is not quite clear.—F. H. C.

§ 119. The Olympic contest, etc. Perhaps rather "the only Olympic contest which can be rightly called sacred is" etc. Philo plays on Ὀλυμπιακός (derived from Olympia) and Ὀλύμπιος (from Olympus).

§§ 128, 129. The view that God causes good only is often insisted on by Philo, e.g. De Op. 75, and De Plant. 53. The thought is Platonic; see Timaeus, 29, 30 and 40, 41, Rep. 379 b, c, and elsewhere.

§ 132. ὑπαναπλέουσαν. Mangey's conjecture of ἐπαναπολήσαν has some support from De Post. 149 ἐκ τῆς ἐπαναπολήσεως καὶ ὥσπερ ἐπιλεάνσεως τῆς πρῶτον καταβληθείσης τροφῆς. Cf. also ἀναπολῶν, Spec. Leg. iv. 107. On the other hand we have ὑπαναπλεῖ, De Mut. 100.

§ 134. For what use is there . . . "partless"? The translation assumes that διαίρεσις is futile, because we ultimately arrive at a closed door. If we read ἀδιαίρετα, it is futile, because we never arrive at a point where division ceases. In this case Philo adopts the doctrine of the infinite divisibility of matter, which was generally held though not without controversy (see Reid on Cic. Acad. i. 27). The same sense might perhaps be obtained by retaining διαίρετά, and taking it as "never finding before you (as a result of your division) separate parts which are called atoms." It should be noted that this philosophical evidence of the futility of διαίρεσις is merely subsidiary. The true reason, i.e. its moral uselessness, if unaccompanied by meditation, is given in 135.

PHILO

§§ 140, 141. The grammatical and logical terms of the Stoics, here given, are nearly all stated (generally under the same names) by Diog. Laert. vii. 64-76, with examples which explain their meaning clearly. These are here given for the cases in which explanation is needed (Hicks's translation is used throughout).

Complete (τέλεια, D.L. αὐτοτελής)—

"Socrates writes."

Incomplete (ἀτελής, D.L. ἐλλειπής)—

"Writes," for we ask "who writes?"

Questions (ἐρωτήματα)—

"Is it day?"

Inquiries (πύσματα)—

"Where does he live?" which cannot be answered, like the question, by a nod.

Simple propositions (ἀξιώματα ἀπλά)—

"It is day."

Non-simple (οὐχ ἀπλά)—

"If it is day, it is light."

Hypothetical (συννημμένα, as subdivision of the οὐχ ἀπλά)—

"If it is day, it is light."

Inferential (παρασυννημμένα)—

"Since it is day, it is light."

Indicating more or less (τὰ διασαφούντα τὸ μᾶλλον καὶ ἧττον).

"It is rather daytime than night," or Disjunctive (διεξενυγμένα)—

"Either it is day or it is night."

Predicate (κατηγορημα) was defined as "what is said of something"; in other words, "a thing associated with one or more subjects ”; or “ a defective expression which has to be joined on to a nominative case in order to yield a judgement ” (ἀξιωμα).

APPENDICES

Complements (συμβάματα). The words in D.L. which deal with this are corrupt. Apparently the term means a verb requiring a nominative subject, and therefore is identical with κατηγορήματα, according to the third definition given above. It is opposed to παρασυμβάματα, where the verb is impersonal and the real subject is in another case, as μεταμέλει μοι, “ it repents me ” = “ I repent.”

§ 142. Smooth movement. An Epicurean term (cf. note on De Post. 79), introduced here by Philo for a play on λειανούση, and qualified by τῷ ὄντι to show that he uses it in a higher sense than the Epicureans.

§ 145. Heinemann proposed in preference to Wendland's suggestion καὶ γὰρ διαίρεσις ἀνευ μνήμης καὶ μελέτης ἀνευ διεξόδου τῶν ἀρίστων. No doubt μελέτη may be taken as the equivalent of μνήμη, but διέξοδος can hardly be equivalent to διαίρεσις. Perhaps the following adaptation of Wendland's might be read: καὶ γὰρ διαίρεσις ἀνευ μνήμης καὶ μελέτης καὶ διεξόδου τῶν ἀρίστων ἀγαθὸν ἀτελές, <ὡσαύτως δὲ μνήμη ἀνευ διαιρέσεως ἀτελές>, in which the repetition of ἀτελές may have misled the scribe.

§ 160. Solidity. The term πῆξις is Stoic, see S.V.F. iii. 510. The life of ὁ προκόπτων only becomes really happy ὅταν αἱ μέσαι πράξεις . . . πῆξιν τινὰ λάβωσι.

§ 161. Unconscious of their wisdom. διαλεληθότες again is a Stoic term, though used rather of the fully wise, who do not yet realize their conversion, than, as here, of the man advancing to perfection; see S.V.F. iii. 539, 540.

APPENDIX TO DE PLANTATIONE

§ 3. Mr. Whitaker had left "ride upon" for ἄχεισθαι, and this is the natural meaning of the word; but the sequel shows that the fire rides upon the air, and the earth contains the water in its hollows (§ 10). At the same time the translation here substituted, "be held by," is not quite satisfactory. Probably ἄχεισθαι is corrupt. Some word indicating juxtaposition (ἄμορον κείσθαι?) seems to be needed.—F. H. C.

§ 6. Perfect parts. Cf. Quod Det. 154 and note, in which the dependence of this thought on Timaeus 32 c was pointed out.

§ 10. Masterpiece of literature. Or perhaps "literature." It seems to the translators doubtful whether Mangey, whom Wendland followed, was justified in substituting φωνῆς. The phrase ἔγγ. φωνή, cf. De Agr. 136, means speech which is capable of being analysed into the sounds which are represented by the γράμματα, and ἔγγ. μουσική will mean the same, except that while φωνή contemplates the letters as used for speech in general, μουσική contemplates them as used for the higher purpose of literary expression. The thought is enriched by the word; the action of the Logos in creating out of discordant στοιχεῖα the harmony of the Cosmos is compared with the way in which the στοιχεῖα of sound combine to form the medium by which we express our highest thoughts.

§ 29. The insertion of eis will no doubt make the construction easier, if we may assume that αἰσθήσεις can mean the organs of sense. But this seems doubtful (the passages in L. & S. 1927 quoted for it seem rather to mean the senses themselves as localized). Without eis the passage can be translated "taking our body, like some deep-soiled plot, as tree-beds, he made the senses for it," though it is true that we should have expected δεξαμενῆν.—F. H. C.

§ 33. To say nothing of the fact, etc. This sense can no doubt be obtained by excluding τῶ. But the combination in a single sentence of two such disparate thoughts, as (1) that the cause cannot be contained in the caused, (2) that the trees do not bear fruits, is odd. As there is admittedly some corruption, perhaps we may extend that corruption a little further and suppose that a fresh sentence and subject begins after περιέχεσθαι. It has been shown that God does not dwell in gardens; we now go on to show that He does not need the fruit. As a guess one might suggest φῶμεν δὲ for τῶ μηδὲ, i.e. "And are we to say forsooth that the trees (as they would if they were really trees) bear yearly fruit?" Who then will eat them?—F. H. C.

APPENDICES

§ 41. That is to say . . . irrational creatures. The ms. text and also the suggestions of Cohn and Mangey involve making the ἀσκήσεις καὶ χρήσεις the recipients of the privilege denied to the irrational creatures. But clearly the ἀσκήσεις καὶ χρήσεις represent the tilling of the garden and themselves constitute the privilege. The reading adopted brings out this meaning with no more departure from the manuscripts than the transplacement of ἐστίν and the omission of οὖν. Wendland's proposal of αἱ γοῦν ἀρετῆς δεκτικαὶ φύσεις, for αἱ οὖν ἀσκήσεις τε καὶ χρήσεις, would give much the same sense, but with more drastic alteration, and the phrase ἀσκήσεις καὶ χρήσεις has every appearance of being genuine.

§ 61. For separation. Or "for dismissal" as R.V. in margin. Mr. Whitaker had intended to correct his translation in Leg. All. ii. 52 from "averted of evil" to this, though that is the usual meaning of the word. Whatever the LXX actually meant, the interpretation which follows here (cf. also De Post. 72) seems to show that Philo took the word in this passive sense, and to this he would be guided by the parallel phrase in Lev. xvi. 10 ὥστε ἐξαποστειλαὶ αὐτὸν εἰς ἀποπομπήν.—F. H. C.

§ 73 ff. The curious distortion of the story of Genesis which follows has this much excuse, that the accusative after φυτεύω would naturally mean the thing planted, whereas the LXX uses it for the soil, which again would naturally be expressed by the dative following ἐπί. The A.V. has "grove" in place of the LXX "field" or "hide"; the R.V. has "tamarisk tree."

§ 76. 10,000 is the end. Apparently because Greek has no name for higher numbers, except such as are compounded with μυριοι or lower numbers.

PHILO

Ibid. If we adhere to the line of progress, etc. Literally "according to the first arrangement (or "series")." The word "first" is obscure. Possibly it may mean the series 1, 2, 3, etc., other secondary series being 1, 3, 5, etc., and 2, 4, 6, etc. The former would not reach 10,000, and the latter does not start from 1.

§ 93. Though by special grace, etc. An afterthought; no such reservation is made in 79-84.

§ 94. Natural duties. Or, as it has been rendered in earlier passages, "simple" or "common" or "daily" duties.

§ 95. Its crop. In 137, however, Philo seems to take αὐτοῦ as referring to the Lord, i.e. "what He has produced." But it would be quite in his manner to regard it as having both meanings.

§ 100. Indifferent. Or "belonging to the lower or preliminary stage," as in 94. For the phrase cf. De Sacr. 43.

§ 101. Debtors or slaves. I.e. if anyone, slave or freeman, has entrusted a friend with some piece of property, he should retain it, if otherwise it will be seized by the master of the former, or the creditor of the latter. Heinemann would read χρεώστας ἢ δούλους, but it is improbable that slaves were entrusted in this way and surely impossible that debtors should be. For the remarks that follow cf. note on Quod Deus 101.

§ 106. A desire that good, etc. A verbatim quotation of the Stoic definition of εὐνοια, see S. V. F. iii. 432.

§ 110. Philo oddly perverts the story of Jacob and the rods. It looks as if he took the words which follow the text which he quotes καὶ ἐφαίνετο τὸ λευκὸν ποικίλον to mean "the spotted appeared white" instead of the opposite.

§ 111. By way of leaving behind us bodily concerns. The case of κατά is strange, and the thought, though in itself quite Philonic, seems alien to the context. Perhaps read κατὰ τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ σώματος μετάβασιν <τοῦ ποικίλου> τὸ ποικίλον, κτλ., i.e. "Just as the variegatedness leaves the body of the leper, so we," etc.

§ 118. The soul's chiefest good, etc. This passage, like De Op. 53, is evidently dependent on the eulogy of light in Timaeus 47 A, see particularly, "Day and night . . . and months and years and the revolution of the years have created number . . . and from these we have derived philosophy, than which no greater good has come . . . to mortal men" (Archer-Hind's translation).

APPENDICES

The correction ἀγαθόν for the senseless ἀπάτη has been universally accepted. But such a foolish corruption is strange. Is it possible that ἄκος ἀπάτης or some such phrase may have stood originally?

§ 123. "All" or "totality." A Pythagorean idea, cf. Aristot. Met. i. 5, 968 a, "ten is thought to be perfect and to embrace the whole nature of number"; see Zeller, Pre-socratic Philosophy, vol. ii. p. 428. What applies to 10 applies to 4 also, since  $1 + 2 + 3 + 4 = 10$ . Philo is also probably thinking of the words πᾶς ὁ καρπός in his text from Leviticus.

§ 129. The family of the Muses, etc. Philo seems to be giving a spiritualized form of the legend in Hesiod, Theog. 50 f., where Zeus lay for nine nights with Mnemosyne, who after a year bore the Nine Muses at a birth. πάμμουσον frequently means "very musical" but one can hardly help supposing that here there is an allusion to "all the Muses."

§ 137. His products. See note on "its crop," § 95.

§ 139. And concerning the number 4. The sense given in the translation can no doubt be obtained by merely omitting the καὶ before ἄ, and taking συνεκροτεῖτο in a rather unusual sense. But the phrasing is odd. The genitive τῶν ἄθλων cannot be governed by φερομένης, and must be taken as partitive, "those of the prizes which." If we retain καὶ, we might perhaps translate "and about the things which were enjoined," but the genitive τῶν ἄθλων then is unintelligible, as Wendland felt, who suggested for it <τὰ πρῆσβεία> τῶν ἀριθμῶν.

But there is another possibility. The treatise up to now has consisted of three parts; the husbandry of God (1-73), the husbandry of the wise man (74-92), and the husbandry of the ordinary (progressing) man (93-138). In this last the number four was merely incidental. It seems possible that φερομένης like ἐπομένης agrees with γεωργίας, and that the meaning is the "husbandry which wins the prize assigned to four." No doubt some corruption must be assumed to get such a meaning, but the following might be tentatively suggested: τῆς φερομένης τετράδος τὸ ἄθλον, ἢ κατὰ, κτλ. The last words will then mean "the husbandry which was trained (or "worked") according to the injunctions and directions of the law." This would give quite a usual sense to συνεκροτέτο. The "working" or "training" has been described in 100 ff.—F. H. C.

PHILO

§ 142. Cf. Plutarch, De Garrulitate 4 (=503) F. καὶ μήποτε τὸ ζητούμενον παρὰ τοὺς φιλοσόφους λύων ὁ ποιητῆς οἰνώσεως καὶ μέθης διαφορὰν εἴρηκεν, οἰνώσεως μὲν ἀνεσις μέθης δὲ φλυαρίαν . . . οἱ δὲ φιλόσοφοι καὶ ὀριζόμενοι τὴν μέθην λέγουσιν εἶναι λήρησιν πάροιον· οὕτως οὐ ψέγεται τὸ πίνειν, εἰ προσεῖη τῷ πίνειν τὸ σιωπᾶν· ἀλλ' ἡ μωρολογία μέθην ποιεῖ τὴν οἰνώσιν. (Ibid., 504 B.)

"We may, indeed, believe that these lines of the poet<sup>a</sup> give the solution of the question discussed in the philosophic schools as to the distinction between mellowness and intoxication: mellowness produces unbending, but drunkenness foolish twaddling.

"In fact the philosophic definition of intoxication calls it 'silly talk in one's cups.' The blame, therefore, is not for drinking, if one can drink and yet at the same time hold his tongue. It is the foolish talk that converts mellowness into drunkenness" (Tucker's translation).

§ 145. "The others." I.e. those described in 143. Arnim would render "others," making a third class who are distinguished from the first, in that they regard drunkenness as venial in the exceptional circumstances described in 146. But all that is stated there is that the wise man may be occasionally forced to relax his general rule of avoiding all occasions of heavy drinking, and this is not incompatible with the view stated in § 143.

§ 163. "After sacrificing." This derivation is ascribed to Aristotle by Athenaeus, Epit. ii. p. 40 c.

§ 165. Etymology. Arguments like this and the preceding one were a recognized method of proof both in philosophy and rhetoric. Cf. Cicero, Topica 35 and Academica i. 32 (with Reid's note). The first proof, though of a very similar kind, would perhaps have been classed rather as an argument "from definition."

§ 171. Right feelings. Arnim takes this Stoic term (εὐπάθειαι) as supporting his contention that the disputant is a Stoic. But apart from the fact that the word is a favourite with Philo, Arnim himself notes that much of the Stoic "jargon" had become common property.

<sup>a</sup> Homer, Odyssey, xiv. 463 ff.

APPENDICES

§ 172. Arnim connects this argument with the strict Stoic view (a) that every good thing has its opposite evil; (b) that all good things belong solely to the wise man, and all bad things to the fool; (c) that what is neither good nor bad (ἀδιάφορον) is shared by both, and therefore its opposite must be shared by both. From this he argues that the ascription of this statement to οἱ πρότεροι shows that the disputant is a Stoic, since a member of an opposite school would not use such a form of words ("our predecessors"). If, however, it is assumed that the writer is a free lance, the argument seems doubtful. Moreover, the phrase ὡς ὁ τῶν προτέρων λόγος only applies to the statement that good and bad share soberness, and Arnim adduces no proof that this is Stoic.

§ 173. Inartistic. Cf. Aristot. Rhetoric i. 15. So called because "they are not due to the artist's inventive skill, but are supplied to him from the outside, as it were, of his art" (Cope). The other four are laws, documents, questions by torture, oaths.

§§ 176 ff. This argument is stated by Seneca in Ep. 83 as having been put forward by Zeno, and Seneca refutes it in exactly the same way as it is refuted here. He proceeds to deal in the same way with another defence of Zeno's argument, propounded by Posidonius, and then lays it down that the true way of proving the folly of drunkenness is to show its evil consequences—the loss of mental and bodily control, and the grave mischief which history shows that it has so often caused. If the suggestion made in Note (p. 211) to the Introduction is right, viz. that another speech followed, putting the case from the point of view of one who held that "the wise man will not get drunk," it may very possibly have followed these lines.

APPENDIX TO DE EBRIETATE

§ 2. Sometimes he gives opposite orders. In Numb. vi. 3 the Nazarite during the period of his vow is forbidden wine. In v. 20 the LXX has "he shall drink it," which Philo takes for a command.

§ 4. The ms. text, as Adler points out, gives better sense than Wendland's correction (following Mangey). It is difficult to give any meaning to "the gladness which embraces the rest," and below ἐπιθυμία is the cause of ἀπληστία, not, as Wendland would make it, a synonym.

§ 12. For the reading ἐκδιδούσαι see Adler, Wiener Studien 44, p. 220. Apart from its superior ms. authority, it makes better sense; ἀπαιδευσία is not the source of all actions, as the other reading implies.

§ 14. Riotous liver. The odd word συμβολοκοπῶ, which is apparently only found in the LXX and Apocrypha, is rightly enough traced by Philo to the συμβολαί or contributions which the feaster paid. The origin of the depreciatory suffix -κοπ . . is obscure. Philo attempts to account for it after his usual manner in 23. Other similar formations are φαντασιοκοπεῖν, δωροκοπεῖν, πορνοκοπεῖν.

§ 21. Complete irregularity of life. Philo several times uses ἐκδιαιτησις and its verb for the rejecting of what is required by the moral sense of the community. Thus the setting up of the golden calf is felt by the tribe of Levi to be an ἐκδιαιτησις, De Spec. Leg. iii. 126, and violation of the Sabbath may become ἀρχὴ τῆς περι τὰ ἄλλα ἐκδιαιτήσεως, De Som. ii. 123. The verb has occurred in De Gig. 21.

§ 30. "Father and mother," etc. I.e. the terms may be used in the figurative sense given in this section, or in the other figurative sense given in 33, as well as literally. Or possibly the meaning of the sentence may be that, while in the text from

APPENDICES

Deuteronomy the father and mother are grouped together, as acting in concert, their functions are really different.

§ 31. Obtained. The LXX has ἐκτίσε instead of ἐκτίσατο. Ryle (Philo and Holy Scripture, p. 296) points out that Philo's word is a more accurate translation of the Hebrew and is actually used by Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion. He suggests that ἐκτίσε may have resulted from a corrupt ἐκτίσατο.

§ 33. The disciples, who have followed in their company. The parable implied is that God and His wisdom are in the truest sense the parents of mankind (as included in the All). Reason and convention have been trained by the divine Pair to be the educators of mankind and thus stand to them in a sense as parents also.

§§ 36-64. The depreciation of the "feminine" element of convention in these sections cannot altogether be reconciled with the high estimate of it in 80-92. The best we can say for it is that Philo regards this "maternal" influence as good or bad, according as it is supported and regulated, or not, by the "paternal."

§ 42. Is not the Maker, etc. The argument is "God should be known to us from the beginning" (1) because He is the father of all, (2) because He presides at (belongs to) the beginning. It would be stated more logically if we transposed ἀρχηγέτης and ὁ κτίστης, "Is not the Maker of the Universe its ἀρχηγέτης and Father?" Indeed this meaning might be got, though somewhat unnaturally, out of the text as it stands, if we take καὶ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ with ἀρχηγέτης as predicate instead of coupling it with ὁ κτίστης.

§ 48. The timeless also exists in nature. Literally "there are also timeless natures." Philo is here as often (e.g. De Plant. 120) contrasting the "physical" (in his sense) with the ethical. But the thought is obscure. Perhaps it is something as follows. The dealings of God (here identified with nature) are timeless and therefore the "Practiser" will neglect time-order and look to order in value and thus desire to pass from the lower to the higher (νεώτερος and πρεσβύτερος passing as often from the sense of precedence in time to that of precedence in value).

Ibid. The laws of human character. Or the department of thought which deals with human conduct; ἡθοποιός, literally "forming conduct" seems here to be used for ἠθικός. Cf.

PHILO

ἡθοποιίαν 92. Wendland wished to read ἠθικός, but the usage, though perhaps rare, is natural enough, as Greek philosophy holds that right conduct must be based on ethics, and conversely that a knowledge of ethics will produce right conduct.

§ 51. This section seems to mean that Philo was familiar with cases where those whose education in the Encyclicia had been neglected were at pains to repair the loss in later life. This is perhaps not surprising. The Encyclicia, or at least its most important elements γραμματική and rhetoric, were more studied by adults and entered more into the life of the upper classes than our school subjects do with us, and a man might well feel at a loss in good society without them. That Philo regards such a return to the Encyclicia as a retrograde step follows from his peculiar view of them. Taken at the proper time, i.e. in boyhood, they are almost indispensable as an introduction to philosophy. Taken later, they are mere vanity and thus at the end of 52 they are equated with "external goods."

Ibid. Left the right path. Or "missed their way," "gone where no road is." The phrase ἀνοδία χρῆσθαι has occurred in De Agr. 101.

§ 56. Discoursing with herself. Rachel's answer to Laban is regarded as symbolizing the admission which every reflecting soul must make to itself of its inability to rise up against the "outward goods" which Laban represents. In using διαλόγους thus, Philo may have been influenced by Plato, Soph. 263 F ὁ μὲν ἐντὸς τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς αὐτὸν διάλογος ἀνεὺ φωνῆς γιγνόμενος τοῦτ' αὐτὸ ἡμῶν ἐπινομάσθη διάνοια.

§ 70. The uttered word. For the Stoic distinction between λόγος προφορικός (speech) and λόγος ἐνδιάθετος (thought) see note on De Gig. 52. The latter, not the former, distinguishes men from animals, for ravens and parrots speak (S. V. F. ii. 135); still speech is nearer to the mind than the senses are.

§ 73. The treatment of the story differs considerably from that in Leg. All. iii. 242, De Post. 183, De Mut. 108. There the woman is pleasure or passion and the man is ignored; and the piercing through the "mother-part" is to prevent her engendering further evil. Here the woman is the belief which ascribes causation to creation itself, the man the ideas or reasonings based on this belief, and the piercing through the womb is to show that no real power of bearing belongs to creation. Philo is of course assisted by δέξα being feminine, and λογισμός masculine.

APPENDICES

§ 74. Adler aptly supports the ms. reading by τοῖς κοίνοις ἀνθρώπων ἔθεσιν ἀλίσκονται 68. But it must be admitted that this use of πρός for "belonging to" "like" is strange, if not, as Wendland says, impossible. Such phrases as πρός γυναικός ἐστι (regularly followed by the verb "to be," expressed or understood) are hardly parallel.

§ 84. For if you have learnt . . . mother. Adler points out that these words also as well as the quotation which follows are reminiscent of Proverbs. Cf. i. 8, "My son, hear the instructions of thy father and forsake not the laws (LXX μὴ ἀπόση θεσμούς) of thy mother."

§ 88. Art of arts. So ἀρετή is a τέχνη περι ὄλου τοῦ βίου (S. V. F. iii. 560, where we have the Stoic doctrine that the wise man does all things which he undertakes well).

§ 95. Aggressor in wickedness. The exact meaning of προσεπιβαίνειν is doubtful: clearly it is an antithesis to imitating their virtue. Perhaps "to go further and trample on them." Mangey translated it by "praevaricari."

Ibid. Vanity most honoured among the Egyptians. I.e. Apis, which Philo identifies with the Calf of Ex. xxxii. He is also thinking of Aaron's words in v. 4. The phrase "vanity of the Egyptians" recurs several times in Philo, generally with allusion to this incident.

§ 96. And he said. I.e. Moses, as the interpretation shows; see next note.

§ 98. Personal experience . . . the one who watches the course of events. In this interpretation Joshua and Moses apparently represent two aspects of the man's self. He feels the inward tumult, and then the reasoning side of his nature (the Moses in us) interprets the true cause. This reasoning side is identified with the Holy Word in 104.

§ 113. The full text of Numb. xxi. 17-18 should be compared with Philo's interpretation. ἐξάρχετε αὐτῷ φρέαρ ὠρυξαν αὐτὸ ἄρχοντες, ἐξελατόμησαν αὐτὸ βασιλεῖς ἐθνῶν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ αὐτῶν, ἐν τῷ κυριεῦσαι αὐτῶν. The ἐξάρχετε of this is reproduced by ἐξάρχει in the previous section, and a comparison with De Vita Mosis i. 256 suggests that he interprets ὠρυξαν by searching for or finding wisdom (ἀναζητῆσαι, in V.M. εἴρεσις) and ἐλατόμησαν by building it up (κατεργάσασθαι, in V.M. κατασκευή), while "conquered" represents ἐν τῷ κυριεύσει αὐτῶν.

PHILO

§§ 114-118. In the original the captains have made the roll-call of their men and no one has failed to answer (διαπεφώνηκεν). In the allegory the aspirants to spiritual power (this is based on the description of them as καθεσταμένοι εἰς τὰς χιλιάρχιας τῆς δυνάμεως, v. 48) make themselves masters (εἰλήφασιν) of the opposing forces of false courage. These, under the influence of the higher nature, are reduced to the mean, i.e. true courage, and thus none "is at discord." This, which, though not the meaning of the LXX, is the natural meaning of the word, serves to connect the passage with the other songs of victory. Cf. De Conf. 55.

This rendering assumes the "captains" to be the antecedent of οὖς. It would make better sense to make λόγους the antecedent, for then πολεμικούς would be equated with the πολεμιστῶν of Numbers. We should have, however, then to take δυσὶν ἀντιτεταγμένους τέλεσιν as "arranged in two battalions"—an unnatural use of the dative.

§ 115. Two battalions. Combined with this military sense of τέλος there is perhaps the thought of the philosophical sense "purposes," "motives."

§ 132. Copies. It will be observed that εἰκόνας is used in a different sense to that of 134. The literal tabernacle and altar are both εἰκόνας (or symbols) of their spiritual counterparts. The spiritual altar is an εἰκὼν of the spiritual temple in the philosophical sense of the theory of ideas. But perhaps ταῦτα stands for the phenomenal world in general, in which case we have the philosophical use or something like it.

§ 134. This section seems to the translator to raise difficult questions which he is unable to answer with any confidence, and leaves to some more accomplished Platonist. The tabernacle is generic virtue, the altar is the particular virtues, which one would naturally suppose to be the ordinary four, justice, temperance, etc. In what sense are these (a) perceptible by the senses yet (b) never actually perceived by them? The answer to (a) may perhaps be that by the particular virtues he does not mean the specific virtues in the abstract, but the manifestations of them in particular persons. This will agree with De Cher. 5, where the particular and specific virtues (ἐν μέρει καὶ κατ' εἶδος) are contrasted with generic virtue, and then these particular virtues are defined as "virtues in the I," and therefore perishable, because the "I" is perishable! If this is so, what is the answer to (b)? Is it that while these virtues are conceivable in the individual, they are never realized? This hardly seems satisfactory.

APPENDICES

The question between idéas acc. plur. (Wendland and Cohn) and idéas gen. sing. (Adler) may be argued as follows. For the acc. it may be said that Philo uses the word in a loose sense for the νοητὰ θεωρήματα of 132. Both generic and specific virtues belong to a different order of things from the material altar and tabernacle. Or again, if Philo means the specific virtues in the abstract, are not these also ιδεαι, as well as the generic, which is their ιδέα? On the other hand, the genitive is strongly suggested by the antithesis to αἰσθητῆ εἰκῶν and the similar antithesis in 137.

§ 142. Right reason which is identical with law. This glorification of νόμος is definitely Stoic; see S. V. F. iii. 613.

§ 146. παρακινεῖν. As Adler points out, Philo is thinking of Phaedrus 249 D, where the truly inspired (ἐνθουσιάζων) is reproved by the many as παρακινῶν.

§ 150. Hard day. Adler's suggestion that ἡμέρα means "(and at the same time) easy" finds some support in the quotation from Hesiod. But there is no such suggestion in the varlet's words. It must be remembered that Philo found the phrase in the LXX and did not invent it. We need not suppose that he gave ἡμέρα any definite meaning, or again he may have interpreted it as "a day's journey." And if he really found in it any such edifying suggestion, as Adler supposes, he would surely have enlarged upon it.

§ 157. Reason . . . unreason. The translator is baffled, as often, by the way in which Philo combines and intertwines λόγος as "reason" or "thought" with λόγος as "speech." He is working out the idea of soul-sight (intuition) and soul-hearing (learning by instruction). The latter may be equated with λόγος "reason," but as we learn through words it may also be equated with λόγος "word" and this is indicated by the antithesis of τοῖς λεγομένοις and τὰ ὄντα in § 158.

§ 158. Mis-seeing or mis-hearing. Cf. S. V. F. iii. 548 ἀλλ' οὐδὲ παρορᾶν οὐδὲ παρακούειν νομίζουσι τὸν σοφόν.

§ 170. There are many reasons for this. Here begins Philo's version of the "tropes of Aenesidemus," see Anal. Intr. pp. 314 f. It should be noted that Philo omits two of the ten tropes, as they are stated by Sextus Empiricus (Pyrrh. Hyp. i. 36 f.) and Diogenes Laertius ix. 79-88. These two are (a) the differences in the sensations produced by different senses in the same individual, e.g. honey is pleasant to the taste, but unpleasant to the eye, (b) the different feelings produced by the same recurrence according to its rarity or frequency, e.g. when earthquakes are common they do not cause any excitement.

PHILO

Ibid. In the first place. The first trope is called by Sextus (Pyrrh. Hyp. i. 36) "that of the variety in animals" (ὁ παρὰ τὴν τῶν ζώων ἐξαλλαγήν), the argument being that, as animals are constructed so differently, we must suppose that the impressions which the same object gives them are different.

§ 172. Those who form judgements. The tropes were classified according as the difference of impressions arises from something in the subject who forms the impression (τὸ κρίνον) or from the object which creates the impression (τὸ κρινόμενον), or from both combined (Sextus, ibid. 38). The first, second, and third as given by Philo belong to the first class, the fifth to the second, and the other four to the third.

§§ 172-174. The introduction of these examples, which have no parallel in Sextus or Diogenes, is quite illogical. Clearly there is no suggestion that the polypus, chameleon, and elk receive different impressions. If germane at all they should come under the trope of "position" etc. (181). But with the exception of the dove's neck, the examples have no bearing on the argument, since these changes of "camouflage" are supposed to be actual changes. Philo, or the source from which he drew, was attracted by the interest of these supposed changes in the animal world and could not refrain from noticing them in a passage which deals with animals. That the illogicality did not altogether escape him is shown by his remarking that they belong to the κρινόμενα, not to the κρίνοντα.

§ 173. The dove's neck. A common example with the "bent oar" of an illusion (see Reid on Acad. ii. 79). Sextus (ibid. 120) and Diogenes ix. 86 rightly give it under "position," but ascribe the change to the way the neck is turned (Lucr. ii. 801, like Philo, to the sun's ray).

§ 175. Impossibility of apprehension. This leading term of the Sceptics, properly speaking, applies to the object which cannot be apprehended, but came to signify their general doctrine. Hicks (Diog. Laert. ix. 61) translates it "agnosticism."

APPENDICES

Ibid. Secondly. The second trope, called by Sextus ὁ παρὰ τὴν τῶν ἀνθρώπων διαφορὰν (ibid. 79). While the variety in animals was a prima facie ground for thinking that the animal man was liable to a similar instability of impressions, this is supposed to need special proof, which this trope gives.

Ibid. Not only do their judgements. I.e. of the same people. Wendland's proposed insertion of οἱ αὐτοὶ in contrast to ἕτεροι is unnecessary, though "the same" is implied. The changes in animals just mentioned being all in the same animal, suggest that there are analogous mental changes in individual men. This, however, belongs to the third trope and is only mentioned in passing, before we pass to the subject of the second trope.

§ 176. ἐπισπασάμενοι seems elsewhere, as in De Gig. 44, to suggest using influence or force to attract. Adler's ἀσπασάμενοι would be more natural; but there is hardly sufficient reason for the change. Perhaps ἐπασπασάμενοι. The word is only quoted from the 6th century A.D., but there are such things as ἀπαξ εἰρημένα in Philo.

§ 178. The third trope (Sextus's fourth), called by him ὁ παρὰ τὰς περιστάσεις, ibid. 100.

§ 181. The fourth trope (fifth in Sextus, who uses the same phrase as here, ὁ παρὰ τὰς θέσεις καὶ τὰ διαστήματα καὶ τοὺς τόπους), ibid. 119. For positions or attitudes (θέσεις), i.e. of the object itself, Sextus gives the dove's bent neck, and Philo's swimming fish perhaps come under this head. For surroundings (τόποι), Sextus gives the bent oar and also the faintness of candle-light in the sun. For distances from the observer (διαστήματα), Sextus gives the varying appearance of a ship at sea.

§ 184. The fifth trope (Sextus's seventh, ibid. 129, his sixth being taken by Philo in 190). Sextus calls it ὁ παρὰ τὰς ποσότητας καὶ σκευασίας τῶν ὑποκειμένων. It would perhaps be better to translate ἐν τοῖς σκευαζομένοις by "preparations" simply and to omit "relative" and "in the various ingredients" in what follows; also to render συνθέσει by "aggregations" rather than "compounds." Sextus explains that by σκευασίας he means συνθέσεις in general and the examples show that these need not be of more than one substance.

PHILO

§ 186. The sixth trope (Sextus's eighth, ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ πρὸς τι), ibid. 135.

§ 190. The seventh trope (Sextus's sixth, ὁ παρὰ τὰς ἐπιμυξίας), ibid. 124.

Ibid. Those which are in accord with nature, etc. I.e. apparently, pleasant or unpleasant. Cf. the definition of pleasure and pain in Timaeus 64 D. But the epithet would naturally be applied to the χυλοὶ in the sense of flavours, as in 191, rather than to the "juices of the mouth." The following point may perhaps be worth consideration. In the parallel in Sextus these mouth-juices are ὕλαι ἐν τοῖς γεύσεως τόποις ὑποκείμεναι. If we read here ἐνστομίων <ἄλλων> χυλῶν ἄσοι κτλ., i.e. "can we, without the substances in the mouth, tell what flavours are natural and what unnatural?" we should have a text which would easily lend itself to corruption.

§ 193. The eighth and last trope (Sextus's tenth, stated by him as ὁ παρὰ τὰς ἀγωγὰς καὶ τὰ ἔθη καὶ τοὺς νόμους καὶ τὰς μυθικὰς πίστεις καὶ τὰς δογματικὰς ὑπολήψεις), ibid. 145. The first two of them are repeated by Philo in the same words, and the δογματικὰ ὑπολήψεις appear in 198 ff. But there is nothing corresponding to the μυθικὰς πίστεις, i.e. the popular superstitions which with the scientific theories of the philosophers are represented by the Sceptics as having such a total want of agreement as to put the coping-stone on the accumulation of evidence for human ἀκαταληψία.

Ibid. Ways of life. We might take ἀγωγὰι αἱ ἐκ παίδων to mean "systems of education," but Sextus explains it as αἰρέσεις βίου ἢ πραγμάτων περὶ ἓνα ἢ πολλοῦς, illustrating it by Diogenes' asceticism and Spartan discipline.

§ 198. Here begin the δογματικὰ ὑπολήψεις. The first part of the section bears a considerable resemblance to "Longinus," De Sublimitate xlv. 3, 4, describing the tyranny of custom, from the cradle (ἐνεσπαργανωμένοι) and the buffeted (κεκονδλισμένοι) condition of the multitude.

§ 199. The opinions here mentioned may be roughly classified as following:

Infinite (Epicurean)—Finite (Stoic).

Created (Stoics and Epicureans)—Uncreated (Peripatetic).

No providence (Epicurean)—Providence (Stoic).

One "good" (Stoic)—Three "goods" (Peripatetic).

§ 206. Gluttony. This represents the ἀπληστία of 4 and 6.

§ 208. Cup of reconciliation. The phrase ἐπὶ σπονδαῖς

APPENDICES

combines the idea of pouring wine as cup-bearer (Gen. xl. 21) and the common meaning of "on the conditions of a truce."

§ 213. Lost the organs of generation. For the literal meaning see A.V. ἐκτετμημένῳ πίστιν interprets ἀποκεκομμένος, and παρακαταθήκην etc. interprets θλαδίας.

§ 218. Fine bouquet. The adj. ἀνθιμος or ἀνθινος is explained by Hesychius and the Scholiast as meaning (a) flavoured with herbs or flowers, (b) smelling like flowers. The latter is more suitable here.

§ 221. Cavities, or "stomachs," a use of ὄγκος not given in the dictionaries, but found in Plutarch, Mor. 652 ε and elsewhere (see Wyttenbach's index).

APPENDIX TO DE SOBRIETATE

§ 12. Comeliness of the body . . . beauty of the soul. Philo is thinking of Symposium 218 ε, where Socrates says to Alcibiades, "You must see in me that κάλλος, greatly different from the εὐμορφία which I see in you."

Ibid. Bastard brothers. This distinction between the sons of the concubines and those of the legitimate wives has already been made, though in a somewhat different way, in Quod Deus 119 ff.; see also De Mig. 95, where Asher in particular is the symbol αἰσθητοῦ καὶ νόθου πλούτου. Below (66) and elsewhere all twelve are put on a level.

§ 18. The phrase thus set before us, etc. The thought of this section seems to be this; the phrase "God blessed him" explains in what sense Abraham was an elder, because the εὐλογία of God necessarily produces εὐλογιστία in man and this εὐλογιστία is moral seniority. According to the Stoics τὸ εὐλογιστεῖν in the selection of what is according to nature is the "end" of the individual man and brings him into agreement with the law of the universe, which is identical with Zeus (Diog. Laert. vii. 88). Philo, in his desire to equate the Stoic ideal with the divine blessing, more than once, e.g. Leg. All. iii. 191, 192, brings εὐλογία into close connexion with εὐλογιστία. The mere fact that they both contain εὐ and λόγος would be enough for him. But in De Mig. 70 he strengthens the connexion by explaining εὐλογῆσω as ἐπαινετὸν λόγον δωρήσομαι.

§ 32. [δοῦλος δούλων]. This is given instead of the παῖς οἰκέτης of the LXX in Aquila's version, whence Wendland supposes that it was interpolated into Philo's text. Ryle on the other hand (Philo and Holy Scripture, p. 44), points out that Philo in quoting Gen. ix. 26 and 27 (in sections 51 and 59) uses δοῦλος where the LXX has παῖς, and infers that it is more likely that he had δοῦλος δούλων here. But in 51, where he quotes this verse 25 again, we have παῖς οἰκέτης without any variant or addition.

APPENDICES

§ 34. The state of rest. Philo seems always to use σχέσις in contrast to κίνησις (see Index). In calling it "akin" to ἕξις he is in general agreement with Stobaeus (S.F.V. iii. 111), where, after opposing τὰ ἐν κινήσει ἀγαθὰ to τὰ ἐν σχέσει ἀγαθὰ, he adds that some of the latter are also ἐν ἕξει, others ἐν σχέσει μόνον. He gives as examples of τὰ ἐν κινήσει joy and the like, of τὰ ἐν ἕξει the virtues and the arts when transformed by virtue and permanently established, of τὰ ἐν σχέσει μόνον "orderly quietude" (εὐτακτος ἡσυχία). From this use of ἐν σχέσει μόνον in contrast to ἐν σχέσει καὶ ἕξει comes the contrast between σχέσις itself and ἕξις as something transitory opposed to the less transitory, just as ἕξις in its turn is often opposed to διάθεσις, as something less permanent, or perhaps less essential and engrained (cf. on De Cher. 62). This use of σχέσις does not appear in Philo, though he uses the adverb so in Leg. All. iii. 210, where σχετικῶς καὶ εὐαλότως ὡς ἂν ἐκ τυχῆς is contrasted with ἀπὸ ἕξεως καὶ διαθέσεως. The distinction between ἕξις and διάθεσις is ignored in De Sobrietate as in Stobaeus, thus bringing ἕξις into agreement with the Aristotelian use of the word.

§ 50. The oracles in Genesis. Wendland, in adopting the reading mentioned in the footnote (as well as in 49), is following the version of 49 and 50, quoted in Nicetes Serranus's commentary on St. Luke. The ms. of this commentary is of the 12th century, but the date of the author is not stated. If Nicetes gives the true reading here, how are we to account for the wanton alteration from πρὸς τὸν Καῖν to περὶ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς γενέσεως? The translators incline to think that the reading of the mss. is right. It is natural enough that, as the preceding quotations come from Exodus and Leviticus, Philo should want to indicate that this comes from Genesis and since, as he says (De Abr. 1), this book takes its name ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως, the expression here used is not impossible. That Nicetes should have corrected a reference so vague and apt to mislead to something more definite is equally natural. Wendland's statement about the general superiority of this excerpt to the mss. of Philo is hardly borne out by his practice. He follows them as often as he follows Nicetes.

§ 51. Blessed be the Lord, the God of Shem. When Philo wrote the Quaestiones (Quaest. in Gen. ii. 15), he clearly read Κύριος ὁ θεός, ὁ θεός Σήμ, for not only is the text quoted as "benedictus est dominus deus, deus Sem," but the comment demands this, e.g. "bis nominatur benefica virtus dei." Should we read the same here? It is against it that when the verse is cited in 58 (but see note) the mss. again have only one ὁ θεός. On the other hand, the argument of 55 will become clearer. God is Lord God of the world, but God only of Shem.

PHILO

§ 52. The interpretation of "Shem" as "name" and thence, as the best of names, "the good," does not appear elsewhere in what we have of Philo. But the idea was taken up by the Latin Fathers, though they characteristically substituted Christ for the good. So Ambrose, Ep. 7. 46 "Sem dicitur Latine nomen," Augustine, De Civitate Dei xvi. 2 "Sem quippe, de cuius semine in carne natus est Christus, interpretatur nominatus. Quid autem nominatus Christo?"

§ 56. My friend. This variant, which, as the argument shews, is deliberate, is especially noticeable in view of James ii. 23 φίλος ἐκλήθη θεοῦ. Ryle, l.c. p. 75, suggests that it was an earlier rendering, subsequently altered as too familiar, yet retaining its influence after the LXX became the standard version.

Ibid. He alone is nobly born. For this and the other "paradoxes" which follow see S. V. F. iii. 589 ff.

§ 58. Blessed be the Lord, the God of Shem. Observe that Philo here substitutes εὐλογημένος for the εὐλογητός of the LXX which he followed in 51, though in De Mig. 107 he carefully distinguishes between the two as meaning respectively "the subject of blessing (by others)," and "worthy of blessing." It is quite possible, as Heinemann suggests, that he means us here to take Σήμ as dative. Compare his treatment of Δάν in De Agr. 99. In this case we should translate "let the Lord God be blessed by Shem." This rendering suits the argument which follows, and it is quite in Philo's manner to suggest such a double rendering, and further to imagine or accept a variant εὐλογημένος to fit it.

§§ 60 ff. For the three kinds of goods cf. De Ebr. 200 ff. and note on Quod Det. 7. Here Philo comes nearer to the Peripatetic view than in De Gig. 38. He is still nearer to it in Quis Rer. Div. Her. 285 ff.

PHILO

IN TEN VOLUMES (AND TWO SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES)

IV

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY
F. H. COLSON, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

AND

THE REV. G. H. WHITAKER, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS

LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD

MCMLXXXV

American ISBN 0-674-99287-3
British ISBN 0 434 99261 5

First printed 1932
Reprinted 1939, 1949, 1958, 1968, 1985

Printed in Great Britain

CONTENTS OF VOLUME IV

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	vii
LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS . . . . .	xi
ON THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES (DE CONFUSIONE LINGUARUM)—
Introduction . . . . .	2
Text and Translation . . . . .	8
ON THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM (DE MIGRATIONE ABRAHAMI)—
Introduction . . . . .	123
Text and Translation . . . . .	132
WHO IS THE HEIR OF DIVINE THINGS (QUIS RERUM DIVINARUM HERES)—
Introduction . . . . .	270
Text and Translation . . . . .	284
ON MATING WITH THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES (DE CONGRESSU QUAERENDAE ERUDITIONIS GRATIA)—
Introduction . . . . .	451
Text and Translation . . . . .	458

CONTENTS

APPENDICES—

	PAGE
I. To De Confusione Linguarum . . .	553
II. To De Migratione Abrahami . . .	560
III. To Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres . .	567
IV. To De Congressu quaerendae Erudi- tionis gratia . . . . .	577

PREFACE TO VOLUME IV

As was stated in the Preface to the last volume, Mr. Whitaker's versions of the treatises he had agreed to take in this volume and the fifth were in existence at his death. As it happens, however, his part in this volume was confined to one treatise of the four, viz. the De Migratione. This had reached the typescript stage, and just before his death I had sent him some corrections or suggestions which he had accepted. Since then, however, I have made a good many further alterations in that treatise. On the De Confusione he had sent me only a few suggestions, and my versions of the other two treatises he had not seen at all. Altogether I feel that, for good or for ill, I must take the final responsibility for this volume, and I have therefore ceased to use such phrases as "The Translators think" and used the first person singular instead. That the work has suffered by his absence, and that there are sure to be many things which I should have altered or modified if I had had his advice, need hardly be said.

A misunderstanding shewn by a reviewer makes me think that it would be well to say something about the textual notes. My own view has always been that, while it would be beyond the scope of a work of this kind to indicate the variants in the mss., places in which the text printed has no ms. authority should be recorded. Mr. Whitaker did not altogether

PREFACE

agree with me, and consequently in the first two volumes there was no consistent attempt to give this information, though the reproduction of the angular and square brackets did indicate insertions and omissions in the text. In the third volume and this, however, I have made it a rule to note all cases (except such as are merely orthographical) where the text printed is purely conjectural, however certain the conjectures may be.<sup>a</sup> Further, it is to be understood that, unless it is stated otherwise, the text printed is that of Wendland. It does not follow, however, that any particular emendation of the text is due to Wendland, as I have not thought it necessary to distinguish between his emendations and those of Mangey, Markland and Turnebus, so long as he himself has adopted them. I also note all cases where I have not followed Wendland's text, and, where the emendation is our own, have stated the fact. Of these last there are not many. But there are a good many more noted in footnotes or appendix where I feel fairly confident that the reading we have suggested is right, but have not that degree of certitude which would justify my printing it in the text itself. As to Wendland's corrections, while I accept without question the facts of his apparatus criticus, I do not, as the work progresses, feel the same confidence in his judgement. He does not seem to me to consider sufficiently how the text which he adopts came to be corrupted to the form which it has in the mss. On the whole, however, the principle laid down in the preface of the first volume, that where hesitation does not amount to conviction the text of this standard edition should be preserved, has been followed in this volume with modification.

<sup>a</sup> Omissions and insertions are of course not noted in the footnotes, as the brackets speak for themselves.

PREFACE

A mild regret has also been expressed that no account of the mss. has been given. It is perhaps a pity that this was not attempted in the General Introduction. In apology it may be said that, leaving out of consideration excerpts and quotations, which form a considerable part of the evidence for the text, the mss. used by Cohn and Wendland, few of which are earlier than the thirteenth century and none earlier than the eleventh or tenth, amount to more than twenty in the six volumes and vary greatly with the different treatises; and that Cohn has declared at the end of his survey that no single ms. or family of mss. stands out in such a way that anything more than an eclectic recension of Philo's text is possible.<sup>a</sup>

I cannot conclude without again expressing the greatness of the debt I owe to Leisegang's index. True, there are a good many words absent, on which one would be glad to be able to investigate Philo's usage, and of the words dealt with I have sometimes found examples omitted, so that one has to be cautious in drawing negative conclusions from it. Still, on the whole, it is an admirable piece of work, and not only the present translator but all future editors of Philo will have in their hands an instrument which Mangey and Wendland would have given much to possess.

F. H. C.

February 1932.

<sup>a</sup> Prolegomena to Vol. I, p. xli.

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

SHOWING THEIR DIVISION INTO VOLUMES IN THIS EDITION

VOLUME

- I. On the Creation (De Opificio Mundi)
Allegorical Interpretation (Legum Allegoriae)
- II. On the Cherubim (De Cherubim)
On the Sacrifices of Abel and Cain (De Sacrificiis Abelis et Caini)
The Worse attacks the Better (Quod Deterius Potiori
insidiari solet)
On the Posterity and Exile of Cain (De Posteritate Caini)
On the Giants (De Gigantibus)
- III. On the Unchangeableness of God (Quod Deus im-mutabilis sit)
On Husbandry (De Agricultura)
On Noah's Work as a Planter (De Plantatione)
On Drunkenness (De Ebrietate)
On Sobriety (De Sobrietate)
- IV. On the Confusion of Tongues (De Confusione Lin-guarum)
On the Migration of Abraham (De Migratione Abrahami)
Who is the Heir (Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres)
On the Preliminary Studies (De Congressu quaerendae Eruditionis gratia)
- V. On Flight and Finding (De Fuga et Inventione)
On the Change of Names (De Mutatione Nominum)
On Dreams (De Somniis)
- VI. On Abraham (De Abrahamo)
On Joseph (De Iosepho)
Moses (De Vita Mosis)

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

VOLUME

- VII. On the Decalogue (De Decalogo)
On the Special Laws Books I-III (De Specialibus Legibus)
- VIII. On the Special Laws Book IV (De Specialibus Legibus)
On the Virtues (De Virtutibus)
On Rewards and Punishments (De Praemiis et Poenis)
- IX. Every Good Man is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit)
On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa)
On the Eternity of the World (De Aeternitate Mundi)
Flaccus (In Flaccum)
Hypothetica<sup>1</sup> (Apologia pro Iudaeis)
On Providence<sup>1</sup> (De Providentia)
- X. On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium)
GENERAL INDEX TO VOLUMES I-X

SUPPLEMENT

- I. Questions and Answers on Genesis<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin)
- II. Questions and Answers on Exodus<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum)
- GENERAL INDEX TO SUPPLEMENTS I-II

<sup>1</sup> Only two fragments extant.

<sup>2</sup> Extant only in an Armenian version.

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THE text of this treatise is Gen. xi. 1-9, which is given in full in the first section.

Philo begins by stating the objections which the sceptical critics had brought against the story. They had said that the project of building a tower to reach heaven was really the same as the Homeric myth of the Aloeidae (2-4), and had pointed out the absurdity of the idea (5). Secondly they had said that the story of the confusion of tongues was much the same as the fable that all animals originally understood each other's language and lost the privilege by presumption (6-8), and though the story in Genesis was a little more rational, still the idea that the multiplication of languages would serve to prevent co-operation in sin was absurd (9-13). Philo will leave the literalists to answer these criticisms as they can. His own answer is to give an allegorical interpretation of the whole story (14-15).

By "one lip and one voice" Moses is indicating a "symphony" of evils, which is seen not only in the multitude, but in the individual (16), where it sometimes takes the form of the external calamities of fortune (16-20), but still more in the passions which beset the soul (21-22), of which the deluge story is an allegory (23-25), as also the alliance against Abraham (26), and the attack of the whole people of Sodom upon the angel visitors (27-28). The illustration which follows leads to a meditation on the word "lip" ( $\chi\epsilon\acute{\iota}\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ )<sup>a</sup> which also means "edge." Moses met Pharaoh on the "lip" of the river. The Egyptians lay dead on the "lip" of the sea (29-36), and since "lip" means speech, we may see in this death the silencing of convicted falsehood (37-38), though here a caution is needed. There are many unskilled in refuting falsehood and they can only do so with God's help (39).

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES

The "symphony" of evil suggests the "symphony" of good, and this appears in the words of the patriarchs "we are men of peace, sons of one man." The one man is the Divine Logos, and only those who acknowledge him are men of peace, while the opposite creed of polytheism breeds discord (40-43). Yet this peace is also a war against the symphony of evil. This thought leads to an exposition of Jeremiah xv. 10, particularly of the description by the prophet of himself as a "man of war" (43-51), and hence to the "symphony" gained by the Captains who fought against Midian (52-57), and the highest of all symphonies, when Israel would "do and hear," that is would do God's will even before they heard the commandment (58-59).<sup>b</sup>

The next verse of the text is "as they march from the east (or "rising") they found a plain in the land of Shinar (interpreted as shaking off) and dwelt there." "Rising" and "shaking off" being applicable to good and ill lead to illustrations from other texts where these words occur (60-74). "Finding" suggests that the wicked actually seek evil (75), and

<sup>a</sup> The word is the motif running through the whole treatise.

<sup>b</sup> For a closer account of the connexion of thought in §§ 52-57 see note on § 57.

PHILO

“ dwelling there ” suggests the contrast (illustrated from sayings of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Moses) of the good man regarding himself as only a sojourner in the body (76-82).

We now come to the building of the city and tower. The third verse is “ come let us make bricks and bake them with fire.” By “ brick-making ” is meant the analysing and shaping of evil-minded thoughts (83-90), and we are reminded that such brick-making is also imposed upon the Israel-soul, when once it is in bondage to Egypt (91-93). This last thought gives rise to a very loosely connected meditation on the vision of the Divine granted to the liberated Israel in Ex. xxiv.<sup>a</sup> and the interpretation of its details (94-100). The “ baking with fire ” signifies the solidarity which sophistical argument gives to their vices, and so too we have “ their brick became a stone ” (101-102). But on the other hand the “ asphalt became clay,<sup>b</sup> ” that is, God subverts their evil designs, before they attain the safety (ἀσφάλεια) of “ asphalt ” (103-104). Two thoughts on “ asphalt ” follow suggesting that its “ safety ” is rather the safety of bodily than of spiritual things (105-106).

“ Let us build ourselves a city and tower whose head shall reach to heaven.” Our souls are cities and the fool summons all his senses and passions to help him build his city with its tower or acropolis to his taste (107-112). When the tower seeks to rise to heaven, it signifies the impious attempt of theological falsities (especially the denial of providence) to attack celestial truths (113-115). On the next words “ let us make our name ” Philo bursts into invective against the madness of the wicked in actually flaunting their wickedness (116-118). It is true indeed that they have an inkling that there is a divine judgement awaiting them as they shew by the next words "before we are scattered abroad" (119-121). But this is only in the background of their thoughts. In general they are of Cain's lineage and believe in the self-sufficiency of man, the folly of which Philo denounces in his usual way, and this self-sufficiency gives a second meaning to the words "its head shall reach to heaven" (122-128). But this tower will be overthrown even as Gideon overthrew the tower of Penuel (turning away from God), not in war but when he returned in peace—the true peace (129-132). By a third interpretation "heaven" may mean "mind," and the attempt to reach it be the attempt to exalt sense above mind (133).

<sup>a</sup> Partly induced by the occurrence of the words “ brick ” or “ plinth ” in the narrative.      <sup>b</sup> See note on § 102.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES

The words "the Lord came down to see the city and the tower" call for the usual protest against anthropomorphism, and Philo again emphasizes the truth that God's Potencies are everywhere, while His essential nature is not in space at all (134-139). The intention of Moses in using the phrase is to shew us by God's example the need of close examination before we dogmatize, and the superiority of sight to hearsay (140-141). As for the phrase the "sons of men," some may scoff at it as a pleonasm, but the true meaning is that these builders are not, like the pious, "sons of God" (141-145), nor yet sons of "one man,"<sup>a</sup> that is the Logos (146-147). Sonship in fact is often in the scriptures used in this spiritual sense (148-149). The next words, "behold they are all one race and one lip," give rise to the thought that there may easily be unison in the worst disharmony (150-151), while in " they have begun to do this " " this " is the impiety against heaven which crowns their misdeeds to men. They only " began," for heaven is inviolable and blasphemies recoil upon the blasphemer (152-154), yet they are treated as though they succeeded, which is indicated by the words " the tower which they built " (155). (At this point Philo interpolates a curious piece of literalism ; not only is it a physical impossibility to build such a tower, but anyone who attempted it would be blasted by the heat of the sun) (156-157). That the punishment entailed by the accomplished sin falls upon the undertaken sin is shewn in Balaam's fate (158-159), and the law which refuses sanctuary to him who has attempted murder (160). (Incidentally this law is given the spiritual meaning that the mind which believes God to be the author of evil as well as good and thus throws the responsibility for its own sins upon Him, is essentially unholy) (161). The next words, " nothing shall fail them of all they attempt," teach us that the greatest punishment God can give is to give the sinner opportunity without restraint, and this is illustrated (as in Quod Det. 141 ff.) by Cain's word " that I should be let free is the greater indictment (or punishment) " (162-167).

<sup>a</sup> See § 41.

PHILO

When we come to the words " let us go down and confound their tongues " we have first to explain the plural in God's mouth, of which he gives other examples (168-169). He then puts forward, as in De Op. 75, the theory (based on the Timaeus) that God committed certain tasks to his lieutenants, the Potencies and the spiritual beings called " Angels " (170-175). As man also has free will and is therefore capable of sin God shared the work of man's creation with His ministers, that He Himself should not be the cause of evil (176-179). So too He calls upon His subordinates (here definitely called Angels)<sup>a</sup> to bring the punishment of "confusion" upon the impious (180-182). As for the word "confusion" (σύγχυσις) we may accept the philosophic usage in which it stands for a mixing so complete that the original properties of the ingredients are destroyed, in contrast to μίξις where the ingredients are merely juxtaposed, and κρᾶσις where though chemically combined they can still be analysed (183-188). Thus σύγχυσις of the impious means that their powers are so annihilated that neither separately nor in combination they can work mischief (189). The literalist interpretation that the story merely describes the differentiation of languages may not be untrue, but it is inadequate. Had such differentiation been intended we should have expected some such term as separation or distribution rather than confusion, and moreover differentiation of function, as we see in the human organism, is beneficial rather than the reverse (190-195). That σύγχυσις implies destruction in this passage is confirmed by the words which follow, "the Lord dispersed them thence," for dispersion conveys a similar idea (196). The dispersion of the wicked will imply the reassembling of the good whom they had dispersed, in fact establish the "symphony" of virtues in the place of the "symphony" of evil. Viewed in this double light of "destruction" and "dispersion" the name σύγχυσις well describes the fool whose life is as worthless as it is unstable<sup>b</sup> (197-end).

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 182.

<sup>b</sup> See note on § 198.

<sup>1</sup> I. Περὶ μὲν δὴ τούτων ἀρκέσει τὰ εἰρημένα. σκεπτέον δὲ ἐξῆς οὐ παρέργως, ἀ περὶ τῆς τῶν διαλέκτων συγχύσεως φιλοσοφεί· λέγει γὰρ ὧδε· “καὶ ἦν πᾶσα ἡ γῆ χεῖλος ἓν, καὶ φωνὴ μία πᾶσι. καὶ ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ κινήσει αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν, εὗρον πεδῖον ἐν τῇ γῇ Σεναὰρ καὶ κατώκησαν ἐκεῖ. καὶ εἶπεν ἄνθρωπος τῷ πλησίον· δεῦτε πλινθεύσωμεν πλίνθους καὶ ὀπτήσωμεν αὐτὰς πυρί. καὶ ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς ἡ πλίνθος εἰς λίθον, καὶ ἄσφαλτος ἦν αὐτοῖς ὁ πηλός.<sup>1</sup> καὶ εἶπον· δεῦτε οἰκοδομήσωμεν ἑαυτοῖς πόλιν καὶ πύργον, οὗ ἡ κεφαλὴ ἔσται ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ποιήσωμεν ἑαυτῶν ὄνομα πρὸ τοῦ διασπαρῆναι ἐπὶ πρόσωπον πάσης τῆς γῆς. καὶ κατέβη κύριος ἰδεῖν τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον ὃν ὠκοδόμησαν οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. καὶ εἶπε κύριος· ἰδοὺ γένος ἓν καὶ χεῖλος ἓν πάντων· καὶ τοῦτο ἤρξαντο ποιῆσαι, καὶ νῦν οὐκ ἐκλείψει ἐξ αὐτῶν πάντα ὅσα ἂν ἐπιθῶνται ποιεῖν· δεῦτε καὶ καταβάντες συγχέωμεν ἐκεῖ αὐτῶν τὴν γλῶσσαν, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσωσιν ἕκαστος τὴν φωνὴν τοῦ πλησίον. καὶ διέσπειρεν αὐτοὺς κύριος ἐκεῖθεν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον πάσης τῆς γῆς, καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Wend. conjectures <ἡ> ἄσφαλτος . . . [ὁ] πηλός from 103; but see note there (App. p. 555).

ON THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES

I. Enough has been said on these matters. The<sup>1</sup> next question which demands our careful consideration is the confusion of tongues and the lessons of wisdom taught by Moses thereon. For he says as follows.

“ And all the earth was one lip and there was one voice to all. And it came to pass as they moved from the east, they found a plain in the land of Shinar and dwelt there. And a man said to his neighbour, Come, let us make bricks and bake them with fire. And the brick became as stone to them and the clay was asphalt to them. And they said, ‘ Come, let us build for ourselves a city and a tower, whose head shall be unto heaven, and let us make our name before we are scattered abroad, on the face of all the earth.’ And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower which the sons of men built. And the Lord said, ‘ Behold, they have all one race and one lip, and they have begun to do this, and now nothing shall fail from them of all that they attempt to do. Come and let us go down and confuse their tongue there, that they may not understand each the voice of his neighbour.’ And the Lord scattered them abroad thence on the face of all the earth, and they ἐπαύσαντο οἰκοδομοῦντες τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον.

PHILO

διὰ τοῦτο ἐκλήθη τὸ ὄνομα αὐτῆς<sup>1</sup> σύγχυσις, ὅτι ἐκεῖ συνέχεε κύριος τὰ χεῖλη πάσης τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἐκεῖθεν διέσπειρεν αὐτοὺς κύριος ἐπὶ πρόσωπον πάσης τῆς γῆς.”

[405] <sup>2</sup> Π. | Οἱ μὲν δυσχεραίνοντες τῇ πατρίῳ πολιτεία, ψόγον καὶ κατηγορίαν αἰεὶ τῶν νόμων μελετῶντες, τούτοις καὶ τοῖς παραπλησίοις ὡς ἂν ἐπιβάθραις τῆς ἀθεότητος αὐτῶν, οἱ δυσσεβεῖς, χρῶνται φάσκοντες· ἔτι νῦν σεμνηγορεῖτε περὶ τῶν διατεταγ-μένων ὡς τοὺς ἀληθείας κανόνας αὐτῆς περιεχόντων; ἴδου γὰρ αἱ ἱεραὶ λεγόμεναι βίβλοι παρ’ ὑμῖν καὶ μύθους περιέχουσιν, ἐφ’ οἷς εἰώθατε γελᾶν, <sup>3</sup> ὅταν ἄλλων διεξιόντων ἀκούητε. καίτοι τί δεῖ τοὺς πολλαχόθι τῆς νομοθεσίας ἐσπαρμένους ἀναλέγεσθαι ὡσπερ σχολὴν ἄγοντας καὶ ἐνευκαιροῦντας διαβολαῖς, ἀλλ’ οὐ μόνον τῶν ἐν χερσὶ καὶ <sup>4</sup> παρὰ πόδας ὑπομιμνήσκειν; εἰς μὲν οὖν ἔστιν ὁ ἔοικὼς τῷ συντεθέντι ἐπὶ τῶν Ἀλπειδῶν, οὓς ὁ μέγιστος καὶ δοκιμώτατος τῶν ποιητῶν Ὁμηρος διανοηθῆναί φησι τρία τὰ περιμήκιστα τῶν ὄρων ἐπιφορῆσαι καὶ ἐπιχώσαι ἐλπίσαντας τὴν εἰς οὐρανὸν ὁδὸν τοῖς ἀνέρχεσθαι βουλομένοις εὐμαρῇ διὰ τούτων ἔσεσθαι πρὸς αἰθέριον ὕψος ἀρθέντων· ἔστι δὲ τὰ περὶ τούτων ἔπη τοιαῦτα·

Ἔοσαν ἐπ’ Οὐλύμπῳ μέμασαν θέμεν, αὐτὰρ ἐπ’ Ὄσση

Πήλιον εἰνοσίφυλλον, ἔν’ οὐρανὸς ἀμβατὸς εἶη, Ὀλυμπος δὲ καὶ Ὄσσα καὶ Πήλιον ὄρων ὀνόματα.

<sup>1</sup> αὐτῆς] so LXX and the majority of mss.: Wend. αὐτοῦ;
but cf. 196 τὴν κακίας πόλιν with 198 κακίας ὄνομα σύγχυσις.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 1-4

ceased building the city and the tower. Therefore the name of the city was called 'Confusion,' because the Lord confounded there the lips of the whole earth, and the Lord scattered them thence over the face of the whole earth" (Gen. xi. 1-9).

II. Persons who cherish a dislike of the institutions<sup>2</sup> of our fathers and make it their constant study to denounce and decry the Laws find in these and similar passages openings<sup>a</sup> as it were for their godlessness. "Can you still," say these impious scoffers, "speak gravely of the ordinances as containing the canons of absolute truth? For see your so-called holy books contain also myths, which you regularly deride when you hear them related by others. And<sup>3</sup> indeed," they continue, "it is needless to collect the numerous examples scattered about the Law-book, as we might had we leisure to spend in exposing its failings. We have but to remind you of the instances which lie at our very feet and ready to our hand."

One of these we have here, which re-<sup>4</sup>sembles the fable told of the Aloeidae, who according to Homer the greatest and most reputed of poets planned to pile the three loftiest mountains on each other in one heap, hoping that when these were raised to the height of the upper sky they would furnish an easy road to heaven for those who wished to ascend thither. Homer's lines on this subject run thus :

They on Olympus Ossa fain would pile,
On Ossa Pelion with its quivering leaves,
In hope thereby to climb the heights of heaven.<sup>b</sup>

Olympus, Ossa and Pelion are names of mountains.

<sup>a</sup> Or, more literally, "means of approach to"; cf. De Agr. 56.

<sup>b</sup> Od. xi. 315, 318.

PHILO

5 πύργον δὲ ὁ νομοθέτης ἀντὶ τούτων εἰσάγει πρὸς τῶν τότε ἀνθρώπων κατασκευαζόμε-νον θελησάντων ὑπ' ἀνοίας ἅμα καὶ μεγαλαυχίας<sup>1</sup> οὐρανοῦ ψαῦσαι. πῶς γὰρ οὐ<sup>2</sup> φρενοβλάβεια δεινή;
 καὶ γὰρ εἰ τὰ τῆς συμπάσης μέρη γῆς ἐποικο-δομηθεῖη προκαταβληθέντι βραχεῖ θεμελίῳ καὶ ἀνεγερθείῃ τρόπον κίονος ἐνός, μυρίοις τῆς αἰ-θερίου σφαίρας ἀπολειφθήσεται διαστήμασι, καὶ μάλιστα κατὰ τοὺς ζητητικούς τῶν φιλοσόφων, οἱ τοῦ παντὸς κέντρον εἶναι τὴν γῆν ἀνωμολόγησαν.

6 III. ἕτερος δέ τις συγγενῆς τούτῳ περὶ τῆς τῶν ζώων ὁμοφωνίας πρὸς μυθοπλαστῶν ἀναγράφεται· λέγεται γάρ, ὡς ἄρα πάνθ' ὅσα ζῶα χερσαῖα καὶ ἔνδρα καὶ πτηνὰ τὸ παλαιὸν ὁμόφωνα ἦν, καὶ ὄνπερ τρόπον ἀνθρώπων Ἕλληνες μὲν Ἕλλησι, βαρβάροις δὲ βάρβαροι νῦν οἱ ὁμόγλωττοι διαλέγονται, τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον καὶ πάντα πᾶσι περὶ ὧν ἢ δρᾶν ἢ πάσχειν τι συνέβαιεν ὠμίλει, ὡς καὶ ἐπὶ ταῖς κακοπραγίαις συνάχθεσθαι<sup>3</sup> κἄν, εἴ πού τι λυσιτελὲς ἀπαντῶη, συνευφραίνεσθαι.

7 τὰς τε γὰρ ἡδονὰς καὶ ἀηδίας ἀλλήλοις ἀνα-φέροντα διὰ τοῦ ὁμοφώνου συνήδετο καὶ συναηδί-[406] ζετο, | καὶ τούτου τὸ ὁμοιότροπον καὶ ὁμοιοπαθὲς εὐρίσκετο, μέχριπερ κορεσθέντα τῆς τῶν παρόν-των ἀγαθῶν ἀφθονίας, ὃ πολλάκις γίνεσθαι φιλεῖ, πρὸς τὸν τῶν ἀνεφίκτων ἔρωτα ἐξώκειλε καὶ περὶ ἀθανασίας ἐπρεσβεύετο γῆρως ἔκλυσιν καὶ τὴν εἰς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μεγαλουργίας.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πάσα γὰρ οὖν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. συνέχεσθαι.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 5-7

For these the lawgiver substitutes a 5 tower which he represents as being built by the men of that day who wished in their folly and insolent pride to touch the heaven. Folly indeed; surely dreadful madness! For if one should lay a small foundation and build up upon it the different parts of the whole earth, rising in the form of a single pillar, it would still be divided by vast distances from the sphere of ether, particularly if we accept the view of the philosophers who inquire into such problems, all of whom are agreed that the earth is the centre of the universe.<sup>a</sup>

III. Another 6 similar story is to be found in the writings of the mythologists, telling of the days when all animals had a common language. The tale is that in old days all animals, whether on land or in water or winged, had the same language, and just as among men to-day Greeks talk with Greeks and barbarians with barbarians if they have the same tongue, so too every creature conversed with every other, about all that happened to be done to them or by them, and in this way they mourned together at misfortunes, and rejoiced together when anything of advantage came their way. For since community 7 of language led them to impart to each other their pleasures and discomforts, both emotions were shared by them in common. As a result they gained a similarity of temperament and feeling until surfeited with the abundance of their present blessings they desired the unattainable, as so often happens, and wrecked their happiness thereon. They sent an embassy to demand immortality, asking that they might be exempted from old age and allowed to

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 553.

PHILO

- αἰεὶ νεότητος ἀκμὴν αἰτούμενα, φάσκοντα καὶ τῶν παρ' αὐτοῖς ἐν ἤδη ζώων τὸ ἔρπετόν, ὄφιν, τετυχηκέαι ταύτης τῆς δωρεᾶς· ἀποδύόμενον γὰρ τὸ γῆρας πάλιν ἐξ ὑπαρχῆς ἀνηβᾶν· ἄτοπον δ' εἶναι ἢ τὰ κρείττω τοῦ χείρονος ἢ ἐνὸς τὰ πάντα
- 8 λειφθῆναι. δίκην μέντοι τοῦ τολμήματος ἔδωκε τὴν προσήκουσαν· ἑτερόγλωττα γὰρ εὐθύς ἐγένετο, ὡς ἐξ ἐκείνου μηκέτ' ἀλλήλων ἐπακοῦσαι δυνηθῆναι χάριν τῆς ἐν ταῖς διαλέκτοις εἰς ἃς ἢ μία καὶ κοινὴ πάντων ἐτμήθη, διαφορᾶς.
- 9 IV. Ὁ δ' ἐγγυτέρω τάληθοῦς προσάγων τὸν λόγον τὰ ἄλογα τῶν λογικῶν διεξέυξεν, ὡς ἀνθρώποις μόνοις μαρτυρῆσαι τὸ ὁμόφωνον. ἔστι δέ, ὡς γέ φασι, καὶ τοῦτο μυθῶδες. καὶ μὴν τήν<sup>1</sup> γε φωνῆς εἰς μυρίας διαλέκτων ἰδέας τομῆν, ἣν καλεῖ γλώττης σύγχυσις, ἐπὶ θεραπείᾳ λέγουσιν ἀμαρτημάτων συμβῆναι, ὡς μηκέτ' ἀλλήλων ἀκροώμενοι κοινῇ συναδικῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τρόπον τινὰ [ἄλλοι] ἀλλήλοις κεκωφωμένοι * * *<sup>2</sup> κατὰ συμπράξεις
- 10 ἐγχειρῶσι τοῖς αὐτοῖς. τὸ δὲ οὐκ ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ φαίνεται συμβῆναι· καὶ γὰρ αὐθις οὐδὲν ἦττον κατὰ ἔθνη διωκισμένων καὶ μὴ μιᾶ διαλέκτῳ χρωμένων γῆ καὶ θάλαττα πολλάκις ἀμυθῆτων κακῶν ἐπληρώθη. οὐ γὰρ αἱ φωναί, ἀλλὰ αἱ ὁμότροποι τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς τὸ ἀμαρτάνειν ζηλώσεις
- 11 τοῦ συναδικεῖν αἴτιαι· καὶ γὰρ οἱ ἐκτετημημένοι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῆς.

<sup>2</sup> The translation follows Mangey in assuming that μὴ alone has been omitted in the mss. Wend. (Rhein. Mus. liii. p. 18) thought that this made the last part of the sentence too much a mere repetition of the first part. He suggested καθ' ἑαυτὸν ἕκαστος ἐργάζεται, ἀλλὰ μὴ).

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 7-11

enjoy the vigour of youth for ever. They pleaded that one of their fellow-creatures, that mere reptile the serpent, had already obtained this boon, since he shed his old age and renewed his youth afresh, and it was absurd that the superior beings should fare worse than the inferior, or all than the one. How-<sup>8</sup> ever, for this audacity they were punished as they deserved. For their speech at once became different, so that from that day forward they could no longer understand each other, because of the difference of the languages into which the single language which they all shared had been divided.

IV. Now Moses, say the objectors, brings his<sup>9</sup> story nearer to reality and makes a distinction between reasoning and unreasoning creatures, so that the unity of language for which he vouches applies to men only. Still even this, they say, is mythical. They point out that the division of speech into a multitude of different kinds of language, which Moses calls "Confusion of tongues," is in the story brought about as a remedy for sin, to the end that men should no longer through mutual understanding be partners in iniquity, but be deaf in a sense to each other and thus cease to act together to effect the same purposes. But no good result appears to have<sup>10</sup> been attained by it. For all the same after they had been separated into different nations and no longer spoke the same tongue, land and sea were constantly full of innumerable evil deeds. For it is not the utterances of men but the presence of the same cravings for sin in the soul which causes combination in wrongdoing. Indeed men who have lost their<sup>11</sup>

PHILO

- γλώτταν νεύμασι καὶ βλέμμασι καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις τοῦ σώματος σχέσεσι καὶ κινήσειν οὐχ ἦττον τῆς διὰ λόγων προφορᾶς ἃ ἂν θελήσωσιν ὑποσημαίνουσι· χωρὶς τοῦ καὶ ἔθνος ἐν πολλάκις οὐχ ὁμόφωνον μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁμόνομον καὶ ὁμοδαίον τοσοῦτον ἐπιβῆναι κακίας, ὥστε τοῖς ἀνθρώπων ἀπάντων ἀμαρτήμασιν ἰσοστάσια δύνασθαι πλημ-
- 12 μελεῖν· ἀπειρία τε διαλέκτων μυριοὶ πρὸς τῶν ἐπιτιθεμένων οὐ προῖδόμενοι τὸ μέλλον προκατελήφθησαν, ὡς ἔμπαλιν ἐπιστήμη τοὺς ἐπικρεμασθέντας ἰσχυσαν φόβους τε καὶ κινδύνους ἀπόσασθαι· ὥστε λυσιτελὲς μᾶλλον ἢ βλαβερὸν εἶναι τὴν ἐν διαλέκτοις κοινωνίαν, ἐπεὶ καὶ μέχρι νῦν οἱ καθ' ἐκάστην χώραν, καὶ μάλιστα τῶν<sup>1</sup> αὐτοχθόνων, δι' οὐδὲν οὕτως ὡς διὰ τὸ ὁμόγλωσσον ἀπαθεῖς κακῶν
- 13 διατελοῦσι. κἂν εἰ μέντοι τις ἀνὴρ πλείους ἀναμάθοι διαλέκτους, εὐδόκιμος εὐθύς παρὰ τοῖς ἐπισταμένοις ἐστὶν ὡς ἤδη φίλιος ὢν, οὐ βραχὺ γνῶρισμα κοινωνίας ἐπιφερόμενος τὴν ἐν τοῖς
- [407] ὀνόμασι | συνήθειαν, ἀφ' ἧς τὸ ἀδεὲς εἰς τὸ μηδὲν ἀνήκεστον παθεῖν ἔοικε πεπορίσθαι. τί οὖν ὡς κακῶν αἴτιον τὸ ὁμόγλωττον ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἠφάνιζε, δέον ὡς ὠφελιμώτατον ἰδρῦσθαι;
- 14 V. Τοὺς δὴ ταῦτα συντιθέντας καὶ κακοτεχνούοντας ἰδίᾳ μὲν διελέγξουσιν οἱ τὰς προχείρους ἀποδόσεις τῶν αἰὲ ζητουμένων ἐκ τῆς φανεράς

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Wend. conjectures, <τὴν> τῶν.

<sup>a</sup> The thought seems to be that the confusion of languages did but divide nation from nation, and a single evil nation can do all the mischief.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 11-14

tongue by mutilation do by means of nods and glances and the other attitudes and movements of the body indicate their wishes as well as the uttered word can do it. Besides a single nation in which not only language but laws and modes of life are identical often reaches such a pitch of wickedness that its misdeeds can balance the sins of the whole of mankind.<sup>a</sup> Again multitudes through ignorance of other 12 languages have failed to foresee the impending danger, and thus been caught unawares by the attacking force, while on the contrary such a knowledge has enabled them to repel the alarms and dangers which menaced them. The conclusion is that the possession of a common language does more good than harm—a conclusion confirmed by all past experience which shews that in every country, particularly where the population is indigenious, nothing has kept the inhabitants so free from disaster as uniformity of language. Further the acquisition of 13 languages other than his own at once gives a man a high standing with those who know and speak them. They now consider him a friendly person, who brings no small evidence of fellow-feeling in his familiarity with their vocabulary, since that familiarity seems to render them secure against the chance of meeting any disastrous injury at his hands. Why then, they ask, did God wish to deprive mankind of its universal language as though it were a source of evil, when He should rather have established it firmly as a source of the utmost profit ?

V. Those who take the letter of the law in its 14 outward sense and provide for each question as it arises the explanation which lies on the surface, will no doubt refute on their own principles the authors τῶν νόμων γραφῆς<sup>1</sup> * * * ἀφιλονείκως, οὐκ ἀντισοφιζόμενοι ποθεν, ἀλλ' ἐπόμενοι τῷ τῆς ἀκολουθίας εἰρμῶ προσπταίειν οὐκ ἔωντι, ἀλλὰ κἄν, εἴ τινα ἐμποδῶν εἴη, ῥαδίως ἀναστέλλοντι, ὅπως αἱ τῶν λόγων διέξοδοι γίνωνται ἄπταιστοι.

PHILO

15 φαμέν τοίνυν ἐκ τοῦ "τὴν γῆν εἶναι πᾶσαν χεῖλος ἐν καὶ φωνὴν μίαν" κακῶν ἀμυθῆτων καὶ μεγάλων συμφωνίαν δηλοῦσθαι, ὅσα τε πόλεις πόλεσι καὶ ἔθνεσιν ἔθνη καὶ χώραις χώραι ἀντεπιφέρουσι, καὶ ὅσα μὴ μόνον εἰς ἑαυτοὺς ἀλλὰ καὶ εἰς τὸ θεῖον ἀσεβοῦσιν ἀνθρωποι· καίτοι ταῦτα πληθῶν ἐστὶν ἀδικήματα. σκεπτόμεθα δ' ἡμεῖς καὶ ἐφ' ἐνὸς ἀνδρὸς τὸ ἀδιεξήγητον τῶν κακῶν πλήθος, καὶ μάλισθ' ὅταν τὴν ἀνάρμοστον καὶ ἐκμελῆ καὶ

16 ἄμουσον ἴσχη<sup>2</sup> συμφωνίαν. VI. τὰ μὲν δὴ τυχηρὰ τίς οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅταν πενία καὶ ἀδοξία σώματος νόσοις ἢ πηρώσεσι συνενεχθῶσι, καὶ πάλιν ταῦτα ψυχῆς ἀρρωστήμασις ἔκφρονος ὑπὸ μελαγχολίας ἢ μακροῦ γήρωσ ἢ τινος βαρείας

<sup>1</sup> The sentence as it stands cannot be translated. Wend., who places the lacuna after ἀφιλονείκως and inserts <ταμιενόμενοι>, is no doubt right in assuming that a participle must be supplied. But if one word has been lost, it is not improbable that others have been lost. With his reading the whole sentence is an elaborate compliment to the literalists, which is not paralleled elsewhere, though occasionally, as in § 190, a certain amount of respect for them is shown. But the overwhelming argument against his view is φαμέν τοίνυν, which cannot make an antithesis to ἰδίᾳ μὲν but presupposes a δέ clause. Cf. De Somn. i. 102 ταῦτα μὲν δὴ καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα πρὸς τοὺς τῆς ῥητῆς πραγματείας σοφιστὰς . . . εἰρήσθω, λέγωμεν δὲ ἡμεῖς ἐπόμενοι τοῖς ἀλληγορίας νόμοις τὰ πρόποντα περὶ τούτων. φαμέν τοίνυν λόγον σύμβολον ἱμάτιον εἶναι. Philo in my view is describing his own method and says that he will not

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 14-16

of these insidious criticisms. But we shall take the line of allegorical interpretation not in any contentious spirit, nor seeking some means of meeting sophistry with sophistry. Rather we shall follow the chain of logical sequence,<sup>a</sup> which does not admit of stumbling but easily removes any obstructions and thus allows the argument to march to its conclusion with unflinching steps. We suggest then 15 that by the words "the earth was all one lip and one voice" is meant a consonance of evil deeds great and innumerable, and these include the injuries which cities and nations and countries inflict and retaliate, as well as the impious deeds which men commit, not only against each other, but against the Deity. These indeed are the wrongdoings of multitudes. But we consider also the vast multitude of ills which are found in the individual man, especially when the unison of voices within him is a disharmony tuneless and unmusical. VI. Who does 16 not know the calamities of fortune when poverty and disrepute combine with disease or disablement in the body, and these again are mixed with the infirmities of a soul rendered distracted by melancholy or enter into direct conflict with the unbelievers, but show that the passage, if logically treated on the allegorical method, makes a reasonable whole. What the words lost are, one can only conjecture. It would be enough perhaps to insert <ἀκριβοῦντες, ἡμεῖς δὲ>, sc. διελέγχομεν. But perhaps it is more likely that there were some words describing the allegorical method, ending with an homoioteleuton to γράφῃς, e.g. <ἀκριβοῦντες, ἡμεῖς δὲ ἀλληγοροῦντες διερμηνεύσομεν τὸ ἐγκείμενον ἐν τῇ γραφῇ>. Cf. De Sobr. 23. <sup>2</sup> MSS. σχοίη.

<sup>a</sup> The words which follow suggest that he means that each deduction from the text is logical, rather than that he takes each point of the narrative successively.

---

PHILO

ἄλλης κακοδαιμονίας γεγενημένης ἀνακραθῶσι; 17 καὶ γὰρ ἐν μόνον τῶν εἰρημένων βιαίως ἀντιστατήσαν ἱκανὸν ἀνατρέψαι καὶ καταβαλεῖν καὶ τὸν λίαν ὑπέρογκόν ἐστιν· ὅταν δὲ ἀθρόα ὥσπερ προστάξει μιᾷ κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον ἐνὶ πάντα σωρηδὸν ἐπιθῆται<sup>1</sup> τὰ σώματος, τὰ ψυχῆς, τὰ ἐκτός, τίνα οὐχ ὑπερβάλλει σχετλιότητα; πεσόντων γὰρ δορυφόρων ἀνάγκη καὶ τὸ δορυφορούμενον 18 πίπτειν. δορυφόροι μὲν οὖν σώματος πλοῦτος, εὐδοξία, τιμαί, ὀρθοῦντες αὐτὸ καὶ εἰς ὕψος αἶροντες καὶ γαῦρον ἀποδεικνύντες, ὡς τὰναντία, ἀτιμία, ἀδοξία, πενία, πολεμίων τρόπον καταράττουσι.
 19 πάλιν τε δορυφόροι ψυχῆς ἀκοαὶ καὶ ὄψεις ὄσφρησίς τε καὶ γεῦσις καὶ ξύμπαν τὸ αἰσθήσεως στίφος, ἔτι μέντοι ὑγίεια καὶ ἰσχὺς δύναμις τε καὶ ῥώμη· τούτοις γὰρ ὥσπερ ἐστῶσι καὶ κραταιῶς ἐρηρισμένοις εὐερέκσειν οἴκοις ὁ νοῦς ἐμπεριπατῶν καὶ ἐν>διδαιτώμενος ἀγάλλεται πρὸς μηδενὸς ταῖς ἰδίαις ὀρμαῖς χρῆσθαι κωλυόμενος, ἀλλ' εὐμαρεῖς καὶ λεωφόρους ἀναπεπταμένας ἔχων τὰς διὰ πάν-
 20 των ὁδοῦς. τὰ δὲ | τοῖς δορυφόροις τούτοις ἐχθρὰ
 [408] ἀντικάθηται, πῆρωσις αἰσθητηρίων καὶ νόσος, ὡς ἔφην, οἷς ἡ διάνοια συγκατακρημνισθῆναι πολλάκις ἐμέλλησε. καὶ τὰ μὲν τυχηρὰ ταῦτα ἀργαλέα σφόδρα καὶ σχέτλια ἐξ ἑαυτῶν, πρὸς δὲ τὴν <τῶν> ἐκ προνοίας σύγκρισιν κουφό-21 τερα πολλῶ. VII. τίς οὖν ἡ τῶν ἐκουσίων κακῶν συμφωνία, πάλιν ἐν μέρει σκοπῶμεν· τριμεροῦς ἡμῶν τῆς ψυχῆς ὑπαρχούσης τὸ μὲν νοῦς καὶ λόγος,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιθεῖναι.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Ebr. 201 ff.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 17-21

senility, or any other grievous misfortune? For 17 indeed a single item of this list is enough to upset and overthrow even the very stoutest, if it brings its force to bear upon him. But when the ills of body and soul and the external world unite and in serried mass, as though obedient to a single commanding voice, bear down at the same moment upon their lone victim, what misery is not insignificant beside them? When the guards fall, that which they guard must fall too. Now the guards<sup>a</sup> of the body 18 are wealth and reputation and honours, who keep it erect and lift it on high and give it a sense of pride, just as their opposites, dishonour, disrepute and poverty are like foes who bring it crashing to the ground. Again the guards of the soul are the powers 19 of hearing and sight and smell and taste, and the whole company of the senses and besides them health and strength of body and limb and muscle. For these serve as fortresses well-walled and stayed on firm foundations, houses within which the mind can range and dwell rejoicing, with none to hinder it from following the urges of its personality, but with free passage everywhere as on easy and open high roads. But against these guards also are posted hostile 20 forces, disablement of the sense-organs and disease, as I have said, which often bid fair to carry the understanding over the precipice in their arms.

While these calamities of fortune which work independently of us are full of pain and misery, they are far outweighed in comparison with those which spring from our deliberate volition. VII. Let 21 us turn, then, to where the voice of unison is the voice of our self-caused ills and consider it in its turn. Our soul, we are told, is tripartite, having one part assigned τὸ δὲ θυμὸς, τὸ δὲ ἐπιθυμία κεκληρῶσθαι λέγεται. κηραίνει δὲ καθ' αὐτό τε ἕκαστον ἰδίᾳ καὶ πρὸς ἄλληλα πάντα κοινῇ, ἐπειδὴν ὁ μὲν νοῦς ὅσα ἀφροσύνη καὶ δειλία ἀκολασίαι τε καὶ ἀδικίαι σπείρουσι θερίση, ὁ δὲ θυμὸς τὰς ἐκμανεῖς καὶ παραφόρους λύττας καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ὠδίνει κακὰ τέκη, ἡ δὲ ἐπιθυμία τοὺς ὑπὸ νηπιότητος αἰεὶ κούφους ἔρωτας καὶ τοῖς ἐπιτυχοῦσι σώμασί τε καὶ πράγμασι προσιπταμένους ἐπιπέμψῃ παντα-22 χόσε· τότε γὰρ ὥσπερ ἐν σκάφει ναυτῶν, ἐπιβατῶν, κυβερνητῶν κατὰ τινα φρενοβλάβειαν ἐπ' ἀπωλείᾳ τούτου συμφρονησάντων καὶ οἱ ἐπιβουλεύσαντες αὐτῇ νηὶ οὐχ ἠκιστα συναπώλοντο. βαρύτερον γὰρ κακῶν καὶ σχεδὸν ἀνίατον μόνον ἢ πάντων τῶν ψυχῆς μερῶν πρὸς τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν συνεργία, μηδεὸς οἶα ἐν πανδήμῳ συμφορᾷ δυνηθέντος ὑγιαίνειν, ἵνα τοὺς πάσχοντάς ἰᾶται, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ἰατρῶν ἅμα τοῖς ἰδιώταις καμνόντων, οὓς ἡ λοιμώδης νόσος ἐφ' ὁμολογουμένη συμφορᾷ πῖεσσα κατέχει.

PHILO

23 τοῦ παθήματος τούτου <σύμβολον> ὁ μέγας ἀναγραφεῖς παρὰ τῷ νομοθέτῃ κατακλυσμὸς ἐστίν, “ τῶν τε ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ καταρρακτῶν ” τοὺς κακίας αὐτῆς λάβρω φορᾷ χειμάρρους ἐπομβροῦντων καὶ “ τῶν ἀπὸ γῆς, ” λέγω δὲ τοῦ σώματος, “ πηγῶν ” ἀναχεουσῶν τὰ πάθους ἐκάστου ρεύματα πολλὰ ὄντα καὶ μεγάλα, ἅπερ εἰς ταῦτόν τοῖς προτέροις συνιόντα καὶ ἀναμιγνύμενα κυκᾶται τε καὶ τὸ δεδεγμένον ἅπαν τῆς ψυχῆς στροβεῖ χωρίον

<sup>a</sup> Or “ a succession of desires ” (ἀεὶ meaning “ from time to time ”).

<sup>b</sup> For this translation of the frequently recurring phrase σώματα καὶ πράγματα, various versions of which have been 22

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 21-23

to the mind and reason, one to the spirited element and one to the appetites. There is mischief working in them all, in each in relation to itself, in all in relation to each other, when the mind reaps what is sown by its follies and acts of cowardice and intemperance and injustice, and the spirited part brings to the birth its fierce and raging furies and the other evil children of its womb, and the appetite sends forth on every side desires ever <sup>a</sup> winged by childish fancy, desires which light as chance directs on things material and immaterial.<sup>b</sup> For then, as though on 22 a ship crew, passengers and steersmen had conspired through some madness to sink it, the first to perish with the boat are those who planned its destruction. It stands alone as the most grievous of mischiefs and one almost past all cure—this co-operation of all the parts of the soul in sin, where, as when a nation is plague-stricken, none can have the health to heal the sufferers, but the physicians share the sickness of the common herd who lie crushed by the pestilential scourge, victims of a calamity which none can ignore.

We have a symbol of this dire 23 happening in the great deluge described in the words of the lawgiver, when the "cataracts of heaven"<sup>c</sup> poured forth the torrents of absolute wickedness in impetuous downfall and the "fountains from the earth,"<sup>d</sup> that is from the body (Gen. vii. 11), spouted forth the streams of each passion, streams many and great, and these, uniting and commingling with the rainpour, in wild commotion eddied and swirled continually through the whole region of the soul given in previous volumes, see note on Quis Rerum 242 (App.).

<sup>c</sup> E.V. "windows of heaven."

<sup>d</sup> LXX. ἀπὸ τῆς ἀβύσσου. E.V. "from the great deep."

PHILO

- 24 δίναις ἐπαλλήλοις. “ ἰδὼν ” γάρ φησι “ κύριος ὁ θεός, ὅτι ἐπληθύνθησαν αἱ κακίαι τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, καὶ πᾶς τις διανοεῖται ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ἐπιμελῶς τὰ πονηρὰ πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας ” ἔγνω τὸν ἄνθρωπον, λέγω δὲ τὸν νοῦν, μετὰ τῶν περι αὐτὸν ἐρπετῶν τε καὶ πτηνῶν καὶ τῆς ἄλλης ἀλόγου τῶν ἀτιθάσων θηρίων πληθύος ἐφ’ οἷς ἀνιάτα ἡδικήκει τίσασθαι· ἡ δὲ τιμωρία κατακλυσμός.
- 25 ἦν γὰρ ἔφεσις ἀμαρτημάτων καὶ πολλή τοῦ ἀδικεῖν μηδενὸς κωλύοντος φορά, ἀλλὰ προσαναρρηγνυμένων ἀδεῶς ἀπάντων εἰς χορηγίας ἀφθόνους τοῖς πρὸς τὰς ἀπολαύσεις ἐτοιμοτάτοις, καὶ μήποτ’ εἰκότως· οὐ γὰρ ἐν τι μέρος διέφθαρτο τῆς ψυχῆς, ἵνα τοῖς ἄλλοις ὑγιαίνουσι σώζεσθαι δύναίτο, ἀλλ’ οὐδὲν ἄνοσον οὐδὲ ἀδιάφθαρτον αὐτῆς κατελείπετο·
- [409] | ἰδὼν γὰρ ὅτι πᾶς τις, φησί, διανοεῖται [πᾶς] λογισμός, οὐχὶ μόνος εἷς, τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν ὁ ἀδέκαστος δικαστῆς ἐπήγαγε τιμωρίαν.
- 26 VIII. Οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἐπὶ τῆς ἀλμυρᾶς φάραγγος ὁμαιχιμίαν πρὸς ἀλλήλους θέμενοι<sup>1</sup>—κοῖλον γὰρ καὶ τραχὺ καὶ φαραγγῶδες τὸ κακιῶν <καὶ> παθῶν χωρίον, ἀλμυρὸν τῷ ὄντι καὶ πικρὰς φέρον ὠδῖνας—ῶν ὁ σοφὸς Ἀβραάμ τὸ ἐνώμοτον καὶ ἔνσπονδον οὐθ’ ὄρκων οὐτε σπονδῶν ἐπάξιον εἰδὼς καθαιρεῖ· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ πάντες οὗτοι συνεφώνησαν ἐπὶ τὴν φάραγγα τὴν ἀλυκὴν· αὕτη ἡ θάλασσα τῶν 27 ἀλῶν.” ἡ οὐχ ὄρᾶς τοὺς ἐστερωμένους σοφίαν καὶ τυφλοὺς διάνοιαν, ἣν ὀξυδερκεῖν εἰκόσ

<sup>1</sup> Wend. and Mangey punctuate with a full stop before κοῖλον, thus apparently making ὠδῖνας to be the antecedent of ῶν.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 24-27

which formed their meeting-place. "For the Lord 24 God," it runs, "seeing that the wickednesses of men were multiplied on the earth, and that every man carefully purposed in his heart evil things every day," determined to punish man, that is the mind, for his deadly misdeeds, together with the creeping and flying creatures around him and the other unreasoning multitude of untamed beasts" (Gen. vi. 5-6).
This punishment was the deluge. For the deluge 25 was a letting loose of sins, a rushing torrent of iniquity where there was naught to hinder, but all things burst forth without restraint to supply abundant opportunities to those who were all readiness to take pleasure therein. And surely this punishment was suitable. For not one part only of the soul had been corrupted, so that it might be saved through the soundness of others, but nothing in it was left free from disease and corruption. For "seeing," as the scripture says, that "everyone," that is every thought and not one only, "purposed," the upright judge awarded the penalty which the fault deserved.

VIII. These are they who made a confederacy at 26 the salt ravine. For the place of vices and passions is hollow and rough and ravine-like; salt indeed, and bitter are the pangs which it brings. The covenant of alliance which they swore was destroyed by wise Abraham, for he knew that it had not the sanctity of oaths or covenant-rites. Thus we read
"all these joined their voices to come to the salt-ravine; this is the salt sea" (Gen. xiv. 3).
Observe further those who were barren of wisdom 27 and blind in the understanding which should naturally be sharp of sight, their qualities veiled under * See App. p. 553.

PHILO

ἦν, Σοδομίτας κατὰ γλώτταν, ἀπὸ νεανίσκου ἕως πρεσβυτέρου πάνθ' ὁμοῦ τὸν λεῶν ἐν κύκλῳ τὴν οἰκίαν τῆς ψυχῆς περιθέοντας, ἵνα τοὺς ξενωθέντας ἱεροὺς καὶ ὀσίους λόγους αὐτῆ, φρουροὺς καὶ φύλακας ὄντας, αἰσχύνωσι καὶ διαφθείρωσι, καὶ μηδένα τὸ παράπαν μήτε τοῖς ἀδικούσιν ἐναντιουῖσθαι μήτε τοῦ τι ποιεῖν ἄδικον ἀποδιδράσκειν 28 ἐγνωκότα; οὐ γὰρ οἱ μὲν, οἱ δ' οὐ, "πᾶς δ'," ὡς φησιν, "ὁ λαὸς περιεκύκλωσαν ἅμα τὴν οἰκίαν, νέοι τε καὶ πρεσβῦται" κατὰ τῶν θείων καὶ ἱερῶν λόγων<sup>1</sup> συνομοσάμενοι, οὓς καλεῖν ἔθος ἀγγέλους.

29 IX. ἀλλ' ὁ γε θεοπρόπος Μωυσῆς θράσει πολλῶ ῥέοντας αὐτοὺς ὑπαντιάσας ἐφέξει, κἂν τὸν θρασύτατον καὶ δεινότατον εἰπεῖν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς βασιλέα λόγον προστησάμενοι μιᾷ ῥύμῃ κατατρέχωσι, συναύξοντες τὰ οἰκεία καὶ ποταμοῦ τρόπον πλημμύροντες. "ἰδοὺ" γάρ φησιν "ὁ τῆς Αἰγύπτου βασιλεὺς ἐπὶ τὸ ὕδωρ ἀφικνεῖται. σὺ δὲ στήσῃ συναντῶν αὐτῶ ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ ποτα-30 μοῦ." οὐκοῦν ὁ μὲν φαῦλος ἕξεισιν ἐπὶ τὴν τῶν ἀδικημάτων καὶ παθῶν ἀθρόων φορᾶν, ἅπερ ὕδατι ἀπεικάζεται· ὁ δὲ σοφὸς πρῶτον μὲν κτᾶται γέρας παρὰ τοῦ ἐστῶτος αἰὲ θεοῦ συγγενὲς αὐτοῦ τῇ ἀκλινεῖ καὶ ἀρρεπεῖ πρὸς πάντα δυνάμει λαβῶν· 31 εἴρηται γὰρ "σὺ δὲ αὐτοῦ στήθι μετ' ἐμοῦ," ἵνα ἐνδοιασμόν καὶ ἐπαμφοτερισμόν, ἀβεβαίου ψυχῆς διαθέσεις, ἀποδυσάμενος τὴν ὀχυρωτάτην καὶ βε-βαιοτάτην διάθεσιν, πίστιν, ἐνδύσῃται. ἔπειτα δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. θείων ἔργων καὶ λόγων (the correction seems to me somewhat conjectural).

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 553,

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 27-31

their name of Sodomite <sup>a</sup>—how the whole people from the young men to the eldest ran round and round the house of the soul to bring dishonour and ruin on those sacred and holy Thoughts which were its guests, its guardians and sentinels; how not a single one is minded to oppose the unjust or shrink from doing injustice himself. For we read that not merely some <sup>28</sup> but the “ whole people surrounded the house, both young and old ” (Gen. xix. 4), conspiring against the divine and holy Thoughts,<sup>b</sup> who are often called angels.<sup>c</sup> IX. But Moses the prophet of God <sup>29</sup> shall meet and stem the strong current of their boldness, though, setting before them as their king their boldest and most cunning eloquence, they come rushing with united onset, though they mass their wealth of water and their tide is as the tide of a river. “ Behold,” he says, “ the King of Egypt comes to the water, but thou shalt stand meeting him at the edge of the river ” (Ex. vii. 15). The fool, then, will <sup>30</sup> go forth to the rushing flood of the iniquities and passions, which Moses likens to a river. But the wise man in the first place gains a privilege vouchsafed to him from God, who ever stands fast, a privilege which is the congener of His power which never swerves and never wavers. For it was said to <sup>31</sup> him “ Stand thou here with me ” (Deut. v. 31), to the end that he should put off doubt and hesitation, the qualities <sup>d</sup> of the unstable mind, and put on that surest and most stable quality, faith. This is his <sup>b</sup> This translation is given in despair. In this particular allegory of the soul, the λόγοι no doubt take the form of thoughts, but the use is far wider. As manifestations of the Divine Logos the angels suggest not only spiritual influences, as in De Sobr. 65, but also spiritual beings, as in § 174.

<sup>c</sup> i.e. in scripture, cf. § 174.

<sup>d</sup> Or “ dispositions.”

PHILO

- ἐστὼς, τὸ παραδοξότατον, ὑπαντᾶ· “στήση” γάρ <φησιν> “ὑπαντιάζων”. καίτοι τὸ μὲν ὑπαντᾶν ἐν κινήσει, κατὰ δ’ ἡρεμίαν τὸ ἴστασθαι θεωρεῖται.
- 32 λέγει δὲ οὐ τὰ μαχόμενα, τὰ δὲ τῇ φύσει μάλιστα ἀκολουθοῦντα· ὅτω γὰρ ἡρεμεῖν πέφυκεν ἡ γνώμη καὶ ἀρρεπῶς ἰδρῦσθαι, συμβαίνει πᾶσιν ἀντίστασθαι τοῖς σάλω καὶ κλύδωνι χαίρουσι καὶ τὸν γαληνιά-33 σαι δυνάμενον χειροποιήτω χειμῶνι κυμαίνουσιν.
- [410] X. εὖ μέντοι γε ἔχει παρὰ | τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ ποταμοῦ τὴν ἐναντίωσιν συνίστασθαι· χεῖλη δὲ στόματος μὲν ἐστὶ πέρατα, φραγμὸς δὲ τις γλώττης, δι’ ᾧν φέρεται τὸ τοῦ λόγου ρεῦμα, ὅταν
- 34 ἄρξῃται κατέρχεσθαι. λόγῳ δὲ καὶ οἱ μισάρετοι καὶ φιλοπαθεῖς<sup>1</sup> συμμάχῳ χρῶνται πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀδοκίμων δογμάτων εἰσήγησιν καὶ πάλιν οἱ σπου-दाῖοι πρὸς τε τὴν τούτων ἀναίρεσιν καὶ πρὸς τὸ τῶν ἀμεινόνων καὶ ἀψευδῶς ἀγαθῶν κράτος ἀναντ-35 ἀγώνιστον. ὅταν μέντοι πάντα κάλων ἀνασείσαντες ἐριστικῶν δογμάτων ὑπ’ ἐναντίας ρύμης λόγων ἀνατραπέντες ἀπόλωνται, τὸ ἐπινίκιον δικαίως καὶ προσηκόντως ὁ σοφὸς ἄσμα χορὸν ἱερώτατον
- 36 στησάμενος ἐμμελῶς ἄσεται· “εἶδε” γάρ φησιν “Ἰσραὴλ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους” οὐχ ἐτέρωθι “τεθνεῶτας” ἀλλὰ παρὰ “τὸ χεῖλος τοῦ ποταμοῦ,<sup>2</sup>” θάνατον λέγων οὐ τὴν ἀπὸ σώματος ψυχῆς διάκρισιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀνοσίων δογμάτων καὶ λόγων φθοράν, οἷς ἐχρῶντο διὰ στόματος καὶ γλώττης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων φωνητηρίων ὀργάνων.

<sup>1</sup> mss. φιλομαθεῖς.

<sup>2</sup> Presumably a slip for τῆς θαλάσσης.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 31-37

first privilege—to stand; but secondly—strange paradox—he “meets.” For “thou shalt stand meeting” says the text, though “meet” involves the idea of motion and “stand” calls up the thought of rest. Yet the two things here spoken of are not 32 really in conflict, but in most natural sequence to each other. For he whose constitution of mind and judgement is tranquil and firmly established will be found to oppose all those who rejoice in surge and tumult and manufacture the storm to disturb his natural capacity for calmness.

X. It is 33 well indeed that the opponents should meet on the lip or edge of the river. The lips are the boundaries of the mouth and a kind of hedge to the tongue and through them the stream of speech passes, when it begins its downward flow. Now speech is an ally 34 employed by those who hate virtue and love the passions to inculcate their untenable tenets, and also by men of worth for the destruction of such doctrines and to set up beyond resistance the sovereignty of those that are better, those in whose goodness there is no deceit. When, indeed, after they have let out 35 every reef of contentious sophistry, the opposing onset of the sage’s speech has overturned their bark and sent them to perdition, he will, as is just and fit, set in order his holy choir to sing the anthem of victory, and sweet is the melody of that song. For 36 Israel, it says, saw the Egyptians dead on the edge of the sea (Ex. xiv. 30)—not elsewhere. And when he says “dead” he does not mean the death which is the separation of soul and body, but the destruction of unholy doctrines and of the words which their mouth and tongue and the other vocal organs gave them to use. Now the death of 37

PHILO

- 37 λόγου δὲ θάνατός ἐστιν ἡσυχία, οὐχ ἦν οἱ ἐπιεικέστεροι ποιούμενοι σύμβολον αἰδοῦς μετέρχονται— δύναμις γὰρ καὶ ἦδε ἐστὶν ἀδελφὴ τῆς ἐν τῷ λέγειν ταμειουμένη μέχρι καιροῦ τὰ λεκτέα—, ἀλλ' ἦν οἱ ἐξησθενηκότες καὶ ἀπειρηκότες διὰ τὴν τῶν ἐναντίων ἰσχύνην ὑπομένουσιν ἄκοντες λαβὴν<sup>1</sup> οὐδεμίαν
- 38 ἔθ' εὐρίσκοντες. ὧν τε γὰρ ἂν ἐφάψωνται, διαρρεῖ, καὶ οἷς ἂν ἐπιβῶσιν, οὐχ ὑπομένει, ὡς πρὶν ἢ στήναι πίπτειν ἀναγκάζεσθαι, ὥσπερ ἡ ἔλιξ, τὸ ὕδρηδον ὄργανον, ἔχει· κατὰ γὰρ μέσον αὐτὸ γεγόνασι βαθμοὶ τινες, ὧν ὁ γεωπόνος, ὅταν ἐβελήσῃ ποτίσαι τὰς ἀρούρας, ἐπιβαίνει μὲν, περιολισθαίνει δ' ἀναγκαίως· ὑπὲρ δὴ τοῦ μὴ πίπτειν συνεχῶς πλησίον ἐχυροῦ τινος ταῖς χερσὶ περιδράττεται, οὐ ἐνειλημμένος τὸ ὅλον σῶμα ἀπηώρηκεν αὐτοῦ· <ὥστε> ἀντὶ μὲν ποδῶν χερσίν, ἀντὶ δὲ χειρῶν ποσὶ χρῆσθαι· ἴσταται μὲν γὰρ ἐπὶ χειρῶν, δι' ὧν εἰσιν αἱ πράξεις, πράττει δ' ἐν ποσίν, ἐφ' ὧν εἰκὸς
- 39 ἴστασθαι. XI. πολλοὶ δ' οὐ δυνάμενοι τὰς πιθανὰς τῶν σοφιστῶν εὐρέσεις ἀνά κράτος ἐλεῖν τῷ μὴ σφόδρα περὶ λόγους διὰ τὴν ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις συνεχῆ μελέτην γεγυμνάσθαι κατέφυγον ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ μόνου σοφοῦ συμμαχίαν καὶ βοηθὸν αὐτὸν ἰκέτευσαν γενέσθαι· καθὰ καὶ τῶν Μωυσεῶς γνωρίμων τις ἐν ὕμνοις εὐχόμενος εἶπεν· “ἀλαλα γενέσθω τὰ χεῖλη τὰ δόλια.” πῶς δ' ἂν ἡσυχάσαι, εἰ μὴ πρὸς μόνου τοῦ καὶ τὸν λόγον αὐτὸν ἔχοντος ὑπήκοον ἐπιστομισθεῖη;

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βλάβην.

* Or “arguments,” eúresis being the technical term in rhetoric for collecting material for speech. See on De Mig. 35.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 37-39

words is silence, not the silence which well-behaved people cultivate, regarding it as a sign of modesty, for that silence is actually a power, sister to the power of speech, husbanding the fitting words till the moment for utterance comes. No, it is the undesired silence to which those whom the strength of their opponent has reduced to exhaustion and prostration must submit, when they find no longer any argument ready to their hand. For what they 38 handle dissolves in their hands, and what they stand on gives way beneath them, so that they must needs fall before they stand. You might compare the treadmill which is used for drawing water. In the middle are some steps and on these the labourer, when he wants to water the fields, sets his feet but cannot help slipping off, and to save himself from continually falling he grasps with his hands some firm object nearby and holding tight to it uses it as a suspender for his whole body. And so his feet serve him for hands and his hands for feet, for he keeps himself standing with the hands which we use for work, and works with his feet, on which he would naturally stand.

XI. Now there are many who 39 though they have not the capacity to demolish by sheer force the plausible inventions<sup>a</sup> of the sophists, because their occupation has lain continuously in active life and thus they are not trained in any high degree to deal with words, find refuge in the support of the solely Wise Being and beseech Him to become their helper. Such a one is the disciple of Moses who prays thus in the Psalms: "Let their cunning lips become speechless" (Ps. xxx. [xxxii.] 19). And how should such lips be silent, unless they were bridled by Him who alone holds speech itself as His vassal?

PHILO

- 40 Τὰς μὲν οὖν εἰς τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν συνόδους ἀμετα-στρεπτί φευκτέον, τὸ δὲ ἔνσπονδον πρὸς τοὺς [411] φρονήσεως καὶ | ἐπιστήμης ἐταίρους βεβαιωτέον.
- 41 παρὸ καὶ τοὺς λέγοντας “ πάντες ἐσμὲν υἱοὶ ἐνὸς ἀνθρώπου, εἰρηνικοὶ ἐσμεν ” τεθαύμακα τῆς εὐαρ-μόστου συμφωνίας· ἐπεὶ καὶ πῶς οὐκ ἐμέλλετε, φήσαιμ’ ἄν, ὦ γενναῖοι, πολέμῳ μὲν δυσχεραίνειν, εἰρήνῃ δὲ ἀγαπᾶν, ἕνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν ἐπιγεγραμ-μένοι πατέρα οὐ θνητὸν ἀλλ’ ἀθάνατον, ἄνθρωπον θεοῦ, ὃς τοῦ αἰδίου λόγος ὢν ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ αὐτός
- 42 ἐστὶν ἄφθαρτος; οἱ μὲν γὰρ πολλὰς ἀρχὰς τοῦ κατὰ ψυχὴν γένους συστησάμενοι, τῷ πολυθέῳ λεγομένῳ κακῷ προσνείμαντες ἑαυτοὺς, ἄλλοι πρὸς ἄλλων τιμὰς τραπόμενοι ταραχὰς καὶ στάσεις ἐμφυλίου τε καὶ ξενικὰς ἐδημιούργησαν<sup>1</sup> τὸν ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς γενέσεως ἄχρι τελευτῆς βίον πολέμων ἀκη-
- 43 ρύκτων καταπλήσαντες. οἱ δὲ ἐνὶ γένει χαίροντες καὶ ἕνα πατέρα τὸν ὀρθὸν τιμῶντες λόγον, τὴν εὐάρμοστον καὶ πάμμουσον συμφωνίαν ἀρετῶν τεθαιμακότες, εὐδίων καὶ γαληνὸν βίον ζῶσιν, οὐ μὴν ἀργὸν καὶ ἀγενῆ τινα, ὡς ἐνιοὶ νομίζουσιν, ἀλλὰ σφόδρα ἀνδρεῖον καὶ λίαν ἠκονημένον κατὰ τῶν σπονδὰς λύειν ἐπιχειρούντων καὶ σύγχυσιν ὀρκίων αἰεὶ μελετώντων· τοὺς γὰρ εἰρηναίους φύσει πολεμικοὺς εἶναι συμβέβηκεν ἀντι-καθημένους καὶ ἀνθεστῶτας τοῖς τὸ εὐσταθὲς τῆς
- 44 ψυχῆς ἀνατρέπουσι. XII. μαρτυρεῖ δέ μου τῷ λόγῳ πρῶτον μὲν ἢ ἐκάστου τῶν φιλαρέτων διάνοια διακειμένη τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον, ἔπειτα δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐδημιουργήσαντο.

• This conception of the Logos recurs in §§ 62 and 146.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 40-44

Let us flee, then, without a backward glance from 40 the unions which are unions for sin, but hold fast to our alliance with the comrades of good sense and knowledge. And therefore when I hear those who 41 say "We are all sons of one man, we are peaceful" (Gen. xlii. 11), I am filled with admiration for the harmonious concert which their words reveal. "Ah! my friends," I would say, "how should you not hate war and love peace—you who have enrolled yourselves as children of one and the same Father, who is not mortal but immortal—God's Man,<sup>a</sup> who being the Word of the Eternal must needs himself be imperishable?" Those whose system includes many 42 origins for the family of the soul, who affiliate themselves to that evil thing called polytheism, who take in hand to render homage some to this deity, some to that, are the authors of tumult and strife at home and abroad, and fill the whole of life from birth to death with internecine wars. But those 43 who rejoice in the oneness of their blood and honour one father, right reason, reverence that concert of virtues, which is full of harmony and melody, and live a life of calmness and fair weather. And yet that life is not, as some suppose, an idle and ignoble life, but one of high courage, and the edge of its spirit is exceeding sharp to fight against those who attempt to break treaties and ever practise the violation of the vows they have sworn. For it is the nature of men of peace that they prove to be men of war, when they take the field and resist those who would subvert the stability of the soul.

XII. The truth of my words is attested first by the 44 consciousness of every virtue-lover, which feels what I have described, and secondly by a chorister of the

PHILO

καὶ τοῦ προφητικοῦ θιασώτης χοροῦ, ὃς κατα-πνευσθεὶς ἐνθουσιῶν ἀνεφθέγγετο· “ὦ μῆτερ, ἠλίκον με ἔτεκες, ἄνθρωπον μάχης καὶ ἄνθρωπον ἀηδίας πάσης τῆς γῆς; οὐκ ὠφείλησα,<sup>1</sup> οὐδὲ ὠφείλησάν μοι, οὐδὲ ἡ ἰσχὺς μου ἐξέλιπεν ἀπὸ 45 καταρῶν αὐτῶν.” ἀλλ’ οὐ πᾶς σοφὸς πᾶσι φαύλοις ἐχθρὸς ἐστὶν ἄσπονδος, οὐ τριηρῶν ἢ μηχανημάτων ἢ ὄπλων ἢ στρατιωτῶν παρασκευῇ πρὸς ἄμυναν 46 χρώμενος, ἀλλὰ λογισμοῖς<sup>2</sup>; ὅταν γὰρ τὸν ἐν τῇ ἀπολέμῳ εἰρήνῃ συνεχῇ καὶ ἐπάλληλον ἀνθρώπων ἀπάντων ἴδιον καὶ κοινόν, μὴ κατὰ ἔθνη καὶ χώρας ἢ πόλεις καὶ κώμας αὐτὸ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ κατ’ οἰκίαν καὶ ἕνα ἕκαστον τῶν ἐν μέρει συγκροτούμενον πόλεμον θεάσῃται, τίς ἐστὶν ὃ γε μὴ παραινῶν,<sup>3</sup> κακίζων, νουθετῶν, σωφρονίζων, οὐ μεθ’ ἡμέραν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ νύκτωρ, τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῷ ἠρεμεῖν μὴ δυναμένης διὰ τὸ μισοπόνηρον 47 φύσει; πάντα γὰρ ὅσα ἐν πολέμῳ δρᾶται κατ’ εἰρήνην· συλῶσιν, ἀρπάζουσιν, ἀνδραποδίζονται, [412] λεηλατοῦσι, | πορθοῦσιν, ὑβρίζουσιν, αἰκίζονται, φθείρουσιν, αἰσχύνουσι, δολοφονοῦσιν, ἀντικρυς, ἢν 48 ὡσι δυνατώτεροι, κτείνουσι. πλοῦτον γὰρ ἢ δόξαν ἕκαστος αὐτῶν σκοπὸν προτεθειμένος ἐπὶ τοῦτον ὡσπερ βέλη τὰς τοῦ βίου πράξεις ἀπάσας ἀφιεῖς ἰσότητος ἀλογεῖ, τὸ ἄνισον διώκει, κοινωνίαν ἀπο-στρέφεται, μόνος τὰ πάντων ἔχειν ἀθρόα ἐσπούδακε, μισάνθρωπος καὶ μισάλληλός ἐστιν, ὑποκρινόμενος

<sup>1</sup> For the question between ὠφείλησα . . . ὠφείλησάν μοι and ὠφέλησα . . . ὠφέλησάν με here and in § 50 see App. p. 553.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. χρώμενος ἐπιλογισμοῖς.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. παροῦσι.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 553.

<sup>b</sup> Or “is organized.” See on De Agr. 35.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 44-48

prophetic company, who possessed by divine inspiration spoke thus: "O my mother, how great didst thou bear me, a man of combat and a man of displeasure in all the earth! I did not owe, nor did they owe to me, nor did my strength fail from their curses" (Jer. xv. 10<sup>a</sup>). Yes, is not every wise man 45 the mortal foe of every fool, a foe who is equipped not with triremes or engines, or body-armour or soldiers for his defence, but with reasonings only?

For who, when he sees that war, which 46 amid the fullest peace<sup>a</sup> is waged<sup>b</sup> among all men continuously, phase ever succeeding phase, in private and public life, a war in which the combatants are not just nations and countries, or cities and villages, but also house against house and each particular man against himself, who, I say, does not exhort, reproach, admonish, correct by day and night alike, since his soul cannot rest, because its nature is to hate evil? For all the deeds of war are done in peace. Men 47 plunder, rob, kidnap, spoil, sack, outrage, maltreat, violate, dishonour and commit murder sometimes by treachery, or if they be stronger without disguise. Every man sets before him money or reputation as 48 his aim, and at this he directs all the actions of his life like arrows against a target. He takes no heed of equity, but pursues the inequitable.<sup>c</sup> He eschews thoughts of fellowship, and his eager desire is that the wealth of all should be gathered in his single purse. He hates others, whether his hate be returned or not.<sup>d</sup> His benevolence is hypocrisy. He is hand

<sup>c</sup> Or "equality . . . inequality."

<sup>d</sup> Or "hates both mankind and his neighbour." That is to say, Philo perhaps uses μισάλληλος, which, properly speaking, can only be used, and indeed seems elsewhere to be only used, in the plural, somewhat loosely.

PHILO

εὐνοϊαν, κολακείας νόθης ἑταῖρος ὢν, φιλίας γνησίου πολέμιος, ἀληθείας ἔχθρός, ὑπέρμαχος ψεύδους, βραδὺς ὠφελῆσαι, ταχὺς βλάψαι, διαβαλεῖν προχειρότατος, ὑπερασπίσαι μελλητής, δεινὸς φενაკίσαι, ψευδορκότατος, ἀπιστότατος, δούλος ὀργῆς, εἰκῶν ἡδονῆ, φύλαξ κακῶν, φθορεὺς ἀγαθῶν.

49

XIII. ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα τῆς

ἀδομένης καὶ θαυματομένης εἰρήνης περιμάχητα κειμήλια, ἅπερ ἢ ἐκάστου τῶν ἀφρόνων ἀγαλματοφοροῦσα διάνοια τέθηπε καὶ προσκυνεῖ. ἐφ' οἷς εἰκότως καὶ πᾶς σοφὸς ἄχθεται, καὶ πρὸς γε τὴν μητέρα καὶ τιθήνην ἑαυτοῦ, σοφίαν, εἴωθε λέγειν· “ὦ μήτηρ, ἠλίκον με ἔτεκες,” οὐ δυνάμει σώματος, ἀλλὰ τῇ πρὸς <τὸ> μισοπόνηρον ἀλκῆ, ἀνθρωπον ἀηδίας καὶ μάχης, φύσει μὲν εἰρηνικόν, διὰ δὲ τοῦτο καὶ πολεμικόν κατὰ τῶν αἰσχυρόντων τὸ 50 περιμάχητον κάλλος εἰρήνης. “οὐκ ὠφείλησα, οὐδὲ ὠφείλησάν μοι.” οὔτε γὰρ αὐτοὶ τοῖς ἐμοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ποτε ἐχρήσαντο, οὔτε ἐγὼ τοῖς ἐκείνων κακοῖς, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ Μωυσέως γράμμα “ἐπιθύμημα οὐδενὸς αὐτῶν ἔλαβον,” σύμπαν τὸ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας αὐτῶν γένος θησαυρισαμένων παρ' ἑαυτοῖς ὡς
51 μέγιστον ὄφελος ὑπερβάλλον βλάβος. “οὐδὲ ἢ ἰσχὺς μου ἐξέλιπεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀρῶν ἃς ἐτίθεντό μοι,” δυνάμει δὲ κραταιοτάτῃ τῶν θείων ἐνελημμένος δογματῶν οὐδὲ<sup>1</sup> κακούμενος<sup>2</sup> ἐκάμφθην, ἀλλὰ ἔρρω-

<sup>1</sup> mss. οὔτε, which is quite impossible. Wend., who retains it in the text, notes “write οὐ, or place a lacuna after ἐκάμφθην.” It seems to me that, as the words are a paraphrase of οὐδὲ ἢ ἰσχὺς κτλ. of the quotation, the easier correction to οὐδὲ is reasonable.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἐκκακούμενος.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 48-51

and glove with canting flattery, at open war with genuine friendship ; an enemy to truth, a defender of falsehood, slow to help, quick to harm, ever forward to slander, backward to champion the accused, skilful to cozen, false to his oath, faithless to his promise, a slave to anger, a thrall to pleasure, protector of the bad, corrupter of the good.

XIII. These and the like are the much-coveted 49 treasures of the peace which men admire and praise so loudly—treasures enshrined in the mind of every fool with wonder and veneration. But to every wise man they are, as they should be, a source of pain, and often will he say to his mother and nurse, wisdom, “ O mother, how great didst thou bear me ! ” Great, not in power of body, but in strength to hate evil, a man of displeasure and combat, by nature a man of peace, but for this very cause also a man of war against those who dishonour the much-prized loveliness of peace. “ I did not owe nor did they owe to 50 me,” for neither did they use the good I had to give, nor I their evil, but, as Moses wrote, “ I received from none of them what they desired ”<sup>a</sup> (Num. xvi. 15). For all that comes under the head of their desire they kept as treasure to themselves, believing that to be the greatest blessing which was the supreme mischief. “ Nor did my strength fail from the curses 51 which they laid upon me,” but with all my might and main I clung to the divine truths ; I did not bend under their ill-treatment, but used my strength

<sup>a</sup> E.V. “ I have not taken one ass from them.” The verse in the LXX. goes on οὐδὲ ἐκάκωσα οὐδένα αὐτῶν, which shows that οὐδενός is, as it is taken in the translation, masculine. Philo’s interpretation, however (σύμπαυ τὸ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας γένος), suggests, perhaps, that he took it as neuter, “ I did not receive their desire for anything.”

PHILO

- μένως ὠνείδισα τοῖς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν μὴ καθαιρομένοις· 52 “ ἔθετο ” γὰρ “ ἡμᾶς ὁ θεὸς εἰς ἀντιλογίαν τοῖς γείτοσιν ἡμῶν, ” ὡς καὶ ἐν ὕμνοις που λέλεκται, πάντα τοὺς ὀρθῆς γνώμης ἐφιεμένους. ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἀντιλογικοὶ φύσει γεγόνασιν, ὅσοι τὸν ἐπιστήμης καὶ ἀρετῆς ζῆλον ἔσχον αἰεὶ, τοῖς γείτοσι ψυχῆς ἀντιφιλονεικοῦντες, ἐλέγχοντες μὲν τὰς συνοίκους ἡδονάς, ἐλέγχοντες δὲ τὰς ὁμοδιαίτους ἐπιθυμίας, δειλίας τε καὶ φόβους, τὸ παθῶν καὶ κακιῶν στίφος δυσωποῦντες, ἐλέγχοντες μέντοι καὶ πᾶσαν αἴσθησιν, περὶ μὲν ὧν εἶδον ὀφθαλμούς, περὶ ὧν δὲ ἤκουσαν ἀκοάς, ὁσμάς τε περὶ ἀτμῶν καὶ γεύσεις περὶ χυμῶν, ἔτι δὲ ἀφὰς περὶ τῶν κατὰ τὰς προσ-πιπτούσας τῶν ἐν τοῖς σώμασι δυνάμεων ἰδιότη-53 [413] τας, καὶ μὲν δὴ<sup>1</sup> τὸν προφορικὸν λόγον περὶ ὧν διεξελεθῆναι | ἔδοξε;                      τίνα γὰρ ἢ πῶς ἢ 54 διὰ τί ἢ αἰσθησις ἦσθετο ἢ ὁ λόγος διηρημένευσεν ἢ τὸ πάθος διέθηκεν, ἄξιον ἐρευνᾶν μὴ παρέργως καὶ τῶν σφαλμάτων διελέγχειν ἕκαστον. ὁ δὲ μηδενὶ τούτων ἀντιλέγων, ἅπασιν δὲ ἐξῆς συνεπινεύων ἑαυτὸν λέληθεν ἀπατῶν καὶ ἐπιτειχίζων ψυχῇ βαρεῖς γείτονας, οἷς ἄμεινον ὑπηκόοις ἢ ἄρ-χουσι χρῆσθαι· ἡγεμονεύοντες μὲν γὰρ πολλὰ πημανοῦσι καὶ μεγάλα βασιλευούσης παρ’ αὐτοῖς ἀνοίας, ὑπακούοντες δὲ τὰ δέονθ’ ὑπηρετήσουσι πειθηνίως οὐκέθ’ ὁμοίως ἀπαυχενίζοντες.
 55 οὕτως μέντοι τῶν μὲν ὑπακούειν μαθόντων, τῶν

<sup>1</sup> καὶ μὲν δὴ] so mss. and Wend., but this combination of particles seems to me hardly possible.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Gig. 46 τοὺς ἐξ ἑαυτῶν μὴ πεφυκότας νουθετεῖσθαι.
 Lit. “the things belonging to the peculiarities of the

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 51-55

to reproach those who refused to effect their own purification.<sup>a</sup> For "God has set us up for a contradiction to our neighbours," as is said in a verse of the Psalms (Ps. lxxix. [lxxx.] 7); us, that is all who desire right judgement. Yes, surely they are by nature men of contradiction, all who have ever been zealous for knowledge and virtue, who contend jealously with the "neighbours" of the soul; who test the pleasures which share our home, the desires which live at our side, our fears and faintings of heart, and put to shame the tribe of passions and vices. Further, they test also every sense, the eyes on what they see, the ears on what they hear, the sense of smell on its perfumes, the taste on its flavours, the touch on the characteristics which mark the qualities of substances as they come in contact with it.<sup>b</sup> And lastly they test the utterance on the statements which it has been led to make.

For what our senses perceive, or our speech expresses, or our emotion causes us to feel, and how or why each result is attained, are matters which we should scrutinize carefully and expose every error that we find. He who contradicts none of these, but assents to all as they come before him, is unconsciously deceiving himself and raising up a stronghold of dangerous neighbours to menace the soul, neighbours who should be dealt with as subjects, not as rulers. For if they have the mastery, since folly is their king, the mischief they work will be great and manifold; but as subjects they will render due service and obey the rein, and chafe no more against the yoke.

And, when these have thus learnt the powers in bodies" (τῶν κατὰ τὰς ἰδιότητας being practically equivalent to τῶν ἰδιοτήτων). See further App. p. 554.

PHILO

δ' οὐκ ἐπιστήμη μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ δυνάμει τὴν ἀρχὴν λαβόντων πάντες οἱ δορυφόροι καὶ ὑπέρμαχοι ψυχῆς συμφρονήσουσι λογισμοὶ καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτάτῳ τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς προσελθόντες ἐροῦσιν· “ οἱ παῖδές σου εἰλήφασι τὸ κεφάλαιον τῶν ἀνδρῶν τῶν πολεμιστῶν τῶν μεθ' ἡμῶν, οὐ διαπεφώνηκεν αὐτῶν οὐδὲ εἰς,” ἀλλ' ὥσπερ τὰ μουσικῆς ὄργανα ἄκρως ἡρμωσμένα πᾶσι τοῖς φθόγγοις, οὕτως ἡμεῖς πάσαις ταῖς ὑψηγήσεισι συνηγήσαμεν, ἐκμελὲς ἢ ἀπωδὸν οὐδὲν οὔτε<sup>1</sup> ῥῆμα εἰπόντες οὔτ' ἔργον διαπραξάμενοι, ὡς τὸν ἕτερον τῶν ἀμούσων χορὸν πάντα ἄφωνον καὶ νεκρὸν ἀποδείξει γελασθέντα τὴν τῶν σωματικῶν τροφὸν<sup>2</sup> Μαδιάμ καὶ τὸν ἔκγονον αὐτῆς δερμάτινον 56 ὄγκον Βεελφεγῶρ ὄνομα ὑμνοῦντα.<sup>3</sup> γένος γάρ ἐσμεν “ τῶν ἐπιλέκτων τοῦ ” τὸν θεὸν ὀρῶντος “ Ἰσραήλ,” ὧν “ διεφώνησεν οὐδὲ εἰς,” ἵνα τὸ τοῦ παντὸς ὄργανον, ὁ κόσμος πᾶς, ταῖς ἀρμονίαις 57 μουσικῶς μελωδῆται. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ Μωυσῆς τῷ πολεμικωτάτῳ λόγῳ, ὃς καλεῖται Φινεές, γέρας εἰρήνην φησὶ δεδόσθαι, ὅτι ζῆλον τὸν ἀρετῆς λαβῶν καὶ πόλεμον πρὸς κακίαν ἀρά-

<sup>1</sup> mss. οὐδέ.

<sup>2</sup> τροφὸν Mangey: mss. and Wend. τροφήν. See App. p. 554.

<sup>3</sup> I have adopted ὑμνοῦντα (originally suggested by G. H. W.) for the ὑπνοῦντα of mss. and Wend., who defends it as an antithesis to ὀρῶντος in the next sentence. For a discussion of the text of the whole sentence see App. p. 554.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 55-57

lesson of obedience, and those have assumed the command which not only knowledge but power has given them, all the thoughts that attend and guard the soul will be one in purpose and approaching Him that ranks highest among them will speak thus: "Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war who were with us, and there is no discordant voice" (Num. xxxi. 49).<sup>a</sup> "We," they will continue, "like instruments of music where all the notes are in perfect tune, echo with our voices all the lessons we have received. We speak no word and do no deed that is harsh or grating, and thus we have made a laughing-stock of all that other dead and voiceless choir, the choir of those who know not the muse, the choir which hymns Midian, the nurse of things bodily, and her offspring, the heavy leathern weight whose name is Baal-Peor. For we are the 'race of 56 the Chosen ones of that Israel' who sees God, 'and there is none amongst us of discordant voice'" (Ex. xxiv. 11),<sup>b</sup> that so the whole world, which is the instrument of the All, may be filled with the sweet melody of its undiscording harmonies. And 57 therefore too Moses tells us how peace was assigned as the prize of that most warlike reason, called Phinehas (Num. xxv. 12), because, inspired with zeal for virtue and waging war against vice, he ripped

<sup>a</sup> For Philo's treatment of this text see De Ebr. 114 ff. and note.

<sup>b</sup> LXX. LXX. καὶ τῶν ἐπιλέκτων τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ οὐ διεφώνησεν οὐδὲ εἰς, E.V. "and on the elders of Israel he laid not his hand." Here clearly διαφωνεῖν means "to perish," and so perhaps in Num. xxxi. 49. rather than "failed to answer his name." Philo probably understood this, but for the purpose of his musical allegory gives the word its literal meaning.

PHILO

- μενος ὄλην ἀνέτεμε γένεσιν, ἐξῆς<sup>1</sup> τοῖς βουλομένοις, διακύψασι καὶ διερευνησαμένοις ἀκριβῶς ὄψει πρὸ ἀκοῆς σαφεστέρῳ χρησαμένοις μάρτυρι, πιστεῦσαι, ὅτι γέμει τὸ θνητὸν ἀπιστίας, ἐκ μόνου τοῦ
- 58 δοκεῖν ἠρτημένον. θαυμάσιος μὲν οὖν ἡ λεχθεῖσα συμφωνία, θαυμασιωτάτῃ δὲ καὶ πάσας τὰς ἀρμονίας ὑπερβάλλουσα ἡ κοινὴ πάντων, καθ’ ἣν ὁ λαὸς ἅπας ὁμοθυμαδὸν εἰσάγεται λέγων· “ πάντα ὅσα εἶπεν ὁ θεός, ποιήσομεν καὶ ἀκουσό-
- 59 μεθα”· οὗτοι γὰρ οὐκέτι ἐξάρχοντι πείθονται λόγῳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ τοῦ παντὸς ἡγεμόνι θεῷ, δι’ ὃν πρὸς τὰ
- [414] ἔργα φθάνουσι μᾶλλον ἢ τοὺς | λόγους ἀπαντῶν-
τες· τῶν γὰρ ἄλλων ἐπειδὰν ἀκούσωσι πραττόντων οὗτοι, τὸ παραδοξότατον, ὑπὸ κατοκωχῆς ἐνθέου πράξειν φασὶ πρότερον, εἶτα ἀκούσεσθαι, ἵνα μὴ διδασκαλία καὶ ὑφηγήσει δοκῶσιν, ἀλλὰ ἐθελουργῶ καὶ αὐτοκελεύστω διανοίᾳ πρὸς τὰ καλὰ τῶν ἔργων ὑπαντᾶν· ἐργασάμενοι δὲ ἀκούσεσθαί φασιν, ὅπως ἐπικρίνωσι τὰ πραχθέντα, εἰ λόγοις θείοις καὶ ἱεραῖς παραινέσεσι συνάδει.
- 60 XIV. Τοὺς δὲ συνομοσαμένους ἐπ’ ἀδικήμασιν “ ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν ” φησι “ κινήσαντας εὐρεῖν πεδίον ἐν τῇ γῇ Σαναὰρ κάκει κατοικήσαι, ” φυσικώτατα·

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἐξῆς <δὲ>. Wend. places a lacuna before ἐξῆς, Cohn after it, corrected to ἐξ ἡς. Neither gives any suggestion as to what this lacuna contained. My reasons for thinking that there is no such lacuna are given in note a below.

* The course of the thought, as I understand, is this. By close examination, particularly of the senses (§§ 52, 53), we obtain a mastery of them, and thus reach the harmony of which the Captains of Num. xxxi. spoke (§ 55). This involves open all created being ; how in their turn <sup>a</sup> that prize is given to those who, after diligent and careful scrutiny, following the more certain testimony of sight, rather than hearing, have the will to accept the faith that mortality is full of unfaith and clings only to the seeming. Wonderful then <sup>58</sup> indeed is the symphony of voices here described, but most wonderful of all, exceeding every harmony, is that united universal symphony in which we find the whole people declaring with one heart, " All that God hath said we will do and hear " (Ex. xix. 8). Here the precentor whom they follow is no longer <sup>59</sup> the Word, but God the Sovereign of all, for whose sake <sup>b</sup> they become quicker to meet the call to action than the call of words. For other men act after they have heard, but these under the divine inspiration say—strange inversion—that they will act first and hear afterwards, that so they may be seen to go forward to deeds of excellence, not led by teaching or instruction, but through the self-acting, self-dictated instinct of their own hearts. And when they have done, then, as they say, they will hear, that so they may judge their actions, whether they chime with the divine words and the sacred admonitions.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 57-60

XIV. Now those who conspired for iniquities, <sup>60</sup> " moved," we are told, " from the ' east ' (or ' rising ') and found a plain in the land of Shinar and dwelt the conviction of the untrustworthiness of all created things, and thus brings the Captains into line with Phinehas, whose ripping up of the " woman " γένεσις meant the same thing. Thus the prize of true peace goes first to Phinehas, but also in their turn (ἐξῆς) to the Captains. Historically, of course, they are linked with Phinehas, who was their leader in the war against Midian.

<sup>b</sup> Or " through whom." See note on § 127.

PHILO

- διπτόν γὰρ εἶδος τῆς κατὰ τὴν ψυχὴν ἀνατολῆς, τὸ μὲν ἄμεινον, τὸ δὲ χεῖρον, ἄμεινον μὲν, ὅταν ἡλιακῶν ἀκτίνων τρόπον ἀνάσχη τὸ ἀρετῶν φέγγος, χεῖρον δ', ὅταν αἱ μὲν ἐπισκιασθῶσι, κακίαι
- 61 δὲ ἀνάσχωσι. παράδειγμα τοῦ μὲν προτέρου τόδε· “καὶ ἐφύτευσεν ὁ θεὸς παράδεισον ἐν Ἐδέμ κατὰ ἀνατολάς,” οὐ χερσαίων φυτῶν, ἀλλ' οὐρανίων ἀρετῶν, ἃς ἐξ ἀσώματου τοῦ παρ' ἑαυτῷ φωτὸς ἀσβέστους εἰσαεὶ γενησομένας ὁ φυτουργὸς ἀν-
- 62 ἔτειλεν. ἤκουσα μέντοι καὶ τῶν Μωυσέως ἐταίρων τινὸς ἀποφθεγξαμένου τοιόνδε λόγιον· “ἰδοὺ ἄνθρωπος ᾧ ὄνομα ἀνατολή·” καινοτάτη γε πρόσρησις, εἴαν γε τὸν ἐκ σώματος καὶ ψυχῆς συνεστῶτα λέγεσθαι νομίσης· εἴαν δὲ τὸν ἀσώματον ἐκείνον, θείας ἀδιαφοροῦντα εἰκόνας, ὁμολογήσεις ὅτι εὐθυβολώτατον ὄνομα ἐπεφημίσθη
- 63 τὸ ἀνατολῆς<sup>1</sup> αὐτῷ· τοῦτον μὲν γὰρ πρεσβύτατον υἱὸν ὁ τῶν ὄλων ἀνέτειλε πατήρ, ὃν ἐτέρωθι πρωτόγονον ὠνόμασε, καὶ ὁ γεννηθεὶς μέντοι, μιμούμενος τὰς τοῦ πατρὸς ὁδοῦς, πρὸς παραδείγματα ἀρχέτυπα ἐκείνου βλέπων ἐμόρφου τὰ εἶδη.
- 64 XV. Τοῦ δὲ χείρονος ἀνατολῆς εἴδους ὑπόδειγμα τὸ λεχθὲν ἐπὶ τοῦ βουλομένου τὸν ἐπαινούμενον ὑπὸ θεοῦ καταράσασθαι· πρὸς γὰρ ἀνατολαῖς εἰσάγεται κάκεῖνος οἰκῶν, αἴτινες ὁμωνυμοῦσαι ταῖς προτέραις ἐναντιότητα καὶ μάχην πρὸς αὐτὰς
- 65 ἔχουσιν· “ἐκ Μεσοποταμίας” γὰρ φησι “μετεπέμψατό με Βαλάκ, ἐξ ὁρέων ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν, λέγων·

<sup>1</sup> Or perhaps ἀνατολή.

<sup>a</sup> E.V. “branch” (margin, “bud”).

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 60-65

there " (Gen. xi. 2). How true to nature ! For there are two kinds of " rising " in the soul, the better and the worse. The better is when the beam of the virtues rises like the rays of the sun ; the worse when virtues pass into the shadow and vices rise above the horizon. We have an example of the former in these 61 words : " And God planted a pleasaunce in Eden towards the sun-rise " (Gen. ii. 8). That garden was not a garden of the plants of the soil, but of heavenly virtues, which out of His own incorporeal light the Planter brought to their rising, never to be extinguished.

I have heard also an oracle 62 from the lips of one of the disciples of Moses, which runs thus : " Behold a man whose name is the rising " <sup>a</sup> (Zech. vi. 12), strangest of titles, surely, if you suppose that a being composed of soul and body is here described. But if you suppose that it is that Incorporeal one, who differs not a whit from the divine image, you will agree that the name of " rising " assigned to him quite truly describes him. For that man is the eldest son, whom the Father of 63 all raised up, and elsewhere calls him His first-born, and indeed the Son thus begotten followed the ways of his Father, and shaped the different kinds, looking to the archetypal patterns which that Father supplied.

XV. Of the worse kind of rising we have an 64 example in the description of him who wished to curse one who was praised by God. For he too is represented as dwelling at the " rising," and this rising though it bears the same name as the other is in direct conflict with it. " Balak," we read, 65 " sent for me from Mesopotamia from the mountains from the rising saying, ' Come hither, curse for me

PHILO

δεῦρο ἄρασαί μοι ὄν μὴ ἀράται ὁ θεός." ἔρμη-[415] νεύεται δὲ Βαλὰκ ἄνους, εὐθυβολώτατα· πῶς | γὰρ οὐκ ἄνοια δεινὴ τὸ ὄν ἐλπῖσαι ἀπατάσθαι καὶ γνώμην αὐτοῦ τὴν βεβαιοτάτην ἀνθρώπων σοφί-66 σμασι παρατρέπεσθαι; διὰ τοῦτο καὶ Μεσοποταμίαν οἰκεί καταπεποντωμένης ὥσπερ ἐν μεσαιτάτῳ ποταμοῦ βυθῷ τῆς διανοίας αὐτοῦ καὶ μὴ δυνα-μένης ἀνανήξασθαι καὶ ἀνακῦψαι· τοῦτο δὲ τὸ πάθος ἀνατολὴ μὲν ἀφροσύνης, κατάδυσις δὲ 67 εὐλογιστίας ἐστίν. οἱ τὴν ἀσύμφωνον οὖν ἀρμοζόμενοι συμφωνίαν ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν κινεῖσθαι λέγονται. πότερον ἄρα γε τῶν <κατ' ἀρετὴν ἢ τῶν> κατὰ κακίαν; ἀλλ' εἰ μὲν τῶν κατ' ἀρετὴν, παντελῆς ὑπογράφεται διάζευξις· εἰ δὲ τῶν κατὰ κακίαν, ἡνωμένη τις κίνησις, καθάπερ ἐπὶ χειρῶν ἔχει, οὐκ ἰδίᾳ κατὰ ἀπάρτησιν, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀρμονίᾳ 68 τινὶ τῷ ὅλῳ σώματι συγκινουμένων. ἀρχὴ γὰρ καὶ ἀφορμὴ φαύλῳ πρὸς τὰς παρὰ φύσιν ἐνεργείας τὸ κακίας χωρίον· ὅσοι δὲ μετανάσται μὲν ἀρετῆς ἐγένοντο, ταῖς δ' ἀφροσύνης ἐχρήσαντο ἀφορμαῖς, οἰκειότατον εὐρόντες οἰκοῦσι τόπον, ὃς Ἑβραίων μὲν γλώττῃ Σεναάρ, Ἑλλήνων δὲ ἐκ-69 τιναγμὸς καλεῖται· σπαράττεται γὰρ καὶ κλονεῖται καὶ τινάττεται πᾶς ὁ τῶν φαύλων βίος, κυκώμενος ἀεὶ καὶ παραττόμενος καὶ μηδὲν ἴχνος ἀγαθοῦ γνησίου θησαυριζόμενος ἐν ἑαυτῷ. καθάπερ γὰρ τῶν ἀποτιωαττομένων ὅσα μὴ ἐνώσει διακρατεῖται πάντα ἐκπίπτει, τοῦτόν μοι δοκεῖ καὶ ἡ τοῦ συμπεπνευκότος ἐπὶ τῷ ἀδικεῖν ἐκτετινάχθαι τὸν

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "the things of virtue . . . of vice."

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 65-69

him whom God does not curse' " (Num. xxiii. 7, 8). Now Balak is by interpretation "foolish," and the interpretation is most true. For surely it were the pitch of folly to hope that the Existent should be deceived, and that His surest purpose should be upset by the devices of men? And this is the reason 66 why Balaam also dwells in "Mid-river-land," for his understanding is submerged in the midmost depths of a river, unable to swim its way upward and lift its head above the surface. This condition is the rising of folly and the setting of reasonableness.

Now these makers of a music whose harmony is dis- 67 harmony, moved, we are told, "from the rising." Is it the rising of virtue that is meant, or the rising of vice? <sup>a</sup> If the former, the movement suggested is one of complete severance. But if it is the latter, it is what we may call an united movement, as when we move our hands, not apart or in isolation, but in connexion and accordance with the whole body. For 68 the place where vice is located serves as the initial starting-point to the fool for those activities which defy nature.

Now all who have wandered away from virtue and accepted the starting-points of folly, find and dwell in a most suitable place, a place which in the Hebrew tongue is called Shinar and in our own "shaking out." For all the life of 69 the fools is torn and hustled and shaken, ever in chaos and disturbance, and keeping no trace of genuine good treasured within it. For just as things which are shaken off all fall out, if not held fast through being part of a unified body,<sup>b</sup> so too I think, when a man has conspired for wrongdoing, his soul

<sup>b</sup> For the Stoic conception of εἰρωσις see note on Quod Det. 49.

- τρόπον ψυχῆ· πᾶσαν γὰρ ἰδέαν ἀρετῆς ἀπορρίπτει, ὡς μήτε σκιὰν μήτε εἶδωλον αὐτῆς<sup>1</sup> ἐμφαίνεσθαι τὸ
- 70 παράπαν. XVI. τὸ γοῦν φιλοσώματον γένος τῶν Αἰγυπτίων οὐκ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕδατος, ἀλλ' "ὑπὸ τὸ ὕδωρ" φεύγον, τουτέστιν ὑπὸ τὴν τῶν παθῶν φορᾶν, εἰσάγεται, καὶ ἐπειδὴν ὑποδράμη τὰ πάθη, τινάττεται καὶ κυκᾶται, τὸ μὲν εὐσταθῆς καὶ εἰρηναῖον ἀποβάλλον ἀρετῆς, τὸ δὲ ταραχῶδες ἐπαναιρούμενον κακίας· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι "ἐξετίναξε τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους κατὰ μέσον τῆς θαλάσσης φεύγον-
- 71 τας ὑπὸ τὸ ὕδωρ." οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ μηδὲ τὸν Ἰωσήφ εἰδότες, τὸν ποικίλον τοῦ βίου τύφον, ἀλλ' ἀποκεκαλυμμένοις χρώμενοι τοῖς ἁμαρτήμασιν, οὐδὲ ἴχνος ἢ σκιὰν καὶ εἶδωλον καλοκάγαθίας
- 72 ταμειυσάμενοι· "ἀνέστη" γὰρ φησι "βασιλεὺς ἕτερος ἐπ' Αἴγυπτον," ὃς οὐδὲ τὸ πανύστατον καὶ νεώτατον αἰσθητὸν ἀγαθὸν "ἤδει τὸν Ἰωσήφ," ὅστις οὐ μόνον τελειότητος ἀλλὰ καὶ προκοπᾶς, οὐδὲ ἐνάργειαν τὴν οἶαν δι' ὀράσεως ἀλλὰ καὶ διδασκαλίαν τὴν δι' ἀκοῆς ἐγγινομένην ἀνήρει λέγων· "δεῦρο ἄρασαί μοι τὸν Ἰακώβ, καὶ δεῦρο ἐπικατάρασαί μοι τὸν Ἰσραήλ," ἴσον τῷ ἐλθέ, ἀμφότερα καταλύσον, ὄρασιν τε καὶ ἀκοὴν ψυχῆς, ἵνα μηδὲν ἀληθῆς καὶ γνήσιον καλὸν μήτε ἴδη μήτε ἀκούσῃ· ὀράσεως μὲν γὰρ Ἰσραήλ, Ἰακώβ δὲ
- 73 ἀκοῆς σύμβολον. ὁ μὲν δὴ τῶν τοιούτων
- [416] νοὺς ἀπορρίπτει πᾶσαν τὴν ἀγαθοῦ | φύσιν τρόπον τινὰ τιναττόμενος, ἔμπαλιν δ' ὁ τῶν ἀστείων, ἀμιγούς καὶ ἀκράτου μεταποιούμενος τῆς τῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αὐτῆ.

* See App. p. 554.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 69-73

is subject to a "shaking out," for it casts away every form of good so that no shadow or semblance of it can be seen at all.

XVI. We have example 70 in the Egyptians, the representatives of those who love the body, who are shewn to us as flying not from the water, but "under the water," that is under the stream of the passions, and when they are submerged<sup>a</sup> therein they are shaken and wildly disordered; they cast away the stability and peacefulness of virtue and take upon them the confusion of vice. For we are told, "that he shook off the Egyptians in the midst of the sea, fleeing under the water" (Ex. xiv. 27).

These are they who know not even 71 Joseph, the many-sided pride of worldly life, and give way to their sins without veil or disguise, husbanding no vestige or shadow or semblance of honourable living. For there rose up, we are told, another King 72 over Egypt, who "knew not" even "Joseph" (Ex. i. 8)—the good that is, which is given by the senses, the last and latest in the scale of goods. It is this same King who would destroy not only all perfection but all progress; not only the clear vision such as comes of sight, but the instruction also that comes of hearing. He says, "Come hither, curse me Jacob, and come hither, send thy curses upon Israel" (Num. xxiii. 7), and that is equivalent to "Put an end to them both, the soul's sight and the soul's hearing, that it may neither see nor hear any true and genuine excellence." For Israel is the type of seeing, and Jacob of hearing. The 73 mind of such as these is in a sense shaken and casts forth the whole nature of good, while the mind of the virtuous in contrast claims as its own the Idea of the good, an Idea pure and unalloyed, and shakes and

PHILO

- ἀγαθῶν ἰδέας, ἀποτινάττει καὶ ἀποβάλλει τὰ φαῦλα<sup>1</sup>.
- 74 θέασαι γοῦν<sup>2</sup> τὸν ἀσκητὴν οἷά φησιν· “ ἄρατε τοὺς θεοὺς τοὺς ἀλλοτρίους τοὺς μεθ’ ὑμῶν ἐκ μέσου ὑμῶν, καὶ καθαρῖσασθε καὶ ἀλλάξατε τὰς στολὰς ὑμῶν, καὶ ἀναστάντες ἀναβῶμεν εἰς Βαιθήλ,” ἵνα, κὰν Λάβαν ἔρευναν αἰτῆται, ἐν ὄλω τῷ οἴκῳ μὴ εὐρεθῆ τὰ εἶδωλα, <ἀλλὰ> πράγματα ὑφεστηκότα καὶ ὄντως ὑπαρκτά, ἐστηλιτευμένα ἐν τῇ τοῦ σοφοῦ διανοίᾳ, ὧν καὶ τὸ αὐτομαθὲς γένος Ἰσαὰκ κληρονομεῖ· τὰ γὰρ ὑπαρκτὰ μόνος οὗτος παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς λαμβάνει.
- 75 XVII. Παρατήρει δ’ ὅτι οὗ φησιν ἔλθειν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸ πεδῖον ἐν ᾧ κατέμειναν, ἀλλὰ εὐρεῖν ἀναζητήσαντας πάντως καὶ σκεψαμένους τὸ ἐπιτηδειότατον ἀφροσύνη<sup>3</sup> χωρίον· τῷ γὰρ ὄντι πᾶς ἀφρων οὐ παρ’ ἐτέρου λαμβάνει ἑαυτῷ τὰ δὲ κακὰ ζητῶν ἀνευρίσκει, μὴ μόνους<sup>4</sup> ἀρκούμενος τούτοις ἐφ’ ἅπερ ἢ μοχθηρὰ φύσις δι’ ἑαυτῆς βαδίζει, ἀλλὰ καὶ προστιθεῖς τὰ ἐκ τοῦ κακοτεχνεῖν τέλεια γυμνάσ-
- 76 ματα. καὶ εἴθε μέντοι πρὸς ὀλίγον ἐνδιατρίψας αὐτοῖς χρόνον μετανίστατο. νυνὶ δὲ καὶ καταμένειν ἀξιοῖ· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι εὐρόντες τὸ πεδῖον κατώκησαν ὡς ἐν πατρίδι, οὐχ ὡς ἐπὶ ξένης παρώκησαν. ἦττον γὰρ ἦν δεινὸν συντυχόντας ἀμαρτήμασιν ὀθνεῖα αὐτὰ καὶ ὥσπερ ἀλλοδοπὰ νομίσαι, ἀλλὰ μὴ οἰκέα καὶ συγγενῇ ὑπολαβεῖν εἶναι· παρεπιδημήσαντες γὰρ κὰν ἀπέστησαν αἰθῆς, κατοικήσαντες δὲ βεβαίως καταμένειν εἰσάπαν ἔμελλον.
- 77 διὰ τοῦτο οἱ κατὰ Μωυσῆν σοφοὶ πάντες εἰσάγονται

<sup>1</sup> MSS. φύλλα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οὖν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀφροσύνης, which perhaps retain in the sense of “the folly-spot best suited to them.”

<sup>4</sup> μόνον MSS.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 73-77

casts off what is worthless. Thus mark how the Man of Practice speaks : " Take away the alien gods who are with you from the midst of you, and purify yourselves and change your raiment and let us rise up and go up to Bethel " (Gen. xxxv. 2, 3), so that, even though Laban demand a search, no idols may be found in all the house (Gen. xxxi. 35) but veritable substantial realities <sup>a</sup> graven, as though on stone, on the heart of the wise, realities which are the heritage of the self-taught nature, Isaac. For Isaac alone receives from his father the " real substance " (Gen. xxv. 5).

XVII. Again observe that he does not say that they came to the plain in which they stayed, but that only after full search and exploration they found the spot which was the fittest for folly. For indeed every fool does not just take to him what another gives, but he seeks for evil and discovers it. He is not content with the evils only to which depravity proceeds in its natural course, but adds the perfected efforts of the artist in wickedness. And would that he might only stay for a while among them and then change his habitation, but as it is he determines to abide there. For they " found," we are told, " the plain and dwelt there," as though it were their fatherland. They did not sojourn there as on a foreign soil. For it were a less grievous thing if when they fell in with sins, they should count them strangers and outlanders as it were, instead of holding them to be of their own household and kin. For were it a passing visit they would have departed in course of time ; their dwelling there was a sure evidence of a permanent stay.

This is why all whom Moses calls wise are represented as sojourners.

<sup>a</sup> See note on De Mig. 94.

PHILO

παροικούντες· αἱ γὰρ τούτων ψυχαὶ στέλλονται μὲν ἀποικίαν οὐδέποτε<sup>1</sup> τὴν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, εἰώθασι δὲ ἔνεκα τοῦ φιλοθεάμονος καὶ φιλομαθοῦς εἰς τὴν 78 περίγειον φύσιν ἀποδημεῖν. ἐπειδὴν οὖν ἐνδια-τρήσασαι σώμασι τὰ αἰσθητὰ καὶ θνητὰ δι' αὐτῶν πάντα κατίδωσιν, ἐπανέρχονται ἐκεῖσε πάλιν, ὅθεν ὠρμήθησαν τὸ πρῶτον, πατρίδα μὲν τὸν οὐράνιον χῶρον ἐν ᾧ πολιτεύονται, ξένην δὲ τὸν περίγειον ἐν ᾧ παρώκησαν νομίζουσαι· τοῖς μὲν γὰρ ἀποικίαν στείλαμένους ἀντὶ τῆς μητροπόλεως ἢ ὑποδεξαμένη δήπου πατρίς, ἢ δ' ἐκπέμψασα μένει τοῖς ἀπο-
 79 δεδημηκόσιν, εἰς ἣν καὶ ποθοῦσιν ἐπανέρχεσθαι. |
 [417] τοιγαροῦν εἰκότως Ἀβραὰμ ἐρεῖ τοῖς νεκροφύλαξι καὶ ταμίαις τῶν θνητῶν, ἀναστὰς ἀπὸ τοῦ νεκροῦ βίου καὶ τύφου· “πάροικος καὶ παρεπίδημός εἰμι ἐγὼ μεθ' ὑμῶν,” αὐτόχθονες δὲ ὑμεῖς, κόνιν καὶ χοῦν ψυχῆς προτιμήσαντες, προεδρίας ἀξιώσαντες 80 ὄνομα<sup>2</sup> Ἐφρών, ὃς ἐρμηνεύεται χοῦς. εἰκότως δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀσκητῆς Ἰακώβ τὴν ἐν σώματι παροικίαν ὀλοφύρεται λέγων· “αἱ ἡμέραι τῶν ἐτῶν τῆς ζωῆς μου, ἃς παροικῶ, μικραὶ καὶ πονηραὶ γεγόνασιν· οὐκ ἐξέικοντο εἰς ἡμέρας τῶν πατέρων μου ἃς 81 παρώκησαν.” τῷ δ' αὐτοδιδάκτῳ καὶ λόγιον ἐχρήσθη τοιόνδε· “μὴ καταβῆς εἰς” τὸ πάθος “Αἴγυπτον, κατοίκησον δ' ἐν τῇ γῆ ἣν ἄν σοι εἶπω,” τῇ ἀδείκτῳ καὶ ἀσωμάτῳ φρονήσει, “καὶ παροίκει ἐν τῇ γῆ ταύτῃ,” τῇ δεικνυμένῃ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> mss. δῆ (δέ) ποτε.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps as Mangey <τὸν> ὄνομα.

---

<sup>a</sup> The LXX of course intended no such distinction between κατοίκει and παροίκει, or between the land of the first half and that of the second half of the verse.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 77-81

Their souls are never colonists leaving heaven for a new home. Their way is to visit earthly nature as men who travel abroad to see and learn. So when 78 they have stayed awhile in their bodies, and beheld through them all that sense and mortality has to shew, they make their way back to the place from which they set out at the first. To them the heavenly region, where their citizenship lies, is their native land; the earthly region in which they became sojourners is a foreign country. For surely, when men found a colony, the land which receives them becomes their native land instead of the mother city, but to the traveller abroad the land which sent him forth is still the mother to whom also he yearns to return. We shall not be surprised, then, to find 79 Abraham, when he rose from the life of death and vanity, saying to the guardians of the dead and stewards of mortality, "I am a stranger and sojourner with you" (Gen. xxiii. 4). "You," he means, "are children of the soil who honour the dust and clay before the soul and have adjudged the precedence to the man named Ephron, which being interpreted is 'clay.'" And just as natural are the 80 words of the Practiser Jacob, when he laments his sojourn in the body. "The days of the years of my life, the days which I sojourn, have been few and evil, they have not reached to the days of my fathers which they sojourned" (Gen. xlvii. 9). Isaac, too, 81 the self-taught had an oracle vouchsafed to him thus, "Go not down into Egypt," that is passion, "but dwell in the land which I say to thee" (that is in the wisdom which has no material body, and none can shew it to another), "and sojourn in this land" <sup>a</sup>

PHILO

- αἰσθητῇ οὐσίᾳ, πρὸς τὸ δεῖξαι ὅτι παροικεῖ μὲν ὁ σοφὸς ὡς ἐν ξένη σῶματι αἰσθητῶ, κατοικεῖ δ' ὡς ἐν πατρίδι νοηταῖς ἀρεταῖς, ἃς λαλεῖ ὁ θεὸς
- 82 ἀδιαφορούσας λόγων θείων. Μωυσῆς δὲ “γειώρας” φησὶν “εἰμὶ ἐν γῆ ἄλλοτρία,” διαφερόντως οὐ μόνον ξένην τὴν ἐν σῶματι μονὴν ὡς οἱ μέτοικοι νομίζων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄλλοτριώσεως ἀξίαν οὐκ ἔμπαλιν οἰκειώσεως ὑπολαμβάνων.
- 83 XVIII. Τὸ δ' ὁμόφωνον καὶ ὁμόγλωττον οὐκ ἐν τοῖς ὀνόμασι καὶ ῥήμασι μᾶλλον ἢ ἐν τῇ τῶν ἀδίκων πράξεων κοινωνίᾳ βουλόμενος ὁ φαῦλος ἐπιδείξασθαι πόλιν ἄρχεται καὶ πύργον, ὡς ἀκρόπολιν τυράννω, κακίᾳ κατασκευάζειν, καὶ τοὺς θιασώτας πάντας παρακαλεῖ τοῦ ἔργου μετασχεῖν τὴν ἀρμότ-
- 84 τουσιν προευντρεπισαμένους ὕλην. “ἴτε” γάρ φησι “πλινθεύσωμεν πλίνθους καὶ ὀπτήσωμεν αὐτὰς πυρί,” ἴσον τῶ νῦν ἐστὶν ἡμῖν συμπεφορημένα καὶ συγκεχυμένα τὰ πάντα τῆς ψυχῆς, ὡς ἐναργῆ
- 85 τύπον μηδένα μηδενὸς εἶδους προφαίνεσθαι. ἀρμόττει δ' ὥσπερ ἀνείδεόν τινα καὶ ἄποιον οὐσίαν τό τε πάθος καὶ τὴν κακίαν παραλαβόντας εἰς τὰς ἀρμοττούσας ποιότητας καὶ τὰ προσεχέστατα μέχρι τῶν ἐσχάτων αἰεὶ τεμεῖν εἶδη πρὸς τε ἐναργεστέραν κατάληψιν αὐτῶν καὶ τὴν σὺν ἐμπειρίᾳ χρῆσίν τε καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν, ἣ πλείους ἡδονὰς καὶ τέρψεις ἔοικεν

---

<sup>a</sup> The fanciful thought is as follows: What we speak is words not things. Therefore when God “speaks a land” (meaning virtues), those virtues are God’s words. He has this much excuse that εἶπω followed by the things spoken of is doubtful Greek.

<sup>b</sup> προσεχῆς (next) frequently means (the species) next to the genus, i.e. primary. Here each εἶδος is προσεχές to the next above it.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 81-85

(Gen. xxvi. 2, 3), that is in that form of existence which may be shewn and is perceived by the senses. The purpose of this is to shew him that the wise man does but sojourn in this body which our senses know, as in a strange land, but dwells in and has for his fatherland the virtues known through the mind, which God "speaks" and which thus are identical with divine words.<sup>a</sup> But Moses says, "I am an out- 82 lander in the alien land" (Ex. ii. 22). Thus he uses stronger terms. His tenancy of the body is not to him merely that of the foreigner as immigrant settlers count it. To alienate himself from it, never to count it as his own, is, he holds, to give it its due.

XVIII. Now the wicked man wishes to display 83 his unity of voice and speech through fellowship in unjust deeds rather than in actual words, and therefore begins to build a city and a tower which will serve for the hold of vice, as a citadel for a despot. He exhorts all those who form his company to take their share in the work, but first to prepare the suitable material. "Come," he says, "let us make bricks 84 and bake them with fire" (Gen. xi. 3). The meaning of this is as follows. At present we have all the contents of the soul in inextricable confusion, so that no clear form of any particular kind is discernible. Our right course is to take the passion and vice, 85 which at present is a substance devoid of form and quality, and divide it by continuous analysis into the proper categories and the subdivisions in regular descending order<sup>b</sup> till we reach the ultimate; thus we shall obtain both a clearer apprehension of them and that experienced use and enjoyment which is calculated to multiply our pleasure and delight.

PHILO

- 86 ἐντίκτειν.                      πάριτε οὖν οἱ λογισμοὶ πάντες βουλευτῶν τινα τρόπον εἰς τὸ ψυχῆς συνέδριον, ὅσοι <πρὸς> τὸν δικαιοσύνης καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς συγκατατάττεσθε ὄλεθρον, καὶ πεφροντισμένως δια-
- 87 σκεψώμεθα, ὡς ἐπιθέμενοι κατορθώσωμεν· τῆς μέντοι κατορθώσεως ἔσονται θεμέλιοι κραταιότατοι οἶδε, ἄμορφα μορφῶσαι τύποις καὶ σχήμασι καὶ περιγραφαῖς ἕκαστον ἰδίᾳ διακρίναι, μὴ κραδαι-
- [418] νόμενα<sup>1</sup> καὶ χωλαίνοντα, ἀλλὰ | πεπηγότα βεβαίως, τῇ τοῦ τετραγώνου σχήματος οἰκειούμενα φύσει—ἀκράδαντον γὰρ τοῦτό γε—, ἵνα πλίνθου τινα τρόπον ἀκλινῶς ἐρηρυσμένα βεβαίως καὶ τὰ ἐπ-
- 88 οικοδομούμενα δέχῃται.                      XIX. τούτων πᾶς ὁ ἀντίθεος νοῦς, ὃν φαμεν Αἰγύπτου, τοῦ σώματος, εἶναι βασιλέα, δημιουργὸς ἀνευρίσκεται· καὶ γὰρ τοῦτον εἰσάγει Μωυσῆς τοῖς ἐκ πλίνθου κατα-
- 89 σκευαζομένοις χαίροντα οἰκοδομήμασιν. ἐπειδὴν γὰρ τις τὴν ὕδατος καὶ γῆς τὴν μὲν ὑγρὰν, τὴν δ' αὖ στερεὰν οὐσίαν, διαλυομένας καὶ φθειρομένας, ἀνακερασάμενος τρίτον μεθόριον ἀμφοῖν ἀπεργάσῃται, ὃ καλεῖται πηλός, τέμνων κατὰ μοίρας τοῦτον οὐ παύεται σχήματα περιτιθεὶς ἐκάστω τῶν τμημάτων τὰ οἰκεία, ὅπως εὐ-παγέστερά τε καὶ εὐφορώτερα γένηται· ῥαδίως γὰρ οὕτως ἔμελλε τὰ κατασκευαζόμενα τελειοῦσθαι.
- 90 τοῦτ' ἀπομιμούμενοι τὸ ἔργον οἱ μοχθηροὶ τὰς φύσεις, ὅταν τὰς ἀλόγους καὶ πλεοναζούσας τῶν παθῶν ὁρμὰς ταῖς ἀργαλεωτάταις κακίαις ἀνακεράσωνται, τέμνουσι τὸ κραθὲν εἰς εἶδη καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κραδαίνοντα.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 86-90

Forward then, come as senators to the 86 council-hall<sup>a</sup> of the soul, all you reasonings which are ranged together for the destruction of righteousness and every virtue, and let us carefully consider how our attack may succeed. The firmest foundations 87 for such success will be to give form to the formless by assigning them definite shapes and figures and to distinguish them in each case by separate limitations, not with the uncertain equilibrium of the halting, but firmly planted, assimilated to the nature of the square—that most stable of figures—and thus rooted brick-like in unwavering equilibrium they will form a secure support for the superstructure.

XIX. Every mind that sets itself up against God, the 88 mind which we call “King of Egypt,” that is of the body, proves to be a maker of such structures. For Moses describes Pharoah as rejoicing in buildings constructed of brick. This is natural, for when the 89 workman has taken the two substances of earth and water, one solid and the other liquid, but both in the process of dissolution or destruction, and by mixing them has produced a third on the boundary line between the two, called clay, he divides it up into portions and without interruption gives each of the sections its proper shape. He wishes thus to make them firmer and more manageable<sup>b</sup> since this,
he knows, is the easiest way to secure the completion of the building. This process is copied by the natur- 90 ally depraved, when they first mix the unreasoning and exuberant impulses of passion with the gravest vices, and then divide the mixture into its kinds,

<sup>a</sup> Or “council,” the soul being looked upon as a collective body; cf. De Mig. 60.

<sup>b</sup> Or “more capable of sustaining the structure.”

PHILO

διαπλάττουσι καὶ σχηματίζουσιν οἱ βαρυδαίμονες, δι' ὧν ὁ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐπιτειχισμὸς μετέωρος ἀρθήσεται, τὴν αἴσθησιν εἰς ὄρασιν καὶ ἀκοήν, ἔτι δὲ γεῦσιν ὄσφρησίν τε καὶ ἀφήν, τὸ δὲ πάθος εἰς ἡδονὴν καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν φόβον τε καὶ λύπην, τό τε κακιῶν γένος εἰς ἀφροσύνην, ἀκολασίαν, δειλίαν, ἀδικίαν καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα ἀδελφὰ καὶ συγγενῆ τούτοις.

- 91                   XX. ἤδη δὲ καὶ προσυπερβάλλοντές τινες οὐ μόνον τὰς αὐτῶν ψυχὰς ἐπὶ ταῦτα ἤλειψαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς ἀμείνους καὶ γένους ὄντας ὄρατικοῦ βιασάμενοι κατηνάγκασαν πλινθουργεῖν καὶ πόλεις οἰκοδομεῖν ὄχυράς τῷ βασιλεύειν δοκοῦντι νῶ, βουλόμενοι τοῦτο ἐνδείξασθαι, ὅτι δούλον μὲν τὸ ἀγαθὸν κακοῦ πάθος τ' εὐπαθείας δυνατώτερον, φρόνησις δὲ καὶ πᾶσα ἀρετὴ ἀφροσύνης καὶ κακίας ἀπάσης ὑπήκοον, ὡς ὑπηρετεῖν ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἄτ' ἂν
- 92 προστάτῃ τὸ δεσπόζον. ἰδού, γὰρ φησι, καὶ ὁ ψυχῆς ὀφθαλμὸς ὁ διαυγέστατος καὶ καθαρώτατος καὶ πάντων ὀξυωπέστατος, ᾧ μόνῳ τὸν θεὸν ἔξεστι καθορᾶν, ὄνομα Ἰσραήλ, ἐνδεθείς ποτε τοῖς σωματικοῖς Αἰγύπτου δικτύοις ἐπιταγμάτων βαρυτάτων ἀνέχεται, ὡς πλίνθον καὶ πᾶν τὸ γεῶδες ἐργάζεσθαι μετὰ ἀργαλεωτάτων καὶ ἀτρυτοτάτων πόνων· ἐφ' οἷς εἰκότως ὀδυνᾶται καὶ στένει, τοῦτο μόνον ὡς ἐν κακοῖς τεθησαυρισμένος κειμήλιον,
- 93 ἐκδακρῦσαι τὰ παρόντα· λέγεται γὰρ ὑγιῶς ὅτι “κατεστέναξαν οἱ υἱοὶ Ἰσραὴλ ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων.” τίς δ' οὐκ ἂν τῶν εὖ φρονούντων τὰ τῶν πολλῶν ἀνθρώπων ἰδὼν ἔργα καὶ τὰς ὑπερβαλλούσας σπουδὰς, αἷς ἢ πρὸς ἀργυρισμὸν ἢ δόξαν ἢ τὴν ἐν

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 554.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 90-93

sense into sight and hearing, and again into taste and smell and touch; passion into pleasure and lust, and fear and grief; vices in general into folly, profligacy, cowardice, injustice, and the other members of that fraternity and family<sup>a</sup>—the materials which moulded and shaped, to the misery and sorrow of their builders, will form the fort which towers aloft to menace the soul.

XX. Ere now, 91
too, there have been those who went to a further extreme, and not only worked up their own souls to do thus, but have violently forced their betters, the children of the race that has vision, to make bricks under duress and build strong cities (Ex. i. 11) for the mind which thinks itself their sovereign. They wished in this way to shew that good is the slave of evil and passion stronger than the higher emotions, that prudence and every virtue are subject to folly and all vice, and thus must render obedience to every command of the despotic power. “Behold,” says the 92 enemy, “the eye of the soul so translucent, so pure, so keen of vision, the eye which alone is permitted to look on God, the eye whose name is Israel, is imprisoned after all in the gross material nets of Egypt and submits to do the bidding of an iron tyranny, to work at brick and every earthy substance with labour painful and unremitting.” It is but natural that Israel should sorrow and groan because of them; for the one solitary thing which he still treasures as a jewel amid his sufferings is that he can weep sore for his present state. There is sound wis- 93 dom in the words, “The children of Israel groaned because of their tasks” (Ex. ii. 23). Which of the wisely-minded, when he sees the tasks which many men endure and the extravagance of the zeal which

PHILO

ἡδοναῖς ἀπόλασιν εἰώθασι χρῆσθαι, σφόδρα κατη-ηφῆσαι καὶ πρὸς τὸν μόνον σωτήρα θεὸν ἐκβοῆσαι, [419] ἵνα τὰ | μὲν ἐπικουφίσῃ, λύτρα δὲ καὶ σῶστρα καταθεῖς τῆς ψυχῆς εἰς ἐλευθερίαν αὐτὴν ἐξέληται; 94 τίς οὖν ἐλευθερία βεβαιοτάτη; τίς; ἢ τοῦ μόνου θεραπεία σοφοῦ, καθάπερ μαρτυροῦσιν οἱ χρησιμοί, ἐν οἷς εἴρηται “ἐξαπόστειλον τὸν λαόν, ἵνα με 95 θεραπεύῃ.” ἴδιον δὲ τῶν τὸ ὄν θεραπευόντων οἰνοχόων μὲν ἢ σιτοποιῶν ἢ μαγεύων ἔργα ἢ ὅσα ἄλλα γεώδη<sup>1</sup> μήτε διαπλάττειν μήτε συντιθέναι σώματα πλίνθου τρόπον, ἀναβαίνειν δὲ τοῖς λογισμοῖς πρὸς αἰθέριον ὕψος, Μωυσῆν, τὸ θεοφιλὲς γένος, προστησαμένους ἡγεμόνα τῆς ὁδοῦ.
 96 τότε γὰρ τὸν μὲν τόπον, ὃς δὴ λόγος ἐστὶ,<sup>2</sup> θεάσονται, ᾧ ὁ ἀκλινῆς καὶ ἄτρεπτος θεὸς ἐφέστηκε, “τὰ δ’<sup>3</sup> ὑπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ, τὸ ὡσεὶ ἔργον πλίνθου<sup>4</sup> σαπφείρου καὶ ὡς ἂν εἶδος στερεώματος τοῦ οὐρανοῦ,” τὸν αἰσθητὸν κόσμον, ὃν αἰνίττεται

<sup>1</sup> Mangey suggests inserting after γεώδη: <ἐπιτηδεύειν> (rather μήτε ἐπιτηδεύειν). This would avoid the zeugma of associating διαπλάττειν with the ἔργα οἰνοχόων.

<sup>2</sup> ὃς δὴ λόγος ἐστὶ] this is my conjecture for the ὃς δὴ λόγος ἐστὶ of all mss. and editions. It is based (1) on De Som. i. 62, where Philo discussing the three senses in which τόπος is used declares that one of these is the Divine Logos and that this is the sense in which it is used in this passage, Ex. xxiv. 10 (the same idea that τόπος = λόγος appears in De Op. 20 and De Som. i. 117): (2) on the sequel in § 97, where the identification of the τόπος ᾧ ὁ θεὸς ἐφέστηκε with the λόγος is clearly implied. The simple alteration of the somewhat pointless δὴ λόγος to δὴ λόγος makes this identification, which otherwise comes in very abruptly, perfectly clear. The use of δὴ with the relative constantly recurs in Philo.

<sup>3</sup> Wend. τὰ θ’—evidently wrongly. The δέ is required to balance the μὲν and to mark the antithesis between the Logos and the Sensible World.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 93-97

they commonly put forth to win money or glory or the enjoyment which pleasure give, would not in the exceeding bitterness of his heart cry aloud to God the only Saviour to lighten their tasks and provide a price of the soul's salvation to redeem it into liberty? What then is the liberty which is really 94 sure and stable? Aye, what? It is the service of the only wise Being, as the oracles testify, in which it is said, "Send forth the people that they may serve me" (Ex. viii. 1). But it is the 95 special mark of those who serve the Existent, that theirs are not the tasks of cupbearers or bakers or cooks, or any other tasks of the earth earthy, nor do they mould or fashion material forms like the brick-makers, but in their thoughts ascend to the heavenly height, setting before them Moses, the nature beloved of God, to lead them on the way. For then 96 they shall behold the place <sup>a</sup> which in fact is the Word, where stands God <sup>b</sup> the never changing, never swerving, and also what lies under his feet like "the work of a brick of sapphire, like the form of the firmament of the heaven" <sup>c</sup> (Ex. xxiv. 10), even the world of our senses, which he indicates in this mystery. For it 97

<sup>a</sup> LXX. εἶδον τὸν τόπον οὗ εἰστήκει ὁ θεὸς τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ. E.V. "They saw the God of Israel."

<sup>b</sup> So, as the sequel shows, rather than "the place on which He stands." This use of ἐφέστηκε with the dative may be paralleled, e.g. ἐπέστη τοῖς κατὰ τὸ Ῥηγιὸν τόποις, Polybius ix. 7. 10. Perhaps, however, read ἐνέστηκε. In De Som. i. 62 we have the οὗ εἰστήκει of the LXX.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps Philo may have taken the words to mean "like a kind of basis for the heaven." Though in De Op. 36 he makes στερέωμα = the heaven, his identification of it here with the αἰσθητὸς κόσμος points to the latter interpretation.

---

<sup>d</sup> πλίνθου] SO LXX. : MSS. λίθου.

PHILO

97 διὰ τούτων. εὐπρεπὲς γὰρ τοῖς ἑταιρείαν πρὸς ἐπιστήμην θεμένοις ἐφίεσθαι μὲν τοῦ τὸ ὄν ἰδεῖν, εἰ δὲ μὴ δύναιντο, τὴν γοῦν εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ, τὸν ἱερώτατον λόγον, μεθ' ὃν καὶ τὸ ἐν αἰσθητοῖς τελειότατον ἔργον, τόνδε τὸν κόσμον· τὸ γὰρ φιλοσοφεῖν οὐδὲν ἦν ἄλλο ἢ ταῦτα σπουδάζειν

98 ἀκριβῶς ἰδεῖν.

XXI. τὸν δὲ αἰσθητὸν

κόσμον ὡς ἂν ὑποπόδιον θεοῦ φησιν εἶναι διὰ τάδε· πρῶτον μὲν ἴν' ἐπιδείξῃ, ὅτι οὐκ ἐν τῷ γεγονότι τὸ πεποικὸς αἴτιον, ἔπειτα δ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ παραστῆσαι, ὅτι οὐδ' ὁ κόσμος ἅπας ἀφέτω καὶ ἀπελευθεριαζούσῃ κινήσει κέχρηται, ἀλλ' ἐπιβέβηκεν ὁ κυβερνήτης θεὸς τῶν ὅλων οἰακονομῶν<sup>1</sup> καὶ πηδαιουχῶν σωτηρίως τὰ σύμπαντα, οὔτε ποσὶν οὔτε χερσὶν οὔτε ἄλλω τῶν ἐν γενέσει κεκρημένος μέρει τὸ παράπαν οὐδενὶ κατὰ τὸν ἀληθῆ λόγον—“ οὐ γὰρ ὡς ἄνθρωπος ὁ θεός ”—, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἕνεκα αὐτὸ μόνον διδασκαλίας εἰσαγόμενον ἡμῶν τῶν ἑαυτοὺς ἐκβῆναι μὴ δυναμένων, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῶν ἡμῶν αὐτοῖς συμβεβηκότων τὰς περὶ τοῦ ἀγενήτου καταλήψεις

99 λαμβανόντων.

παγκάλως δ' ἔχει τὸ ἐν

παραβολῆς εἶδει φάναι τὸν κόσμον ὡς εἶδος πλίνθου· δοκεῖ μὲν γὰρ ἐστάναι καὶ βεβηκέναι ὡς ἐκείνη κατὰ τὰς τῆς αἰσθητῆς ὄψεως προσβολάς, κέχρηται

[420] δὲ ὠκυτάτῃ | κινήσει καὶ τὰς ἐν μέρει πάσας παρα-

100 θεοῦσῃ. καὶ γὰρ μεθ' ἡμέραν ἡλίου καὶ νύκτωρ σελήνης φαντασίαν ὡς ἐστῶτων οἱ σώματος ὀφθαλμοὶ λαμβάνουσι· καίτοι τίς οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅτι <τὸ> τῆς περὶ αὐτοὺς φορᾶς τάχος ἀναντογώνιστόν ἐστιν, εἴ γε τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανὸν μιᾷ περιπολοῦσιν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οἰκονομῶν.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 97-100

well befits those who have entered into comradeship with knowledge to desire to see the Existent if they may, but, if they cannot, to see at any rate his image, the most holy Word, and after the Word its most perfect work of all that our senses know, even this world. For by philosophy nothing else has ever been meant, than the earnest desire to see these things exactly as they are. XXI. But 98 when he speaks of the world of our senses as God's footstool, it is for these reasons. First to shew that not in creation is to be found the cause which made it; secondly to make it plain that even the whole world does not move at its own free unshackled will, but is the standing-ground of God who steers and pilots in safety all that is. And yet to say that He uses hands or feet or any created part at all is not the true account. For God is not as man (Num. xxiii. 19). It is but the form employed merely for our instruction because we cannot get outside ourselves, but frame our conceptions of the Uncreated from our own experience. It is a fine saying 99 when by way of illustration he speaks of the world as an appearance of brick.<sup>a</sup> It does seem to stand fast and firm like a brick as we judge it when our outward sight comes in contact with it,<sup>b</sup> but its actual movement is exceeding swift, outstripping all particular movements. To our bodily eyes the sun by day and 100 the moon by night present the appearance of standing still. Yet we all know that the rapidity of the course on which they are carried is unapproached, since they traverse the whole heaven in a single day.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 555.

<sup>b</sup> So rather than the "impression produced upon our sight." Cf. ἡ ὄψις προσβάλλουσα, Quod Deus 78.

PHILO

ἡμέρα; οὕτως μέντοι καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ σύμπας οὐρανὸς ἐστάναι δοκῶν περιδινεῖται κύκλῳ, τῆς κινήσεως τῷ ἀειδεῖ καὶ θειοτέρῳ καταλαμβανομένης<sup>1</sup> τῷ κατὰ διάνοιαν ὀφθαλμῷ.

- 101 XXII. Πυροῦντες δὲ τὰς πλίνθους εἰσάγονται συμβολικῶς, τὰ πάθη καὶ τὰς κακίας θερμῷ καὶ κινητικωτάτῳ λόγῳ κραταιούμενοι, ὡς μὴ πρὸς τῶν σοφίας δορυφόρων ποτὲ καθαιρεθεῖεν, οἷς τὰ πρὸς ἀνατροπὴν αὐτῶν αἰεὶ μηχανήματα συγ-102 κροτεῖται. διὸ καὶ ἐπιλέγεται “ ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς ἡ πλίνθος εἰς λίθον.” τὸ γὰρ μανὸν καὶ κεχυμένον τῆς μὴ σὺν λόγῳ φορᾶς εἰς ἀντίτυπον καὶ στερεὰν<sup>2</sup> φύσιν πιληθὲν καὶ πυκνωθὲν λόγοις δυνατοῖς καὶ ἀποδείξεσιν ἐχυρωτάταις μετέβαλεν, ἀνδρωθείσης τρόπον τινὰ τῆς τῶν θεωρημάτων καταλήψεως, ἥτις ἐν ἡλικίᾳ διαρρεῖ παιδικῇ διὰ τὴν τῆς ψυχῆς ὑγρότητα μήπω δυναμένης τοὺς ἐνσφραγιζομένους πῆττειν καὶ διαφυλάττειν χαρακτῆρας.
- 103 “<sup>3</sup>Καὶ ἡ ἄσφαλτος ἦν αὐτοῖς πηλός,” οὐκ ἔμπαλιν ὁ πηλὸς ἄσφαλτος· δοκοῦσι μὲν γὰρ οἱ φαῦλοι τὰ ἀσθενῆ κραταιοῦσθαι κατὰ τῶν ἀμεινόνων καὶ τὰ διαλυόμενα καὶ ρέοντα ἐξ αὐτῶν πῆττειν, ἢν’ ἐπ’ ἐχυροῦ βάλωσι καὶ τοξεύσωσιν ἀρετὴν· ὁ δ’ ἴλεως καὶ πατῆρ τῶν καλῶν οὐκ ἐφήσει τὸ δεδμημένον<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καταλαμβανόμενος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀντίτυπον καὶ στερεᾶς.

<sup>3</sup> Wend. prints τὸ γὰρ μανὸν . . . χαρακτῆρας as a parenthesis, and treats καὶ ἡ ἄσφαλτος ἦν αὐτοῖς πηλός as a continuation of the text introduced by διὸ καὶ ἐπιλέγεται. But the words introduce a totally different thought from that which is given in §§ 101 and 102. Philo, as often, cites the text without any λέγεται or φησί.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 100-103

So too also the whole heaven itself appears to stand still but actually revolves, and this motion is apprehended by the eye which is itself invisible and closer akin to the divine—the eye of the understanding.

XXII. When they are described as using fire with 101 their bricks, it is a symbolical way of saying that they hardened and strengthened their passions and vices by the heat and high pressure of argument, to prevent their ever being demolished by the guards of wisdom, who are ever forging engines to subvert them. And therefore we have the addition, “ their 102 brick became stone to them ” (Gen. xi. 3). For the looseness and incoherence of the talk which streams along unsupported by reason turns into a solid and resisting substance, when it gains density and compactness through powerful reasonings and convincing demonstrations. The power of apprehending conclusions grows, so to speak, to manhood, whereas in its childhood it is fluid through the humidity of the soul, which is unable as yet to harden and thus retain the impressions which are stamped upon it.

“ And the asphalt was clay<sup>a</sup> to them ” (ibid.). Not 103 the reverse, their clay was asphalt. The wicked may seem to make the weak cause strong against the better, and to harden the loose stuff which exudes from the weak, to obtain a firm footing from which to shoot their bolts against virtue. But the Father of excellence in His loving-kindness will not suffer the

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 555.

---

<sup>4</sup> MSS. and all editions δεδεμένον. But “ bound ” is hardly sense. Mangey translates “ substructiones,” Stein “ Gebilde,” Yonge “ buildings,” which suggest that they all took it from δέμω. But this is surely impossible. Possibly we might read δεμύμενον or τόδε τὸ μανόν.

PHILO

ἐκνικᾶν<sup>1</sup> εἰς ἀδιάλυτον ἀσφάλειαν, ρεύσης σπουδῆς μὴ ὑφεστὼς ἔργον ὡς πλαδῶντα πηλὸν ἀναδείξας.<sup>2</sup> 104 εἰ μὲν γὰρ ὁ πηλὸς ἐγένετο<sup>3</sup> ἀσφαλτος, μέχρι παντὸς ἂν ἴσως τὸ ἐν συνεχείῃ ῥύσει γεῶδες αἰσθητὸν εἰς ἀσφαλῆ καὶ ἀμετάβλητον δύναμιν ἐξενίκησεν· ἐπεὶ δὲ τούναντίον ἢ ἀσφαλτος εἰς πηλὸν μετέβαλεν, οὐκ ἀθυμητέον· ἐλπίς γάρ, ἐλπίς τὰ βέβαια τῆς κακίας ἐρείσματα κράτει θεοῦ 105 διακοπῆται. τοιγαροῦν ὁ δίκαιος καὶ ἐν τῷ μεγάλῳ καὶ ἐπαλλήλῳ τοῦ βίου κατακλυσμῷ, μήπω δυνάμενος δίχα αἰσθήσεως ψυχῇ μόνη τὰ ὄντα ὄντως ὄραν, “τὴν κιβωτόν,” λέγω δὲ τὸ σῶμα, “ἐνδοθέν τε καὶ ἐξῶθεν ἀσφάλτῳ” καταχρίσει βεβαιούμενος τὰς δι’ αὐτοῦ φαντασίας καὶ ἐνεργείας· λωφῆσαντος δὲ τοῦ κακοῦ καὶ τῆς φορᾶς ἐπισχούσης ἐξελεύσεται χρησάμενος ἀσωμάτῳ 106 διανοίᾳ πρὸς τὴν ἀληθείας ἀντίληψιν. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀστείος ἀπὸ γενέσεως ἀρχῆς φυτευθεὶς καὶ προσαγορευθεὶς τρόπος, ὄνομα Μωυσῆς, ὁ τὸν κόσμον ὡς ἄστῳ καὶ πατρίδα οἰκήσας ἄτε κοσμο-πολίτης γενόμενος, ἐνδεθεὶς ποτε τῷ ἐπαλλημιμένῳ ὡς ἂν<sup>4</sup> “ἀσφαλτοπίσση” σώματι καὶ δοκοῦντι [421] τὰς πάντων <τῶν> | ὑποκειμένων ἐν αἰσθήσει φαν-τασίας ἀσφαλῶς δέχεσθαί τε καὶ κεχωρηκένας,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐκείνων.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀναδείξαι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. γίνεταί.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. ἐν.

<sup>a</sup> The word is used here and in § 106 to preserve the obvious play between ἀσφαλῆς and ἀσφαλτος.

<sup>b</sup> The antithesis intended is that while the Noah-mind in its lower stages, when the sensible world is so absorbing, finds in the ark of the body a source of strength, which it will discard when the stress is past, the higher Moses-mind, which receives the Stoic name of ἀστείος from the first, never platform to reach the condition of cement which defies dissolution, but makes the unsubstantial result of their fluid industry to be but as sloppy clay. For 104 if the clay had become asphalt, what is now a piece of earth in constant flux and perceived only by the outward sense might have won its way in complete triumph to power fast-cemented<sup>a</sup> and irremovable. But since the reverse has come to pass and the asphalt has changed to clay, we must not lose heart, for there is hope, aye hope, that the stout supports of vice may fall beneath the axe of God's might.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 103-106

So it was with just Noah. In 105 the great ceaseless deluge of life, while he is as yet unable to behold existences as they really are through the soul alone apart from sense, he will "coat the ark," I mean the body, "with asphalt within and without" (Gen. vi. 14), thus strengthening the impressions and activities of which the body is the medium. But when the trouble has abated and the rush of the waters stayed, he will come forth and employ his understanding, free from the body, for the apprehension of truth.

<sup>b</sup> On the other 106 hand the mind called Moses, that goodly plant, given the name of goodly at his very birth (Ex. ii. 2), who in virtue of his larger citizenship took the world for his township and country, weeps bitterly (Ex. ii. 6) in the days when he is imprisoned in the ark of the body bedaubed as with "asphalt-pitch" (Ex. ii. 3), which thinks to receive and contain, as with cement, impressions of all that is presented through sense. He rests contented with it, but recognizes from the first, that the "asphalt" which serves the body, can never give the real "safety." See further, App. p. 555.

PHILO

κατακλαίει μὲν τὴν ἔνδεσιν ἀσωμάτου φύσεως πιεσθεῖς ἔρωτι, κατακλαίει δὲ καὶ τὸν πλάνητα καὶ τετυφωμένον τῶν πολλῶν ἄθλιον νοῦν, ὃς ψευδοῦς δόξης ἐκκρεμασθεὶς ᾤθητι τι παρ' ἑαυτῷ βέβαιον καὶ ἀσφαλὲς ἢ συνόλως παρά τινι τῶν γενομένων ἄτρεπτον ἰδρῦσθαι, τοῦ παγίως καὶ κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἔχοντος ἐστηλιτευμένου παρὰ μόνῳ τῷ θεῷ.

- 107 XXIII. Τὸ δὲ “ δεῦτε καὶ οἰκοδομήσωμεν ἑαυτοῖς πόλιν καὶ πύργον, οὗ ἡ κεφαλὴ ἔσται ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ” τοιοῦτον ὑποβάλλει νοῦν· πόλεις ὁ νομοθέτης οὐχὶ ταύτας μόνον οἶεται εἶναι τὰς ἐπὶ γῆς δημιουργηθείσας, ὧν εἰσιν ὕλαι λίθοι καὶ ξύλα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἅς ἄνθρωποι περιφέρουσι ταῖς ψυχαῖς 108 ἑαυτῶν ἐνιδρυμένας. εἰσὶ δ' αὐταὶ μὲν, ὡς εἰκός, ἀρχέτυποι ἅτε θειοτέρας κατασκευῆς λαχοῦσαι, ἐκεῖναι δὲ μιμήματα ὡς ἂν ἐκ φθαρτῆς οὐσίας συνεστῶσαι. διττὸν δὲ πόλεως εἶδος, τὸ μὲν ἄμεινον, τὸ δὲ χεῖρον, ἄμεινον μὲν τὸ δημοκρατία χρώμενον ἰσότητι τιμῶσι πολιτεία, ἧς ἄρχοντές εἰσι νόμος καὶ δίκη—θεοῦ δὲ ὕμνος ἢ τοιάδε—,<sup>1</sup> χεῖρον δὲ τὸ κιβδηλεῦον αὐτήν, ὡς τὸ παράσημον καὶ παρακεκομμένον ἐν νομίσμασιν, ὀχλοκρατία, ἢ θαυμάζει τὸ ἄνισον, ἐν ἧ ἀδικία καὶ ἀνομία 109 καταδυναστεύουσιν. ἐγγράφονται δ' οἱ μὲν ἀστέιοι

<sup>1</sup> I cannot think that the phrase θεοῦ δὲ ὕμνος ἢ τοιάδε is right. And Cohn's and Wend.'s suggestions of (1) ἐνομοωτάτη δ', (2) θεοῦ δ' ἕπαδος, (3) εὐδόκιμος seem to me quite wild. The only variants in the mss. are ἦτοι ἄδεται and ἢ τοιαυδέτε for ἢ τοιάδε. From this I conjecture θεοῦ δ' <ἐν> ὕμνο<ι>ς ἢ τοιάδε ἄδεται, i.e. such a soul-city or such a πολιτεία is called in the Psalms God's (city). I understand Philo to be alluding to the use of the phrase “the city of God” in Ps. xlv. 4 and weeps for his captivity, pressed sore by his yearning for a nature that knows no body. He weeps also for the mind of the multitude, so erring, so vanity-ridden, so miserable—the mind which clings to false opinion and thinks that itself, or any created being at all, possesses aught that is firm, fast-cemented and immutably established, whereas all that is fixed and permanent in circumstances and condition is graven as on stone in the keeping of God alone.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 106-109

XXIII. The words, “Come, let us build for ourselves a city and a tower whose head shall be unto heaven,” suggest such thoughts as these. The lawgiver thinks that besides those cities which are built by men’s hands upon the earth, of which the materials are stones and timber, there are others, even those which men carry about established in their souls. Naturally these last are models or archetypes, for the workmanship bestowed upon them is of a more divine kind, while the former are copies composed of perishing material. Of the soul-city there are two kinds, one better, the other worse. The better adopts as its constitution democracy,<sup>a</sup> which honours equality and has law and justice for its rulers—such a one is as a melody which sings God’s praises. The worse, which corrupts and adulterates the better, as the false counterfeit coin corrupts the currency, is mob-rule, which takes inequality for its ideal, and in it injustice and lawlessness are paramount. The lxxxvii. 3. To interpret the phrase as meaning a just soul or a just condition of civic life is as natural for him as for a Christian to apply it to the Church. Philo regularly quotes the Psalms with the words ἐν ὑμῶν, as e.g. above 52, De Som. ii. 242 ἐπεὶ καὶ ἐν ὑμῶν ἀδεται. See also App. p. 555.

<sup>a</sup> For Philo’s conception of democracy see note on Quod Deus 176.

PHILO

- τῷ τῆς προτέρας πολιτεύματι, τῶν δὲ φαύλων ἢ πληθὺς τὴν ἐτέραν καὶ χεῖρω διέζωσται, πρὸ εὐκοσμίας ἀκοσμίαν καὶ σύγχυσιν πρὸ εὐσταθοῦς
- 110 καταστάσεως ἀγαπῶσα. συνεργοῖς δὲ ὁ ἄφρων ἀξιοῖ πρὸς τὸ ἀμαρτάνειν οὐκ ἀρκούμενος αὐτῷ μόνῳ χρῆσθαι, καὶ προτρέπει μὲν ὄρασιν, προτρέπει δὲ ἀκοήν, παρακαλεῖ δὲ πᾶσαν αἴσθησιν ἀνυπερθέτως αὐτῷ συντετάχθαι, φερούσης ἐκάστης τὰ πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν ἐπιτήδεια πάντα· ἐπαίρει μέντοι καὶ παραθῆγει καὶ τὸ ἄλλο ἀτίθασον ἐκ φύσεως τῶν παθῶν στίφος, ἵνα ἄσκησιν καὶ μελέτην προσ-
- 111 λαβὸν ἀνύποιστον γένηται. τούτους οὖν καλέσας τοὺς συμμάχους ὁ νοῦς<sup>1</sup> φησιν· “οἰκοδομήσωμεν ἑαυτοῖς πόλιν,” ἴσον τῷ ὀχυρωσώμεθα τὰ οἰκεία καὶ φραξώμεθα δυνατῶς, ὡς μὴ πρὸς τῶν κατατρεχόντων εὐμαρῶς ἀλισκώμεθα<sup>2</sup>. διέλωμεν καὶ διανείμωμεν ὥσπερ κατὰ φυλὰς καὶ δήμους ἐκάστας τῶν ἐν ψυχῇ δυνάμεων προσκληρώσαντες τὰς μὲν
- 112 λογικῇ, τὰς δὲ ἀλόγῳ μερίδι· ἄρχοντας ἐλώμεθα τοὺς ἱκανοὺς πλοῦτον, δόξαν, τιμὰς, ἡδονὰς ἀφ’ ὧν ἂν δύνωνται περιποιεῖν ἀπάντων· τὴν πενίας καὶ ἀδοξίας αἰτίαν δικαιοσύνην τιθεμένους ἐκποδῶν γράφωμεν νόμους, οἳ τὸ τοῦ κρείττονος συμφέρον βεβαιώσουσι τοῖς πλέον ἐτέρων αἰεὶ φέρεσθαι δυνα-
- 113 μένοις. “πύργος” δ’ ὡς ἂν ἀκρόπολις κατ-[422] ἐσκευάσθω τῇ | τυράννῳ κακία βασιλείου ὀχυρώ-τατον, ἧς οἱ μὲν πόδες ἐπὶ γῆς βαινέτωσαν, ἡ δὲ κεφαλὴ πρὸς οὐρανὸν φθανέτω τοσοῦτον ὑπὸ
- 114 μεγαλαυχίας ὕψος ἐπιβάσα. τῷ γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> I conjecture ὁ ἄνους. See App. p. 555.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀλισκοίμεθα.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “have girded themselves with.”

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 109-114

good have their names entered on the burgess-roll of the former type of state, but the multitude of the wicked are embraced under<sup>a</sup> the second and baser type, for they love disorder rather than order, confusion rather than fixedness and stability.

The fool not content with using himself alone thinks 110 fit to use fellow-workers in sin. He calls upon the sight and the hearing and invokes every sense to range itself beside him without delay, each bringing all the instruments that are needed for the service. And further he spurs and incites that other company, the company of the passions, to put their untutored nature under training and practice and thus render themselves resistless. These allies, then, the 111 mind summons, saying, "Let us build ourselves a city," which means, "Let us fortify our resources and fence them in with strength, that we may not fall easy victims to the onset of the foe. Let us mete out and distribute the several powers of the soul as by wards and tithings, allotting some to the reasoning and some to the unreasoning portion. Let us 112 choose for our magistrates such as are able to provide wealth, reputation, honours, pleasures, from every source available to them. Let us enact laws which shall eject from our community the justice whose product is poverty and disrepute—laws which shall assure the emoluments of the stronger to the succession of those whose powers of acquisition are greater than others. And let a tower be built<sup>b</sup> as a 113 citadel, as a royal and impregnable castle for the despot vice. Let its feet walk upon the earth and its head reach to heaven, carried by our vaulting ambition to that vast height." For in fact 114

<sup>b</sup> Or (if the perfect is to be emphasized) "stand complete."

PHILO

ὄντι οὐ μόνον ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνθρωπείων ἀδικημάτων ἴσταται, μετατρέχει δὲ καὶ τὰ ὀλύμπια τοὺς ἀσεβείας καὶ ἀθεότητος λόγους προτείνουσα, ἐπειδὴν ἢ ὡς οὐκ ἔστι τὸ θεῖον διεξίη, ἢ ὡς ὄν οὐ προνοεῖ, ἢ ὡς ὁ κόσμος οὐποτε γενέσεως ἔλαβεν ἀρχήν, ἢ ὡς γενόμενος ἀστάτοις αἰτίαις ὡς ἂν τύχη φέρεται, ποτὲ μὲν πλημμελῶς, ποτὲ δὲ οὐχ ὑπαιτίως, καθάπερ ἐπὶ πλοίων καὶ τεθρίππων εἴωθε

115 γίνεσθαι· φιλεῖ γὰρ ἔστιν ὅτε χωρὶς ἡνιόχων τε καὶ κυβερνητῶν ὁ τε πλοῦς καὶ ὁ δρόμος εὐθύνεσθαι· προνοίας δ' οὐ τὸ ὀλιγάκις, ἀλλὰ τῆς μὲν ἀνθρωπίνης πολλάκις, τῆς δὲ θείας ἀδιαστάτως αἰεὶ κατορθοῦν, ἐπεὶ τὸ διαμαρτάνειν ἀλλότριον ἀνωμολόγηται θείας δυνάμεως. κατασκευάζουσι μέντοι συμβολικῶς ὡσανεὶ πύργον τὸν περὶ κακίας λόγον οἱ φρενοβλαβεῖς, τί βουλόμενοι ἢ ὄνομα αὐτῶν ὑπολείπεσθαι τὸ δυσώνυμον; XXIV.

116 λέγουσι γάρ· “ποιήσωμεν ἑαυτῶν ὄνομα.” ὦ περιττῆς καὶ κεχυμένης ἀναισχυντίας. τί φατε; νυκτὶ καὶ βαθεῖ σκοτῶ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἀδικήματα συγκρύπτειν ὀφείλοντες καὶ προκάλυμμα αὐτῶν, εἰ καὶ μὴ τὴν ἀληθῆ, τὴν γοῦν προσποιήτον αἰδῶ πεποιῆσθαι ἢ χάριτος ἕνεκα τῆς πρὸς τοὺς ἐπιεικεστέρους ἢ διαδύσεως τῶν ἐφ' ὁμολογουμένοις ἀμαρτήμασι τιμωριῶν, τοσοῦτον τῆς τόλμης ἐπιβαίνετε, ὥστε οὐ μόνον<sup>1</sup> πρὸς φῶς καὶ λαμπρότατον ἥλιον ἐναυγάξεσθε<sup>2</sup> μήτε τὰς ἀνθρώπων τῶν ἀμεινόνων ἀπειλὰς μήτε τὰς ἀπαραιτήτους ἐκ θεοῦ δίκας τοῖς οὕτως

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μόνον οὐ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐναυγάξεσθαι, which might be kept as depending on ἀξιούτε.

<sup>a</sup> See note on De Ebr. 199.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 114-116

that tower not only has human misdeeds for its base, but it seeks to rise to the region of celestial things, with the arguments of impiety and godlessness in its van. Such are its pronouncements,<sup>a</sup> either that the Deity does not exist, or that it exists but does not exert providence, or that the world had no beginning in which it was created, or that though created its course is under the sway of varying and random causation, sometimes leading it amiss, though sometimes no fault can be found. For this last an analogy is often seen in ships and chariots. For the course of 115 the one on the water and of the other on land often goes straight without helmsman or charioteer. But providence demands, they say, more than a rare and occasional success. Human providence frequently achieves its purpose, the divine should do so always and without exception, since error is admitted to be inconsistent with divine power.<sup>b</sup>

Further, when these victims of delusion build up under the symbol of a tower their argument of vice, what is their object but to leave a record of their ill-savoured name? XXIV. For they say, "let us make 116 our name." What monstrous and extravagant shamelessness! What is this you say? You ought to be hiding your misdeeds in night and profound darkness, and to have taken, if not true shame, at least the simulation of it to veil them, whether to keep the goodwill of the more decent sort, or to escape the punishments which wait on open sins. Instead, to such a pitch of impudent hardihood have you come, that you not only let the full sunlight shine upon you and fear neither the threats of better men, nor the inexorable judgements of God, which

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 556.

PHILO

ἀνοσιουργοῖς ἀπαντωμένας καταδείσαντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ πανταχόσε φήμας ἀγγέλους τῶν οἰκείων ἀδικημάτων περιπέμπειν ἀξιούτε, ὡς μηδεὶς ἀμύητος μηδ' ἀνήκοος γένοιτο τῶν ὑμετέρων, ᾧ σχέτλιοι

117 καὶ παμμίαροι, τολμημάτων. ὀνόματος

οὖν ποίου γλίχεσθε; ἢ τοῦ τοῖς πραττομένοις οἰκειοτάτου; ἄρ' οὖν ἔν ἐστι μόνον; γένει μὲν ἴσως ἔν, μυρία δὲ τοῖς εἶδεσιν, ἃ, κὰν ἡσυχάζητε, ἑτέρων λεγόντων ἀκούσεσθε· προπέτεια τοίνυν ἐστὶ μετὰ ἀναισχυντίας, ὕβρις μετὰ βίας, βία μετὰ ἀνδροφονίας, σὺν μοιχείαις φθοραί, σὺν ἀμέτροις ἡδοναῖς ἀόριστος ἐπιθυμία, μετὰ θράσους ἀπόνοια, μετὰ πανουργίας ἀδικία, κλοπαὶ μετὰ ἀρπαγῆς, σὺν ψευδολογίαις ψευδορκίαι, μετὰ παρανομιῶν ἀσέβειαι. ταῦτα καὶ τὰ παραπλήσια τῶν τοιούτων

118 ἐστ' ὀνόματα. καλὸν γ' ἐναυχήσῃσι κάπισεμνύεσθαι δόξαν θηρωμένους τὴν ἀπὸ τούτων, ἐφ' οἷς εἰκὸς ἦν ἐγκαλύπτεσθαι. καὶ μὴν ἔνιοι

μέγα φρονούσιν ἐπὶ τούτοις, ὡς ἄμαχόν τινα ἰσχὺν

[423] ἐκ τοῦ τοιούτοι<sup>1</sup> | νομισθῆναι παρὰ πᾶσι καρπωσάμενοι, οὓς τοῦ πολλοῦ θράσους ἢ ὀπαδὸς τοῦ θεοῦ δίκη τίσεται καίτοι τάχα τὸν οἰκείον οὐ μαντευόμενος μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ προορωμένους ὄλεθρον· φασὶ γάρ· “ πρὶν διασπαρῆναι,” φροντίσωμεν ὀνό-

119 ματός τε καὶ δόξης. οὐκοῦν, εἶπομι' ἂν αὐτοῖς, ὅτι σκεδασθήσεσθε γινώσκετε; τί οὖν ἀμαρτάνετε; ἀλλὰ μήποτε τὸν τρόπον τῶν ἀφρόνων διασυνίστησιν, οἱ καίτοι μεγίστων ἐπικρεμαμένων οὐκ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τοιούτων. Mangey and Wend. τοιούτους. But the ordinary usage of Greek demands the nominative when referring to the subject of the main verb, and this is usually, if not always, followed by Philo, e.g. ἀδικούντες 120.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 116-119

confront the authors of such unholy deeds, but you also deliberately send to every part rumours to report the misdeeds of which you yourselves are guilty, that none may fail to learn and hear the story of your shameless crimes. O wretched, utter miscreants !

What sort of name, then, do you desire ? Is it the 117 name that best befits your deeds ? Is it one name only ? One general name perhaps, but a thousand specific ones, which you will hear from the lips of others even if your own are silent. Recklessness with shamelessness, insolence with violence, violence with murder, seductions with adulteries, unbridled lust with unmeasured pleasures, desperation with foolhardiness, injustice with knavery, thefts with robbery, perjuries with falsehoods, impieties with law-breakings, these and the like are the names for such deeds as yours. It is indeed a fine cause for pride 118 and boasting, when you pursue so eagerly the repute which these names give, names at which you should in all reason hide your heads for shame.

With some indeed their pride in these names comes from the belief that they have gained invincible strength by the fact that all men think them such, and these God's minister Justice will punish for their great audacity. Though perhaps they have not merely a presentiment, but a clear foresight of their own destruction. For they say, "before we are dispersed" (Gen. xi. 4) let us take thought for our name and glory. Do you then know, I would say to 119 them, that you will be scattered ? Why then do you sin ? But surely it bespeaks the mind of fools that they do not shrink from iniquity, though the gravest

PHILO

- ἀδήλως ἄλλ' ἐκ τοῦ φανεροῦ πολλάκις τιμωριῶν ἀδικεῖν ὅμως οὐκ ὀκνοῦσι· γνωριμώταται δ' εἰσὶν αἱ τιμωρίαὶ ἀδηλοῦσθαι νομισθεῖσαι, ἃς ἐκ θεοῦ
- 120 κατασκήπτειν συμβέβηκε. πάντες γὰρ οἱ φαυλότατοι λαμβάνουσιν ἐννοίας περὶ τοῦ μὴ λήσειν τὸ θεῖον ἀδικοῦντες μηδὲ τὸ δίκην ὑφέξειν εἰσάπαν
- 121 ἰσχυροὶ διακρούσασθαι· ἐπεὶ πόθεν ἴσασιν, ὅτι σκεδασθήσονται; καὶ μὴν λέγουσι “ πρὶν ἡμᾶς διασπαρῆναι”· ἀλλὰ τὸ συνειδὸς ἔνδοθεν ἐλέγχει καὶ σφόδρα ἐπιτηδεύοντας ἀθεότητες κεντεῖ, ὡς ἄκοντας εἰς συναίνεσιν ἐπισπάσασθαι περὶ τοῦ τὰ κατ' ἀνθρώπους πάντα πρὸς ἀμείνονος φύσεως ἐφορᾶσθαι καὶ δίκην ἐφεστάναι τιμωρὸν ἀδέκαστον, ἀσεβῶν πράξεις ἐχθραίνουσαν ἀδίκους καὶ λόγους
- 122 τοὺς συνηγόρους αὐταῖς. XXV. ἀλλ' εἰσὶν ἀπόγονοι πάντες οὗτοι τῆς αἰεὶ μὲν ἀποθνησκούσης, μηδέποτε δὲ τεθνηκυίας μοχθηρίας, ἧς Κάιν ἐστὶν ὄνομα. ἢ οὐχὶ καὶ ὁ Κάιν υἱὸν γεννήσας, ὃν Ἐνώχ ἐκάλεσεν, ὁμώνυμον αὐτῷ [καὶ] κτίζων εἰσάγεται πόλιν καὶ τρόπον τινὰ τὰ γενητὰ καὶ θνητὰ οἰκοδομῶν ἐπὶ τῇ τῶν θειοτέρας
- 123 κατασκευῆς λαχόντων ἀνατροπῇ; ὁ γὰρ Ἐνώχ ἐρμηνεύεται χάρις σου· τῶν δ' ἀνοσίων ἕκαστος διάνοιαν μὲν ἠγείται χαρίζεσθαι ἑαυτῷ τὰς τε καταλήψεις καὶ διανοήσεις, ὀφθαλμοὺς δὲ τὸ βλέπειν καὶ ἀκούειν ὠτα καὶ μυκτῆρας ὁσφραίνεσθαι, καὶ τὰς ἄλλας αἰσθήσεις τὰ οἰκεῖα ἑαυταῖς, ἔτι μέντοι καὶ τὰ φωνῆς ὄργανα τὸ λέγειν, θεὸν δὲ

* This conception of wickedness as being in one sense immortal, though at the same time a perpetual process of dying to the true life, is Philo's interpretation of the sign given to Cain that no one should kill him (Gen. iv. 15),

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 119-123

penalties often menace them, openly and not obscurely. The punishments of God's visitation may be thought to be hidden from our sight, but they are really well known. For all, however wicked, receive 120 some general notions to the effect that their iniquity will not pass unseen by God, and that they cannot altogether evade the necessity of being brought to judgement. Otherwise how do they know that they 121 will be scattered? They certainly do say, "before we are dispersed." But it is the conscience within which convicts them and pricks them in spite of the exceeding godlessness of their lives, thus drawing them on reluctantly to assent to the truth that all human doings are surveyed by a superior being and that there awaits them an incorruptible avenger, even justice, who hates the unjust deeds of the impious and the arguments which advocate those deeds.

XXV. But all these are descended from the depravity 122 which is ever dying and never dead, whose name is Cain.<sup>a</sup> Is not Cain, when he had begotten a son whom he called Enoch, described as founding a city to bear his son's name (Gen. iv. 17), and thus in a sense raising a building of created and mortal things to subvert those to which has fallen the honour to be the work of a diviner architect? For Enoch is by 123 interpretation "thy gift," and each of the unholy thinks that his understanding gives him his apprehension and reflections, that his eyes give him sight, his ears hearing, his nostrils smell, and the other senses the functions that belong to themselves severally, and again that the vocal organs give him speech, but God, he thinks, is either not the cause in any sense coupled with the absence of any mention of his death in Genesis. Cf. Quod Det. 177, De Fuga 60.

PHILO

- ἢ μὴ συνόλως ἢ μὴ ὡς πρῶτον αἴτιον [ὄν].<sup>1</sup>
- 124 διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὧν ἐγεωπόνησε τὰς ἀπαρχὰς<sup>2</sup> ἑαυτῷ ταμιεύεται, καρποὺς δὲ αὐτὸ μόνον αὐθις προσενεγκεῖν θεῷ λέγεται καίτοι παραδείγματος ὑγιоῦς ἐγγὺς ἐστῶτος· ὁ γὰρ ἀδελφὸς αὐτοῦ τὰ πρωτό-τοκα, οὐ τὰ δεύτερα τῆς ποιμένης ἔκγονα ἱερουργεῖ, τὰς τῶν γινομένων πρεσβυτέρας αἰτίας κατὰ τὸ πρεσβύτατον τῶν αἰτίων ὁμολογῶν συνίστασθαι.
- 125 τῷ δ' ἀσεβεῖ τούναντίον δοκεῖ, αὐτοκράτορα μὲν εἶναι τὸν νοῦν ὧν βουλεύεται, αὐτοκράτορα δὲ καὶ τὴν αἴσθησιν ὧν αἰσθάνεται· δικάζειν γὰρ ἀνυπ-αιτίως καὶ ἀψευδῶς τὴν μὲν τὰ σώματα, τὸν δὲ
 126 πάντα. τούτων δὲ τί | ἂν γένοιτο ἐπιληπτότερον [424] ἢ μᾶλλον ὑπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐλεγχόμενον; ἢ οὐχὶ καὶ ὁ νοῦς πολλάκις ἐπὶ μυρίων ὄσων ἠλέγχθη παρανοῶν, καὶ αἱ αἰσθήσεις ἅπασαι ψευδομαρ-τυριῶν ἐάλωσαν οὐ παρ' ἀλόγοις δικασταῖς, οὐς εἰκὸς ἀπατᾶσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ τῆς φύσεως αὐτῆς 127 δικαστηρίῳ, ἣν οὐ θέμις δεκάζεσθαι; καὶ μὴν σφαλλομένων γε τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς περὶ τε νοῦν καὶ αἴσθησιν κριτηρίων ἀνάγκη τὰκόλουθον ὁμολογεῖν, ὅτι ὁ θεὸς τῷ μὲν τὰς ἐννοίας, τῇ δὲ τὰς ἀντιλήψεις ἐπομβρεῖ, καὶ ἔστιν οὐ τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς μερῶν χάρις τὰ γινόμενα, ἀλλὰ τοῦ δι' ὄν καὶ ἡμεῖς γεγόναμεν δωρεαὶ πᾶσαι.
- 128 XXVI. τὸν φιλαυτίας κληῖρον παραλαβόντες παῖδες παρὰ πατρὸς συναυξῆσαι γλίχονται μέχρι οὐρανοῦ, ἕως ἂν ἡ φιλάρετός τε καὶ μισοπόνηρος δίκη

<sup>1</sup> Or perhaps ὄντα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀρχὰς.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 556.

<sup>b</sup> Or "to whom also we owe our very being." δι' ὄν seems

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 124-128

or not the first cause. And therefore 124 Cain retained in his own keeping the firstlings of the fruits of his husbandry and offered, as we are told, merely the fruits at a later time, although he had beside him a wholesome example. For his brother brought to the altar the first-born younglings of the flock, not the after-born, thus confessing that even the causes which come higher in the chain of causation<sup>a</sup> owe their existence to the Cause which is highest and first of all. The impious man thinks the opposite, 125 that the mind has sovereign power over what it plans, and sense over what it perceives. He holds that the latter judges material things and the former all things, and that both are free from fault or error.
And yet what could be more blameworthy or more 126 clearly convicted of falsehood by the truth than these beliefs? Is not the mind constantly convicted of delusion on numberless points, and all the senses judged guilty of false witness, not before unreasoning judges who may easily be deceived, but at the bar of nature herself whom it is fundamentally impossible to corrupt? And surely if the means of judgement 127 within us, supplied by mind and sense, are capable of error, we must admit the logical consequence, that it is God who showers conceptions on the mind and perceptions on sense, and that what comes into being is no gift of any part of ourselves, but all are bestowed by Him, through whom we too have been made.<sup>b</sup> XXVI. Having received from 128 their father self-love as their portion, his children desire to add to it and raise it heaven high, until Justice who loves virtue and hates evil comes to the here to differ little from  $\delta'$  οὐδ. It thinks of God as the cause rather than as the maker.

PHILO

- παρελθοῦσα καθέλη τὰς πόλεις, ἃς ἐπετείχισαν ψυχῇ τῇ ταλαίνῃ, καὶ τὸν πύργον, οὗ τοῦνομα ἐν τῇ τῶν κριμάτων<sup>1</sup> ἀναγραφομένη βίβλῳ δεδηλωται.
 129 ἔστι δὲ ὡς μὲν Ἑβραῖοι λέγουσι Φανουήλ, ὡς δὲ ἡμεῖς ἀποστροφή θεοῦ· τὸ γὰρ κατεσκευασμένον ὀχύρωμα διὰ τῆς τῶν λόγων πιθανότητος οὐδενὸς ἔνεκα ἐτέρου κατεσκευάζετο ἢ τοῦ μετατραπῆναι καὶ μετακλιθῆναι διάνοιαν ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ τιμῆς· 130 οὐ τί ἂν γένοιτο ἀδικώτερον; ἀλλὰ πρὸς γε τὴν τοῦ ὀχυρώματος τούτου καθαίρεσιν ὁ πειρατῆς τῆς ἀδικίας καὶ φονῶν<sup>2</sup> αἰεὶ κατ' αὐτῆς εὐτρέπισται, ὃν Ἑβραῖοι καλοῦσι Γεδεών, ὃς ἐρμηνεύεται πειρατήριον· “ ὦμοσε ” γάρ φησι “ Γεδεών τοῖς ἀνδράσι Φανουήλ λέγων· ἐν τῷ με ἐπιστρέφειν μετ' εἰρήνης 131 τὸν πύργον τούτον κατασκάψω.” πάγκαλον καὶ πρεπωδέστατον αὔχημα μισοπονήρῳ ψυχῇ κατὰ ἀσεβῶν ἠκονημένη τὸ βεβαιουῖσθαι καθαιρήσειν πάντα λόγον ἀποστρέφειν διάνοιαν ὀσιότητος ἀνα-πείθοντα. καὶ πέφυκεν οὕτως ἔχειν· ὅταν γὰρ ὁ νοῦς ἐπιστρέψῃ, τὸ ἀποκλῖνον καὶ ἀποστρεφόμενον 132 αὐτοῦ πᾶν<sup>3</sup> λύεται. τούτου δὲ καιρὸς ἔστι τῆς καθαιρέσεως, τὸ παραδοξότατον, ἢ φησιν, οὐ πόλεμος, ἀλλ' εἰρήνη· διανοίας γὰρ εὐσταθεῖα καὶ ἡρεμία, ἣν εὐσέβεια γεννᾶν πέφυκεν, ἀνατρέπεται πᾶς λόγος, ὃν ἐδημιούργησεν ἀσέβεια.
 133 πολλοὶ καὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις πύργου τινὰ τρόπον ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ἤγειραν, ὡς ἄψασθαι τῶν οὐρανοῦ περάτων· οὐρανὸς δὲ συμβολικῶς ὁ νοῦς ἡμῶν ἔστι,

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps a slip for κριτῶν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. φρονῶν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. πάλιν.

<sup>a</sup> This is of course what the LXX. means by ἐπιστρέφειν.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 128-133

aid. She razes to the ground the cities which they fortified to menace the unhappy soul, and the tower whose name is explained in the book of Judges. That name is in the Hebrew tongue Penuel, but in our own "turning from God." For the stronghold which was built through persuasiveness of argument was built solely for the purpose of diverting and deflecting the mind from honouring God. And what greater sin against justice could there be than this? But there stands ready armed for the destruction of this stronghold the robber who despoils injustice and ever breathes slaughter against her, whom the Hebrews call Gideon, which is interpreted the "Robbers' Hold." Gideon swore, we read, to the men of Penuel saying, "When I return with peace I will demolish this tower" (Jud. viii. 9). A grand boast, most fitting to the evil-hating soul whose edge has been made sharp against the impious, that it receives the strength to pull down every argument which would persuade the mind to turn away from holiness. And the words are true to nature, for when the mind "returns,"<sup>a</sup> all in it that was starting aside or turning away is brought to nothing. And the fit time for destruction of this, though clean contrary to expectation, is, as Gideon says, not war but peace. For it is through that stability and tranquillity of understanding, which it is the nature of piety to engender, that every argument is overturned which impiety has wrought. Many too have exalted their senses, as though they were a tower, so that they touch the boundaries of heaven, that is symbolically our mind, wherein range and dwell Philo perhaps gives it the sense of "turns round," "is converted."

PHILO

καθ' ὃν αἱ ἄριστα καὶ θεῖαι φύσεις περιπολοῦσιν. οἱ δὲ ταῦτα τολμῶντες αἰσθησιν μὲν διανοίας προκρίνουσιν, ἀξιοῦσι δὲ καὶ διὰ τῶν αἰσθητῶν τὰ νοητὰ πάντα ἐλεῖν ἀνὰ κράτος, εἰς μὲν δούλων τάξιν τὰ δεσπόζοντα, εἰς δὲ ἡγεμόνων τὰ φύσει δοῦλα μεθαρμόσασθαι βιαζόμενοι.

- 134 [425] XXVII. | Τὸ δέ, “ κατέβη κύριος ἰδεῖν τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον ” τροπικώτερον πάντως ἀκουστέον· προσιέναι γὰρ ἢ ἀπιέναι ἢ κατιέναι ἢ τούναντίον <ἀν>έρχεσθαι ἢ συνόλως τὰς αὐτὰς τοῖς κατὰ μέρος ζώοις σχέσεις καὶ κινήσεις ἴσχεσθαι καὶ κινεῖσθαι τὸ θεῖον ὑπολαμβάνειν ὑπερωκεάνιος καὶ μετα-
- 135 κόσμιος, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ἔστιν ἀσέβεια. ταῦτα δὲ ἀνθρωπολογεῖται παρὰ τῷ νομοθέτῃ περὶ τοῦ μὴ ἀνθρωπομόρφου θεοῦ διὰ τὰς τῶν παιδευομένων ἡμῶν, ὡς πολλάκις ἐν ἑτέροις εἶπον, ὠφελείας. ἐπεὶ τίς οὐκ οἶδεν ὅτι τῷ κατιόντι τὸν μὲν ἀπολεί-
- 136 πειν, τὸν δὲ ἐπιλαμβάνειν τόπον ἀναγκαῖον; ὑπὸ δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ πεπλήρωται τὰ πάντα, περιέχοντος, οὐ περιεχομένου, ᾧ πανταχοῦ τε καὶ οὐδαμοῦ συμβέβηκεν εἶναι μόνῳ· οὐδαμοῦ μὲν, ὅτι καὶ χώραν καὶ τόπον αὐτὸς τοῖς σώμασι συγγεγέννηκε, τὸ δὲ πεποιηκὸς ἐν οὐδενὶ τῶν γεγονότων θέμις εἰπεῖν περιέχεσθαι, πανταχοῦ δέ, ὅτι τὰς δυνάμεις αὐτοῦ διὰ γῆς καὶ ὕδατος ἀέρος τε καὶ οὐρανοῦ τείνας μέρος οὐδὲν ἔρημον ἀπολέλοιπε τοῦ κόσμου, πάντα δὲ συναγαγὼν διὰ πάντων ἀοράτοις ἔσφιγγε δεσ-

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 133-136

those divine forms of being which excel all others. They who do not shrink from this give the preference to sense rather than understanding. They would use perceptible things to subdue and capture the world of things intelligible, thus forcing the two to change places, the one to pass from mastery to slavery, the other from its natural servitude to dominance.

XXVII. The words, "the Lord came down to see 134 the city and the tower" (Gen. xi. 5), must certainly be understood in a figurative sense. For to suppose that the Deity approaches or departs, goes down or goes up, or in general remains stationary or puts Himself in motion, as particular living creatures do, is an impiety which may be said to transcend the bounds of ocean or of the universe itself. No, as I 135 have often said elsewhere, the lawgiver is applying human terms to the superhuman God, to help us, his pupils, to learn our lesson. For we all know that when a person comes down he must leave one place and occupy another. But God fills all things; He 136 contains but is not contained. To be everywhere and nowhere is His property and His alone. He is nowhere, because He Himself created space and place coincidentally with material things, and it is against all right principle to say that the Maker is contained in anything that He has made. He is everywhere, because He has made His powers extend through earth and water, air and heaven, and left no part of the universe without His presence, and uniting all

PHILO

- μοῖς, ἵνα μή ποτε λυθείη, οὐ χάριν μελετήσας ὦ<sup>1</sup>
- 137 * * *. τὸ μὲν γὰρ ὑπεράνω τῶν δυνάμεων ὄν ἐπινοεῖται περιττεύειν, οὐ * * * κατὰ τὸ εἶναι μόνον<sup>2</sup>. τούτου δύναμις δέ, καθ' ἣν ἔθθηκε καὶ διατάξατο τὰ πάντα, κέκληται μὲν ἐτύμως θεός, ἐγκεκόλπισται δὲ τὰ ὅλα καὶ διὰ τῶν τοῦ παντός
- 138 μερῶν διελήλυθε. τὸ δὲ θεῖον καὶ ἀόρατον καὶ ἀκατάληπτον καὶ πανταχοῦ ὄν ὄρατόν τε καὶ κατα-ληπτόν οὐδαμοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειάν ἐστιν * * * “ ὦδε στάς ἐγὼ πρὸ τοῦ σέ,”<sup>3</sup> δείκνυσθαι καὶ καταλαμβάνεσθαι δοκῶν, πρὸ πάσης δείξεως καὶ φαντασίας
- 139 ὑπερβαλῶν τὰ γεγονότα. τῶν οὖν μεταβατικῆς κινήσεως ὀνομάτων οὐδὲν ἐφαρμόττει τῷ κατὰ τὸ εἶναι θεῷ, τὸ ἄνω, τὸ κάτω, τὸ ἐπὶ δεξιὰ, τὸ ἐπ' εὐώνυμα, τὸ πρόσω, τὸ κατόπιν· ἐν οὐδενί γὰρ τῶν λεχθέντων ἐπινοεῖται, ὡς οὐδ' ἂν μετα-
- 140 τρεπόμενος ἐναλλάττοι χωρία. λέγεται δ' οὐδὲν ἦττον κατελθὼν ἰδεῖν, ὃ προλήψει πάντα οὐ γενόμενα μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὶν γενέσθαι σαφῶς κατειληφώς, προτροπῆς ἔνεκα καὶ διδασκαλίας, ἵνα

<sup>1</sup> I have not attempted to translate these corrupt words which appear in Mangey's edition as οὐ χάριν μελίσας ἔσω (“on account of which I will celebrate it in song”!) Wend. suggested θεοῦ χάρισιν συνημμένα with no lacuna. But this bears little resemblance to the text. I suggest οὐ χάριν <ἐ>μελ<λ>ε τῆς ἀσω<μάτου>, followed by some such words as οὐσίας πληροῦσθαι. This will fit the argument well. God is everywhere, because His binding things with invisible bonds necessarily (<ἐ>μελλε) involves His filling all things with His being.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. suggests <οὐκ> ἐπινοεῖται περὶ τόπον, οὐ κατα<λαμβάνομενον, εἰ μὴ κατὰ> τὸ εἶναι μόνον. As an alternative I suggest ἐπινοεῖται πέρα τοῦ εἶναι που κατὰ τὸ εἶναι μόνον (“is conceived of as transcending the idea of being in any particular place and in terms of existence only”). See App. p. 556.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 136-140

with all has bound them fast with invisible bonds, that they should never be loosed. . . . That aspect 137 of Him which transcends His Potencies cannot be conceived of at all in terms of place, but only as pure being, but that Potency of His by which He made and ordered all things, while it is called God in accordance with the derivation of that name,<sup>a</sup> holds the whole in its embrace and has interfused itself through the parts of the universe. But this divine nature 138 which presents itself to us, as visible and comprehensible and everywhere, is in reality invisible, incomprehensible and nowhere. . . . And so we have the words "Here I stand before thou wast" (Ex. xvii. 6). "I seem," He says, "the object of demonstration and comprehension, yet I transcend created things, preceding all demonstration or presentation to the mind."<sup>b</sup> None of the terms, then, which express move- 139 ment from place to place, whether up or down, to right or to left, forward or backward, are applicable to God in His aspect of pure being. For no such term is compatible with our conception of Him, so that He must also be incapable of displacement or change of locality.

All the same Moses 140 applies the phrase "came down and saw" to Him, who in His prescience had comprehended all things, not only after but before they came to pass, and he did so to admonish and instruct us, that the absent,

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 556.

<sup>b</sup> See note on De Sac. 67.

<sup>3</sup> This sentence has been completely confused in the MSS. Wend. reconstructs it as follows: τὸ δὴ θεῖον ὄρατόν τε καὶ καταληπτὸν καὶ πανταχοῦ φαντασιαζόμενον ἀόρατον καὶ ἀκατάληπτον καὶ οὐδαμοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειάν ἐστιν ὡς ἀψευδέστατον ἐκείνον εἶναι τὸν χρησμόν, ἐν ᾧ λέλεκται (cf. De Mig. 183), and this seems to be the general sense. In the next words στὰς should probably be ἐστηκα.

PHILO

- μηδεὶς ἀνθρώπων οἷς οὐ πάρεστιν, ἀβεβαίῳ χρώμενος εἰκασία, μακρὰν ἀφεστῶς προπιστεύῃ, ἀλλ' ἄχρι τῶν πραγμάτων ἐλθὼν καὶ διακύψας εἰς ἕκαστα καὶ ἐπιμελῶς αὐτὰ αὐγασάμενος· ὄψιν γὰρ ἀπλανῆ πρὸ ἀκοῆς ἀπατεῶνος ἄξιον μάρτυρα 141 τίθεσθαι. οὐ χάριν καὶ παρὰ τοῖς ἄριστα πολι-
 [426] τευομένοις ἀναγέγραπται νόμος | ἀκοὴν<sup>1</sup> μὴ μαρ-τυρεῖν, ὅτι φύσει τὸ δικαστήριον αὐτῆς πρὸς τὸ δεκάζεσθαι ταλαντεύει· καὶ Μωυσῆς μέντοι φησὶν ἐν τοῖς <ἀπ>αγορευτικοῖς· “οὐ παραδέξῃ ἀκοὴν ματαίαν,” οὐχὶ μόνον τοῦτο λέγων, <μὴ><sup>2</sup> παραδέχεσθαι ψευδῆ λόγον ἢ εὐήθη δι’ ἀκοῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅτι πρὸς τὴν σαφῆ τῆς ἀληθείας κατάληψιν μακρὸν ὅσον ὄψεως ὑπερίζουσα διελέγχεται γέμουσα ματαιότητος ἀκοή.
- 142 XXVIII. Ταύτην φασὲν αἰτίαν εἶναι τοῦ λέγε-σθαι “τὸν θεὸν καταβεβηκέναι τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον θεάσασθαι.” οὐ παρέργως δὲ πρόσκειται “ὃν ὠκοδόμησαν οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων.” ἴσως γὰρ ἂν τις εἴποι τῶν οὐκ εὐαγῶν ἐπιχλευάζων ἅμα· καινὸν<sup>3</sup> ἡμᾶς ἀναδιδάσκει μάθημα ὁ νομο-θέτης, ὅτι πύργους καὶ πόλεις οὐχ ἕτεροί τινες, ἀλλὰ παῖδες ἀνθρώπων ἀνοικοδομοῦνται. τίς γὰρ τά γ’ οὕτως ἐμφανῆ καὶ περίοπτα καὶ τῶν λίαν 143 ἔξεστηκότων ἀγνοεῖ; ἀλλὰ μὴ τὸ πρόχειρον τοῦτο καὶ κατημαξευμένον ἐν τοῖς ἱερωτάτοις χρησιμοῖς ἀναγεγράφθαι <νομίσης>, ἀλλ’ ὅπερ ἀποκεκρυμμένον ἰχνηλατεῖται διὰ τῶν ἐμφανῶν ὀνομάτων.

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀκοῆ. See App. p. 556.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. prints a lacuna after λέγων with note that Cohn suggests <ὅτι οὐ θέμις>. Mangey <μὴ>.

<sup>3</sup> Heinemann suggests ἀναγκαῖον for ἅμα καινόν.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 140-143

who are at a long distance from the facts, should never form conclusions hastily or rely on precarious conjectures, but should come to close quarters with things, inspect them one by one and carefully envisage them. For the certitude of sight must be held as better evidence than the deceitfulness of hearing. And therefore among those who live under the best institutions a law has been enacted against giving as evidence what has been merely heard, because hearing's tribunal has a natural bias towards corrupt judgement. In fact Moses says in his prohibitions, "Thou shalt not accept vain hearing" (Ex. xxiii. 1), by which he does not merely mean that we must not accept a false or foolish story on hearsay, but also that as a means of giving a sure apprehension of the truth, hearing is proved to lag far behind sight and is brimful of vanity. 141

XXVIII. This is the reason we assign for the words "God came down to see the city and the tower," but the phrase which follows, "which the sons of men built" (Gen. xi. 5), is no idle addition, though perhaps some profane person might say with a sneer, "a novel piece of information this which the lawgiver here imparts to us, namely that it is the sons of men and not some other beings who build cities and towers." "Who," he would continue, "even among those who are far gone in insanity, does not know facts so obvious and conspicuous?" But you must suppose that it is not this obvious and hackneyed fact which is recorded for us in our most holy oracles, but the hidden truth which can be traced under the surface meaning of the words. 143

PHILO

144

τί οὖν ἔστι τοῦτο; οἱ πολλοὺς ἐπιγραφόμενοι τῶν ὄντων ὡσανεὶ πατέρας καὶ τὸ πολυθεὸν εἰσηγούμενοι στίφος ἀπειρίαν ὁμοῦ καὶ πολυμιγίαν τῶν πραγμάτων καταχέαντες καὶ τὸ ψυχῆς τέλος ἡδονῇ παραδόντες δημιουργοὶ τῆς εἰρημένης πόλεως καὶ τῆς κατ' αὐτὴν ἀκροπόλεως, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, γεγόνασι, τὰ ποιητικὰ τοῦ τέλους τρόπον οἰκοδομημάτων συναύξοντες, τῶν ἐκ πόρνης ἀποκυθηθέντων οὐδέν, ὡς γ' οἶμαι, διαφέροντες, οὓς ὁ νόμος ἐκκλησίας ἀπελήλακε θείας εἰπών· “οὐκ εἰσελεύσεται ἐκ πόρνης εἰς ἐκκλησίαν κυρίου,” ὅτι, καθάπερ περὶ πολλὰ τέλη πλανώμενοι τοξόται καὶ μηδενὸς εὐστόχως ἐφιέμενοι σκοποῦ, μυρίας ἀρχὰς καὶ αἰτίας τῆς τῶν ὄντων ὑποθέμενοι γενέσεως ψευδωνύμους πάσας τὸν ἓνα ποιητὴν καὶ πατέρα τῶν ὄλων ἡγνόησαν.

145

οἱ δὲ ἐπιστήμη κεχρημένοι τοῦ ἑνὸς υἱοῦ θεοῦ προσαγορεύονται δεόντως, καθὰ καὶ Μωυσῆς ὁμολογεῖ φάσκων· “υἱοὶ ἐστε κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ” καὶ “θεὸν τὸν γεννήσαντά σε” καὶ “οὐκ αὐτὸς οὗτός σου πατήρ;” ἔπεται μέντοι τοῖς οὕτω τὴν ψυχὴν διατεθεῖσι μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἀγαθὸν εἶναι νομίζειν, ὅπερ τῷ τέλει τῆς ἡδονῆς πρὸς ἐμπειροπολέμων ἀνδρῶν ἀντιτειχίζεται πρὸς ἀνατροπὴν

146

[427]

καὶ καθαίρεσιν ἐκείνου. | καὶ μηδέπω μέντοι τυγχάνη τις ἀξιοχρεως ὢν υἱὸς θεοῦ προσαγορευέσθαι, σπουδαζέτω κοσμεῖσθαι κατὰ τὸν πρωτόγονον αὐτοῦ λόγον, τὸν ἀγγέλων πρεσβύτατον, ὡς ἂν ἀρχάγγελον, πολυώνυμον ὑπάρχοντα· καὶ γὰρ ἀρχὴ καὶ ὄνομα θεοῦ καὶ λόγος καὶ ὁ κατ' εἰκόνα

---

* An obvious reference to Stoics and Epicureans.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 144-146

What then is this truth? Those who 144 ascribe to existing things a multitude of fathers as it were and by introducing their miscellany of deities have flooded everything with ignorance and confusion, or have assigned to pleasure the function of being the aim and end of the soul, have become in very truth builders of the city of our text and of its acropolis. They pile up as in an edifice all that serves to produce that aim or end and thus differ not a whit to my mind from the harlot's offspring, whom the law has banished from God's congregation with the words "he that is born of a harlot shall not enter the congregation of the Lord" (Deut. xxiii. 2). For like bowmen, whose shots roam from mark to mark and who never take a skilful aim at any single point, they assume a multitude of what they falsely call sources and causes to account for the origin of the existing world and have no knowledge of the one Maker and Father of all. But they who 145 live in the knowledge of the One are rightly called "Sons of God," as Moses also acknowledges when he says, "Ye are sons of the Lord God" (Deut. xiv. 1), and "God who begat thee" (ibid. xxxii. 18), and "Is not He Himself thy father?" (ibid. 6). Indeed with those whose soul is thus disposed it follows that they hold moral beauty to be the only good, and this serves as a counterwork engineered by veteran warriors to fight the cause which makes Pleasure the end and to subvert and overthrow it.<sup>a</sup> But if there 146 be any as yet unfit to be called a Son of God, let him press to take his place under God's First-born, the Word, who holds the eldership among the angels, their ruler as it were. And many names are his, for he is called, "the Beginning," and the Name of

PHILO

- ἄνθρωπος καὶ ὁ ὄρων, Ἰσραήλ, προσαγορεύεται.
- 147 διὸ προήχθη ὀλίγω πρότερον ἐπαινεῖσαι τὰς ἀρετὰς τῶν φασκόντων ὅτι “ πάντες ἐσμέν υἱοὶ ἐνὸς ἀνθρώπου”· καὶ γὰρ εἰ μήπω ἱκανοὶ θεοῦ παῖδες νομίζεσθαι γεγόναμεν, ἀλλὰ τοι τῆς ἀειδοῦς εἰκόνας αὐτοῦ, λόγου τοῦ ἱερωτάτου· θεοῦ γὰρ
- 148 εἰκῶν λόγος ὁ πρεσβύτατος. καὶ πολλαχοῦ μέντοι τῆς νομοθεσίας υἱοὶ πάλιν Ἰσραήλ καλοῦνται, τοῦ ὄρωντος οἱ ἀκούοντες, ἐπειδὴ μεθ’ ὄρασι ἀκοὴ δευτερείοις τετίμηται καὶ τὸ διδασκόμενον τοῦ χωρὶς ὑφηγήσεως ἐναργεῖς τύπους τῶν ὑποκειμέ-
- 149 νων λαμβάνοντος αἰεὶ δεύτερον. ἄγαμαι καὶ τῶν ἐν βασιλικαῖς βίβλοις ἱεροφαντηθέντων, καθ’ ἃς οἱ πολλαῖς γενεαῖς ὕστερον ἀκμάσαντες καὶ βιώσαντες ἀνὺπαιτίως υἱοὶ τοῦ τὸν θεὸν ὑμνήσαντος Δαβὶδ ἀναγράφονται, οὗ περιόντος οὐδ’ οἱ πρόπαπποι τούτων ἦσαν ἴσως<sup>1</sup> γεγεννημένοι· ψυχῶν γὰρ ἀπαθανατιζομένων ἀρεταῖς, οὐ φθαρτῶν σωματικῶν ἔστι γένεσις, ἣν ἐπὶ τοὺς καλοκάγαθίας ἡγεμόνας ὡσανεὶ γεννητὰς καὶ πατέρας ἀναφέρεσθαι συμβαίνει.
- 150 XXIX. Κατὰ δὲ τῶν ἐπ’ ἀδικίαις σεμννομένων εἶπε κύριος· “ ἰδοὺ γένος ἐν καὶ χεῖλος ἐν πάντων,” ἴσον τῷ ἰδοὺ μία οἰκειότης καὶ συγγένεια, καὶ πάλιν ἁρμονία καὶ συμφωνία ἢ αὐτὴ πάντων ὁμοῦ, μηδενὸς ἡλλοτριωμένου τὴν γνώμην μηδ’ ἀπᾶδοντος, καθάπερ ἔχει καὶ ἐπ’ ἀνθρώπων ἀμούσων· τὸ γὰρ φωνητήριον αὐτοῖς ὄργανον πᾶσι τοῖς φθόγγοις ἔστιν ὅτε δι’ ὄλων ἐκμελὲς καὶ ἀπωδὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πιστῶς.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in § 41.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 557.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 146-150

God, and His Word, and the Man after His image, and "he that sees," that is Israel. And 147 therefore I was moved a few pages above<sup>a</sup> to praise the virtues of those who say that "We are all sons of one man" (Gen. xlii. 11). For if we have not yet become fit to be thought sons of God yet we may be sons of His invisible image, the most holy Word. For the Word is the eldest-born image of God. And 148 often indeed in the law-book we find another phrase, "sons of Israel," hearers, that is, sons of him that sees, since hearing stands second in estimation and below sight, and the recipient of teaching is always second to him with whom realities present their forms clear to his vision and not through the medium of instruction.

I bow, too, in admiration 149 before the mysteries revealed in the books of Kings, where it does not offend us to find described as sons of God's psalmist David those who lived and flourished many generations afterwards (1 Kings xv. 11; 2 Kings xviii. 3),<sup>b</sup> though in David's lifetime probably not even their great-grandparents had been born. For the paternity we find ascribed to the standard-bearers of noble living, whom we think of as the fathers who begat us, is the paternity of souls raised to immortality by virtues, not of corruptible bodies.

XXIX. But of those who glory in their iniquities, 150 the Lord said "behold there is one race and one lip of them all" (Gen. xi. 5), that is, behold they are one connexion of family and fellowship of race, and again all have the same harmony and fellowship of voice; there is none whose mind is a stranger to the other nor his voice discordant. It is so also with men who have no gift of music. Sometimes their vocal organ, though every note is entirely tuneless and

PHILO

- οὐ μετρίως καθέστηκε, πρὸς ἀναρμοστίαν ἄκρως ἡρμοσμένον καὶ πρὸς τὸ ἀσύμφωνον συμφωνίαν
- 151 μόνον ἄγον. καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς πολιτίδος τὸ κατασκευαστόν<sup>1</sup> τὸ παραπλήσιον ἰδεῖν ἔστιν· αἶ τε<sup>2</sup> γὰρ ἀμφημεριναὶ καὶ διάτριτοι καὶ τεταρταῖζουσαι παρὰ παισὶν ἰατρῶν λεγόμεναι περίοδοι μεθ' ἡμέραν τε καὶ νύκτωρ περὶ τὰς αὐτὰς ὥρας κατασκήπτουσι
- 152 τὴν εἰς αὐτὰ<sup>1</sup> καὶ τάξιν φυλάττουσαι.
- [428] Τὸ δὲ “ καὶ τοῦτο ἤρξαντο | ποιῆσαι ” μετ' οὐ μετρίου σχετλιασμοῦ λέλεκται, διότι τοῖς ραδιουργοῖς οὐ τὰ πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοφύλους μόνον συγχεῖν δίκαια ἐξήρκεσεν, ἀλλ' ἤδη καὶ τῶν ὀλυμπίων ἐπιβαίνειν ἐτόλμησαν, ἀδικίαν μὲν σπείραντες, ἀσέβειαν δὲ θερίσαντες. ὄφελος δὲ τοῖς ἀθλίους οὐδέν· οὐ γὰρ ὥσπερ ἀδικοῦντες ἀλλήλους πολλὰ ὧν ἂν ἐθελήσωσιν ἀνύτουσιν ἔργοις βεβαιούμενοι τὰ βουλαῖς ἀγνώμοσιν ἐπιλογισθέντα, οὕτως καὶ ἀσεβοῦντες· ἀζήμια γὰρ καὶ ἀπήμονα τὰ θεῖα, τοῦ δὲ πλημμελεῖν εἰς αὐτὰ οἱ δυσκάθαρτοι τὰς ἀρχὰς εὐρίσκονται μόνον, πρὸς δὲ τὸ τέλος φθάνουσιν
- 154 οὐδέποτε. διὸ καὶ λέγεται τοῦτο· “ ἤρξαντο ποιῆσαι.” κορεσθέντες <γὰρ> οἱ τοῦ παρανομεῖν ἄπληστοι τῶν πρὸς τὰ ἐν γῆ καὶ θαλάττῃ καὶ ἀέρι, ἃ φθαρτῆς φύσεως ἔλαχε, κακῶν ἐπὶ τὰς ἐν οὐρανῷ θείας φύσεις μετατάξασθαι διενοήθησαν, ἃς τι<sup>3</sup> τῶν ὄντων ἔξω τοῦ κακηγορεῖν ἔθος ἐστὶ διαθεῖναι τὸ παράπαν οὐδέν· καὶ αὐτὸ μέντοι τὸ βλασφημεῖν οὐ τοῖς κακηγορουμένοις ἐπιφέρει τινὰ ζημίαν, ἃ τῆς ἰδίου φύσεως οὐποτ' ἐξίσταται, ἀλλὰ
- 155 τοῖς κατατιτωμένοις συμφορὰς ἀνηκέστους. οὐκ

<sup>1</sup> See App. p. 557.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔτι.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 150-155

highly unmelodious, is supremely harmonized to produce disharmony, with a consonance which it turns to mere dissonance. And the same studied regularity 151 may be noticed in fever. For the recurrences which are called in the medical schools quotidian, or tertian, or quartan, make their visitation about the same hour of the day or night and maintain their relative order.

The words "And they have begun to do this" 152 (Gen. xi. 6), express strong scorn and indignation. They mean that the miscreants, not content with making havoc of the justice due to their fellows, went further. They dared to attack the rights of heaven, and having sown injustice, they reaped impiety. Yet the wretches had no profit of it. For while in 153 wronging each other they achieved much of what they wished and their deeds confirmed what their senseless scheming had devised, it was not so with their impiety. For the things that are God's cannot be harmed or injured, and when these reprobates turn their transgressions against them, they attain but to the beginning and never arrive at the end. Therefore we have these words, "They have begun 154 to do." For when, insatiate in wrongdoing, they had taken their fill of sins against all that is of earth and sea and air whose allotted nature is to perish, they bethought them to turn their forces against the divine natures in heaven. But on them nothing that exists can usually have any effect save evil speech, though indeed even the foul tongue does not work harm to those who are its objects (for they still possess their nature unchanged), but only brings disasters beyond cure on the revilers. Yet that they 155

<sup>3</sup> So Mangey: MSS. ἄ ἐστι: Wend. conjectures, but does not print, ἄς [ἐστι] τῶν κακῶν. See App. p. 558.

PHILO

ἐπειδὴ μέντοι μόνον ἤρξαντο πρὸς τὸ τέλος ἐλθεῖν ἀδυνατήσαντες ἀσεβείας, διὰ τοῦτ' αὐτοὺς οὐχ ὡς διαπραξαμένους ἕκαστα ὧν διανοήθησαν αἰτιατέον· οὐδ' χάριν καὶ τετελειωκένας φησὶ τὸν πύργον αὐτοὺς οὐ τελειώσαντας, ἐπειδὴν λέγει· “ κύριος κατέβη ἰδεῖν τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον,” οὐχ ὄν οἰκοδομησαί μελλουσιν, ἀλλ' ὄν “ ὠκοδόμησαν ” ἤδη.

156

XXX. τίς οὖν πίστις τοῦ μὴ τετελειουργῆσθαι τὴν κατασκευὴν; ἡ ἐνάργεια πρώτη γῆς γὰρ ὅτιοῦν μέρος ἀμήχανον οὐρανοῦ ψαῦσαι διὰ τὴν ἔμπροσθεν<sup>1</sup> αἰτίαν, ὅτιπερ οὐδὲ κέντρον περιφερείας ἄπτεται· δευτέρα<sup>2</sup> δ', ὅτι ὁ αἰθήρ, ἱερὸν πῦρ, φλόξ ἐστὶν ἄσβεστος, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸ δηλοῖ τοῦνομα παρὰ τὸ αἶθειν, ὃ δὴ καίειν ἐστὶ κατὰ 157 γλῶτταν, εἰρημένον. μάρτυς δὲ μία μοῖρα τῆς οὐρανοῦ πυρᾶς ἡλῖος, ὅς τοσοῦτον γῆς ἀφεστῶς ἄχρι μυχῶν τὰς ἀκτῖνας ἐπιπέμπων αὐτὴν τε καὶ τὸν ἀπ' αὐτῆς ἀνατείνοντα μέχρι τῆς οὐρανοῦ σφαίρας ἀέρα φύσει ψυχρὸν ὄντα τῇ μὲν ἀλαίειν, τῇ δὲ καταφλέγει· τὰ μὲν γὰρ ὅσα ἢ μακρὰν ἀφέστηκεν αὐτοῦ τῆς φορᾶς ἢ ἐγκάρσια παραβέβληται ἀλαίει μόνον, τὰ δ' ἐγγὺς ἢ ἐπ' εὐθείας ὄντα καὶ προσανακαίει βίᾳ. εἰ δὲ ταῦθ' οὕτως ἔχει, τοὺς ἀναβαίνειν τολμῶντας ἀνθρώπους οὐκ ἀναγκαῖον ἦν ἐμπερηῆσθαι κεραυνωθέντας, ἀτελοῦς αὐτοῖς τῆς μεγαλουργηθείσης ἐπινοίας γενομένης;
158 τοῦτ' ἔοικεν αἰνίττεσθαι διὰ τῶν αὐθις λεγομένων·

<sup>1</sup> Wend. suggests τὴν ἔμπροσθεν <λεχθείσαν>. The reference is to § 5.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δεύτερον.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 155-158

only began and were unable to reach the end of their impiety is no reason why they should not be denounced as they would had they carried out all their intentions. Therefore he speaks of their having completed the tower, though they had not done so. "The Lord," he says, "came down to see the city and tower which they had built" already, not which they intended to build (Gen. xi. 5).

XXX. What proof then have we that the structure 156 was not already completed? First, self-evident facts. No part of the earth can possibly touch the heaven for the reason already mentioned, namely that it is just as impossible as it is for the centre to touch the circumference. Secondly, because the aether, that holy fire, is an unquenchable flame, as its very name shews, derived as it is from αἰθεῖν, which is a special term<sup>a</sup> for "burn." This is attested by a single part 157 of the heavenly expanse of fire, namely the Sun, which, in spite of its great distance, sends its rays to the corners of the earth, and both earth and the naturally cold extent of air, which divides it from the sphere of heaven, is warmed or consumed by it as the case may be. For to all that is at a long distance from its course or lies at an angle to it, it merely gives warmth, but all that is near it or directly under it it actually destroys with the force of its flames. If this is so, the men who ventured on the ascent could not fail to be blasted and consumed by the fire, leaving their vaulting ambition unfulfilled. That it was unfulfilled<sup>b</sup> seems to be suggested by 158 Moses in the words which follow. "They ceased,"

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 27.

<sup>b</sup> τοῦτο can only refer to ἀτελοῦς, not to the curiously literalistic arguments given in the preceding section.

PHILO

“ἐπαύσαντο” γάρ φησιν “οἰκοδομοῦντες τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὸν πύργον,” οὐ δῆπου τελειώσαντες, | [429] ἀλλὰ τελειουργῆσαι κωλυθέντες διὰ τὴν ἐπιγενομένην σύγχυσιν.

- Οὐ μὴν ἐκπεφεύγασι τὴν τῶν διαπράξεων αἰτίαν οἱ πρὸς τῷ βουλευσασθαι καὶ ἐγκεχειρηκότες.
- 159 XXXI. τὸν γοῦν οἰωνόμαντιν καὶ τερατοσκόπον περὶ τὰς ἀβεβαίους εἰκασίας ματαιάζοντα—καὶ γὰρ μάταιος<sup>1</sup> ἐρμηνεύεται Βαλαάμ—φησὶν ὁ νόμος τῷ ὄρωντι καταράσασθαι καίτοι διὰ τῶν λόγων εὐφήμευς ποιησάμενον εὐχάς, σκοπῶν οὐ τὰ λεχθέντα ἃ προμηθεΐα θεοῦ μετεχαράττετο οἷα δόκιμον ἀντὶ κιβδήλου νόμισμα, τὴν δὲ διάνοιαν, ἐν ἣ τὰ βλάψοντα πρὸ τῶν ὠφελησόντων<sup>2</sup> ἀνεπολεῖτο. ἔστι δὲ φύσει πολέμια ταῦτα, στοχασμὸς ἀληθείας καὶ ματαιότης ἐπιστήμη καὶ ἡ δίχα<sup>3</sup> ἐνθουσιασμοῦ μαντεία νηφούση σοφία.
- 160 καὶ ἂν ἐξ ἐνέδρας μέντοι τις ἐπιχειρήσας ἀνελεῖν τινα μὴ δυνηθῆ κτείνειν, τῇ τῶν ἀνδροφόνων οὐδὲν ἤττον ὑποχος δίκη καθέστηκεν, ὡς ὁ γραφεὶς περὶ τούτων δηλοῖ νόμος· “ἐὰν” γάρ φησι “τις ἐπιθῆται τῷ πλησίον ἀποκτείνει αὐτὸν δόλω καὶ καταφύγῃ, ἀπὸ<sup>4</sup> τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου λήψῃ αὐτὸν θανατῶσαι”· καίτοι ἐπιτίθεται μόνον, οὐκ ἀνήρηκεν, ἀλλ’ ἴσον ἠγγήσατο ἀδίκημα τῷ κτείνειν τὸ βουλευσάσαι τὸν φόνον· οὐ χάριν οὐδ’ ἰκέτη γενομένῳ δέδωκεν ἀμνηστίαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξ ἱεροῦ ἐκέλευσεν ἀπάγειν

<sup>1</sup> Mangey may be right in suggesting μάταιος <λαδς>, the interpretation of the name given in De Cher. 32.

<sup>2</sup> mss. βλάψοντα . . . ὠφελησάντων.

<sup>3</sup> So mss.: Mangey and Wend. διὰ, quite untenably, I think. The index gives no example where ἐνθουσιασμός is

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 158-160

he says, "building the city and the tower" (Gen. xi. 8), obviously not because they had finished it, but because they were prevented from completing it by the confusion that fell upon them.

Yet as the enterprise was not only planned but undertaken, they have not escaped the guilt which would attend its accomplishment. XXXI. We have 159 a parallel in Balaam, that dealer in auguries and prodigies and in the vanity of unfounded conjectures, for the name Balaam is by interpretation "vain." The law-book declares that he cursed the Man of Vision, though in words he uttered prayers of blessing, for it considers not what he actually said, words restamped under God's providence, like a true coin substituted for the false, but his heart, in which he cherished thoughts of injury rather than of benefit. There is a natural hostility between conjecture and truth, between vanity and knowledge, and between the divination which has no true inspiration and sound sober wisdom.

And indeed if a 160 man makes a treacherous attempt against another's life, but is unable to kill him, he is none the less liable to the penalty of the homicide, as is shewn by the law enacted for such cases. "If," it runs, "a man attacks his neighbour to kill him by guile and flees to refuge, thou shalt take him from the altar to put him to death" (Ex. xxi. 14). And yet he merely "attacks" him and has not killed him, but the law regards the purpose of murder as a crime equal to murder itself, and so, even though he takes sanctuary, it does not grant him the privileges of sanctuary, but bids him be taken even from the used in this depreciating sense. The δίχα ἐνθουσιασμοῦ μαντεία repeat οἰωνόμαντις.

---

4 MSS. ἐπι.

PHILO

- 161 τὸν ἀνιέρῳ γνώμη χρησάμενον. ἀνίερος δὲ οὐ ταύτῃ μόνον, ὅτι κατὰ ψυχῆς τῆς αἰεὶ ζῆν δυναμένης ἀρετῶν κτήσει τε καὶ χρήσει τὸν διὰ προσβολῆς κακίας φόνον ἐβούλευσεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅτι θεὸν τῆς ἀνοσιουργοῦ τόλμης αἰτιᾶται· τὸ γὰρ “καταφύγη” τοιοῦτον ὑποβάλλει νοῦν, διότι πολλοὶ τὰ καθ’ ἑαυτῶν ἀποδιδράσκουν ἐθέλοντες ἐγκλήματα καὶ ῥύεσθαι τῶν ἐφ’ οἷς ἠδίκησαν ἀξιούντες ἑαυτοὺς τιμωριῶν τὸ οἰκεῖον ἄγος τῷ κακοῦ μὲν μηδενὸς ἀγαθῶν δ’ ἀπάντων αἰτίῳ προσβάλλουσι θεῷ. διὸ καὶ ἀπ’ αὐτῶν βωμῶν τοὺς τοιούτους ἀπάγειν ὅσιον εἶναι ἐνομίσθη.
- 162 Δίκην δ’ ὑπερβάλλουσαν κατὰ τῶν ἐπ’ ἀθεότητι λόγους οἰκοδομουμένων καὶ συγκροτούντων ὀρίζει, ἣν ἴσως τινὲς τῶν ἀφρόνων οὐ βλάβην, ἀλλ’ ὠφέλειαν ὑποτοπήσουσιν· “οὐ γὰρ ἐκλείψει” φησὶν “ἀπ’ αὐτῶν πάντα ὅσα ἂν ἐπιθῶνται ποιεῖν.” ὡ τῆς ἀπεριγράφου καὶ ἀμέτρου κακοδαιμονίας, πάνθ’ οἷς ἂν ὁ φρενοβλαβέστατος ἐπιθῆται νοῦς, ὑποχείρια εἶναι καὶ ὑπήκοα, καὶ μηδὲν, <μὴ> μέγα μὴ μικρόν, ὑστερίζει τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ’ ὡσπερὶ
- [430] φθάνοντα προαπαντᾶν πρὸς τὰς | χρείας ἐκάστας.
- 163 XXXII. ψυχῆς ταῦτα φρονήσεως χηρευούσης ἐστὶν ἐπίδειξις μηδὲν τῶν εἰς τὸ ἀμαρτάνειν ἐχούσης ἐμποδῶν. εὐξαιτο γὰρ ἂν ὁ μὴ σφόδρα ἀνιάτως ἔχων τὰ ἐξ ὑποθέσεως τοῦ νοῦ πάντ’ ἐπιλιπεῖν αὐτῷ, ἵνα μὴ τῷ κλέπτειν ἢ μοιχεύειν ἢ ἀνδροφονεῖν ἢ ἱεροσυλεῖν ἢ τινι τῶν ὁμοιοτρόπων ἐπιτιθέμενος εὐδοῇ, μυρία δ’ εὐρίσκη τὰ κωλυ-

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 160-163

holy place, because the purpose he has harboured is unholy. Its unholiness does not merely consist in 161 this, that it plans death to be dealt by the arm of wickedness against the soul which might live for ever by the acquisition and practice of virtue, but in that it lays its abominable audacity to the charge of God. For the words "flee to refuge" lead us to the reflexion that there are many who, wishing to shirk all charges to which they are liable and claiming to escape the penalties of their misdeeds, ascribe the guilty responsibility,<sup>a</sup> which really belongs to themselves, to God who is the cause of nothing evil, but of all that is good. And therefore it was held no sacrilege to drag such as these from the very altar.

The punishment which he decrees against those 162 who "build" up and weld together arguments for godlessness is indeed extreme, though perhaps some foolish people will imagine it to be beneficial rather than injurious. "Nothing shall fail from them of all that they attempt to do," it says (Gen. xi. 6). What a misery, transcending limitation and measurement, that everything which the mind in its utter infatuation attempts should be its obedient vassal not backward in any service whether great or small, but hastening as it were to anticipate its every need. XXXII. This is a sign of a soul lacking good sense, 163 which finds no obstacle in all that lies between it and its sin. For he who is not far gone in mortal error would pray that all the promptings of his mind's purposes should fail him, so that when he attempts to commit theft or adultery, or murder or sacrilege, or any similar deed, he should not find an easy path, <sup>a</sup> ἄγος implies guilt which demands, and is felt to demand, expiation.

PHILO

- σιεργήσοντα. κωλυθείς<sup>1</sup> μὲν γὰρ τὴν μεγίστην νόσον, ἀδικίαν, ἀποβάλλει, σὺν ἀδείᾳ δ' ἐπεξεληθὼν
- 164 ταύτην ἀναδέξεται. τί οὖν ἔτι τὰς τῶν τυράννων τύχας ὡς μακαρίων<sup>2</sup> ζηλοῦτε καὶ θαυμάζετε, δι' ἃς εὐπετῶς ἕκαστα ἐπεξίασιν, ὧν ἂν ὁ ἐκλελυτ-τηκῶς κάκτεθρηιωμένος τέκη νοῦς, καὶ ἐν ἑαυτοῖς δέον ἐπιστένειν, εἴ γε ἀπορία καὶ [ἡ] ἀσθένεια κακοῖς λυσιτελές, ὡς περιουσία καὶ ἰσχύς ἀγαθοῖς
- 165 ὠφελιμώτατον; εἷς δέ τις τῶν ἀφρόνων ἠσθημένος, εἰς ὄσσην κακοδαιμονίας ὑπερβολὴν ἄγει ἢ τοῦ διαμαρτάνειν ἐκεχειρία, μετὰ παρρησίας εἶπε· “ μείζων ἢ αἰτία μου τοῦ ἀφεθῆναι.” παγχάλεπον γὰρ ἀχαλίνωτον ἐάθῃναι ψυχὴν ἀτίθασον οὖσαν ἐξ ἑαυτῆς, ἣν μόλις ἠνίαις μετ' ἐπανατάσεως
- 166 μαστίγων ἔστι κατασχόντα πρᾶναι. διόπερ λόγιον τοῦ ἔλεω θεοῦ μεστὸν ἡμερότητος ἐλπίδας χρηστὰς ὑπογράφων τοῖς παιδείας ἐρασταῖς ἀνήρηται τοιόνδε· “ οὐ μὴ σε ἀνῶ, οὐδ' οὐ μὴ σε ἐγκαταλίπω.” τῶν γὰρ τῆς ψυχῆς δεσμῶν χαλασθέντων, οἷς δι-εκρατεῖτο, ἢ μεγίστη παρέπεται συμφορὰ, καταλειφθῆναι ὑπὸ θεοῦ, ὃς τοῖς ὅλοις δεσμοῦς τὰς ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεις περιῆψεν ἀρρήκτους, αἷς τὰ πάντα
- 167 σφίγγας ἅλντα εἶναι βεβούληται. λέγει μέντοι καὶ ἐτέρωθι, ὅτι “ πάνθ' ὅσα δεσμῶ καταδέδεται, καθαρὰ ἔστιν,” ἐπειδὴ τῆς ἀκαθάρτου φθορᾶς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κώλυσις.

<sup>2</sup> So Wend.: mss. ὦ μακάριοι, and so Mangey. I do not feel sure that Wend. is right. Philo is fond of these Platonic forms of address, and ὦ μακάριοι, like ὦ θαυμάσιε, conveys a note of expostulation, which is suitable enough here.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 558.

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps “punishment,” as Philo understands the

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 163-167

but rather a host of obstacles to hinder its execution. For if he is prevented, he is rid of that supreme malady, injustice, but if he carries out his purpose in security that malady will be upon him. Why then 164 do you continue to envy and admire the fortunes of tyrants,<sup>a</sup> which enable them to achieve with ease all that the madness and brutal savagery of their minds conceive, and hold them blessed, when rather our hearts should bewail them, since poverty and bodily weakness are a positive benefit to the bad, just as abundance of means and strength are most useful to the good?

One of the foolish 165 who saw to what a pitch of misery free licence to sin leads said boldly, "That I should be let free is the greater indictment<sup>b</sup>" (Gen. iv. 13). For it is a terrible thing that the soul, so wild as it is by nature, should be suffered to go unbridled, when even under the rein and with the whip in full play it can hardly be controlled and made docile. And therefore the 166 merciful God has delivered an oracle full of loving-kindness which has a message of good hope to the lovers of discipline. It is to this purport. "I will not let thee go nor will I abandon thee" (Josh. i. 5). For when the bonds of the soul which held it fast are loosened, there follows the greatest of disasters, even to be abandoned by God who has encircled all things with the adamantine chains of His potencies and willed that thus bound tight and fast they should never be unloosed. Further in another place he says, "All 167 that are bound with a bond are clean" (Num. xix. 15), for unbinding is the cause of destruction which is word. The text has been expounded in the same sense in Quod Det. 141. E.V. "My punishment is greater than I can bear."

αἴτιον ἢ διάλυσις. μηδέποτ' οὖν ἰδὼν τινα τῶν φαύλων οἷς ἂν ἐπιθῆται πᾶσιν εὐμαρῶς ἐπεξιόντα θαυμάσης ὡς κατορθοῦντα, ἀλλὰ τούναντίον ὡς ἀποτυγχάνοντα οἰκτίζει, ὅτι ἀφορία μὲν ἀρετῆς, κακίας δὲ εὐφορία χρώμενος διατελεῖ.

168 XXXIII. Σκέψασθαι δ' οὐ παρέργως ἄξιον, τίν' ἔχει λόγον τὸ εἰρημένον ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ θεοῦ· “δεῦτε καὶ καταβάντες συγχέωμεν ἐκεῖ αὐτῶν τὴν γλῶτταν.” φαίνεται γὰρ διαλεγόμενός τιςιν ὡς ἂν συνεργοῖς αὐτοῦ, τὸ δ' αὐτὸ καὶ πρότερον ἐπὶ τῆς τάνθρώπου κατασκευῆς ἀναγράφεται.

169 “εἶπε” γάρ φησι “κύριος ὁ θεός· ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον κατ' εἰκόνα ἡμετέραν καὶ καθ' ὁμοίωσιν” τοῦ “ποιήσωμεν” πλήθος ἐμφαίνοντος· καὶ πάλιν “εἶπεν ὁ θεός· ἰδοὺ, γέγονεν Ἀδὰμ ὡς εἰς [431] ἡμῶν, τῷ γινώσκειν καλὸν καὶ πονηρόν”· | τὸ γὰρ “ὡς εἰς ἡμῶν” οὐκ ἐφ' ἐνός, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ πλειόνων

170 τίθεται. λεκτέον οὖν ἐκείνο πρῶτον, ὅτι οὐδὲν τῶν ὄντων ἰσότιμον ὑφέστηκε θεῷ, ἀλλ' ἔστιν εἰς ἄρχων καὶ ἡγεμῶν καὶ βασιλεύς, ᾧ πρυτανεύειν καὶ διοικεῖν μόνῳ θέμις τὰ σύμπαντα. τὸ γὰρ οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη, εἰς κοίρανος ἔστω, εἰς βασιλεύς

οὐκ ἐπὶ πόλεων καὶ ἀνθρώπων λέγοιτ' ἂν ἐν δίκῃ μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπὶ κόσμου καὶ θεοῦ· ἐνός γὰρ ἓνα ποιητὴν τε καὶ πατέρα πάλιν καὶ δεσπότην ἀναγ-

171 καῖον εἶναι. XXXIV. τούτου δὴ προδιομολογηθέντος ἀκόλουθον ἂν εἶη συνυφαίνειν τὰ ἀρμόζοντα. τίν' οὖν ἔστι, σκοπῶμεν· εἰς ὧν ὁ θεὸς ἀμυθήτους περὶ αὐτὸν ἔχει δυνάμεις ἀρωγοῦς * Iliad, ii. 204, 205.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 167-171

unclean. Never then, when you see any of the wicked accomplishing with ease whatsoever he attempts, admire him for his success, but contrariwise pity him for his ill-luck, for his is a life of continual barrenness in virtue and fruitfulness in vice.

XXXIII. We should give careful consideration to 168 the question of what is implied by the words which are put into the mouth of God. "Come and let us go down and confuse their tongue there" (Gen. xi. 7). For it is clear that He is conversing with some persons whom He treats as His fellow-workers, and we find the same in an earlier passage of the formation of man. Here we have "The Lord God 169 said 'let us make man in our own image and likeness'" (Gen. i. 26); where the words "let us make" imply plurality. And once more, "God said, 'behold Adam has become as one of us by knowing good and evil'" (Gen. iii. 22); here the "us" in "as one of us" is said not of one, but of more than one. Now we must 170 first lay down that no existing thing is of equal honour to God and that there is only one sovereign and ruler and king, who alone may direct and dispose of all things. For the lines :

It is not well that many lords should rule;
Be there but one, one king,<sup>a</sup> could be said with more justice of the world and of God than of cities and men. For being one it must needs have one maker and father and master.

XXXIV. Having reached agreement on 171 this preliminary question our next step will be to gather the relevant considerations into a coherent argument. Let us consider what these are. God is one, but He has around Him numberless Potencies,

PHILO

- καὶ σωτηρίους τοῦ γενομένου πάσας, αἷς ἐμφέρονται καὶ αἱ κολαστήριοι· ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἡ κόλασις οὐκ ἐπιζήμιον, ἀμαρτημάτων οὔσα κώλυσις καὶ ἐπαν-172 ὀρθωσις. διὰ τούτων τῶν δυνάμεων ὁ ἀσώματος καὶ νοητὸς ἐπάγη κόσμος, τὸ τοῦ φαινομένου τοῦδε ἀρχέτυπον, ἰδέαις ἀοράτοις συσταθείς, ὡσπερ οὗτος 173 σῶμασιν ὄρατοῖς. καταπλαγέντες οὖν τινες τὴν ἐκατέρου τῶν κόσμων φύσιν οὐ μόνον ὄλους ἐξεθείωσαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς μερῶν, ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανόν, ἅπερ οὐδὲν αἰδεσθέντες θεοὺς ἐκάλεσαν. ὧν τὴν ἀπόνοιαν<sup>1</sup> κατιδὼν Μωυσῆς φησι· “ κύριε, κύριε, βασιλεῦ τῶν θεῶν ” <εἰς> ἐνδειξιν τῆς παρ’ 174 ὑπηκόους ἄρχοντος διαφορᾶς. ἔστι δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὸν ἀέρα ψυχῶν ἀσωμάτων ἱερώτατος χορὸς ὀπαδὸς τῶν οὐρανίων· ἀγγέλους τὰς ψυχὰς ταύτας εἴωθε καλεῖν ὁ θεσπιωδὸς λόγος· πάντ’ οὖν τὸν στρατὸν ἐκάστων<sup>2</sup> ἐν ταῖς ἀρμοττούσαις δια-κεκοσμημένον τάξεσιν ὑπηρέτην καὶ θεραπευτὴν εἶναι συμβέβηκε τοῦ διακοσμήσαντος ἡγεμόνος, ᾧ ταξιαρχοῦντι κατὰ δίκην καὶ θεσμὸν ἔπεται· λιποταξίου γὰρ οὐ θέμις ἀλῶναί ποτε τὸ θεῖον 175 στρατεύμα. βασιλεῖ δὲ ταῖς ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεσιν ἐμπρεπὲς ὀμιλεῖν τε καὶ χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὰς τῶν τοιούτων πραγμάτων ὑπηρεσίας, οἷσπερ ἀρμόττει μὴ ὑπὸ μόνου πῆγνυσθαι θεοῦ. χρεῖος μὲν γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἐπίνοιαν.

<sup>2</sup> Mangey suggests ἐκατέρων, Wend. ἐκείνων. See App. p. 558.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 558.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Deut. iv. 19, which Philo probably has in mind.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 171-175

which all assist and protect created being, and among them are included the powers of chastisement. Now chastisement is not a thing of harm or mischief, but a preventive and correction of sin. Through these 172 Potencies the incorporeal and intelligible world was framed, the archetype of this phenomenal world, that being a system of invisible ideal forms, as this is of visible material bodies. Now the nature of 173 these two worlds has so struck with awe the minds of some, that they have deified not merely each of them as a whole,<sup>a</sup> but also their fairest parts, the sun, the moon and the whole sky,<sup>b</sup> and have felt no shame in calling them gods. It was the delusion of such persons that Moses saw, when he says " Lord, Lord, King of the Gods " <sup>c</sup> (Deut. x. 17), to shew the difference between the ruler and the subjects.

There is, too, in the air a sacred company of unbodied 174 souls, commonly called angels in the inspired pages, who wait upon these heavenly powers. So the whole army composed of the several contingents, each marshalled in their proper ranks, have as their business to serve and minister to the word of the Captain who thus marshalled them, and to follow His leadership as right and the law of service demand. For it must not be that God's soldiers should ever be guilty of desertion from the ranks.<sup>d</sup> Now the King may fitly 175 hold converse with his powers and employ them to serve in matters which should not be consummated by God alone. It is true indeed that the Father of οὐδενός ἐστιν ὁ τοῦ παντός πατήρ, ὡς δεῖσθαι τῆς ἀφ' ἐτέρων, εἰ ἐθέλοι δημιουργῆσαι, <συμπράξεως>,<sup>1</sup> τὸ δὲ πρόπον ὁρῶν ἑαυτῷ τε καὶ τοῖς γινομένοις ταῖς ὑπηκόοις δυνάμεσιν ἔστιν ἃ διαπλάττειν ἐφῆκεν, οὐδὲ ταύταις εἰσάπαν αὐτοκράτορα δούς τοῦ τελεσιουργεῖν ἐπιστήμην,<sup>2</sup> ἵνα μὴ τι πλημμεληθείη τῶν ἀφικνουμένων εἰς γένεσιν.

<sup>c</sup> Very inaccurately quoted for ὁ κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν, ὁδὸς θεὸς τῶν θεῶν.

<sup>d</sup> For the leading ideas of the following sections, viz. God as the cause of good alone and His employment of subordinates, see notes on De Op. 72, and De Agr. 128, with the references to Plato there given.

PHILO

- 176 XXXV. ταῦτα μὲν οὖν ἀναγκαῖον ἦν προτυπῶσαι ὧν δὲ χάριν, ἤδη λεκτέον· ἡ μὲν φύσις τῶν ζώων εἷς τε ἄλογον καὶ λογικὴν μοῖραν, ἐναντίας ἀλλή-
 [432] λαις, ἐτμήθη τὸ πρῶτον, | ἡ δ' αὖ λογικὴ πάλιν εἷς τε τὸ φθαρτὸν καὶ ἀθάνατον εἶδος, φθαρτὸν μὲν τὸ ἀνθρώπων, ἀθάνατον δὲ τὸ ψυχῶν ἀσωμάτων, αἱ κατὰ τε ἀέρα καὶ οὐρανὸν περιπολοῦσι.
- 177 κακίας δὲ ἀμέτοχοι μὲν εἰσιν αὐται, τὸν ἀκήρατον καὶ εὐδαίμονα κλῆρον ἐξ ἀρχῆς λαχοῦσαι καὶ τῷ συμφορῶν ἀνηνύτων οὐκ ἐνδεθεῖσαι χωρῖω, σώματι, ἀμέτοχοι δὲ καὶ <αἱ> τῶν ἀλόγων, παρόσον ἀμοιροῦσαι διανοίας οὐδὲ τῶν ἐκ λογισμοῦ συμβαινόντων ἐκουσίων ἀδικημάτων ἀλίσκονται.
- 178 μόνος δὲ σχεδὸν ἐκ πάντων ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἀγαθῶν καὶ κακῶν ἔχων ἐπιστήμην αἰρεῖται μὲν πολλάκις τὰ φαυλότατα, φεύγει δὲ τὰ σπουδῆς ἄξια, ὥστ' αὐτὸν<sup>3</sup> μάλιστα ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐκ προνοίας ἀμαρτήμασι
- 179 καταγινώσκεισθαι. προσηκόντως οὖν τὴν τούτου κατασκευὴν ὁ θεὸς περιῆψε καὶ τοῖς ὑπάρχουσιν αὐτοῦ λέγων· “ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον,” ἵνα αἱ μὲν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου<sup>4</sup> κατορθώσεις ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἀνα-

<sup>1</sup> The insertion is perhaps unnecessary, as ὑπηρεσίας (which Mangey suggested in preference to συμπράξεως) might possibly be understood from the previous sentence.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. suggests ἐξουσίαν, cf. § 181. If alteration is required, I should prefer ἐπιστάσιαν. Cf. De Cher. 24.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 175-179

All has no need of aught, so that He should require the co-operation of others, if He wills some creative work, yet seeing what was fitting to Himself and the world which was coming into being, He allowed His subject powers to have the fashioning of some things, though He did not give them sovereign and independent knowledge for completion of the task, lest aught of what was coming into being should be miscreated.

XXXV. This outline was 176 needed as premisses. Now for the inferences. Living nature was primarily divided into two opposite parts, the unreasoning and reasoning, this last again into the mortal and immortal species, the mortal being that of men, the immortal that of unbodied souls which range through the air and sky. These 177 are immune from wickedness because their lot from the first has been one of unmixed happiness, and they have not been imprisoned in that dwelling-place of endless calamities—the body. And this immunity is shared by unreasoning natures, because, as they have no gift of understanding, they are also not guilty of wrongdoing willed freely as a result of deliberate reflection. Man is practically the only 178 being who having knowledge of good and evil often chooses the worst, and shuns what should be the object of his efforts, and thus he stands apart as convicted of sin deliberate and aforethought.

Thus it was meet and right that when man was 179 formed, God should assign a share in the work to His lieutenants, as He does with the words “let us make men,” that so man’s right actions might be attribut-

---

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ὡς ταῦτα or ὡς ταύτη.

<sup>4</sup> So Wend. and Mangey: MSS. νοῦ, which might be defended as equivalent to the ψυχῆ λογικῆ below.

PHILO

φέρωνται μόνον, ἐπ' ἄλλους δὲ αἱ ἁμαρτίαι. θεῶ γὰρ τῷ πανηγεμόνι ἐμπρεπὲς οὐκ ἔδοξεν εἶναι τὴν ἐπὶ κακίαν ὁδὸν ἐν ψυχῇ λογικῇ δι' ἑαυτοῦ δημιουρ-γῆσαι· οὐ χάριν τοῖς μετ' αὐτὸν ἐπέτρεψε τὴν τούτου τοῦ μέρους κατασκευήν. ἔδει γὰρ καὶ τὸ ἀντίπαλον τῷ ἀκουσίῳ, τὸ ἐκούσιον, εἰς τὴν τοῦ παντὸς συμπλήρωσιν κατασκευασθὲν ἀναδειχθῆναι.

- 180 XXXVI. τοῦτο μὲν δὴ ταύτῃ λελέχθω.
 προσήκει δὲ κακίῳ λογιῶσθαι, ὅτι μόνων ἀγαθῶν ἔστιν ὁ θεὸς αἴτιος, κακοῦ δὲ οὐδενὸς τὸ παράπαν, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὸ πρεσβύτατον τῶν ὄντων καὶ τελειότατον ἀγαθὸν αὐτὸς ἦν. ἐμπρεπέστατον<sup>1</sup> δὲ τὰ οἰκεία τῇ ἑαυτοῦ φύσει δημιουργεῖν ἄριστα τῷ ἀρίστῳ,<sup>2</sup> τὰς μέντοι κατὰ πονηρῶν κολάσεις διὰ 181 τῶν ὑπ' αὐτὸν βεβαιοῦσθαι. μαρτυρεῖ δέ μου τῷ λόγῳ καὶ τὸ εἰρημένον ὑπὸ τοῦ τελειωθέντος ἐξ ἀσκήσεως τόδε· “ὁ θεὸς ὁ τρέφων με ἐκ νεότητος, ὁ ἄγγελος ὁ ρυόμενός με ἐκ πάντων τῶν κακῶν” ὁμολογεῖ γὰρ καὶ οὗτος ἤδη, ὅτι τὰ μὲν γνήσια τῶν ἀγαθῶν, ἃ φιλαρέτους τρέφει ψυχάς, ἐπὶ θεὸν ἀναφέρεται μόνον ὡς αἴτιον, ἣ δὲ τῶν κακῶν μοῖρα ἀγγέλοις ἐπιτέτραπται πάλιν, οὐδὲ ἐκείνοις ἔχουσι τὴν τοῦ κολάζειν αὐτοκράτορα ἐξουσίαν, ἵνα μηδενὸς τῶν εἰς φθορὰν τεινόντων ἢ σωτήριος 182 αὐτοῦ κατάρχη φύσις. διὸ λέγει· “δεῦτε καὶ καταβάντες συγγέωμεν.” οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἀσεβεῖς τοιαύτης ἐπάξιον δίκης τυγχάνειν, ἰλεως καὶ εὐερ-γέτιδας καὶ φιλοδώρους αὐτοῦ δυνάμεις οἰκειοῦσθαι τιμωρίαις. εἰδὼς μέντοι τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων ὠφελίμους ὑπαρχούσας δι' ἐτέρων αὐτὰς ὤρισεν·

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐμπρεπέστατα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τῶν ἀρίστων οἱ τὸν ἀριστον.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 179-182

able to God, but his sins to others. For it seemed to be unfitting to God the All-ruler that the road to wickedness within the reasonable soul should be of His making, and therefore He delegated the forming of this part to His inferiors. For the work of forming the voluntary element to balance the involuntary had to be accomplished to render the whole complete.

XXXVI. So much for this point, but 180 it is well to have considered this truth also, that God is the cause of good things only and of nothing at all that is bad, since He Himself was the most ancient of beings and the good in its most perfect form. And it best becomes Him that the work of His hands should be akin to His nature, surpassing in excellence even as He surpasses, but that the chastisement of the wicked should be assured through His underlings. My thoughts are attested also by the words 181 of him who was made perfect through practice, "the God who nourisheth me from my youth; the angel who saveth me from all evils" (Gen. xlviii. 15, 16). For he, too, hereby confesses that the truly good gifts, which nourish virtue-loving souls, are referred to God alone as their cause, but on the other hand the province of things evil has been committed to angels (though neither have they full and absolute power of punishment), that nothing which tends to destruction should have its origin in Him whose nature is to save. Therefore he says, "Come and 182 let us go down and confound them." The impious indeed deserve to have it as their punishment, that God's beneficent and merciful and bountiful powers should be brought into association with works of vengeance. Yet, though knowing that punishment was salutary for the human race, He decreed that it

PHILO

- ἔδει γὰρ τὸ μὲν ἐπανορθώσεως ἀξιοθῆναι, τὰς δὲ πηγὰς τῶν ἀενάων αὐτοῦ χαρίτων ἀμιγεῖς κακῶν [433] | οὐκ ὄντων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ νομιζομένων φυλαχθῆναι.
- 183 XXXVII. Τίς δέ ἐστιν ἡ σύγχυσις, ἐρευνητέον. πῶς οὖν ἐρευνήσομεν; οὕτως, ὡς γ' ἐμοὶ φαίνεται· πολλάκις οὖς πρότερον οὐκ ἤδειμεν, ἀπὸ τῶν συγγενῶν καὶ τινα πρὸς αὐτοὺς ἐχόντων ἐμφέρειαν ἐγνωρίσαμεν· οὐκοῦν καὶ πράγματα τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον, ἃ μὴ ῥάδιον ἐξ ἑαυτῶν καταλαμβάνεσθαι, δῆλα γένοιτ' ἂν κατὰ τὴν τῶν οἰκειῶν αὐτοῖς
- 184 ὁμοιότητα. τίνα οὖν ἐστι συγχύσει πράγματα ὅμοια; ἡ μίξις, ὥσπερ ὁ παλαιὸς λόγος, καὶ κρᾶσις· ἀλλ' ἡ μὲν μίξις ἐν ξηραῖς, ἡ δὲ κρᾶσις ἐν
- 185 ὑγραῖς οὐσίαις δοκιμάζεται. μίξις μὲν οὖν σωματικῶν διαφερόντων ἐστὶν οὐκ ἐν κόσμῳ παράθεσις, ὥσπερ ἂν εἴ τις σωρὸν ποιήσειε κριθᾶς καὶ πυροῦς καὶ ὀρόβους καὶ ἄλλ' ἅττα εἶδη τῶν σπαρτῶν εἰς ταῦτ' εἰσενεγκῶν, κρᾶσις δ' οὐ παράθεσις, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἀνομοίων μερῶν εἰς ἄλληλα εἰσδυομένων δι' ὄλων ἀντιπαρέκτασις, ἔτι δυναμένων ἐπιτεχνήσει τινὶ διακρίνεσθαι τῶν ποιότητων, ὡς ἐπὶ οἴνου καὶ
- 186 ὕδατός φασι γίνεσθαι· συνελθούσας μὲν γὰρ τὰς οὐσίας ἀποτελεῖν κρᾶσιν, τὸ δὲ κραθὲν οὐδὲν ἤττον ἀναπλοῦσθαι πάλιν εἰς τὰς ἐξ ὧν ἀπετελέσθη ποιότητος· σπόγγῳ γὰρ ἠλαιωμένῳ τὸ μὲν ὕδωρ ἀναλαμβάνεσθαι, τὸν δ' οἶνον ὑπολείπεσθαι· μήποτε

° Philo here seems to assign the work of punishment to the lower division of the ministers rather than to the Potencies, though elsewhere he treats it as belonging to the Kingly Potency indicated by the name of ὁ Κύριος, e.g. De Abr. 144, 145. Here the "angels" have the whole province of evil assigned to them, whether to save from it, as with Jacob, or to inflict it.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 182-186

should be exacted by others.<sup>a</sup> It was meet that while mankind was judged to deserve correction, the fountains of God's ever-flowing gifts of grace should be kept free not only from all that is, but from all that is deemed to be, evil.

XXXVII. We must now inquire what is meant by 183
"confusion." What should be our method? The following in my opinion. We often obtain a knowledge of persons whom we have not known before from their kinsfolk or those who bear some resemblance to them. And so in the same way things which in themselves are not easy to apprehend may reveal their nature through their likeness to their congeners. <sup>b</sup> What things then resemble confusion? 184
"Mechanical mixture," to use the old philosophical term, and "chemical mixture." The first presents itself for examination in dry substances, the latter in liquid. Mechanical mixture of different bodies 185 occurs when they are juxtaposed in no regular order, as when we collect barley and wheat and pulse or any other kind of grain and pile them together. Chemical mixture is not juxtaposition, but the mutual coextension and complete interpenetration of dissimilar parts, though their various qualities can still be distinguished by artificial means, as is said to be the case with water and wine. These substances 186 if united do produce, we are told, a chemical mixture, but all the same that mixture can be resolved <sup>c</sup> into the different qualities out of which it was composed. A sponge dipped in oil will absorb the water and leave the wine. Probably the explanation is that

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 558 on this and the following sections.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 558.

PHILO

- ἐπειδήπερ ἐξ ὕδατος ἢ σπογγίᾳς γένεσις ἐστὶ, τὸ μὲν οἰκείον, ὕδωρ, πέφυκεν ἀναλαμβάνεσθαι πρὸς αὐτῆς ἐκ τοῦ κράματος, τὸ δ' ἄλλότριον ὑπολεί-187 πεσθαι, ὁ οἶνος. σύγχυσις δέ ἐστι φθορὰ τῶν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ποιότητων πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν ἀντιπαρεκτεινομένων εἰς διαφερούσης μιᾶς<sup>1</sup> γένεσιν, ὡς ἐπὶ τῆς ἐν ἰατρικῇ τετραφαρμάκου συντέτευχε· κηρὸς γὰρ καὶ στέαρ καὶ πίττα ῥητίνη τε, οἶμαι, συνελθόντα ταύτην ἀποτελεῖ, συντεθείσης δὲ ἀμήχανον ἔτι<sup>2</sup> τὰς ἐξ ὧν συνετέθη διακριθῆναι δυνάμεις, ἀλλ' ἐκάστη μὲν αὐτῶν ἠφάνισται, πασῶν δ' ἡ φθορὰ μίαν ἐξαίρετον ἄλλην ἐγέννησε δύναμιν.
 188 ὅταν δ' ἀπειλῇ σύγχυσιν τοῖς ἀσεβέσι λογισμοῖς ὁ θεός, οὐ μόνον ἐκάστης κακίας τό τε εἶδος καὶ τὴν δύναμιν ἀφανισθῆναι κελεύει, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ συνεραμισθὲν ἐξ αὐτῶν, ἵνα μήτε τὰ μέρη καθ' ἑαυτὰ μήθ' ἢ πάντων σύνοδος τε καὶ συμφωνία περι-βάληται τινα ἰσχὺν ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τῆς ἀμείνονος 189 μοίρας. οὐδ' χάριν φησί· “ συγχέωμεν ἐκεῖ αὐτῶν τὴν γλῶτταν, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσωσιν ἕκαστος τὴν φωνὴν τοῦ πλησίον,” ὅπερ ἴσον ἐστὶ τούτῳ· κωφὸν ἕκαστον ἐργασώμεθα τῶν κακίας μερῶν, ὡς μήτε ἰδίαν ἀφιέν<sup>3</sup> <φωνήν> μήτε συνηχοῦν ἐτέρῳ βλάβης 190 αἴτιον γίνηται. XXXVIII. ταῦτα μὲν ἡμεῖς, οἱ δὲ τοῖς ἐμφανέσι καὶ προχείροις μόνον
 [434] ἐπακολουθοῦντες οἴονται νυνὶ γένεσιν | διαλέκτων Ἑλληνικῶν τε καὶ βαρβάρων ὑπογράφεσθαι· οὗς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μίαν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπὶ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀφιέναι.

* See App. p. 558.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. “another single special power.” This use of δύναμις which suggests both “nature” and “value” cannot be translated by any single or at least any singular word.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 186-190

since the sponge is produced out of water, it tends to absorb out of the mixture the substance which is akin to it, the water, and leave the foreign substance, the wine. But confusion is the annihilation<sup>a</sup> of the original varieties or qualities, which become coextensive through all the parts and thus produce a single and quite different quality. An example of this is the quadruple drug used in medicine. This is produced, I believe, by the combination of wax, tallow, pitch and resin, but, when the compound has been formed, it is impossible to analyse or separate the properties which went to form it. Each of them has been annihilated, and from this loss of identity in each has sprung another single something with properties peculiar to itself.<sup>b</sup> But when God threatens impious thoughts with confusion He does not order merely the annihilation of the specific nature and properties of each separate vice. The order applies also to the aggregate to which they have contributed. He means that neither their separate parts, nor yet their united body and voice, shall be invested with strength to destroy the better element. And therefore he says, "Let us confound their tongue there, that each of them may not understand the voice of his neighbour" (Gen. xi. 7), and this is equivalent to "let us make each part of vice mute that it may not by its separate utterance nor yet in unison with the others be the cause of mischief."

XXXVIII. This is our explanation, but those who merely follow the outward and obvious think that we have at this point a reference to the origin of the Greek and barbarian languages. I

For this use of ἐξάλπετος cf. De Op. 62, where the senses have each their ἐξάλπετος ὕλη.

PHILO

- οὐκ ἂν αἰτιασάμενος—ἴσως γὰρ ἀληθεῖ καὶ αὐτοὶ χρῶνται λόγῳ—παρακαλέσαιμ' ἂν μὴ ἐπὶ τούτων στήναι, μετελθεῖν δὲ ἐπὶ τὰς τροπικὰς ἀποδόσεις, νομίσαντας τὰ μὲν ῥητὰ τῶν χρησμῶν σκιάς τινας ὡσανεὶ σωμάτων εἶναι, τὰς δ' ἐμφαινομένας δυνά-191 μεις τὰ ὑφ' ἐστῶτα ἀληθεῖα πράγματα. δίδωσι μέντοι πρὸς τοῦτ' ἀφορμὰς τὸ εἶδος τοῖς μὴ τυφλοῖς διάνοιαν ὁ νομοθέτης αὐτός, ὡσπερ ἀμέλει καὶ ἐφ' ὧν νῦν ἐστὶν ὁ λόγος· τὸ γὰρ γινόμενον σύγχυσι προσεῖπε. καίτοι γε εἰ διαλέκτων γένε-σιν αὐτὸ μόνον ἐδήλου, κἂν ὄνομα εὐθυβολώτερον ἐπεφήμισεν ἀντὶ συγχύσεως διάκρισιν· οὐ γὰρ συγχέεται τὰ τεμνόμενα, διακρίνεται δ' ἔμπαλιν, καὶ ἔστιν οὐ μόνον ἐναντίον ὄνομα ὀνόματι, ἀλλ' 192 ἔργον ἔργῳ. σύγχυσις μὲν γάρ, ὡς ἔφην, ἐστὶ φθορὰ τῶν ἀπλῶν δυνάμεων εἰς συμπεφορημένης μιᾶς γένεσιν, διάκρισις δὲ ἐνὸς εἰς πλείω τομῆ, καθάπερ ἐπὶ γένους καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὸ εἰδῶν ἔχει συντέτευχεν. ὥστε εἰ μίαν οὖσαν φωνὴν ἐκέλευσε τέμνειν ὁ σοφὸς εἰς πλειόνων διαλέκτων τμήματα, προσεχεστέροις ἂν καὶ κυριωτέροις ἐχρήσατο τοῖς ὀνόμασι, τομὴν ἢ διανέμησιν ἢ διάκρισιν ἢ τι ὁμοιότροπον εἰπῶν, οὐ τὸ μαχόμενον αὐτοῖς, 193 σύγχυσιν. ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἢ σπουδῆ διαλυσαὶ τὸ κακίας στίφος, τὰς ὁμολογίας αὐτῆς ἀκυρῶσαι, τὴν κοινωνίαν ἀνελεῖν, τὰς δυνάμεις ἀφανίσαι καὶ διαφθεῖραι, τὸ τῆς ἀρχῆς κράτος, ὃ δειναῖς ὠχυρώσατο παρα-

<sup>a</sup> Or more literally "the destruction of the simple uncompounded natures, to produce a single compounded nature."

<sup>b</sup> i.e. Moses, not God. Philo often calls God ὁ μόνος σοφός, but not ὁ σοφός. The command is thought of as emanating from Moses, because the language in which it is clothed is his.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 190-193

would not censure such persons, for perhaps the truth is with them also. Still I would exhort them not to halt there, but to press on to allegorical interpretations and to recognize that the letter is to the oracle but as the shadow to the substance and that the higher values therein revealed are what really and truly exist. Indeed the lawgiver himself gives 191 openings for this kind of treatment to those whose understanding is not blinded, as he certainly does in the case now under discussion, when he calls what was then taking place a "confusion."

Surely if he had merely meant that different languages then originated, he would have applied a more correct term and called it "separation" rather than "confusion." For when things are divided they are not "confused," but quite the contrary, "separated." And the contradiction is not merely one of name but of fact. Confusion—the process of fusing 192 together—is, as I have said, the annihilation of the individual properties, and the production thereby of a single whole with its own properties,<sup>a</sup> whereas separation is the division of one into several, as in the case of genus and the species, which form the genus. And therefore if the Sage's <sup>b</sup> command was to divide speech, the single whole, by section into several languages, he would have used more apposite and exact terms such as dissection or distribution or separation, and not their opposite, confusion. But 193 his purpose and desire is to break up the company of vice, to make her agreements of none effect, to do away with her fellowship, to annihilate and destroy her powers, to overthrow the might of her queenship which by her abominable transgressions she had

PHILO

- 194 νομίαις, καθελείν. οὐχ ὀράς ὅτι καὶ τῶν ψυχῆς ὁ πλάστης μερῶν οὐδέν οὐδενὶ εἰς τὴν τοῦ ἑτέρου κοινωνίαν ἤγαγεν; ἀλλ' ὀφθαλμοὶ μὲν οὐκ ἂν ἀκούσειαν, ὦτα δὲ οὐκ ἂν θεάσαιτο, χυλὸς δὲ ἐνστόμιος<sup>1</sup> οὐκ ἂν ὄσφροίτο, οὐδ' ἂν γεύσαιτο ῥίνες, ὃ τ' αὖ λόγος οὐδὲν ἂν τῶν κατὰ τὰς αἰσθήσεις πάθοι, οὐδ' ἔμπαλιν ῥῆξαι φωνὴν δύναται' ἂν
- 195 αἰσθησις. ἔγνω γὰρ ὁ τεχνίτης, ὅτι τὸ μὴ ἀκούειν ἕκαστον τούτων τῆς τοῦ πλησίον φωνῆς λυσιτελές ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν τῆς ψυχῆς μέρη ταῖς οἰκείαις δυνάμεσιν ἀσυγχύτοις χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν ζώων ὠφέλειαν καὶ τὴν πρὸς ἄλληλα κοινωνίαν ἀφῆρησθαι,<sup>2</sup> τὰ δὲ τῆς κακίας εἰς <σύγ>χυσιν καὶ φθορὰν ἀχθῆναι παντελῆ, ἵνα μήτε συμφωνήσαντα μήτε καθ' ἑαυτὰ ὄντα ζημία τοῖς ἀμείνοσι γένηται.
- 196 Παρὸ καὶ λέγει· “διέσπειρεν αὐτοὺς κύριος ἐκεῖθεν,” ἐν ἴσῳ τῷ ἐσκέδασεν, ἐφυγάδευσεν, ἀφανεῖς ἐποίησε· τὸ γὰρ σπείρειν <ἀγαθῶν, κακῶν δὲ αἴτιον τὸ διασπείρειν>, ὅτι τὸ μὲν ἐπιδόσεως καὶ αὐξήσεως καὶ γενέσεως ἑτέρων ἔνεκα συμβαίνει, τὸ δ' ἀπωλείας καὶ φθορᾶς. βούλεται δὲ ὁ
- [435] φυτουργὸς θεὸς σπείρειν μὲν ἐν τῷ παντὶ | καλοκάγαθίαν, διασπείρειν δὲ καὶ ἐλαύνειν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου πολιτείας τὴν ἐπάρατον ἀσέβειαν, ἢ ἤδη ποτὲ παύσωνται τὴν κακίας πόλιν καὶ τὸν ἀθεότητος πύργον οἰκοδομοῦντες μισάρετοι τρόποι.
- 197 τούτων γὰρ σκεδασθέντων οἱ πάλαι πεφευγότες τὴν τυραννίδα τῆς ἀφροσύνης ἐνὶ κηρύγματι κάθοδον

<sup>1</sup> So Wend.; cf. De Ebr. 190: mss. ἐνστοματίας or ἐν στόματι. The latter does not seem impossible.

<sup>2</sup> mss. καὶ εἰ . . . ἀφήρηται.

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 194-197

made so strong. Observe that he who 194 fashioned the living being, brought none of its parts into fellowship with any other. The eyes cannot hear, nor the ears see ; the palatal juices cannot smell, nor the nostrils taste ; nor again can speech have any of the sensations which the senses produce, just as on the other hand the senses have no power of utterance. For the great Contriver knew that it 195 was well for them that none should hear the voice of his neighbour. He willed rather in the interests of animal life, that each part of the living organism should have the use of its own particular powers without confusion with others, and that fellowship of part with part should be withdrawn from them, while on the other hand the parts of vice should be brought into confusion and complete annihilation, so that neither in unison nor separately by themselves should they become a source of injury to their betters.

That is why he adds—The Lord dispersed them 196 thence (Gen. xi. 8), that is He caused them to be scattered, to be fugitives, to vanish from sight. For while sowing is the cause of good, dispersing or sowing broadcast is the cause of ill. The purpose of the first is to improve, to increase, to create something else ; the purpose of the second is to ruin and destroy. But God the Master-planter wills to sow noble living throughout the All, and to disperse and banish from the Commonwealth of the world the impiety which He holds accursed. Thus the evil ways which hate virtue may at last cease to build the city of vice and the tower of godlessness. For 197 when these are scattered, those who have been living in exile for many a day under the ban of folly's tyranny, shall receive their recall under a single

PHILO

εὐρήσουσι, γράψαντός τε καὶ βεβαιώσαντος <θεοῦ> τὸ κήρυγμα, ὡς δηλοῦσιν οἱ χρησμοί, ἐν οἷς διείρηται ὅτι “ ἐὰν ἦ ἡ διασπορά σου ἀπ’ ἄκρου τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἕως ἄκρου τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ἐκεῖθεν 198 συνάξει σε ”. ὥστε τὴν μὲν ἀρετῶν συμφωνίαν ἐμπρεπὲς ἀρμόζεσθαι θεῷ, τὴν δὲ κακιῶν<sup>1</sup> διαλύειν τε καὶ φθείρειν. οἰκειότατον δὲ κακίας ὄνομα σύγχυσις· οὗ πίστις ἐναργῆς πᾶς ἄφρων, λόγοις καὶ βουλαῖς καὶ πράξεσιν ἀδοκίμοις καὶ πεφορημέναις χρώμενος.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κακίαν.

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the two ideas which have been connected with σύγχυσις are φθορά and διασπορά. The first of these is here

THE CONFUSION OF TONGUES, 197-198

proclamation, even the proclamation enacted and ratified by God, as the oracles shew, in which it is declared that "if thy dispersion be from one end of heaven to the other he shall gather thee from thence" (Deut. xxx. 4). Thus it is a work well-befitting to 198 God to bring into full harmony the consonance of the virtues, but to dissipate and destroy the consonance of vices. Yes, confusion is indeed a most proper name for vice, and a standing evidence of this is every fool, whose words and purposes and deeds alike are worthless and unstable.<sup>a</sup> expressed by ἀδόκιμος which often means something not merely worthless but cast away as such. The second is expressed by πεφορημένος. But see App. p. 559.

ON THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM

(DE MIGRATIONE ABRAHAMI)

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THE subject of this treatise is Gen. xii. 1-4 and 6. This naturally falls into two divisions, of which the first contains the words of God to Abraham. This again is analysed as follows :

- I. (a) The command to depart from country, kindred and father's house.
- (b) To the land which I will shew thee (this constitutes the first promise or gift to Abraham).
- (c) And I will make thee a great nation (Second Gift).
- (d) And I will bless thee (Third Gift).
- (e) And I will magnify thy name (Fourth Gift).
- (f) And thou shalt be blessed (Fifth Gift).
- (g) I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee.

And in thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed (the gifts to others through Abraham.)

In the second part we deal successively with the statements.

- (a) He went as God spake to him.
- (b) And Lot went with him.
- (c) And Abraham was seventy-five years old, when he went forth out of Haran.
- (d) And Abraham travelled through the land to the length of it, to the place Shechem to the high oak.

PHILO

“Land” means spiritually body, “kinsfolk,” senses (2-4), while “father’s house” is speech, and this last is illustrated by the way in which the Logos itself is spoken of as God’s house (4-6). Thus the command is to alienate ourselves from these and so to “depart” to higher realities (7-12). Biblical examples of this departing follow: Abraham from Lot, the Exodus of Israel from Egypt (13-15), and in connexion with this Philo propounds the idea that when we read of Joseph’s body being placed in a coffin in Egypt, and later of his bones being taken to Canaan at the Exodus, we have an allegory of the spiritual burial of the lower qualities, and the survival of the higher qualities of the mixed or Joseph mind (16-17). An enumeration of these higher qualities as shewn in the story of Joseph follows (18-23), and from this we pass back to the theme of “departure,” as shewn in the order of Moses to make the Passover “with speed” (24-25), and (with a difference <sup>a</sup>) in the injunction in Gen. xxxi. 3 to Jacob to turn back to his father’s land, which must be understood in the sense of wisdom (26-30). The last words of that passage, “I will be with thee,” lead to a meditation on how independent of our efforts is the Divine presence and inspiration, which Philo illustrates from his own experience in literary composition (31-35), whence we pass almost insensibly to the consideration of the words of the First Gift, “The land which I will shew thee.” After some thoughts about the “thing shewn,” i.e. the perfect good, “the person who sees,” i.e. the wise man, and the “Shewer,” i.e. God (36-42),

<sup>a</sup> For the difference see note on § 26.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM

Philo points out that the shewing is in the future, thus calling for Abraham's faith. He illustrates it further from the words of Deut. xxxiv. 4, "I shewed it to thine eyes but thou shalt not possess it," and this points to the thought that possession of the perfect good is more than seeing it (43-46). And yet seeing is higher than hearing, and thus God's words are said in certain places to be seen rather than heard, a noteworthy usage when we remember that hearing in the ordinary sense is even less than the other senses capable of being associated with sight (47-52).

We pass on to the Second Gift. "I will make thee a great nation." Here nation can be taken to mean "multitude of qualities." "Great" shews something more, namely that the qualities grow to their full stature (53-55). A great nation is elsewhere defined as one which draws nigh to God (56-59). Indeed, mere quantity or multitude is often spoken of as an evil thing, which is vanquished by the little and good (59-63). The many-footed is called an abomination in Leviticus. This reminds us that the footless which crawls on its belly, is equally an abomination (64-65). And thence he digresses for the moment to suggest that the breast stands for the spirited element, as the belly stands for desire, and it is when both these are excised as in the sacrificial directions of Lev. viii., and reason is left supreme, that we get both multitude and greatness (65-68). From another point of view the many-footed and the footless are respectively the polytheist and the atheist (69).

The Third Gift is "I will bless thee" (εὐλογήσω). Looking at the composition of the word, Philo takes this to mean "I will give thee excellent Logos." Now Logos is both thought and speech, and this last leads him to the idea that mastery of language is needed by the sage and that otherwise he will be unable to hold his own against the sophist (70-75). This is illustrated first from the case of Cain and Abel and then from that of Moses, and there follows a commentary on Exodus iv. 10-16 in which "Aaron thy brother" is shewn to represent the speech or eloquence which rejoices when it finds clear conceptions to express (76-81). It is this use of language in the service of truth which is shewn by the story of Moses with Aaron's rod outdoing the Egyptian magicians (82-85).<sup>a</sup>

PHILO

The Fourth Gift is "I will magnify thy name." Here "name" is interpreted as equivalent to what we seem. The seeming indeed is worthless without the being, but true happiness consists in both (86-88). The need of obedience to established custom is a necessary consequence, and here Philo takes the opportunity to define his attitude to the literal Law, Sabbath, Circumcision, Feast-days. Though these have their soul, namely the spiritual interpretation, they have also their body, and the body is the house of the soul, and must not be set at nought (89-94). The same lesson is taught by the "lesser substance" bequeathed by Abraham to the children of the concubines who, though of less account, were still children (94). So too Leah accounted herself blessed, because women will count her such, and by women are meant those comparatively earth-bound souls whose esteem is nevertheless valuable (95-96). This leads to an illustration from the work entrusted by Moses to the women—the senses, that is—but the senses also must have their due if happiness is to be had (97-100). This thought is further developed from Isaac's prayer that Jacob may have the wealth of earth as well as of heaven, and from Aaron's robe on which the sensible world is figured by the bells whose sound was to be audible when he entered the Holy Place (101-104). So the sensible must second the music of the mental in the great Choir, and the three-fold phrase of Ex. xxi., the "needful," the "raiment," and the "fellowship," means that the sensible and the mental must be so blended that we shall find in the first the sacrament of the second (104-105).

<sup>a</sup> Much of this part reproduces parts of Quod Det.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM

Yet in the three next sections Philo swings round to the other point of view. The Fifth Gift is "Thou shalt be blessed." Here he reads εὐλογητός (meet to be blessed), for the εὐλογημένος (subject to blessing) of our texts, and thence deduces, in spite of all that has been said, that true blessedness is to him who is worthy of it rather than to him who is so reputed by men (106-108).

In the next words, "I will bless them who bless thee, and curse them who curse thee," we go on to shew what the Abraham mind can do for others. It stands to reason that to praise the praiseworthy is in itself a praiseworthy act, if done in sincerity. But this is an important exception, and thus the blessing of Israel by Balaam, splendid as it is, only brought on him God's curse (109-115). Conversely, curses which are meant to benefit, such as the rebukes of those who have charge of the young, bring blessings on those who speak them. All depends on the intention (115-117).

The next words "And in thee shall all the tribes of the earth be blessed" shew that the blessing conferred by the Abraham spirit is not to be limited to those who know its value. In one sense indeed the words may be applied to the individual himself. The perfect mind will sanctify all its tribes, that is, all its faculties (118-119). But in the wider sense the righteous man both by his influence and prayers is a pillar of society. We see this in God's words to Moses (I will be merciful to them for thy word); in the willingness to spare Sodom, if only a few righteous could be found there; most of all in the story of Noah, who victorious over the deluge of moral decay, founded the line of Israel, which, though obscured at times, will be brought to the light again, when that season comes of which God spoke to Sarah (120-126).

PHILO

The second part of the treatise begins with the words: "And Abraham went as the Lord spake." Philo interprets this to mean that his way of going was in accordance with God's word, i.e. his life was in accordance with God's laws (127-132). And he proceeds to ask what the "end" and the "reward" of such "going" is. The true end and reward is to be able to recognize that the only thing we can know is our own ignorance (133-135). This leads to a denunciation of speculation about the universe instead of self-examination (136-138). A rambling discussion of some texts follows (139-142).<sup>a</sup> And then in contrast to the "going" of Abraham, we have the weaklings who lag behind and are "cut off" as the "weary" part of Israel was by Amalek (143-144), though indeed there is a better kind of weariness which is typified by Leah (144-145). The treatment of this part concludes with the thought which has been fully developed in Quod Deus, that the true path of the soul is, as Aristotle taught, along the Mean (146-147).

<sup>a</sup> For such thread of thought as there is see note.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM

“Lot went with him.” As Lot means “turning away,” we see that this was a companionship not to imitate but to hinder, and this is proved by his later disaster and Abraham’s separation from him (148-150). That this separation did not take place at once shews that the Abraham soul has still much to learn. The hindrance which is caused by such conflicting companionship is symbolized by the “mixed multitude,” which went up from Egypt and caused Israel to wander for forty years (150-155). (Incidentally we hear of this multitude weeping and this leads to a short digression on good and bad tears (155-157).) While some refuse all intercourse with this mixed multitude others make alliance with it, as Joseph, ever the man of compromise, did when he was accompanied by the Egyptians to his father’s funeral (158-163). Some illustrations of good fellow-travelling (συμπορεύεσθαι) are now given. Abraham’s comrades in war; Isaac going with Abraham to the sacrifice, signifying the union of natural gifts with effort (164-167).<sup>a</sup> And while it is natural that higher minds should be drawn up to God, as Aaron and his fellow priests were, Moses will cry “Unless thou journey with me (συμπορεύη) bring me not up hence,” for God must be our fellow-traveller (168-172). Abraham, too, “journeyed with the angels.” For though in the imperfect state the Logos leads us, the perfected will walk at his side (173-175).

“Abraham was seventy-five years old when he went forth out of Haran.” What do these words mean? We remember that originally he went from <sup>a</sup> See further note on § 167.

PHILO

Chaldea to Haran. Now Chaldea is astrology, which conceives of the universe as a whole where all the parts work in harmony with each other (176-179). So far Moses agrees with it : it is when the astrologers ignore God and His creative goodness that he disagrees (180-183). And when he shews Abraham as leaving Chaldea for Haran, that is, for the place of the senses, which is also the house of the mind, he is bidding us discard astrological speculations for the Socratic study of ourselves (184-189). And when we have done this we may leave Haran also, to contemplate God Himself, just as Saul had to be taken from the " baggage " before he could grasp the kingship (189-197).

" Seventy-five years old." Seventy is the number of the higher mind and reason (198-202), five of the senses (203-206), and both these are proved by many texts (203-206). The combination indicates an intermediate and necessary stage in the soul's progress (207). And so Rebecca bids Jacob even in his hour of triumph fly to Haran, for compromise with the senses is often necessary for a time (208-213). Yet Jacob also will ultimately leave Haran and " make a house for himself," that is, " the fear of God " which won, according to Ex. i. 21 " " their houses ' for the midwives " (214-215).

" He travelled through the land to the length of it to the place Shechem, to the high oak." " Travelled through " shews us the course of the soul in its search for wisdom, a search which must cover the whole land i.e. whole of ethical philosophy (216-220). In Shechem, which means " shouldering," and in the oak, we find a symbol of the solid labour which such travelling entails (221-223). But we remember that in Genesis

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM

we have a man Shechem, who represents evil labour, the seducer of Dinah. Or rather, the would-be seducer. For to Philo's mind the spiritual Dinah being Virtue can never be corrupted, and the treatise ends with the thought that the vengeance of her brothers and defenders will overtake the seducer with his purpose unattained (224-end).

- 1 I. “Καὶ εἶπε κύριος τῷ Ἀβραάμ· ἄπελθε ἐκ τῆς γῆς σου καὶ ἐκ τῆς συγγενείας σου καὶ ἐκ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ πατρός σου εἰς τὴν γῆν, ἣν σοι δεῖξω· καὶ ποιήσω σε εἰς ἔθνος μέγα καὶ εὐλογήσω σε καὶ μεγαλυνῶ τὸ ὄνομά σου, καὶ ἔσῃ εὐλογητός. καὶ εὐλογήσω τοὺς εὐλογοῦντάς σε, καὶ τοὺς καταρωμένους σε καταράσομαι, καὶ ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν σοὶ
- 2 πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς.” βουλευθεὶς ὁ θεὸς τὴν ἀνθρώπου ψυχὴν καθῆραι πρῶτον αὐτῇ δίδωσιν ἀφορμὴν εἰς σωτηρίαν παντελῆ τὴν ἐκ τριῶν χωρίων μετανάστασιν, σώματος, αἰσθήσεως, λόγου τοῦ κατὰ προφορὰν· τὴν μὲν γὰρ γῆν σώματος, τὴν δὲ συγγένειαν αἰσθήσεως, τὸν δὲ τοῦ πατρὸς οἶκον λόγου συμβέβηκεν εἶναι σύμβολον.
- 3 διὰ τί; ὅτι τὸ μὲν σῶμα καὶ ἐκ γῆς ἔλαβε τὴν σύστασιν καὶ ἀναλύεται πάλιν εἰς γῆν—μάρτυς δὲ Μωυσῆς, ὅταν φῆ· “γῆ εἶ, καὶ εἰς γῆν ἀπελεύση.” καὶ γὰρ παγῆναί φησιν αὐτὸ χοῦν εἰς ἀνθρωπιάν μορφήν τοῦ θεοῦ διαπλάσαντος, ἀνάγκη δὲ τὸ λυόμενον εἰς τὰ δεθέντα λύεσθαι—, αἰσθησις δὲ συγγενὲς καὶ ἀδελφόν ἐστι διανοίας, ἄλογον λογικῆς, ἐπειδὴ μιᾶς ἄμφω μέρη ψυχῆς ταῦτα, πατρὸς δὲ
- [437] οἶκος ὁ | λόγος, ὅτι πατὴρ μὲν ἡμῶν ὁ νοῦς σπείρων

ON THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM

I. " And the Lord said unto Abraham, Depart out 1 of thy land, and out of thy kindred, and out of thy father's house, into the land which I shall shew thee ;
and I will make thee a great nation and will bless thee and will make thy name great, and thou shalt be blessed. And I will bless them that bless thee, and them that curse thee I will curse, and in thee shall all the tribes of the earth be blessed " (Gen. xii. 1-3).

God begins the carrying out of His will 2 to cleanse man's soul by giving it a starting-point for full salvation in its removal out of three localities, namely, body, sense-perception, and speech. " Land" or " country " is a symbol of body, " kindred " of sense-perception, " father's house " of speech. How so? Because the body took its substance out of 3 earth (or land) and is again resolved into earth. Moses is a witness to this, when he says, " Earth thou art and into earth shalt thou return " (Gen. iii. 19) ; indeed he also says that the body was clay formed into human shape by God's moulding hand, and what suffers solution must needs be resolved into the elements which were united to form it. Sense-perception, again, is of one kin and family with understanding, the irrational with the rational, for both these are parts of one soul. And speech is our " father's house," " father's " because Mind is our

PHILO

εἰς ἕκαστον τῶν μερῶν τὰς ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεις καὶ διανεμῶν εἰς αὐτὰ τὰς ἐνεργείας ἐπιμέλειάν τε καὶ ἐπιτροπήν ἀνημμένους ἀπάντων, οἶκος δέ, ἐν ᾧ διαιτᾶται, τῆς ἄλλης<sup>1</sup> ὑπεξηρημένος οἰκίας ὁ λόγος· καθάπερ γὰρ ἀνδρὸς ἐστία, καὶ νοῦ λόγος 4 ἐνδιαίτημα. ἑαυτὸν γοῦν καὶ ὅσα ἂν ἐνθυμήματα τέκη, ὡσπερ ἐν οἴκῳ τῷ λόγῳ διαθεῖς καὶ διακοσμῆσας ἐπιδείκνυται. μὴ θαυμάσης δέ, εἰ νοῦ τὸν λόγον ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ κέκληκεν οἶκον· καὶ γὰρ τὸν τῶν ὄλων νοῦν, τὸν θεόν, οἶκον ἔχειν 5 φησὶ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ λόγον. οὐ τὴν φαντασίαν ὁ ἀσκητῆς λαβὼν ἀντικρυς ὁμολογεῖ ὅτι “ οὐκ ἔστι τοῦτο ἄλλ' ἢ οἶκος θεοῦ,” ἴσον τῷ ὁ τοῦ θεοῦ οἶκος οὐκ ἔστι τοῦτο τῶν εἰς δεῖξιν ἐρχομένων ἢ συνόλως πιπτόντων ὑπ' αἴσθησιν, οὐκ ἔστιν, ἀλλ' ἀόρατος, ἀειδής, ψυχῇ μόνον ὡς ψυχῇ καταλαμβανόμενος.
 6 τίς ἂν οὖν εἴη πλὴν ὁ λόγος ὁ πρεσβύτερος τῶν γέ εἰσι εἰληφότων, οὐ καθάπερ οἶκος ἐνελημ-μένος ὁ τῶν ὄλων κυβερνήτης πηδαλιουχεῖ τὰ σύμπαντα, καὶ ὅτε ἐκοσμοπλάσσει χρησάμενος ὀργάνῳ τούτῳ πρὸς τὴν ἀνυπαίτιον τῶν ἀποτελουμένων σύστασιν ;

<sup>1</sup> mss. ὄλης, which perhaps might be retained in the sense of the “homestead as a whole.”

<sup>a</sup> Or “chamber,” cf. Il. vi. 490 and elsewhere, where oikos is clearly the inner part of the house. For the thought that while mind has a wider range, its most intimate home is speech, cf. the explanation of τὸν ἐγγιστα as speech in De Ebr. 71.

<sup>b</sup> Or “this is not the House of God, only (yet) there is a House of God.” Mr. Whitaker defended his translation by suggesting that Philo is following the occasional use of ἀλλ' ἢ in the LXX for “certainly,” e.g. 2 Chron. xix. 3. But the explanation which follows seems to me to point to the alternative translation given above, and in this case the use

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 3-6

father, sowing in each of the parts of the body the faculties that issue from itself, and assigning to them their workings, being in control and charge of them all; house—because mind has speech for its house<sup>a</sup> or living-room, secluded from the rest of the homestead. It is Mind's living-place, just as the hearth-side is man's. It is there that Mind displays in 4 orderly form itself and all the conceptions to which it gives birth, treating it as a man treats a house.

And marvel not at Moses having given to speech the title of Mind's house in man; for indeed he says that God, the Mind of the universe, has for His house His own Word. It was the vision of 5 this Word that the Self-trainer received when he emphatically declares "This is assuredly not the House of God"<sup>b</sup> (Gen. xxviii. 17), as much as to say "The House of God is not this that is all round me, consisting of things at which we can point or that fall under sense-perception generally, no, not such is God's House, but invisible, withdrawn from sight, and apprehended only by soul as soul.<sup>c</sup> Who, then, can 6 that House be, save the Word who is antecedent to all that has come into existence? the Word, which the Helmsman of the Universe grasps as a rudder to guide all things on their course? Even as, when He was fashioning the world, He employed it as His instrument, that the fabric of His handiwork might be without reproach.

of ἀλλ' ἤ would be something like that in Deut. iv. 12 (quoted in 48). In De Som. i. 185 we have another way of taking the verse.

<sup>c</sup> Or "soul in the true sense of the word." Philo means that he is not using the word in the wider sense of the whole soul or life of the animal, but for the mind or dominant principal. See App. p. 560.

PHILO

7 Π. Ὡς μὲν τοίνυν γῆν μὲν τὸ σῶμα, συγγένειαν δὲ τὴν αἴσθησιν, οἶκον δὲ πατὴρ τὸν λόγον αἰνίττεται, δεδηλώκαμεν. τὸ δὲ “ ἄπελθε ἐκ τούτων ” οὐκ ἔσθ’<sup>1</sup> ὅμοιον τῷ διαζεύχθητι κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν, ἐπεὶ θάνατον ἦν διαγορεύοντος ἢ πρόσταξις, ἀλλ’ ἴσον τῷ τὴν γνώμην ἀλλοτριώθητι, πρὸς μηδενὸς 8 περισχεθεὶς αὐτῶν ὑπεράνω στῆθι πάντων· ὑπήκοοί σοῦ εἰσι, μηδέποτε ὡς ἡγεμόσι χρῶ· βασιλεὺς ὢν ἄρχειν ἀλλὰ μὴ ἄρχεσθαι πεπαιδευσο, πάντα τὸν αἰῶνα γίνωσκε σεαυτὸν, ὡς καὶ Μωυσῆς πολλαχοῦ διδάσκει λέγων “ πρόσεχε σεαυτῷ ”· οὕτως γὰρ ὢν τε ὑπακούειν καὶ οἷς ἐπιτάττειν 9 προσῆκεν αἰσθήσῃ. ἄπελθε οὖν ἐκ τοῦ περὶ σεαυτὸν γεώδους, τὸ παμμίαιρον, ᾧ οὗτος, ἐκφυγῶν δεσμωτήριον, τὸ σῶμα, καὶ τὰς ὥσπερ εἶρκτοφύλακας ἡδονὰς καὶ ἐπιθυμίας αὐτοῦ παντὶ σθένει καὶ πάσῃ δυνάμει, μηδὲν τῶν εἰς κάκωσιν παρεῖς, ἀλλὰ πάντα ἀθρόα συλλήβδην ἐπανατεινά-10 μενος. ἄπελθε καὶ τῆς συγγενοῦς αἰσθήσεως· νυνὶ μὲν γὰρ κέχρηκας ἐκάστη σεαυτὸν καὶ γέγονας ἀλλότριον τῶν δεδανεισμένων ἀγαθὸν ἀποβεβληκῶς τὸ ἴδιον. οἶδας δέ, κἂν πάντες ἤσουχάζωσιν, ὡς ὀφθαλμοὶ σε ἄγουσι καὶ ὦτα καὶ ἡ ἄλλη τῆς συγγενείας πληθὺς ἅπασα πρὸς τὰ φίλα
 11 ἑαυτοῖς. ἐὰν δὲ ἐθελήσης κομίσασθαι | τὰ σαυτοῦ
 [438] δάνεια καὶ τὴν ἰδίαν κτήσιν περιβαλέσθαι μηδὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὐκέθ’.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 7-11

II. We have now shewn how Moses uses "earth" 7 to represent the body, "kindred" to represent sense-perception, "thy father's house" to represent speech. The words "Depart out of these" are not equivalent to "Sever thyself from them absolutely," since to issue such a command as that would be to prescribe death. No, the words import "Make thyself a stranger to them in judgement and purpose ;
let none of them cling to thee ; rise superior to them all ; they are thy subjects, never treat them as 8 sovereign lords ; thou art a king, school thyself once and for all to rule, not to be ruled ; evermore be coming to know thyself, as Moses teaches thee in many places, saying "Give heed to thyself" (Ex. xxiv. 12), for in this way shalt thou perceive those to whom it befits thee to shew obedience and those to whom it befits thee to give commands. Depart, 9 therefore, out of the earthly matter that encompasses thee : escape, man, from the foul prison-house, thy body, with all thy might and main, and from the pleasures and lusts that act as its jailers ; every terror that can vex and hurt them, leave none of them unused ; menace the enemy with them all united and combined. Depart also out of sense- 10 perception thy kin. For at present thou hast made a loan of thyself to each sense, and art become the property of others, a portion of the goods of those who have borrowed thee, and hast thrown away the good thing that was thine own. Yes, thou knowest, even though all men should hold their peace, how eyes draw thee, and ears, and the whole crowd of thine other kinsfolk, towards what they themselves love. But if thou desire to recover the self that thou 11 hast lent and to have thine own possessions about

PHILO

- αὐτῆς διαζεύξας ἢ ἀλλοτριώσας μέρος, εὐδαίμονος μεταποιήση βίου, χρήσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν οὐκ ὀθνείων ἀλλ' οἰκείων ἀγαθῶν εἰς αἰεὶ καρπούμενος.
- 12 ἀλλὰ μετανάστηθι κακὰ τοῦ κατὰ προφορὰν λόγου, ὃν πατὴρ οἶκον ὠνόμασεν, ἵνα μὴ ῥημάτων καὶ ὀνομάτων ἀπατηθεὶς κάλλεσι τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν κάλλους, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἐν τοῖς δηλούμενοις πράγμασι, διαζευχθῆς. ἄτοπον γὰρ ἢ σκιὰν σωμάτων ἢ μίμημα ἀρχετύπων φέρεσθαι πλέον· σκιᾷ μὲν δὴ καὶ μιμήματι ἕοικεν ἐρμηνεία, σώμασι δὲ καὶ ἀρχετύποις αἱ τῶν διερμηνευομένων φύσεις πραγμάτων, ὧν τὸν ἐφιέμενον τοῦ εἶναι μᾶλλον ἢ τοῦ δοκεῖν χρή περιέχεσθαι διοικιζόμενον ἀπ'
- 13 ἐκείνων. III. ἐπειδὴν γοῦν ὁ νοῦς ἀρξήται γνωρίζειν ἑαυτὸν καὶ τοῖς νοητοῖς ἐνομιλεῖν θεωρήμασιν, ἅπαν τὸ κλινόμενον τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς τὸ αἰσθητὸν εἶδος ἀπώσεται, ὃ κέκληται παρ' Ἑβραίοις Λώτ. οὗ χάριν ὁ σοφὸς εἰσάγεται λέγων ἄντικρυς· “ διαχωρίσθητι ἀπ' ἐμοῦ·” συνοικεῖν γὰρ ἀμήχανον τὸν ἀσωμάτων καὶ ἀφθάρτων ἔρωτι κατεσχημένον τῷ πρὸς τὰ αἰσθητὰ καὶ θνητὰ
- 14 ῥέποντι. παγκάλως οὖν ὁ ἱεροφάντης μίαν τῆς νομοθεσίας ὅλην ἱερὰν βίβλον Ἐξαγωγὴν ἀνέγραψεν οἰκείον ὄνομα εὐράμενος τοῖς περιεχομένοις χρησμοῖς· ἄτε γὰρ παιδευτικὸς ὢν καὶ πρὸς νουθεσίαν καὶ σωφρονισμόν ἐτοιμότητος τῶν οἴων τε νουθετεῖσθαι καὶ σωφρονίζεσθαι πάντα τῆς ψυχῆς τὸν

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 11-14

thee, letting no portion of them be alienated and fall into other hands, thou shalt claim instead a happy life, enjoying in perpetuity the benefit and pleasure derived from good things not foreign to thee but thine own. Again, quit speech also, " thy 12 father's house," as Moses calls it, for fear thou shouldst be beguiled by beauties of mere phrasing, and be cut off from the real beauty, which lies in the matter expressed. Monstrous it is that shadow should be preferred to substance or a copy to originals. And verbal expression is like a shadow or copy, while the essential bearing of the matters conveyed by words resembles substance and originals; and it behoves the man, whose aim it is to be rather than to seem, to dissociate himself from the former and hold fast to the latter. III. So we find 13 that when the Mind begins to know itself and to hold converse with the things of mind, it will thrust away from it that part of the soul which inclines to the province of sense-perception, the inclining which among the Hebrews is entitled " Lot." Hence the wise man is represented as saying outright, " Separate thyself from me " (Gen. xiii. 9). For it is impossible for one who is possessed by love for all that is incorporeal and incorruptible to dwell together with one who leans towards the objects of sense-perception doomed to die. Right well, then, did the Sacred 14 Guide inscribe one entire sacred book of the Law-giving " Exagoge " or " Leading out," for the name thus found was appropriate to the oracles contained in it. For being well qualified to train men and fully furnished for the admonition and correction of those who were capable of admonition and correction, he contemplates the task of taking out all the population

PHILO

- λεὼν ἀπὸ τῆς Αἰγυπτίας χώρας, τοῦ σώματος, καὶ τῶν οἰκητόρων αὐτῆς ἐξελεῖν διανοεῖται, χαλεπώτατον καὶ βαρύτατον ἄχθος ἡγούμενος ὄρατικὴν διάνοιαν πρὸς σαρκὸς ἡδονῶν πιεσθῆναι καὶ ἐπιτάγμασιν ὑπηρετεῖν, ἅτ' ἂν αἱ ἀνηλεεῖς προστάττωσιν
- 15 ἐπιθυμίαι. τούτους μὲν οὖν στενάξαντας καὶ πολλὰ ἐκδακρύσαντας τὴν σωματικὴν εὐθηνίαν καὶ τὰς τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀφθόνους περιουσίας—λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ἐστέναξαν οἱ υἱοὶ Ἰσραὴλ ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων ”—ὑφηγησαμένου τοῦ Ἰλω θεοῦ τὰ περὶ τὴν ἕξοδον ὁ προφήτης αὐτοῦ ρύεται.
- 16 Εἰσὶ δ' οἱ μέχρι τῆς τελευτῆς τὰς πρὸς σῶμα σπονδὰς ἔθεντο καὶ ὡσπερ λάρνακι ἢ σορῶ ἢ ὅπως ὀνομάζειν ἐτέρως φίλον τῶδε ἐνετάφησαν. ὧν τὰ μὲν ὅσα φιλοσώματα καὶ φιλοπαθῆ μέρη λήθη παραδοθέντα κατορύττεται· εἰ δέ πού τι φιλάρετον παραέβλαστε, μνήμαι ἀνασώζεται, δι' ὧν τὰ
- 17 καλὰ ζωपुरεῖσθαι πέφυκε. IV. τὰ γοῦν ὀσῶτα Ἰωσήφ, λέγω δὴ τὰ μόνα ὑπολειφθέντα τῆς τοσαύτης ψυχῆς ἀδιάφθορα καὶ ἀξιωμακόμενευτα εἶδη, περιποιεῖται ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος, ἄτοπον ἡγούμενος
- [439] καθαρὰ | μὴ καθαροῖς συνεζευχθαι. τὰ
- 18 δ' ἀξιωμακόμενευτα ταῦτα ἦν· τὸ πιστεῦσαι ὅτι “ ἐπισκέφεται ὁ θεὸς ” τὸ ὄρατικὸν γένος καὶ οὐ

<sup>a</sup> “Things outside the body” (see note on Quod Det. 7) interpret the “inhabitants of Egypt” in § 14, as “the things of the body” interpret Egypt.

<sup>b</sup> For the interpretation of these “works” or tasks as slavery to the passions and the like cf. De Conf. 93.

<sup>c</sup> Here begins the digression about Joseph which continues to the end of § 24. The opening words of § 16 are a meditation on Gen. 1. 26 “And Joseph died (ἐτελεύτησε, cf. μέχρι τῆς τελευτῆς) and was buried, and they laid him in a coffin (σορῶ), in Egypt.” The lesson deduced is that the compromising of the soul right away from Egypt, the body, and away from its inhabitants ; deeming it a most sore and heavy burden that an understanding endowed with vision should be under the pressure of the pleasures of the flesh, and should submit to such injunctions as its merciless cravings may lay upon it. These, indeed, groaned over and greatly bewailed 15 their bodily well-being, and the lavish abundance of things outside the body,<sup>a</sup> which was theirs, for we read that " the children of Israel groaned by reason of their works <sup>b</sup> " (Ex. ii. 23). When they do this, the gracious God instructs His prophet regarding their coming out, and His prophet delivers them.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 14-18

<sup>c</sup> But some make a truce with the body and main- 16 tain it till their death, and are buried in it as in a coffin or shell or whatever else you like to call it. All the body-loving and passion-loving portions of these are laid in the grave and consigned to oblivion. But if anywhere by the side of these there grows up a virtue-loving tendency, it is saved from extinction by memories, which are a means of keeping alive the flame of noble qualities.

IV. So the Holy 17 Word, deeming it unfitting that pure things should have impure things associated with them, provides for the safe-keeping of Joseph's bones, by which I mean the only relics of such a soul as were left behind untouched by corruption and worthy of perpetual memory (Gen. l. 25).<sup>d</sup> Those of the 18 latter kind were these ; Joseph's confidence that " God will visit " the race that has vision (Gen. l. 24), Joseph-nature is " buried in the body " and forgotten, but it may have higher things or " bones ". These are remembered and serve to kindle excellence in others.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 560.

PHILO

παραδώσει μέχρι παντός αὐτὸ ἀμαθία, τυφλῆ δεσποίνῃ, τὸ διακρίναι τά τε θνητὰ τῆς ψυχῆς καὶ τὰ ἄφθαρτα καὶ τὰ μὲν ὅσα περὶ τὰς σώματος ἡδονὰς καὶ τὰς ἄλλας παθῶν ἀμετρίας θνητὰ ὄντα Αἰγύπτῳ καταλιπεῖν, περὶ δὲ τῶν ἀφθάρτων σπονδῆν<sup>1</sup> ποιήσασθαι, ὅπως μετὰ τῶν ἀναβαινόντων εἰς τὰς ἀρετῆς πόλεις διακομισθῆ, καὶ ὄρκω τὴν 19 σπονδῆν ἐμπεδώσασθαι. τίνα οὖν τὰ ἄφθαρτα; ἢ πρὸς ἡδονῆν ἀλλοτρίωσις τὴν λέγου-σαν· συννευσθῶμεν καὶ τῶν ἀνθρωπείων ἀπο-λαύσωμεν ἀγαθῶν, ἢ μετὰ καρτερίας ἀγχίνοια, δι' ἧς τὰ τῶν κενῶν δοξῶν νομιζόμενα ἀγαθὰ ὡς ἂν ἐνύπνια ὄντα * * *<sup>2</sup> διακρίνει καὶ διαστέλλει, ὁμολογῶν τὰς μὲν ἀληθεῖς καὶ σαφεῖς τῶν πραγμάτων συγκρίσεις εἶναι κατὰ θεόν, τὰς δὲ ἀδήλους καὶ ἀσαφεῖς φαντασίας κατὰ τὸν πλάνητα καὶ τύφου μεστὸν μήπω κεκαθαρμένων ἀνθρώπων βίον ταῖς διὰ σιτοπόνων καὶ μαγείρων καὶ οἰνοχόων 20 τέρψεσι χαίροντα, τὸ μὴ ὑπήκοον, ἀλλ' ἄρχοντα Αἰγύπτου πάσης, τῆς σωματικῆς χώρας, ἀναγραφῆναι, τὸ αὐχεῖν ἐπὶ τῷ γένος εἶναι Ἑβραίων, οἷς ἔθος ἀπὸ τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἐπὶ τὰ νοητὰ μετανἵστασθαι—περάτης γὰρ ὁ Ἑβραῖος ἐρμηνεύεται—, τὸ σεμνύνεσθαι ὅτι “ ὦδε οὐκ ἐποίησεν οὐδέν ”—τὸ γὰρ μηδὲν τῶν ἐνταῦθα σπουδαζομένων<sup>3</sup> παρὰ τοῖς φαύλοις ἐργάσασθαι, διαμισῆσαι δὲ καὶ ἀποστραφῆ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. σπονδῆν.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. conjectures <τῶν ἀληθῶς ὄντων>. I am not sure that it is necessary to suppose any lacuna.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. σπουδαζόντων.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 560, on § 17.

<sup>b</sup> An allusion to the description of Potiphar in the LXX (Gen. xxxix. 1) as chief cook.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 18-20

and will not utterly hand it over to Ignorance, that blind task-mistress ; his discernment between the mortal and the incorruptible portions of the soul and his leaving behind to Egypt those which had to do with bodily pleasures and other forms of unrestrained passion, while concerning the incorruptible parts he made an agreement, that they should accompany those who went up to the cities of virtue, and should be conveyed thither, and had the agreement secured by an oath. What, then, are the un- 19 corrupted parts ?<sup>a</sup> His having nothing to do with Pleasure when she says, " Let us lie together " (Gen. xxxix. 7) and enjoy the good things of mankind : the shrewdness coupled with the resoluteness which enabled him to recognize the products of empty fancies which many accounted to be good, and to distinguish them as mere dreams from those which are really so ; and to confess that the true and certain interpretations of things are given under God's guidance (Gen. xl. 8), while the doubtful imaginations that have no certainty follow the rule and line of the erring and deluded life of men who have not undergone purification, a life that finds its joy in the delights provided by bakers and cooks<sup>b</sup> and butlers. Other traits of incorruption were these : he was pro- 20 claimed not the subject, but the ruler of all Egypt, the domain of the body (Gen. xli. 41) : he was proud to own himself a member of the Hebrew race (Gen. xl. 15), whose wont it is, as the name " Hebrew " or " Migrant " indicates, to quit the objects of sense-perception and go after those of Mind : he gloried in the fact that " here he had done nothing " (ibid.), for to have performed no single act such as the worthless people there admired, but to have utterly

PHILO

- 21 ναι πάντα οὐ μετρίως ἐπαινετόν—, τὸ ἐμπαίξειν ἐπιθυμιῶν καὶ πάντων παθῶν ἀμετρίαις, τὸ φοβεῖσθαι τὸν θεόν, εἰ καὶ μηδέπω γέγονεν ἀγαπᾶν ἱκανός, τὸ ζωῆς ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ μεταποιεῖσθαι τῆς ἀληθοῦς— (V.) ὁ δὲ θαυμάσας ὁ ὄρων, καὶ γὰρ ἄξιον ἦν καταπλαγῆναι, φησί· “ μέγα μοί ἐστιν, εἰ ἔτι ὁ υἱός μου Ἰωσήφ ζῆ,” ἀλλὰ μὴ κεναῖς δόξαις καὶ τῷ νεκρο-
- 22 φορουμένῳ σώματι συντέθηκε—, τὸ ὁμολογεῖν ὅτι “ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐστι,” τῶν δ’ εἰς γένεσιν ἐλθόντων οὐδενός, τὸ γνωριζόμενον τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς πάντας τοὺς φιλοσωμάτους κινήσαι καὶ σαλευσαι τρόπους ἐστάναι παγίως ἐπὶ τῶν ἰδίων οἰομένους δογμάτων καὶ ἀνὰ κράτος ἀπώσασθαι, τὸ φάναι μὴ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων ἀπεστάλθαι, ὑπὸ δὲ τοῦ θεοῦ κεχειροτονῆσθαι πρὸς τὴν τοῦ σώματος καὶ τῶν ἐκτὸς
- 23 ἔνομον ἐπιστασίαν. πολλὰ δὲ καὶ ἄλλα
τούτοις ὁμοιότροπα τῆς ἀμείνονος καὶ ἱερωτέρας ὄντα τάξεως, Αἴγυπτον τὸν σωματικὸν οἶκον οἰκεῖν οὐκ ἀνέχεται οὐδ’ ἐνθάπτεται σορῶ τὸ παράπαν,
- [440] ἔξω δὲ παντὸς τοῦ θνητοῦ | κεχωρηκότα παρέπε-
- 24 ται<sup>1</sup> θεσμοθέτη λόγῳ Μωυσῆ ποδηγετοῦντι· τροφεὺς γὰρ καὶ τιθηνὸς οὗτος ἀστείων ἔργων, λόγων, βουλευμάτων, ἃ, κὰν τοῖς ἐναντίοις ἀνακραθῆ ποτε διὰ τὴν ὑποσύγχυτον τοῦ θνητοῦ πολυμιγίαν, οὐδὲν ἦττον διακρίνει<sup>2</sup> παρελθῶν, ἵνα μὴ μέχρι παντὸς τὰ

<sup>1</sup> Wend. and Mangey put a comma after ἐπιστασίαν and correct ἀνέχεται, ἐνθάπτεται, παρέχεται of the mss. to the corresponding infinitives. See App. p. 560.

<sup>2</sup> mss. διακρίνεται. See App. p. 561.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 560.

<sup>b</sup> The thought of the body as a dead thing from the first, which the soul supports, has been more fully developed in Leg. All. iii. 69 f. Cf. also De Agr. 25.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 21-24

hated and eschewed them all, was conduct that called 21 for no slight praise : he derided lusts and all passions and their gross excesses (Gen. xxxix. 14, 17) :<sup>a</sup> he feared God (Gen. xlii. 18) even though he was not yet ready to love Him : when in Egypt he claimed as his own the life that is real life, (V.) a claim which caused Israel to marvel in just amazement, and to cry, "It is a great matter in my eyes if my son Joseph still lives" (Gen. xlv. 28), and has not shared the death of vain opinions, and of the body the corpse he carries with him :<sup>b</sup> he confesses that he is God's 22 (Gen. l. 19),<sup>c</sup> not the property of any created being :
when making himself known to his brethren he thrust perforce from his presence, shaken and tottering, all those frames of mind that make the body their delight and think that their own doctrines afford them a firm standing (Gen. xlv. 1 f.) : he declared that he had not received his commission at the hands of men, but had been appointed by God (Gen. xlv. 7 f.) to be duly constituted controller of the body and of things outside the body.<sup>d</sup> And these are 23 but a few of the traits indicative of the better and holier standing, which utterly refuse to dwell in Egypt the bodily tenement, are never buried in a coffin at all, but, having passed out of all that is mortal, follow the guiding steps of Moses, the Law-giving Word. For Moses is the nursing-father who 24 rears with fostering care noble deeds, words, designs, which, albeit often mingled with their opposites owing to the chaos and confusion which besets mortality, he none the less comes forward and separates from

<sup>c</sup> E.V. "Am I in the place of God?"

<sup>d</sup> Again, as in § 15, the two lower goods serve to interpret "Lord of all his house and ruler of all the land of Egypt."

PHILO

καλοκάγαθίας σπέρματα καὶ φυτὰ ἀφανισθέντα οἰχῆται.

- 25 Καὶ προτρέπεται μάλα ἐρρωμένως ἀπολιπεῖν τὴν παντὸς ἀτόπου χρηματίζουσαν μητέρα, μὴ μέλλοντας καὶ βραδύνοντας, ἀλλ' ὑπερβάλλοντι τάχει χρωμένους· φησὶ γὰρ μετὰ σπουδῆς δεῖν θύειν τὸ Πάσχα, τὸ δέ ἐστὶν ἐρμηνευθὲν διάβασις, ἢ ἀνευδοιάστω γνώμη καὶ προθυμία συντόνω χρώμενος ὁ νοῦς τὴν τε ἀπὸ τῶν παθῶν ἀμεταστρεπτὶ ποιῆται διάβασις καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸν σωτῆρα θεὸν εὐχαριστίαν, ὃς εἰς ἐλευθερίαν οὐ προσδοκῆσαντα
- 26 αὐτὸν ἐξείλετο.

- VI. καὶ τί θαυμάζομεν, εἰ τὸν ὑπηγμένον κράτει πάθους ἀλόγου προτρέπει μὴ ἐνδιδόναι μηδὲ τῇ ῥύμη τῆς ἐκείνου φορᾶς κατασυρῆναι, βιάσασθαι δὲ ἀντισχόντα κἄν, εἰ μὴ δύναίτο, ἀποδρᾶναι; δευτέρα γὰρ ἔφοδος εἰς σωτηρίαν τοῖς ἀμύνεσθαι μὴ δυναμένοις δρασμὸς ἐστίν· ὁπότε καὶ τὸν ἀγωνιστὴν φύσει καὶ μηδέποτε παθῶν δοῦλον γεγεννημένον, αἰεὶ δὲ ἀθλοῦντα τοὺς πρὸς ἕκαστον αὐτῶν ἄθλους, οὐκ ἐᾷ μέχρι παντὸς τοῖς παλαίσμασι χρήσασθαι, μὴ ποτε τῷ συνεχεῖ τῆς εἰς ταῦτὸ συνόδου χαλεπὴν ἀπ' ἐκείνων κῆρα ἀναμάξῃται· πολλοὶ γὰρ ἤδη καὶ ἀντιπάλου κακίας
- 27 ἐγένοντο μιμηταί, ὡς ἀρετῆς ἔμπαλις ἕτεροι. διὸ λόγιον ἐχρήσθη τοιόνδε· “ ἀποστρέφου εἰς τὴν γῆν τοῦ πατρός σου καὶ εἰς τὴν γενεάν σου, καὶ ἔσομαι

<sup>a</sup> The thought of §§ 26-30 seems to be that while ordinary souls, typified by Israel leaving Egypt, must shun outward temptations, because they will prove too strong for them, even the Jacob-souls, who have proved their superiority, will do well to detach themselves and become immersed in that the rest, that the germs and shoots of moral excellence may not permanently be obliterated and lost.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 24-27

Moses also urges the Israelites to quit right stoutly 25 her who bears the name of mother of every monstrous thing, with no slow or lingering steps, but with exceeding speed ; for he bids them with haste to sacrifice the Passover (Ex. xii. 11), which means " a passing over," to the intent that the Mind with resolute purpose and unfailling eagerness may carry out both its passing away from the passions without turning back, and its thanksgiving to God its Saviour, Who brought it forth into liberty when it looked not for it.

VI. And what is there to wonder at 26 in his urging the mind, that had been brought under the control of irrational passion, not to give in, nor to be swept down by the violence of that passion's current, but to resist with all its might, and, should it fail, even to run away ? For flight remains as an alternative way of reaching safety for those who are not able to repel the danger. See how Moses deals with one who was by nature a sturdy fighter and had never become the slave of passions, but was always engaged in the conflict with each one of them ?<sup>a</sup> Even him he forbids to keep up his wrestlings to the end, lest one day, by perpetually meeting them, he should contract from them a pernicious taint : for many before now have proved imitators of an opponent's vice, as others on the other hand have imitated his virtue. For this reason a Divine intimation was 27 vouchsafed to him to this effect : " Turn back to the land of thy father and thy kindred, and I will be with thee " (Gen. xxxi. 3) ; as much as to say " Thou higher wisdom represented by Isaac, which is beyond all worldly thoughts.

PHILO

- μετὰ σοῦ," ἴσον τῷ γέγονας μὲν ἀθλητῆς τέλειος καὶ βραβείων καὶ στεφάνων ἡξιώτης ἀγωνοθετοῦσης ἀρετῆς καὶ προτεινούσης ἀθλά σοι τὰ νικητήρια· κατάλυσον δὲ ἤδη τὸ φιλόνεικον, ἵνα μὴ πάντοτε πονῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πονηθέντων ἀπόνασ-
- 28 θαι δυναθῆς. τοῦτο δὲ ἐνταυθοῖ καταμένων οὐδέποτε εὐρήσεις τοῖς αἰσθητοῖς ἔτι συνοικῶν καὶ ταῖς σωματικαῖς ἐνδιατρίβων ποιότησιν, ὧν Λάβαν ἐστὶν ἕξαρχος—ὄνομα δὲ ποιότητος τοῦτ' ἐστίν—, ἀλλὰ μετανάστην χρὴ γενέσθαι εἰς τὴν πατρώαν γῆν τὴν ἱεροῦ λόγου καὶ τρόπον τινὰ τῶν ἀσκητῶν πατρός· ἢ δ' ἐστὶ σοφία, τῶν φιλαρέτων ψυχῶν
- 29 ἄριστον ἐνδιαίτημα. ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ χώρᾳ καὶ γένος ἐστὶ σοι τὸ αὐτομαθές, τὸ αὐτοδίδακτον, τὸ νηπίας καὶ γαλακτώδους τροφῆς ἀμέτοχον, τὸ χρησμῶ θείῳ καταβαίνειν εἰς Αἴγυπτον κεκωλυμένον καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς ἐντυγχάνειν δελεαζούσαις ἡδοναῖς,
- 30 ἐπὶ κλησιν Ἰσαάκ. οὐ τὸν κλῆρον παραλαβὼν ἐξ ἀνάγκης ἀποθήσῃ τὸν πόνον· αἱ γὰρ ἀφθονίαι τῶν
- [441] ἐτοιμῶν καὶ κατὰ χειρὸς ἀγαθῶν | ἀπονίας αἰτιαί. πηγῇ δέ, ἀφ' ἧς ὄμβρει τὰ ἀγαθὰ, ἢ τοῦ φιλοδώρου θεοῦ σύνοδος ἐστίν· οὐ χάριν ἐπισφραγιζόμενος τὰ τῶν εὐεργεσιῶν φησιν· "ἔσομαι μετὰ σοῦ."
- 31 VII. Τί οὖν ἂν ἐπιλίποι καλὸν τοῦ τελεσφόρου [παντός] παρόντος θεοῦ μετὰ χαρίτων τῶν παρθένων αὐτοῦ θυγατέρων, ἃς ἀδιαφθόρους καὶ ἀμιάντους ὁ γεννήσας πατήρ κουροτροφεῖ; τότε μελέται μὲν καὶ πόνοι καὶ ἀσκήσεις ἡσυχάζουσιν, <sup>a</sup> Perhaps an allusion to Gen. xxi. 8 "and the child grew and was weaned" (ἀπεγαλακτίσθη).

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 27-31

hast proved thyself a perfect athlete, and been awarded prizes and crowns with Virtue presiding and holding forth to thee the meed of victory : but now it is time for thee to have done with strife, lest thou be ever toiling, and have no power to reap the fruits of thy toil. This thou wilt never find while thou remainest where thou art, dwelling still with the objects of sense-perception, and spending thy days surrounded by bodily existence in its varied aspects, whose head and chief is Laban, bearing a name meaning variety of character. Nay, thou must change thine abode and betake thee to thy father's land, the land of the Word that is holy and in some sense father of those who submit to training : and that land is Wisdom, abode most choice of virtue-loving souls. In this country there awaiteth thee the nature which is its own pupil, its own teacher, that needs not to be fed on milk as children are fed,<sup>a</sup> that has been stayed by a Divine oracle from going down into Egypt (Gen. xxvi. 2) and from meeting with the ensnaring pleasures of the flesh. That nature is entitled Isaac. When thou hast entered upon his inheritance, thou canst not but lay aside thy toil ; for the perpetual abundance of good things ever ready to the hand gives freedom from toil. And the fountain from which the good things are poured forth is the companionship of the bountiful God. He shews this to be so when to set His seal upon the flow of His kindnesses, He says " I will be with thee." VII. What fair thing, then, could fail when there was present God the Perfecter, with gifts of grace, His virgin daughters, whom the Father that begat them rears up uncorrupted and undefiled ? Then are all forms of studying, toiling, practising at rest ; and without

PHILO

- ἀναδίδοται δὲ ἄνευ τέχνης φύσεως προμηθεία πάντα 32 ἀθρόα πᾶσιν ὠφέλιμα. καλεῖται δ' ἡ φορὰ τῶν αὐτοματιζομένων ἀγαθῶν ἄφεσις, ἐπειδή-περ ὁ νοῦς ἀφείται τῶν κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας ἐπιβολὰς ἐνεργειῶν καὶ ὡσπερ τῶν ἐκουσίων ἠλευθέρωται διὰ τὴν πληθὺν τῶν ὑομένων καὶ ἀδιαστάτως 33 ἐπομβρούντων. ἔστι δὲ ταῦτα θαυμασιώτατα φύσει καὶ περικαλλέστατα. ὧν μὲν γὰρ ἂν ὠδίνῃ δι' ἑαυτῆς ἡ ψυχὴ, τὰ πολλὰ ἀμβλωθρίδια, ἠλιτόμηνα· ὅσα δὲ ἂν ἐπινίφων ὁ θεὸς ἄρδῃ, τέλεια καὶ ὀλόκληρα 34 καὶ πάντων ἄριστα γεννᾶται. τὸ ἐμαυτοῦ πάθος, ὃ μυριάκις παθῶν οἶδα, διηγούμενος οὐκ αἰσχύνομαι· βουλευθεὶς ἔστιν ὅτε κατὰ τὴν συνήθη τῶν κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν δογμάτων γραφὴν ἔλθειν καὶ ἂ χρῆ συνθεῖναι ἀκριβῶς εἰδῶς,<sup>1</sup> ἄγονον καὶ στείραν εὐρῶν τὴν διάνοιαν ἄπρακτος ἀπηλλάγην, τὴν μὲν κακίστας τῆς οἰήσεως, τὸ δὲ τοῦ ὄντος κράτος καταπλαγείς, παρ' ὄν<sup>2</sup> τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς ἀνοίγνυσθαι 35 τε καὶ συγκλείεσθαι μήτρας συμβέβηκεν. ἔστι δὲ ὅτε κενὸς ἐλθὼν πλήρης ἐξαίφνης ἐγενόμην ἐπι-υφομένων καὶ σπειρομένων ἄνωθεν ἀφανῶς τῶν ἐνθυμημάτων, ὡς ὑπὸ κατοχῆς ἐνθέου κορυβαντιῶν καὶ πάντα ἀγνοεῖν, τὸν τόπον, τοὺς παρόντας, ἑμαυτόν, τὰ λεγόμενα, τὰ γραφόμενα. ἔσχον γὰρ ἐρμηνείαν,<sup>3</sup> εὕρεσιν, φωτὸς ἀπόλαυσιν, ὀξύτερκεστάτην ὄψιν, ἐνάργειαν τῶν πραγμάτων ἀριδηλο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἰδῶν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οὐ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. σχεδὸν γὰρ ἐρμηνεύει, which Wend. prints, though pronouncing it corrupt: Markland suggested ἔσχον γὰρ ἐρμηνείας ῥεῦσιν. See App. p. 561.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 31-35

interference of art by contrivance of Nature there come forth all things in one outburst charged with benefit for all. And the harvest of spontaneous good things is called "Release,"<sup>a</sup> inasmuch as the Mind is released from the working out of its own projects, and is, we may say, emancipated from self-chosen tasks, by reason of the abundance of the rain and ceaseless shower of blessings. And these are of a most marvellous nature and passing fair. For the offspring of the soul's own travail are for the most part poor abortions, things untimely born ; but those which God waters with the snows of heaven come to the birth perfect, complete and peerless.

I feel no shame in recording my own experience, a thing I know from its having happened to me a thousand times. On some occasions, after making up my mind to follow the usual course of writing on philosophical tenets, and knowing definitely the substance of what I was to set down, I have found my understanding incapable of giving birth to a single idea, and have given it up without accomplishing anything, reviling my understanding for its self-conceit, and filled with amazement at the might of Him that is to Whom is due the opening and closing of the soul-wombs. On other occasions, I have approached my work empty and suddenly become full, the ideas falling in a shower from above and being sown invisibly, so that under the influence of the Divine possession I have been filled with corybantic frenzy and been unconscious of anything, place, persons present, myself, words spoken, lines written. For I obtained language, ideas, an enjoyment of light, keenest vision, pellucid dis-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 561.

PHILO

τάτην, οἷα γένοιτ' ἂν δι' ὀφθαλμῶν ἐκ σαφειστάτης δειξέως.

- 36 VIII. Τὸ μὲν οὖν δεικνύμενον τὸ ἀξιόρατον καὶ ἀξιοθέατον καὶ ἀξιεραστόν ἐστι, τὸ τέλειον ἀγαθόν, ὃ καὶ τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς πικρίας πέφυκε μεταβάλλον γλυκαίνειν, ἡδυσμάτων συμπάντων παράρτυμα κάλλιστον, δι' οὗ καὶ τὰ μὴ τρέφοντα τροφή γίνεται σωτήριος· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ἔδειξεν αὐτῷ κύριος ξύλον, καὶ ἐνέβαλεν αὐτὸ εἰς τὸ ὕδωρ,” τὸν κεχυμένον καὶ πλαδῶντα καὶ πικρίας γέμοντα νοῦν, ἵνα
- 37 γλυκανθεὶς ἡμερωθῇ. τὸ δὲ ξύλον τοῦτο οὐ μόνον τροφήν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀθανασίαν ἐπαγγέλλεται· τὸ γὰρ ξύλον τῆς ζωῆς ἐν μέσῳ τῷ παραδείσῳ φησὶ πεφυτεῦσθαι, τὴν ἀγαθότητα δορυφορομένην ὑπὸ τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἀρετῶν<sup>1</sup> καὶ τῶν κατ' αὐτὰς πρά-
[442] ξεων· αὕτη | γὰρ τὸν μεσαίτατον καὶ ἄριστον ἐν
- 38 ψυχῇ κεκλήρωται τόπον. ὁ δὲ ὄρων ἐστὶν ὁ σοφός· τυφλοὶ γὰρ ἢ ἀμυδροὶ τὰς ὄψεις οἷ γε ἄφρονες. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τοὺς προφήτας ἐκάλουν πρότερον τοὺς βλέποντας· καὶ ὁ ἀσκητὴς ἐσπούδασεν ὥτα ὀφθαλμῶν ἀντιδουὺς ἰδεῖν ἂ πρότερον ἤκουε, καὶ τυγχάνει τοῦ καθ' ὅρασιν κλήρου τὸν ἐξ
- 39 ἀκοῆς ὑπερβάς. εἰς γὰρ τὸν ὄρωντα Ἰσραὴλ μεταχαράττεται τὸ μαθήσεως καὶ διδασκαλίας νόμισμα, οὐπερ ἐπώνυμος ἦν Ἰακώβ, δι' οὗ καὶ τὸ ὄραν γίνεται φῶς τὸ θεῖον, ἀδιαφοροῦν ἐπιστήμης, ἢ τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς διοίγνυσιν ὄμμα καὶ πρὸς τὰς ὥτων τηλαυγεστέρας καὶ ἀριδηλοτέρας<sup>2</sup> ἄγει καταλήψεις.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγαθῶν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τηλαυγεστάτας καὶ ἀριδηλοτάτας. The alternative (Mangey) is to retain the superlatives and correct ὥτων to νοητῶν or ὄντων.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 35-39

tinctness of objects, such as might be received through the eyes as the result of clearest shewing.<sup>a</sup>

VIII. Now the thing shewn is the thing worthy to 36 be seen, contemplated, loved, the perfect good, whose nature it is to change all that is bitter in the soul and make it sweet, fairest seasoning of all spices, turning into salutary nourishment even foods that do not nourish. So we read "The Lord shewed him a tree, and he cast it into the water" (Ex. xv. 25), that is into the flabby, flaccid mind teeming with bitterness, that its savagery might be sweetened away. This 37 tree offers not nourishment only but immortality also, for we are told that the Tree of Life has been planted in the midst of the Garden (Gen. ii. 9), even Goodness with the particular virtues and the doings which accord with them to be its bodyguard. For it is Virtue that has obtained as its own the central and most honourable place in the soul. Such 38 is that which is shewn, and he that sees it is the wise man, for fools are blind or dim-sighted. That is why in former times they called the prophets seers (1 Sam.
ix. 9); and the Trainer of self was eager to exchange ears for eyes, and to see what before he heard, and, going beyond the inheritance which has hearing as its source, he obtains that of which sight is the ruling principle. For the current coin of learning and teach- 39 ing from which Jacob took his title is reminted into the seeing Israel. Hereby comes to pass even the seeing of the Divine light, identical with knowledge, which opens wide the soul's eye, and leads it to apprehensions distinct and brilliant beyond those

<sup>a</sup> The concluding word "shewing" serves to bridge over transition from this meditation on the Spontaneous Blessings to the discussion of the First Gift to Abraham, i.e. "the land which I will shew thee."

PHILO

ὡσπερ γὰρ διὰ μουσικῆς τὰ κατὰ μουσικὴν καὶ διὰ πάσης τέχνης τὰ ἐν ἐκάστη καταλαμβάνεται, οὕτω 40 καὶ διὰ σοφίας τὸ σοφὸν θεωρεῖται. σοφία δὲ οὐ μόνον φωτὸς τρόπον ὄργανον τοῦ ὄραν ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὴν ὄρα. αὕτη θεοῦ τὸ ἀρχέτυπον [ἡλίου] φέγγος, οὗ μίμημα καὶ εἰκὼν ἡλίου. ὁ δὲ δεικνὺς ἕκαστα ὁ μόνος ἐπιστήμων θεός· ἄνθρωποι μὲν γὰρ τῷ δοκεῖν ἐπίστασθαι λέγονται μόνον ἐπιστήμονες· ὁ δὲ θεός τῷ εἶναι ἦττον ἢ πέφυκε λέγεται· νικῶνται γὰρ ὑπὸ τῶν τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεων 41 οἱ περὶ αὐτὸν ἅπαντες ἅπαξ λόγοι. τὴν δὲ σοφίαν αὐτοῦ διασυνίστησιν οὐ μόνον ἐκ τοῦ τὸν κόσμον δεδημιουργηκένας, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ τὴν ἐπιστήμην τῶν γεγονότων ἰδρυκένας βεβαιοτάτα παρ' ἑαυτῷ· 42 λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ εἶδεν ὁ θεὸς τὰ πάντα ὅσα ἐποίησεν,” οὐκ ἴσον τῷ ὄψιν ἐκάστοις προσέβαλεν, ἀλλ' εἶδησιν καὶ γνώσωσιν καὶ κατάληψιν ὧν ἐποίησεν εἶχεν. <οὐ> τοίνυν<sup>1</sup> εὐπρεπὲς ὑφηγεῖσθαι καὶ διδάσκειν καὶ δεικνύναι τὰ καθ' ἕκαστα τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσιν ὅτι μὴ τῷ ἐπιστήμονι, ὅστις οὐχ ὡς ἄνθρωπος

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὧν ἐποίησεν. εἶχε τοίνυν, which Mangey retained, changing ὅτι μὴ to ἀλλὰ μὴ. See App. p. 562.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the Israel-soul, the seer, first sees the light, i.e. knowledge, and this in its turn enables the soul's eye to see the objects of knowledge, and so knowledge (or wisdom) is the "instrument" of sight (§ 40). ἀδιαφοροῦν agrees with φῶς, not with τὸ ὄραν.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 39-42

gained by the ears.<sup>a</sup> For as the application of the principles of music<sup>b</sup> is apprehended through the science of music, and the practice of each science through that science, even so only through wisdom comes discernment of what is wise. But wisdom is 40 not only, after the manner of light, an instrument of sight, but is able to see its own self besides. Wisdom is God's archetypal luminary and the sun is a copy and image of it.

But he that shews each several object is God, who alone is possessed of perfect knowledge. For men are only said to have knowledge because they seem to know ; whereas God is so called because He is the possessor of knowledge though the phrase does not adequately express this nature ; for all things whatever that can be said regarding Him that is fall far short of the reality of His powers. He gives clear proof of His wisdom not 41 only from His having been the Artificer of the universe, but also from His having made the knowledge of the things that had been brought into existence His sure possession. For we read " God saw all 42 things that He had made " (Gen. i. 31). This does not just mean that He set His eyes on each of them, but that He had insight<sup>c</sup> and knowledge and apprehension of the things which He had made. It follows then that to give teaching and guidance on each several thing, in fact to " shew " them, to the ignorant is proper only for the One who knows, seeing that He has not, as a man has, been profited by

<sup>b</sup> That τὰ κατά means the "practical application" is brought out more clearly in Quod Det. 114, where we have τὰ καθ' ἐκάστην (sc. ἀρετήν) ἐνεργήματα.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 562.

PHILO

ὑπὸ τέχνης ὠφέληται, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἀρχὴ καὶ πηγὴ τεχνῶν καὶ ἐπιστημῶν ἀνωμολόγηται.

- 43 IX. Παρατετηρημένως δὲ οὐ τὸν ἐνεστῶτα, ἀλλὰ τὸν μέλλοντα τῇ ὑποσχέσει χρόνον προδιώρισται, εἰπὼν οὐχ ἦν δείκνυμι ἀλλ' "ἦν σοι δείξω," εἰς μαρτυρίαν πίστεως ἣν ἐπίστευσεν ἡ ψυχὴ θεῷ, οὐκ ἐκ τῶν ἀποτελεσμάτων ἐπιδεικνυμένη τὸ εὐχάριστον, ἀλλ' ἐκ προσδοκίας τῶν μελλόντων· ἀρτηθείσα γὰρ καὶ ἐκκρεμασθείσα ἐλπίδος χρηστῆς καὶ ἀνενδοίαστα νομίσασα ἤδη παρεῖναι τὰ μὴ παρόντα διὰ τὴν τοῦ ὑποσχομένου βεβαιότητα<sup>1</sup> πίστιν, ἀγαθὸν |
- [443] τέλειον, ἄθλον εὔρηται· καὶ γὰρ αὐθις λέγεται, ὅτι "ἐπίστευσεν Ἀβραὰμ τῷ θεῷ," καὶ Μωυσεῖ δὲ ὁμοίως πᾶσαν ἐπιδειξάμενος τὴν γῆν φησίν, ὅτι "ἔδειξα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς σου, κακεῖ οὐκ εἰσελεύση."
- 45 μὴ μέντοι νομίσης ἐπὶ καθαιρέσει τοῦ πανσόφου, ὡς ὑπολαμβάνουσιν ἔνιοι τῶν ἀπερισκέπτων, τοῦτο εἰρησθαι· καὶ γὰρ εὔηθες τοὺς δούλους οἰηθῆναι πρὸ τῶν φίλων τοῦ θεοῦ τὴν ἀρετῆς χώραν διανεμ-
- 46 σθαι. ἀλλὰ πρῶτον ἐκεῖνό σοι βούλεται παραστήσαι, ὅτι ἕτερος νηπίων καὶ ἕτερος τελείων χώρός ἐστιν, ὁ μὲν ὀνομαζόμενος ἄσκησις, ὁ δὲ καλούμενος σοφία, ἔπειτα ὅτι τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν ἐν τῇ φύσει ὄρατὰ μᾶλλον ἐστὶν ἢ κτητά· κτήσασθαι μὲν γὰρ τὰ θειοτέρας μοίρας λαχόντα πῶς ἐνεστιν ; ἰδεῖν δ' οὐκ ἀδύνατον, ἀλλ' οὐχ ἅπασιν, ἔστι δ' αὐτὸ μόνον<sup>2</sup> τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ καὶ ὀξυωπεστάτῳ γένει, ᾧ τὰ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βεβαιοτάτην.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπὶ δ' αὐτῷ μόνῳ.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or, as Mangey, "referring to the death of."

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 42-46

science and its lore, but is acknowledged to be Himself the Source and Fountain-head of science and knowledge in all their forms.

IX. There is a deliberate intention when his words 43 take the form of a promise and define the time of fulfilment not as present but future. He says not " which I am shewing " but " which I will shew thee " (Gen. xii. 1). Thus he testifies to the trust which the soul reposed in God, exhibiting its thankfulness not as called out by accomplished facts, but by expectation of what was to be. For the soul, clinging in 44 utter dependence on a good hope, and deeming that things not present are beyond question already present by reason of the sure stedfastness of Him that promised them, has won as its meed faith, a perfect good ; for we read a little later " Abraham believed God " (Gen. xv. 6). To Moses, too, He says in like manner, when He had shewn to him all the Land, " I shewed it to thine eyes, but thou shalt not enter in " (Deut. xxxiv. 4). You must not think that 45 this was said, as some unconsidering people suppose, to humiliate<sup>a</sup> the all-wise leader ; for indeed it is folly to imagine that the servants of God take precedence of His friends in receiving their portion in the land of virtue. No, what he wishes to bring home to you 46 first of all is that children have one place and full-grown men another, the one named training, the other called wisdom : secondly, that the fairest things in nature are objects of sight rather than of possession. For how is it possible to become possessed of things whose allotted place is nearer to the Divine ? Yet to see them is within the bounds of possibility : though not for all. It is exclusively for the purest and most keen-eyed class, on whom the Father of all

PHILO

- ἴδια ἐπιδεικνύμενος ὁ τῶν ὄλων πατήρ ἔργα μεγί-47 στην πασῶν χαρίζεται δωρεάν. θεωρητικοῦ γὰρ τίς ἀμείνων βίος ἢ μᾶλλον οικειούμενος λογικῶ; διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τῆς τῶν θνητῶν ζώων φωνῆς κριτήριον ἐχούσης ἀκοὴν τοὺς τοῦ θεοῦ λόγους οἱ χρησιμοὶ φωτὸς τρόπον ὄρωμένους μη-νύουσι· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ πᾶς ὁ λαὸς ἐώρα τὴν φωνήν,” οὐκ ἤκουεν, ἐπειδήπερ οὐκ ἀέρος πληξίς ἦν διὰ τῶν στόματος καὶ γλώττης ὀργάνων τὸ γινόμενον, ἀλλὰ φέγγος ἀρετῆς τὸ περιαιυγέστατον, λογικῆς ἀδιαφοροῦν πηγῆς, ὃ καὶ ἐτέρωθι μνηύεται τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· “ ὑμεῖς ἐωράκατε, ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λελάληκα πρὸς ὑμᾶς,” οὐχὶ ἠκούσατε, διὰ 48 τὴν αὐτὴν αἰτίαν. ἔστι δ’ ὅπου τὰ ἀκουστὰ τῶν ὀρατῶν καὶ ἀκοὴν ὀράσεως διακρίνει λέγων· “ φωνὴν ῥημάτων ὑμεῖς ἠκούσατε, καὶ ὁμοίωμα οὐκ εἶδετε ἀλλ’ ἢ φωνήν,” ἄγαν περιττῶς· τὴν μὲν γὰρ εἰς ὄνομα καὶ ῥῆμα καὶ συνόλως τὰ τοῦ λόγου μέρη τεμνομένην ἀκουστὴν εἰκότως εἶπεν—ὑπὸ γὰρ ἀκοῆς δοκιμάζεται—, τὴν δὲ μὴ ῥημάτων μὴδ’ ὀνομάτων ἀλλὰ θεοῦ φωνήν, ὄρωμένην τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς 49 ὀμματι, ὀρατὴν δεόντως εἰσάγει. προειπῶν δὲ τὸ “ ὁμοίωμα οὐκ εἶδετε” ἐπιφέρει “ ἀλλ’ ἢ φωνήν,” ἦν πάντως εἶδετε—τὸ γὰρ προσυπακουόμενον τοῦτ’ ἂν εἶη— ὥσθ’ οἱ μὲν τοῦ θεοῦ λόγοι ὄρασιν ἔχουσι τὴν ἐν ψυχῇ κριτήριον, ἀκοὴν δ’ οἱ εἰς ὀνομάτων καὶ ῥημάτων ἰδέας μεριζόμενοι.
 50 καινὸς δ’ ὢν ἐν ἅπασιν τὴν ἐπιστήμην καὶ τοῦτ’

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo connects the “voice of words” with the grammatical use of ῥήματα for verbs and supposes the verse to mean “ordinary human voice you hear, but God’s voice you see.”

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 46-50

things, by shewing to them His own works, bestows an all-surpassing gift. For what life is 47 better than a contemplative life, or more appropriate to a rational being? For this reason, whereas the voice of mortal beings is judged by hearing, the sacred oracles intimate that the words of God are seen as light is seen; for we are told that "all the people saw the Voice" (Ex. xx. 18), not that they heard it; for what was happening was not an impact on air made by the organs of mouth and tongue, but virtue shining with intense brilliance, wholly resembling a fountain of reason, and this is also indicated elsewhere on this wise: "Ye have seen that I have spoken to you out of Heaven" (Ex. xx. 22), not "ye heard," for the same cause as before. In one 48 place the writer distinguishes things heard from things seen and hearing from sight, saying, "Ye heard a voice of words, and saw no similitude but only a voice" (Deut. iv. 12), making a very subtle distinction, for the voice dividing itself into noun and verb and the parts of speech in general<sup>a</sup> he naturally spoke of as "audible," for it comes to the test of hearing: but the voice or sound that was not that of verbs and nouns but of God, seen by the eye of the soul, he rightly represents as "visible." And after first 49 saying "Ye saw no similitude" he adds "but only a Voice," evidently meaning the reader to supply in thought "which you did see." This shews that words spoken by God are interpreted by the power of sight residing in the soul, whereas those which are divided up among the various parts of speech<sup>b</sup> appeal to hearing. Fresh and original as is the 50 insight which he shews in all cases, there is a special

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 562.

PHILO

ιδίως καὶ ξένως κεκαιούργηκεν εἰπὼν ὄρατὴν εἶναι τὴν φωνήν, τὴν μόνην σχεδὸν τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν οὐχ ὄρατὴν ὑπεξηρημένης διανοίας· τὰ μὲν γὰρ [444] κατὰ | τὰς ἄλλας αἰσθήσεις πάνθ' ὄρατά, τὰ χρώματα, οἱ χυλοί, οἱ ἀτμοί, τὰ θερμά, τὰ ψυχρά, τὰ λεία, τὰ τραχέα, τὰ μαλακὰ καὶ σκληρά, ἢ σώματα.

51 τί δέ ἐστι τοῦτο, σαφέστερον ἐρῶ· ὁ χυλὸς ὄρατός ἐστιν, οὐχ ἢ χυλός, ἀλλ' ἢ μόνον σῶμα, τὸ γὰρ ἢ χυλὸς εἴσεται ἢ γεῦσις· καὶ ὁ ἀτμός, ἢ μὲν ἀτμός, ὑπὸ ῥινῶν ἐξετασθήσεται, ἢ δὲ σῶμα, καὶ πρὸς ὀφθαλμῶν· καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ταύτη
52 δοκιμασθήσεται. φωνὴ δὲ οὐθ' ὡς ἀκουστόν οὐθ' ὡς σῶμα, εἰ δὴ καὶ σῶμά ἐστιν, ὄρατόν εἶναι πέφυκεν, ἀλλὰ δύο ταῦτα τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀόρατα, νοῦς καὶ λόγος. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐχ ὁμοιον τὸ ἡμέτερον ἠχεῖον<sup>1</sup> τῷ θείῳ φωνῆς ὀργάνῳ· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἡμέτερον ἀέρι κίρναται καὶ πρὸς τὸν συγγενῆ τόπον καταφεύγει, τὰ ὦτα, τὸ δὲ θεῖον ἀκράτου<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀμιγοῦς ἐστι λόγου, φθάνοντος μὲν ἀκοὴν διὰ λεπτότητα, ὀρωμένου δὲ ὑπὸ ψυχῆς ἀκραιφνοῦς διὰ τὴν ἐν τῷ βλέπειν ὀξύτητα.

53 X. Οὐκοῦν μετὰ τὴν ἀπόλειψιν τῶν θνητῶν πρώτην ὁ θεὸς χαρίζεται τῇ ψυχῇ δωρεάν, ὡς ἔφην, ἐπίδειξιν καὶ θεωρίαν τῶν ἀθανάτων, δευτέραν <δὲ> τὴν εἰς πλήθος ὁμοῦ καὶ μέγεθος τῶν ἀρετῆς δογμάτων ἐπίδοσιν· λέγει γάρ· “καὶ ποιήσω σε εἰς ἔθνος μέγα,” διὰ μὲν τοῦ ἔθνους τὸ πλήθος, διὰ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἠχεῖ (ἠχή) ἐν ὀρ ἠχημα.

<sup>2</sup> mss. (and, strange to say, all editions) ἀκρατοῦς, a word impossible in this context.

* The thought seems to be that, while none of our sensa-

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 50-53

and unusual originality in this instance in his saying that the voice is visible, practically the only thing in us, if understanding be left out of consideration, which is not visible : for the objects of the senses other than the eyes are all of them, colours, savours, perfumes, things warm, things cold, things smooth, things rough, things soft and hard, visible as bodies.

What this means I will state more <sup>51</sup> clearly. The savour is visible, not as a savour, but only as a body, for as savour, it is the taste that will know it ; and the odour, as odour, will be assayed by the nostrils, but as body, by the eyes also ; and the rest will be subject to the same double test.<sup>a</sup> But it is not the nature of voice to be visible whether we regard it as something audible or as body, if body indeed it is ;<sup>b</sup> but of our properties these two are invisible, mind and speech. The truth is that our <sup>52</sup> sound-producer is not similar to the Divine organ of voice ; for ours mingles with air and betakes itself to the place akin to it, the ears ; but the Divine is an organ of pure and unalloyed speech, too subtle for the hearing to catch it, but visible to the soul which is single in virtue of its keenness of sight.

X. So then, the first boon which God vouchsafes <sup>53</sup> to the soul after it has relinquished mortal things is, as I have said, the shewing of things immortal and the power to contemplate them ; and the second, progress in the principles of virtue, alike as regards number and " greatness " : for He says, " And I will make thee to become a great nation," implying by the word " nation " their number, and by the tions are visible, those of taste, smell, and touch are produced by visible objects.

<sup>b</sup> According to the Stoics φωνή is a body, but Philo does not unreservedly accept this.

PHILO

τοῦ μεγάλου τὴν πρὸς τὸ ἄμεινον αὐξήσιν παραλαμ-54 βάνων. τὴν δὲ τοῦ ποσοῦ καθ' ἑκάτερον εἶδος, τό-τε ἐν μεγέθει καὶ τὸ ἐν πλήθει, παραυξήσιν διασυν-ἴσθησι καὶ ὁ τῆς Αἰγύπτου βασιλεύς· “ ἰδὸν ” γάρ-φησι “ τὸ γένος τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ μέγα πλήθος, ” ἐπειδὴ γε ἀμφότερα τῷ ὁρατικῷ τοῦ ὄντος γένει προσμαρτυρεῖ, ὡς πληθύν τε καὶ μέγεθος κτησαμένω, τὰ περὶ τὸν βίον καὶ λόγον κατορθώματα.

55 οὐ γάρ, ὅπερ ἂν τις τὸν ἐν τοῖς ὀνόμασιν εἰρμόν διαφυλάττων, πολὺ πλήθος, ἀλλὰ μέγα εἶπεν, εἰδὼς τὸ πολὺ καθ' αὐτὸ ἀτελὲς μέγεθος, εἰ μὴ προσλάβοι δύναμιν νοήσεως καὶ ἐπιστήμης. τί γὰρ ὄφελος πολλὰ μὲν θεωρήματα παραλαμβάνειν, ἕκαστον δὲ αὐτῶν εἰς τὸ ἀρμόττον μέγεθος μὴ συναυξήσαι; οὐδὲ γὰρ ἀγρὸς τέλειος, ᾧ μυρία μὲν ὄσα ἐνυπάρχει φυτὰ χαμαίζηλα, τέλειον δὲ μηδὲν ἔρνος γεωργικῆ τέχνη συνανέβλασθεν ἤδη καρποτοκεῖν δυνάμενον.

56 τοῦ δὲ μεγέθους καὶ πλήθους τῶν καλῶν ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος ἢ ἀδιάστατος περὶ θεοῦ μνήμη καὶ ἡ κατάκλησις τῆς ἀπ' αὐτοῦ συμμαχίας πρὸς τὸν ἐμφύλιον καὶ συγκεχυμένον καὶ συνεχῆ τοῦ βίου πόλεμον· λέγει γάρ· “ ἰδὸν λαὸς σοφὸς καὶ ἐπιστήμων τὸ ἔθνος τὸ μέγα τοῦτο· ὅτι ποῖον ἔθνος μέγα, ᾧ ἐστι θεὸς ἐγγίζων ὡς κύριος ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν ἐν πάσιν οἷς ἂν αὐτὸν ἐπικαλεσώμεθα ; ”

57
 [445] οὐκοῦν ὅτι καὶ πρὸς βοήθειαν δύνάμις | ἀρωγὸς
 εὐτρεπῆς ἐφεδρεῦει παρὰ θεῷ καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ ἡγεμῶν

<sup>a</sup> Lit. “ growth to something better.”

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 562.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 54-57

word "great" their improvement in quality.<sup>a</sup> How 54 great their advance was in either respect, alike in "greatness" and in number, is made evident by the words of the King of Egypt, "Lo the race of the children of Israel is a great multitude" (Ex. i. 9).
There he bears witness to the race that has eyes to see Him that is, that it has acquired both multitude and greatness, high achievement, that is, both in conduct of life and in principle.<sup>b</sup> For he did not say, 55 as a man strictly observing the association of noun and epithet would say, "much multitude," but "a great multitude," knowing that "much" is but an incomplete greatness, if it stands by itself without the addition of the power to understand and know.
For what advantage is there in receiving (from our teachers) the results of study in plenty, unless we go on to develop each of them to its fitting stature?
For a field, too, is but an imperfect one which contains any number of plants only a little above the ground, but in which no fully formed growth has shot up aided by skilful tillage and able now to yield fruit.

The greatness and large number of the 56 good and noble has for its beginning and end the perpetual recollection of God, and the calling down of the aid that comes from Him, to counter the intestine warfare of life, unbroken in its bewildering irregularity, for it says: "Lo this great nation is a wise and understanding people: for what kind of great nation is there, which has God drawing nigh to it, as the Lord our God in all things in which we call upon Him?" (Deut. iv. 6 f.). So far it 57 has been shewn that there is waiting ready and equipped at God's side strong help to come to our succour, and that the Sovereign Ruler will Himself

PHILO

- ἐγγυτέρω πρόσσεισιν ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τῶν ἀξίων ὠφελίσθαι, δεδήλωται. XI. τίνες δ' οἱ τούτων ἐπάξιοι τυγχάνειν εἰσίν; ἢ δῆλον ὅτι οἱ σοφίας καὶ ἐπιστήμης ἐρασταὶ πάντες; οὗτοι γὰρ εἰσιν ὁ σοφὸς καὶ ἐπιστήμων, ὃν εἶπε, λεώς, ὧν ἕκαστος μέγας εἰκότως ἐστίν, ἐπειδὴ μεγάλων ὀρέγεται, ἐνὸς δὲ καὶ λίαν ὑπερβαλλόντως, τοῦ μὴ διαζευχθῆναι θεοῦ τοῦ μεγίστου, ἀλλὰ τὴν πρόσοδον αὐτοῦ συνεγγίζοντος σταθερῶς ἄνευ καταπλήξεως ὑπομεῖναι.
- 58 οὗτος ὁ ὅρος ἐστὶ τοῦ μεγάλου λεώ,<sup>1</sup> τὸ τῷ θεῷ συνεγγίζειν ἢ “ὦ θεὸς συνεγγίζει.” ὁ μὲν δὴ κόσμος καὶ ὁ κοσμοπολίτης σοφὸς πολλῶν καὶ μεγάλων ἀγαθῶν ἀναπέπλησται, ὁ δὲ ἄλλος ἀνθρώπων ὄμιλος πλείοσι μὲν κέχρηται κακοῖς, ἀγαθοῖς δὲ ἐλάττοσι· σπάνιον γὰρ ἐν πεφυρμένῳ
- 60 καὶ συγκεχυμένῳ βίῳ τὸ καλόν. διόπερ ἐν χρησιμοῖς ἄδεται· “οὐχ ὅτι πολυπληθεῖτε παρὰ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, προείλετο κύριος ὑμᾶς καὶ ἐξελέξατο— ὑμεῖς γὰρ ἐστε ὀλιγοστοὶ παρὰ πάντα τὰ ἔθνη—, ἀλλὰ παρὰ τὸ ἀγαπᾶν κύριον ὑμᾶς.” εἰ γὰρ τις βουληθεῖ τὸν ὄχλον μιᾶς ψυχῆς ὥσπερ κατὰ ἔθνη διανεῖμαι, πολλὰς μὲν ἂν εὔροι τάξεις ἀκοσμούσας, ὧν ἡδοναὶ ἢ ἐπιθυμίαι ἢ λύπαι ἢ φόβοι ἢ πάλιν ἀφροσύνη καὶ ἀδικίαι καὶ αἱ τούτων συγγενεῖς καὶ ἀδελφαί<sup>2</sup> ταξιαρχοῦσι, μίαν δὲ αὐτὸ μόνον εὐ διακεκοσμημένην, ἧς ὁ ὀρθὸς λόγος ἀφηγεῖται.
- 61 παρὰ μὲν οὖν ἀνθρώποις τὸ ἄδικον πλήθος πρὸ ἐνὸς τοῦ δικαίου προτετίμηται, παρὰ δὲ τῷ θεῷ τὸ σπάνιον ἀγαθὸν πρὸ μυρίων ἀδίκων· ὦ καὶ παρ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. θεοῦ.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps, as Wend. suggests, ἀδελφαὶ <κακίαι>.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 57-61

draw near for the benefit of those who are worthy to receive His benefits. XI. But who are they that are worthy to obtain these? Is it not clear that all the lovers of wisdom and knowledge are so? For 58 these are the wise and understanding people which was spoken of, each member of which is with good reason great, since he reaches out after great things; and after one most eagerly, never to be severed from God, the supremely Great, but without dismay steadfastly to abide His approach as He draws near. This 59 is the defining mark of the people that is "great," to draw nigh to God, or to be that "to which God draws nigh."

Now the world and the wise man, the world-citizen,<sup>a</sup> is filled full of good things many and great, but the remaining mass of men experiences evil things in greater number, but fewer good things; for in the medley and confusion of human life that which is fair and goodly is rare and scanty. And for this reason the sacred oracles con- 60 tain this utterance: "Not because ye are numerous beyond all the nations did the Lord prefer and choose you out: for ye surpass all the nations in fewness; but because the Lord loveth you" (Deut. vii. 7 f.). For were a man to desire to distribute, as it were into nations, the crowd contained in a single soul, many disorderly companies would he find, commanded by pleasures or desires or griefs or fears or again by follies and wrongdoings, and the nearest kinsfolk of these, but one only well-ordered, of which right reason is the captain.

Now, in the judge- 61 ment of men the multitude of the unjust is preferred to the single just; but in God's judgement the few good to the myriad unjust; and He charges the just <sup>a</sup> See note on De Op. 3.

PHILO

αγγέλλει μηδέποτε τοιούτῳ συναινέσαι πλήθει. “ οὐκ ἔση ” γάρ φησι “ μετὰ πολλῶν ἐπὶ κακία. ” ἄρ’ οὖν μετ’ ὀλίγων χρή; μετ’ οὐδενὸς μὲν οὖν φαύλου· εἰς δ’ ὧν ὁ φαῦλος πολὺς ἔστι κακίας, ὧ συντάσσεσθαι μεγίστη ζημία· τούναντίον γὰρ ἀνθίστασθαι καὶ πολεμεῖν ἀκαταπλήκτῳ χρωμένους

62 δυνάμει προσήκει. “ ἐὰν ” γάρ φησιν “ ἐξέλθης εἰς πόλεμον ἐπὶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς σου καὶ ἴδῃς ἵππον, ” τὸ ὑπέραυχον καὶ σκιρτητικὸν πάθος ἀφηνιάζον, “ καὶ ἀναβάτην, ” τὸν ἐποχούμενον αὐτῷ φιλοπαθῆ νοῦν, “ καὶ λαὸν πλείονά σου, ” τοὺς ζηλωτὰς τῶν εἰρημένων φαλαγγηδὸν ἐπιόντας, “ οὐ φοβηθήσῃ ἀπ’ αὐτῶν ”· εἰς γὰρ ὧν ἐνὶ τῷ πάντων ἡγεμονίᾳ χρῆσις συμμαχῶ, “ ὅτι κύριος ὁ θεὸς σου μετὰ

63 σοῦ. ” τούτου γὰρ ἡ σύνοδος καθαιρεῖ πολέμους, εἰρήνην ἀνοικοδομεῖ, τὰ πολλὰ καὶ συνήθη κακὰ ἀνατρέπει, τὸ σπάνιον καὶ θεοφιλὲς γένος ἀνασώζει, ὧ πᾶς ὁ γενόμενος ὑπήκοος μισεῖ καὶ βδελύττεται

64 τὰ τῶν γεωδεστέρων στίφη. XII. “ ἂ γὰρ πολυπληθεῖ ” φησί “ ποσὶν ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ἔρπετοῖς τοῖς <ἔρπουσιν> ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, οὐ φάγεσθε, [446] ὅτι βδελύγματά ἐστιν. ” | ἀλλ’ οὐ μίσους ἐστὶν ἐπαξία ψυχῇ μὴ καθ’ ἐν μέρος ἀλλὰ κατὰ πάντα ἢ τὰ πλείστα βαίνουσα ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν καὶ τὰ σώματος περιλιχνεύουσα καὶ συνόλως εἰς τὰς οὐρανοῦ θείας

65 περιόδους ἀνακῦψαι μὴ δυναμένη; καὶ μὴν ὥσπερ τὸ πολὺ πουν, οὕτως καὶ τὸ ἄπουν ἐν ἔρπετοῖς ψεκτόν, τὸ μὲν διὰ τὴν λεχθεῖσαν αἰτίαν, τὸ δ’ ὅτι

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 61-65

never to agree with such a multitude : for He says " Thou shalt not be with many to engage in wickedness " (Ex. xxiii. 2). Should we then be so with few ? Nay, not with any bad man : and the bad man, one though he be, is made manifold by wickednesses, and to range oneself by his side is a very great disaster : on the contrary it behoves us to shew a vigour free from terror and resist him and be at war with him. For it says " If thou go out to war against 62 thine enemies and see horse and rider," that is passion, the insolent, the restive, the unruly, and the passion-loving mind mounted on it, " and a people more numerous than thou art," even the devoted followers of these leaders advancing in serried mass " thou shalt not be afraid of them." One as thou art thou shalt have One fighting on thy side, even the Ruler of all, as it says, " for the Lord Thy God is with thee " (Deut. xx. 1). This companionship 63 brings wars to an end, builds up peace, overthrows the host of evil things to which we grow accustomed, rescues the scanty band of those beloved of God, every loyal adherent of which loathes and hates the battalions of the earth-bound.

XII. For 64 it says : " Whatsoever hath many feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, ye shall not eat, for they are an abomination " (Lev. xi. 42). Now, is not a soul deserving of hatred which moves over the ground not on one part of itself but on all or most parts, even licking with a relish the things of the body, and altogether incapable of lifting its eyes to the holy revolutions of heaven ? And further 65 among creeping things just as that which has many feet is disallowed, so too is that which has no feet, the former for the reason just given, the latter beὄλον δι' ὄλων πέπτωκεν ἐπὶ γῆν, ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐπὶ τὸ βραχύτατον ἐξαιρόμενον· πάντα γὰρ τὸν πορευόμενον ἐπὶ κοιλίαν ἀκάθαρτον εἶναί φησι, τὸν τὰς τῆς γαστρὸς ἡδονὰς μεταδιώκοντα αἰνιτ-66 τόμενος. ἔνιοι δὲ προσυπερβάλλοντες οὐ μόνον τῷ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας ἐχρήσαντο γένει, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἀδελφὸν αὐτῇ πάθος, τὸν θυμόν, προσεκτήσαντο, βουληθέντες ὄλον τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ἄλογον ἐκζωπυρῆσαι μέρος, τὸν δὲ νοῦν διαφθεῖραι· τὸ γὰρ εἰρημένον λόγῳ μὲν ἐπὶ ὄφεως, ἔργῳ δὲ ἐπὶ παντὸς ἀλόγου καὶ φιλοπαθοῦς ἀνθρώπου χρησμός ὡς ἀληθῶς ἐστι θεῖος· “ ἐπὶ τῷ στήθει καὶ τῇ κοιλίᾳ πορεύσῃ” περὶ μὲν γὰρ τὰ στέρνα ὁ θυμός, τὸ δὲ 67 ἐπιθυμίας εἶδος ἐν κοιλίᾳ. πορεύεται δὲ ὁ ἄφρων δι' ἀμφοτέρων, θυμοῦ τε καὶ ἐπιθυμίας, αἰεὶ μηδένα διαλείπων χρόνον, τὸν ἡνίοχον καὶ βραβευτὴν νοῦν ἀποβαλὼν· ὁ δ' ἐναντίος τούτῳ θυμόν μὲν καὶ ἐπιθυμίαν ἐκτέμνεται, κυβερνήτην δὲ ἐπιγέγραπται λόγον θεῖον, καθὰ καὶ Μωυσῆς ὁ θεοφιλέστατος, ὅς, ὅταν τὰς ὀλοκαύτους τῆς ψυχῆς ἱεουργῇ θυσίας, “ τὴν μὲν κοιλίαν ἐκπλυνεῖ,” τουτέστιν ὄλον τὸ ἐπιθυμίας εἶδος ἐκνύβεται, τὸ δὲ “ στηθύνιον ἀπὸ τοῦ κριοῦ τῆς τελειώσεως ἀφελεῖ,” σύμπαντα δήπου τὸν πολεμικὸν θυμόν, ἵνα τὸ λοιπὸν μέρος καὶ ἄμεινον τῆς ψυχῆς, τὸ λογικόν, μηδενὸς ἀντισπῶντος ἔτι καὶ μεθέλκοντος ἐλευθέρους καὶ εὐγε-νέσι τῷ ὄντι χρήσῃται πρὸς τὰ καλὰ πάντα ὄρμαϊς.

PHILO

 68 οὕτως γὰρ εἷς τε πλῆθος καὶ μέγεθος

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 65-68

cause it lies its full length sprawling upon the earth, lifted out of it by nothing even to the smallest extent : for it says that all that goeth upon the belly is unclean (ibid.), indicating by this figure the man who is in pursuit of the pleasures of the belly.

But some, exceeding all bounds, in their determination to kindle into activity all the irrational portion of the soul, and to destroy the mind, have not only indulged all that comes under the head of desire, but taken to them also its brother passion, fierce spirit. For that which was said, " Upon thy breast and thy belly shalt thou go " (Gen. iii. 14), in the literal sense applies to the serpent, but is really a truly Divine oracle applying to every irrational and passion-loving man ; for the breast is the abode of fierce spirit, and desire dwells in the belly. The fool's whole course 67 through every moment of his journey depends on this pair, fierce spirit and desire ; since he has got rid of mind, who is the charioteer and monitor. The man of the opposite character has excised fierce spirit and desire, and chosen as his patron and controlling guide the Divine Word. Even so Moses, best beloved of God, when offering the whole burnt sacrifices of the soul, will " wash out the belly " (Lev. viii. 21), that is, will cleanse away desire in every shape, but " the breast from the ram of consecration he will take away " (Lev. viii. 29). This means, we may be sure, the warlike spirit in its completeness ; and the object of taking it away is that the better portion of the soul, the rational part, that is left, may exercise its truly free and noble impulses towards all things beautiful, with nothing pulling against it any longer and dragging it in another direction.

In these circumstances it will improve both in number 68

PHILO

- ἐπιδώσει· λέγεται γάρ· “ ἕως τίνος παροξυνούσιν ὁ λαὸς οὗτος; καὶ ἕως τίνος οὐ πιστεύουσί μοι ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς σημείοις οἷς ἐποίησα ἐν αὐτοῖς; πατάξω αὐτούς θανάτῳ καὶ ἀπολώ αὐτούς, καὶ ποιήσω σέ καὶ τὸν οἶκον τοῦ πατρός σου εἰς ἔθνος μέγα καὶ πολὺ ἢ τοῦτο.” ἐπειδὴν γὰρ ὁ θυμῷ καὶ ἐπιθυμίᾳ χρώμενος πολὺς ὄμιλος καταλυθῆ τῆς ψυχῆς, πάντως εὐθύς ὁ τῆς λογικῆς φύσεως διεξηρητημένος
- 69 ἀνίσχει καὶ ἀνατέλλει. ὥσπερ δὲ τὸ πολὺπουν καὶ ἄπουν, ἐναντία ὄντα ἐν τῷ γένει τῶν [447] ἐρπετῶν, ἀκάθαρτα | ἀναγράφεται, οὕτως καὶ ἡ ἄθεος καὶ πολύθεος ἀντίπαλοι ἐν ψυχῇ δόξαι βέβηλοι. σημεῖον δέ· ἀμφοτέρας ὁ νόμος ἐκκλησίας ἱερᾶς ἀπελήλακε, τὴν μὲν ἄθεον θλαδίαν καὶ ἀποκεκομμένον εἶρξας ἐκκλησιάζειν, τὴν δὲ πολύθεον τὸν ἐκ πόρνης ὁμοίως κωλύσας ἀκούειν ἢ λέγειν· ἄθεος μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἄγονος, πολύθεος δὲ ὁ ἐκ πόρνης τυφλώττων περὶ τὸν ἀληθῆ πατέρα καὶ διὰ τοῦτο πολλοὺς ἀνθ' ἑνὸς γονεῖς ἐπιγραφόμενος.<sup>1</sup>
- 70 XIII. Δύο μὲν αὐται δωρεαὶ προείρηνται, θεωρητικοῦ τε ἐλπίς βίου καὶ πρὸς πλῆθος καὶ μέγεθος τῶν καλῶν ἐπίδοσις. τρίτη δ' ἐστὶν εὐλογία, ἧς ἄνευ βεβαιώσασθαι τὰς προτέρας χάριτας οὐκ ἔστι· λέγει γάρ· “ καὶ εὐλογήσω σε,” τουτέστιν ἐπαινετὸν λόγον δωρήσομαι· τὸ γὰρ εἶ πάντως ἐπ'

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αἰνιττόμενος. See App. p. 562.

<sup>o</sup> Cf. De Ebr. 213.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 68-70

and greatness : for it is said : " How long shall the people provoke ? and how long shall they refuse to trust Me in all the signs which I wrought among them ? I will smite them with death and will destroy them, and I will make thee and thy father's house a nation great and numerous beyond this one " (Num. xiv. 11 f.). For, in the soul when once the great concourse is broken up, in which fierce spirit and desire prevail, there rises and springs up without fail another concourse, even that which wholly depends on the rational nature. Now 69 just as the creature with many feet and that without feet, opposite species in the genus of creeping things, are proclaimed unclean, so also atheism and polytheism, mutually antagonistic doctrines in the soul, are alike profane. Here is the indication of this : the Law has expelled both of these doctrines from the sacred assembly, atheism, by debarring a eunuch from membership of it ;<sup>a</sup> polytheism, by likewise forbidding the son of a harlot to be a listener or speaker in it (Deut. xxiii. 1 f.). For the sterile man is godless ; and the son of a whore is a polytheist, being in the dark about his real father, and for this reason ascribing his begetting to many, instead of to one.

XIII. Two gifts have been already spoken of, which 70 are these, a hope held out of a life of contemplation, and progress towards abundance and "greatness" of things fair and beautiful. A third gift is " blessing " or excellence of reason and speech, and apart from this it is not possible to make the former gracious gifts secure. He says " And I will bless thee," i.e. " I will endow thee with excellent reason and speech." " Blessing " or " eulogy " is a word compounded of

PHILO

- 71 ἀρετῆς· λόγος δὲ ὁ μὲν πηγῇ ἔοικεν, ὁ δὲ ἀπορροῇ, πηγῇ μὲν ὁ ἐν διανοίᾳ, προφορὰ δὲ ἡ διὰ στόματος καὶ γλώττης ἀπορροῇ. ἐκάτερον δὲ εἶδος λόγου βελτιωθῆναι πολὺς πλοῦτος, διάνοιαν μὲν εὐλογιστίᾳ πρὸς πάντα μικρὰ καὶ μείζω χρωμένην, προφορὰν δὲ ὑπὸ παιδείας ὀρθῆς ἠνιοχουμένην.
- 72 πολλοὶ γὰρ λογίζονται μὲν τὰ βέλτιστα, ὑπὸ δὲ ἑρμηνέως κακοῦ προϋδόθησαν, λόγου, μουσικὴν τὴν ἐγκύκλιον οὐκ ἐκπονήσαντες· οἱ δὲ ἔμπαλιν ἑρμηνεύσαι μὲν ἐγένοντο δυνατώτατοι, βουλευσασθαι δὲ φαυλότατοι, καθάπερ οἱ λεγόμενοι σοφισταί· τούτων γὰρ ἀχόρευτος μὲν καὶ ἄμουσος ἡ διάνοια, πάμμουσοι δὲ αἱ διὰ τῶν φωνητηρίων ὀργάνων
- 73 διέξοδοι. χαρίζεται δὲ ὁ θεὸς τοῖς ὑπηκόοις ἀτελὲς οὐδέν, πλήρη δὲ καὶ τέλεια πάντα· διὸ καὶ νῦν τὴν εὐλογίαν οὐχ ἐνὶ λόγου τμήματι, τοῖς δὲ μέρεσιν ἀμφοτέροις ἐπιπέμπει δικαίων τὸν εὐεργετούμενον καὶ ἐνθυμείσθαι τὰ βέλτιστα καὶ ἐξαγγέλλειν τὰ νοηθέντα δυνατῶς· ἡ γὰρ τελειότης δι' ἀμφοῖν, ὡς ἔοικε, τοῦ τε ὑποβάλλοντος τὰ ἐνθυμήματα καθαρῶς καὶ τοῦ διερμηνεύοντος αὐτὰ
- 74 ἀπταιστώσως. ἡ οὐχ ὀρᾶς τὸν Ἄβελ—ὄνομα δέ ἐστι τὰ θνητὰ πενθοῦντος καὶ τὰ ἀθάνατα εὐδαιμονίζοντος—, ὡς ἀνεπιλήπτω μὲν κέχρηται διανοίᾳ, τῷ δὲ μὴ γεγυμνάσθαι περὶ λόγους ἡττηται πρὸς δεινοῦ παλαῖσαι Κάιν<sup>1</sup> τέχνη μᾶλλον ἢ ῥώμη περι-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καὶ.

* For Philo's use of εὐλογιστία in connexion with εὐλογεῖν see note on De Sobr. 18.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 71-74

“ well ” and “ logos. ” Of these, “ well ” connotes 71 nothing but excellence: “ logos ” has two aspects, one resembling a spring, the other its outflow; “ logos ” in the understanding resembles a spring, and is called “ reason, ” while utterance by mouth and tongue is like its outflow, and is called “ speech. ” That each species of logos should be improved is vast wealth, the understanding having good reasoning<sup>a</sup> at its command for all things great and small, and utterance being under the guidance of right training. For many 72 reason excellently, but find speech a bad interpreter of thought and are by it betrayed, through not having had a thorough grounding in the ordinary subjects of culture. Others, again, have shewn great ability in expounding themes, and yet been most evil thinkers, such as the so-called sophists; for the understanding of these men is wholly untrained by the Muses, whose united voice is heard in the output of the vocal organs.
But God bestows on those who obey Him no im- 73 perfect boon. All His gifts are full and complete.
And so, in this case also, He does not send the blessing or “ logos-excellence ” in one division of logos, but in both its parts, for He holds it just that the recipient of His bounty should both conceive the noblest conceptions and give masterly expression to his ideas.
For perfection depends, as we know, on both divisions of logos, the reason which suggests the ideas with clearness, and the speech which gives unflinching expression to them.

Do you not notice 74
Abel, whose name stands for one to whom things mortal are a grief and things immortal are full of happiness, how, though he has the advantage of a faultless understanding, yet through lack of training in speaking he is worsted by Cain, a clever wrestler

PHILO

- 75 γενέσθαι δυναμένου; διὸ καὶ θαυμάζων τῆς περὶ τὴν φύσιν εὐμοιρίας τὸν τρόπον αἰτιῶμαι τοσοῦτον, ὅτι προκληθεὶς εἰς ἄμιλλαν λόγων ἤκεν ἀγωνιούμενος, δέον ἐπὶ τῆς συνήθους ἡρεμίας στήναι πολλὰ χαίρειν φράσαντα τῷ φιλονείκῳ, εἰ δ' ἄρα ἐβούλετο πάντως διαγωνίσασθαι, μὴ πρότερον κόνισσασθαι ἢ
- [448] τοῖς | τεχνικοῖς παλαίσμασιν ἐνασκηθῆναι· τῶν γὰρ ἀγροικοσόφων οἱ τὰ πολιτικὰ κεκομψευμένοι μάλι-
- 76 στά πως εἰώθασι περιεῖναι. XIV. διὸ καὶ Μωυσῆς ὁ πάνσοφος παραιτεῖται μὲν εἰς τὴν τῶν εὐλόγων καὶ πιθανῶν ἐπίσκεψιν ἔλθειν, ἀφ' οὗ τὸ ἀληθείας φέγγος ἤρξατο ὁ θεὸς ἐναστράπτειν αὐτῷ διὰ τῶν ἐπιστήμης καὶ σοφίας αὐτῆς ἀθανάτων λόγων, ἄγεται δὲ οὐδὲν ἥττον πρὸς τὴν θέαν αὐτῶν οὐχ ἕνεκα τοῦ πλειόνων ἔμπειρος γενέσθαι πραγμάτων—ἀποχρῶσι γὰρ αἱ περὶ θεοῦ καὶ τῶν ἱερωτάτων αὐτοῦ δυνάμεων ζητήσεις τῷ φιλοθεάμονι—, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ περιγενέσθαι τῶν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ σοφιστῶν, οἷς αἱ<sup>1</sup> μυθικαὶ πιθανότητες πρὸ τῆς τῶν
- 77 ἀληθῶν ἐναργείας τετίμηνται. ὅταν μὲν οὖν τοῖς τοῦ πανηγεμόνος ἔμπεριπατῆ πράγμασιν ὁ νοῦς, οὐδενὸς ἐτέρου προσδεῖται πρὸς τὴν θεωρίαν, ἐπειδὴ τῶν νοητῶν μόνῃ διάνοια ὀφθαλμὸς ὄξυωπέστατος· ὅταν δὲ καὶ τοῖς κατὰ αἴσθησιν ἢ πάθος ἢ σῶμα, ὧν ἔστιν ἡ Αἰγύπτου χώρα σύμβολον, δεήσεται καὶ τῆς περὶ λόγους τέχνης ὁμοῦ καὶ
- 78 δυνάμεως. οὗ χάριν ἐπάγεσθαι τὸν Ἄαρὼν αὐτῷ διείρηται, τὸν προφορικὸν λόγον· “οὐκ ἰδοῦ” φησὶν “Ἄαρὼν ὁ ἀδελφός σου;”

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔσαι.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 75-78

able to prevail by skill rather than strength ? Where- 75 fore, admiring as I do his character for its rich natural endowment, I find fault with him in so far as, when challenged to a contest of words, he came forward to engage in it, whereas he ought to have maintained his wonted quietude, totally disregarding his quarrelsome brother ; and, if he was quite bent on fighting it out, not to have entered the lists until he had had some practice in scientific grips and tricks ; for village sages usually get the worst of it when they encounter those who have acquired the cleverness of the town.

XIV. That is why Moses, the man of all 76 wisdom, though he excuses himself from investigating well-worded and specious arguments, from the time that God began to flash into him the light of truth by means of the undying words of the very self of Knowledge and Wisdom (Ex. iv. 10), yet is led none the less to look into them, not for the sake of gaining acquaintance with a greater number of subjects—for the lover of contemplation finds researches touching God and His most holy powers all-sufficing—but with a view to getting the better of the sophists in Egypt, for whom specious sounding fables are of more value than the clear evidence of realities. Yes, whensoever 77 the mind is moving amid matters concerned with the Ruler of all, it needs no extraneous help in its study, inasmuch as for objects of intellectual apprehension unaided mind is an eye of keenest sight : but when it is occupied besides with matters affected by sense-perception or passion or the body, of which the land of Egypt is a symbol, it will need alike the art of speaking and ability in exercising it. For the sake 78 of this he was enjoined to call to his aid Aaron, the logos in utterance. “ Lo,” saith He, “ is not Aaron

PHILO

μιᾶς γὰρ ἀμφοῖν τῆς λογικῆς φύσεως μητρὸς οὔσης ἀδελφὰ δῆπου τὰ γεννήματα. “ἐπίσταμαι, ὅτι λαλήσει.” διανοίας μὲν γὰρ τὸ καταλαμβάνειν, προφορᾶς δὲ τὸ λαλεῖν ἴδιον. “λαλήσει” φησὶν “αὐτός σοι.” τὰ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῷ ταμιευόμενα μὴ 79 δυνάμενος ὁ νοῦς ἀπαγγεῖλαι τῷ πλησίον ἐρμηνεῖ χρῆται λόγῳ πρὸς τὴν ὧν πέπονθε δῆλωσιν. εἴτ’ ἐπιλέγει. “ἰδοὺ αὐτὸς ἐξελεύσεται εἰς συνάντησίν σοι,” ἐπειδὴ τῷ ὄντι ὁ λόγος τοῖς ἐνθυμήμασιν ὑπαντῶν, ῥήματα καὶ ὀνόματα προστιθεῖς χαράττει τὰ ἄσημα, ὡς ἐπίσημα ποιεῖν. καὶ “ἰδὼν σε” φησὶ “χαρήσεται ἐν αὐτῷ.” γήθει γὰρ ὁ λόγος καὶ εὐφραίνεται,<sup>1</sup> ὅταν μὴ ἀμυδρὸν ἦ τὸ ἐνθύμημα, διότι τηλαυγοῦς ὄντος ἀπταιστώ καὶ εὐτρόχῳ διερμηνεύσει χρῆται κυρίων καὶ εὐθυβόλων καὶ γεμόντων πολλῆς ἐμφάσεως εὐπορῶν ὀνομάτων.
 80 XV. ἐπειδὴν γοῦν ἀδηλότερα πῶς ἢ τὰ νοήματα, κατὰ κενοῦ βαίνει καὶ ὀλισθῶν πολλάκις μέγα πτώμα ἔπεσεν, ὡς μηκέτι ἀναστῆναι δύνασθαι.
 “καὶ ἐρεῖς πρὸς αὐτὸν καὶ δώσεις τὰ ῥήματά μου εἰς τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ,” ἴσον τῷ ὑπηχῆσεις αὐτῷ τὰ ἐνθυμήματα, ἃ ῥημάτων καὶ λόγων ἀδιαφορεῖ 81 θείων· ἄνευ γὰρ τοῦ ὑποβολέως οὐ φθέγγεται ὁ λόγος, ὑποβολεὺς δὲ λόγου νοῦς, ὡς νοῦ θεός.
 “καὶ αὐτός σοι προσλαλήσει πρὸς τὸν λαόν, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται σου στόμα· σὺ δὲ αὐτῷ ἔση τὰ πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. εὐφορεῖ.

<sup>a</sup> Or “express.” ἀπαγγελία is often used in rhetoric as a synonym for ἐρμηνεία. See on § 35.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 563.

<sup>c</sup> Or “in himself” (ἐν αὐτῷ). See App. p. 563.

<sup>d</sup> The phrase ῥημάτων καὶ λόγων must not be confused with the common collocation ῥ. καὶ ὀνομάτων (“verbs and nouns”)

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 78-81

thy brother ? ” For the logical nature being the one mother of them both, its offspring are of course brothers. “ I know that he will speak ” (He continues). For it is the property of understanding to apprehend, and of utterance to speak. “ He,” saith He, “ will speak for thee.” For the mind, unable to report<sup>a</sup> the thoughts stored up in it, employs speech which stands hard by as an interpreter, for the making known of its experiences. Then He adds, “ Lo, it is 79 he that shall come out to meet thee ” : for it is indeed a fact that speech meeting the mind’s conceptions, and wedding the parts of speech to them, mints them like uncoined gold, and gives the stamp of expression to what was unstamped and unexpressed before.<sup>b</sup> And saith He, “ On seeing thee he will rejoice in it<sup>c</sup> ” (Ex. iv. 14) : for speech does exult and is glad, when the conception is not indistinct, because it finds that the wording which issues from its rich store of terms apt and expressive and full of vividness is fluent and unhalting when the thought is luminous. XV. And similarly when the ideas to be expressed are 80 in any way deficient in clearness, speech is stepping on empty air and is apt to slip and have a bad fall and be unable to get up again. “ And thou shalt speak to him and shall put My words into his mouth.” This is equivalent to saying “ Thou shalt suggest to him the thoughts,” for “ thoughts ” are nothing else than God’s “ words ” or speech.<sup>d</sup> For without the prompter 81 speech will give forth no utterance, and mind is the prompter of speech, as God is of mind. “ And he shall speak to the people for thee, and he shall be thy mouth, and thou shalt be his Godward things ” for speech in general. Here the ρημάτων echoes the ρήματα of the quoted text, and is then interpreted by λόγων (speech).

PHILO

τὸν θεόν”· ἐμφαντικώτατα τό τε “ προσλαλήσει σοι ” φάναι, ὡς διερμηνεύσει τὰ σά, καὶ ὅτι [449] “ ἔσται σου | στόμα”· διὰ γὰρ γλώττης καὶ στόματος φερόμενον τὸ τοῦ λόγου νᾶμα συνεκφέρει τὰ νοήματα. ἀλλ’ ὁ μὲν λόγος ἐρμηνεὺς διανοίας πρὸς ἀνθρώπους, ἡ δὲ διάνοια γίνεται τῷ λόγῳ τὰ πρὸς τὸν θεόν, ταῦτα δὲ ἔστιν ἐνθυμήματα, ὧν 82 μόνος ὁ θεὸς ἐπίσκοπος. ἀναγκαῖον οὖν ἔστι τῷ μέλλοντι πρὸς ἀγῶνα σοφιστικὸν ἀπαντᾶν ἐπιμεμεληθῆσθαι λόγων ἐρρωμένως οὕτως, ὡς μὴ μόνον ἐκφεύγειν τὰ παλαίσματα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀντεπι-τιθέμενον ἀμφοτέροις, τέχνη τε καὶ δυνάμει, περι-83 εῖναι. ἢ οὐχ ὄρας τοὺς ἐπαιδοὺς καὶ φαρμακευτὰς ἀντισοφιστεύοντας τῷ θεῷ λόγῳ καὶ τοῖς παραπλη-σίοις τολμῶντας ἐγχειρεῖν, οὐχ οὕτως ἐπὶ τῷ τὴν ἰδίαν ἐπιστήμην ἀποφῆναι περιβόητον, ὡς ἐπὶ τῷ διασῦραι καὶ χλευάσαι τὰ γινόμενα; καὶ γὰρ τὰς βακτηρίας εἰς δρακόντων μεταστοιχειοῦσι φύσεις, καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ εἰς αἵματος χροῖαν μετατρέπουσι, καὶ τῶν βατράχων τὸ ὑπολειφθὲν ἐπωδαῖς ἀνέλκου-σιν ἐπὶ γῆν, καὶ πάντα οἱ κακοδαίμονες τὰ πρὸς τὸν οἰκεῖον ὄλεθρον συναύξοντες ἀπατᾶν δοκοῦντες 84 ἀπατῶνται. πρὸς οὓς πῶς ἐνῆν ἀπαντῆσαι μὴ τὸν ἐρμηνεῖα διανοίας λόγον, Ἄαρῶν ἐπὶ κλησιν, ἐτοι-μασάμενον; ὃς νῦν μὲν εἴρηται στόμα,<sup>1</sup> αὖθις δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. σόφισμα.

---

<sup>a</sup> The sense of the section is that human thoughts being in the charge of or inspired by God may be called God's words, and thus the mind which conceives them is "the Godward things," i.e. stands in the relation of God to the mouth.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 81-84

(Ex. iv. 15 f.). Very vivid are his expressions. Not only does he say "he shall speak to them for thee," as much as to say "he shall put thy thoughts into words"; but he adds "he shall be thy mouth"; for the stream of speech flowing over tongue and mouth carries forth the thoughts with it. But, whereas speech is understanding's interpreter manward, understanding occupies toward speech the position of its Godward things, namely thoughts and intents, which are in God's charge solely.<sup>a</sup> It is a 82 vital matter, then, for one about to face a contest with sophists to have paid attention to words with such thoroughness as not only to elude the grips of his adversary but to take the offensive in his turn and prove himself superior both in skill and strength. You must have observed how the aim of those who 83 use charms and enchantments, when they bring their trickery into play against the Divine word and dare to attempt to do things like those which it does, is not so much to win honour for their own skill as to traduce and ridicule the miracles which are taking place. They transform the rods into real snakes, and turn the water to the colour of blood, and by incantations draw up on to land what frogs are still left<sup>b</sup> (Ex. vii. 12, 22, viii. 7), and, as they add one thing to another tending to their own destruction, they are cheated, miserable fools, while they think that they are cheating. How would it have been possible for Moses to 84 encounter these men, had he not had in readiness speech the interpreter of thought, who is called Aaron? In this place Aaron or speech is spoken of as a "mouth"; further on he will also bear the <sup>b</sup> i.e. after Aaron had called up frogs over the whole land of Egypt.

PHILO

καὶ προφήτης κεκλήσεται, ὅταν καὶ ὁ νοῦς ἐπιθειά-σας προσρηθῆ θεός· “ δίδωμι γάρ σε ” φησί “ θεὸν Φαραώ, καὶ Ἀαρὼν ὁ ἀδελφός σου ἔσται σου προφήτης.” ὡ ἀκολουθίας ἐναρμονίου· τὸ γὰρ ἐρμηνεύον τὰ θεοῦ προφητικόν ἐστι γένος ἐνθέω

85 κατοκωχῆ τε καὶ μανία χρώμενον. τοι-γαροῦν “ ἡ ράβδος ἡ Ἀαρὼν κατέπιε τὰς ἐκείνων ράβδους,” ὡς δηλοῖ τὸ λόγιον· ἐγκαταπίνονται γὰρ καὶ ἀφανίζονται πάντες οἱ σοφιστικοὶ λόγοι τῇ τῆς φύσεως ἐντέχνῳ ποικιλίᾳ, ὡς ὁμολογεῖν ὅτι “ δάκτυλος θεοῦ ” τὰ γινόμενά ἐστιν, ἴσον τῷ γράμμα θεῖον διαγορευθὲν αἰεὶ σοφιστείαν ὑπὸ σοφίας ἡττᾶ-σθαι· δακτύλῳ γὰρ θεοῦ καὶ τὰς πλάκας, ἐν αἷς ἐστηλιτεύθησαν οἱ χρησιμοί, φησὶν ὁ ἱερός λόγος γραφῆναι. διόπερ οὐκέτι δύνανται οἱ φαρμακευταὶ στήναι ἐναντίον Μωυσεῖ, πίπτουσι δ’ ὡς ἐν ἀγῶνι ρώμῃ τοῦ ἀντιπάλου νικηθέντες καρτερᾶ.<sup>1</sup>

86 XVI. Τίς οὖν ἡ τετάρτη δωρεά; τὸ μεγαλ-ώνυμον· φησὶ γάρ· “ μεγαλυνῶ τὸ ὄνομά σου.” τὸ δέ ἐστίν, ὡς γ’ ἐμοὶ φαίνεται, τοιόνδε· ὥσπερ τὸ ἀγαθὸν εἶναι καὶ καλόν, οὕτω καὶ τὸ δοκεῖν εἶναι λυσιτελές. καὶ ἀμείνων μὲν δόξης ἀλήθεια, εὐδαιμον δὲ τὸ ἐξ ἀμφοῖν· μυρίοι γὰρ ἀνόθως καὶ ἀκολακεύτως προσελθόντες ἀρετῇ καὶ τὸ γνήσιον αὐτῆς ἐναυγασάμενοι κάλλος, τῆς παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς φήμης οὐ φροντίσαντες ἐπεβουλεύθησαν, κακοὶ

87 νομισθέντες οἱ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀγαθοί. καὶ μὴν |
[450] οὐδὲ τοῦ δοκεῖν ὄφελος μὴ πολὺ πρότερον τοῦ εἶναι

<sup>1</sup> Mangey suggests κραταιοτέρᾳ.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 84-87

name of " prophet," when the mind too is inspired and entitled " God." For He says " I give thee as God to Pharaoh, and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet " (Ex. vii. 1). How perfect is the harmony shewn in the sequence of thought ! For it is the prophet kind, when under the influence of a Divine possession and ecstasy, that interprets the thoughts of God. Accordingly " Aaron's rod swallowed 85 up their rods " (Ex. vii. 12), as the oracle shews. For all the arguments of sophists are devoured and done away with by Nature's many-sided skill, and the acknowledgement is made that these events are the Finger of God (Ex. viii. 19), and the word " Finger " is equivalent to a divine rescript, declaring that sophistry is ever defeated by wisdom ; for holy writ, speaking of the tables on which the oracles were engraved, says that they were written by the Finger of God (Ex. xxxii. 16). Wherefore the sorcerers can no longer stand before Moses, but fall as in a wrestling-bout vanquished by the sturdy strength of the opponent (Ex. viii. 18).

XVI. What, then, is the fourth gift ? That of a 86 great name ; for He says " I will make thy name great " (Gen. xii. 2). The meaning of this appears to me to be as follows. As it is an advantage to be good and morally noble, so is it to be reputed such. And, while the reality is better than the reputation, happiness comes of having both. For very many, after coming to Virtue's feet with no counterfeit or unreal homage and with their eyes open to her genuine loveliness, through paying no regard to the general opinion have become the objects of hostility, just because they were held to be bad, when they were really good. It is true that there is no good in being 87

PHILO

- προσόντος, ὡσπερ ἐπὶ σωμάτων πέφυκεν ἔχειν· εἰ γὰρ πάντες ἄνθρωποι τὸν νοσοῦντα ὑγιαίνειν ἢ τὸν ὑγιαίνοντα νοσεῖν ὑπολάβοιεν, ἢ δόξα καθ' αὐτὴν
- 88 οὔτε νόσον οὔτε ὑγείαν ἐργάσεται. ᾧ δὲ ἀμφότερα δεδώρηται ὁ θεός, καὶ τὸ εἶναι καλῶ καὶ ἀγαθῶ καὶ τὸ δοκεῖν εἶναι, οὗτος πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐδαίμων καὶ τῶ ὄντι μεγαλῶνυμος. προνοητέον δ' ὡς μεγάλου πράγματος καὶ πολλὰ τὸν μετὰ σώματος βίον ὠφελούντος εὐφημίας. περιγίνεται δ' αὕτη σχεδὸν ἅπασιν, ὅσοι χαίροντες σὺν ἀσμενισμῶ μηδὲν κινουσι τῶν καθεστηκότων νομίμων, ἀλλὰ τὴν πάτριον πολιτείαν οὐκ ἀμελῶς φυλάττουσιν.
- 89 Εἰσὶ γὰρ τινες οἱ τοὺς ῥητοὺς νόμους σύμβολα νοητῶν πραγμάτων ὑπολαμβάνοντες τὰ μὲν ἄγαν ἠκρίβωσαν, τῶν δὲ ῥαθύμως ὀλιγόρησαν· οὓς μεμψαίμην ἂν ἔγωγε τῆς εὐχερείας· ἔδει γὰρ ἀμφοτέρων ἐπιμεληθῆναι, ζητήσεώς τε τῶν ἀφανῶν ἀκριβεστέρας καὶ ταμείας τῶν φανερῶν ἀνεπι-
- 90 λήπτου. νυνὶ δ' ὡσπερ ἐν ἐρημίᾳ καθ' ἑαυτοὺς μόνοι ζῶντες ἢ ἀσώματοι ψυχαὶ γεγονότες καὶ μήτε πόλιν μήτε κώμην μήτ' οἰκίαν μήτε συνόλως θίασον ἀνθρώπων εἰδότες, τὰ δοκοῦντα τοῖς πολλοῖς ὑπερκύψαντες τὴν ἀλήθειαν γυμνήν αὐτὴν ἐφ' ἑαυτῆς ἐρευνῶσιν· οὓς ὁ ἱερός λόγος διδάσκει χρηστῆς ὑπολήψεως πεφροντικέναι καὶ μηδὲν τῶν ἐν τοῖς ἔθεσι λύειν, ἃ θεσπέσιοι καὶ μείζους ἄνδρες
- 91 ἢ καθ' ἡμᾶς ὤρισαν. μὴ γὰρ ὅτι ἡ

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 87-91

thought to be this or that, unless you are so long before you are thought to be so. It is naturally so in the case of our bodies. Were all the world to suppose the sickly man to be healthy, or the healthy man to be sickly, the general opinion by itself will produce neither sickness nor health. But he on whom God 88 has bestowed both gifts, both to be morally noble and good and to have the reputation of being so, this man is really happy and his name is great in very deed. We should take thought for fair fame as a great matter and one of much advantage to the life which we live in the body. And this fair fame is won as a rule by all who cheerfully take things as they find them and interfere with no established customs, but maintain with care the constitution of their country.

There are some who, regarding laws in their literal 89 sense in the light of symbols of matters belonging to the intellect, are overpunctilious about the latter, while treating the former with easy-going neglect. Such men I for my part should blame for handling the matter in too easy and off-hand a manner: they ought to have given careful attention to both aims, to a more full and exact investigation of what is not seen and in what is seen to be stewards without reproach. As it is, as though they were living alone by them- 90 selves in a wilderness, or as though they had become disembodied souls, and knew neither city nor village nor household nor any company of human beings at all, overlooking all that the mass of men regard, they explore reality in its naked absoluteness. These men are taught by the sacred word to have thought for good repute, and to let go nothing that is part of the customs fixed by divinely empowered men greater than those of our time. It is quite true 91

PHILO

ἑβδόμη δυνάμειος μὲν τῆς περὶ τὸ ἀγένητον, ἀπραξίας δὲ τῆς περὶ τὸ γενητὸν δίδαγμα ἔστι, τὰ ἐπ' αὐτῇ νομοθετηθέντα λύωμεν, ὡς πῦρ ἐναυεῖν ἢ γεωπονεῖν ἢ ἀχθοφορεῖν ἢ ἐγκαλεῖν ἢ δικάζειν ἢ παρακαταθήκας ἀπαιτεῖν ἢ δάνεια ἀναπράττειν ἢ τὰ ἄλλα ποιεῖν, ὅσα κὰν τοῖς μὴ ἑορτώδεσι καιροῖς 92 ἐφέϊται· μηδ' ὅτι ἡ ἑορτὴ σύμβολον ψυχικῆς εὐ-φροσύνης ἔστι καὶ τῆς πρὸς θεὸν εὐχαριστίας, ἀποταξώμεθα ταῖς κατὰ τὰς ἑτησίους ὥρας πανηγύρεσι· μηδ' ὅτι τὸ περιτέμνεσθαι ἡδονῆς καὶ παθῶν πάντων ἐκτομὴν καὶ δόξης ἀναίρεσιν ἀσε-βουῶς ἐμφαίνει, καθ' ἣν ὑπέλαβεν ὁ νοῦς ἰκανὸς εἶναι γεννᾶν δι' ἑαυτοῦ, ἀνέλωμεν τὸν ἐπὶ τῇ περιτομῇ τεθέντα νόμον· ἐπεὶ καὶ τῆς περὶ τὸ ἱερὸν ἀγιστείας καὶ μυρίων ἄλλων ἀμελήσομεν, εἰ μόνοις 93 προσέξομεν τοῖς δι' ὑπονοιῶν δηλουμένοις. ἀλλὰ χρῆ ταῦτα μὲν σώματι εἰκέναι νομίζειν, ψυχῇ δὲ [451] ἐκεῖνα· ὡσπερ οὖν σώματος, ἐπειδὴ | ψυχῆς ἔστιν οἶκος, προνοητέον, οὕτω καὶ τῶν ῥητῶν νόμων ἐπιμελητέον· φυλαττομένων γὰρ τούτων ἀριδηλό-τερον κἀκεῖνα γνωρισθήσεται, ὧν εἰσιν οὗτοι σύμβολα, πρὸς τῷ καὶ τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν πολλῶν μέμ-94 φεις καὶ κατηγορίας ἀποδιδράσκειν. οὐχ ὀρᾶς, ὅτι καὶ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ σοφῷ καὶ μεγάλα ἀγαθὰ καὶ μικρὰ προσεῖναι φησι, καὶ καλεῖ τὰ μὲν μεγάλα

<sup>a</sup> The force of περὶ would perhaps be given better by "inherent in." The thought is that the Sabbatical rest reminds us that all our labouring is ineffectual compared with the eternal activity of God. Cf. Quis Rerum 170, and De Cher. 87 ff.

<sup>b</sup> Or "keeping of festivals (in general)." Cf. De Spec.
Leg. ii. 41.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 91-94

that the Seventh Day is meant to teach the power of the Unoriginate and the non-action of created beings.<sup>a</sup> But let us not for this reason abrogate the laws laid down for its observance, and light fires or till the ground or carry loads or institute proceedings in court or act as jurors or demand the restoration of deposits or recover loans, or do all else that we are permitted to do as well on days that are not festival seasons. It is true also that the Feast<sup>b</sup> is a symbol of 92 gladness of soul and of thankfulness to God, but we should not for this reason turn our backs on the general gatherings of the year's seasons. It is true that receiving circumcision does indeed portray the excision of pleasure and all passions, and the putting away of the impious conceit, under which the mind supposed that it was capable of begetting by its own power : but let us not on this account repeal the law laid down for circumcising. Why, we shall be ignoring the sanctity of the Temple and a thousand other things, if we are going to pay heed to nothing except what is shewn us by the inner meaning of things. Nay, we should look on all these outward observances 93 as resembling the body, and their inner meanings as resembling the soul. It follows that, exactly as we have to take thought for the body, because it is the abode of the soul, so we must pay heed to the letter of the laws. If we keep and observe these, we shall gain a clearer conception of those things of which these are the symbols ; and besides that we shall not incur the censure of the many and the charges they are sure to bring against us. Notice that it 94 says that wise Abraham had good things both great and small, and it calls the great ones " property," ὑπάρχοντα καὶ ὑπαρκτά, ἃ τῷ γνησίῳ κληρονομεῖν ἐφέϊται μόνῳ, τὰ δὲ μικρὰ δόματα, ὧν οἱ νόθοι καὶ ἐκ παλλακῶν ἀξιοῦνται; ἐκεῖνα μὲν οὖν ἔοικε τοῖς φύσει, ταῦτα δὲ τοῖς θέσει νομίμοις.

PHILO

- 95 XVII. "Αγαμαι καὶ τῆς παναρέτου Λείας, ἣτις ἐπὶ τῆς Ἀσὴρ γενέσεως, ὅς ἐστι τοῦ αἰσθητοῦ καὶ νόθου σύμβολον πλούτου, φησί· "μακαρία ἐγώ, ὅτι μακαριοῦσί με αἱ γυναῖκες." στοχάζεται γὰρ ὑπολήψεως ἐπιεικοῦς, δικαιοῦσα μὴ μόνον ὑπὸ ἀρρένων καὶ ἀνδρείων ὡς ἀληθῶς λόγων ἐπαινεῖσθαι, παρ' οἷς ἡ ἀλώβητος φύσις καὶ τὸ ἀληθές ἀδέκαστον τετίμηται, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς τῶν θηλυτέρων, οἳ τῶν φαινομένων πάντα τρόπον ἤττηνται μηδὲν ἔξω τούτων θεωρητὸν νοῆσαι δυνάμενοι.
- 96 τελείας δὲ ψυχῆς ἐστι καὶ τοῦ εἶναι καὶ τοῦ δοκεῖν εἶναι μεταποιεῖσθαι, καὶ σπουδάζειν μὴ μόνον παρὰ
- 97 τῇ ἀνδρωνίτιδι εὐδοκιμεῖν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς τῆς γυναικωνίτιδος ἐστίας ἐπαινεῖσθαι. διὸ καὶ Μωυσῆς τὴν τῶν ἱερῶν ἔργων κατασκευὴν οὐ μόνον ἀνδράσιν ἀλλὰ καὶ γυναῖξιν ἐπέτρεψε ποιεῖσθαι· τά τε γὰρ νήματα πάντα τῆς ὑακίνθου καὶ πορφύρας καὶ κοκκίνου καὶ βύσσου καὶ τριχῶν αἰγείων ἐπιτελοῦσι, καὶ τὸν ἑαυτῶν κόσμον ἀόκνως εἰσφέρουσι, "σφραγίδας, ἐνώτια, δακτυλίους, περιδέξια, ἐμπλόκια," πάνθ' ὅσα χρυσὸν εἶχε τὴν ὕλην, τὸν σώματος κόσμον ἀντικαταλλαττόμενοι τοῦ τῆς
- 98 εὐσεβείας· προσφιλοτιμούμεναι μέντοι καὶ τὰ κάτοπτρα ἑαυτῶν συγκαθιεροῦσιν εἰς τὴν τοῦ λουτῆρος κατασκευὴν, ἵν' οἱ μέλλοντες ἱεουργεῖν

<sup>a</sup> Philo interprets the ὑπάρχοντα of the LXX (property), as equivalent to the philosophical term ὑπαρκτά (really existing). See App. p. 563.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 94-98

that is, realities,<sup>a</sup> which went by entail to his legitimate son alone. The small ones it calls "gifts," and to receive these the base-born sons of the concubines are deemed worthy (Gen. xxv. 5, 6). The former correspond to natural, the latter to positive laws.

XVII. I admire also all-virtuous Leah, because 95 when Asher was born, symbol of counterfeit wealth the outward and visible, she cries "Happy am I, for the women will call me happy" (Gen. xxx. 13). She aims at being favourably regarded, thinking praise due to her not only from thoughts<sup>b</sup> masculine and truly manly, by which the nature that has no blemish and truth impervious to bribes is held in honour, but also from those which are more feminine, which are wholly at the mercy of appearances and powerless to understand anything presented to contemplation outside them. It is characteristic of a perfect soul to 96 aspire both to be and to be thought to be, and to take pains not only to have a good reputation in the men's quarters, but to receive the praises of the women's as well.

It was for this reason that Moses 97 gave in charge not to men only but to women also to provide the sacred appointments of the Tabernacle: for it is the women who do all the weavings of blue and scarlet and linen and goat's hair (Ex. xxxv. 22 f.), and they contribute without hesitation their own jewellery, "seals, ear-rings, rings, bracelets, hair-clasps," all that was made of gold, exchanging the adornment of their persons for the adornment of piety. Nay, in their abounding enthusiasm, they 98 dedicate their mirrors for the making of the laver (Ex. xxxviii. 26), to the end that those who are about ἀπονιπτόμενοι χεῖρας καὶ πόδας, τὰ ἐγχειρήματα οἷς ἐφορμεῖ καὶ ἐνίδρυνται<sup>1</sup> ὁ νοῦς, ἐνοπτριζώνται ἑαυτοὺς κατὰ μνήμην τῶν ἐσόπτρων, ἐξ ὧν ὁ λουτήρ δεδημιούργηται· οὕτω γὰρ οὐδὲν αἰσχος ἐν τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς εἶδει περιόψονται γινόμενον, ἤδη δὲ τὸ νηστείας καὶ καρτερίας ἀνάθημα ἀναθήσουσιν ἱεροπρεπέστατον καὶ τελεώτατον ἀναθημάτων.

<sup>b</sup> Or "ways of thinking" "attitudes of mind"; cf. De Plant. 61.

PHILO

99 ἀλλ' αὐται μὲν ἀσταί τε καὶ ἀστεῖαι γυναῖκες [αἰσθήσεις] ὡς ἀληθῶς, παρ' αἷς ἡ ἀρετὴ Λεῖα τετιμῆσθαι βούλεται, αἱ δὲ προσαναφλέγουσαι τὸ πῦρ ἐπὶ τὸν ἄθλιον νοῦν ἀπόλιδες· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι καὶ "γυναῖκες ἔτι προσεξέκαυσαν πῦρ ἐπὶ Μωάβ." ἀλλ' οὐχ ἐκάστη | τῶν τοῦ ἀφρονος αἰσθήσεων ἐξαπτομένη πρὸς τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἐμπίπρησι τὸν νοῦν, πολλὴν καὶ ἀπέρατον φλόγα ἐπισχέουσα μετὰ ῥύμης ἀνηνύτου καὶ φορᾶς; ἄριστον οὖν ἐξευμενίζεσθαι τὸ γυναικῶν τάγμα ἐν ψυχῇ, τῶν αἰσθήσεων, καθάπερ καὶ τῶν ἀνδρῶν, τῶν κατὰ μέρος λογισμῶν· οὕτως γὰρ ἀμείνονι βίου

100
[452]

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἐφίδρυνται (G.H.W.); cf. ἐφιδρύσεις of feet, Leg. All. iii. 138.

<sup>a</sup> This point, in which "hands" are clearly interpreted by ἐγχειρήματα, and "feet" by ἐφορμεῖ καὶ ἐνίδρυνται, follows in the LXX after the statement that the laver was made out of the mirrors of the women. In the Hebrew this does not appear in this place, but the ordinance that the laver should be so used comes in both Hebrew and LXX in Ex. xxx. 19 f.

<sup>b</sup> "Fasting," in the spiritual sense of course, is interpreted by καρτερίας. The word is used because in the LXX the women who offered the mirrors fasted on the day when the

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 98-100

to perform sacred rites, as they are washing hands and feet,<sup>a</sup> that is, the purposes which they take in hand and which form the base and support of the mind, may be helped to see themselves reflected by recollecting the mirrors out of which the laver was fashioned : for if they do this they will not overlook any ugly thing shewing itself in the appearance of the soul, and being thus purified will dedicate the most sacred and perfect of offerings, the offering of fasting<sup>b</sup> and perseverance.

These, in whose eyes Leah, that is 99 virtue, desires to be honoured are citizen women and worthy of their citizenship ; but there are others without citizenship who kindle a fire to add to the misery of the wretched mind ; for we read that " women further kindled in addition<sup>c</sup> a fire against Moab " (Num. xxi. 30). Is it not the case, that each 100 one of the fool's senses, kindled by the objects of sense, sets the mind on fire, pouring upon it a great and impassable flame, in violent and resistless current ? It is best, then, that the array of women, that is of the senses, in the soul, should be propitiated, as well as that of the men, that is of our several thoughts : for in this way shall we feel the journey of base of the laver was made. The Hebrew word which seems to be obscure is given in A.V. as " assembled," in R.V. " serving." By ἤδη Philo seems to mean that only when the " mirror " has been used for self-examination, and the " feet and hands " of the soul cleansed, can the true offering of " fasting " be made.

<sup>c</sup> The προσ- in προσαναφλέγουσαι reproduces the προσεξέκασαν of the text. How Philo interprets the prefix appears in Leg. All. iii. 234. The fire kindled by the senses is an addition to purely mental troubles.

- 101 διεξόδω χρησόμεθα. XVIII. παγκάλως<sup>1</sup> διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὁ αὐτομαθῆς Ἰσαὰκ εὐχεται τῷ σοφίας ἐραστῇ καὶ τὰ νοητὰ καὶ τὰ αἰσθητὰ λαβεῖν ἀγαθὰ· φησὶ γάρ· “ δώη σοι ὁ θεὸς ἀπὸ τῆς δρόσου τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς πίότητος τῆς γῆς,” ἴσον τῷ πρότερον μὲν συνεχῆ σοι τὸν νοητὸν καὶ οὐρά-νιον ὑετὸν ἄρδοι, μὴ λάβρως ὡς ἐπικλύσαι, ἀλλ’ ἡρέμα καὶ πράως καθάπερ δρόσον ὡς ὀνήσαι· δεύτερον δὲ τὸν αἰσθητὸν καὶ γήινον πλοῦτον χαρίσαιτο λιπαρὸν καὶ πίονα, τὴν ἐναντίαν πενίαν ψυχῆς τε καὶ τῶν αὐτῆς μερῶν ἀφανάνας.
- 102 Ἐὰν μέντοι καὶ τὸν ἀρχιερέα λόγον ἐξετάζης, εὐρήσεις συνωδὰ φρονούντα καὶ τὴν ἱεράν ἐσθήτα αὐτῷ πεποικιλμένην ἔκ τε νοητῶν καὶ αἰσθητῶν δυνάμεων· ἥς τὰ μὲν ἄλλα μακροτέρων ἢ κατὰ τὸν παρόντα καιρὸν δεῖται λόγων καὶ ὑπερθετέον, τὰ δὲ πρὸς τοῖς πέρασιν ἐξετάσωμεν, κεφαλῇ τε καὶ
- 103 βάσει. οὐκοῦν ἐπὶ μὲν τῆς κεφαλῆς ἐστὶ “ πέταλον χρυσοῦν καθαρὸν, ἔχον ἐκτύπωμα σφραγίδος, ἀγίασμα κυρίω,” ἐπὶ δὲ τοῖς ποσὶν ἐπὶ τοῦ τέλους τοῦ ὑποδύτου κώδωνες καὶ ἄνθια. ἀλλ’ ἐκεῖνη μὲν ἡ σφραγὶς ἰδέα ἐστὶν ἰδεῶν, καθ’ ἣν ὁ θεὸς ἐτύπωσε

<sup>1</sup> Previous editions print παγκάλως with the preceding sentence as adverb to χρησόμεθα. But this seems a little overdone as praise of the more or less compromising life here described. An examination of the other 35 examples of παγκ. in the index shows that Philo generally uses it near the beginning of the sentence, in nearly all in praise of some saying or incident in Scripture, and in all in connexion with some verb, expressed or implied, of speaking. The form παγκάλως διὰ τοῦτο καὶ is exceptional, but differs very slightly from the common διὰ τοῦτο παγκάλως.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 101-103

life better than it else would be.

XVIII.

Admirable therefore also is the prayer of Isaac the 101 self-taught for the lover of wisdom that he may receive the good things both of mind and of sense : " May God give thee," he says, " of the dew of heaven and of the fatness of the earth " (Gen. xxvii. 28), which is equivalent to saying in the first place " May He pour down on thee perpetually the heavenly rain apprehended by mind alone, not violently so as to deluge thee, but in gentle stillness like dew so as to do thee good "; and secondly " May He grant thee the earthly, the outward and visible wealth ; may that wealth abound in marrow and fatness and may its opposite, the poverty of the soul and its parts, be withered and dried up by His grace."

If again you examine the High Priest the Logos,<sup>a</sup> 102 you will find him to be in agreement with this, and his holy vesture to have a variegated beauty derived from powers belonging some to the realm of pure intellect, some to that of sense-perception. The other parts of that vesture call for a longer treatment than the present occasion allows, and must be deferred. Let us however examine the parts by the extremities, head and feet. On the head, then, there 103 is " a plate of pure gold, bearing as an engraving of a signet, ' a holy thing to the Lord ' " (Ex. xxviii. 32); and at the feet on the end of the skirt, bells and flower patterns (Ex. xxviii. 29 f.). The signet spoken of is the original principle behind all principles, after which God shaped or formed the universe, incorporeal, <sup>a</sup> Or " the Logos as revealed in the High Priest." The thought that the High Priest (in general, not Aaron in particular) represents the Divine Logos is worked out in De Fug. 108 ff. In De Gig. 52 the phrase is given a less exalted meaning.

PHILO

τὸν κόσμον, ἀσώματος δήπου καὶ νοητή, τὰ δ' ἄνθρα καὶ οἱ κώδωνες αἰσθητῶν ποιότητων σύμβολα, ὧν ὄρασις καὶ ἀκοή τὰ κριτήρια.

- 104 ἄγαν δ' ἐξητασμένως ἐπιφέρει ὅτι "ἔσται ἀκουστή φωνή αὐτοῦ εἰσιόντος εἰς τὰ ἅγια," ἵνα πρὸς τὰ νοητὰ καὶ θεῖα καὶ ὄντως ἅγια εἰσιούσης τῆς ψυχῆς καὶ αἱ αἰσθήσεις ὠφελούμεναι κατ' ἀρετὴν συνηχῶσι καὶ ὅλον τὸ σύστημα ἡμῶν, ὥσπερ ἐμμελῆς καὶ πολυάνθρωπος χορός, ἐκ διαφερόντων φθόγγων ἀνακεκραμένων ἐν μέλος ἐναρμόνιον συνᾶδῃ, τὰ μὲν ἐνδόσιμα τῶν νοημάτων ἐμπνεόντων—ἡγεμόνες γὰρ τοῦ χοροῦ τούτου τὰ νοητὰ—, τὰ δ' ἐπόμενα τῶν αἰσθητῶν συναναμελπόντων, ἃ τοῖς κατὰ μέρος
- 105 χορευταῖς ἀπεικάζεται. συνόλως γάρ, ἥ φησιν ὁ νόμος, "τὰ δέοντα καὶ τὸν ἱματισμὸν καὶ τὴν ὁμιλίαν," τὰ τρία ταῦτα, ἀφαιρεῖσθαι τὴν ψυχὴν οὐκ ἔδει, ἀλλ' ἕκαστον αὐτῶν βεβαίως προσέμειν. τὰ μὲν οὖν δέοντα <τὰ> νοητὰ ἐστὶν ἀγαθὰ, ἃ δεῖ καὶ ἃ χρὴ γενέσθαι λόγῳ φύσεως, ὁ δὲ ἱματισμὸς τὰ περὶ τὸν φαινόμενον τοῦ βίου κόσμον, ἡ δ' ὁμιλία ἡ καθ' ἑκάτερον τῶν εἰρημένων εἰδῶν συνέχεια καὶ μελέτη, ἣν οἶα τὰ ἀφανῆ νοητὰ τοιαῦτα καὶ τὰ αἰσθητὰ φαίνηται.

- 106
[453] XIX. | Πέμπτη τοῖνυν ἐστὶ δωρεὰ ἢ κατὰ ψιλὸν μόνον τὸ εἶναι<sup>1</sup> συνισταμένη· λέλεκται δὲ ἐπὶ ταῖς

<sup>1</sup> Mangey regarded this as corrupt and proposed κατὰ τὸ εὐλογημένον αὐτὸν εἶναι. Possibly we might read τὸ <τι> εἶναι.

<sup>a</sup> In R.V. "Her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage." By "fellowship" or perhaps "intimacy" Philo may mean either that the νοητὰ are brought into close association with the αἰσθητὰ, or that the soul is brought into intimate touch with both.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 103-106

we know, and discerned by the intellect alone ; whereas the flower patterns and bells are symbols of qualities recognized by the senses and tested by sight and hearing. And he has well weighed <sup>104</sup> his words when he adds : " His sound shall be audible when he is about to enter into the Holy Place " (Ex. xxviii. 31), to the end that when the soul is about to enter the truly holy place, the divine place which only mind can apprehend, the senses also may be aided to join in the hymn with their best, and that our whole composite being, like a full choir all in tune, may chant together one harmonious strain rising from varied voices blending one with another ; the thoughts of the mind inspiring the keynotes—for the leaders of this choir are the truths perceived by mind alone—while the objects of sense-perception, which resemble the individual members of the choir, chime in with their accordant tuneful notes. For, to say all in a word, <sup>105</sup> we must not, as the Law tells us, take away from the soul these three things, " the necessaries, the clothing, the fellowship " <sup>a</sup> (Ex. xxi. 10), but afford each of them steadily. Now, the " necessaries " are the good things of the mind, which are necessary, being demanded by the law of nature ; the " clothing," all that belongs to the phenomenal world of human life ; and the " fellowship," persistent study directed to each of these kinds, that so in the world of sense we may come to find the likeness of the invisible world of mind.

XIX. To proceed then ; the fifth gift is that which <sup>106</sup> consists in simple being only, <sup>b</sup> and it is mentioned <sup>b</sup> i.e. in being (something) as opposed to " seeming," which was the keynote of the Fourth Gift. See critical note.

- προτέρας, οὐχ ὡς εὐτελεστέρα ἐκείνων, ἀλλ' ὡς ὑπερκύπτουσα καὶ ὑπερβάλλουσα πάσας. τί γὰρ ἂν εἶη τοῦ πεφυκέαι καὶ ἀψευδῶς καὶ ἀπλάστως ἀγαθὸν εἶναι καὶ εὐλογίας ἐπάξιον τελεώτερον;
- 107 “ ἔση ” γάρ φησιν “ εὐλογητός, ” οὐ μόνον εὐλογη-μένος· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ταῖς τῶν πολλῶν δόξαις τε καὶ φήμαις παραριθμεῖται, τὸ δὲ τῷ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν 108 εὐλογητῷ. ὥσπερ γὰρ τὸ ἐπαινετὸν εἶναι τοῦ ἐπαινεῖσθαι διαφέρει κατὰ τὸ κρεῖττον καὶ τὸ ψεκτὸν εἶναι τοῦ ψέγεσθαι κατὰ τὸ χεῖρον—τὰ μὲν γὰρ τῷ πεφυκέαι, τὰ δὲ τῷ νομίζεσθαι λέγεται μόνον, φύσις δὲ ἡ ἀψευδῆς δοκίσεως ἐχυρότερον—οὕτως καὶ τοῦ εὐλογεῖσθαι πρὸς ἀνθρώπων, ὅπερ ἦν εἰς εὐλογίαν ἄγεσθαι δοξαζόμενον, τὸ πεφυκέαι<sup>1</sup> εὐλογίας ἀξιον, κἂν πάντες ἡσυχάζωσι, κρεῖττον, ὅπερ εὐλογητὸν ἐν τοῖς χρησιμοῖς ἄδεται.
- 109 XX. Ταῦτα μὲν τὰ ἄθλα<sup>2</sup> τῷ γενησομένῳ δωρεῖται σοφῷ· ἂ δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀπονέμει διὰ τὸν σοφόν, ἐξῆς ἴδωμεν· “ εὐλογήσω ” φησί “ τοὺς εὐλογοῦντάς σε, καὶ τοὺς καταρωμένους σε κατ-110 ἀράσομαι. ” τὸ μὲν οὖν ἐπὶ τιμῇ τοῦ σπουδαίου καὶ ταῦτα γίνεσθαι παντὶ τῷ δῆλον, λέγεται δ' οὐ δι' ἐκεῖνο μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν ἐν τοῖς πράγμασιν εὐάρμοστον ἀκολουθίαν· τὸν γὰρ ἀγαθὸν καὶ ὁ ἐπαινῶν ἐγκωμιστὸς καὶ ὁ ψέγων ἔμπαλιν ψεκτός.
 ἔπαινον δὲ καὶ ψόγον οὐχ οὕτως ἢ τῶν λεγόντων καὶ γραφόντων πιστοῦται δύναμις, ὡς ἢ τῶν γινο-μένων ἀλήθεια· ὥστ' οὔτε ἐπαινεῖν οὔτε ψέγειν ἂν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὸ εὐλογεῖσθαι . . . τῷ πεφυκέαι.<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐσθλά.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 106-110

after those which precede it not as being of less value than they, but as outtopping and over-passing them all. For what could be more perfect than to be by nature good and free from all feigning and pretence, and worthy of blessing? For he says "Thou shalt 107 be one to be blessed" (Gen. xii. 2), not only "one who has been blessed," for the latter is reckoned by the standard of the opinions and report of the many; but the former by that of Him Who is in reality "blessed." For as being praiseworthy differs for the 108 better from being praised, and being blameworthy for the worse from being blamed, the one pair expressing an inherent character, and the other nothing more than men's opinion of us; and nature that cannot lie is a more sure foundation than opinion; so being blessed by men, which we have found to be an introduction into blessing by the avenue of repute, is inferior to natural worthiness of blessing, even though that finds no expression on human lips; and it is this which is celebrated in the sacred oracles as "blessed."

XX. These are the prizes which He bestows upon 109 him who is to become wise. Let us see next those which He accords to others too for the wise man's sake. "I will bless," He says, "those that bless thee, and those that curse thee I will curse" (Gen. xii. 3). That these promises as well as the others are made to 110 shew honour to the righteous man is clear to everybody, but they are set forth not on that account only, but because they so admirably fit in with and follow the truth of facts, for encomiums are due to him who praises the good man and blame again to him who blames him. Praise and blame are not accredited so much by the ability of speakers and authors, as by the truth of facts; so that we do not feel that either

PHILO

- δοκοῖεν, ὅσοι τι ψεῦδος ἐν ἑκατέρῳ παραλαμ-111 βάνουσι εἶδει.<sup>1</sup> τοὺς κόλακας οὐχ ὄρας, οἱ μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτωρ ἀποκναίουσι τῶν κολα-κευομένων τὰ ὦτα θρύπτοντες, οὐκ ἐπινεύοντες ἐφ' ἑκάστῳ τῶν λεγομένων αὐτὸ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ῥήσεις μακρὰς συνείροντες καὶ ραψωδοῦντες καὶ εὐχόμενοι μὲν τῇ φωνῇ πολλάκις, αἰεὶ δὲ τῇ διανοίᾳ κατ-112 ἀρώμενοι; τί οὖν ἄν τις εὖ φρονῶν εἴποι; ἄρ' οὐχ ὡσπερ ἐχθροὺς μᾶλλον ἢ φίλους τοὺς λέγοντας οὕτως<sup>2</sup> καὶ ψέγειν μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπαινεῖν, κἂν δράματα ὅλα συντιθέντες ἐγκωμίων ἐπάδωσι;
- 113 τοιγαροῦν ὁ μάταιος Βαλαάμ ὕμνους μὲν εἰς τὸν θεὸν ὑπερβάλλοντας ἄδων, ἐν οἷς καὶ τὸ "οὐχ ὡς ἄνθρωπος ὁ θεός," ἁσμάτων τὸ ἱεροπρεπέστατον, ἐγκώμια δ' εἰς τὸν ὄρωντα, Ἰσραήλ, μυρία διεξ-ερχόμενος ἀσεβῆς μὲν καὶ ἐπάρατος καὶ παρὰ τῷ σοφῷ κέκριται νομοθέτῃ, καταρᾶσθαι δέ, οὐκ 114 εὐλογεῖν,<sup>3</sup> νενομίσται. τοῖς γὰρ πολεμίοις φησὶν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ μισθῷ συνταχθέντα μάντιν<sup>4</sup> γενέσθαι [454] κακὸν κακῶν, ἀρὰς | μὲν ἐν ψυχῇ θέμενον χαλεπωτάτας γένει τῷ θεοφιλεῖ, εὐχὰς δὲ ἀναγκασθέντα διὰ στόματος καὶ γλώττης ὑπερφυεστάτας προφη-τεῦσαι· τὰ μὲν γὰρ λεγόμενα καλὰ ὄντα ὁ φιλάρετος ὑπήχει θεός, τὰ δ' ἐννοούμενα—φαιλότερα γὰρ ἦν—115 ἔτικτεν ἢ μισάρετος διάνοια. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ ὁ περὶ τούτων χρησμὸς· "οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκε" φησὶν
 "ὁ θεὸς τῷ Βαλαάμ καταράσασθαί σοι, ἀλλ' ἔστρεψε τὰς καταράς εἰς εὐλογίαν," καίτοι πάντων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἴδιον.

<sup>2</sup> So all MSS. (except H<sup>2</sup>): Wend. δυνας.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. εὐλογῶν (-ον).

<sup>4</sup> MSS. μάτην or μηνυτήν.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 110-115

term is applicable to the words of those who give falsehood any place in either. Do you 111 not see the toadies who by day and night batter to pieces and wear out the ears of those on whom they fawn, not content with just assenting to everything they say, but spinning out long speeches and declaiming and many a time uttering prayers with their voice, but never ceasing to curse with their heart? What then would a man of good sense say? Would 112 he not say that those who talk in this way talk as though they were enemies rather than friends, and blame rather than praise, even though they compose and recite whole oratorios of panegyric to charm them? Accordingly, that empty one, 113 Balaam, though he sang loftiest hymns to God, among which is that most Divine of canticles " God is not as man " (Num. xxiii. 19), and poured out a thousand eulogies on him whose eyes were open, even Israel, has been adjudged impious and accursed even by the wise lawgiver, and held to be an utterer not of blessings but of curses. For Moses says that as 114 the hired confederate of Israel's enemies he became an evil prophet of evil things, nursing in his soul direst curses on the race beloved of God, but forced with mouth and tongue to give prophetic utterance to most amazing benedictory prayers: for the words that were spoken were noble words, whose utterance was prompted by God the Lover of Virtue, but the intentions, in all their vileness, were the offspring of a mind that looked on virtue with loathing. Evidence of this is afforded by the oracles relating to 115 the matter; for it says " God did not give Balaam leave to curse thee, but turned his curses into blessing " (Deut. xxiii. 5), though indeed every word he

PHILO

- ὅσα εἶπε πολλῆς γεμόντων εὐφημίας. ἀλλ' ὁ τῶν ἐν ψυχῇ ταμειομένων ἐπίσκοπος ἰδὼν, ᾧ κατιδεῖν ἕξεστι μόνῳ, τὰ ἀθέατα γενέσει, τὴν καταδικάζουσαν ἀπὸ τούτων ψῆφον ἤνεγκε, μάρτυς ἀψευδέστατος ὁμοῦ καὶ κριτῆς ἀδέκαστος ὁ αὐτὸς ὢν· ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸναντίον ἐπαινετὸν βλασφημεῖν καὶ κατηγορεῖν δοκοῦντα τῇ φωνῇ κατὰ 116 διάνοιαν εὐλογεῖν τε καὶ εὐφημεῖν. σωφρονιστῶν ὡς ἔοικε τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ ἔθος, παιδαγωγῶν, διδασκάλων, γονέων, πρεσβυτέρων, ἀρχόντων, νόμων ὀνειδιζόντες γάρ, ἔστι δ' ὅπου καὶ κολάζοντες ἕκαστοι τούτων ἀμείνους τὰς ψυχὰς ἀπεργάζονται τῶν παιδευομένων. καὶ ἐχθρὸς μὲν οὐδεὶς οὐδενί, φίλοι δὲ πᾶσι πάντες· φίλων δὲ ἀνόθῳ καὶ ἀκιβδήλῳ χρωμένων εὐνοία τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ἔργον ἐλευθερο-
 117 στομεῖν ἄνευ τοῦ κακονοεῖν. μηδὲν οὖν μήτε τῶν εἰς εὐλογίας καὶ εὐχὰς μήτε τῶν εἰς βλασφημίας καὶ κατάρας ἐπὶ τὰς ἐν προφορᾷ διεξόδους ἀναφερέσθω μᾶλλον ἢ διάνοιαν, ἀφ' ἧς ὡσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς ἐκάτερον εἶδος τῶν λεχθέντων δοκιμάζεται.
 118 XXI. Ταῦτα μὲν δὴ πρῶτον διὰ τὸν ἀστείον ἐτέροις συντυγχάνειν φησί, ὅταν ἢ ψόγον ἢ ἔπαινον ἢ εὐχὰς ἢ κατάρας ἐθελήσωσιν αὐτῷ τίθεσθαι· μέγιστον δ' ἐξῆς, ὅταν ἡσυχάζωσιν ἐκεῖνοι, τὸ μηδὲν μέρος φύσεως λογικῆς ἀμέτοχον εὐεργεσίας ἀπολείπεσθαι· λέγει γὰρ ὅτι “ ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the text speaks of his “curses,” though actually there was no cursing at all.

<sup>b</sup> The translation supposes that Philo is alluding to the Athenian office of σωφρονισταί, officials appointed to look after the morals of the Ephebi in general and particularly in the gymnasia. Philo certainly often introduces special Attic terms from his reading. But it is at least as probable uttered was charged with fulness of benediction.<sup>a</sup> But He Who looks upon what is stored up in the soul, saw, with the Eye that alone has power to discern them, the things that are out of sight of created beings, and on the ground of these passed the sentence of condemnation, being at once an absolutely true Witness, and an incorruptible Judge. For on the same principle praise is due to the converse of this, namely, when one seems to revile and accuse with the voice, and is in intent conveying blessing and benediction. This is obviously the custom of 116 proctors,<sup>b</sup> of home tutors, schoolmasters, parents, seniors, magistrates, laws : all of these, by reproaches, and sometimes by punishments, effect improvement in the souls of those whom they are educating. And not one of them is an enemy to a single person, but all are friends of them all : and the business of friends inspired by genuine and unfeigned goodwill is to use plain language without any spite whatever. Let no 117 treatment, then, that is marked by prayers and blessings on the one hand, or by abusing and cursing on the other hand, be referred to the way it finds vent in speech, but rather to the intention ; for from this, as from a spring, is supplied the means of testing each kind of spoken words.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 115-118

XXI. This is Moses' first lesson ; he tells us what 118 befalls others for the virtuous man's sake, whenever they consent to visit him with blame or praise, with prayers or imprecations : but greatest of all is that which follows ; he tells us that, when these hold their peace, no portion of rational existence is left without its share of benefit bestowed : for He says that " In that the word here means "moral censors" in general, and sums up the various forms of guardianship which follow.

PHILO

- 119 σοὶ πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς.” ἔστι δὲ τοῦτο δογματικώτατον· ἐὰν γὰρ ὁ νοῦς ἄνοσος καὶ ἀπή-μων διατελῆ, ταῖς περὶ αὐτὸν ἀπάσαις φυλαῖς τε καὶ δυνάμεσιν ὑγιαίνουσαις χρῆται, ταῖς τε καθ’ ὄρασιν καὶ ἀκοὴν καὶ ὅσαι αἰσθητικαὶ καὶ πάλιν ταῖς κατὰ τὰς ἡδονὰς τε καὶ ἐπιθυμίας καὶ ὅσαι ἀντὶ παθῶν εἰς εὐπάθειαν<sup>1</sup> μεταχαράττονται.
- 120 ἤδη μέντοι καὶ οἶκος καὶ πόλις καὶ χώρα καὶ ἔθνη καὶ κλίματα γῆς ἐνὸς ἀνδρὸς καλο-κάγαθίας προμηθουμένου μεγάλης ἀπήλαυσαν εὐδαιμονίας, καὶ μάλισθ’ ὅτω μετὰ γνώμης ἀγαθῆς ὁ θεὸς καὶ δύνάμιν ἔδωκεν ἀνανταγώνιστον, ὡς μουσικῶ καὶ παντὶ τεχνίτῃ τὰ κατὰ μουσικὴν καὶ
- 121 πᾶσαν τέχνην ὄργανα ἢ ξύλων ὕλην πυρί. τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ἔρεισμα τοῦ γένους τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐστὶν ὁ δίκαιος, καὶ ὅσα μὲν αὐτὸς ἔχει, προφέρων εἰς [455] μέσον ἐπ’ ὠφελείᾳ τῶν | χρησομένων ἀφθονα δίδωσιν, ὅσα δ’ ἂν μὴ εὐρίσκη παρ’ ἑαυτῷ, τὸν μόνον πάμπλουτον αἰτεῖται θεόν· ὁ δὲ τὸν οὐράνιον ἀνοιξάσας θησαυρὸν ὀμβρεῖ καὶ ἐπινίφει τὰ ἀγαθὰ ἀθρόα, ὡς τῶν περιγεῖων ἀπάντων τὰς δεξαμενὰς
- 122 πλημμυρούσας ἀναχυθῆναι. ταῦτα δὲ τὸν ἰκέτην ἑαυτοῦ λόγον οὐκ ἀποστραφεῖς εἴωθε δωρεῖσθαι· λέγεται γὰρ ἐτέρωθι Μωυσέως ἰκετεύσαντος· “ ἴλεως αὐτοῖς εἰμι κατὰ τὸ ῥῆμά σου”. τοῦτο δέ, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἰσοδυναμεῖ τῷ “ ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read εὐπαθείας. Elsewhere the plural is used when in contrast with πάθη.

<sup>a</sup> λόγος seems to anticipate ῥῆμα. Otherwise we might translate “His suppliant Word,” as Moses is sometimes identified with the Divine Logos.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 118-122

thee shall all the tribes of the earth be blessed " (Gen. xii. 3). This is a pregnant and significant 119 announcement ; for it implies that, if the mind continues free from harm and sickness, it has all its tribes and powers in a healthy condition, those whose province is sight and hearing and all others concerned with sense-perception, and those again that have to do with pleasures and desires, and all that are undergoing transformation from the lower to the higher emotions.

Further there have been in- 120 stances of a household or a city or a country or nations and regions of the earth enjoying great prosperity through a single man giving his mind to nobility of character. Most of all has this been so in the case of one on whom God has bestowed, together with a good purpose, irresistible power, just as He gives to the musician and every artist the instruments which his music or his art requires, or as He gives to fire logs as its material. For in truth the righteous man is the 121 foundation on which mankind rests. All that he himself has he brings into the common stock and gives in abundance for the benefit of all who shall use them. What he does not find in his own store, he asks for at the hands of God, the only possessor of unlimited riches ; and He opens his heavenly treasury and sends His good things, as He does the snow and the rain, in ceaseless downpour, so that the channels and cavities of earth's whole face overflow. And it 122 is His wont to bestow these gifts in answer to the word<sup>a</sup> of supplication, from which He does not turn His ear away ; for it is said in another place, when Moses had made a petition, " I am gracious to them in accordance with thy word " (Num. xiv. 20) ; and this is evidently equivalent to " In thee shall all the tribes

PHILO

- σοὶ πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς.” οὗ χάριν καὶ ὁ σοφὸς Ἀβραὰμ πεπειραμένος τῆς ἐν ἅπασι τοῦ θεοῦ χρηστότητος πεπίστευκεν ὅτι, κἂν πάντα τὰ ἄλλα ἀφανισθῆ, μικρὸν δέ τι λείψανον ἀρετῆς ὥσπερ ἐμπύρευμα διασώζεται, διὰ τὸ βραχὺ τοῦτο κἀκεῖνα οἰκτεῖρει, ὡς πεπτωκότα ἐγείρειν καὶ 123 τεθνηκότα ζωπυρεῖν. σπινθήρ γὰρ καὶ ὁ βραχύ-τατος ἐντυφόμενος, ὅταν καταπνευσθεῖς ζωπυρηθῆ, μεγάλην ἐξάπτει πυράν· καὶ τὸ βραχύτατον οὖν ἀρετῆς, ὅταν ἐλπίσι χρησταῖς ὑποθαλλόμενον ἀναλάμψῃ, καὶ τὰ τέως μεμυκότα καὶ τυφλὰ ἐξ-ωμμάτωσε καὶ τὰ ἀφανανθέντα ἀναβλαστῆν ἐποίησε καὶ ὅσα ὑπὸ ἀγωνίας<sup>1</sup> ἐστείρωτο εἰς εὐφορίαν εὐτοκίας περιήγαγεν. οὕτω τὸ σπάνιον ἀγαθὸν ἐπι-φροσύνη θεοῦ πολὺ γίνεται χεόμενον, ἐξομοιοῦν τὰ 124 ἄλλα ἑαυτῷ. XXII. εὐχώμεθα οὖν τὸν ὡς ἐν οἰκίᾳ στῦλον νοῦν μὲν ἐν ψυχῇ, ἄνθρωπον δὲ ἐν τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων τὸν δίκαιον διαμένειν εἰς τὴν τῶν νόσων ἄκεσιν· τούτου γὰρ ὑγιαίνοντος τὰς εἰς παντελῆ σωτηρίαν οὐκ ἀπογνωστέον ἐλπίδας, διότι<sup>2</sup> οἶμαι ὁ σωτὴρ θεὸς τὸ πανακέστατον φάρμακον, τὴν ἴλεω δύναμιν, τῷ ἰκέτῃ καὶ θεραπευτῇ προτείνας ἑαυτοῦ χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν καμνόντων σωτηρίαν ἐπιτρέπει, καταπλάττοντι τῶν ψυχῆς τραυμάτων, ἅπερ ἀφροσύνη καὶ ἀδικίαι καὶ ὁ ἄλλος τῶν κακιῶν ὄμιλος ἀκονηθεῖς διεΐλεν.
125 ἐναργέστατον δὲ παράδειγμα Νῶε ὁ δίκαιος, ὃς τῷ μεγάλῳ κατακλυσμῷ τῶν τοσοῦτων μερῶν τῆς ψυχῆς ἐγκαταποθέντων ἐρρωμένως

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγνοίας.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δι' οὗ ἔτι.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 122-125

of the earth be blessed."

And it is by reason of this that Abraham, the wise, when he had made trial of God's unvarying loving-kindness, believed that, even if all else be done away, but some small relic of virtue be preserved as a live coal to kindle with, for the sake of this little piece He looks with pity on the rest also, so as to raise up fallen things and to quicken dead things (Gen. xviii. 24 ff.). For a 123 smouldering spark, even the very smallest, when it is blown up and made to blaze, lights a great pile; and so the least particle of virtue, when, warmed into life by bright hopes, it has shone out, gives sight to eyes that erst were closed and blind, and causes withered things to bloom again, and recovers to prolific fertility all that were barren by nature and therefore without offspring. Even so scanty goodness by God's favour expands and becomes abundant, assimilating all else to itself.

XXII. Let us pray then that, like a 124 central pillar in a house, there may constantly remain for the healing of our maladies the righteous mind in the soul and in the human race the righteous man; for while he is sound and well, there is no cause to despair of the prospect of complete salvation, for our Saviour God holds out, we may be sure, the most all-healing remedy, His gracious Power, and commits it to His suppliant and worshipper to use for the deliverance of those who are sickly, that he may apply it as an embrocation to those soul-wounds which were left gaping by the sword-edge of follies and injustices and all the rest of the horde of vices.

The 125 most patent example is righteous Noah, who, when so many parts of the soul had been swallowed up by the

PHILO

- ἐπικυματίζων καὶ ἐπινηχόμενος ὑπεράνω μὲν ἔστη τῶν δεινῶν ἀπάντων, διασωθεὶς δὲ μεγάλας καὶ καλὰς ἀφ' αὐτοῦ ρίζας ἐβάλετο, ἐξ ὧν οἶα φυτὸν τὸ σοφίας ἀνεβλάστησε γένος· ὅπερ ἡμεροτοκῆσαν τοὺς τοῦ ὄρωντος, Ἰσραήλ, τριττοὺς ἤνεγκε καρπούς, αἰῶνος μέτρα, τὸν Ἀβραάμ, τὸν Ἰσαάκ, τὸν
- 126 Ἰακώβ· καὶ γὰρ ἔστι καὶ ἔσται καὶ γέγονεν ἐν τῷ παντὶ ἀρετῇ, ἣν ἀκαιρίαὶ μὲν ἴσως ἀνθρώπων ἐπισκιαζουσιν, ὁ δὲ ὀπαδὸς θεοῦ καιρὸς ἀποκαλύπτει πάλιν, ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἡ φρόνησις ἀρρενογονεῖ Σάρρα, οὐ κατὰ τὰς χρονικὰς τοῦ ἔτους ὥρας, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὰς ἀχρόνους ἀκμὰς καὶ εὐκαιρίας ἐπανθούσα·
- [456] λέγεται γάρ· | “ἐπαναστρέφων ἤξω πρὸς σέ κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον εἰς ὥρας, καὶ ἔξει υἱὸν Σάρρα ἡ γυνὴ σου.”
- 127 XXIII. Περὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν δωρεῶν, ἃς καὶ τοῖς γενησομένοις τελείους καὶ δι' αὐτοὺς ὁ θεὸς ἑτέροις εἴωθε χαρίζεσθαι, δεδήλωται. λέγεται δὲ ἐξῆς ὅτι “ἐπορεύθη Ἀβραὰμ καθάπερ ἐλάλησεν αὐτῷ κύ-
- 128 ριος.” τοῦτο δὲ ἔστι τὸ παρὰ τοῖς ἄριστα φιλοσοφήσασιν ἀδόκονον τέλος, τὸ ἀκολουθῶν τῇ φύσει ζῆν· γίνεται δέ, ὅταν ὁ νοῦς εἰς τὴν ἀρετῆς ἀτραπὸν ἐλθὼν κατ' ἴχνος ὀρθοῦ λόγου βαίῃ καὶ ἔπηται θεῷ, τῶν προστάξεων αὐτοῦ διαμεμνημένος καὶ πάσας αἰὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ ἔργοις τε καὶ λόγοις
- 129 βεβαιούμενος. “ἐπορεύθη γάρ, καθὰ ἐλάλησεν

<sup>a</sup> Here for the moment Noah represents the righteous mind in the soul, but in the rest of the section he is rather the righteous man in the race.

<sup>b</sup> Possibly, to judge from the similar passage in De Sobr. 65, Shem, or perhaps more generally the ancestors of Abraham.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 563.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 125-129

great Flood,<sup>a</sup> valiantly riding upon the waves that buoyed him up, stood firm high above every peril, and, when he had come safe through all, put forth from himself fair roots and great,<sup>b</sup> out of which there grew up like a plant wisdom's breed and kind; which, attaining goodly fertility, bore those threefold fruits of the seeing one, even of "Israel," that mark the threefold divisions of eternity,<sup>c</sup> Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; for in the All virtue is, shall be, has been: covered 126 with a dark shadow, it may be, by men's missings of the due season but revealed again by due season that ever follows in God's steps. In such due season does "Sarah" who is sound sense, give birth to a man-child, putting forth her fruit not according to the changes of the year measured by lapse of time, but in accordance with a fitness and fulness of season that time does not determine: for it is said "I will certainly return unto thee according to this season when the time comes round; and Sarah thy wife shall have a son" (Gen. xviii. 10).

XXIII. We have now dealt with the subject of the 127 gifts which God is wont to bestow both on those who are to become wise and for their sake on others. We are told next that "Abraham journeyed even as the Lord spoke to him" (Gen. xii. 4). This is the aim extolled 128 by the best philosophers, to live agreeably to nature;<sup>d</sup> and it is attained whenever the mind, having entered on virtue's path, walks in the track of right reason and follows God, mindful of His injunctions, and always and in all places recognizing them all as valid both in action and in speech. For "he journeyed just as the 129

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Op. 3 and note. Philo here as elsewhere (e.g. Quis Rerum 214) is suggesting that Greek philosophy is derived from Moses.

PHILO

- αὐτῷ κύριος” τοῦτο δέ ἐστι τοιοῦτον· ὡς λαλεῖ ὁ θεὸς—λαλεῖ δὲ παγκάλως καὶ ἐπαινετῶς—, οὕτως ὁ σπουδαῖος ἕκαστα δρᾷ τὴν ἀτραπὸν εὐθύνων ἀμέμπτως τοῦ βίου, ὥστε τὰ ἔργα τοῦ σοφοῦ λόγων
- 130 ἀδιαφορεῖν θείων. ἐτέρωθι γοῦν φησιν ὅτι ἐποίησεν Ἀβραὰμ “ πάντα τὸν νόμον μου ”· νόμος δὲ οὐδὲν ἄρα ἢ λόγος θεῖος προστάτων ἃ δεῖ καὶ ἀπαγορεύων ἃ μὴ χρή, ὡς μαρτυρεῖ φάσκων ὅτι “ ἐδέξατο ἀπὸ τῶν λόγων αὐτοῦ νόμον.” εἰ τοίνυν λόγος μὲν ἐστι θεῖος ὁ νόμος, ποιεῖ δ’ ὁ ἀστείος τὸν νόμον, ποιεῖ πάντως καὶ τὸν λόγον· ὥσθ’, ὅπερ ἔφην, τοὺς
- 131 τοῦ θεοῦ λόγους πράξεις εἶναι τοῦ σοφοῦ. τέλος οὖν ἐστι κατὰ τὸν ἱερώτατον Μωυσῆν τὸ ἔπεσθαι θεῷ, ὡς καὶ ἐν ἐτέροις φησίν· “ ὀπίσω κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ σου πορεύσῃ,” κινήσει <μη><sup>1</sup> χρώμενον τῇ διὰ σκελῶν—ἀνθρώπου μὲν γὰρ ὄχημα γῆ, θεοῦ δὲ εἰ καὶ σύμπας ὁ κόσμος, οὐκ οἶδα—, ἀλλ’ ἔοικεν ἀλληγορεῖν τὴν τῆς ψυχῆς πρὸς τὰ θεῖα δόγματα παριστὰς ἀκολουθίαν, ὧν ἡ ἀναφορὰ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ
- 132 πάντων αἰτίου γίνεται τιμῆν. XXIV. ἐπιτείνων δὲ τὸν ἀκάθεκτον πόθον τοῦ καλοῦ παραινεῖ καὶ κολλᾶσθαι αὐτῷ· “ κύριον ” γάρ φησι “ τὸν θεόν σου φοβηθήσῃ καὶ αὐτῷ λατρεύσεις καὶ πρὸς αὐτὸν κολληθήσῃ.” τίς οὖν ἢ κόλλα; τίς; εὐσέβεια δήπου καὶ πίστις· ἀρμόζουσι γὰρ καὶ ἐνοῦσιν αἱ ἀρεταὶ ἀφθάρτῳ φύσει διάνοιαν· καὶ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ

<sup>1</sup> Some MSS. κινήσει μὲν.

<sup>a</sup> In the LXX, however, the verb is ἐφύλαξε, and not ἐποίησε which is demanded by the argument.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 129-132

Lord spake to him ” : the meaning of this is that as God speaks—and He speaks with consummate beauty and excellence—so the good man does everything, blamelessly keeping straight the path of life, so that the actions of the wise man are nothing else than the words of God. So in another place He says, “ Abraham 130 did a ‘ all My law ’ ” (Gen. xxvi. 5) : “ Law ” being evidently nothing else than the Divine word enjoining what we ought to do and forbidding what we should not do, as Moses testifies by saying “ he received a law from His words ” (Deut. xxxiii. 3 f.). If, then, the law is a Divine word, and the man of true worth “ does ” the law, he assuredly “ does ” the word : so that, as I said, God’s words are the wise man’s “ doings.” To follow God is, then, according 131 to Moses, that most holy man, our aim and object, as he says elsewhere too, “ thou shalt go in the steps of the Lord thy God ” (Deut. xiii. 4). He is not speaking of movement by the use of our legs, for, while earth carries man, I do not know whether even the whole universe carries God ; but is evidently employing figurative language to bring out how the soul should comply with those Divine ordinances, the guiding principle of which is the honouring of Him to Whom all things owe their being.

XXIV. Using 132 still loftier language to express the irrepressible craving for moral excellence, he calls on them to cleave to Him. His words are : “ Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and Him shalt thou serve, and to Him shalt thou cleave ” (Deut. x. 20). What then is the cementing substance ? Do you ask, what ? Piety, surely, and faith : for these virtues adjust and unite the intent of the heart to the incorruptible Being : as Abraham when he believed is said to “ come near

PHILO

- 133 πιστεύσας “ ἐγγίζειν θεῶ ” λέγεται. εἰάν μέντοι πορευόμενος μήτε κάμη, ὡς ὑπενδούς ὀκλάσαι, μήτε ῥαθυμήσῃ, ὡς παρ’ ἐκάτερα ἐκτραπόμενος πλανᾶσθαι τῆς μέσης καὶ εὐθυτενοῦς διαμαρτῶν ὁδοῦ, μιμησάμενος δὲ τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς δρομεῖς τὸ στάδιον ἀπταιστώσως ἀνύσῃ τοῦ βίου, στεφάνων καὶ ἄθλων ἐπαξίῶν τεύξεται πρὸς τὸ 134 τέλος ἐλθῶν. ἢ οὐ τοῦτ’ εἰσὶν οἱ στέφανοι καὶ τὰ [457] ἄλλα, μὴ ἀτυχῆσαι τοῦ | τέλους τῶν πονηθέντων, ἀλλ’ ἐφικέσθαι τῶν δυσεφίκτων φρονήσεως περάτων; τί οὖν τοῦ φρονεῖν ὀρθῶς ἐστὶ τέλος; ἀφροσύνην ἑαυτοῦ καὶ παντὸς τοῦ γενητοῦ καταψηφίσασθαι· τὸ γὰρ μηδὲν οἶεσθαι εἰδέναι πέρασ ἐπιστήμης, ἐνὸς ὄντος μόνου σοφοῦ τοῦ καὶ 135 μόνου θεοῦ. διὸ καὶ παγκάλως Μωυσεῖ καὶ πατέρα τῶν ὄλων καὶ ἐπίσκοπον τῶν γενομένων αὐτὸν εἰσήγαγεν εἰπών· “ εἶδεν ὁ θεὸς τὰ πάντα ὅσα ἐποίησε, καὶ ἰδοὺ καλὰ λίαν·” οὐδενὶ γὰρ ἐξῆν τὰ συσταθέντα κατιδεῖν ἄκρως ὅτι μὴ τῷ πεποιη-136 κότι. πάριτε νῦν οἱ τύφου καὶ ἀπαιδευσίας καὶ πολλῆς ἀλαζονείας γέμοντες, οἱ δοκησίσοφοι καὶ μὴ μόνον ὃ ἐστὶν ἕκαστον εἰδέναι σαφῶς ἐπιφάσκοντες,<sup>1</sup> ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς αἰτίας προσ-αποδιδόναι διὰ θρασύτητα τολμῶντες, ὥσπερ ἢ τῇ τοῦ κόσμου γενέσει παρατυχόντες καὶ ὡς ἕκαστα καὶ ἐξ ὧν ἀπετελεῖτο κατιδόντες ἢ σύμβουλοι περὶ τῶν κατασκευαζομένων τῷ δημιουργῷ γενόμενοι.
 137 εἶτα τῶν ἄλλων ἅπαξ ἀπάντων μεθέμενοι γνωρί-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔτι φάσκοντες.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 133-137

to God " (Gen. xviii. 23). If, however, as 133 he goes on his way, he neither becomes weary, so that he gives in and collapses, nor grows remiss, so that he turns aside, now in this direction, now in that, and goes astray missing the central road that never diverges; but, taking the good runners as his example, finishes the race of life without stumbling, when he has reached the end he shall obtain crowns and prizes as a fitting guerdon. Are not the crowns and prizes 134 just this, not to have missed the end of his labours, but to have obtained those final aims of good sense that are so hard of attainment? What, then, is the end of right-mindedness? To pronounce on himself and all created being the verdict of folly; for the final aim of knowledge is to hold that we know nothing, He alone being wise, who is also alone God.
Accordingly Moses does right well in representing 135 Him as both the Father of the universe and Overseer of the things created, where he says: " God saw all things which He had made, and lo! they were fair exceedingly " (Gen. i. 31): for it was not possible for anyone perfectly to see the things which had been formed save their Maker. Come forward 136 now, you who are laden with vanity and gross stupidity and vast pretence, you that are wise in your own conceit and not only declare (in every case) that you perfectly know what each object is, but go so far as to venture in your audacity to add the reasons for its being what it is, as though you had either been standing by at the creation of the world, and had observed how and out of what materials its several parts were fashioned, or had acted as advisers to the Creator regarding the things He was forming—come, I say, 137 and then, letting go all other things whatever, take

PHILO

σατε ἑαυτοὺς καὶ οἷτινές ἐστε σαφῶς εἶπατε, κατὰ τὸ σῶμα, κατὰ τὴν ψυχὴν, κατὰ τὴν αἴσθησιν, κατὰ τὸν λόγον, καθ' ἓν τι καὶ τὸ βραχυτάτον τῶν εἰδῶν. τί ἐστὶν ὄρασις ἀποφύνασθε καὶ πῶς ὄρατε, τί ἀκοή καὶ πῶς ἀκούετε, τί γεῦσις, τί ἀφή, τί ὄσφρησις καὶ πῶς καθ' ἑκάστην ἐνεργεῖτε ἢ τίνες εἰσὶν αἱ τούτων

138 πηγαί, ἀφ' ὧν καὶ τὸ εἶναι ταῦτα συμβέβηκε. μὴ γάρ μοι περὶ σελήνης καὶ ἡλίου καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα κατ' οὐρανὸν καὶ κόσμον οὕτως μακρὰν διωκισμένων καὶ τὰς φύσεις διαφερόντων ἀερομυθεῖτε, ὧ κενοὶ φρενῶν, πρὶν ἑαυτοὺς ἐρευνῆσαι καὶ γνῶναι. τμηκαῦτα γὰρ ἴσως καὶ περὶ ἐτέρων διεξιούσι πιστευτέον· πρὶν δὲ οἷτινές ἐστε αὐτοὶ παραστήσαι, μὴ νομίζετε κριταὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἢ μάρτυρες ἀψευδέστατοί ποτε γενήσεσθαι.

139 XXV. Τούτων δὴ τούτον ἐχόντων τὸν τρόπον τελειωθεὶς ὁ νοῦς ἀποδώσει τὸ τέλος τῷ τελεσφόρῳ θεῷ κατὰ τὸ ἱερώτατον γράμμα· νόμος γάρ ἐστι τὸ τέλος εἶναι κυρίου. πότε οὖν ἀποδίδωσιν; ὅταν “ἐπὶ τὸν τόπον ὃν εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ θεὸς τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ τρίτῃ” παραγένηται, παρελθὼν τὰς πλείους μοίρας τῶν χρονικῶν διαστημάτων καὶ ἤδη πρὸς

140 τὴν ἄχρονον μεταβαίνων φύσιν· τότε γὰρ καὶ τὸν ἀγαπητὸν υἱὸν ἱεουργήσει, οὐχὶ ἄνθρωπον—οὐ γὰρ τεκνοκτόνος ὁ σοφός—, ἀλλὰ τὸ τῆς ἀρετώσης ψυχῆς γέννημα ἄρρεν, τὸν ἐπανθήσαντα καρπὸν αὐτῆ, ὃν πῶς ἤνεγκεν οὐκ ἔγνω, βλάστημα θεῖον,

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 563.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. since God is all and self nothing. But perhaps “when these things are so,” “the mind being now perfected,” i.e. when it has reached the τέλος described in § 133, after which the argument was interrupted to explain what the τέλος is.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 137-140

knowledge of yourselves, and say clearly who you are, in body, in soul, in sense-perception, in reason and speech, in each single one, even the most minute, of the subdivisions of your being. Declare what sight is and how you see, what hearing is and how you hear, what taste, touch, smelling are, and how you act in accordance with each of them, or what are the springs and sources of these, from which is derived their very being. For pray do not, O ye senseless ones, spin 138 your airy fables<sup>a</sup> about moon or sun or the other objects in the sky and in the universe so far removed from us and so varied in their natures, until you have scrutinized and come to know yourselves. After that, we may perhaps believe you when you hold forth on other subjects: but before you establish who you yourselves are, do not think that you will ever become capable of acting as judges or trustworthy witnesses in the other matters.

XXV. This being the case,<sup>b</sup> the Mind, when he has 139 reached the summit, will render the sum of his tribute to God the consummator, in accordance with the all-holy writ, for there is a law that the sum<sup>c</sup> is the Lord's (Num. xxxi. 28 ff.). When, then, does he render it? When he has arrived "on the third day at the place which God had told him of" (Gen. xxii. 3), having passed the greater number of the divisions of time, and already quitting them for the existence that is timeless: for then too he will sacrifice his only son, 140 no human being (for the wise man is not a slayer of his offspring), but the male progeny of the rich and fertile soul, the fruit that blossomed upon it. How the soul bore it she does not know: it is a Divine growth; and <sup>c</sup> Or "due." Philo is playing on the double meaning of τέλος.

PHILO

- οὐ φανέντος ἢ δόξασα κυοφορήσαι τὴν ἄγνοιαν τοῦ συμβάντος ἀγαθοῦ διηγείται φάσκουσα· “ τίς ἀναγγελεῖ Ἀβραάμ ” ὡς ἀπιστοῦντι<sup>1</sup> δῆπου περὶ τὴν τοῦ αὐτοματοῦς γένους ἀνατολήν, ὅτι “ θηλάζει παιδίον Σάρρα,” οὐχὶ πρὸς Σάρρας θηλάζεται; τὸ γὰρ αὐτοδίδακτον τρέφεται μὲν ὑπ’ οὐδενός, |
- [458] τροφή δ’ ἐστὶν ἄλλων, ἅτε ἱκανὸν διδάσκειν καὶ 141 μανθάνειν οὐ δεόμενον. “ ἔτεκον γὰρ υἷόν,” οὐχ ὡς γυναῖκες Αἰγύπτιαι κατὰ τὴν τοῦ σώματος ἀκμήν, ἀλλ’ ὡς αἱ Ἑβραῖαι ψυχαί, “ ἐν τῷ γήρα μου,” ὅτε τὰ μὲν ὅσα αἰσθητὰ καὶ θνητὰ μεμάρανται, τὰ δὲ νοητὰ καὶ ἀθάνατα ἀνήβηκεν, ἃ
- 142 γέρως καὶ τιμῆς ἐστὶν ἐπάξια. καὶ ἔτεκον μαιευτικῆς τέχνης οὐ προσδεθεισα· τίκτομεν γὰρ καὶ πρὶν εἰσελθεῖν τινας ἐπινοίας καὶ ἐπιστήμας ἀνθρώπων πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἄνευ τῶν ἐξ ἔθους συνεργούντων, σπείροντος καὶ γεννῶντος θεοῦ τὰ ἀστεία γεννήματα, ἃ τῷ δόντι προσηκόντως κατὰ τὸν ἐπ’ εὐχαριστία τεθέντα νόμον ἀποδίδονται· “ τὰ γὰρ δῶρά μου, δόματά μου, καρπώματά μου ” φησὶ “ διατηρήσατε προσφέρειν ἐμοί.”
- 143 XXVI. Τοῦτ’ ἐστὶ τὸ τέλος τῆς ὁδοῦ τῶν ἐπομένων λόγοις καὶ προστάξεσι νομίμοις καὶ ταύτῃ βαδίζόντων, ἧ ἂν ὁ θεὸς ἀφηγηται· ὁ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπειθοῦντι.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 563.

<sup>b</sup> “Midwife,” in allusion to Ex. i. 19; “goodly,” to Ex. ii. 2 (LXX. ἀστείον: cf. Heb. xi. 23). The connexion of thought in §§ 139-142 is as follows. The idea that Isaac’s sacrifice typifies the offering of the soul’s consummation suggests other thoughts about this soul-birth: (1) that the soul is unconscious of what it is bearing, (2) that it comes in the

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 140-143

when it appeared she that seemed to have given birth to it acknowledges her ignorance of the good thing that had occurred in the words " who shall announce to Abraham " (for she assumed that he did not believe in the rising up of the breed that learns without a teacher), " who shall tell Abraham that Sarah is suckling a child " (Gen. xxi. 7) ? It does not say " a child is being suckled by Sarah,"<sup>a</sup> for the kind that is taught without a teacher is nourished by no one, but is a source of nourishment to others, being capable of teaching and not needing to learn. " For 141 I bare a son," she continues, not as Egyptian women do in their bodily prime (Ex. i. 19), but as the Hebrew souls do, " in my old age " (Gen. xxi. 7), at a time, that is, when all things that are mortal and objects of sense-perception have decayed, while things immortal and intellectually discerned have grown young again, meet recipients of honour and esteem.

Furthermore, " I gave birth " without requiring 142 extraneous aid from the midwife's skill : for we give birth even before there come in to us any imaginations of man's knowledge, without the co-operation that custom supplies, for God begets and sows the seed of those goodly births, which, as is meet and right, are rendered to Him Who gave them, in fulfilment of the law laid down for thanksgiving : " My gifts, My endowments, My fruits " He says, " be careful to offer unto Me " (Num. xxviii. 2).<sup>b</sup>

XXVI. This is the end of the way of those who 143 follow the words and injunctions of the law, and march in whatever direction God leads the way : but ripeness of spiritual " old age " ; and this contrast between Sarah and the Egyptians suggests a further contrast, namely that the Hebrew-soul needs no " midwife."

PHILO

- ὑπενδούς ὑπὸ τοῦ πεινῶντος ἡδονῆς καὶ λείχου παθῶν, ὄνομα Ἀμαλήκ—ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ λαὸς 144 ἐκλείχων—, ἐκτετμήσεται. μηνύουσι δὲ οἱ χρησιμοὶ ὅτι λοχῶν ὁ τρόπος οὗτος, ἐπειδὴν τὸ ἐρρωμενέστερον τῆς ψυχικῆς δυνάμεως κατίδη περαιωθέν, ὑπανιστάμενος τῆς ἐνέδρας τὸ κεκμηκὸς μέρος ὡς “ οὐραγίαν κόπτει.” κάματος δ’ ὁ μὲν ἔστιν εὐένδοτος ἀσθένεια λογισμοῦ μὴ δυναμένου τοὺς ὑπὲρ<sup>1</sup> ἀρετῆς ἀχθοφορῆσαι πόνους, ἐν ἐσχατιαῖς οὗτος εὐρισκόμενος εὐαλωτότατος, ὁ δὲ ἔστιν ὑπομονὴ τῶν καλῶν, τὰ μὲν καλὰ ἀθρόα ἐρρωμένως ἀναδεχομένους, μηδὲν δὲ τῶν φαύλων, κἂν εἰ κουφότατον εἴη, βαστάσαι δικαίων, ἀλλ’ ὡς βαρύ-145 τατον ἄχθος ἀπορρίπτων. διὸ καὶ τὴν ἀρετὴν ὁ νόμος εὐθυβόλῳ προσεῖπεν ὀνόματι Λείαν, ἣτις ἐρμηνευθεῖσα λέγεται κοπιῶσα· τὸν γὰρ τῶν φαύλων βίον ἐπαχθῆ καὶ βαρὺν ὄντα φύσει κοπιῶδη προσηκόντως αὕτη νενόμικε καὶ οὐδὲ προσιδεῖν ἀξιοῖ, τὰς ὄψεις πρὸς μόνον τὸ καλὸν ἀποκλίνουσα.
 146 σπουδαζέτω δ’ ὁ νοῦς μὴ μόνον ἀνενδότως καὶ εὐτόνως ἔπεσθαι θεῶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν εὐθείαν ἀτραπὸν ἰέναι πρὸς μηδέτερα νεύων, μήτε τὰ δεξιὰ μήτε τὰ εὐώνυμα, οἷς ὁ γήινος Ἐδῶμ ἐμπεφώλευκε, τοτὲ μὲν ὑπερβολαῖς καὶ περιουσίαις, τοτὲ δὲ ἐλλείψεσι καὶ ἐνδείαις χρώμενος. ἄμεινον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπ’.

<sup>a</sup> As Heinemann suggests, there may be a play on λείχων and λοχῶν.

<sup>b</sup> For Philo’s treatment of this interpretation of Leah’s name see note on De Cher. 41.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 143-146

the man who gives in under the assaults of the foe, who hungers after pleasure and is lickerish for passion, whose name is "Amalek," which means "a people licking up"—this man shall find himself cut off. The oracles signify that the Amalek type of 144 character lies in ambush,<sup>a</sup> when it is aware that the more stalwart portion of the soul-army has gone by, rises up from its ambushade and "smites or 'cuts' the hindmost" (Deut. xxv. 17 f.) or the labouring rear.

"Labouring" may be used of a readiness to give in, a feebleness of reason's functioning, an inability to bear the burdens needed to win virtue. This is a condition which, when found lagging at the extreme rear, falls an easy prey. Or the word may connote brave endurance in a noble cause, a sturdy readiness to undertake all noble tasks together, a refusal to support the weight of any base thing, though it be the very lightest, nay a rejection of it as though it were the heaviest burden.

Hence it comes that the Law gave Virtue the appro- 145 priate name "Leah," which when translated is "growing weary"<sup>b</sup>; for Virtue has, as she well may do, made up her mind that the way of life of the wicked, so essentially burdensome and heavy, is full of weariness, and she refuses so much as to look at it, turning her gaze away from it and fixing it on the morally beautiful alone.

But let the mind be bent 146 not only on following God with alert and unflinching steps, but also on keeping the straight course. Let it not incline to either side, either to what is on the right hand or to what is on the left, where Edom, of the earth earthy, has his lurking holes, and thus be the victim now of excesses and extravagances, now of shortcomings and deficiencies. For better is it to γὰρ ὁδῶ τῇ μέσῃ βαδίζειν ἐστὶ τῇ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν βασιλικῇ, ἣν ὁ μέγας καὶ μόνος βασιλεὺς θεὸς ταῖς φιλαρέτοις ψυχαῖς ἠῦρυνεν ἐνδιαίτημα κάλλιστον.

PHILO

147 διὸ καὶ τινες τῶν τὴν ἡμερον καὶ κοινωνικὴν μετιόντων φιλοσοφίαν μεσότητος τὰς ἀρετὰς εἶπον εἶναι, ἐν μεθορίῳ στήσαντες αὐτάς, ἐπειδὴ τό τε [459] ὑπέραυχον ἀλαζονείας γέμον πολλῆς | κακὸν καὶ τὸ<sup>1</sup> ταπεινοῦ καὶ ἀφανοῦς μεταποιεῖσθαι σχήματος εὐεπίβατον, τὸ δὲ μεταξὺ ἀμφοῖν κεκραμένον ἐπιεικῶς ὠφέλιμον.

148 XXVII. Τὸ δὲ “ ὥχετο μετ’ αὐτοῦ Λῶτ ” τίνα ἔχει λόγον σκεπτόεν. ἔστι μὲν οὖν Λῶτ ἐρμηνευθεὶς ἀπόκλισις· κλίνεται δὲ ὁ νοῦς τοτὲ μὲν τάγαθόν, τοτὲ δ’ αὖ τὸ κακὸν ἀποστρεφόμενος. ἄμφω δὲ ταῦτα πολλάκις περὶ ἕνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν θεωρεῖται· εἰσὶ γάρ τινες ἐνδοιασταὶ καὶ ἐπαμφοτερισταί, πρὸς ἑκάτερον τοῖχον ὥσπερ σκάφος ὑπ’ ἐναντίων πνευμάτων διαφερόμενον ἀποκλίνοντες ἢ καθάπερ ἐπὶ πλάστιγγος ἀντιρρέποντες, ἐφ’ ἑνὸς στηριχθῆναι βεβαίως ἀδυνατοῦντες, ὧν οὐδὲ τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ ἀμείνω τροπὴν ἐπαινετέον· φορᾶ

149 γάρ, ἀλλ’ οὐ γνώμη γίνεται. τούτων καὶ ὁ Λῶτ ἐστὶ θιασώτης,<sup>2</sup> ὃν φησιν οἴχεσθαι μετὰ τοῦ σοφίας ἔραστοῦ. καλὸν δ’ ἦν ἀρξάμενον ἐκείνῳ παρακολουθεῖν ἀπομαθεῖν ἀμαθίαν καὶ μηκέτι παλιδρομησαὶ πρὸς αὐτήν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐχ ἕνεκα τοῦ μιμησάμενον τὸν ἀμείνω βελτιωθῆναι συνέρχεται, ἀλλ’ ὑπὲρ τοῦ κακείνῳ παρασχεῖν ἀντισπάσματα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τοῦ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. θεατῆς.

---

<sup>a</sup> For the thought of this section see Quod Deus 162 ff., where the meaning of “excess” and “deficiency” is fully explained.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 146-149

walk on the central road, the road that is truly "the king's" (Num. xx. 17), seeing that God, the great and only King, laid it out a broad and goodly way for virtue-loving souls to keep to.<sup>a</sup> Hence it is that some 147 of those who followed the mild and social form of philosophy,<sup>b</sup> have said that the virtues are means, fixing them in a borderland, feeling that the overweening boastfulness of a braggart is bad, and that to adopt a humble and obscure position is to expose yourself to attack and oppression, whereas a fair and reasonable mixture of the two is beneficial.

XXVII. We have to consider what is meant by 148 "Lot went with him" (Gen. xii. 4). "Lot" by interpretation is "turning aside" or "inclining away." The mind "inclines," sometimes turning away from what is good, sometimes from what is bad. Oftentimes both tendencies are observable in one and the same person: for some men are irresolute, facers both ways, inclining to either side like a boat tossed by winds from opposite quarters, or swaying up and down as though on a pair of scales, incapable of becoming firmly settled on one: with such there is nothing praiseworthy even in their taking a turn to the better course; for it is the result not of judgement but of drift. Of this crew Lot is a member, who is 149 said to have left his home with the lover of wisdom. When he had set out to follow his steps, it would have been well for him to unlearn lack of learning and to have retraced his steps to it no more. The fact is, however, that he comes with him, not that he may imitate the man who is better than he and so gain improvement, but actually to create obstacles which pull him back, and drag him elsewhere and

<sup>b</sup> Probably a definite reference to the Peripatetic school.

- καὶ μεθολκὰς καὶ κατὰ τὴν ἔνθεν <καὶ ἔνθεν><sup>1</sup> 150 ὀλίσθους. τεκμήριον δέ· ὁ μὲν ἐπὶ τὴν ἀρχαίαν ὑποτροπιάσας νόσον οἰχθήσεται ληφθεὶς αἰχμάλωτος ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν ψυχῇ πολεμίων, ὁ δὲ τὰς ἐξ ἐνέδρας ἐπιβουλὰς αὐτοῦ φυλαξάμενος πάση μηχανῇ δι-οικισθήσεται. τὸν δὲ διοικισμὸν αὐθις μὲν, οὐπω δὲ ποιήσεται. νῦν μὲν γὰρ τὰ θεωρήματα αὐτῶ ὡς ἂν ἄρτι ἀρχομένῳ τῆς θείας θεωρίας πλαδᾶ καὶ σαλεύει· ὅταν δ' ἤδη παγέντα κραταιό-τερον ἰδρυθῆ, δυνήσεται τὸ δελεάζον καὶ κολακεῦον ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἀκατάλλακτον καὶ δυσθήρατον φύσει 151 διαζευξάτω. τοῦτο γὰρ ἔσθ' ὁ δυσσπότριπτον<sup>2</sup> ὃν παρέπεται ψυχῇ κωλύον αὐτὴν πρὸς ἀρετὴν ὠκυ-δρομεῖν· τοῦθ', ἡνίκα καὶ τὴν Αἴγυπτον ἀπελείπομεν, τὴν σωματικὴν χώραν ἅπασαν, ἀπομαθεῖν τὰ πάθη σπουδάσαντες κατὰ τὰς τοῦ προφήτου λόγους, Μωυσέως,<sup>3</sup> ὑφηγήσεις, ἠκολούθησεν ἡμῖν, ἔλλαμβανόμενον τῆς περὶ τὴν ἕξοδον σπουδῆς καὶ τῷ τάχει τῆς ἀπολείψεως ὑπὸ φθόνου βραδυτήτας 152 ἐμποιούν· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ καὶ ἐπίμικτος πολὺς συνανέβη αὐτοῖς, καὶ πρόβατα καὶ βόες καὶ κτήνη πολλὰ σφόδρα,” ὁ δὲ ἐπίμικτος οὗτος ἦν τὰ κτη-νώδη καὶ ἄλογα τῆς ψυχῆς, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, δόγματα. XXVIII. παγκάλως δὲ καὶ εὐθυβόλως τὴν τοῦ φαύλου ψυχὴν ἐπίμικτον καλεῖ· συνηρημένη γὰρ καὶ συμπεφορημένη καὶ μιγὰς ὄντως ἐκ

<sup>1</sup> κατὰ τὴν ἔνθεν <καὶ ἔνθεν>, sc. ὅδον G.H.W.: Wend. con-jectures κατὰ τὴν ὅδον ἐμποιεῖν (or ἐνθεῖναι).

<sup>2</sup> Mangey δυσσπότριπτον, which suits παρέπεται better.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. κατὰ τοὺς τοῦ προφήτου λόγους (one MS. λόγον) Μω.]
 so Mangey, who inserts (again with one MS.) καὶ after Μω.: Wend.'s correction is certainly right, cf. De Cong. 170
 ὁ προφήτης λόγος ὄνομα Μωυσῆς.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 150-152

make him slip in this direction or that. Here 150 is a proof of it. We shall find Lot having a relapse, suffering from the old complaint, carried off a prisoner of war by the enemies in the soul; and Abraham, resorting to every device to guard against his ambushes and attacks, setting up separate quarters.<sup>a</sup>

This separation he will effect later on, but not as yet. For at present he is but a novice in the contemplation and study of things Divine and his principles are unformed and wavering. By and by they will have gained consistency and rest on a firmer foundation, and he will be able to dissociate from himself the ensnaring and flattering element as an irreconcilable and elusive foe. For it is this from 151 which the soul can so hardly disengage itself as it clings to it and hinders it from making swift progress in reaching virtue. This it was, when we were abandoning Egypt, all the bodily region, and were hastening to unlearn the passions in obedience to the instructions of the word of prophecy,<sup>b</sup> even Moses,—it was this, I say, that followed us, checking our zeal to be gone, and moved by envy to retard the speed of our departure: for we read “and a mixed multi- 152 tude went up with them, both<sup>c</sup> sheep and oxen and beasts very many” (Ex. xii. 38), and this mixed multitude was, in fact, the soul’s herd of beast-like doctrines. XXVIII. And very well and appropriately does he call the soul of the bad man “mixed”: for it is brought together and collected and a medley in

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 564.

<sup>b</sup> A reference to Ex. xii. 11, quoted with the same interpretation above, § 25.

<sup>c</sup> “both” better than “and” as the next words show, though later the thought is changed, and the ἐπιμικτος becomes human.

PHILO

- πλειόνων καὶ μαχομένων δοξῶν, μία μὲν οὔσα 153 ἀριθμῶ, μυριάς δὲ τῷ πολυτρόπῳ. διὸ καὶ τῷ ἐπίμικτος πρόσκειται πολὺς· ὁ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς ἓν [460] μόνον ἀφορῶν ἀπλοῦς καὶ | ἀμιγῆς καὶ λείος ὄντως, ὁ δὲ πολλὰ τέλη τοῦ βίου προτιθέμενος πολὺς καὶ μιγὰς καὶ δασὺς ἀληθεία. οὗ χάριν οἱ χρησμοὶ τὸν μὲν ἀσκητὴν τῶν καλῶν Ἰακώβ λείον, τὸν δὲ τῶν 154 αἰσχίστων Ἡσαῦ δασὺν εἰσάγουσι. διὰ τὸν ἐπίμικτον καὶ δασὺν τοῦτον ὄχλον ἐκ μιγάδων καὶ συγκλύδων συμπεφυρμένον δοξῶν ἠκυδρομη-σαι δυνάμενος ὁ νοῦς, ὅτε τὴν σωματικὴν χώραν ἀπεδίδρασκεν Αἴγυπτον, καὶ τρισὶν ἡμέραις δια-δέξασθαι τὸν ἀρετῆς κλῆρον φωτὶ τρισσῶ, μνήμη τῶν παρεληλυθότων καὶ ἑναργεῖα<sup>1</sup> τῶν παρόντων καὶ τῇ τῶν μελλόντων ἐλπίδι, τεσσαράκοντα ἐτῶν ἀριθμόν, μῆκος τοσοῦτου χρόνου, τρίβεται τὴν ἐν κύκλῳ περιάγων καὶ ἀλώμενος ἔνεκα τοῦ πολυ-τρόπου, τὴν ἐπ' εὐθείας ἀνυσιμωτάτην οὔσαν δέον.
 155 οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ μὴ μόνον ὀλίγοις εἶδουσι ἐπιθυμίας χαίρων, ἀλλὰ μηδὲν τὸ παράπαν ἀπολιπεῖν δικαιοῶν, ἵνα ὅλον δι' ὅλων τὸ γένος, ᾧ πᾶν εἶδος ἐμφέρεται, μετέρχεται· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ὁ ἐπίμικτος ὁ ἐν αὐτοῖς ἐπεθύμησεν ἐπιθυμίαν ” αὐτοῦ τοῦ γένους, οὐχ ἑνός τινος τῶν εἰδῶν, “ καὶ καθίσαντες ἔκλαιον.” σунήσι γὰρ ὀλιγο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐνεργεῖα.

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo takes ἐπιθυμίαν, which in the LXX. is a cognate accusative representing the familiar Hebrew way of intensifying the verb (though that more often employs the dative; cf. Leg. All. i. 90), as if it was the direct object of ἐπεθύμησεν. The verb does occasionally take an accusative, though very deed, consisting of many discordant opinions, one in number but myriad in its manifoldness. For 153 this reason it is called a "multitude" or "numerous" as well as "mixed"; for he that has an eye to a single aim only is single and unmixed and truly smooth and level, but he that sets before himself many aims for his life is manifold and mixed and truly rough. It is for this reason that the oracles represent Jacob, the trainer of himself for nobility, as smooth, but Esau, who exercised himself in basest things, as rough with hair (Gen. xxvii. 11).

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 152-155

What befell the Mind, when it escaped from Egypt 154 the country of the body, was due to this mixed and rough multitude, a conglomeration of promiscuous and diverse opinions. It could have made rapid progress and in three days (Gen. xxii. 3) have entered upon the inheritance of virtue by a threefold light, memory of things gone by, clear sight of things present, and the expectation of things to come. Instead of this, for the space of forty years, for all that length of time, it wears itself out wandering and going round circle-wise, in obedience to the "manifold" element with its many twistings, when it behoved it to have taken the straight way which was the speediest.

It is this mixed mul- 155 titude which takes delight not in a few species of lusting only, but claims to leave out nothing at all, that it may follow after lust's entire genus, including all its species. For we read "the mixed people that was among them 'craved after lust,'<sup>a</sup> after the genus itself, not some single species, 'and sat down and wept'" (Num. xi. 4).

For the understand- commonly the genitive, on which he falls back in the next words.

PHILO

- δρανοῦσα ἢ διάνοια καί, ὅποτε μὴ δύναται τυχεῖν ὦν ὀρέγεται, δακρῦει καὶ στενάζει· καίτοι ὤφειλε χαίρειν παθῶν καὶ νοσημάτων ἀτυχοῦσα καὶ μεγάλην εὐπραγίαν νομίζειν τὴν ἔνδειαν καὶ ἀπουσίαν
- 156 αὐτῶν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ τοῖς χορευταῖς ἀρετῆς σφαδάζειν καὶ δακρῦειν ἔθος, ἢ τὰς τῶν ἀφρόνων ὀδυρομένοις συμφορὰς διὰ τὸ φύσει κοινωνικὸν καὶ φιλάνθρωπον ἢ διὰ περιχάρειαν. γίνεται δὲ αὕτη, ὅταν ἀθρόα ἀγαθὰ μὴδὲ προσδοκηθέντα ποτὲ αἰφνίδιον ὀμβρήσαντα πλημμυρῇ· ἀφ' οὗ καὶ τὸ ποιητικὸν εἰρησθαί μοι δοκεῖ “δακρυόεν γελά-
- 157 σασα”· προσπεσοῦσα γὰρ ἐκ τοῦ ἀνελπίστου ἢ εὐπαθειῶν ἀρίστη χαρὰ ψυχῇ μείζονα αὐτὴν ἢ πρότερον ἦν ἐποίησεν, ὡς διὰ τὸν ὄγκον μηκέτι χωρεῖν τὸ σῶμα, θλιβόμενον δὲ καὶ πιεζόμενον ἀποστάζειν λιβάδας, ἃς καλεῖν ἔθος δάκρυα, περὶ ὧν ἐν ὕμνοις εἴρηται· “ψωμιεῖς ἡμᾶς ἄρτον δακρῦων” καὶ “ἐγένετο τὰ δάκρυά μοι ἄρτος ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτός.” τροφή γάρ ἐστι διανοίας τὰ τοῦ ἐνδιαθέτου καὶ σπουδαίου γέλωτος ἐμφανῆ δάκρυα, ἐπειδὴν ὁ θεῖος ἐντακεῖς ἡμερος τὸν τοῦ γενητοῦ θρήνον ἄσμα εἰς τὸν ἀγένητον ὕμνου ποιήσῃ.<sup>1</sup>
- 158 XXIX. “Ἐνιοι μὲν οὖν τὸν μιγάδα καὶ δασὺν τοῦτον ἀπορρίπτουσι καὶ διατειχίζουσιν ἀφ' ἑαυ-
- [461] τῶν τῷ θεοφιλεῖ | μόνῳ γένει χαίροντες· ἔνιοι δὲ καὶ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἑταιρίαν τίθενται, μεσιτεύειν τὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ποιήσειεν.

<sup>a</sup> Hom. Il. vi. 484.

<sup>b</sup> E.V. “Thou hast fed us.” The future perhaps makes Philo’s perversion of the meaning a little less unreasonable.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 155-158

ing is conscious of its feebleness, and when it cannot obtain what it is longing for, it weeps and groans ; and yet it had cause to rejoice at missing passions and sicknesses, and to consider the dearth and absence of them great prosperity. And yet indeed it is 156 not unusual for the devotees of virtue themselves to be much moved and to shed tears, either when bemoaning the misfortunes of the unwise owing to their innate fellow-feeling and humaneness, or by reason of being overjoyed. This last occurs when, as is sometimes the case, a sudden shower of unexpected good things falls, and they come all at once like a flood. I fancy that it is to this that we must refer the expression of the poet,

She laughed with glad tears in her eyes.<sup>a</sup>

For joy, that best of the good emotions, when it 157 has fallen upon the soul unexpectedly, makes it larger than it was before, so that owing to its size the body has no longer room for it, and as it is squeezed and compressed it distils moist drops, which we are in the habit of calling "tears." Of these it is said in the Psalms, "Thou shalt feed us<sup>b</sup> with the bread of tears" (Ps. lxxix. [lxxx.] 6), and "My tears have been my bread by day and by night" (Ps. xli. [xlii.] 4). For tears, that rise to the surface from the inward heart-felt laughter, are food to the understanding, coming when the love of God has sunk deep in and turned the dirge of created being into a canticle of praise to the Uncreate.

XXIX. While some regard this rough and motley 158 type as outcast, and keep it at a distance from themselves, having delight in the God-beloved kind only, others actually form ties of fellowship with it,

PHILO

- 159 *ἐαυτῶν βίον ἀξιοῦντες καὶ μεθόριον ἀνθρωπίνων τε καὶ θείων ἀρετῶν τιθέντες, ἢ ἑκατέρων ἐφάπτονται, καὶ τῶν ἀληθεία καὶ τῶν δοκῆσει. τούτου τοῦ δόγματος ὁ πολιτευόμενός ἐστι τρόπος, ὃν Ἰωσήφ ὀνομάζειν ἔθος, ᾧ συναπέρχονται μέλλοντι τὸν πατέρα κηδεύειν “ πάντες οἱ παῖδες Φαραῶ καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ καὶ πάντες οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τῆς Αἰγύπτου καὶ πᾶσα ἡ πανοικία αὐτοῦ, Ἰωσήφ καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ πᾶσα ἡ 160 οἰκία ἡ πατρικὴ αὐτοῦ.” ὄρας ὅτι μέσος τῆς Φαραῶ καὶ τῆς πατρικῆς οἰκίας ὁ πολιτικὸς οὗτος τάττεται, ἵνα καὶ τῶν κατὰ σῶμα, τὴν Αἴγυπτον, καὶ τῶν κατὰ ψυχὴν, ἅπερ ἐν τῷ πατρικῷ οἴκῳ θησαυροφυλακεῖται, κατ’ ἴσον ἐφάπτηται<sup>1</sup>; ὅταν μὲν γὰρ λέγῃ “ τοῦ θεοῦ εἰμι ” καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα συγγενῇ τούτῳ, τοῖς τῆς πατρῴας οἰκίας ἐμμένει νομίμοις· ὅταν δὲ ἐπὶ “ τὸ δευτερεῖον ἄρμα ” τοῦ βασιλεύειν νοῦ δοκοῦντος ἀνέρχῃται, Φαραῶ, τὸν 161 Αἰγυπτιακὸν πάλιν ἰδρύεται τύφον. ἀθλιώτερος δ’ ὁ νομιζόμενος ἐνδοξότερος εἶναι βασιλεύς, ὃς τῷ προηγουμένῳ τῶν ἀρμάτων ἐποχεῖται· τὸ γὰρ μὴ ἐν καλοῖς διαπρέπειν ἐπιφανέστατον αἰσχος, ὡς τὸ φέρεσθαι τὰ ἐν τούτοις δευτερεῖα κουφότερον κακόν.
 162 τὸ μέντοι γε ἐπαμφοτερίζον αὐτοῦ καταμάθοις ἂν κακ τῶν ὄρκων οὕς πεποιήται, τοτὲ μὲν ὀμνὺς “ νῆ τὴν ὑγείαν Φαραῶ,” τοτὲ δ’ ἔμπαλιν*

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐφῆται (ἐφεῖται).

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 158-162

holding that their own place in human life should be midway, set as a borderland between virtues human and Divine, and thus they aim at being in touch with both the real and the reputed virtues. To this school 159 belongs the politician's frame of mind, to which it is customary to give the name "Joseph." When he is about to bury his father there go off with him "all the servants of Pharaoh and the elders of his house and all the elders of Egypt and all his whole household,<sup>a</sup> Joseph and his brethren and all his father's house" (Gen. l. 7 f.). Do you notice that this 160 politician takes his position in the midst between the house of Pharaoh and his father's house? that his object is to be equally in touch with the concerns of the body, which is Egypt, and those of the soul which are kept as in a treasury in his father's house? For when he says "I belong to God" (Gen. l. 19) and other things of this kind, he is abiding by the customs of his father's house. But when he mounts "the second chariot" of the mind that fancies itself a king, even Pharaoh (Gen. xli. 43), he again sets up the idol of Egyptian vanity.<sup>b</sup> Though indeed more wretched 161 than he is the king who is thought to be more glorious, who rides in the principal chariot: for to win distinction in things that are without moral beauty is a most patent disgrace, just as to carry off the second prize in such things is a less weighty evil. Of his 162 proneness to face both ways you may get an idea from the oaths which he is represented as taking, at one moment swearing "yea by the health of Pharaoh" (Gen. xlii. 16) and then on the contrary, "no, by the

<sup>a</sup> The LXX has ἡ πανοικία Ἰωσήφ (evidently genitive), but Philo's comments shew that he took it as in the translation.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 564. πάλιν perhaps "on the other hand."

PHILO

- “ οὐ τὴν ὑγίαιαν Φαραώ.” ἀλλ’ ὁ μὲν περιέχων τὴν ἀπόφασιν ὄρκος τῆς πατρικῆς ἂν εἴη διάταγμα οἰκίας ἀεὶ φονώσης κατὰ τοῦ πάθους καὶ βουλομένης αὐτὸ τεθνάναι, ὁ δ’ ἕτερος Αἰγύπτου, ἧ
- 163 φίλον ἐστὶ τοῦτο σώζεσθαι. διόπερ καίτοι τοσαύτης πληθύος συνανιούσης ἐπίμικτον ὄχλον οὐκ εἶπεν, ἐπειδὴ τῷ μὲν ἄκρως ὄρατικῶ καὶ φιλαρέτῳ πᾶν ὁ μὴ ἀρετῇ ἢ ἀρετῆς ἔργον ἀναμειχθαι καὶ συγκεχύσθαι δοκεῖ, τῷ δὲ ἔτι χαμαιζήλω καθ’ αὐτὰ τὰ γῆς ἄθλα ἀξιέραστα καὶ ἀξιοτίμητα νενόμισται.
- 164 XXX. Τὸν μὲν οὖν ὡς κηφήνα τοὺς μελιττῶν<sup>1</sup> ὠφελίμους πόνους λυμαίνεσθαι διεγνωκότα καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἐπακολουθοῦντα διατειχιεῖ, καθάπερ ἔφην, ὁ φρονήσεως ἔραστής, τοὺς δὲ ἔνεκα μιμήσεως παρεπομένους κατὰ τὸν τῶν καλῶν ζῆλον ἀποδέξεται μοίρας αὐτοῖς τὰς ἀρμοττούσας δασάμενος· “ τῶν ” γάρ φησι “ συμπορευθέντων ἀνδρῶν μετ’ ἐμοῦ Ἐσχῶλ, Αὐνάν, Μαμβρῆ οὗτοι λήψονται μερίδα ”· λέγει δὲ τοὺς εὐφυεῖς τρόπους καὶ φιλο-
165 θεάμονας. ὁ μὲν γὰρ Ἐσχῶλ εὐφυΐας σύμβολον

<sup>1</sup> μελιττῶν is my conjecture for the ms. μὲν αὐτῶν. See App. p. 564.

<sup>a</sup> The LXX has νῆ (some texts μᾶ) τὴν ὑγίαιαν Φαραώ, οὐ μὴ ἐξέλθητε. Philo presumably found οὐ in his copy. It will make the point a little more sensible, if we understand him to take the words “ I will not swear by the health of Pharaoh, (but) you shall not go forth.”

<sup>b</sup> The meaning of the section seems to be as follows. To the Israel mind the mixed cavalcade of Ex. xli. is confusion; that of Gen. l. is not so to the Joseph mind. Moses regulates his language in speaking of each multitude by what the two minds would think of them.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 162-165

health of Pharaoh " <sup>a</sup> (Gen. xlii. 15). The oath containing the negative is one that his father's house would prescribe, being always a mortal foe to passion and wishing it dead ; the other oath is one that Egypt might prescribe, for passion's welfare is dear to it. It 163 is for all these reasons that, though so great a number went up with Joseph, Moses does not call them a mixed multitude ; for whereas in the view of the man whose vision is quite perfect and who is a lover of virtue, all that is not virtue and virtue's doing seems to be mixed up and to be in confusion, in the eyes of the man who still cherishes low aims earth's prizes are deemed to be in themselves worthy of love and worthy of honour. <sup>b</sup>

XXX. The lover of sound sense will, therefore, as I 164 said, set a barrier between him and the man who, like a drone, has set himself to make havoc of the useful labours of the bees, and who follows for the sake of doing this, while those who in their enthusiasm for all that is morally excellent accompany them on their journey from a wish to copy them, he will welcome and allot to them such portions as are suitable : for Abraham says " of the men that journeyed with me Eshcol and Aunan, <sup>c</sup> these shall receive Mamre as their portion " (Gen. xiv. 24) ; meaning characters well endowed by nature and lovers of the higher vision. For Eshcol is a symbol of good natural ability, his 165

<sup>c</sup> Though Wend.'s punctuation evidently takes Mamre (as no doubt it is) as nom., Philo's language shews clearly that Mamre is, not has, the κληρος. That he should so take it, is not surprising. Except here and perhaps in Gen. xiv. 13, he would find no suggestion that Mamre was a man. It is either a town or occurs in the phrase ἡ δρῦς Μαμβρή. Even in Gen. xiv. 13 the words might without violation of grammar be so taken as to avoid such a suggestion.

PHILO

[462] πυρὸς ἔχων ὄνομα, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὸ | εὐφυῆς εὐτολμον καὶ ἔνθερμον καὶ ἐχόμενον ὧν ἂν προσάψῃται, ὁ δὲ Αὐνὰν τοῦ φιλοθεάμενος—ὀφθαλμοὶ γὰρ ἔρμηνεύεται<sup>1</sup>—τῷ καὶ τὰ ψυχῆς ὑπ' εὐθυμίας<sup>2</sup> ὄμματα διοίγνυσθαι. τούτων δ' ἀμφοτέρων ἐστὶν ὁ θεωρητικὸς βίος κλήρος, προσαγορευόμενος Μαμβρῆ, ὁ μεταληφθὲν ἀπὸ ὀράσεως καλεῖται· τῷ δὲ θεωρητικῷ τὸ ὄρᾶν συνωδόν τε καὶ οἰκειότατον.

166 ἐπειδὴν δὲ τούτοις ἀλείπταις χρησάμενος ὁ νοῦς μηδὲν ἑλλείπη τῶν πρὸς ἄσκησιν, συνομαρτεῖ καὶ συντρέχει τελεία φρονήσει, μήθ' ὑπερέχων μήθ' ὑπερεχόμενος, ἀλλὰ ἰσαίτατα καὶ ἰσοστάσια βαίνων. δηλοῖ δὲ τὸ λόγιον ἐν ᾧ σαφῶς εἴρηται, διότι “πορευθέντες ἀμφοτέροι ἅμ' ἦλθον<sup>3</sup> ἐπὶ τὸν τόπον

167 ὃν εἶπεν ὁ θεός.” ὑπερβάλλουσά γε ἰσότης ἀρετῶν, ἀμιλλησαμένων<sup>4</sup> πόνου μὲν πρὸς εὐεξίαν, τέχνης δὲ πρὸς τὴν αὐτοδίδακτον φύσιν, καὶ δυναθέντων ἴσα τὰ ἀθλα τῆς ἀρετῆς ἐνέγκασθαι· ὥσπερ ἂν εἰ ζωγραφία καὶ πλαστικὴ μὴ μόνον ὡς νῦν ἀκίνητα καὶ ἄψυχα ἐδημιούργουν, ἴσχυον δὲ κινούμενά τε καὶ ἔμψυχα τὰ γραφόμενα καὶ πλαττόμενα ποιεῖν· ἐδόκουν γὰρ ἂν φύσεως ἔργων οὔσαι τὸ πάλαι μιμητικαὶ τέχναι φύσεις αὐταὶ γεγενῆσθαι τὰ νῦν.

<sup>1</sup> Wend. prints ὀφθαλμοὶ γὰρ ἔρμηνεύεται τῷ κτλ. without dashes. But clearly the opening of the soul's eye is not the reason why the name Aunan means eyes.

<sup>2</sup> For ὑπ' εὐθυμίας (most mss. ὑπὲρ) see App. p. 565.

<sup>3</sup> mss. and Wend. ἀνῆλθον: the correction (Heinemann's) is certain. The reference is to Gen. xxii. 8, not, as W. supposed, Gen. xxii. 3. That they came together is the point of both this and the following section.

<sup>4</sup> mss. ἀμίλλης ἀμείνων.

<sup>a</sup> The gist of this and the preceding sections may be summed up thus. When the Abraham soul of Gen. xiv. has name meaning "fire," for natural ability like fire is full of daring, and hot, and fastens on whatever it touches. Aunan represents the vision-lover, for it means "eyes," since the eyes of the soul also are opened by cheerfulness. And of both of these the contemplative life is the inheritance receiving the name of Mamre, which in our language is "from seeing"; and there is an intimate connexion between seeing and contemplation. When 166 the mind, having such trainers as these, omits nothing that will make for its training, it runs by the side of perfect sound sense, neither getting in front nor dropping behind, but taking strides of the same length and strength. This is manifest from the plain statement of the oracle that they "both journeyed and came together to the place of which God had told him" (Gen. xxii. 8). There is indeed an extra- 167 ordinary equality in virtues, when labour has vied with natural fitness, and acquired skill with self-tutored nature, and the pair have proved capable of carrying off virtue's prizes in equal measure. It is just as though painting and sculpture were producing not only as they do now creations destitute of movement and life, but had the power to make the works of brush and chisel living and moving things; it would then be felt, that whereas they were formerly arts copying Nature's works, they had now become themselves embodiments of nature.<sup>a</sup> XXXI. One 168 been trained by journeyings with the εύφυής and the φιλοθεάμων, it will rise to the stage of the Abraham of Gen. xxii., who went together with Isaac, that is διδασκτική ἀρετή side by side with αὐτομαθῆς ἀρετή. When this higher stage is reached, the old antithesis between labour and natural gifts, between art the imitator and nature the creator, is wiped out. See further App. p. 565.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 165-168

- 168 XXXI. ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ἄνω μετέωρος ἔξαρθεὶς οὐδὲν ἔτι τῶν τῆς ψυχῆς μερῶν κάτω τοῖς θνητοῖς ἐνδιατρίβειν ἔασει, πάντα δ' ὡσπερ ἐκ σειρᾶς ἐκκρεμασθέντα συνεπισπάσεται. διὸ καὶ λόγιον ἐχρήσθη τῷ σοφῷ τοιόνδε· “ ἀνάβηθι πρὸς κύριόν σου, σὺ καὶ Ἰσαρὼν καὶ Ναδάβ καὶ Ἀβιουδ 169 καὶ ἑβδομήκοντα τῆς γερουσίας Ἰσραήλ.” τοῦτο δέ ἐστι τοιοῦτον· ἀνάβηθι, ὦ ψυχή, πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὄντος θεῶν εὐαρμόστως, λογικῶς, ἐκουσίως, ἀφόβως, ἀγαπητικῶς, ἐν ἀριθμοῖς ἀγίοις καὶ τελείοις ἑβδομάδος δεκαπλασιασθείσης. Ἰσαρὼν μὲν γὰρ προφήτης λέγεται Μωυσέως ἐν τοῖς νόμοις, ὁ γεγωνὸς<sup>1</sup> λόγος προφητεύων διανοία, Ναδάβ δὲ ἐκούσιος ἐρμηνεύεται, ὁ μὴ ἀνάγκη τιμῶν τὸ θεῖον, καὶ Ἀβιουδ πατήρ μου· οὗτος ὁ μὴ δι' ἀφροσύνην δεσπότης μᾶλλον ἢ πατὴρ διὰ φρόνησιν ἄρχοντος 170 θεοῦ δεόμενος. αἰδ' εἰσὶν αἱ τοῦ βασιλεύειν ἀξίου νοῦ δορυφόροι δυνάμεις, ἃς συνέρχεσθαι τῷ βασιλεῖ παραπεμπούσας αὐτὸν θέμις. ἀλλὰ γὰρ δέος ἐστὶν ἀναβαίνειν πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὄντος θεῶν ψυχῆν δι' ἑαυτῆς ἀγνοούσῃ τὴν ὁδόν, ὑπὸ ἀμαθίας ἅμα καὶ τόλμης ἐπαρθείσῃ—μεγάλα δὲ τὰ ἐξ ἀνεπι-ιστημοσύνης καὶ πολλοῦ θράσους παραπτώματα—171 διόπερ εὐχεται Μωυσῆς αὐτῷ τῷ θεῷ χρῆσθαι
 [463] ἡγεμόνι πρὸς τὴν | πρὸς αὐτὸν ἄγουσαν ὁδόν· λέγει γάρ· “ εἰ μὴ αὐτὸς σὺ συμπορεύῃ, μὴ με ἀναγάγῃς ἐντεῦθεν.” διότι πᾶσα κίνησις ἢ ἄνευ θείας ἐπι-φροσύνης ἐπιζήμιον, καὶ ἄμεινον ἐνταυθοῖ κατα-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. γεγωνὸς.

<sup>a</sup> Here Moses and Aaron represent λογικῶς (combining understanding and speech), Nadab ἐκουσίως, Abihu ἀφόβως καὶ ἀγαπητικῶς, while εὐαρμόστως embraces all four.

<sup>b</sup> See above, § 84.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 168-171

that has been exalted so high above the earth will no longer suffer any parts of his soul to have their converse down below among things mortal, but will draw them all up with him, just like bodies hanging on a rope. So a divine intimation was given to the wise man to this effect : " Come up to thy Lord, thou and Aaron and Nadab and Abihu and seventy of the Senate of Israel " (Ex. xxiv. 1). This means : " Come 169 up, O soul, to behold the Existent One, come with thy being in harmony, that is, with thy speech and reason active, come willingly, fearlessly, affectionately,<sup>a</sup> come in the holy and perfect measures of seven multiplied tenfold." For " Aaron " is called in the Laws Moses' prophet (Ex. vii. 1),<sup>b</sup> speech acting as prophet to understanding, and " Nadab," meaning voluntary, is he that under no constraint does honour to the Deity, while " Abihu " means " my father," and represents the man who stands in need of God to govern him, not as a master owing to his folly, but much rather as a father owing to his good sense. These are the powers that form the bodyguard of the 170 mind that is worthy of sovereignty, and it is meet that they should accompany the King as His escort.

But the soul has reason to fear ascending in its own strength to the sight of Him that is, ignorant as it is of the way, lifted up as it is at once by ignorance and by daring, and grievous are the falls that have been occasioned by lack of knowledge and excess of boldness ; and therefore Moses prays that 171 he may have God Himself, to guide him to the way that leads to Him ; for he says : " If Thou Thyself goest not with me on my journey, lead me not up hence " (Ex. xxxiii. 15) : for loss is entailed by all movement that is not under Divine direction, and it

PHILO

- μένειν τὸν θνητὸν βίον ἀλητεύοντας, ὡς τὸ πλείστον ἀνθρώπων γένος, ἢ πρὸς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἐξάραντας ἑαυτοὺς ὑπὸ ἀλαζονείας ἀνατραπήναι· καθάπερ μυρίοις συνέβη τῶν σοφιστῶν, οἵτινες ὠήθησαν σοφίαν πιθανὴν εἶναι λόγων εὐρεσιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πραγ-
- 172 μάτων ἀληθεστάτην πίστιν. ἴσως δὲ καὶ τοιοῦτόν τι δηλοῦται· μή με ἄνω μετέωρον ἐξάρης, πλοῦτον ἢ δόξαν ἢ τιμὰς ἢ ἀρχὰς ἢ ὅσα ἄλλα τῶν ἐν ταῖς λεγομέναις εὐτυχίαις δωρησάμενος, εἰ μὴ μέλλοις αὐτὸς συνέρχεσθαι. ταῦτα γὰρ καὶ ζημίας καὶ ὠφελείας μεγίστας πολλάκις περιποιεῖται τοῖς ἔχουσιν, ὠφελείας μὲν, ὅταν ἀφηγηῆται τῆς γνώμης ὁ θεός, βλάβας δέ, ὅταν τούναντίον· μυρίοις γὰρ τὰ λεγόμενα ἀγαθὰ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐκ
- 173 ὄντα κακῶν ἀνηκέστων γέγονεν αἴτια. ὁ δὲ ἐπόμενος θεῶ κατὰ τὰναγκαῖον συνοδοιπόροις χρήται τοῖς ἀκολούθοις αὐτοῦ λόγοις, οὓς ὀνομάζειν ἔθος ἀγγέλους· λέγεται γοῦν ὅτι “ Ἀβραὰμ συνεπορεύετο συμπροπέμπων αὐτούς.” ὃ παγκάλῃς ἐπανισώσεως, καθ’ ἣν ὁ παραπέμπων παρεπέμπετο, διδοὺς ὁ ἐλάμβανεν, οὐκ ἀνθ’ ἑτέρου ἑτερον, ἀλλὰ ἐν αὐτῷ μόνον ἐκεῖνο τὸ πρὸς τὰς ἀντιδόσεις
- 174 ἔτοιμον. ἕως μὲν γὰρ οὐ τετελειώται, ἡγεμόνι τῆς ὁδοῦ χρήται λόγῳ θείῳ· χρησιμὸς γὰρ ἔστιν· “ ἰδοὺ ἀποστέλλω τὸν ἄγγελόν μου πρὸ προσώπου σου, ἵνα φυλάξῃ σε ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, ὅπως εἰσαγάγῃ σε εἰς τὴν γῆν ἣν ἠτοίμασά σοι. πρόσεχε αὐτῷ καὶ εἰσάκουε αὐτοῦ, μὴ ἀπείθει αὐτῷ· οὐ γὰρ μὴ ὑποστείληται

<sup>a</sup> See on De Conf. 28.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 171-174

is better to stay where we are, roaming, with the bulk of mankind, through this mortal life, rather than to lift ourselves heavenward and incur shipwreck as imposters. This has been the fate of multitudes of sophists, through their imagining that wisdom consists in finding specious arguments, and not in appealing to the solid evidence of facts. But 172 perhaps the force of the prayer may be such as this : " Raise me not up on high, endowing me with wealth or fame or honours or offices, or aught else that is called good fortune, unless Thou Thyself art about to come with me." For these things often bring upon those who have them very great losses as well as very great advantages, advantages, when the judgment is under God's guidance ; hurts, when this is not so : for to thousands the things I have named, not being really good things, have become the cause of incurable evils. Now he that follows 173

God has of necessity as his fellow-travellers the words and thoughts<sup>a</sup> that attend Him, angels as they are often called. What we read is that " Abraham travelled with them, joining with them in escorting them on their way " (Gen. xviii. 16). What a glorious privilege to be put on a level with them ! The escort is escorted ; he gives what he was receiving ; not one thing in return for another, but just one thing only that lies ready to be passed backwards and forwards from one to the other. For as long as he falls short of 174 perfection, he has the Divine Word as his leader : since there is an oracle which says, " Lo, I send My messenger before thy face, to guard thee in thy way, that he may bring thee in into the land which I have prepared for thee : give heed to him, and hearken to him, disobey him not ; for he will by no means with-

PHILO

- 175 σε· τὸ γὰρ ὄνομά μου ἔστιν ἐπ' αὐτῷ." ἐπειδὴν δὲ πρὸς ἄκραν ἐπιστήμην ἀφίκηται, συντόνως ἐπιδραμῶν ἰσοταχήσει τῷ πρόσθεν ἡγουμένῳ τῆς οδοῦ· ἀμφότεροι γὰρ οὕτως ὄπαδοι γενήσονται τοῦ πανηγεμόνος θεοῦ μηδενὸς ἔτι τῶν ἑτεροδόξων παρακολουθοῦντος, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ Λώτ, ὃς ἔκλινε τὴν ψυχὴν ὀρθὴν καὶ ἀκαμπῆ φύεσθαι δυναμένην, διοικισθέντος.
- 176 XXXII. "Ἀβραὰμ δὲ ἦν" φησὶν "ἐτῶν ἑβδομήκοντα πέντε, ὅτε ἐξῆλθεν ἐκ Χαρράν." περὶ μὲν οὖν τοῦ τῶν πέντε καὶ ἑβδομήκοντα ἐτῶν ἀριθμοῦ —λόγον γὰρ ἔχει συνωδὸν τοῖς πρόσθεν εἰρημένους —αὐτῆς ἀκριβῶσομεν. τίς δὲ ἔστι Χαρράν καὶ τίς ἢ ἐκ ταύτης ἀποικία τῆς χώρας, πρότερον ἐρευνήσωμεν. οὐδένα τοίνυν τῶν ἐντετυχηκότων τοῖς νόμοις ἀγνοεῖν εἰκός, ὅτι πρότερον μὲν ἐκ τῆς Χαλδαϊκῆς ἀναστὰς γῆς Ἀβραὰμ ᾤκησεν εἰς [464] Χαρράν, | τελευτήσαντος δὲ αὐτῷ τοῦ πατρὸς ἐκεῖθι κακ ταύτης μετανίσταται, ὡς δευεῖν ἤδη
- 178 τόπων ἀπόλειψιν πεποιῆσθαι. τί οὖν λεκτέον; Χαλδαῖοι τῶν ἄλλων ἀνθρώπων ἐκπεπονηκένοι καὶ διαφερόντως δοκοῦσιν ἀστρονομίαν καὶ γενεθλιαλογικὴν, τὰ ἐπίγεια τοῖς μετεώροις καὶ τὰ οὐράνια τοῖς ἐπὶ γῆς ἀρμοζόμενοι καὶ ὡσπερ διὰ μουσικῆς λόγων τὴν ἐμμελεστάτην συμφωνίαν τοῦ παντὸς ἐπιδεικνύμενοι τῇ τῶν μερῶν πρὸς ἀλληλα κοινωνίᾳ καὶ συμπαθείᾳ, τόποις μὲν διεzeugμένων,
- 179 συγγενείᾳ δὲ οὐ διωκισμένων. οὗτοι τὸν φαινό-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 565.

<sup>b</sup> That this is the meaning of διὰ μουσικῆς λόγων, rather than "by a music of λόγοι," in which case λόγοι would be used in the Stoic sense of "nature-forces," is shewn by De Mut.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 174-179

draw from thee ;<sup>a</sup> for My name is on him ” (Ex. xxiii. 20 f.). But when he has arrived at full knowledge, he 175 will run with more vigorous effort, and his pace will be as great as that of him who before led the way ; for so they will both become attendants on the All-leading God, and no holder of strange doctrines will follow after them any more. Nay, even Lot has been severed from their company, for he bent aside his soul which had the capacity to grow up straight and unswerving.

XXXII. “ And Abraham was,” he says “ seventy 176 and five years old when he went out from Haran ” (Gen. xii. 4). On the number of the five and seventy years, whose import agrees with what has just been said, we will dwell in detail at a later time. Let us first examine the significance of Haran and of the removal from this country. No one versed in the 177 Laws is likely to be unaware that at an earlier date Abraham migrated from Chaldea and dwelt in Haran, and that after his father’s death there, he removes from that country also, so that he has at this point already quitted two places. What remark 178 does this call for ? The Chaldeans have the reputation of having, in a degree quite beyond that of other peoples, elaborated astronomy and the casting of nativities. They have set up a harmony between things on earth and things on high, between heavenly things and earthly. Following as it were the laws of musical proportion,<sup>b</sup> they have exhibited the universe as a perfect concord or symphony produced by a sympathetic affinity between its parts, separated indeed in space, but housemates in kinship. These 179

184 θείου και θνητοῦ συγκερασθέντων και κατὰ τοὺς τῆς τελείας μουσικῆς λόγους ἀρμωσθέντων.

PHILO

μενον τούτον κόσμον ἐν τοῖς οὐσιν ὑπετόπησαν εἶναι μόνον, ἢ θεὸν ὄντα αὐτὸν ἢ ἐν αὐτῷ θεὸν περιέχοντα, τὴν τῶν ὄλων ψυχὴν· εἰμαρμένην τε καὶ ἀνάγκην θεοπλαστήσαντες ἀσεβείας πολλῆς κατέπλησαν τὸν ἀνθρώπινον βίον, ἀναδιδάξαντες ὡς δίχα τῶν φαινομένων οὐδενός ἐστιν οὐδὲν αἴτιον τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ' ἡλίου καὶ σελήνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων αἱ περίοδοι τά τε ἀγαθὰ καὶ τὰ ἐναντία ἐκάστω τῶν ὄντων ἀπονέμουσι.

- 180 Μωυσῆς μέντοι τῇ μὲν ἐν τοῖς μέρεσι κοινωνία καὶ συμπαθεία τοῦ παντὸς ἔοικε συνεπιγράφεσθαι, ἕνα καὶ γενητὸν ἀποφηνάμενος τὸν κόσμον εἶναι—γενομένου γὰρ καὶ ἐνὸς ὑπάρχοντος εὐλογον τὰς γε στοιχειώδεις οὐσίας ὑποβεβλήσθαι τοῖς ἀποτελουμένοις τὰς αὐτὰς ἅπασι κατὰ μέρη, καθάπερ ἐπὶ σωμάτων συμβέβηκε τῶν ἠνωμένων ἀλληλουχεῖν—,
- 181 τῇ δὲ περὶ θεοῦ δόξῃ διαφέρεσθαι· μήτε γὰρ τὸν κόσμον μήτε τὴν τοῦ κόσμου ψυχὴν τὸν πρῶτον εἶναι θεὸν μηδὲ τοὺς ἀστέρας ἢ τὰς χορείας αὐτῶν τὰ πρεσβύτατα τῶν συμβαινόντων ἀνθρώποις αἴτια, ἀλλὰ συνέχεσθαι μὲν τόδε τὸ πᾶν ἀοράτοις δυνάμεσιν, ἅς ἀπὸ γῆς ἐσχάτων ἄχρις οὐρανοῦ περάτων ὁ δημιουργὸς ἀπέτεινε, τοῦ μὴ ἀνεθῆναι τὰ δεθέντα καλῶς προμηθοῦμενος· δεσμοὶ γὰρ αἱ δυνάμεις τοῦ
- 182 παντὸς ἄρρηκτοι. διό, κἄν που τῆς νομοθεσίας λέγεται “ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ἄνω καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς κάτω,” μηδεὶς ὑποτοπησάτω τὸν κατὰ

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. i. 91 and note.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 565.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps “taking wise forethought that what was bound,” etc. But I think the passage is probably reminiscent of Timaeus 41A τὸ καλῶς ἀρμολογεῖν καὶ ἔχον εἰς λύειν ἐθέλειν κακοῦ. For the position of καλῶς cf. De Dec. 27 τὰ γεγονότα καλῶς θεωρεῖν.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 179-182

men imagined that this visible universe was the only thing in existence, either being itself God or containing God in itself as the soul of the whole.<sup>a</sup> And they made Fate and Necessity divine, thus filling human life with much impiety, by teaching that apart from phenomena there is no originating cause of anything whatever, but that the circuits of sun and moon and of the other heavenly bodies determine for every being in existence both good things and their opposites.

Moses, however, while he seems 180 to confirm the sympathetic affinity of its parts displayed throughout the universe, is at variance with their opinion concerning God. He endorses the former doctrine by declaring the universe to be one and to have been made ; for if it came into being and is one, it stands to reason that all its completed several parts have the same elementary substances for their substratum, on the principle that interdependence of the parts is a characteristic of bodies which constitute a unity.<sup>b</sup> He differs from their opinion about 181 God, holding that neither the universe nor its soul is the primal God, and that the constellations or their revolutions are not the primary causes of the things that happen to men. Nay, he teaches that the complete whole around us is held together by invisible powers, which the Creator has made to reach from the ends of the earth to heaven's furthest bounds, taking forethought that what was well bound<sup>c</sup> should not be loosened : for the powers of the Universe are chains that cannot be broken.

Wherefore, even 182 though it be said somewhere in the Law-book " God in heaven above and on the earth below " (Deut. iv. 39), let no one suppose that He that is is spoken of,

PHILO

τὸ εἶναι λέγεσθαι—τὸ γὰρ ὄν περιέχειν ἀλλ' οὐ περιέχεσθαι θέμις—, δύναμιν δ' αὐτοῦ, καθ' ἣν 183 ἔθηκε καὶ διατάξατο καὶ διεκόσμησε τὰ ὄλα. αὕτη δὲ κυρίως ἐστὶν ἀγαθότης, φθόνον μὲν τὸν μισἀρετον καὶ μισόκαλον ἀπεληλακυῖα ἀφ' ἑαυτῆς, χάριτας δὲ γεννώσα αἰς τὰ μὴ ὄντα εἰς γένεσιν ἄγουσα ἀνέφηεν· ἐπεὶ τό γε ὄν φαντασιαζόμενον δόξῃ πανταχοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐδαμοῦ φαίνεται, ὡς ἀψευδέστατον ἐκείνον εἶναι τὸν χρησμόν, ἐν ᾧ [465] λέλεκται· | “ ὦδε ἐγώ,” ἄδεικτος ὡς ἂν δεικνύμενος, ἀόρατος ὡς ἂν ὀρατὸς ὢν, “ πρὸ τοῦ σέ”· πρὸ γὰρ παντὸς τοῦ γενητοῦ, ἔξω βαίνων ἐκείνου καὶ μηδενὶ τῶν μετ' αὐτὸν ἐμφερόμενος.

184 XXXIII. Τούτων λεγομένων ἐπὶ τῇ τῆς Χαλ-δαϊκῆς δόξης ἀνατροπῇ τοὺς ἔτι τὴν γνώμην χαλδαῖζοντας μετακλίνειν καὶ μετακαλεῖν οἶεται δεῖν ἐπὶ τὴν ἀλήθειαν, τῆς διδασκαλίας ἀρχόμενος ὦδε· τί, φησὶν, ᾧ θαυμάσιοι, τοσοῦτον αἰφνίδιον ἀρθέντες ἀπὸ γῆς εἰς ὕψος ἐπυνήχεσθε καὶ τὸν ἀέρα ὑπερκύψαντες αἰθεροβατεῖτε, ὡς ἡλίου κινήσεις καὶ σελήνης περιόδους καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων τὰς ἐμμελεῖς καὶ ἀοιδίμους ἀκριβοῦν χορείας; ταῦτα γὰρ μείζονα ἢ κατὰ τὰς ὑμετέρας ἐστὶν ἐπινοίας ἅτε εὐδαιμονεστέρας καὶ θειοτέρας μοίρας λαχόντα.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Conf. 138 and De Sac. 67 (with note).

<sup>b</sup> The meaning is that while the Pentateuch contains the just-mentioned disproof of astrology, at the same time (note the present λεγομένων) it gives practical advice to those inclined that way. This advice is given in the statement that “Abraham went from Chaldaea to Haran,” it being implied that these persons should do the same. What “going to Haran” means is expanded into the discourse of §§ 184 ff.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 182-184

since the existent Being can contain, but cannot be contained. What is meant is that potency of His by which He established and ordered and marshalled the whole realm of being. This potency is nothing else <sup>183</sup> than loving-kindness ; it has driven away from itself envy with its hatred of virtue and of moral beauty ; it is the mother of gracious deeds by which, bringing into created existence things that were not, it displayed them to view ; for that which is, though in opinion it be imagined everywhere, in reality shews itself nowhere, so that that is a most true oracle in which the words " Here am I " which describe Him—Him that cannot be pointed out, as though He were being pointed out, Him that is invisible, as though He were visible—are followed by the words, " before that thou wert made " (Ex. xvii. 6) <sup>a</sup> : for He is before all creation ; His goings are outside it ; nor is He present in any of the things that come after Him.

XXXIII. All this is said to refute the Chaldean <sup>184</sup> opinion, but side by side <sup>b</sup> with this Moses deems it his duty to change the way of thinking of those whose judgement still inclines to Chaldeanism, and to recall them to the truth, and he begins his lesson in this way : " How strange it is, my friends, that you have been suddenly lifted to such a height above the earth and are floating there, and, leaving the lower air beneath you, are treading the ether above, thinking to master every detail respecting the movements of the sun, and of the circuits of the moon, and of the glorious rhythmical dances of the other constellations. These <sup>c</sup> are too high to be reached by your powers of thought, for a lot is theirs happy and divine beyond <sup>c</sup> i.e., the sun, etc., as usual in Philo regarded as divine beings.

PHILO

- 185 κατάβητε οὖν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ καὶ καταβάντες μὴ πάλιν γῆν καὶ θάλατταν καὶ ποταμούς καὶ φυτῶν καὶ ζώων ἰδέας ἐξετάζετε, μόνους δὲ ἑαυτοὺς καὶ τὴν ἑαυτῶν φύσιν ἐρευνᾶτε, μὴ ἐτέρωθι μᾶλλον οἰκῆσαντες ἢ παρ' ἑαυτοῖς· διαθεώμενοι γὰρ τὰ κατὰ τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον, τὸ δεσπόζον ἐν αὐτῷ, τὸ ὑπήκοον, τὸ ἔμψυχον, τὸ ἄψυχον, τὸ λογικόν, τὸ ἄλογον, τὸ ἀθάνατον, τὸ θνητόν, τὸ ἄμεινον, τὸ χεῖρον, εὐθὺς ἐπιστήμην θεοῦ καὶ τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ
- 186 σαφῆ λήψεσθε. λογιεῖσθε γὰρ ὅτι, ὡς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστι νοῦς, καὶ τῷ παντί ἐστι, καὶ ὡς ὁ ὑμέτερος ἀρχὴν καὶ δεσποτείαν τῶν περὶ ὑμᾶς ἀναψάμενος ἕκαστον τῶν μερῶν ὑπήκοον ἀπέφηεν ἐαυτῷ, οὕτω καὶ ὁ τοῦ παντὸς τὴν ἡγεμονίαν περιβεβλημένος αὐτο-κράτορι νόμῳ καὶ δίκῃ τὸν κόσμον ἡνιοχεῖ προμηθούμενος οὐ τῶν ἀξιονικοτέρων αὐτὸ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ἀφανεστέρων εἶναι δοκούντων.
- 187 XXXIV. μεταναστάντες οὖν ἀπὸ τῆς κατ' οὐρανὸν περιεργίας ἑαυτοῦς, ὅπερ εἶπον, οἰκῆσατε, τὴν μὲν Χαλδαίων γῆν, δόξαν, καταλιπόντες, μετοικισά-μενοι δὲ εἰς Χαρρὰν, τὸ τῆς αἰσθήσεως χωρίον,
- 188 ὃ δὴ σωματικός ἐστιν οἶκος διανοίας. Χαρρὰν γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται τρώγλη, τρώγλαι δὲ σύμβολα αἰσθή-σεως ὁπῶν<sup>1</sup> εἰσίν· ὁπᾶς γὰρ καὶ φωλεοὺς τρόπον τινα ὀφθαλμοὺς μὲν ὀράσεως, ἀκοῆς δὲ ὠτα, ῥίνας δὲ ὀσμῶν καὶ γεύσεως φάρυγγα καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν σώ-
- 189 ματος κατασκευὴν ἀφῆς εἶναι συμβέβηκε. τούτοις οὖν ἔτι διατρίψαντες<sup>2</sup> ἐνηρεμήσατε καὶ σχολάσατε καὶ τὴν ἐκάστου φύσιν ὡς ἐνὶ μάλιστα ἀκριβώσατε,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τόπων.

<sup>2</sup> ἐπιδιατρίψαντες.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 185-189

the common. Come down therefore from heaven, 185 and, when you have come down, do not begin in turn to pass in review earth and sea and rivers, and plants and animals in their various kinds ; but explore yourselves only and your own nature, and make your abode with yourselves and not elsewhere : for by observing the conditions prevailing in your own individual household, the element that is master in it, and that which is in subjection, the living and the lifeless element, the rational and the irrational, the immortal and the mortal, the better and the worse, you will gain forthwith a sure knowledge of God and of His works. Your reason will shew you that, as 186 there is mind in you, so is there in the universe, and that as your mind has taken upon itself sovereign control of all that is in you, and brought every part into subjection to itself, so too He, that is endued with lordship over all, guides and controls the universe by the law and right of an absolute sway, taking forethought not only for those which are of greater, but for those which are of less importance in our eyes.

XXXIV. Quit, then, your meddling with 187 heavenly concerns, and take up your abode, as I have said, in yourselves ; leave behind you opinion, the country of the Chaldeans, and migrate to Haran, the place of sense-perception, which is understanding's bodily tenement. For the translation of Haran is 188 " hole," and holes are figures of openings used by sense-perception : for eyes are, in a way, openings and lairs used by sight, ears by hearing, nostrils to receive scents, the throat for tasting, and the whole structure of the body for touch. Gain, therefore, by 189 a further sojourn, a peaceful and unhurried familiarity with these, and to the utmost of your power get an

PHILO

καὶ τὸ ἐν ἑκάστοις εὖ τε καὶ χεῖρον καταμαθόντες τὸ μὲν φύγετε, τὸ δ' ἔμπαλιν ἐλέσθε.

[466] ἐπειδὴν μέντοι σφόδρα ἀκριβῶς πάντα τὸν ἴδιον | διασκέψησθε οἶκον καὶ ὃν ἔχει λόγον ἕκαστον αὐτοῦ τῶν μερῶν ἀυγάσησθε, διακινήσαντες αὐτοὺς τὴν ἐνθένδε μετανάστασιν ζητεῖτε, οὐ θάνατον ἀλλ'

190 ἀθανασίαν καταγγέλλουσιν. ἧς δειγμάτων σαφῆ καὶ ἐν τοῖς σωματικοῖς καὶ ἐν τοῖς αἰσθητοῖς ἐγκατελιημ-μένοι φωλεοῖς κατόψεσθε, τοτὲ μὲν ἐν τοῖς βαθέσιν ὑπνοῖς—ἀναχωρήσας γὰρ ὁ νοῦς καὶ τῶν αἰσθήσεων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὅσα κατὰ τὸ σῶμα ὑπεξελθὼν ἐαυτῷ προσομιλεῖν ἄρχεται ὡς πρὸς κάτοπτρον ἀφορῶν ἀλήθειαν, καὶ ἀπορρυψάμενος πάνθ' ὅσα ἐκ τῶν κατὰ τὰς αἰσθήσεις φαντασιῶν ἀπεμάξατο τὰς περὶ τῶν μελλόντων ἀψευδεστάτας διὰ τῶν ὀνείρων μαντείας<sup>1</sup> ἐνθουσιᾶ—, τοτὲ δὲ κὰν ταῖς ἐγρηγόρσεσιν·

191 ὅταν γὰρ ἐκ τινος τῶν κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν κατασχεθεῖς θεωρημάτων ἀχθῆ πρὸς αὐτοῦ, τῷ μὲν ἔπεται, τῶν δ' ἄλλων ὅσα κατὰ τὸν σωματικὸν ὄγκον ἀμνημονεῖ δῆπου. κὰν ἐμποδίζωσιν αἱ αἰσθήσεις πρὸς τὴν ἀκριβῆ θέαν τοῦ νοητοῦ, μέλει τοῖς φιλοθεάμοσι καθαιρεῖν αὐτῶν τὴν ἐπίθεσιν· τὰς τε γὰρ ὄψεις καταμύουσι καὶ τὰ ὦτα ἐπιφράττουσι καὶ τὰς τῶν ἄλλων <αἰσθήσεων> ἐπέχουσιν ὁρμὰς καὶ ἐν ἐρημίᾳ καὶ σκότῳ διατρίβειν ἀξιοῦσιν, ὡς μὴ πρὸς τινος αἰσθητοῦ τὸ ψυχῆς ὄμμα, ᾧ νοητὰ βλέπειν ἔδωκεν ὁ θεός, ἐπισκιασθῆ.

192 XXXV. τοῦτον μέντοι τὸν τρόπον μαθόντες ἀπό-

<sup>1</sup> Mangey (and also H<sup>2</sup>) ταῖς . . ἀψευδεστάταις . . μαντείας which perhaps suits the construction better. No example is given in the Lexica of an accusative in this sense after ἐνθουσιᾶν.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 189-192

exact knowledge of the nature of each, and, when you have thoroughly learned what is good and bad in each, shun the one, and choose the other.

And when you have surveyed all your individual dwelling with absolute exactitude, and have acquired an insight into the true nature of each of its parts, bestir yourselves and seek for your departure hence, for it is a call not to death but to immortality. You 190 will be able to descry sure indications of this, even while held fast in the dens and caves of the body and of the objects of sense. In deep sleep the mind quits its place, and, withdrawing from the perceptions and all other bodily faculties, begins to hold converse with itself, fixing its gaze on truth as on a mirror, and, having purged away as defilements all the impressions made upon it by the mental pictures presented by the senses, it is filled with Divine frenzy and discerns in dreams absolutely true prophecies concerning things to come. Thus is it at times. Or again it may be in waking hours. For when the 191 mind, possessed by some philosophic principle, is drawn by it, it follows this, and needs must be oblivious of other things, of all the concerns of the cumbersome body. And if the senses are a hindrance to the exact sight of the spiritual object, those who find happiness in beholding are at pains to crush their attack ; they shut their eyes, and stop up their ears, and check the impulses bred by their other senses, and deem it well to spend their days in solitude and darkness, that no object of sense-perception may bedim the eye of the soul, to which God has given the power to see things spiritual. XXXV. If 192 in this way you learn to effect a divorce <sup>a</sup> from what

<sup>a</sup> For this legal phrase see note on De Cher. 115.

PHILO

- λειψιν τοῦ θνητοῦ χρηματίζειν καὶ τὰς περὶ τοῦ ἀγενήτου παιδευθήσεσθε δόξας· εἰ μὴ νομίζετε τὸν μὲν ὑμέτερον νοῦν ἀποδυσάμενον σῶμα, αἰσθησιν, λόγον, δίχα τούτων γυμνὰ<sup>1</sup> δύνασθαι τὰ ὄντα ὄραν, τὸν δὲ τῶν ὄλων νοῦν, τὸν θεόν, οὐκ ἔξω τῆς ὑλικῆς φύσεως πάσης ἐστάναι περιέχοντα, οὐ περιεχόμενον, καὶ οὐκ ἐπινοία μόνον ἐπεξεληλυθέναι ὡσπερ ἄνθρωπον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ οὐσιώδει, οἷα ἀρμόττει θεόν.
- 193 ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἡμέτερος νοῦς οὐ δεδημιούργηκε τὸ σῶμα, ἀλλ' ἔστιν ἔργον ἑτέρου· διὸ καὶ περιέχεται ὡς ἐν ἀγγείῳ τῷ σώματι. ὁ δὲ τῶν ὄλων νοῦς τὸ πᾶν γεγέννηκε, τὸ πεποιηκὸς δὲ τοῦ γενομένου κρεῖττον· ὡστ' οὐκ ἂν ἐμφέροιτο τῷ χείρονι, δίχα τοῦ μηδὲ ἀρμόττειν πατέρα ἐν υἱῷ περιέχεσθαι, υἱὸν δὲ ταῖς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπιμελείαις συναύξεσθαι.
- 194 οὕτω κατὰ βραχὺ μεταβαίνων ὁ νοῦς ἐπὶ τὸν εὐσεβείας καὶ ὁσιότητος ἀφίξεται πατέρα, γενεθλιαλογικῆς ἀποστάς τὸ πρῶτον, ἥτις παρἔπεισεν αὐτὸν ὑπολαβεῖν τὸν κόσμον θεὸν τὸν πρῶτον εἶναι, ἀλλὰ μὴ τοῦ πρώτου θεοῦ δημιούργημα, καὶ τὰς τῶν ἀστέρων φοράς τε καὶ κινή-σεις αἰτίας ἀνθρώποις κακοπραγίας καὶ τούναντίον
- 195 εὐδαιμονίας. ἔπειτ' εἰς τὴν ἐπίσκεψιν ἐλθὼν τὴν αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ, φιλοσοφήσας τὰ κατὰ τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον, τὰ περὶ σώματος, τὰ περὶ αἰσθήσεως, τὰ περὶ λόγου, καὶ γνοὺς κατὰ τὸ ποιητικὸν γράμμα
- [467] ὅτι τοι ἐν μεγάροισι κακὸν τ' ἀγαθὸν τε τέτυκται,

<sup>1</sup> mss. γυμνὸν. this correction of Wendland's, though supported by the run of the sentence, and perhaps by § 90, seems to me doubtful.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 192-195

is mortal, you will go on to receive an education in your conceptions regarding the Uncreate. For you surely do not imagine that, while your mind, having divested itself of body, sense-perception, speech, can, apart from these, see in their nakedness<sup>a</sup> the things that are, the Mind of the universe, God, has not His abiding-place outside all material nature, containing, not contained, or doubt that He has gone forth beyond its confines not in thought alone, as man does, but in essential being also, as befits God. For our mind 193 has not created the body, but is the workmanship of Another; and it is therefore contained in the body as in a vessel. But the Mind of all things has brought the universe into existence; and that which has made is superior to the thing made, so that it could not be included in its inferior; nor indeed would it be fitting that a father should be contained in a son, but rather that a son should attain full growth under his father's care.

In this way the mind 194 gradually changing its place will arrive at the Father of piety and holiness. Its first step is to relinquish astrology, which betrayed it into the belief that the universe is the primal God, instead of being the handywork of the primal God, and that the courses and movements of the constellations are the causes of bad and good fortune to mankind.

Next it enters upon the consideration of itself, makes 195 a study of the features of its own abode, those that concern the body and sense-perception, and speech, and comes to know, as the phrase of the poet puts it,

All that existeth of good and of ill in the halls of thy homestead.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Or "when thus naked"; see critical note.

<sup>b</sup> Hom. Od. iv. 392.

PHILO

- ἔπειτ' ἀνατεμών ὁδὸν τὴν ἀφ' αὐτοῦ καὶ διὰ ταύτης ἐλπίσας τὸν δυστόπαστον καὶ δυστέκμαρτον πατέρα τῶν ὄλων κατανοῆσαι, μαθὼν ἀκριβῶς ἑαυτὸν εἶσεται τάχα που καὶ θεόν, οὐκέτι μένων ἐν Χαρράν, τοῖς αἰσθήσεως ὀργάνοις, ἀλλ' εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἐπιστραφεῖς· ἀμήχανον γὰρ ἔτι κινούμενον αἰσθητῶς μᾶλλον ἢ νοητῶς πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὄντος 196 ἐλθεῖν ἐπίσκεψιν. XXXVI. οὐδ' χάριν καὶ ὁ ταχθεὶς τὴν ἀρίστην τάξιν παρὰ θεῷ τρόπος, ὄνομα Σαμουήλ, οὐχ ὑφηγεῖται τὰ τῆς βασιλείας δίκαια τῷ Σαοῦλ [οὐδ'] ἔτι διατρίβοντι ἐν τοῖς σκεύεσιν, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴν ἐκεῖθεν αὐτὸν ἐξελεύσῃ.
πυνθάνεται μὲν γάρ, εἰ ἔτι ἔρχεται ἐνθάδε ὁ ἀνὴρ, ἀποκρίνεται δὲ τὸ λόγιον· “ἰδοὺ αὐτὸς κέκρυπται 197 ἐν τοῖς σκεύεσι.” τί οὖν προσήκει τὸν ἀκούσαντα, φύσει παιδευτικὸν ὄντα, ποιῆσαι, ὅτι μὴ μετὰ σπουδῆς αὐτὸν ἐξελεύσῃ; “ἐπιδραμῶν” γάρ φησι “λαμβάνει αὐτὸν ἐκεῖθεν,” διότι τοῖς ἀγγείοις τῆς ψυχῆς, σώματι καὶ αἰσθήσει, <ἐν>διατρίβων οὐκ ἦν ἀξιόχρεως ἀκοῦσαι τῶν τῆς βασιλείας δογμάτων καὶ νόμων—βασιλείαν δὲ σοφίαν εἶναι λέγομεν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸν σοφὸν βασιλέα—, μεταναστὰς δέ, ἡνίκα τῆς ἀχλύος σκεδασθείσης ὀξυδορκήσῃ ἔμελλεν. εἰκότως οὖν καὶ τὴν αἰσθήσεως χώραν, ὄνομα Χαρράν, ἀπολιπεῖν οἶεται δεῖν ὁ ἐπιστήμης ἑταῖρος.
- 198 Ἀπολείπει δὲ ἐτῶν γεγονῶς πέντε καὶ ἑβδομήκοντα· ὁ δὲ ἀριθμὸς οὗτος αἰσθητῆς καὶ νοητῆς,

---

<sup>a</sup> Not so much to examine its own nature, which is not ruled out in Haran, cf. § 185, but to attain the detached and mystical condition described in § 190.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 195-198

The third stage is when, having opened up the road that leads from self, in hope thereby to come to discern the Universal Father, so hard to trace and unriddle, it will crown maybe the accurate self-knowledge it has gained with the knowledge of God Himself. It will stay no longer in Haran, the organs of sense, but withdraw into itself.<sup>a</sup> For it is impossible that the mind whose course still lies in the sensible rather than the mental should arrive at the contemplation of Him that is. XXXVI. This 196 is why the character appointed to the highest post in God's service, who is called "Samuel," does not set forth the duties of kingship to Saul, while still lingering amid the baggage, but when he has drawn him out thence. For he inquires of the Lord whether the man is still on his way hither, and the divine reply is, "Lo, he hath hidden himself among the baggage." What, then, does it become the recipient of this 197 answer to do, endowed as he is by nature with power to exercise discipline, save to draw him forth with all haste? So we read, "he ran thither and taketh him thence" (1 Sam. x. 22 f.), because, while lingering amid such vessels of the soul as body and sense-perception, he was not competent to listen to the principles and rules of kingship—and we pronounce wisdom to be kingship, for we pronounce the wise man to be a king. These principles could only be learnt through his changing his place, when the dark mist would disperse and he would have keen vision. No wonder, then; that the associate of knowledge deems it necessary to quit also the country of sense-perception, called Haran.

When he quits the country he is five and seventy 198 years old; and this number represents the border-πρεσβυτέρας τε καὶ νεωτέρας, ἔτι δὲ φθαρτῆς καὶ 199 ἀφθάρτου μεθόριος φύσεώς ἐστι. νοητὸς μὲν γὰρ καὶ πρεσβύτερος καὶ ἀφθαρτος λόγος ὁ τῶν ἑβδομηκοντα, αἰσθητὸς δὲ καὶ νεώτερος ὁ ταῖς πέντε ἰσάριθμος ὢν αἰσθήσεσι. τούτῳ καὶ ὁ ἔτι γυμναζόμενος<sup>1</sup> ἀσκητῆς ἐξετάζεται, μηδέπω δεδυνημένος ἐνέγκασθαι τὰ τέλεια νικητήρια· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ἦσαν αἱ πᾶσαι ψυχαὶ ἐξ Ἰακώβ πέντε καὶ ἑβδο-200 μῆκοντα”· τοῦ<sup>2</sup> γὰρ ἀθλοῦντος καὶ τὸν ὑπὲρ κτήσεως ἀρετῆς ἱερὸν ὄντως ἀγῶνα μὴ διαφθείροντος ψυχαὶ μὲν πρὸ σωμάτων γεννήματα, οὐπω δ’ ἐκτετμημένοι<sup>3</sup> τὸ ἄλογον, ἀλλ’ ἔτι τὸν αἰσθήσεως ὄχλον ἐφέλκόμενοι. παλαιόντος γὰρ καὶ κονιομένου καὶ περνίζοντος Ἰακώβ ἐστὶν ὄνομα, οὐ νενικη-201 κότος· ὅταν δὲ τὸν θεὸν ὄραν ἱκανὸς εἶναι δόξας Ἰσραὴλ μετονομασθῆ, μόνῳ χρήσεται τῷ ἑβδομη-[468] κοστῷ λόγῳ, | τὴν πεντάδα τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἐκ-τεμών· λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ ἐν ἑβδομήκοντα ψυχαῖς κατέβησαν οἱ πατέρες σου εἰς Αἴγυπτον.” οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀριθμὸς Μωυσέως τοῦ σοφοῦ γνώριμος· τοὺς γὰρ ἀριστίνδην ἐκ παντὸς τοῦ πλήθους ἐπιλελεγμένους ἑβδομήκοντα εἶναι συμβέβηκε καὶ πρεσβυτέρους ἅπαντας, οὐχ ἡλικίαις ἀλλὰ φρονήσει καὶ βουλαῖς, γνώμαις τε καὶ ἀρχαιοτρόποις ζηλώ-202 σεσιν. οὗτος ὁ ἀριθμὸς ἱερουργεῖται τε καὶ ἀποδίδοται θεῷ, ὅταν οἱ τέλειοι τῆς ψυχῆς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐπιγυμναζόμενος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τούτου.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. δὲ κεκτημένοι, which Mangey follows, reading τὸν λόγον with H<sup>2</sup> for τὸ ἄλογον.

<sup>a</sup> Or “fail in,” “spoil.” For this rather curious use of διαφθεῖρω cf. De Cong. 165 τὸν ἀγῶνα τοῦ βίου διήθλησαν ἀδιάφθορον καὶ ἀήττητον φυλάξαντες.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 198-202

land between perceptible and intelligible being, between older and younger, between corruptible and incorruptible. For seventy represents the principle 199 of intellectual apprehension, of seniority and of incorruption, while the principle that corresponds numerically to the five senses is that of juniority and sense-perception. Under the head of this principle is classed the Trainer of self still at his exercises, not yet qualified to carry off the prize of complete victory ; for we read, " the full number of souls sprung from Jacob was five and seventy " (Ex. i. 5) : for the 200 offspring of the champion who does not make havoc<sup>a</sup> of the truly holy contest for the winning of virtue, are not bodies but souls, souls from which the irrational element has not yet been eliminated, and which still have sense-perception's gang hanging on to them. For " Jacob " is a name belonging to one wrestling, and preparing for the arena, and tripping up his adversary, not of one who has won the victory. But when, now deemed capable of seeing God, he 201 shall have received the new name of " Israel," he will have resort only to the principle of seventy, having cut out the five which pertains to the senses ; for it is written " amounting to seventy souls thy fathers went down into Egypt " (Deut. x. 22).

This is the number intimately associated with the wise Moses ; for the men picked out for their excellence from all the host were seventy, and all of them elders, not in age but in good sense and counsel and judgement and ways of thinking worthy of men of old. Sacrifices and dues paid 202 to God are determined by this number, whenever συναχθῶσι καὶ συγκομισθῶσι καρποί· τῇ γὰρ τῶν σκηνῶν ἑορτῇ χωρὶς τῶν ἄλλων θυμάτων ἑβδομηκοντα μόσχους ἀνάγειν θυσίαν ὀλόκαυστον διείρηται. κατὰ τὸν ἑβδομηκοστὸν λόγον καὶ αἱ τῶν ἀρχόντων φιάλαι κατασκευάζονται—ἐκάστη γὰρ ἑβδομηκοντα σικλῶν ἐστὶν ὀλκῆς—, ἐπειδὴ τὰ ἔνσπονδα καὶ συμβατήρια καὶ φίλα τῆς ψυχῆς ὡς ἀληθῶς ὀλκὸν ἔχει δύναμιν, τὸν ἑβδομηκοστὸν καὶ ἄγιον λόγον, ὃν Αἴγυπτος, ἢ μισάρετος καὶ φιλοπαθῆς φύσις, πενθοῦσα εἰσάγεται· ἑβδομηκοντα γὰρ ἡμέραις καταριθμεῖται παρ' αὐτοῖς τὸ πένθος.

PHILO

- 203 XXXVII. Οὗτος μὲν οὖν ὁ ἀριθμὸς, ὡς ἔφην, Μωυσέως γνώριμος, ὁ δὲ τῶν πέντε αἰσθήσεων τοῦ καὶ τὸ σῶμα καὶ τὰ ἐκτὸς ἀσπαζομένου, ὃν ἔθος καλεῖν Ἰωσήφ. τοσαύτην γὰρ αὐτῶν ἐπιμέλειαν πεποιήται, ὥστε τὸν μὲν ὁμογαστριον ἀδελφόν, τὸν αἰσθήσεως ἔκγονον ὄντα—ἦκιστα γὰρ ὁμοπατρίους οἶδε—, πέντε ἐξάλλοις δωρεῖται· στολαῖς, διαπρεπεῖς ἡγούμενος τὰς αἰσθήσεις καὶ κόσμου καὶ τιμῆς
- 204 ἀξίας. ὅλη δὲ Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ νόμους ἀναγράφει, ὅπως τιμῶσιν αὐτὰς καὶ φόρους καὶ δασμοὺς ὡς βασιλεῦσιν ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος κομίζωσι· τὸν γὰρ σίτον ἀποπεμπτοῦν κελεύει, τὸ δὲ ἐστὶν ὕλας καὶ τροφὰς ἀφθόνους θησαυροφυλακεῖν ταῖς πέντε αἰσθήσεων, ὅπως ἐκάστη τῶν οἰκείων ἀνεπισχέτως ἐμπιπλάμηνη τρυφᾷ καὶ τὸν νοῦν τοῖς ἐπεισφορομένοις βαρύνουσα βαπτίζῃ· ταῖς γὰρ τῶν αἰσθήσεων

---

* The translation is an attempt to preserve something of the play on words, ὀλκῆ weight (lit. "drawing down of the scale") suggesting ὀλκός "attracting."

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 202-204

the ripe fruits of the soul are gathered in and collected ; for it is prescribed at the Feast of Tabernacles, over and above the other sacrifices, to offer seventy young bullocks as a burnt offering (Num. xxix. 13-36). The bowls of the princes are fashioned in keeping with the principle of seventy—for each of them is of the weight of seventy shekels (Num. vii. 13 ff.)—since everything in the soul that tends to peace and friendship and agreement has a truly weighty power<sup>a</sup> of attraction, that sacred principle set forth by seventy, which Egypt, the virtue-hating and passion-loving nature, is represented as mourning over ; for among them mourning is reckoned as lasting seventy days (Gen. l. 3).

XXXVII. This number, then, is, as I have said, 203 intimately associated with Moses ; but the number belonging to the five senses with him who hails as friends the body and the things outside the body, him who is usually called “ Joseph.” So great is his devotion to these, that, while hardly owning the tie of a common fatherhood, he bestows upon his uterine brother, the offspring of sense-perception, five changes of raiment (Gen. xlv. 22), deeming the senses pre-eminent and deserving of adornment and honour. He sets up laws moreover for all Egypt, 204 that honour may be paid to the senses and tribute and contributions rendered to them as sovereigns every year : for he commands the Egyptians to pay a fifth part of the corn, which means that they are to store in treasuries materials and food in abundance for the five senses, that so each of them incessantly glutting itself with its own objects may wanton and drown the mind under the weight of all that it devours. For understanding is starved when the senses feast,

PHILO

- εὐωχίαις λιμὸν ἄγει διάνοια, ὡς ἔμπαλιν ταῖς 205 νηστείαις εὐφροσύνας. οὐχ ὄρας ὅτι καὶ πέντε Σαλπαὰδ θυγατέρες, ἃς ἀλληγοροῦντες αἰσθήσεις εἶναί φαμεν, ἐκ τοῦ δήμου Μανασσῆ γεγόνασιν, ὃς υἱὸς Ἰωσήφ ἐστι, χρόνῳ μὲν πρεσβύ-τερος ὢν, δυνάμει δὲ νεώτερος; εἰκότως· καλεῖται γὰρ ἐκ λήθης, τὸ δὲ ἰσοδυναμοῦν ἐστὶ πρᾶγμα ἀναμνήσει.<sup>1</sup> ἀνάμνησις δὲ τὰ δευτερεῖα φέρεται μνήμης, ἧς Ἐφραῖμ ἐπώνυμος γέγονεν, ὃς καρποφορία μεταληφθεὶς προσαγορεύεται· καρπὸς δὲ κάλλιστος καὶ τροφιμώτατος ψυχῆς τὸ ἄλγηστον ἐν 206 μνήμαις. λέγουσι γοῦν τὰ ἐναρμόνια ἑαυταῖς αἰ παρθένοι· “ὁ πατὴρ ἡμῶν ἀπέθανεν”—ἀλλ’ ὁ θάνατος ἀναμνήσεώς ἐστι λήθη—“καὶ ἀπέθανεν οὐ δι’ ἁμαρτίαν ἑαυτοῦ”—παγκάλως· οὐ γὰρ ἐκούσιον [469] ἡ λήθη | πάθος, ἀλλ’ ἐν τι τῶν οὐ παρ’ ἡμῖν, ἐπιγινόμενον ἔξωθεν—, “υἱοὶ δὲ οὐκ ἐγένοντο αὐτῷ,” ἀλλὰ θυγατέρες, ἐπειδὴ τὸ μὲν μνημονικὸν ἄτε φύσει διανιστάμενον<sup>2</sup> ἀρρενογονεῖ, τὸ δὲ ἐπιλανθανόμενον ὕπνω λογισμοῦ χρώμενον θηλυτοκεῖ· ἄλογον γάρ, ἀλόγου δὲ μέρους ψυχῆς αἰσθήσεις θυγατέρες.
 207 Εἰ δέ τις τὸν μὲν τάχει παρέδραμε, Μωυσῆ δὲ ἠκουλούθησε, μήπω δυνηθεὶς ἰσόδρομος αὐτῷ γενέσθαι κεκραμένῳ καὶ μιγάδι ἀριθμῷ χρήσεται, τῷ πέμπτῳ καὶ ἑβδομηκοστῷ, ὃς ἐστὶ σύμβολον αἰσθητῆς καὶ νοητῆς φύσεως, συγκεκραμένῳ<sup>3</sup> ἀμφοῖν εἰς εἶδους ἐνὸς ἀνεπιλήπτου<sup>4</sup> γένεσιν.
 208 XXXVIII. ἄγαμαι σφόδρα καὶ τὴν

<sup>1</sup> mss. αἰσθήσει(ς).

<sup>2</sup> The present can hardly give the required meaning “awake.” I suggest διανεσταμένον. See App. p. 565.

<sup>3</sup> mss. συναραμένων, συναρομένων.

<sup>4</sup> Mangey <οὐκ> ἀνεπιλήπτου. See App. p. 565.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 204-207

as on the other hand it makes merry when they are fasting. Do you not notice, that the five 205 daughters of Zelophehad, whom we take to be a figure of the senses, are of the tribe of Manasseh, who is Joseph's son, elder in age, younger in efficiency? Fitly is he younger, for his name means "from forgetfulness," and that is a thing equivalent to "recalling to mind." But the first prize goes to Memory, the second to Recollection, and Ephraim is named after Memory, for his name when translated is "Fruit-bearing," and the fairest and most nourishing fruit of the soul is remembering with no forgetfulness. And so the maidens say what perfectly fits in with 206 what they really are. "Our father died"—yes, the death of recollection is forgetfulness—"and he died by reason of no sin of his own"—quite rightly said, for forgetfulness is no voluntary experience, but one of those things that are not in our power, coming upon us from outside—"and he had no sons" (Num. xxvii. 3), but only daughters, for whereas the faculty of memory, being naturally wide awake, has male progeny, forgetfulness, wrapt in a slumber of reasoning power, has female offspring; for it is irrational, and the senses are daughters of the irrational portion of the soul.

But if anyone has outstripped Joseph in speed and 207 followed Moses, while he still lacks power to keep pace with him, he will live under a mixed and hybrid number, namely seventy-five, which denotes the nature alike of mind and sense-perception, which are both mingled together to produce a single kind, that does not call for our censure.<sup>a</sup> XXXVIII.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 565.

PHILO

ὑπομονὴν Ῥεβέκκαν, ἐπειδὴν τῷ τελείῳ τὴν ψυχὴν καὶ τὰς τῶν παθῶν καὶ κακιῶν τραχύτητας καθηρηκότι παραινῆ τότε εἰς Χαρρὰν ἀποδρᾶναι· λέγει γάρ· “ νῦν οὖν, τέκνον, ἄκουσον τῆς φωνῆς μου καὶ ἀναστὰς ἀπόδραθι πρὸς Λάβαν τὸν ἀδελφόν μου εἰς Χαρρὰν καὶ οἴκησον μετ’ αὐτοῦ ἡμέρας τινάς, ἕως τοῦ ἀποστρέψαι τὸν θυμὸν καὶ τὴν ὀργὴν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου ἀπὸ σοῦ, καὶ ἐπιλάβηται ἃ πεποίηκας 209 αὐτῷ.” παγκάλως δὲ τὴν ἐπὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις ὁδὸν δρασμὸν εἶρηκεν· ὄντως γὰρ δραπέτης ὁ νοῦς τότε γίνεται, ὅταν καταλιπὼν τὰ οἰκεία ἑαυτῷ νοητὰ τράπηται πρὸς τὸ ἐναντίον τάγμα τῶν αἰσθητῶν.
 ἔστι δὲ ὅπου καὶ τὸ δραπετεύειν χρήσιμον, ἐπειδὴν τις αὐτὸ ποιῆ μὴ ἔνεκα ἔχθους τοῦ πρὸς τὸν κρείτ-τονα, ἀλλὰ τοῦ μὴ ἐπιβουλευθῆναι χάριν πρὸς τοῦ 210 χείρονος. τίς οὖν ἢ παραίνεσις τῆς ὑπομονῆς; θαυμασιωτάτη καὶ περιμάχητος· ἐάν ποτε, φησὶν, ὄρᾳς ἀνηρεθισμένον καὶ ἐξηγριωμένον τὸ θυμοῦ καὶ ὀργῆς πάθος ἐν σαυτῷ ἢ τινι ἑτέρῳ, ὃ ἢ ἄλογος καὶ ἀτίθασος ζωοτροφεῖ<sup>1</sup> φύσις, μὴ μᾶλλον αὐτὸ ἀκονήσας ἐκθηριώσης—δῆξεται γὰρ ἴσως ἀνίατα—, καταψύχων δὲ τὸ ζέον αὐτοῦ καὶ πεπυρωμένον ἄγαν ἡμέρωσον· τιθασὸν γὰρ καὶ 211 χειρόηθες εἰ γένοιτο, ἥκιστα ἂν βλάψαι. τίς οὖν ὁ τρόπος τῆς τιθασείας καὶ ἡμερώσεως αὐτοῦ; μεθαρμοσάμενος καὶ μετασκευασάμενος, ὅσα τῷ δοκεῖν, ἀκολούθησον τὸ πρῶτον οἷς ἂν ἐθέλῃ καὶ πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> Mangey ζωοτροφεῖ. See App. p. 566.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 208-211

I profoundly admire also Patience or Rebecca, when 208 she exhorts him who is full-grown in soul and has overthrown the harsh tyranny of vice and passion, even then<sup>a</sup> to flee away to Haran. She says, " Now therefore, my child, hearken to my voice, and arise and flee away to Laban my brother in Haran, and abide with him some days, until the wrath and anger of thy brother turn away from thee, and he forget what thou hast done to him " (Gen. xxvii. 43-45). Excellently well does she call the journey to the 209 senses a flight or running away ; for the mind proves itself indeed a runaway, whenever it forsakes the objects of intellectual apprehension which are proper to it, and turns to the opposite array of the objects of sense-perception. Yet sometimes even running away is serviceable, when a man does it not out of hatred for the better, but that he may not be exposed to the designs of the worse. What, then, is the 210 advice of Patience ? A most marvellous and valuable one ! If ever, she says, thou seest stirred up to savagery in thyself or some other person the passion of wrath and anger, one of the stock bred and reared by our irrational and untamed nature, beware of whetting its fierceness and yet more rousing the beast in it, when its bites may be incurable, but cool down its excessive heat and perfervid temper and quiet it, for should it become tame and manageable it will inflict but little hurt. What, then, is the method of 211 bringing it to a quiet and subdued state ? Adapt and transform yourself in outward appearance and follow for the moment whatever it pleases, and opposing <sup>a</sup> i.e. even in the hour of victory over Esau. The "tides of the spirit," he means, often demand a return to common things, after the spirituality has been at its highest.—Wend. who wished to read either τῆν or ποτε, did not grasp this.

PHILO

- μηδὲν ἐναντιωθείς ὁμολόγησον τὰ αὐτὰ φιλεῖν τε καὶ μισεῖν· οὕτω γὰρ ἐξευμενισθήσεται. πραϋνθέντος δὲ ἀποθήσῃ τὴν ὑπόκρισιν, καὶ μηδὲν ἔτι προσδοκῶν ἐξ ἐκείνου κακὸν πείσεσθαι μετὰ ῥαστώνης ἐπανελεύσῃ πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἰδίων ἐπι-212 μέλειαν. εἰσάγεται γὰρ διὰ τοῦτο Χαρρὰν θρεμμάτων μὲν ἀνάπλεως, οἰκήτορσι δὲ κεχηρμένη κτηνοτρόφοις· τί γὰρ ἂν εἴη χωρίον ἀλόγῳ φύσει καὶ τοῖς τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν καὶ προστασίαν αὐτῆς ἀνειληφόσιν ἐπιτηδειότερον τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν
 213 αἰσθήσεων; πυθομένου γοῦν τοῦ ἀσκητοῦ “ πόθεν
 [470] | ἔστε ” ἀποκρίνονται τάληθές οἱ ποιμένες ὅτι “ ἐκ Χαρρὰν.” ἐκ γὰρ αἰσθήσεως αἱ ἄλογοι ὡς ἐκ διανοίας αἱ λογικαὶ δυνάμεις εἰσὶ. προσπυθομένου δέ, εἰ γινώσκουσι Λάβαν, φασὶν εἰκότως εἰδέναί· γνωρίζει γὰρ τὸ χρῶμα καὶ πᾶσαν ποιότητα αἰσθησις, ὡς οἴεται, χρωμάτων δὲ καὶ ποιότητων ὁ
 214 Λάβαν σύμβολον. καὶ αὐτὸς δὲ ἐπειδὴν ἤδη τελειωθῆ, τὸν μὲν τῶν αἰσθήσεων οἶκον ἀπολείψει, τὸν δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς ὡς ψυχῆς ἰδρύεται, ὃν ἔτι ὢν ἐν τοῖς πόνοις καὶ ταῖς ἀσκήσεσιν<sup>1</sup> ἀναζωγραφεῖ· λέγει γάρ· “ πότε ποιήσω καὶ γὰρ ἐμαντῶ οἶκον; ” πότε τῶν αἰσθητῶν καὶ αἰσθήσεων ὑπεριδῶν νοῦν καὶ διάνοιαν οἰκήσω, λόγῳ θεωρητοῖς πράγμασι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αἰσθήσεσι.

---

<sup>a</sup> I understand these two sections to contain, not so much advice to soothe an angry man by pretending to conform to his views and wishes, as a description of the right attitude of the mind to αἰσθησις and πάθος. It is well, when we feel or see the ebullience of passion in ourselves or others to come down from the contemplation of νοητά and accommodate ourselves to outward things. Afterwards the mind may return to the care of its proper charges (τῶν ἰδίων), the mind

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 211-214

no single suggestion of its, profess to share its likes and dislikes. In this way it will be made quite friendly. And when it has been softened, you will drop your feigning, and, free now from the expectation of suffering any evil at its hands, you will comfortably return to the care of your own charges.<sup>a</sup>

For this is the reason<sup>b</sup> why Haran is 212 represented as full of beasts, and having cattle-rearers as its inhabitants; for what place could be more suitable for irrational nature and those who have taken upon them the charge and patronage of it, than our senses? For instance, when the trainer of self 213 inquires "Whence are ye?" the shepherds answer truly "from Haran" (Gen. xxix. 4); for the irrational faculties come from sense-perception, as do the rational from understanding. When he further inquires whether they know Laban, they naturally say that they know him (Gen. xxix. 5): for sense-perception is familiar, so it imagines, with every colour and every quality, and Laban is the symbol of colours and varieties of quality.

But as 214 for Jacob himself, when at last he has been perfected, he quits, as we shall find, the dwelling-place of the senses, and founds that of the soul in the true sense<sup>c</sup> of the word, the dwelling-place which he pictures to himself while still immersed in his toils and exercises; for he says, "When shall I also make for myself a dwelling-place?" (Gen. xxx. 30). When shall I, looking beyond things perceived and the senses which perceive them, inhabit mind and understanding, educated in and associating with matters being thought of as the shepherd of the herd of νοητά; cf. De Mut. 114. But see App. p. 566.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. because Haran is the place of αἰσθησις.

<sup>c</sup> See on § 5 above.

PHILO

- συντρεφόμενος<sup>1</sup> καὶ συνδιαιτώμενος, καθάπερ αἱ ζητητικαὶ τῶν ἀφανῶν ψυχαί—μαίας αὐτὰς ἔθος 215 ὀνομάζειν—; καὶ γὰρ αὐταὶ ποιοῦσι σκεπάσματα οἰκεῖα καὶ φυλακτήρια φιλαρέτοις ψυχαῖς· τὸ δὲ εὐεργέστατον οἰκοδόμημα ἦν ὁ θεοῦ φόβος τοῖς φρουρὰν καὶ τεῖχος αὐτὸν ἀκαθαίρετον πεποιη-μένοις. “ἐπειδὴ” γάρ φησιν “ἐφοβοῦντο αἱ μαῖαι τὸν θεόν, ἐποίησαν ἑαυταῖς οἰκίας.”
- 216 XXXIX. Ἐξελθὼν οὖν ἐκ τῶν κατὰ τὴν Χαρρὰν τόπων ὁ νοῦς λέγεται “διοδεῦσαι τὴν γῆν ἕως τοῦ τόπου Συχέμ ἐπὶ τὴν δρῦν τὴν ὑψηλὴν.” τί δέ ἔστι τὸ διοδεῦσαι, σκεψώμεθα· τὸ φιλομαθὲς ζητητικὸν καὶ περιέργον ἔστι φύσει, πανταχῇ βαδίζον ἀόκνως καὶ πανταχόσε διακῦπτον καὶ μηδὲν ἀδιερεῦνητον τῶν ὄντων μήτε σωμάτων μήτε πραγμάτων ἀπολιπεῖν δικαιοῦν. λίχνον γὰρ ἐκτόπως θεαμάτων καὶ ἀκουσμάτων εἶναι πέφυκεν, ὡς μὴ μόνον τοῖς ἐπιχωρίοις ἀρκεῖσθαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ξενικῶν καὶ πορρωτάτω διωκισμένων ἐφίεσθαι.
- 217 λέγουσι γοῦν, ὡς ἔστιν ἄτοπον ἐμπόρους μὲν καὶ καπήλους γλίσχρων ἔνεκα κερδῶν διαβαίνειν τὰ πελάγη καὶ τὴν οἰκουμένην ἐν κύκλῳ περιεῖναι ἅπασαν, μὴ θέρος, μὴ χειμῶνα, μὴ πνεύματα βίαια, μὴ ἐναντία, μὴ νεότητα, μὴ γῆρας, μὴ νόσον σώματος, μὴ φίλων συνήθειαν, μὴ τὰς ἐπὶ γυναικὶ καὶ τέκνοις καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις οἰκεῖοις ἀλέκτούς ἠδονάς, μὴ πατρίδος καὶ πολιτικῶν φιλανθρω-πῶν ἀπόλαυσιν, μὴ χρημάτων καὶ κτημάτων καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. συστρεφόμενος.

<sup>a</sup> Hebrew “He made them houses,” i.e. gave them families, to perpetuate their names.—Driver.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 214-217

which form reason's contemplation, even as souls do that are in quest of things out of sight? To such 215 souls it is customary to give the name of "midwives," for, like the midwives in Egypt, these make places of shelter and security fit for virtue-loving souls: and the fear of God is as of old the most sure dwelling-place for those who have made Him their guard and impregnable fastness. For it says, "Since the midwives feared God, they made for themselves houses"<sup>a</sup> (Ex. i. 21).

XXXIX. To resume. The mind, when it has gone 216 forth from the places about Haran, is said to have travelled through the country as far as the place of Shechem, to the lofty oak-tree (Gen. xii. 6). Let us consider what is meant by "travelled through." Love of learning is by nature curious and inquisitive, not hesitating to bend its steps in all directions, prying into everything, reluctant to leave anything that exists unexplored, whether material or immaterial. It has an extraordinary appetite for all that there is to be seen and heard, and, not content with what it finds in its own country, it is bent on seeking what is in foreign parts and separated by great distances.

We are reminded that 217 merchants and traders for the sake of trifling profits cross the seas, and compass the wide world, letting stand in their way no summer heat nor winter cold, no tempestuous or contrary winds, neither youth nor age, no sickness of body, neither the daily intercourse with friends nor the pleasure too great for words which we take in wife and children and in all else that is our own, nor the enjoyment of our fatherland and of all the gracious amenities of civic life, nor the safe use of money and property and abundance of other

PHILO

- τῆς ἄλλης περιουσίας ἀσφαλῆ χρῆσιν, μὴ τῶν ἄλλων ὅτιοῦν συνόλως μέγα ἢ μικρὸν ἐμποδῶν 218 τιθεμένους, τοῦ δὲ καλλίστου καὶ περιμαχήτου καὶ μόνῳ τῷ γένει τῶν ἀνθρώπων οἰκειοτάτου χάριν, σοφίας, μὴ οὐχὶ θάλατταν μὲν ἅπασαν περαιουῖσθαι, πάντα δὲ γῆς μυχὸν ἐπέρχεσθαι, φιλοπευστοῦντας εἴ πού τι καλὸν ἔστιν ἰδεῖν ἢ ἀκοῦσαι, καὶ μετὰ
 [471] σπουδῆς καὶ προθυμίας τῆς | πάσης ἰχνηλατεῖν, ἄχρισ ἂν ἐγγένηται τῶν ζητουμένων καὶ ποθου-
 219 μένων εἰς ἀπόλαυσιν ἔλθειν. διόδευσον μέντοι, ψυχῇ, καὶ τὸν ἀνθρωπον, εἰ θέλεις, ἕκαστον τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν ἀγαγοῦσα εἰς ἐπικρισιν, οἷον εὐθέως τί τὸ σῶμα καὶ τί ποιοῦν ἢ πάσῃσιν διανοία συνεργεῖ, τί ἡ αἰσθησις καὶ τίνα τρόπον τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν ὠφελεῖ, τί λόγος καὶ τίνων γινόμενος ἐρμηνεύς πρὸς καλοκάγαθίαν συμβάλλεται, τί ἡδονὴ καὶ τί ἐπιθυμία, τί λύπη καὶ φόβος καὶ τίς ἢ πρὸς ταῦτα ἰατρικὴ, δι' ἧς ἢ ληφθεὶς τις εὐμαρῶς διεκδύσεται ἢ οὐχ ἀλώσεται πρὸς αὐτῶν τὸ παράπαν, τί τὸ ἀφραίνειν, τί τὸ ἀκολασταίνειν, τί τὸ ἀδικεῖν, τίς ἢ τῶν ἄλλων πληθὺς νοσημάτων, ὅσα ἢ φθοροποιὸς ἀποτίκτειν πέφυκε κακία, καὶ τίς ἢ τούτων ἀποστροφή, καὶ κατὰ τὰ ἐναντία τί τὸ δίκαιον ἢ τὸ φρόνιμον ἢ τὸ σῶφρον, τὸ ἀνδρεῖον, τὸ εὐβουλον, ἀρετὴ συνόλως ἅπασα καὶ εὐπάθεια. καὶ ὄν τρόπον 220 ἕκαστον αὐτῶν εἴωθε περιγίνεσθαι διὀδευσον μέντοι καὶ τὸν μέγιστον καὶ τελεώτατον

<sup>a</sup> Philo here seems, as not unfrequently, to use εὐπάθεια in a more general sense, not as in §§ 119 and 157 in the strict Stoic sense of justifiable emotions.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 217-220

good things, nor in a word anything else either great or small. If so, it is monstrous, such speakers urge, 218 when we stand to gain a thing most fair, worth all men's striving for, the special prerogative of the human race, namely wisdom, to refrain from crossing every sea, from exploring earth's every recess, in the joy of finding out whether there is in any place aught that is fair to see or hear, and from following the quest of it with utmost zest and keenness, until we can come to the enjoyment of the things that we are seeking and longing for.

Travel through 219
man also, if thou wilt, O my soul, bringing to examination each component part of him. For instance, to take the first examples that occur, find out what the body is and what it must do or undergo to co-operate with the understanding; what sense-perception is and in what way it is of service to its ruler, mind; what speech is, and what thoughts it must express if it would contribute to nobility of character; what pleasure is, and what desire is; what pain and fear are, and what the healing art is that can counteract them, by means of which a man shall either, if he falls into their hand, without difficulty make his escape, or avoid capture altogether; what it is to play the fool, what to be licentious, what to be unjust, what the multitude of other sicknesses to which it is the nature of pestilential wickedness to give birth, and what the preventive of these; and on the other hand, what righteousness is, or good sense, or self-mastery, courage, discretion, in a word virtue generally and moral welfare,<sup>a</sup> and in what way each of them is wont to be won.

Travel again through 220
the greatest and most perfect man, this universe, and

PHILO

- ἄνθρωπον, τόνδε τὸν κόσμον, καὶ διάσκεψαι τὰ μέρη, ὡς τόποις μὲν διέζευκται, δυνάμεσι δὲ ἦνται, καὶ τίς ὁ ἀόρατος οὗτος τῆς ἁρμονίας καὶ ἐνώσεως πᾶσι δεσμός. ἐὰν μέντοι σκοπούμενος μὴ ραδίως καταλαμβάνης ἃ ζητεῖς, ἐπίμενε μὴ κάμων· οὐ γὰρ τῇ ἑτέρᾳ<sup>1</sup> ληπτὰ ταῦτ' ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ μόλις πολλοῖς καὶ μεγάλοις πόνοις ἀνευρισκόμενα.
- 221 οὐ χάριν ὁ φιλομαθῆς τοῦ τόπου Συχέμ ἐνείληπται, μεταληφθὲν δὲ τοῦνομα Συχέμ ὠμίαςις καλεῖται, πόνου σύμβολον, ἐπειδὴ τοῖς μέρεσι τούτοις ἀχθοφορεῖν ἔθος, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸς ἐτέρωθι μέμνηται λέγων ἐπὶ τινος ἀθλητοῦ τούτου τὸν τρόπον· “ ὑπέθηκε τὸν ὦμον εἰς τὸ πονεῖν, καὶ ἐγένετο ἀνὴρ γεωργός.”
- 222 ὥστε μηδέποτε, ὦ διάνοια, μαλακισθεῖσα ὀκλάσης, ἀλλά, κἂν τι δοκῇ δυσθεώρητον εἶναι, τὸ ἐν σαυτῇ βλέπον διανοίξασα διάκυσσον εἴσω καὶ ἀκριβέστερον τὰ ὄντα ἐναύγασαι καὶ μήτε ἐκοῦσα μήτε ἄκουσά ποτε μύσης· τυφλὸν γὰρ ὕπνος, ὡς ὄξυωπὲς ἐγρήγορσις. ἀγαπητὸν δὲ τῷ συνεχεῖ τῆς προσβολῆς<sup>2</sup> εἰλικρινῆ τῶν ζητουμένων
- 223 λαβεῖν φαντασίαν. οὐχ ὄρᾶς ὅτι καὶ δρῦν ὑψηλὴν ἐν Συχέμ πεφυτεῦσθαί φησιν αἰνιττόμενος τὸν ἀνένδοτον καὶ ἀκαμπῆ, στερρόν τε καὶ ἀρραγέστατον παιδείας πόνον ; ὦ τὸν μέλλοντα ἔσεσθαι

<sup>1</sup> Wendland and Mangey τῇ ἐκεχειρίᾳ. The reading here printed is, according to Wend., that of all mss. except H<sup>2</sup>. Wend. later (Rhein. Mus. liii. p. 34) repudiated ἐκεχ. and was inclined instead to adopt a suggestion of Cohn, ραστῶνη, based on De Sacr. 37. But the phrase οὐ τῇ ἑτέρᾳ ληπτὸν (not to be caught with one hand) is a quotation from Plato, Soph. 226 A, where it is said to be a proverbial phrase (τὸ λεγόμενον) and there is no reason to doubt its genuineness here. See further App. p. 566.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. προσβολῆς.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 220-223

scan narrowly its parts, how far asunder they are in the positions which they occupy, how wholly made one by the powers which govern them, and what constitutes for them all this invisible bond of harmony and unity. If, however, in your investigation, you do not easily attain the objects of your quest, keep on without giving in, for these "need both hands to catch them," and only by manifold and painful toil can they be discovered. That is why the lover of 221 learning took possession of the place called Shechem, a name which when translated is "shouldering," a figure of toil, since it is with these parts of the body that we are accustomed to carry loads, as Moses himself calls to mind elsewhere speaking in this wise of one who worked and strove, "he submitted his shoulder to labour, and became a tiller of the soil" (Gen. xlix. 15).

Never, then, O my 222 understanding, do thou shew weakness and slacken, but even if aught seem to be hard to discern, open wide the organ in thyself that sees, and stoop to get a view of the inside, and behold with more accurate gaze the things that are, and never either willingly or unwillingly close thine eyes; for sleep is a blind thing, as wakefulness is a thing of keen sight. And it is a sufficient<sup>a</sup> reward to obtain by unremitting inspection a clear impression of the things thou art in search of.

Do you not see that he says 223 further that a tall oak had been planted in Shechem, thus shewing in a figure the toil of education as a hard and unbreakable substance that never yields or bends?

<sup>a</sup> Or "one with which we must be content." The word is generally used of something we accept in default of something better. What that is in this case has been shewn in § 46. There is a higher realization than seeing, viz. possessing, but that is not given to men.

PHILO

τέλειον καὶ ἀναγκαῖον κεχρηῆσθαι, ἵνα μὴ<sup>1</sup> τὸ ψυχῆς δικαστήριον, ὄνομα Δείνα—κρίσις γὰρ ἑρμηνεύε-ται—, συλληφθῆ πρὸς τοῦ τὸν ἐναντίον μοχθοῦντος 224 πόνου, τὸν φρονήσεως ἐπίβουλον.<sup>2</sup> ὁ γὰρ [472] ἐπώνυμος τοῦ τόπου τούτου Συχέμ, Ἐμῶρ υἱὸς ᾧν, ἀλόγου φύσεως—καλεῖται γὰρ Ἐμῶρ ὄνος—, ἀφροσύνην ἐπιτηδεύων καὶ συντραφεὶς ἀναισχυντία καὶ θράσει τὰ κριτήρια τῆς διανοίας μαιίνειν ὁ παμμίαρος καὶ φθείρειν ἐπεχείρησεν, εἰ μὴ θάπτον οἱ φρονήσεως ἀκουσται<sup>3</sup> καὶ γνώριμοι, Συμεῶν τε καὶ Λευί, φραξάμενοι τὰ οἰκεῖα ἀσφαλῶς ἐπέξ-ῆλθον, ἔτι ὄντας ἐν τῷ φιληδόνῳ καὶ φιλοπαθεῖ καὶ ἀπεριτμήτῳ πόνῳ καθελόντες· χρησμοῦ γὰρ ὄντος, ὡς “οὐκ ἂν γένοιτό ποτε πόρνη τῶν τοῦ βλέποντος, Ἰσραὴλ, θυγατέρων,” οὗτοι τὴν παρθένον ψυχὴν 225 ἔξαρπάσαντες λαθεῖν ἤλπισαν. οὐ γὰρ ἐρημία γε τῶν βοηθησόντων τοῖς παρασπονδουμένοις ἐστίν, ἀλλὰ κἂν οἴωνται τινες, οἰήσονται μόνον, ἀπελεγθῆσονται δὲ τῷ ἔργῳ ψευδοδοξούν-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μὴ δέ.

<sup>2</sup> So all MSS. except H<sup>2</sup>; this has τοῦ . . . ἐπιβούλου, which Wend. adopts.

<sup>3</sup> Wend. suggested and later (Rhein. Mus. lviii. 34) accepted ἐρασταί. But see De Ebr. 94, where Simeon is φιλήκοος, “for his name means ἀκοή.”

<sup>a</sup> Or “tribunals.”

<sup>b</sup> The phrase is apparently an interpretation of the next word, ἀσφαλῶς, which itself is taken from the LXX εἰσῆλθον εἰς τὴν πόλιν ἀσφαλῶς. This word, which in the E.V. is translated “unawares” (margin, “boldly”), was presumably understood by the LXX translators as “running no risks because the Shechemites were disabled.” Philo reads into it the thought that Virtue must fortify itself against Vice before it can take the offensive.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 223-225

It is a vital matter that he who would be perfect should ply this toil, to the end that the soul's court of justice, called "Dinah," which means "judgement," may not be ravished by him who sinks under the opposite kind of toil, which is the insidious foe of sound sense.

For the man who bears the <sup>224</sup> name of this place, Shechem, being son of Hamor, that is of an irrational being—for "Hamor" means "ass"—practising folly and nursed in shamelessness and effrontery, essayed—foul wretch that he was—to corrupt and defile the judgement faculties<sup>a</sup> of the understanding. But the hearers and pupils of sound sense, Symeon and Levi, were too quick for him. They made secure their own quarters<sup>b</sup> and went forth against them in safety, and overthrew them when still occupied in the pleasure-loving, passion-loving, toil<sup>c</sup> of the uncircumcised: for albeit there was a Divine decree that "of the daughters of Israel, the seeing one, none might ever become a harlot" (Deut. xxiii. 17), these men hoped to carry off unobserved the virgin soul (Gen. xxxiv.).<sup>d</sup> Vain hope, for <sup>225</sup> there is no lack of succourers to victims of a breach of faith; but even if some imagine that there is, they will only imagine, but will be convicted by events of

<sup>a</sup> A reference to LXX Gen. xxiv. 25 ὅτε ἦσαν ἐν τῷ πόνῳ, where πόνος refers to their disablement from circumcision (E.V. "when they were sore"). This strangely-used word comes in happily for Philo's allegory of Shechem as the false πόνος.

<sup>d</sup> Philo takes great liberties with the story, ignoring the actual seduction of Dinah (μαλνεῖν ἐπεχείρησεν) and the circumcision of Hamor and Shechem (ἀπεριτμήτῳ πόνῳ). He gives, however, a sort of apology for this in § 225 by suggesting that in the spiritual sphere the defilement of the truly virtuous soul, and the "circumcision" of the truly wicked, are only illusory.

PHILO

τες. ἔστι γάρ, ἔστιν ἡ μισοπόνηρος καὶ ἀμείλικτος καὶ ἀδικουμένων ἀρωγὸς ἀπαραίτητος δίκη, σφάλουσα τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰσχυρόντων ἀρετήν, ὧν πεσόντων εἰς παρθένον πάλιν ἡ δόξασα αἰσχυρῆναι μεταβάλλει ψυχὴ· δόξασα δ' εἶπον, ὅτι οὐδέποτε ἐφθείρετο· τῶν γὰρ ἀκουσίων οὐδὲν τοῦ πάσχοντος πρὸς ἀλήθειαν πάθος, ὡς οὐδὲ τοῦ μὴ ἀπὸ γνώμης ἀδικούντος τὸ πραττόμενον ἔργον.

THE MIGRATION OF ABRAHAM, 225

holding a false opinion. For Justice has indeed existence, Justice the abhorrer of wickedness, the relentless one, the inexorable, the befriender of those who are wronged, bringing failure upon the aims of those who shame virtue, upon whose fall the soul, that had seemed to have been shamed, becomes again a virgin. Seemed, I said, because it never was defiled. It is with sufferings which we have not willed, as it is with wrongdoings which we have not intended. As there is no real doing in the second case, so there is no real suffering in the first.

WHO IS THE HEIR OF DIVINE THINGS
(QUIS RERUM DIVINARUM HERES)

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THIS treatise, the longest of the whole series and containing many fine passages, is a straightforward commentary with comparatively few digressions on Gen. xv. 2-18.

2. And Abram says, Master, what wilt Thou give me? I depart childless. But the son of Masek, the woman born in my household, is this Damascus Eliezer.

3. And Abram said, Since Thou hast given me no seed, the son of my household shall be my heir.

4. And immediately the voice of the Lord came to him, saying, He shall not be thy heir, but he who shall come forth from thee, he shall be thy heir.

5. And He led him forth outside and said to him, Look up indeed into heaven, and count the stars if thou shalt be able to number them, and He said, So shall be thy seed.

6. And Abram believed on God, and it was counted to him for righteousness.

7. And He said to him, I am the God who brought thee from the land of the Chaldeans to give thee this land to inherit.

8. And he said, Master, by what shall I know that I shall inherit it?

9. And He said to him, Take Me a heifer of three years old, and a goat of three years old, and a

WHO IS THE HEIR

ram of three years old, and a turtledove and a pigeon.

10. And he took for Him all these, and divided them in the middle, and placed them facing each other ; but the birds he did not divide.

11. And the birds came down to the bodies their half pieces, and Abram sat with them.

12. And about sunset a trance (ecstasy) fell upon Abram, and lo, a great dark terror falls upon him.

13. And it was said to Abram, Knowing thou shalt know that thy seed shall be a sojourner in a land not their own, and they shall enslave them and ill-treat them and humble them four hundred years.

14. And the nation which they shall be slaves to I will judge, and after this they shall come forth hither with much substance (stock) .

15. But thou shalt depart to thy fathers in peace, nourished in a good old age (or, as Philo, "nourished with peace").

16. And in the fourth generation they shall turn away hither, for the iniquities of the Amorites are not yet fulfilled until now.

17. And when the sun was at its setting, a flame arose, and lo, a furnace (oven) smoking, and torches of fire, which went in the midst of these half pieces.

18. In that day the Lord made a covenant with Abram saying, To thy seed will I give this land from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates.

The first point to which Philo calls attention is Abraham's boldness of speech, the proper attitude of the faithful servant (1-9). Silence indeed is more fitting in the ignorant, as is expressed in the text, "Be silent and listen" (10), and we should remember that this includes the silence of the soul, which is the opposite of that wandering mind, which so often accompanies mere silence of speech (11-13). But that the wise have a right to boldness of speech is shewn emphatically in the story of Moses, and here Philo quotes several of his pathetic appeals to God and concludes that such appeals are the mark of the "friend of God" (14-21). Yet in Abraham's words there is a sense of pious awe or caution (εὐλάβεια) as well as boldness. Philo notes the term "Master" connoting a greater degree of fear than "Lord," and thence passes on into an impassioned meditation expressing the combination of awe and gratitude, which the words "Master what wilt thou give me?" (which he takes in the sense of "what more canst thou give, who hast given all?") call up in the mind of the devout worshipper (15-22). And in the same way he treats the verse, "Shall I depart childless?" Shall I, that is, be denied the spiritual offspring of higher thought? Shall I have no heir but the son of Masek (34-39).

PHILO

Thus we are necessarily led to the interpretation of Masek the "homeborn" and her son. The name means "from a kiss" and kiss (φίλημα) differs from love (φιλεῖν) as marking a lower and less genuine kind of affection (40-41). Thus it may stand for the life of sense, which the wise will regard as a servant, but not love (42). Philo then gives two examples where "kiss" (καταφιλεῖν) signifies the kiss of insincerity, while φιλεῖν shews true affection, and then introduces somewhat inappropriately his favourite parable of the Hated and the Beloved Wife (Deut. xxi. 15-17), the latter of whom he identifies with Masek (45-49) and touches on the analogy between the two wives and Leah and Rachel (50). Masek's son Damascus represents all of us who honour Sense. The name means "Blood of sackcloth" and thus symbolizes the animal or "blood"-life as opposed to the life of mind and reason (52-57). Damascus is also called Eliezer (God is my help) which signifies the inability of the blood-life to maintain itself without God's help. And again his inferiority is marked by the absence of any named father (58-62).

WHO IS THE HEIR

Abraham's question then means "can this blood-life be the heir of higher things?" and the profound inward conviction symbolized by the voice of God answers—No, not that, but he that shall come out of thee shall be thy heir (63-68). These words Philo audaciously understands to mean that the "heir" must come out of, or leave, that is surrender and dedicate to God, not only body, sense and speech,<sup>a</sup> but his whole self (69-74). What the inheritance is is shewn by the next words, "He led him forth outside and said, 'Look (or 'See') up into heaven,'" for heaven is another name for the treasure-house of divine blessings, as it is called in Deuteronomy (75-76), and to be able to "see" up to this is the privilege of the true Israel which does not like its unworthy representatives in the wilderness refuse to "look to the Manna," preferring the onions and fishes of Egypt (76-80). As for the phrase "He led him up out outside," there is no tautology, for since we may well be called both outside and inside, if our inward feelings are not in accord with our outward actions, so the phrase shews that the Abraham-mind <sup>a</sup> Which, on Philo's interpretation of Gen. xii. 1, were symbolized by the "land," "kinsfolk" and "father's house," which Abraham was commanded to leave.

PHILO

is altogether outside, outside that is of the trammels of sense, speech and body and above all of SELF (81-85).

The next words "count the stars" do not refer to mere number, as is shewn by "so (not "so many") shall be thy seed," but to the "star-like" nature of the soul-children, and the stars themselves are not those which we see, but the vastly greater glories of the Ideal Universe, of which these are but the copies (86-89).

The next verse raises the question why Abraham's believing God should be counted to him for righteousness. How can anyone disbelieve God? Philo replies that while in itself there is nothing marvellous in this belief, yet in view of the proneness of human nature to trust in lower things, it may well be described as a "just" or "righteous" action (90-95).

In verse 7, the words "I am the God who brought thee from the land of the Chaldeans to give thee this land to inherit," send our thoughts to a fulfilled boon, as well as that which is to come: God had brought the soul out of the land of star-lore, where heaven itself is God, and has led him to the land of "wisdom," that is of acknowledging the Creator instead of the creature (96-99).

Abraham's question in verse 8 "How shall I know?" does not imply doubt of the promise, but only the natural desire to know how it will come about, and the immediate answer of God shews that the question is accepted as right (100-102). In the answer (verse 9), we first note the words "take for me," which indicate first that all we have we do but receive (103), and secondly that we should receive or "take" them for God and not for ourselves. Philo develops this theme in his familiar manner in application to our senses, mind and all other gifts (104-111). An illustration of this from the phrase My first-fruits or "beginnings" leads to some thoughts on the divine origin of the fruits of the earth, as well as of human parentage (112-119). And again if the beginnings are God's so also are the ends (120-121), and finally we have to remember that God deigns to "take" from us, as He shewed, when He took the Levites as a ransom for the others (123-124).

WHO IS THE HEIR

Proceeding with the same verse, the heifer signifies the soul, the ram speech, and the goat sense-perception. They are all "three years old," the perfect number signifying beginning, middle and end, while the solitary turtle-dove and the sociable pigeon are respectively divine and human wisdom. The first three are divided, soul into reasoning and unreasoning, speech into true and false, sense-perception into real and illusory, while the two "wisdoms" are incapable of division (125-132). This work of division is one of the functions of the creative Logos and is illustrated from various aspects of creation (133-140). But we must note also that the three creatures divided in the story are divided in the middle, that is equally, and this brings us to the disquisition "about the division into equals and opposites," which supplies the second half of the traditional title of the treatise and occupies the next sixty-five sections.

Equality which in actual practice cannot be obtained exactly and is therefore an attribute of the divine Division by the Logos (141-143) may be equality in number or magnitude or capacity, and again it may be numerical or proportional (144-145). Philo illustrates all these at somewhat wearisome

PHILO

length. He first gives a catalogue of natural phenomena where we find the numerical balance (146-151), and then examples of proportional equality, concluding with the thought of man as the Microcosm and the Cosmos (152-155), and this leads him on to shew how God deals with small and great on the same principle (156-160). Moses too shews his reverence for equality partly by his praises of justice, the very essence of which is equality, and also in the examples of it scattered throughout the Law. Such are the divisions of day and night, of man and woman, and others mentioned in the early chapters of Genesis (161-165), and in the body of the Law itself, the Divine Presence dividing the Cherubim, that is the two Potencies, on the ark, and the division of the Ten Commandments into two tables of five each (166-169), which gives occasion for stating shortly the meaning of each commandment (169-173). Other examples are the permanent sacrifices (174), the two sets of the shewbread (175), the two jewels on the High Priest's robe (176), the two mountains of blessing and cursing, and the two goats of Lev. xvi. with a short digression on the meaning of the rite (177-181). Two other examples which follow give occasion for longer mystical meditation. The blood which was poured partly on the altar and partly into the mixing-bowls shews how divine wisdom, that is mind in its pure form, is an offering to God, and human wisdom, set by God in the mixing-bowls of the senses, may be purified by the cleansing blood (182-185). So too the offering of the half-shekel indicates the ransoming of the suppliant soul, while the un-offered half stands for the mind which is content with its slavery (186-190). Again we have examples of equal division in the Manna, where he that had much had not too much, and he that had little did not lack (191), and the Passover, where the lamb is to be distributed, so that each may have sufficient (192-193). And after two other briefly mentioned examples there follows a longer allegorical treatment of the ingredients of the incense-offering interpreted as the thanksgiving of the four elements and therefore of the World (194-200), and finally a fine passage in which citing the story of Aaron standing between the living and the dead, and the cloud which divided the host of Egypt from Israel, he describes the work of the Logos as mediating between the creature and the Creator, on the one hand proclaiming the divine mercy, on the other hand standing surety for the ultimate obedience of mankind—a passage which must surely have deeply impressed his Christian readers (201-206).

WHO IS THE HEIR

The words "facing each other" suggest that these divisions are into opposites, and so we find this phenomenon of oppositeness running throughout creation. In a long catalogue which begins with such physical examples as hot and cold and ends with human qualities, Philo brings this out and finally points out in triumph that it is in vain for the Greeks to boast of this philosophy of opposites as due to Heracleitus, since Moses knew and shewed it long before (207-214).

We might now pass on, but there is one example of division which Philo feels needs special attention. As in the story of Genesis three creatures were divided, there were six halves, and therefore the dividing Logos stands in the sacred position of seventh. We have a parallel to this in the great chandelier of the Tabernacle and Philo deals with this in considerable detail, shewing that its general structure is seven-fold, i.e. three of each kind on each side of the main stalk (215-220). He goes on to suggest that it represents the seven planets with the sun in the centre, as well as the three pairs of soul division mentioned above with the Logos as the seventh (221-225). And this gives him opportunity for two other remarks on the chandelier. He notes that while the incense-altar (as mentioned before) represents thanksgiving of the elements, and the table with its loaves thanksgiving of the creatures formed of these elements, the chandelier signifies the thanksgiving of the heavens (226). And so while we are told the dimensions of the first two we hear nothing of the dimensions of the chandelier, in accordance with the truth that heaven has no bounds of which the human mind has ken (227-229).

PHILO

“The birds he did not divide.” We have already had a brief explanation of this, but it needs filling out. While the unreasoning part of the soul has its seven divisions, the mind (the pigeon of the story) like the sphere of the fixed stars, which is its heavenly analogy, has no divisions, and so too the turtle-dove, the Logos, is indivisible: and yet both though undivided themselves are perpetually dividing and distinguishing everything that comes before them (230-236).

“The birds came down to the bodies, the half pieces.” Here of course “birds” is used in a different sense, as is shewn by their “coming down,” for it is the nature of birds to fly up (237-238). Rather these birds are like the reptiles banned in Leviticus, and have left their natural home of heaven for earth. They are the numberless thoughts which beset the mind and drag it "down" and feast upon the bodily element in us (239-243). And when we read that "Abraham sat down with them" it signifies the wise man's attitude to these thoughts. He is like the statesman who puts an end to foreign wars, that is to wicked thoughts which attack the soul, and to civil faction, that is to the contention of opposing doctrines (243-246). And here once again Philo catalogues the different theories of the schools on physical and theological problems, and pictures the Sage, who sits down with them, as half-midwife, half-judge, discarding the evil offspring of the soul and saving the good (246-248).

WHO IS THE HEIR

And about sunset an "ecstasy" fell upon Abraham. Philo enumerates four meanings of this word—madness, astonishment, mental tranquillity (or vacancy) and prophetic inspiration (249). He proceeds to give examples of each (250-252), but two examples of the second, viz. that Isaac was in an "ecstasy," i.e. astonished, when Jacob brought him the savoury meats, and Jacob was in an "ecstasy" i.e. astonished, that Joseph still lived and ruled over Egypt, cause him to break off strangely into the lessons which may be drawn from these two passages (252-256).<sup>a</sup> When he resumes he gives an example of the third meaning, viz. the ecstasy (trance) "which fell upon Adam and he slept" (267), and proceeds to the fourth, which he holds to be the meaning of the word in our text. He shews that either in the sense of predictor or of spokesman Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and above all Moses are prophets (258-262). And the phrase "about sunset," he thinks, well suits this meaning. For when the "sun" of the mind is in action, we cannot be god-possessed. It is when something higher takes possession of him and plays upon him like the musician on the chords that the prophet becomes the voice of God (263-266).

<sup>a</sup> See notes on these sections.

PHILO

We turn to the promises given to Abraham in verses 13-16. "Thy seed shall be a sojourner in a land not their own." The soul-children must dwell a while in that "earth" which stands for bodily things (262-268). They will serve for four hundred years, and with Philo's usual recklessness about numbers the four hundred years stand for the four passions (who are also the people whom they serve and whom God will judge), and what slavery to the passions means is described briefly (269-271). But when the redemption comes, we shall depart with much substance or stock, to be our supply for the journey. This supply is the fruits of education, beginning with the school learning, which creates the desire for the higher philosophy (272-274).

"But thou shalt depart to thy fathers, nourished with peace, in a good old age." First we note the contrast here implied between the peace of the Sage and the war and slavery described above (275). Secondly, that he "departs," not "dies" (276). But who are the "fathers"? Not those whom he left behind in Chaldea, from whom God had called him away (277-279). Some think the heavenly bodies are meant, some the "ideas," others again the four elements to which our bodies return. And Philo seems ready to accept this, if we add also the "fifth element," to which the soul returns—at any rate he gives no other (279-283). When the promise adds

WHO IS THE HEIR

“nourished with peace,” it contrasts the wise man’s lot with the spiritual welfare of ordinary men. In that war our enemies may be the “external things” or the passions and vices within us. And then Philo repeats in a slightly different form the parable of the guards of the soul and body which he has already used in De Ebr. 201 and De Conf. 18 (284-286). That the peace cannot be literally meant is clear when we remember that Abraham’s life was beset by war, exile and even want (286-288). Yet all these, allegorically considered, are blessings—war against wrongdoing, exile from the false star-lore, want of passion (289). And the “good old age” must mean the life of wisdom, for a day well-spent is more than years of folly (290-292).

“And in the fourth generation they shall return here.” The “fourth generation” is interpreted to mean the fourth of the seven-year periods of life. In the first the child knows nothing of good or evil. The second is the time when vice shews itself, partly owing to the natural disposition, partly to mishandled education. In the third comes the healing influence of philosophy, and thus in the fourth the man is in his strength ready to travel to the land of wisdom (293-299).

“For the sins of the Amorites are not yet filled up.” Some read a fatalistic meaning into these words, but Moses is no fatalist (300-301). The name “Amorites” means “talkers” and here they are the deceivers who misuse the gift of speech. It is not till sophistry is convicted, and thus “filled,” that we can fly from the land of lies and seek the wisdom indicated by “here” (302-306).

“When the sun was at its setting a flame arose and behold a smoking furnace." The flame of virtue often appears late and at the close of life (307), and while we are still in the land of the Amorites it is like the smoke of a furnace. Smoke brings tears to the eyes and so when we see virtue in this obscured form, we weep for its perfected form (308-310). In another way this furnace or oven may be the type of the earnest soul, which contains and "cooks" the nourishment supplied by the virtues (311). As for "the torches of fire which went in the midst of the half-pieces," they are the judgements of God, passing through and dividing all things (312).

PHILO

Finally we have the summing up. In that day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham saying, "to thy seed will I give this land from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates." Here then we have the wise man declared the heir. For we have already seen that the land is wisdom (313-315), and when he adds the words about the rivers we must note that Egypt is put first and Euphrates last. For the process of perfecting begins with Egypt, the body, and the bodily things which are necessary to our existence, and ends with the great river of God's wisdom with all its joys and blessings (315-316).

In this treatise we once more have, as in the De Sacrificiis,<sup>a</sup> the help of the Papyrus discovered in Upper Egypt in 1889 and stated to be as early as, and probably earlier than, the 6th century. A very cursory examination of Wendland's Apparatus Criticus, will shew how valuable is this addition to our textual authorities. Particularly interesting is the frequent * See Introduction to that treatise, vol. ii. p. 93.

WHO IS THE HEIR

note "Pap. (Mangey)," shewing how often the acumen of Mangey anticipated the discovery. But like all documents it is not infallible, and while in most cases I thoroughly endorse Wendland's preference for the readings of the Papyrus against those of the mss.,<sup>a</sup> there are a few in which I think he has been too subservient to it; and there are also many places in which though it supports the mss. there is evidently or probably some corruption, on which conjecture may exercise its ingenuity.

<sup>a</sup> As the object of the critical notes is chiefly to indicate to the reader where the text adopted has no ms. authority (see Preface, pp.v-vi), I have not, except in a very few special instances, recorded the cases in which the Papyrus's readings are accepted by Wendland in preference to those of the Codices.

[473] ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΤΙΣ Ο ΤΩΝ ΘΕΙΩΝ ΕΣΤΙΝ ΚΛΗΡΟΝΟΜΟΣ ΚΑΙ ΠΕΡΙ ΤΗΣ ΕΙΣ ΤΑ ΙΣΑ ΚΑΙ ΕΝΑΝΤΙΑ ΤΟΜΗΣ

- 1 I. Ἐν μὲν τῇ πρὸ ταύτης συντάξει τὰ περὶ μισθῶν ὡς ἐνῆν ἐπ' ἀκριβείας διεξήλθομεν· νυνὶ δὲ πρόκειται ζητεῖν, τίς ὁ τῶν θείων πραγμάτων κληρονόμος ἐστίν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ θεσπισθέντος ὁ
- 2 σοφὸς ἤκουσε λογίου τοιούτου· “ὁ μισθός σου πολὺς ἔσται σφόδρα,” πυνθάνεται φάσκων· “δέσποτα, τί μοι δώσεις; ἐγὼ δὲ ἀπολύομαι ἄτεκνος. ὁ δὲ υἱὸς Μασέκ<sup>1</sup> τῆς οἰκογενοῦς μου οὗτος Δαμασκὸς Ἐλιέζερ,” καὶ πάλιν “ἐπειδὴ ἐμοὶ οὐκ ἔδωκας σπέρμα, ὁ δὲ οἰκογενῆς μου κληρο-
- 3 νομήσει με.” καίτοι τίς οὐκ ἂν τὸ τοῦ χρησιμωδοῦντος ἀξίωμα καὶ μέγεθος καταπλαγείς ἄφρωνος καὶ ἀχανῆς ἐγένετο, καὶ εἰ μὴ διὰ δέος, ἀλλὰ τοι τῷ περιχαρεῖ; ἐπιστομίζουσι γὰρ ὡς αἱ σφοδραὶ λῦπαι καὶ αἱ ὑπερβάλλουσαι χαραί.
- 4 διὸ καὶ Μωυσῆς ἰσχυρόφρωνος ὁμολογεῖ καὶ βραδύγλωσσος γενέσθαι, ἀφ' οὗ ἤρξατο ὁ θεὸς αὐτῷ διαλέγεσθαι. καὶ ἀψευδῆς ἐστὶν ἡ τοῦ προφήτου μαρτυρία· τότε γὰρ εἰκὸς τὸ μὲν φωνητήριον

<sup>1</sup> So Pap.: mss. μου ὁ ἐκ.

WHO IS THE HEIR OF DIVINE THINGS

AND ON THE DIVISION INTO EQUALS AND OPPOSITES

I. In the preceding treatise<sup>a</sup> we have discussed as 1 carefully as was possible the question of rewards. Now our task is to inquire who is the heir of divine things. When the Sage heard the oracular promise to this purport, "Thy reward shall be exceeding great," 2 he answers with the question, "Master, what wilt thou give me? I go hence childless. The son of Masek, she who was born in my house, is this Damascus Eliezer."<sup>b</sup> And again he says "Since thou hast given me no seed, he that was born in my house shall be my heir" (Gen. xv. 1-3). Yet we 3 should have expected that he (for who would not?) would have been struck mute and speechless in amazement at the majesty and greatness of the Giver of the oracle, if not for fear, at any rate for exceeding joy. For men are tongue-tied by overwhelming joy, as well as by violent grief. This it is that led Moses 4 to confess that he has become feeble of voice and slow of tongue, ever since God began to hold converse with him (Ex. iv. 10). And the testimony of the prophet is true indeed. For at such times it is natural that always used, but a lost treatise on Gen. xv. 1, part of which verse is quoted in the second section.

<sup>b</sup> R.V. "He that shall be the possessor of my house is Dammesek Eliezer." (A.V. "The steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus.")

PHILO

ὄργανον ἐπέχεσθαι, τὸν δὲ κατὰ διάνοιαν λόγον ἀρθρούμενον ἀνυποτάκτῳ φορᾷ χρῆσθαι, νοημάτων οὐ ῥημάτων ἐπάλληλα κάλλη μετ' εὐτρόχου 5 καὶ ὑψηγόρου δυνάμεως φιλοσοφοῦντα. θαυμάσιοι δὲ ἀρεταὶ ἢ τε εὐτολμία καὶ ἢ ἐν τῷ δέοντι παρρησία πρὸς τοὺς ἀμείνους, ὡς καὶ τὸ κωμικὸν ἀψευδῶς μᾶλλον ἢ κωμικῶς εἰρησθαι δοκεῖν ἂν πάνθ' ὁ δοῦλος ἡσυχάζειν' μανθάνη, πονηρὸς ἔσται· μεταδίδου παρρησίας.

8 II. πότε οὖν ἄγει παρρησίαν οἰκέτης πρὸς δεσπότην; ἄρ' οὐχ ὅταν ἡδικηκότι μὲν
 [474] ἑαυτῷ μηδὲν | συνειδῆ, πάντα δ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ κεκτη-
 7 μένου καὶ λέγοντι καὶ πράττοντι; πότε οὖν ἄξιον καὶ τὸν τοῦ θεοῦ δοῦλον ἐλευθεροστομεῖν πρὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ τε καὶ τοῦ παντὸς ἡγεμόνα καὶ δεσπότην ἢ ὅταν ἀμαρτημάτων καθαρῆ καὶ τὸ φιλοδέσποτον ἐκ τοῦ συνειδότος κρίνη, πλείονι χαρᾷ χρώμενος ἐπὶ τῷ θεράπων θεοῦ γενέσθαι, ἢ εἰ τοῦ παντὸς ἀνθρώπων γένους ἐβασίλευσε τὸ γῆς ὁμοῦ καὶ θαλάττης ἀναιψάμενος ἀκονιτι
 8 κράτος; τὰς δὲ φιλοδεσπότους θεραπείας καὶ λειτουργίας τοῦ Ἀβραάμ διασυνίστησιν ἀκροτελεύτιον λογίου τοῦ χρησθέντος αὐτοῦ τῷ υἱεῖ· “ δώσω σοι καὶ τῷ σπέρματί σου πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ταύτην, καὶ ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν τῷ σπέρματί σου πάντα τὰ ἔθνη τῆς γῆς, ἀνθ' ὧν ὑπήκουσεν Ἀβραάμ ὁ πατήρ σου τῆς ἐμῆς φωνῆς, καὶ ἐφύλαξε τὰ προστάγματά μου καὶ τὰς ἐντολάς μου καὶ τὰ δικαιώματά μου καὶ τὰ νόμιμά μου.”
 9 μέγιστον δ' ἐγκώμιον οἰκέτου μηδενὸς ὧν ἂν

WHO IS THE HEIR, 4-9

the organ of speech should be held in check, while the language of the understanding becomes articulate and flows in resistless stream, as its wisdom pours forth beauty after beauty, not of words but of thoughts, with a power as easy as it is sublime. Yet courage 5 and well-timed frankness before our superiors are admirable virtues also, so that there seems to be more truth than comedy in the words of the comic poet,<sup>a</sup>

The servant, trained to keep a quiet tongue ·
Whate'er befalls, is sure to prove a knave.
Grant to thy man some measure of free speech.

II. When, then, is it that the servant 6 speaks frankly to his master? Surely it is when his heart tells him that he has not wronged his owner, but that his words and deeds are all for that owner's benefit. And so when else should the slave of God 7 open his mouth freely to Him Who is the ruler and master both of himself and of the All, save when he is pure from sin and the judgements of his conscience are loyal to his master, when he feels more joy at being the servant of God than if he had been king of all the human race and assumed an uncontested sovereignty over land and sea alike? The loyalty of 8 Abraham's service and ministry is shewn by the concluding words of the oracle addressed to Abraham's son, "I will give to thee and thy seed all this land, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in thy seed, because Abraham thy father hearkened to My voice and kept My injunctions, My commands, My ordinances and My statutes" (Gen. xxvi. 3-5). It is 9 the highest praise which can be given to a servant that he neglects none of his master's commands, that never hesitating in his labour of love he employs all

<sup>a</sup> Menander.

PHILO

- προστάξῃ ὁ δεσπότης ὀλιγωρεῖν, ἀόκνως δὲ καὶ φιλοπόνως ὑπὲρ δύναμιν πάντα σπουδάζειν αἰσίῳ
- 10 γνώμῃ κατορθοῦν. III. εἰσὶ μὲν οὖν, οἷς ἀκούειν ἀλλ' οὐ λέγειν ἐμπρεπές, ἐφ' ὧν λέγεται "σιώπα καὶ ἄκουε," πάγκαλον παρ-ἀγγελημα. θρασύτατον γὰρ καὶ λαλίστατον ἀμαθία, ἧς πρῶτον μὲν ἔστιν ἄκος ἡσυχία, δεύτερον δὲ προσοχὴ τῶν ἀξιόν τι προφερομένων ἀκοῆς.
- 11 μηδεὶς μέντοι νομισάτω τοῦτ' αὐτὸ μόνον ἐμφαίνεσθαι διὰ τοῦ "σιώπα καὶ ἄκουε," ἀλλὰ καὶ προτρέψασθαι δυνατώτερον ἕτερον· οὐ γὰρ παραινεῖ μόνον γλώττῃ σιωπᾶν καὶ ὧσιν ἀκούειν, ἀλλὰ
- 12 καὶ ψυχῇ ταῦτα παθεῖν ἀμφοτέρα. πολλοὶ γὰρ ἐπ' ἀκρόασιν ἤκοντές τινος οὐκ ἐληλύθασιν ταῖς διανοαῖσι, ἀλλ' ἔξω πλανῶνται καὶ μυρία περὶ μυρίων ἑαυτοῖς διεξέρχονται, τὰ συγγενικά, τὰ ὀθνεῖα, τὰ ἴδια, τὰ κοινά,<sup>1</sup> ὧν εἰκὸς ἦν ἐν τῷ παρόντι μὴ μεμνήσθαι, πάνθ' ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν ἐξῆς συναριθμούμενοι, καὶ διὰ τὸν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς πολὺν θροῦν ἀδυνατοῦσι τοῦ λέγοντος ἀκροᾶσθαι· λέγει γὰρ ἐκεῖνος ὥσπερ οὐκ ἐν ἀνθρώποις, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀψύχοις ἀνδριάσιν, οἷς ὧτα μὲν ἔστιν, ἀκοαὶ
- 13 δ' οὐκ ἔνεισιν. εἰάν οὖν μηδενὶ τῶν ἔξωθεν ἐπιφοιτῶντων ἢ ἔνδον ταμιευομένων πραγμάτων ὁ νοῦς ἀξιώσῃ προσομιλεῖν, ἀλλ' ἡρεμίαν ἀγαγὼν καὶ ἡσυχάσας πρὸς τὸν λέγοντα ἑαυτὸν ἀποτείνῃ, σιωπήσας κατὰ τὸ Μωυσέως παρ-ἀγγελημα δυνήσεται μετὰ τῆς πάσης προσοχῆς ἀκροᾶσθαι, ἐτέρως δ' οὐκ ἂν ἰσχύσαι.

<sup>1</sup> Wend. δημόσια: Cohn κοινά: the Papyrus according to Wend. has sex litteras evanidas: the mss. omit altogether. I prefer κοινά as the regular antithesis to ἴδια in Philo.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 9-13

and more than all his powers as he strives by sound judgement to bring all his business to a successful issue.

III. There are indeed some whom it <sup>10</sup> befits to hear but not to speak, those to whom the words apply, "Be silent and hear" (Deut. xxvii. 9). An excellent injunction! For ignorance is exceeding bold and glib of tongue; and the first remedy for it is to hold its peace, the second to give ear to those who advance something worth hearing. Yet let no one <sup>11</sup> suppose that this exhausts the significance of the words "be silent and hear." No, they enjoin something else of greater weight. They bid us not only be silent with the tongue and hear with the ears, but be silent and hear with the soul also. For many <sup>12</sup> who come to hear a discourse have not come with their minds, but wander abroad rehearsing inwardly numberless thoughts on numberless subjects, thoughts on their families, on outsiders, on things private and things public, which properly should be forgotten for the moment. All these, we may say,<sup>a</sup> form a series of successions in the mind, and the inward uproar makes it impossible for them to listen to the speaker, who discourses as in an audience not of human beings, but of lifeless statues who have ears, but no hearing is in those ears.

If then the mind deter- <sup>13</sup> mines to have no dealing with any of the matters which visit it from abroad or are stored within it, but maintaining peace and tranquillity addresses itself to hear the speaker, it will be "silent," as Moses commands, and thus be able to listen with complete attention. Otherwise it will have no such power.

IV. For the ignorant then it is well to <sup>14</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Or "All or practically all," ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν serving, as usual, to qualify a round statement.

PHILO

IV. τοῖς μὲν οὖν ἀμαθέσι συμφέρον ἡσυχία, τοῖς δὲ ἐπιστήμης ἐφιεμένοις καὶ ἅμα φιλοδεσπότηις ἀναγκαιότατον ἢ παρρησία κτήμα. λέγεται γοῦν ἐν Ἐξαγωγῇ: “ κύριος πολεμήσει ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, καὶ ὑμεῖς σιγήσετε,” καὶ χρησμός εὐθύς ὑπόκειται [475] τοιόσδε: “ καὶ εἶπε | κύριος πρὸς Μωυσῆν· τί βοᾷς πρὸς μέ;” ὡς δέον καὶ σιωπᾶν τοὺς μηδὲν ἄξιον ἀκοῆς ἐροῦντας καὶ λέγειν τοὺς ἔρωτι σοφίας θείῳ πεπιστευκότας καὶ μὴ μόνον λέγειν σὺν ἡρεμίᾳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ μετὰ κραυγῆς μείζονος ἐκβοᾶν, οὐ στόματι καὶ γλώττῃ, δι’ ὧν ἄερα λόγος ἔχει σφαιρούμενον αἰσθητὸν ἀκοῇ γίνεσθαι, ἀλλὰ τῷ παμμουσῶ καὶ μεγαλοφωνοτάτῳ ψυχῆς ὀργάνῳ, οὗ θνητὸς μὲν ἀκροατῆς οὐδὲ εἷς, ὁ δὲ 15 ἀγέννητος καὶ ἀφθαρτος μόνος. τὸ γὰρ νοητῆς ἀρμονίας εὐάρμοστον καὶ σύμφωνον μέλος ὁ νοητὸς μουσικὸς μόνος καταλαβεῖν ἱκανός, τῶν δὲ ἐν αἰσθήσει φυρομένων οὐδὲ εἷς. ὅλου δὲ τοῦ διανοίας ὀργάνου κατὰ τὴν διὰ πασῶν ἢ δις διὰ πασῶν συμφωνίαν ἐξηχοῦντος ὁ ἀκροατῆς ὡσανεὶ πυνθάνεται πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐ πυνθανόμενος— πάντα γὰρ γνώριμα θεῷ— “ τί βοᾷς πρὸς μέ;” καθ’ ἰκεσίαν κακῶν ἀποτροπῆς ἢ κατ’ εὐχαριστίαν 16 μετουσίᾳ ἀγαθῶν ἢ κατὰ ἀμφοτέρα; V. λάλος δὲ οὕτως ὁ ἰσχνόφωνος καὶ βραδύγλωσσος καὶ ἄλογος εἶναι δοκῶν ἀνευρίσκεται, ὥστε πῆ μὲν οὐ μόνον λέγων ἀλλὰ καὶ βοῶν εἰσάγεται, ἐτέρωθι δὲ ἀπαύστῳ καὶ ἀδιαστάτῳ χρώμενος λόγων 17 ῥύμη. “ Μωυσῆς ” γάρ φησιν “ ἐλάλει, καὶ ὁ

<sup>a</sup> Or “Why dost thou shout?” But the other is more probably Philo’s interpretation, since he implies that God does not disapprove of Moses’ speaking.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 14-17

keep silence, but for those who desire knowledge and also love their master, frank speech is a most essential possession. Thus we read in Exodus, "The Lord will war for you and ye shall be silent," and at once there follows a divine oracle in these words, "What is it that thou shoutest to me?"<sup>a</sup> (Ex. xiv. 14, 15). The meaning is that those should keep silent who have nothing worth hearing to say, and those should speak who have put their faith in the God-sent love of wisdom, and not only speak with ordinary gentleness but shout with a louder cry. That cry is not made with mouth and tongue, through which, as we are told, the air assumes a spherical<sup>b</sup> shape and thus is rendered perceptible by the sense of hearing, but by the organ of the soul, uniting all music in its mighty tones, heard by no mortal whatsoever, but only by Him Who is uncreated and imperishable. For the 15 sweet and harmonious melody of the mind's music can only be apprehended by the mind's musician, not by any of those who are entangled in sense. But when the full organ of the understanding sounds forth its symphony of the single or double octave, the Hearer asks—asks we may call it, though He does not really ask, since all things are known to God—"What is it that thou criest so loud to me?" Is it in supplication for ills to be averted, or is in thanksgiving for blessings imparted, or in both? V. And he that 16 seemed to be feeble of speech and slow of tongue and wordless is found to be so loquacious, that in one place he is represented as not only speaking, but shouting, and in another as pouring forth a stream of words without cessation or pause. For "Moses," we read, 17 "was talking to God, and God was answering him

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 567.

PHILO

θεὸς ἀπεκρίνετο αὐτῷ φωνῆ,” οὐ κατὰ συντέλειαν ἐλάλησεν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ μηχανομένην παράτασιν ἐλάλει, καὶ ὁ θεὸς οὐ κατὰ συντέλειαν

18 ἐδίδαξεν, ἀλλ’ αἰεὶ καὶ συνεχῶς ἀπεκρίνετο. ὅπου δὲ ἀπόκρισις, ἐκεῖ πάντως ἐρώτησις. ἐρωτᾶ δὲ ἕκαστος ὃ μὴ ἐπίσταται, μαθεῖν ἀξιῶν γνούς τε τῶν εἰς ἐπιστήμην ὠφελιμώτατον ἔργον εἶναι ζητεῖν, ἐρωτᾶν, πυνθάνεσθαι, μηδὲν δοκεῖν εἶδέναι

19 μηδέ τι οἶεσθαι παγίως κατεληφέναι. σοφοὶ μὲν οὖν ὑφηγητῆ καὶ διδασκάλῳ χρῶνται θεῷ, οἱ δ’ ἀτελέστεροι τῷ σοφῷ. διὸ καὶ λέγουσι· “ λάλησον σὺ ἡμῖν, καὶ μὴ λαλείτω πρὸς ἡμᾶς ὁ θεός, μὴ ποτε ἀποθάνωμεν.” τσαύτη δ’ ἄρα χρῆται παρρησία ὁ ἀστείος, ὥστε οὐ μόνον λέγειν καὶ βοᾶν, ἀλλ’ ἤδη καὶ καταβοᾶν ἐξ ἀληθοῦς πίστεως

20 καὶ ἀπὸ γνησίου τοῦ πάθους θαρρεῖ. τὸ γὰρ “ εἰ μὲν ἀφείς αὐτοῖς τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, ἄφες· εἰ δὲ μὴ, ἐξάλειψόν με ἐκ τῆς βίβλου σου ἧς ἔγραψας ” καὶ τὸ “ μὴ ἐγὼ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔλαβον πάντα τὸν λαὸν τοῦτον, ἢ ἐγὼ ἔτεκον αὐτόν, ὅτι λέγεις μοι· λάβε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν κόλπον σου, ὥσει ἄραι τιθηνὸς τὸν θηλάζοντα; ” καὶ τὸ “ πόθεν μοι κρέα δοῦναι παντὶ τῷ λαῷ τούτῳ, ὅτι κλαίουσιν ἐπ’ ἐμοί; μὴ πρόβατα καὶ βόες σφαγήσονται ἢ πᾶν τὸ ὄψος τῆς θαλάσσης συναχθήσεται καὶ ἀρκέσει; ” καὶ

[476] τὸ “ κύριε, διὰ τί | ἐκάκωσας τὸν λαὸν τοῦτον; καὶ ἵνα τί ἀπέσταλκάς με; καὶ ἀφ’ οὗ πεπόρευμαι πρὸς Φαραὼ λαλῆσαι ἐπὶ τῷ σῷ ὀνόματι, ἐκάκωσε

* παρατατικός is the technical term in the Greek grammarians for the imperfect tense. On κατὰ συντέλειαν or συντελικός see App. p. 567.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 17-20

with a voice " (Ex. xix. 19). We do not have the tense of completed action " he talked," but the tense of prolonged and continuous action " he was talking " ; and similarly God did not teach him (as a complete action) but was answering him always and uninterruptedly. Now an answer always pre- 18 supposes a question ; and everyone asks what he does not know, because he thinks it good to learn and is aware that of all the steps which he can take to get knowledge, the most profitable is to seek, to ask questions, to think that he has no knowledge, and not to imagine that he has a firm apprehension of anything. Now wise men take God for their guide and 19 teacher, but the less perfect take the wise man ; and therefore the Children of Israel say " Talk thou to us, and let not God talk to us lest we die " (Ex. xx. 19).

But the man of worth has such courage of speech, that he is bold not only to speak and cry aloud, but actually to make an outcry of reproach, wrung from him by real conviction, and expressing true emotion. Take the words " if Thou wilt forgive them their sin, 20 forgive them ; but if not, blot me out of the book which Thou hast written " (Ex. xxxii. 32) ; and " Did I conceive all this people in the womb, or did I bring them forth, because Thou sayest unto me, ' take them to thy bosom, as a nurse lifts the suckling ' ? " (Num. xi. 12) ; or again " Whence shall I get flesh to give to this people, because they weep against me ? Shall sheep and oxen be slaughtered, or all the meat that is in the sea be collected and suffice ? " (Num. xi. 13, 22). Or " Lord, why hast Thou afflicted this people and why hast Thou sent me ? And ever since I went to Pharoah to speak in Thy name, he has afflicted the people, and Thou hast not saved

PHILO

- τὸν λαόν, καὶ οὐκ ἐρρύσω τὸν λαόν σου," ταῦτα γὰρ καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἔδεισεν ἄν τις καὶ πρὸς ἓνα τῶν ἐν μέρει βασιλέων εἰπεῖν· ὁ δ' ἀποφαίνεσθαι
- 21 καὶ πρὸς θεὸν ἐθάρρησεν. τοῦτο δ' ἄρα πέρας ἦν οὐ τόλμης ἀπλῶς, ἀλλ' εὐτολμίας αὐτῷ, διότι οἱ σοφοὶ πάντες φίλοι θεοῦ, καὶ μάλιστα κατὰ τὸν ἱερώτατον νομοθέτην. παρρησία δὲ φιλίας συγγενές· ἐπεὶ πρὸς τίνα ἄν τις ἢ πρὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ φίλον παρρησιάσαιο; παγκάλως οὖν ἐν τοῖς χρησμοῖς φίλος ἄδεται Μωυσῆς, ἵν' ὅσα ἐπὶ θάρσει παρακεκινδυνευμένα διεξέρχεται φιλία μάλλον ἢ αὐθαδεία προφέρεσθαι δοκῇ. θρασύτης μὲν γὰρ αὐθάδους, φίλου δὲ θαρραλεότης οἰκείον.
- 22 VI. Ἄλλὰ σκόπει πάλιν, ὅτι εὐλαβεία τὸ θαρρεῖν ἀνακέκραται. τὸ μὲν γὰρ "τί μοι δώσεις;" θάρσος ἐμφαίνει, τὸ δὲ "δέσποτα" εὐλάβειαν. εἰωθὼς δὲ χρῆσθαι μάλιστα διτταῖς ἐπὶ τοῦ αἰτίου προσρήσει, τῇ θεὸς καὶ τῇ κύριος, οὐδετέραν νῦν παρείληφεν, ἀλλὰ τὴν δεσπότην, λίαν εὐλαβῶς καὶ σφόδρα κυρίως· καίτοι συνώνυμα ταῦτ' εἶναι
- 23 λέγεται, κύριος καὶ δεσπότης. ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ τὸ ὑποκείμενον ἐν καὶ ταῦτόν ἐστιν, ἐπινοίαις αἱ κλήσεις διαφέρουσι· κύριος μὲν γὰρ παρὰ τὸ κῦρος, ὁ δὲ βέβαιόν ἐστιν, εἴρηται, κατ' ἐναντιό-τητα ἀβεβαίου καὶ ἀκύρου, δεσπότης δὲ παρὰ τὸν δεσμόν, ἀφ' οὗ τὸ δέος οἶμαι—ὥστε τὸν δεσπότην κύριον εἶναι καὶ ἔτι ὡσανεὶ φοβερὸν κύριον, οὐ μόνον τὸ κῦρος καὶ τὸ κράτος ἀνημμένον ἀπάντων, ἀλλὰ καὶ δέος καὶ φόβον ἱκανὸν ἐμποιῆσαι—
- 294

WHO IS THE HEIR, 20-23

Thy people" (Ex. v. 22, 23). Anyone would have feared to say these or like words, even to one of the kings of particular kingdoms; yet he had the courage to utter these thoughts to God. He reached this <sup>21</sup> limit, I will not say of daring in general but of good daring, because all the wise are friends of God, and particularly so in the judgement of the most holy law-giver. Frankness of speech is akin to friendship. For to whom should a man speak with frankness but to his friend? And so most excellent is it, that in the oracles Moses is proclaimed the friend of God (Ex. xxxiii. 11), to shew that all the audacities of his bold discourse were uttered in friendship, rather than in presumption. For the audacity of rashness belongs to the presumptuous, the audacity of courage or confidence to a friend.

VI. But observe on the other hand that confidence <sup>22</sup> is blended with caution. For while the words "What wilt thou give me" (Gen. xv. 2) shew confidence, "Master," shews caution. While Moses usually employs two titles in speaking of the Cause, namely God and Lord, here he uses neither, but substitutes "Master." In this he shews great caution and exactness in the use of terms. It is true that "Lord" and "Master" are said to be synonyms. But though one and the same thing <sup>23</sup> is denoted by both, the connotations of the two titles are different. Κύριος (Lord) is derived from κῦρος (power) which is a thing secure and is the opposite of insecure and invalid (ἄκυρος), while δεσπότης (master) is from δεσμός (bond) from which I believe comes δέος (fear). Thus δεσπότης is a lord and something more, a terrible lord so to speak, one who is not only invested with the lordship and sovereignty of all things, but is also capable of inspiring fear and

PHILO

τάχα μέντοι καὶ ἐπειδὴ τῶν ὄλων δεσμός<sup>1</sup> ἐστὶ συνέχων αὐτὰ ἅλυστα καὶ σφίγγων διαλυτὰ ὄντα<sup>2</sup> 24 ἐξ ἑαυτῶν. ὁ δὲ φάσκων “δέσποτα, τί μοι δώσεις” δυνάμει ταῦτα διεξέρχεται· οὐκ ἀγνωῶ σου τὸ ὑπερβάλλον κράτος, ἐπίσταμαι τὸ φοβερόν τῆς δυναστείας, δεδιώς καὶ τρέμων 25 ἐντυγχάνω καὶ πάλιν θαρρῶ· σὺ γὰρ ἐθέσπισάς μοι μὴ φοβεῖσθαι, σύ μοι γλώσσαν παιδείας ἔδωκας τοῦ γινῶναι ἡνίκα δεῖ φθέγγασθαι, σὺ τὸ στόμα ἀπερραμμένον ἐξέλυσας, σὺ διοίξας ἐπὶ πλεόν ἤρθρωσας, σὺ τὰ λεκτέα συνεβίβασας εἰπεῖν τὸν χρησμόν βεβαιούμενος ἐκεῖνον· “ἐγὼ ἀνοιξῶ τὸ στόμα σου, καὶ συμβιβάσω σε ἃ μέλλεις [477] | λαλήσειν.” τίς γὰρ ἐγενόμην, ἵνα σύ μοι
 26 λόγου μεταδῶς, ἵνα μισθὸν ὁμολογήης, χάριτος καὶ δωρεᾶς ἀγαθὸν τελεώτερον; οὐ τῆς πατρίδος εἰμι μετανάστης; οὐ τῆς συγγενείας ἀπελήλαμαι; οὐ τῆς πατρώας οἰκίας ἠλλοτριῶμαι; οὐκ ἀπο-κήρυκτον καὶ φυγάδα πάντες ἔρημον καὶ ἄτιμον 27 ὀνομάζουσιν; ἀλλὰ σύ μοι, δέσποτα, ἢ πατρίς, σὺ ἢ συγγένεια, σὺ ἢ πατρῶα ἐστία, σὺ ἢ ἐπιτιμία, ἢ παρρησία, ὁ μέγας καὶ ἀοίδιμος καὶ ἀναφ-28 αῖρετος πλοῦτος. διὰ τί οὖν οὐχὶ θαρρήσω λέγειν φρονῶ; διὰ τί δ’ οὐ πεύσομαι μαθεῖν τι πλεόν ἃ ἀξιῶν; ἀλλ’ ὁ λέγων ἐγὼ θαρρεῖν πάλιν ὁμο-λογῶ δεδιέναι καὶ καταπεπλήχθαι, καὶ οὐκ ἔχει τὴν ἄμικτον ἐν ἐμοὶ μάχην φόβος τε καὶ θάρσος, ὡς ἴσως ὑπολήψεται τις, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀνακεκρα-29 μένην συμφωνίαν. ἀπλήστως οὖν εὐωχοῦμαι τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δεσπότης; Pap. δεσμων.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. (and Pap.) διαλύοντα.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 567.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 23-29

terror ; perhaps too, since he is the bond of all things, one who holds them together indissolubly and binds them fast, when in themselves they are dissoluble.

He who says, " Master, what wilt thou 24 give me ? " virtually says no less than this, " I am not ignorant of Thy transcendent sovereignty ; I know the terrors of Thy power ; I come before Thee in fear and trembling, and yet again I am confident. For Thou hast vouchsafed to bid me fear not ; Thou 25 hast given me a tongue of instruction that I should know when I should speak (Isaiah l. 4),<sup>a</sup> my mouth that was knitted up Thou hast unsewn, and when Thou hadst opened it, Thou didst strengthen its nerves for speech ; Thou hast taught me to say what should be said, confirming the oracle ' I will open thy mouth and teach thee what thou shalt speak ' (Ex. iv. 12). For who was I, that Thou shouldst impart speech to 26 me, that Thou shouldst promise me something which stood higher in the scale of goods than ' gift ' or grace, even a ' reward '. Am I not a wanderer from my country, an outcast from my kinsfolk, an alien from my father's house ? Do not all men call me excommunicate, exile, desolate, disfranchised ? But 27 Thou, Master, art my country, my kinsfolk, my paternal hearth, my franchise, my free speech, my great and glorious and inalienable wealth. Why 28 then shall I not take courage to say what I feel ? Why shall I not inquire of Thee and claim to learn something more ? Yet I, who proclaim my confidence, confess in turn my fear and consternation, and still the fear and the confidence are not at war within me in separate camps, as one might suppose, but are blended in a harmony. I find then a feast 29 which does not cloy in this blending, which has

PHILO

κράματος, ὃ με ἀναπέπεικε μήτε ἄνευ εὐλαβείας παρρησιάζεσθαι μήτε ἀπαρρησιάστως εὐλαβεῖσθαι. τὴν γὰρ οὐδένειαν τὴν ἑμαυτοῦ μετρεῖν ἔμαθον καὶ τὰς ἐν ὑπερβολαῖς ἀκρότητας τῶν σῶν εὐεργεσιῶν περιβλέπεσθαι· καὶ ἐπειδὴν “ γῆν καὶ τέφραν ” καὶ εἴ τι ἐκβλητότερον ἑμαυτὸν αἰσθωμαί, τηνικαῦτα ἐντυγχάνειν σοι θαρρῶ, ταπεινὸς γεγονώς, καταβεβλημένος εἰς χοῦν, ὅσα εἰς γε τὸ μηδ’ ὑφεστάναι δοκεῖν ἀνεστοιχειωμένος.

- 30 VII. καὶ τοῦτό μου τὸ πάθος τῆς ψυχῆς ἐστηλογράφησεν ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ μνημείῳ ὁ ἐπίσκοπος Μωυσῆς. “ ἐγγίσας ” γὰρ φησιν “ Ἀβραὰμ εἶπε· νῦν ἠρξάμην λαλῆσαι πρὸς τὸν κύριον, ἐγὼ δὲ εἰμι γῆ καὶ σποδός, ” ἐπειδὴ τότε καιρὸς ἐντυγχάνειν γένεσιν τῷ πεποιηκότι, ὅτε τὴν ἑαυτῆς
- 31 οὐδένειαν ἔγνωκεν. τὸ δὲ “ τί μοι δώσεις; ” οὐκ ἀποροῦντός ἐστι φωνὴ μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπὶ τῷ πλήθει καὶ μεγέθει ὧν ἀπήλαυκεν ἀγαθῶν εὐχαριστοῦντος. “ τί μοι δώσεις; ” ἔτι γὰρ ἀπολείπεται τι πλέον προσδοκῆσαι; ἄφθονοι μὲν, ὧ φιλόδωρε, αἱ σαὶ χάριτες καὶ ἀπερίγραφοι καὶ ὄρον ἢ τελευτὴν οὐκ ἔχουσαι, πηγῶν τρόπον πλείω<sup>1</sup>
- 32 τῶν ἀπαντλουμένων ἀνομβροῦσαι. σκοπεῖν δὲ ἄξιον οὐ μόνον τὸν αἰεὶ πλημμυροῦντα χειμάρρουν τῶν σῶν εὐεργεσιῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ἀρδομένας ἡμῶν ἀρούρας· εἰ γὰρ περιττὸν ἀναχυθείη τὸ ρεῦμα, λιμνῶδες καὶ τελματῶδες ἀντὶ καρποφόρου γῆς ἔσται τὸ πεδίον. πρὸς εὐφορίαν οὖν<sup>2</sup> μεμετρημένης, ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἀμέτρου δεῖ τῆς ἐπιρ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τελείων (Pap.?).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. γὰρ (some with Pap. οὐ).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 29-32

schooled my speech to be neither bold without caution, nor cautious without boldness. For I have learnt to measure my own nothingness, and to gaze with wonder on the transcendent heights of Thy loving-kindnesses. And when I perceive that I am earth and cinders or whatever is still more worthless, it is just then that I have confidence to come before Thee, when I am humbled, cast down to the clay, reduced to such an elemental state,<sup>a</sup> as seems not even to exist.

VII. And the watchful 30 pen of Moses has recorded this my soul's condition in his memorial of me. For Abraham, he says, drew near and said, ' Now I have begun to speak to the Lord, and I am earth and ashes ' (Gen. xviii. 27), since it is just when he knows his own nothingness that the creature should come into the presence of his Maker. The words ' What wilt Thou give me ? ' 31 are the cry not so much of uncertainty as of thankfulness for the multitude and greatness of the blessings which one has enjoyed. ' What wilt Thou give me ? ' he says. Is there aught still left for me to expect ? Lavish indeed, Thou bounteous God, are Thy gifts of grace, illimitable without boundary or end, welling up like fountains to replace and more than replace what we draw. But we should look not only 32 to the ever-flowing torrent of Thy loving-kindnesses but also to the fields—they are ourselves—which are watered by them. For if the stream pour forth in over-abundance, the plain will be marshy and fenny, instead of fruitful soil. I need then that the inflow on me should be in due measure for fertility, not un-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 567.

PHILO

- 33 ροῆς ἐμοί. διὸ πεύσομαι “ τί μοι δώσεις ” ἀμύθητα δοὺς καὶ σχεδὸν πάντα ὅσα θνητὴν φύσιν [478] χωρῆσαι | δυνατὸν ἦν; ὁ γὰρ λοιπὸν ἐπιζητῶ μαθεῖν τε καὶ κτήσασθαι,<sup>1</sup> τοῦτ’ ἐστίν, τίς ἂν γένοιτο ἄξιος τῶν σῶν εὐεργεσιῶν [καὶ] κληρο-34 νόμος. ἢ “ ἐγὼ ἀπολυθήσομαι ἄτεκνος,” ὀλιγοχρόνιον καὶ ἐφήμερον καὶ ὠκύμορον λαβὼν ἀγαθόν, εὐχόμενος τούναντίον, πολυήμερον καὶ μακροχρόνιον καὶ ἀκήρατον καὶ ἀθάνατον, ὡς δυνηθῆναι καὶ σπέρματα βαλέσθαι καὶ ρίζας ἐχυρότητος ἔνεκα ἀποτεῖναι καὶ ἄνω πρὸς οὐρανὸν 35 τὸ στέλεχος ἀνεγείρον μετεωρίσαι; τὴν γὰρ ἀνθρωπίνην ἀρετὴν βαίνειν μὲν ἐπὶ γῆς, φθάνειν δὲ πρὸς οὐρανὸν ἀναγκαῖον, ἵν’ ἐκεῖ τῆς ἀφθαρσίας 36 ἔστιαθεῖσα τὸν αἰεὶ χρόνον ἀπήμων διαμένη. ἄ-τεκνον γὰρ καὶ στείραν οἶδ’ ὅτι ψυχὴν ὁ τὰ μὴ ὄντα φέρων καὶ τὰ πάντα γεννῶν μεμίσηκας, ἐπεὶ καὶ χάριν ἔδωκας ἐξαίρετον τῷ διορατικῷ γένει τὸ μηδέποτε στερηθῆναι καὶ ἀτοκῆσαι, ᾧ καὶ αὐτὸς προσνεμηθεὶς ἐφίεμαι κληρονόμου δικαίως. ἄ-σβεστον γὰρ αὐτὸ καταθεώμενος αἰσχιστον εἶναι νομίζω τὴν ἔμαντοῦ ἔφεσιν<sup>2</sup> τοῦ καλοῦ περιδεῖν 37 καταλυθεῖσαν. ἰκέτης οὖν γίνομαι καὶ ποτινώμαι, ἵνα σπερμάτων καὶ ἐμπυρευμάτων ὑποτυφομένων τὸ ἀρετῆς ἀνακαίηται καὶ ἀναφλέγηται σωτήριον φέγγος, ὃ λαμπαδεύομενον ἐπαλλήλοις διαδοχαῖς 38 ἰσοχρόνιον γενήσεται κόσμῳ. ζῆλον καὶ τοῖς ἀσκητικοῖς ἔδωκας τέκνων τῶν ψυχῆς σπορᾶς

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἐπιζητῶ τέκνον κτήσασθαι (Pap. μανειν τε και?).

<sup>2</sup> My correction for mss. and Pap. φύσιν; see App. p. 567.
 But another, and possibly preferable, solution would be τοῦ <φιλο>κάλου agreeing with ἔμαντοῦ.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 33-38

measured. Therefore I will ask 'What wilt Thou 33 give me?' Thou whose gifts have been countless, almost to the very sum of what human nature can contain. For all that I still seek to learn and to gain is but this 'Who should be a worthy heir of thy benefits?' Or shall I go hence child- 34 less (Gen. xv. 2), the recipient of a boon shortlived, dying with the day, passing swiftly to its doom; I, who pray for the opposite, a boon of many days and years, proof against decay or death, so that it can lay the seed and extend the roots, which shall make the growth secure, and raise and uplift the stalk heaven-wards. For man's excellence must not tread the 35 earth, but press upwards to heaven, that it may banquet there on incorruption and remain unscathed for ever. For I know that Thou, who givest<sup>a</sup> being 36 to what is not and generatest all things, hast hated the childless and barren soul, since Thou hast given as a special grace to the race of them that see that they should never be without children or sterile.
 And I myself having been made a member of that race justly desire an heir. For when I contemplate the race's security from extinction, I hold it a deep disgrace to leave my own desire of excellence to come to naught. Therefore I beseech and suppli- 37 cate that out of the smouldering tinder and embers the saving light of virtue may burn up with full flame and carried on as in the torch-race by un failing succession may be coeval with the world. Also in the 38 votaries of practice Thou hast implanted a zeal to sow and beget the children of the soul, and when they

<sup>a</sup> A curious use of φέρω, but paralleled by De Mut. 192
τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς φέροντι καὶ αὔξοντι καὶ πληροῦντι καρποῦς θεῶ;
cf. ibid. 256.

PHILO

- καὶ γενέσεως, καὶ μοιραθέντες ὑφ' ἡδονῆς ἐξελάλησαν εἰπόντες· “ τὰ παιδία οἷς ἠλέησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν παῖδά σου,” ὧν ἀκακία καὶ τροφὸς καὶ τιθήνη, ὧν ἄβατοι καὶ ἀπαλαὶ καὶ εὐφυεῖς ψυχαί, τῶν ἀρετῆς παγκάλων καὶ θεοειδεστάτων εὐπαρά-39 δεκτοὶ χαρακτήρων. δίδαξον δέ με κάκεινο, εἰ “ ὁ υἱὸς Μασέκ τῆς οἰκογενοῦς μου ” τῶν σῶν χαρίτων ἱκανὸς γενέσθαι κληρονόμος ἐστίν. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἄχρι νῦν τὸν μὲν ἐλπίζόμενον οὐκ ἔλαβον, ὃν δ' ἔλαβον, οὐκ ἐλπίζω.
- 40 VIII. Τίς δὲ ἡ Μασέκ καὶ τίς αὐτῆς ὁ υἱός, οὐ παρέργως ἐπισκεπτέον. ἐρμηνεύεται τοίνυν Μασέκ ἐκ φιλήματος. φίλημα δὲ διαφέρει τοῦ φιλεῖν· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ψυχῶν ἔνωσιν ἀρμοζομένων εὐνοία, τὸ δὲ ἐπιπόλαιον καὶ ψιλὴν δεξιῶσιν χρείας τινὸς εἰς 41 ταῦτ' οὐ συναγαγούσης ἔοικεν ἐμφαίνειν. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν τῷ ἀνακύπτει οὐκ ἔστι τὸ κύπτει οὐδ' ἐν τῷ καταπίνειν ἦν πάντως τὸ πίνειν οὐδ' ἐν μαρσίππῳ ὁ ἵππος, οὕτως οὐδ' ἐν τῷ καταφιλεῖν τὸ φιλεῖν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τῶν ἐχθρῶν μυρίους εἰκοντές τινες ταῖς
 42 τοῦ βίου χαλεπαῖς ἀνάγκαις δεξιούνται. τίς οὖν ἐστὶν ἢ ἐκ φιλήματος ἀλλὰ μὴ ἐξ ἀψευδοῦς φιλίας ἡμῖν συσταθεῖσα, φράσω μηδὲν ὑποστειλάμενος· ἢ
 [479] ζῶν ἢ σὺν αἰσθήσει, ἢ πᾶσιν ὠχυρωμένη, | ἢς ἀνέραστος οὐδεὶς, ἦν δέσποιναν μὲν οἱ πολλοί, θεράπωναν δὲ οἱ ἀστείοι νομίζουσιν, οὐκ ἀλλόφυλον ἢ ἀργυρώνητον, ἀλλ' οἰκογενῆ καὶ τρόπον

<sup>a</sup> A reminiscence of Plato, Phaedrus 245 A. See note on 249.

<sup>b</sup> Philo curiously ignores the quite common use of φιλεῖν = to kiss. Possibly it may have carried with it the idea of a kiss given in true affection, which was absent in the compound.

are thus endowed they have cried out in their pleasure, 'The children, wherewith Thou hast shewn mercy to Thy servant' (Gen. xxxiii. 5). Of such children innocence is the nurse and fostermother; their souls are virgin and tender and rich in nature's gifts,<sup>a</sup> ready to receive the glorious and divine impressions of virtue's graving. Tell me this too, 39 whether the son of Masek, she who was born in my house, is fit to become the heir of thy gifts of grace. For till now I have not received him whom I hope for, and he, whom I have received, is not the heir of my hopes."

VIII. Who Masek and her son are is a matter for 40 careful consideration. Well, the name Masek is interpreted "From a kiss." Now "kiss" is not the same as "loving." The latter appears to signify the uniting of souls which goodwill joins together, the former merely the bare superficial salutation, which passes when some occasion has caused a meeting. For just as in ἀνακύπτειν (rising up) there 41 is no idea of κύπτειν (stooping) nor in καταπίνειν (swallowing) the whole idea of πίνειν (drinking), nor in μάρσιππος (pouch) that of ἵππος (horse), so neither in καταφιλεῖν (kissing) do we have φιλεῖν (loving).<sup>b</sup> For people bowing to the hard necessities of life in hundreds of cases greet their enemies thus. Who then she is, with whom we are brought into 42 contact "from" or "in consequence of a kiss," and not from true friendship, I will shew without disguise. It is the life of the senses, the assured possession of us all, for which all have a feeling of affection. The multitude regard her as a mistress, the good as their servant, not a servant of alien race or purchased with money, but homeborn and in a

PHILO

- τινὰ ὁμόφυλον. οὗτοι καὶ πεπαίδευνται καταφιλεῖν αὐτήν, οὐ φιλεῖν, ἐκείνοι δὲ ὑπερφυῶς ἀγαπᾶν 43 καὶ τριπόθητον ἡγεῖσθαι. Λάβαν δ' ὁ μισάρετος οὐδὲ καταφιλήσαι δυνήσεται τὰς προσ-κекληρωμένας τῷ ἀσκητικῷ δυνάμεις, ἀλλ' ὑποκρίσεως καὶ ψευδῶν πλασμάτων ἀνηρηκῶς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ βίον, ὡσανεὶ δυσχεραίνων, οὐ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀλγῶν, φησίν· “οὐκ ἠξιώθη καταφιλήσαι τὰ παιδιά μου καὶ τὰς θυγατέρας.” εἰκότως γε καὶ προσηκόντως· εἰρωνείαν γὰρ μισεῖν ἀκαταλλάκτως 44 ἐπαιδεύθημεν. ἀγάπησον οὖν ἀρετὰς καὶ ἄσπασαι ψυχῇ τῇ σεαυτοῦ καὶ φίλησον ὄντως, καὶ ἡκιστα βουλήσῃ τὸ φιλίας παράκομμα ποιεῖν, καταφιλεῖν.
 “μὴ γάρ ἐστιν αὐταῖς ἔτι μερὶς ἢ κληρονομία ἐν τῷ σῶ οἴκῳ; οὐχ ὡς αἱ ἀλλότριαι ἐλογίσθησαν παρὰ σοί; ἢ οὐ πέπρακας αὐτάς, καὶ κατέφαγες τὸ ἀργύριον,” ἵνα μηδὲ εἰσαυθίς ἀνακομίσασθαι δυνηθῆς τὰ σώστρα, καὶ τὰ λύτρα κατεδηδοκῶς; προσποιοῦ νῦν βούλεσθαι καταφιλεῖν ὁ πᾶσι τοῖς κριταῖς ἄσπονδος. ἀλλ' οὐ γαμβρόν<sup>1</sup> καταφιλήσει Μωυσῆς, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ γνησίου τοῦ ψυχῆς πάθους φιλήσει· “ἐφίλησε” γάρ φησιν “αὐτόν, καὶ ἠσπάσαντο ἀλλήλους.”
- 45 IX. ζωῆς δὲ τριττὸν γένος, τὸ μὲν πρὸς θεόν, τὸ δὲ πρὸς γένεσιν, τὸ δὲ μεθόριον, μικτὸν ἀμφοῖν.
 τὸ μὲν οὖν πρὸς θεὸν οὐ κατέβη πρὸς ἡμᾶς οὐδὲ ἦλθεν εἰς τὰς σώματος ἀνάγκας. τὸ δὲ πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey and Wend.: mss. and Pap. Ἀαρὼν. It may be questioned whether this is not what Philo wrote, by confusing Ex. xviii. 7 with iv. 27, where Moses meets Aaron (συνῆμνησεν αὐτῷ . . . καὶ κατεφίλησαν ἀλλήλους).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 42-45

sense a kinswoman. The wise have been trained to greet her with a kiss, but not to love her, the others to love her deeply and regard her worthy of a triple measure of their affection. Now 43

Laban the virtue-hater will not be able even to kiss the qualities which are allotted to the Man of Practice. Still since he has made hypocrisy and false inventions the cardinal principle of his life, he says, as though in dudgeon, though he has no real grief, "I was not held worthy to kiss my children and my daughters" (Gen. xxxi. 28). The refusal of the kiss is natural and proper. For we the children have been trained to hate dissimulation, with a hatred that refuses all dealing. Hold then the virtues dear, 44 embrace them with thy soul and love them truly, and thou wilt never desire to be the maker of that travesty of friendship, the kiss. "Have they, we shall say, any part or inheritance in your home? Were they not counted as aliens in your sight, or have you not sold them and devoured the money?" (Gen. xxxi. 14, 15). You devoured the price of their redemption, lest you should ever again be able to buy them back. And now you pretend to wish to kiss them, you in the judgement of all their deadly foe.

Moses on the other hand will not kiss his father-in-law, but loves him with genuine heart-felt affection. For "he loved him" we read "and they greeted each other" (Ex. xviii. 7).

IX. Now there are three kinds of life, 45 one looking Godwards, another looking to created things, another on the border-line, a mixture of the other two. The God-regarding life has never come down to us, nor submitted to the constraints of the body. The life that looks to creation has never risen γένεσιν οὐδ' ὅλως ἀνέβη οὐδ' ἐζήτησεν ἀναβῆναι, φωλεῦον δὲ ἐν μυχοῖς Ἰαίδου τῷ ἀβιώτῳ βίῳ 46 χαίρει. τὸ δὲ μικτόν ἐστιν, ὃ πολλάκις μὲν ὑπὸ τῆς ἀμείνονος ἀγόμενον τάξεως θειάζει καὶ θεο-φορεῖται, πολλάκις δ' ὑπὸ τῆς χείρονος ἀντισπώμενον ἐπιστρέφει. τοῦθ', ὅταν ὡσπερ ἐπὶ πλάστιγγος ἢ τῆς κρείττονος ζωῆς μοῖρα τοῖς ὅλοις βρίσῃ, συνεπισπασθὲν τὸ τῆς ἐναντίας ζωῆς<sup>1</sup> βάρος 47 κουφότατον ἄχθος ἀπέφηγε. Μωυσῆς δὲ τὸ τῆς πρὸς θεὸν ζωῆς γένος ἀκουτι στεφανώσας εἰς ἐπίκρισιν τὰ λοιπὰ ἄγει δυσὶν ἀπεικάζων γυναιξίν, ὧν τὴν μὲν ἀγαπωμένην, τὴν δὲ μισουμένην καλεῖ 48 προσφυέστατα θεῖς ὀνόματα. τίς γὰρ οὐ τὰς δι' ὀφθαλμῶν, τίς δ' οὐ τὰς δι' ὠτῶν, τίς δ' οὐ τὰς διὰ γεύσεως ὀσφρήσεώς τε καὶ ἀφῆς ἡδονὰς καὶ τέρψεις ἀποδέχεται; τίς δ' οὐ τὰ ἐναντία με-μίσηκεν, ὀλιγοδείαν, ἐγκράτειαν, αὐστηρὸν καὶ ἐπι-στημονικὸν βίον, γέλωτος καὶ παιδιᾶς ἀμέτοχον, [480] συννοίας καὶ | φροντίδων καὶ πόνων μεστόν, φίλον τοῦ θεωρεῖν, ἀμαθίας ἐχθρόν, χρημάτων μὲν καὶ δόξης καὶ ἡδονῶν κρείττω, ἤττω δὲ σωφροσύνης καὶ εὐκλείας καὶ βλέποντος οὐ τυφλοῦ πλούτου;

PHILO

 πρεσβύτερα μὲν οὖν αἰεὶ τὰ γεννήματα 49 τῆς μισουμένης ἀρετῆς. X. ὁ δὲ Μωυσῆς, εἰ καὶ νεώτερα χρόνῳ, [καὶ] ταῦτα φύσει πρεσβεῖων ἀξιοῖ

<sup>1</sup> Pap. between ζωῆς and βάρος inserts αντηεν. May this perhaps stand for Ἰανταίειον? The myth of Antaeus, who became helpless when lifted by Heracles from the ground, would suit the parable well. Cf. Σισύφειος De Cher. 78, Ταντάλειος below, §269. It is true of course that these stories were far better known than that of Antaeus.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 45-49

at all nor sought to rise, but makes its lair in the recesses of Hades and rejoices in a form of living, which is not worth the pains. It is the mixed life,<sup>a</sup> which 46 often drawn on by those of the higher line is possessed and inspired by God, though often pulled back by the worse it reverses its course. And when the better life placed as a weight on the scales completely preponderates, the mixed life carried with it makes the opposite life seem light as air in the balance. Now 47 Moses while he gives the crown of undisputed victory to the Godward kind of life, brings the other two into comparison by likening them to two women, one of whom he calls the beloved and the other the hated. These names are very suitable, for who does not look 48 with favour on the pleasures and delights that come through the eyes, or the ears, or through taste and smell and touch? Who has not hated the opposites of these?—frugality, temperance, the life of austerity and knowledge, which has no part in laughter and sport, which is full of anxiety and cares and toils, the friend of contemplation, the enemy of ignorance, which puts under its feet money and mere reputation and pleasure, but is mastered by self-restraint and true glory and the wealth which is not blind but sees.

Now the children of virtue, the hated one, are always the senior. X. And Moses holds them 49 to be by their nature worthy of the rights of the senior, even though they be younger in point of that of the ἀσκητής in De Som. i. 151, who is midway between the wise who live in the Olympian region and the bad who live in the recesses of Hades. In fact the "mixed" seems to represent the ordinary virtuous man (ὁ προκόπτων), and in the sequel is equated to the Hated Wife and to Leah, both of whom regularly represent Virtue. For the last part of the sentence see App. p. 568.

PHILO

τὰ διπλᾶ διδούς, τῶν δὲ ἀφαιρῶν τὴν ἡμίσειαν. ἔαν γὰρ γένωνται, φησίν, ἀνθρώπῳ δύο γυναῖκες, ἡγαπημένη καὶ μισουμένη, καὶ τέκωσιν ἀμφοτέραι, μέλλων τὰ ἑαυτοῦ διανέμειν οὐ δυνήσεται πρεσβείων ἀξιῶσαι τὸν υἱὸν τῆς ἡγαπημένης, ἡδονῆς, — νέος γὰρ οὗτος, εἰ καὶ χρόνῳ πολὺς<sup>1</sup> γένοιτο, — ἀλλὰ τὸν τῆς μισουμένης, φρονήσεως, πρεσβύτερον ἐκ παίδων εὐθὺς ὄντα, ὡς διμοιρίαν ἀπονεύμαι.

50 τὴν δὲ τροπικωτέραν τούτων ἀπόδοσιν ἐν ἑτέροις εἰρηκότες ἐπὶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα τῶν ἐν χερσὶ τρεψώμεθα ἐκεῖνο προὑποδείξαντες, ὅτι τῆς μισουμένης ὁ θεὸς λέγεται τὴν μήτραν διοίξας γένεσιν ἀστείων ἐπιτηδευμάτων καὶ καλῶν ἔργων ἀνατεῖλαι, τῆς φιλεῖ-

51 σθαι νομιζομένης αὐτίκα στειρουμένης. “ἰδὼν” γὰρ φησι “κύριος ὅτι μισεῖται Λεῖα, ἤνοιξε τὴν μήτραν αὐτῆς· Ῥαχὴλ δὲ ἦν στεῖρα.” ἄρ’ οὐχ ὅταν ἡ ψυχὴ κυοφορῇ καὶ τίκτειν ἄρχηται τὰ ψυχῇ πρόποντα, τηνικαῦτα ὅσα αἰσθητὰ στειρούμενα ἀτοκεῖ, οἷς πρόσεστιν ἢ ἐκ φιλήματος ἀλλ’ οὐχ ἢ διὰ γνησίου φιλίας ἀποδοχῆ; XI.

52 ταύτης οὖν τῆς κατ’ αἴσθησιν ζωῆς, ἣν καλεῖ Μασέκ, υἱὸς ἕκαστος ἡμῶν ἐστι τιμῶν καὶ θαυμάζων τὴν τροφὸν καὶ τιθήνην τοῦ θνητοῦ γένους, αἴσθησιν, ἣν καὶ ὁ γῆνιος νοῦς, ὄνομα Ἀδάμ, ἰδὼν διαπλασθεῖσαν τὸν ἑαυτοῦ θάνατον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παλαιὸς (Pap. παλιος).

<sup>a</sup> Or, if the καί, is retained, “And if any be younger in point of years, even them too in virtue of their nature does Moses hold worthy,” etc. In this case ταῦτα, and consequently the text quoted from Deuteronomy, is restricted to the νεώτερα χρόνῳ. Philo implies, what he actually argues

WHO IS THE HEIR, 49-52

years,<sup>a</sup> for he gives them the double portion, and takes from the others their half-share. "For if a man," he says, "has two wives, one beloved and one hated, and both bear him children, when he purposes to divide his possessions, he shall not be able to adjudge the elder's rights to the son of the beloved (that is, of Pleasure) for he is but 'young,' even if years have made him grey-headed, but to the son of Prudence, the hated wife, the son who from earliest childhood is an 'elder,' he must give these rights and thus assign to him a double portion" (Deut. xxi. 15-17). Now we have given the allegorical inter- 50 pretation of this more closely elsewhere<sup>b</sup> and therefore let us turn to the next part of our theme. One thing however we must first point out, namely that we are told that God by opening the womb of the hated wife brought to its rising the birth of worthy practices and excellent deeds, while she, who was thought to be beloved, immediately became barren. For "the Lord" it runs "seeing that Leah is hated 51 opened her womb, but Rachel was barren" (Gen. xxix. 31). Is it not just then, when the soul is pregnant and begins to bear what befits a soul, that all objects of sense become barren and incapable of child-bearing, those objects which find acceptance with us "from the kiss" and not through genuine friendship. XI. This life of the senses, then, which he calls 52 Masek, has for her son each one among us who honours and admires the nurse and foster-mother of our mortal race, that is Sense, on whose just-fashioned form the earthly mind, called Adam, looked and gave in De Sobr. 22, that the words of Deut. make the son of the Beloved to be, in the literal sense, the elder.

<sup>b</sup> In Leg. All. ii. 48, De Sac. 19 ff., De Sobr. 21 ff.

- 53 ζωὴν ἐκείνης<sup>1</sup> ὠνόμασεν. “ἐκάλεσε” γάρ φησιν “Ἄδὰμ τὸ ὄνομα τῆς γυναικὸς αὐτοῦ ζωή, ὅτι αὕτη μήτηρ πάντων τῶν ζώντων,” τῶν πρὸς ἀλήθειαν τὸν ψυχῆς τεθνηκότων δήπου βίον. οἱ δὲ ζῶντες ὄντως μητέρα μὲν ἔχουσι σοφίαν, αἰσθησὶν δὲ δούλην πρὸς ὑπηρεσίαν ἐπιστήμης ὑπὸ φύσεως δημιουργηθεῖσαν.
- 54 Ὅνομα δὲ τοῦ γεννηθέντος ἐκ ζωῆς, ἦν ἐκ φιλήματος ἐγνωρίσαμεν, διασυνίστησι Δαμασκόν<sup>2</sup>—τὸ δὲ μεταληφθέν ἐστὶν αἷμα σάκκου,—σφόδρα δυνατῶς καὶ εὐθυβόλως σάκκον μὲν τὸ σῶμα αἰνιξάμενος, 55 αἷμα δὲ ζωὴν τὴν ἔναιμον. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ψυχὴ διχῶς λέγεται, ἥ τε ὅλη καὶ τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν αὐτῆς μέρος, ὃ κυρίως εἰπεῖν ψυχὴ ψυχῆς ἐστὶ, καθάπερ ὀφθαλμὸς ὃ τε κύκλος σύμπας καὶ τὸ κυριώτατον μέρος τὸ ᾧ βλέπομεν, ἔδοξε τῷ νομοθέτῃ διττὴν καὶ τὴν [481] οὐσίαν εἶναι ψυχῆς, αἷμα μὲν τῆς ὅλης, τοῦ | δ’ ἡγεμονικωτάτου πνεῦμα θεῖον. φησὶ γοῦν ἀντι-56 κρυς· “ψυχὴ πάσης σαρκὸς αἱμά ἐστίν.” εὖ γὰρ τὸ προσνεῖμαι τῷ σαρκῶν ὄχλῳ τὴν αἵματος ἐπιρροήν, οἰκεῖον οἰκείῳ· τοῦ δὲ νοῦ τὴν οὐσίαν ἐξ οὐδενὸς ἤρτησε γενητοῦ, ἀλλ’ ὑπὸ θεοῦ κατα-πνευσθεῖσαν εἰσήγαγεν· “ἐνεφύσησε” γάρ φησιν “ὁ ποιητὴς τῶν ὄλων εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ προὴν ζωῆς, καὶ ἐγένετο ὁ ἄνθρωπος εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν,” ἥ καὶ κατὰ τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ ποιητοῦ λόγος ἔχει 57 τυπωθῆναι. XII. ὥστε διττὸν εἶδος ἀνθρώπων,

<sup>1</sup> ? ἐκείνην with Pap. and some mss. See App. p. 568.

<sup>2</sup> So mss.: Wend. from Pap. Δαμασκός. But would not Philo have written τὸ Δαμασκός if he used the nominative?

<sup>a</sup> See note on the phrase “soul as soul,” De Mig. 5.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 52-57

the name of what was his own death to her life. "For Adam," it says, "called the name of his wife 53 'Life,' because she is the mother of all things living" (Gen. iii. 20), that is doubtless of those who are in truth dead to the life of the soul. But those who are really living have Wisdom for their mother, but Sense they take for a bond-woman, the handiwork of nature made to minister to knowledge.

The name of the child born of the life which we 54 have explained as the "life from a kiss" he puts before us as Damascus, which is interpreted as "the blood of a sackcloth robe." By sackcloth robe he intimates the body, and by blood the "blood-life," and the symbolism is very powerful and apt. We use "soul" in two senses, both for the whole 55 soul and also for its dominant part, which properly speaking is the soul's soul,<sup>a</sup> just as the eye can mean either the whole orb, or the most important part, by which we see. And therefore the lawgiver held that the substance of the soul is twofold, blood being that of the soul as a whole, and the divine breath or spirit that of its most dominant part. Thus he says plainly "the soul of every flesh is the blood" (Lev. xvii. 11). He does well in assigning the blood with its 56 flowing stream to the riot<sup>b</sup> of the manifold flesh, for each is akin to the other. On the other hand he did not make the substance of the mind depend on anything created, but represented it as breathed upon by God. For the Maker of all, he says, "blew into his face the breath of life, and man became a living soul" (Gen. ii. 7); just as we are also told that he was fashioned after the image of his Maker (Gen. i. 27). XII. So we have two kinds of men, one 57

<sup>b</sup> Or "horde." See note on Quod Deus 2.

PHILO

τὸ μὲν θείῳ πνεύματι λογισμῶ βιούντων, τὸ δὲ αἵματι καὶ σαρκὸς ἡδονῇ ζώντων. τοῦτο τὸ εἶδος ἐστὶ πλάσμα γῆς, ἐκεῖνο δὲ θείας εἰκόνας ἐμφερὲς 58 ἐκμαγεῖον. χρεῖος δ' ἐστὶν οὐ μετρίως ὁ πεπλασμένος ἡμῶν χροῦς καὶ ἀναδεδευμένος αἵματι βοηθείας τῆς ἐκ θεοῦ· διὸ λέγεται “οὗτος Δαμασκὸς Ἐλιέζερ”—ἐρμηνευθεὶς δὲ ἐστὶν Ἐλιέζερ θεὸς μου βοηθός,—ἐπειδὴ ὁ ἔναιμος ὄγκος ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ διαλυτὸς ὦν καὶ νεκρὸς συνέστηκε καὶ ζωπυρεῖται προνοίᾳ θεοῦ τοῦ τὴν χεῖρα ὑπερέχοντος καὶ ὑπερασπίζοντος, μηδεμίαν ἡμέραν ἰδρυθῆναι παγίως δυνηθέντος ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν.
 59 οὐχ ὀρθῶς ὅτι καὶ Μωυσέως ὁ δεύτερος τῶν υἱῶν ὁμωνυμεί τούτῳ; “τὸ γὰρ ὄνομα” φησί “τοῦ δευτέρου Ἐλιέζερ,” καὶ τὴν αἰτίαν ἐπιφέρει· “ὁ γὰρ θεὸς τοῦ πατρὸς μου βοηθός μου, καὶ ἐξείλατό 60 με ἐκ χειρὸς Φαραώ.” τοῖς δ' ἔτι τῆς ἐναίμου καὶ αἰσθητῆς ζωῆς ἐταίροις ἐπιτίθεται ὁ σκεδάσαι τὰς θεοσεβείας δεινὸς τρόπος, ὄνομα Φαραώ, οὐ τὴν παρανομίας καὶ ὠμότητος μεστήν δυναστείαν ἀμήχανον ἐκφυγεῖν ἄνευ τοῦ γεννηθῆναι τὸν Ἐλιέζερ ἐν ψυχῇ καὶ ἐπελπίσαι τὴν παρὰ τοῦ 61 μόνου σωτῆρος θεοῦ βοήθειαν. παγκάλως δὲ τὸν Δαμασκὸν οὐκ ἀπὸ πατρὸς, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ μητρὸς τῆς Μασέκ διασυνέστησεν, ἵνα διδάξῃ ὅτι ἡ ἔναιμος ψυχὴ, καθ' ἣν ζῆ καὶ τὰ ἄλογα, τοῦ πρὸς γυναικῶν μητρώου γένους οἰκεῖόν ἐστιν, 62 ἄρρενος γενεᾶς ἀμέτοχον. ἀλλ' οὐχ ἡ ἀρετὴ Σάρρα· μόνου γὰρ τοῦ πρὸς ἀνδρῶν μεταποιεῖται,

WHO IS THE HEIR, 57-62

that of those who live by reason, the divine inbreathing, the other of those who live by blood and the pleasure of the flesh. This last is a moulded clod of earth, the other is the faithful impress of the divine image.

Yet this our piece of moulded clay, 58 tempered with blood for water, has imperative need of God's help, and thus we read "this Damascus Eliezer." Now Eliezer interpreted is "God is my helper," for this mass of clay and blood, which in itself is dissoluble and dead, holds together and is quickened as into flame by the providence of God, who is its protecting arm and shield, since our race cannot of itself stand firmly established for a single day. Observe, too, that the second son of Moses 59 bears the same name. "The name of the second," he says, "was Eliezer," and then he adds the reason: "for the God of my father is my helper and delivered me from the hand of Pharaoh" (Ex. xviii. 4). But those who still consort with the life of sense and 60 blood suffer the attacks of the spirit so expert in scattering<sup>a</sup> pious thoughts and deeds, the spirit called Pharaoh, whose tyranny rife with lawlessness and cruelty it is impossible to escape, unless Eliezer be born in the soul and looks with hope to the help which God the only Saviour can give.

Right well, too, does Moses describe Damascus as the 61 son not of his father but of his mother, Masek, to shew us that the blood-soul, by which irrational animals also live, has kinship with the maternal and female line, but has no part in male descent. Not 62 so was it with Virtue or Sarah, for male descent is the sole claim of her, who is the motherless ruling

<sup>a</sup> Cf. the regular epithet of Pharaoh, ὁ σκεδαστὴς τῶν καλῶν, e.g. De Sac. 48.

PHILO

ἐκ πατρὸς τοῦ πάντων θεοῦ μόνου γεννηθεῖσα ἡ ἀμήτωρ ἀρχή· “ἀληθῶς” γάρ φησιν “ἀδελφή μου ἔστιν ἐκ πατρός, ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἐκ μητρός.”

- 63 XIII. “Α μὲν οὖν ἦν ἀναγκαῖον προακοῦσαι, διεπτύξαμεν· καὶ γὰρ εἶχεν ἀσάφειαν ἢ πρότασις αἰνιγματώδη. τί δὲ ὁ φιλομαθῆς ζητεῖ, διερμηνευτέον ἀκριβέστερον· μήποτ’ οὖν ἔστι τοιοῦτον, [482] εἰ δύναταί | τις ἐφιέμενος τῆς ἐναίμου ζωῆς καὶ μεταποιοῦμενος ἔτι τῶν κατ’ αἴσθησιν γενέσθαι τῶν ἀσωμάτων καὶ θείων πραγμάτων κληρονόμος.
- 64 τούτων μόνος ἀξιούται ὁ καταπνευσθεὶς ἄνθρωπος, οὐρανοῦ τε καὶ θείας μοίρας ἐπιλαχών, ὁ καθαρῶτατος νοῦς, ἀλογῶν οὐ μόνον σώματος ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ ἐτέρου ψυχῆς τμήματος, ὅπερ ἄλογον ὑπάρχον αἵματι πέφυρται, θυμοὺς ζέοντας καὶ πεπυρω-
- 65 μένας ἐπιθυμίας ἀναφλέγον. πυνθάνεται γοῦν τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον· ἐπειδὴ ἐμοὶ οὐκ ἔδωκας σπέρμα τὸ νοητὸν ἐκεῖνο, τὸ αὐτοδίδακτον, τὸ θεοειδές, ἀρὰ γε “ὁ οἰκογενῆς μου κληρονομήσει με,” ὁ
- 66 τῆς ἐναίμου ζωῆς ἔγγονος; τότε καὶ ἐπισπεύσας ὁ θεὸς ἔφθασε τὸν λαλοῦντα, τῆς ῥήσεως προαποστείλας ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν διδασκαλίαν. “εὐθύς” γάρ φησι “φωνὴ θεοῦ ἐγένετο πρὸς αὐτὸν τῷ λέγειν· οὐ κληρονομήσει σε οὗτος,” τῶν εἰς τὴν δι’ αἰσθήσεως δεῖξιν ἐρχομένων οὐδὲ εἰς ἀσώματοι γὰρ φύσεις νοητῶν πραγμάτων εἰσι
- 67 κληρονόμοι. παρατετήρηται δὲ ἄκρως τὸ μὴ

<sup>a</sup> ἀρχή no doubt carries with it, in addition to the sense of “beginning” or “first principle,” the thought of sovereignty principle<sup>a</sup> of things, begotten of her father alone, even God the Father of all. For "indeed," it runs, "she is my sister from the father, not from the mother" (Gen. xx. 12).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 62-67

XIII. So much for the elucidation needed as a preliminary; for the problem was seen to involve 63 obscurities and difficulties. We must now explain more exactly what it is that the lover of learning seeks to know. Surely it is something of this kind: "Can he who desires the life of the blood and still claims for his own the things of the senses become the heir of divine and incorporeal things?" No; one 64 alone is held worthy of these, the recipient of inspiration from above, of a portion heavenly and divine, the wholly purified mind which disregards not only the body, but that other section of the soul which is devoid of reason and steeped in blood, aflame with seething passions and burning lusts. His question, we see, takes this form: "Since thou 65 hast not given me that other seed, the mentally perceived, the self-taught, the divine of form, shall the child of my household be my heir, he who is the offspring of the blood-life?" At that point 66 God in His turn hastens to forestall the questioner, with a message of instruction, which we may almost say anticipates his speaking. For "straightway," we are told, "a voice of God came to him with the words 'He shall not be thy heir'" (Gen. xv. 4). No, none of those who fall under the evidence which the senses give. For it is incorporeal natures that inherit intellectual things. The wording is chosen 67 very carefully. Moses does not say "God said" which Philo regularly connects with the name of Sarah, e.g. De Cher. 7.

PHILO

“ εἶπεν ” ἢ “ ἐλάλησεν ” φάναι, ἀλλὰ τὸ “ φωνῆ θεοῦ ἐγένετο πρὸς αὐτὸν ” ὡσπερ εὐτόμως ἐμβοήσαντος καὶ ἀρρηκτως ἐνηχήσαντος, ἵν’ εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν ψυχὴν διαδοθεῖσα ἡ φωνὴ μηδὲν ἔρημον ἔαση καὶ κενὸν ὑψηγῆσεως ὀρθῆς μέρος, ἀλλὰ πάντα διὰ πάντων ὑγιαίνουσας μαθήσεως ἀναπλησθῆ.

- 68 XIV. τίς οὖν γενήσεται κληρονόμος;
οὐχ ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ τοῦ σώματος εἰρκτῇ λογισμὸς καθ’ ἐκούσιον γνώμην, ἀλλ’ ὁ λυθείς τῶν δεσμῶν καὶ ἐλευθερωθείς καὶ ἔξω τειχῶν προεληλυθὼς καὶ καταλελοιπῶς, εἰ οἶόν τε τοῦτο εἰπεῖν, αὐτὸς ἑαυτόν. “ ὅς γὰρ ἐξελεύσεται ἐκ σοῦ ” φησίν,
- 69 “ οὗτος κληρονομήσει σε.” πόθος οὖν εἴ τις εἰσέρχεταιί σε, ψυχῇ, τῶν θείων ἀγαθῶν κληρονομήσαι, μὴ μόνον “ γῆν,” τὸ σῶμα, καὶ “ συγγένειαν,” <τὴν> αἴσθησιν, καὶ “ οἶκον πατρός,” τὸν λόγον, καταλίπης, ἀλλὰ καὶ σαυτὴν ἀπόδραθι καὶ ἔκστηθι σεαυτῆς, ὡσπερ οἱ κατεχόμενοι καὶ κορυβαντιῶντες βακχευθεῖσα καὶ θεοφορηθεῖσα κατὰ τινα προφητικὸν ἐπιθειασμόν·
- 70 ἐνθουσιώσης γὰρ καὶ οὐκέτ’ οὔσης ἐν ἑαυτῇ διανοίας, ἀλλ’ ἔρωτι οὐρανίῳ σεσοβημένης κάκμεμηνυίας καὶ ὑπὸ τοῦ ὄντως ὄντος ἡγμένης καὶ ἄνω πρὸς αὐτὸ<sup>1</sup> εἰλκυσμένης, προϊούσης ἀληθείας καὶ τὰν ποσὶν ἀναστελλούσης, ἵνα κατὰ λεωφόρου
- 71 βαῖνοι τῆς ὁδοῦ, κλῆρος οὗτος. πῶς οὖν μετανίστασο τῶν προτέρων ἐκείνων, λέγε θαρροῦσα ἡμῖν, ὦ διάνοια, ἢ τοῖς ἀκούειν τὰ νοητὰ δεδιδαγμένοις ἐνηχεῖς, αἰεὶ φάσκουσα ὅτι μετωκισάμην τοῦ σώματος, ἡνίκα τῆς σαρκὸς ἠλόγουν ἤδη, καὶ τῆς αἰσθήσεως, ὅποτε τὰ αἰσθητὰ

<sup>1</sup> Or αὐτὸν as some mss.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 67-71

or " God spake," but " a voice of God came to him." It suggests a loud, sonorous, continuous appeal, pitched so as to spread abroad throughout the soul, whereby no part shall be left to which its right instruction has not penetrated, but all are filled from end to end with sound learning. XIV.

Who then shall be the heir? Not that way of thinking which abides in the prison of the body of its own free will, but that which released from its fetters into liberty has come forth outside the prison walls, and if we may so say, left behind its own self. For " he who shall come out of thee," it says, " shall be thy heir " (Gen. xv. 4).

Therefore, my soul, 69 if thou feelest any yearning to inherit the good things of God, leave not only thy land, that is the body, thy kinsfolk, that is the senses, thy father's house (Gen. xii. 1), that is speech, but be a fugitive from thyself also and issue forth from thyself. Like persons possessed and corybants, be filled with inspired frenzy, even as the prophets are inspired. For it is the mind which is under the divine afflatus, 70 and no longer in its own keeping, but is stirred to its depths and maddened by heavenward yearning, drawn by the truly existent and pulled upward thereto, with truth to lead the way and remove all obstacles before its feet, that its path may be smooth to tread—such is the mind, which has this inheritance.

To that mind I say, " Fear not to 71 tell us the story of thy departure from the first three. For to those who have been taught to give ear to the things of the mind, thou ever repeatest the tale." " I migrated from the body," she answers, " when I had ceased to regard the flesh ; from sense, when I came to view all the objects of sense as having

PHILO

- πάντα ὡς μὴ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντα ἔφαντασιώθη [483] καταγνοῦσα μὲν αὐτῆς τῶν | κριτηρίων ὡς νενοθευμένων καὶ δεδεκασμένων καὶ ψευδοῦς ὑποπεπλησμένων δόξης, καταγνοῦσα δὲ καὶ τῶν κρινομένων, ὡς δελεάσαι καὶ ἀπατηῆσαι καὶ ἐκ μέσης τῆς φύσεως ἀρπάσαι τὴν ἀλήθειαν εὐτρεπισμένων· μετανέστην καὶ τοῦ λόγου, ἥνίκα πολλὴν ἀλογίαν αὐτοῦ κατέγων καίτοι μετεωρίζοντος καὶ φυσῶν-72 τος ἑαυτόν. ἐτόλμα γὰρ τόλμημα οὐ μικρόν, διὰ σκιῶν μοι σώματα, διὰ ῥημάτων πράγματα, ἄπερ ἀμήχανον ἦν, δεικνύναι· καίτοι σφαλλόμενος περιελάλει καὶ περιέρρει κοινότητι τῶν ὀνομάτων τὰς ἰδιότητας τῶν ὑποκειμένων ἀδυνατῶν ἐμφάσει 73 τρανῆ παραστήσαι. παθοῦσα δ' ὡς ἄφρων καὶ νήπιος παῖς ἔμαθον, ὡς ἄμεινον ἦν ἄρα πάντων μὲν τούτων ὑπεξελθεῖν, ἐκάστου δὲ τὰς δυνάμεις ἀναθεῖναι θεῷ τῷ καὶ τὸ σῶμα σωματοῦντι καὶ πηγνύντι καὶ τὴν αἴσθησιν αἰσθάνεσθαι παρα-σκευάζοντι καὶ τῷ λόγῳ τὸ λέγειν ὀρέγοντι.
 74 τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον ὄνπερ τῶν ἄλλων ὑπεξελήλυθας, ὑπέξελθε καὶ μετανάστηθι σεαυτῆς.
 τί δὲ τοῦτό ἐστιν; μὴ ταμιεύσῃ τὸ νοεῖν καὶ διανοεῖσθαι καὶ καταλαμβάνειν σεαυτῆ, φέρουσα δὲ καὶ ταῦτα ἀνάθες τῷ τοῦ νοεῖν ἀκριβῶς καὶ καταλαμβάνειν ἀνεξαπατήτως αἰτίῳ.
 75 XV. Τὴν δὲ ἀνάθεςιν δέξεται τῶν πανιέρων τεμενῶν τὸ ἀγιώτερον· δύο γὰρ ἔοικε συστήναι, τὸ μὲν νοητόν, τὸ δ' αἰσθητόν. αἰσθητῶν μὲν οὖν φύσεων ὁ κόσμος οὗτος, ἀοράτων δ' ὡς ἀληθῶς ὁ 76 νοητὸς τὸ πάνθειόν ἐστιν. ὅτι δ' ὁ

* The translation takes κοινότητι as dative of cause after

WHO IS THE HEIR, 71-76

no true existence, when I denounced its standards of judgement as spurious and corrupt and steeped in false opinion, and its judgements as equipped to ensnare and deceive and ravish truth away from its place in the heart of nature ; from speech, when I sentenced it to long speechlessness, in spite of all its self-exaltation and self-pride. Great indeed was its 72 audacity, that it should attempt the impossible task to use shadows to point me to substances, words to point me to facts. And, amid all its blunders, it chattered and gushed about, unable to present with clear expression those distinctions in things which baffled its vague and general vocabulary.<sup>a</sup> Thus 73 through experience, as a foolish child learns, I learnt that the better course was to quit all these three, yet dedicate and attribute the faculties of each to God, who compacts the body in its bodily form, who equips the senses to perceive, and extends to speech the power of speaking.” Such is the mind’s 74 confession, and to it I reply, “ even as thou hast quitted the others, quit thyself, depart from thyself.” And what does this “ departing ” mean ? It means “ do not lay up as treasure for thyself, thy gifts of thinking, purposing, apprehending, but bring them and dedicate them to Him Who is the source of accurate thinking and unerring apprehension.”

XV. This dedication will be enshrined in the holier 75 of the great sanctuaries. For two such sanctuaries, we feel, exist, one sensible, one mental. This world is the cathedral<sup>b</sup> of the sense-perceived order, the world which the mind discovers of the truly invisible order. Now that he who has gone forth 76

ἀδυνατῶν. It may be, however, dative of means after παρὰστήσαι. <sup>b</sup> See App. p. 568.

PHILO

ὑπεξελθὼν ἐξ ἡμῶν<sup>1</sup> καὶ γλιχόμενος ὀπαδὸς εἶναι θεοῦ τοῦ φύσεως ἀοιδίμου πλούτου κληρονόμος ἐστί, μαρτυρεῖ λέγων· “ἐξήγαγεν δὲ αὐτὸν ἔξω καὶ εἶπεν· ἀνάβλεψον εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν,” ἐπειδήπερ οὗτος ὁ τῶν θείων θησαυρὸς ἀγαθῶν—“ἀνοίξαι γάρ σοι” φησί “κύριος τὸν θησαυρὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν ἀγαθόν, τὸν οὐρανόν,” ἐξ οὗ δὴ τὰς τελεωτάτας εὐφροσύνας ὁ χορηγὸς ἀδιαστάτως ἕει— “ἀνάβλεψον” δὲ εἰς ἔλεγχον τοῦ τυφλοῦ τῶν ἀγελαίων ἀνθρώπων γένους, ὃ βλέπειν δοκοῦν πεπήρωται.

- 77 πῶς γὰρ οὐ πεπήρωται, ὅτε κακὰ μὲν ἀντ’ ἀγαθῶν, αἰσχρὰ ἀντὶ καλῶν, ἄδικα ἀντὶ δικαίων καὶ πάθη μὲν ἀντ’ εὐπαθειῶν, θνητὰ δὲ ἀντ’ ἀθανάτων ἤρηται, καὶ νουθετητὰς μὲν καὶ σωφρονιστὰς, ἔτι δὲ ἔλεγχον καὶ παιδείαν ἀποδιδράσκει, κόλακας δὲ καὶ τοὺς πρὸς ἡδονὴν λόγους ἀργίας καὶ ἀμαθίας
- 78 καὶ θρύψεως δημιουργοὺς ἀποδέχεται; μόνος οὖν βλέπει ὁ ἀστείος, οὗ χάριν καὶ τοὺς προφήτας ὠνόμασαν οἱ παλαιοὶ ὄρωντας. ὁ δὲ ἔξω προεληλυθὼς οὐ μόνον ὄρων, ἀλλὰ καὶ θεὸν ὄρων προσερρήθη, Ἰσραήλ [ὅς ἐστι θεὸν ὄρων].

[484] οἱ δέ, κἄν ποτε | τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς διοίξωσι, πρὸς γῆν ἀπονενεύκασιν τὰ γήινα μετιόντες καὶ τοῖς ἐν

- 79 Ἄιδη συντρεφόμενοι. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἀνατείνει τὰς ὄψεις πρὸς αἰθέρα καὶ τὰς οὐρανοῦ περιόδους, πεπαιδευταὶ δὲ καὶ εἰς τὸ μάννα ἀφορᾶν, τὸν θεῖον λόγον, τὴν οὐράνιον ψυχῆς φιλοθεάμονος ἀφθαρτον τροφήν, οἱ δὲ πρὸς τὰ κρόμμυα καὶ τὰ σκόρδα, τὰ περιοδυνῶντα τὰς κόρας καὶ κακοῦντα<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Wend. from Pap. ἐξ ἡμῶν νοητῶν καὶ κτλ. See App. p. 568.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κυκλώντα.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 76-79

from us and desires to be God's attendant is the heir of the glorious wealth that nature has to give is testified by Moses in the words "He led him out outside and said 'Look up into heaven'" (Gen. xv. 5). For heaven is the treasury of divine blessings. "May the Lord," he says, "open to thee His good treasure, the heaven" (Deut. xxviii. 12)—that heaven from which the bountiful Giver rains down continually His most perfect joys. Yes, look up, and thus convict of their errors the multitude of common men, the blind race, which has lost the sight which it thinks it possesses. How could it be other than 77 blind, when it prefers bad to good, base to honourable, unjust to just, and again lower passions to higher emotions, the mortal to the immortal; when once more it shuns the voice of the warner and the censor, and with them conviction and instruction, while it welcomes flatterers and the words that lead to pleasure, the makers of idleness and ignorance and luxury? And so it is only the man of worth 78 who sees, and therefore they of old called prophets "seers" (1 Sam. ix. 9). He who advances "outside" is called not only the seer, but the seer of God, that is Israel.

But the others even if they do ever open their eyes have bent them earthwards; they pursue the things of earth and their conversation is with the dwellers in Hades. The one ex- 79 tends his vision to the ether and the revolutions of the heaven; he has been trained also to look steadfastly for the manna, which is the word of God, the heavenly incorruptible food of the soul which delights in the vision. But the others see but the onions and the garlic, which give great pain and trouble to their eyes and make them close, or the

PHILO

- καὶ καταμύειν ποιοῦντα, καὶ τὰς ἄλλας πράσων καὶ νεκρῶν ἰχθύων δυσσομίας, οἰκείας Αἰγύπτου 80 τροφάς. “ ἐμνήσθημεν ” γάρ φασι “ τοὺς ἰχθύας, οὓς ἠσθίομεν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ δωρεάν, καὶ σικύας, πέπονας, πράσα, κρόμμου, σκόρδα· νυνὶ δὲ ἡ ψυχὴ ἡμῶν κατάξηρος, οὐδὲν πλὴν εἰς τὸ μάννα οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ ἡμῶν.”
- 81 XVI. Συντείνει δὲ πρὸς ἠθοποιίαν καὶ τὸ “ ἐξήγαγεν αὐτὸν ἔξω,” ὃ τινες εἰώθασιν ὑπ’ ἀμουσίας ἠθους γελᾶν φάσκοντες· εἴσω γάρ τις ἐξάγεται, ἢ ἔμπαλιν εἰσέρχεται ἔξω; ναί, φαίην ἂν, ὧ καταγέλαστοι καὶ λῖαν εὐχερεῖς· ψυχῆς γὰρ τρόπους ἰχνηλατεῖν οὐκ ἐμάθετε ἀλλὰ σωμάτων, <καὶ><sup>1</sup> τὰς ἐν τούτοις μεταβατικὰς κινήσεις μόνας ἐρευνᾶτε. διὸ καὶ παράδοξον ὑμῖν φαίνεται εἴ τις ἐξέρχεται εἴσω ἢ εἰσέρχεται ἔξω· τοῖς δὲ Μωυ-σέως γνωρίμοις ἡμῖν οὐδὲν τῶν τοιούτων ἀπωδόν 82 ἐστίν. ἢ οὐκ ἂν εἶποιτε, τὸν μὴ τέλειον ἀρχιερέα, ὁπότε ἐν τοῖς ἀδύτοις τὰς πατρώους ἀγιστείας ἐπιτελεῖ, ἔνδον εἶναί τε καὶ ἔξω, ἔνδον μὲν τῷ φανερῷ σώματι, ἔξω δὲ ψυχῇ τῇ περιφοίτῳ καὶ πεπλανημένῃ, καὶ ἔμπαλιν τινα μηδὲ γένους ὄντα τοῦ ἱερωμένου θεοφιλῆ καὶ φιλόθεον ἔξω τῶν περιρραντηρίων ἐστώτα ἐσωτάτῳ διατρίβειν, ἀποδημίαν ἠγοούμενον ὄλον τὸν μετὰ σώματος βίον, ὁπότε δὲ δύναίτο τῇ ψυχῇ μόνη ζῆν, ἐν πατρίδι 83 καταμένειν ὑπολαμβάνοντα<sup>2</sup>; καὶ γὰρ φλιᾶς μὲν ἐστίν ἔξω πᾶς ἄφρων, κἂν συνημερεύων μηδ’ ἀκαρὲς ἀπολείπηται, εἴσω δὲ πᾶς σοφός, κἂν μὴ

<sup>1</sup> <καὶ> ins. W.H.D.R.: Wend. places the comma after ἐμάθετε. See App. p. 568.

<sup>2</sup> mss. and Pap. ὑπολαμβάνει(ν).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 79-83

other ill-smelling things, the leeks and dead fishes, which are food proper to Egypt ; “ we remember,” 80 they say, “ the fishes which we used to eat in Egypt freely, the cucumbers and the gourds, the leeks, the onions, the garlic. But now our soul is dried up, our eyes have nothing to look to, save the manna ” (Num. xi. 5, 6).

XVI. There is a moral bearing too in the phrase 81 “ He led him out outside,” which some, because of the grossness of their moral sense, are in the habit of holding up to ridicule. “ Can any be led out inside,” they ask, “ or conversely go in outside ? ” “ Indeed they can,” I would reply. In your ludicrous, thoughtless folly you have never learnt to trace the ways of the soul, but only of bodies, and all you look for is their movements from place to place. Therefore it seems to you a contradiction in terms that one should go out inside or go in outside. But we the disciples of Moses find nothing conflicting in such phrases. Would you not agree that the 82 high priest whose heart is not perfect is both inside and outside, when he is performing the ancestral rites in the inmost shrine ; inside in his visible body, outside in his wandering vagrant, soul ; and on the contrary that one who loves and is loved by God, even if he is not of the consecrated line, though he stands outside the sacred limits<sup>a</sup> abides right inside them ? For he holds all his life in the body to be a sojourning in a foreign land, but when he can live in the soul alone, he feels that he is a dweller in his fatherland. Every fool is outside the threshold, 83 even if he spend the livelong day within, nor leave it for a moment ; and every wise man is inside it

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quod Deus 2.

PHILO

- μόνον χώραις ἀλλὰ καὶ μεγάλοις κλίμασι γῆς διωκισμένος τυγχάνη· κατὰ δὲ Μωυσῆν οὕτως ὁ φίλος ἐγγύς ἐστιν, ὥστε ἀδιαφορεῖ ψυχῆς· λέγει γάρ· “ὁ φίλος, ὁ ἴσος τῇ ψυχῇ σου.”
- 84 καὶ ὁ ἱερεὺς μέντοι “ἄνθρωπος οὐκ ἔσται” κατ’ αὐτὸν ὅταν εἰσῆι εἰς τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, “ἕως ἂν ἐξέλθῃ,” οὐ σωματικῶς, ἀλλὰ ταῖς κατὰ ψυχὴν κινήσεσιν. ὁ γὰρ νοῦς, ὅτε μὲν καθαρῶς λειτουργεῖ θεῷ, οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνθρώπινος, ἀλλὰ θεῖος· ὅτε δὲ ἀνθρωπίνῳ τινί, τέτραπται καταβάς ἀπ’ οὐρα-
- [485] νοῦ, μᾶλλον δὲ πεσὼν ἐπὶ γῆν ἐξέρχεται, | καὶ
- 85 ἔτι μένη τὸ σῶμα ἔνδον αὐτῷ. ὀρθότατα οὖν εἴρηται· “ἐξήγαγεν αὐτὸν ἔξω” τῶν κατὰ τὸ σῶμα δεσμωτηρίων, τῶν κατὰ τὰς αἰσθήσεις φωλεῶν, τῶν κατὰ τὸν ἀπατεῶνα λόγον σοφιστειῶν, ἐπὶ πᾶσιν αὐτὸν ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τοῦ δοκεῖν αὐτ-εξουσίῳ καὶ αὐτοκράτορι γνώμη νοεῖν τε καὶ καταλαμβάνειν.
- 86 XVII. Προαγαγὼν δὲ αὐτὸν ἔξω φησίν· “ἀνά-βλεψον εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ ἀρίθμησον τοὺς ἀστέρας, ἂν δυνηθῆς ἐξαριθμῆσαι αὐτούς. οὕτως ἔσται τὸ σπέρμα σου.” παγκάλως εἶπεν “οὕτως ἔσται,” ἀλλ’ οὐ τοσοῦτον, τοῖς ἀστροῖς ἰσάριθμον. οὐ γὰρ τὸ πλῆθος αὐτὸ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ μυρία ἄλλα τῶν εἰς εὐδαιμονίαν ὀλόκληρον καὶ παντελῆ
- 87 βούλεται παρεμφῆναι. οὕτως οὖν ἔσται, φησίν, ὡς ἔχει τὸ ὀρώμενον αἰθέριον, οὕτως οὐράνιον, οὕτως αὐγῆς γέμον ἀσκίου καὶ καθαρᾶς—οὐρανοῦ γὰρ ἀπελήλαται νύξ καὶ αἰθέρος τὸ σκότος,—ἀστερο-

<sup>a</sup> The real meaning of the text is, of course, “there shall not be another man in the temple till the priest comes out.”

WHO IS THE HEIR, 83-87

though he be separated from it not merely by countries but even by vast latitudes. And in Moses' view a friend is so near that he differs not a whit from one's own soul, for he says, "the friend, who is equal to thy soul" (Deut. xiii. 6). Again, according to Moses, the priest when he goes into the holy of holies "will not be a man until he comes out" (Lev. xvi. 17); no man, that is, in the movements of his soul though in the bodily sense he is still a man. For when the mind is ministering to God in purity, it is not human, but divine. But when it ministers to aught that is human, it turns its course and descending from heaven, or rather falling to earth, comes forth, even though his body still remains within. Most rightly, then, is it said, "He led him out outside," outside of the prison-houses of the body, of the lairs where the senses lurk, of the sophistries of deceitful word and thought; above all He led him out of himself, out of the belief that he thought and apprehended through an intelligence which acknowledged no other authority and owed no allegiance to any other than itself.

XVII. When the Lord led him outside He said "Look up into heaven and count the stars, if thou canst count their sum. So shall be thy seed" (Gen. xv. 5). Well does the text say "so" not "so many," that is, "of equal number to the stars." For He wishes to suggest not number merely, but a multitude of other things, such as tend to happiness perfect and complete. The seed shall be, He says, as the ethereal sight spread out before him, celestial as that is, full of light unshadowed and pure as that is, for night is banished from heaven and darkness from ether. It shall be the very likeness of the stars,

- ειδέστατον, εὖ διακεκοσμημένον, τάξει χρώμενον ἀκλινεῖ τῇ κατὰ ταυτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἐχούση.
- 88 βούλεται γὰρ ἀντίμιμον οὐρανοῦ, εἰ δὲ χρή καὶ προσυπερβάλλοντα εἰπεῖν, οὐρανὸν ἐπίγειον ἀποφῆναι τὴν τοῦ σοφοῦ ψυχὴν ἔχουσαν <ἐν ἑαυτῇ καθάπερ><sup>1</sup> ἐν αἰθέρι καθαρὰς φύσεις, τεταγμένας κινήσεις, χορείας ἐμμελεῖς, θείας περιόδους, ἀρετῶν ἀστεροειδестаτάς καὶ περιλαμπεστάτας αὐγὰς. εἰ δ' ἀμήχανον αἰσθητῶν ἀστέρων ἀριθμὸν εὐρεῖν,
- 89 πῶς οὐχὶ μᾶλλον νοητῶν; ἐφ' ὅσον γὰρ οἶμαι τὸ κρῖνον τοῦ κρινόντος<sup>2</sup> ἄμεινον ἢ χεῖρον—νοῦς μὲν γὰρ ἄμεινον αἰσθήσεως, διανοίας δὲ ἀμβλύτερον αἰσθησις,—ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον καὶ τὰ κρινόμενα διενήνοχεν· ὥστε μυρίῳ πλήθει τὰ νοητὰ τῶν αἰσθητῶν ὑπερβάλλειν. τοῦ γὰρ ψυχῆς ὄμματος βραχυτάτῃ μοῖρα οἱ κατὰ τὸ σῶμα ὀφθαλμοί· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἔοικεν ἡλίῳ, λυχνούχοις δὲ οὗτοι μελετώσιν<sup>3</sup> ἐξάπτεσθαι τε καὶ σβέννυσθαι.
- 90 XVIII. Ἀναγκαίως οὖν ἐπιλέγεται “ ἐπίστευσεν Ἀβραὰμ τῷ θεῷ ” πρὸς ἔπαινον τοῦ πεπιστευκότος. καίτοι, τάχα ἂν τις εἴποι, τοῦτ' ἄξιον ἐπαινοῦ κρίνετε; τίς δὲ οὐκ ἂν τι λέγοντι καὶ ὑπισχνουμένῳ θεῷ προσέχοι τὸν νοῦν, κἂν εἰ πάντων ἀδικώτατος καὶ ἀσεβέστατος ὢν τυγ-
- 91 χάνοι; πρὸς ὃν ἐρουῦμεν ὧ γενναίε, μὴ ἀνεξετάστως ἢ τὸν σοφὸν ἀφέλη τὰ πρόποντα ἐγκώμια ἢ τοῖς ἀναξίοις τὴν τελειοτάτην ἀρετῶν, πίστιν, μαρ-

<sup>1</sup> The insertion by Wend. corresponds in length nearly with some illegible words in Pap. It is omitted altogether in mss.

<sup>2</sup> mss. and Pap. κρινόμενον.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps, as Wend. conjectures, μέλλουσι.

marshalled in goodly array, following an unswerving order which never varies or changes. For He 88 wished to picture the soul of the Sage as the counterpart of heaven, or rather, if we may so say, transcending it, a heaven on earth having within it, as the ether has, pure forms of being, movements ordered, rhythmic, harmonious, revolving as God directs, rays of virtues, supremely starlike and dazzling.<sup>a</sup> And if it be beyond our powers to count the stars which are visible to the senses, how much more truly can that be said of those which are visible to the mind. For I hold that even as of the two 89 faculties of judgement one is better and one worse, since mind is better than sense and sense duller than understanding, even so do the objects which these two faculties judge differ; and thus things intelligible vastly exceed in number the things perceptible by sense. The eyes of the body are but the tiniest part of the eye of the soul. That is like the sun; the others are like candles, whose business is to be lighted and extinguished.

XVIII. The words "Abraham believed God" (Gen. 90 xv. 6) are a necessary addition to speak the praise due to him who has believed. Yet, perhaps it may be asked, do you consider this worthy of praise? When it is God who speaks and promises, who would not pay heed, even though he were the most unjust and impious of mankind? To such a questioner we will 91 answer, "Good sir, do not without due scrutiny rob the Sage of his fitting tribute, or aver that the unworthy possess the most perfect of virtues, faith, <sup>a</sup> For the general sense of this section cf. Timaeus 47 B-E, though there is not much likeness of phraseology, except in περιόδους, on which see note on § 185

PHILO

- τυρήσης ἢ τὴν ἡμετέραν περὶ τούτω γνώσιν 92 αἰτιάσῃ. βαθυτέραν γὰρ εἰ βουλευθείης ἔρευναν καὶ μὴ σφόδρ' ἐπιπόλαιον ποιήσασθαι, σαφῶς γνώσῃ, ὅτι μόνω θεῷ χωρὶς ἑτέρου προσπαράληψεως οὐ ῥάδιον πιστεῦσαι διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸ θνητὸν ᾧ συνεζεύγμεθα συγγένειαν· ὅπερ ἡμᾶς καὶ χρήμασι καὶ δόξῃ καὶ ἀρχῇ καὶ φίλοις ὑγείᾳ τε καὶ ῥώμῃ 93 σώματος καὶ ἄλλοις πολλοῖς ἀναπείθει πεπι-
 [486] στευκένας. τὸ δὲ | ἐκνύσασθαι τούτων ἕκαστον καὶ ἀπιστῆσαι γενέσει τῇ πάντα ἐξ ἑαυτῆς ἀπίστῳ, μόνῳ δὲ πιστεῦσαι θεῷ τῷ καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν μόνῳ πιστῷ μεγάλης καὶ ὀλυμπίου ἔργον διανοίας ἐστί, οὐκέτι πρὸς οὐδενὸς δελεαζομένης τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν.
- 94 XIX. εὖ δὲ τὸ φάναι “ λογισθῆναι τὴν πίστιν εἰς δικαιοσύνην αὐτῷ ”· δίκαιον γὰρ οὐδὲν οὕτως, ὡς ἀκράτῳ καὶ ἀμιγεί τῇ πρὸς θεὸν μόνον 95 πίστει κεχρηῆσθαι. τὸ δὲ δίκαιον καὶ ἀκόλουθον τοῦτο τῇ φύσει παράδοξον ἐνομίσθη διὰ τὴν τῶν πολλῶν ἀπιστίαν ἡμῶν, οὓς ἐλέγχων ὁ ἱερός λόγος φησὶν, ὅτι τὸ ἐπὶ μόνῳ τῷ ὄντι βεβαίως καὶ ἀκλινῶς ὀρμεῖν θαυμαστὸν μὲν παρ' ἀνθρώποις, οἷς ἀγαθῶν ἀδόλων κτήσις οὐκ ἔστιν, οὐ θαυμαστὸν δὲ παρ' ἀληθείᾳ βραβευούσῃ, δικαιοσύνης δ' αὐτὸ μόνον ἔργον.
- 96 XX. “ Εἶπε δὲ ” φησί “ πρὸς αὐτόν· ἐγὼ ὁ θεὸς ὁ ἐξαγαγὼν σε ἐκ χώρας Χαλδαίων, ὥστε δοῦναί σοι τὴν γῆν ταύτην κληρονομήσαι.” τοῦτ' οὐχ ὑπόσχεσιν μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ παλαιᾶς ὑποσχέσεως 97 βεβαίωσιν ἐμφαίνει. τὸ μὲν οὖν πάλαι δωρηθὲν ἀγαθὸν ἕξοδος ἦν ἀπὸ τῆς Χαλδαϊκῆς μετεωρο-

WHO IS THE HEIR, 91-97

or censure our claim to knowledge of this matter. For if you should be willing to search more deeply 97 and not confine yourself to the mere surface, you will clearly understand that to trust in God alone and join no other with Him is no easy matter, by reason of our kinship with our yokefellow, mortality, which works upon us to keep our trust placed in riches and repute and office and friends and health and strength and many other things. To purge away each of 93 these, to distrust created being, which in itself is wholly unworthy of trust, to trust in God, and in Him alone, even as He alone is truly worthy of trust—this is a task for a great and celestial understanding which has ceased to be ensnared by aught of the things that surround us.”

XIX. And it is 94 well said “his faith was counted to him for justice” (Gen. xv. 6), for nothing is so just or righteous as to put in God alone a trust which is pure and unalloyed. Yet this act of justice and conformity with 95 nature has been held to be a marvel because of the untrustfulness of most of us. And it is in reproof of us that the holy text tells us, that to rest on the Existent only, firmly and without wavering, though it is a marvel in the sight of men who have no hold of good things unsullied, is deemed no marvel at the judgement-bar of truth, but just an act of justice and nothing more.

XX. The text continues “He said to him, I am 96 the God who brought thee out of the land of the Chaldaeans, to give thee this land to inherit” (Gen. xv. 7). These words indicate not only a promise, but also the confirmation of an old promise. The good bestowed in the past was his departure 97 from Chaldaean sky-lore, which taught the creed

- λογίας, ἥτις ἀνεδίδασκεν οὐ θεοῦ ἔργον, ἀλλὰ θεὸν ὑπολαμβάνειν τὸν κόσμον εἶναι καὶ τό τε εὖ καὶ τὸ χεῖρον ἅπασι τοῖς οὐσι φοραῖς καὶ τεταγμέναις περιόδοις ἀστέρων ἀριθμείσθαι καὶ ἐνθένδε τὴν ἀγαθοῦ καὶ κακοῦ γένεσιν ἠρτήσθαι—ταῦτα δ' ἡ τῶν κατ' οὐρανὸν ὁμαλή καὶ τεταγμένη κίνησις τοὺς εὐχερεστέρους ἀνέπεισε τερατεύεσθαι· καὶ γὰρ τὸ Χαλδαίων ὄνομα μεταληφθὲν ὁμαλότητι
- 98 παρωνυμεί,—τὸ δὲ νέον ἀγαθὸν κληρονομήσαι σοφίαν τὴν ἄδεκτον μὲν αἰσθήσει, νῶ δ' εἰλικρινεστάτῳ καταλαμβανομένην, δι' ἧς ἀποικιῶν ἡ ἀρίστη βεβαιοῦται μετανισταμένης τῆς ψυχῆς ἀπὸ ἀστρονομίας ἐπὶ φυσιολογίαν καὶ ἀπὸ ἀβεβαίου εἰκασίας ἐπὶ πάγιον κατάληψιν καὶ κυρίως εἰπεῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ γεγονότος πρὸς τὸ ἀγένητον, ἀπὸ τοῦ
- 99 κόσμου πρὸς τὸν ποιητὴν καὶ πατέρα αὐτοῦ. τοὺς μὲν γὰρ τὰς γνώμας χαλδαῖζοντας οὐρανῶ πεπιστευκένας, τὸν δ' ἐνθένδε μεταναστάντα τῷ ἐπόχῳ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ ἡνιόχῳ τοῦ παντὸς κόσμου, θεῶ, φασὶν οἱ χρησμοί. καλὸς γε ὁ κλῆρος, μείζων ἴσως τῆς δυνάμεως τοῦ λαμβάνοντος, ἐπάξιος δὲ τοῦ μεγέθους τοῦ διδόντος.
- 100 XXI. Ἄλλ' οὐκ ἐξαρκεῖ χρηστὰ ἐλπίσαι καὶ θαυμάσια ἡλίκα προσδοκῆσαι τῷ σοφίας ἐραστῇ διὰ τῶν θεσπισθέντων· ἀλλ' εἰ μὴ καὶ τρόπον γνώσεται καθ' ὃν ἐφίξεται τῆς τοῦ κλήρου διαδοχῆς,
- [487] παγχάλεπον | ἡγείται, ἅτε διψῶν ἐπιστήμης καὶ ἀπλήστως ἔχων αὐτῆς· διὸ πυνθάνεται φάσκων· “δέσποτα, κατὰ τί γνώσομαι, ὅτι κληρονομήσω
- 101 αὐτήν;” ἴσως ἂν τις εἴποι μάχεσθαι τοῦτο τῷ

WHO IS THE HEIR, 97-101

that the world was not God's work, but itself God, and that to all existing things the vicissitudes of better and worse are reckoned by the courses and ordered revolutions of the stars, and that on these depends the birth of good and ill. The even tenour, the uniformly ordered motion of the heavenly bodies have induced weak-minded people to adopt this fantastic creed. Indeed, the name Chaldaean when interpreted corresponds to even tenour or levelness. The new good gift is inheritance of the 98 wisdom which cannot be received by sense, but is apprehended by a wholly pure and clear mind. Through this wisdom the best of all migrations becomes an established fact, the migration of the soul which passes from astrology to real nature study, from insecure conjecture to firm apprehension, and to give it its truest expression, from the created to the uncreated, from the world to its Maker and Father. Thus the oracles tell us that 99 those whose views are of the Chaldaean type have put their trust in heaven, while he who has migrated from this home has given his trust to Him who rides on the heaven and guides the chariot of the whole world, even God. Excellent indeed is this heritage, too great it may be for the powers of the recipient, but worthy of the greatness of the Giver.

XXI. But it is not enough for the lover of wisdom 100 to have high hopes and vast expectations through the oracular promises. If he does not know in what way he will attain the succession of the heritage, it irks him greatly; so thirsty is he for knowledge and insatiate of it. And therefore he asks, "Master, by what shall I know that I shall inherit it?" (Gen. xv. 8). Now perhaps it may be said that this ques- 101

- πεπιστευκένας· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀπορεῖν ἐνδοιάζοντος, τὸ δὲ μηκέτι ζητεῖν ἔργον εἶναι πεπιστευκότος. λεκτέον οὖν, ὅτι καὶ ἀπορεῖ καὶ πεπίστευκεν, οὐ μὴν περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, πολλοῦ γε καὶ δεῖ. πεπίστευκε μὲν γὰρ ὅτι κληρονόμος ἔσται σοφίας, τὸν δὲ τρόπον αὐτὸ μόνον ζητεῖ καθ' ὃν ἂν γένοιτο· τὸ δ' ὅτι γενήσεται, πάντως κατὰ τὰς θείας
- 102 ὑποσχέσεις βεβαίως κατεῖληφεν. τὸν πόθον οὖν, ᾧ κέχρηται πρὸς τὸ μαθεῖν, ἐπαινέσας ὁ διδάσκαλος ἀρχεται τῆς ὑφηγήσεως ἀπὸ στοιχειώδους εἰσαγωγῆς, ἐν ἣ πρώτον καὶ ἀναγκαιότατον γέγραπται “λάβε μοι”. βραχεῖα μὲν ἢ λέξεις, πολλή δὲ ἡ δύναμις· ἐμφαίνει γὰρ οὐκ ὀλίγα.
- 103 πρώτον μὲν, ἴδιον, φησὶν, οὐδὲν ἔχεις ἀγαθόν, ἀλλ' ὅ τι ἂν νομίσης ἔχειν, ἕτερος παρέσχηκεν. ἐξ οὗ συνάγεται ὅτι θεοῦ τοῦ διδόντος κτήματα πάντα, ἀλλ' οὐ τῆς μεταίτου<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὰς χεῖρας εἰς τὸ λαβεῖν
- 104 προτεινούσης γενέσεως. δεύτερον δέ, καὶ λάβης, λάβε μὴ σεαυτῷ, δάνειον δὲ ἢ παρακαταθήκην νομίσας τὸ δοθὲν τῷ παρακαταθεμένῳ καὶ συμβαλόντι ἀπόδος, πρεσβυτέραν χάριν χάριτι νεωτέρα, προκατάρχουσαν ἀντεκτινούση δικαίως
- 105 καὶ προσηκόντως ἀμειψάμενος. XXII. μυριοὶ γὰρ ἕξαρνοι παρακαταθηκῶν ἐγένοντο ἱερῶν, τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις ὡς ἰδίοις ὑπ' ἀμέτρου τῆς πλεονεξίας καταχρησάμενοι. σὺ δέ, ᾧ γενναίε, παντὶ σθένει πειρῷ μὴ μόνον ἀσινῇ καὶ ἀκιβδήλευτα φυλάττειν ἂ ἔλαβες, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάσης ἐπιμελείας ἀξιοῦν, ἵν' ὁ παρακαταθέμενος μηδὲν ἔχη τῆς παρὰ σοῦ

<sup>1</sup> So Pap., evidently rightly: the mss. have μετ' αὐτὸν or μετ' αὐτοῦ.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 101-105

tion is inconsistent with the belief ascribed to him. It is the doubter, we may be told, who feels difficulties; what the believer does is to cease from further questioning. We must say, then, that the difficulties and the fact of belief are both there, but do not apply to the same subject. Far from it! He has believed that he will be the inheritor of wisdom; he merely asks how this shall come to pass. That it will come to pass is a fact that he has completely and firmly grasped in virtue of the divine promises. And so his Teacher praising the desire 102 for learning which he shews, begins His instruction with a rudimentary lesson, in which the first and most vital words are "take for me" (Gen. xv. 9). A short phrase, but with a wide meaning, for it suggests not a few thoughts.

First it says to us 103 "you have no good thing of your own, but whatever you think you have, Another has provided." Hence we infer that all things are the possession of Him who gives, not of creation the beggar, who ever holds out her hands to take.

The second is "even 104 if you take, take not for yourself, but count that which is given a loan or trust and render it back to Him who entrusted and leased it to you, thus as is fit and just requiting goodwill with goodwill." His was the earlier, yours is the later; His made the advance, yours shall repay. XXII. For vast is 105 the number of those who repudiate the sacred trusts and in their unmeasured greed use up what belongs to Another as though it was their own. But thou, my friend, try with all thy might, not merely to keep unharmed and unalloyed what thou hast taken, but also deem it worthy of all carefulness, that He who entrusted it to thee may find nothing to blame

PHILO

- 106 φυλακῆς αἰτιάσασθαι. παρακατέθετο δέ σοι αὐτῶ ψυχῆν, λόγον, αἴσθησιν ὁ ζωοπλάστης, ἃ συμ-βολικῶς δάμαλις, κριός, αἶξ ἐν ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς ὠνομάσθησαν. ταῦτα δ' οἱ μὲν εὐθύς ὑπὸ φιλαυτίας ἐνοσφίσαντο, οἱ δὲ ἐταμιεύσαντο πρὸς 107 καιριωτάτην ἀπόδοσιν. τῶν μὲν οὖν νοσφιζομένων οὐκ ἔστιν ἀριθμὸν εὐρεῖν· τίς γὰρ ἡμῶν ψυχῆν καὶ αἴσθησιν καὶ λόγον, πάνθ' ὁμοῦ ταῦτ' οὐ φησιν ἑαυτοῦ κτήματ' εἶναι, τὸ αἰσθάνεσθαι, τὸ λέγειν, τὸ καταλαμβάνειν οἰόμενος ἐφ' ἑαυτῶ 108 μόνῳ κεῖσθαι; τῶν δὲ τὴν πίστιν ἱερὰν καὶ ἄσυλον ὄντως διαφυλαττόντων ὀλίγος ἐστὶν ἀριθμὸς.
 οὔτοι ταῦτα τὰ τρία ἀνατεθείκασι θεῷ, ψυχῆν, αἴσθησιν, λόγον· ἔλαβον γὰρ οὐχ ἑαυτοῖς, ἀλλ' ἐκείνῳ πάντα ταῦτα, ὥστε εἰκότως ὠμολόγησαν κατ' αὐτὸν εἶναι τὰς ἐκάστων ἐνεργείας, τοῦ νοῦ τὰς διανοήσεις, τοῦ λόγου τὰς ἐρμηνείας, τῆς 109 αἰσθήσεως τὰς φαντασίας. οἱ μὲν οὖν ἑαυτοῖς ταῦτα ἐπιγράφοντες ἄξια τῆς ἑαυτῶν [488] βαρυδαιμονίας | ἐκληρώσαντο, ψυχῆν μὲν ἐπί-βουλον, ἀλόγοις πάθεισι πεφυρμένην καὶ πλήθει κακιῶν κατειλημμένην, τοτὲ μὲν ὑπὸ λαιμαργίας καὶ λαγνείας ὥσπερ ἐν χαμαιτυπείῳ περιυβρι-ζομένην, τοτὲ δὲ ὑπὸ πλήθους ἀδικημάτων ὥσπερ ἐν δεσμωτηρίῳ καθειργμένην μετὰ κακούργων, οὐκ ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ἐπιτηδευμάτων, ἃ πᾶσι τοῖς κριταῖς [ἢ τιμωρηταῖς] ἀγώγιμα γέγονε, λόγον δὲ στόμαργον, ἠκονημένον κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, βλα-βερὸν μὲν τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσιν, αἰσχύνην δὲ τοῖς κεκτημένοις ἐπιφέροντα, αἴσθησιν δὲ ἀκόρεστον, ἐμφορουμένην μὲν αἰεὶ τῶν αἰσθητῶν, ὑπὸ δὲ ἀκράτορος τῆς ἐπιθυμίας μηδέποτε ἐμπλησθῆναι

WHO IS THE HEIR, 106-109

in thy guardianship of it. Now the Maker of all that 106 lives has given into thy trust soul, speech, and sense, which the sacred scripture calls in its parable heifer, ram, and goat (Gen. xv. 9). Some in their selfishness at once annex these, others store them up, to repay when the moment for repayment has come. Those 107 who appropriate the trust are countless in number.
For which of us does not assert that soul and sense and speech, each and all are his own possession, thinking that to perceive, to speak, to apprehend, rest with himself alone. But small is the number of 108 those who guard the trust as something holy and inviolable. These have dedicated these three, soul, sense, and speech, to God, for they "took" them all for God, not for themselves; so that they naturally acknowledge that through Him come the activities of each, the reflections of the mind, the language in which speech expresses itself, the pictures presented to sense. Those, then, who assert 109 their ownership of the three, receive the heritage which their miserable state deserves; a soul malevolent, a chaos of unreasoning passions, held down by a multitude of vices; sometimes mauled by greed and lust, like a strumpet in the stews, sometimes fast bound as in a prison by a multitude of ill deeds, herded with malefactors, not of human kind, but habits which an unanimous judgement has declared worthy of arrest; speech brow-beating, keen-edged against truth, working harm to its victims and shame to its employers; sense insatiable, ever imbibing the objects of sense, yet through its un-

PHILO

- δυναμένην, ἀλογοῦσαν τῶν σωφρομιστῶν, ὡς παρορᾶν καὶ παρακούειν καὶ ὅσα ἂν ἐπ' ὠφέλεια 110 διεξέρχωνται παραπτύειν. οἱ δὲ λαβόντες μὴ ἑαυτοῖς, ἀλλὰ θεῷ τούτων ἕκαστον αὐτῷ ἀνέθεσαν, ἱεροπρεπῆς καὶ ἅγιον ὄντως φυλάξαντες τῷ κτησαμένῳ, τὴν μὲν διάνοιαν, ἵνα μηδὲν ἄλλο ἢ περὶ θεοῦ καὶ τῶν ἀρετῶν αὐτοῦ διανοῆται, τὸν δὲ λόγον, ἵν' ἀχαλίνῳ στόματι ἐγκωμίοις καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ εὐδαιμονισμοῖς γεραίρῃ τὸν τῶν ὄλων πατέρα, τὰς πρὸς ἐρμηνείαν ἀπάσας ἀρετὰς εἰς ἓν τοῦτο μόνον ἔργον συγκροτῶν καὶ ἐπίδει-κνύμενος, τὴν δὲ αἰσθησιν, ἵνα φαντασιουμένη τὸν αἰσθητὸν ἅπαντα κόσμον οὐρανὸν καὶ γῆν καὶ τὰς μεταξὺ φύσεις, ζῶά τε καὶ φυτά, ἐνεργείας τε καὶ δυνάμεις αὐτῶν καὶ ὅσαι κινήσεις καὶ σχέσεις, 111 ἀδόλως καὶ καθαρῶς ψυχῇ διαγγέλλῃ. νῷ γὰρ ὁ θεὸς καταλαμβάνειν τὸν μὲν νοητὸν κόσμον δι' ἑαυτοῦ, τὸν δὲ ὄρατὸν δι' αἰσθήσεως ἐφήκεν. εἰ δὴ δύναιτό τις πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσι ζῆσαι θεῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ἑαυτῷ, διὰ μὲν τῶν αἰσθήσεων εἰς τὰ αἰσθητὰ διακύβας ἕνεκα τοῦ τάληθές εὐρεῖν, διὰ δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς τὰ νοητὰ καὶ ὄντα ὄντως φιλοσοφήσας, διὰ δὲ τοῦ κατὰ τὴν φωνὴν ὄργανου καὶ τὸν κόσμον καὶ τὸν δημιουργὸν ὑμνήσας, εὐδαίμονι καὶ μακαρίῳ βίῳ χρήσεται.
- 112 XXIII. Ταῦτα ἐκ τοῦ “ λάβε μοι ” παρεμφαίνεσθαι νομίζω. βουληθεὶς μέντοι καὶ τῆς θείας ἀρετῆς ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ τὴν εἰκόνα ἐπὶ γῆν κατα-πέμψαι δι' ἔλεον τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν, ἵνα μὴ ἀτυχήσῃ τῆς ἀμείνονος μοίρας, συμβολικῶς τὴν ἱεράν σκηνὴν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ κατασκευάζει, σοφίας

WHO IS THE HEIR, 109-112

controlled avidity incapable of reaching satisfaction, regardless of its monitors, blind, deaf and derisive to all that they preach for its benefit. But 110 those who have "taken," not for themselves but for God, have dedicated each of the three to Him, guarding them for the Owner, as in truth sanctified and holy: the thinking faculty, that it should think of nothing else but God and His excellences; speech, that with unbridled mouth it should honour the Father of all with laud and hymn and benediction, that it should concentrate all the graces of expression to be exhibited in this task only; sense, that it should report faithfully and honestly to the soul the pictures presented to it by the whole world within its ken, heaven and earth and the intermediate forms of nature, both living creatures and plants, their activities, their faculties, their conditions whether in motion or rest. For God has permitted the mind to comprehend of itself the world 111 of the mind, but the visible world only through sense. Oh! if one can live with all the parts of his being to God rather than to himself, using the eye of sense to penetrate into the objects of sense and thus discover the truth, using the soul to study the higher verities of mental things and real existences, using the organ of his voice to laud both the world and its Maker, he will live a happy and blessed life.

XXIII. This is what I hold the words "take for 112 me" to suggest. Here is another illustration. When God willed to send down the image of divine excellence from heaven to earth in pity for our race, that it should not lose its share in the better lot, he constructs as a symbol of the truth the holy tabernacle and its contents to be a representation

PHILO

- 113 ἀπεικόνισμα καὶ μίμημα. τῆς γὰρ ἀκαθαρσίας ἡμῶν ἐν μέσῳ φησὶ τὴν σκηνην ἰδρῦσθαι τὸ λόγιον, ἢν' ἔχωμεν ᾧ καθαρθησόμεθα ἐκνιψάμενοι καὶ ἀπολουσάμενοι τὰ καταρρυπαίνοντα ἡμῶν τὸν
- [489] ἄθλιον καὶ | δυσκλείας γέμοντα βίον. τὰ συντείνοντα οὖν πρὸς τὴν κατασκευὴν ἴδωμεν ὃν τρόπον εἰσφέρειν προσέταξεν. “ἐλάλησε” φησὶ “κύριος πρὸς Μωυσὴν λέγων· εἰπὸν τοῖς υἱοῖς Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ λάβετε μοι ἀπαρχάς, παρὰ πάντων οἷς ἂν δόξῃ τῇ καρδίᾳ, λήψεσθε τὰς ἀπαρχάς μου.”
- 114 οὐκοῦν κἀνταῦθα παραίνεσις μὴ ἑαυτοῖς ἀλλὰ θεῷ λαβεῖν, τίς τε ὁ διδούς ἐστὶν ἐξετάζοντας καὶ τὰ δοθέντα μὴ σινομένους, ἀσινῆ δὲ καὶ ἄμωμα τέλειά τε αὐτῷ καὶ ὀλόκληρα διαφυλάττοντας. τὰς δ' ἀρχὰς δογματικώτατα ἀνέθηκεν αὐτῷ· τῷ γὰρ ὄντι καὶ σωμάτων καὶ πραγμάτων αἱ ἀρχαὶ κατὰ θεὸν
- 115 ἐξετάζονται μόνον. ἐρεῦνησον δέ, εἰ θέλεις γινῶναι, ἕκαστα, φυτὰ, ζῶα, τέχνας, ἐπιστήμας. ἄρ' οὖν αἱ πρῶται τῶν φυτῶν ἀρχαὶ σπέρματα καὶ καταβολαὶ<sup>1</sup> γεωργίας ἢ τῆς ἀοράτου φύσεώς εἰσιν ἀόρατα ἔργα; τί δ' αἱ ἀνθρώπων καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ζῶων γενέσεις; οὐχ ὡσανεὶ μὲν συναιτίους ἔχουσι τοὺς τοκέας, τὴν δ' ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρεσβυτάτην
- 116 καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς αἰτίαν τὴν φύσιν; τέχναις δὲ καὶ ἐπιστήμαις οὐ πηγὴ καὶ ρίζα καὶ θεμέλιος<sup>2</sup> καὶ εἴ

<sup>1</sup> So some mss.: Mangey and Wend. adopt the reading of others (and Pap.?), τῶν φυτῶν σπερματικαὶ καταβολαί. See App. p. 569.

<sup>2</sup> So mss.; Wend. (from Pap.) θεμέλιοι; but the evidence of the index shows that Philo regularly uses the singular

WHO IS THE HEIR, 113-116

and copy of wisdom. For the oracle tells us that the 113 tabernacle "was set up in the midst of our uncleanness" (Lev. xvi. 16) that we may have wherewith to scour and wash away all that defiles our life, miserable and laden with ill fame as it is.

Let us consider, then, how he bade them contribute the ways and means needed for the building of the tabernacle. "The Lord spake unto Moses," it says, saying: "Speak to the sons of Israel and take ye for me first beginnings; from all who are so minded in their heart, ye shall take my first beginnings" (Ex. xxv. 1, 2). Here then also we have an exhortation not to 114 take for ourselves but for God, closely considering who the Giver is and doing no damage to the gifts, but preserving them undamaged and faultless, aye perfect and complete. In this dedication of the beginnings to God Moses teaches us a high truth. For indeed the beginnings of things both material and immaterial are found to be by God only. Look 115 well, if you would have knowledge, at each several kind, plants, living creatures, arts, sciences. What of the first beginnings of plants? Do they consist in the dropping of the seed by the farmer, or are they the invisible works of invisible nature?<sup>a</sup> What of the generation of men and the other animals? Are not the parents as it were the accessories, while nature is the original, the earliest and the real cause? So again with the arts and sciences. Is not nature 116 the underlying fact, the fountain or root or foundation, or whatever name you give to the beginning

<sup>a</sup> For the identification of Nature with the Divine Agency in things cf. De Sac. 98 and note.

---

when speaking of a single thing, e.g. Leg. All. iii. 138
ὡσπερ τις ἀρχὴ καὶ θεμέλιος.

PHILO

τι ἄλλο πρεσβυτέρας ὄνομα ἀρχῆς ὑπόκειται ἢ φύσις, ἢ πάντ' ἐποικοδομεῖται τὰ καθ' ἐκάστην θεωρήματα; φύσεως δὲ μὴ προϋποκειμένης ἀτελῆ τὰ πάντα. ἐνθένδε μοι δοκεῖ τις ὀρμηθεὶς εὐστόχως εἰπεῖν ἀρχὴ δέ τοι ἡμισυ παντός,

- ἀρχὴν αἰνιξάμενος τὴν φύσιν, ἣτις ὡσανεὶ ρίζα καταβέβληται πρὸς τὴν ἐκάστου συναύξησιν, ἢ καὶ τὸ ἡμισυ τοῦ παντός ἀπένειμεν. XXIV.
- 117 εἰκότως οὖν τὸ λόγιον ἀνέθηκε τὰς ἀρχὰς τῷ ἡγεμόνι θεῷ. καὶ ἐν ἑτέροις "εἶπεν" φησὶν "κύριος πρὸς Μωυσῆν λέγων· ἀγιάσόν μοι πᾶν πρωτότοκον, πρωτογενές, διανοῖγον πᾶσαν μήτραν ἐν υἱοῖς Ἰσραὴλ ἀπὸ ἀνθρώπου ἕως κτήνους· ἐμοὶ
- 118 ἔστιν". ὥστε ἀνωμολογήσθαι καὶ διὰ τούτων, ὅτι τὰ πρῶτα καὶ χρόνῳ καὶ δυνάμει κτήματα θεοῦ, καὶ διαφερόντως τὰ πρωτογενῆ. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ πᾶν γένος ἀφθαρτον, δικαίως τῷ ἀφθάρτῳ προσνεμηθήσεται, καὶ εἴ τι καὶ συνόλως μήτραν διοιγνύει<sup>1</sup> ἀπὸ ἀνθρώπου, τοῦ λογισμοῦ καὶ λόγου,
- 119 ἕως κτήνους, αἰσθήσεώς τε καὶ σώματος. ὁ γὰρ διοιγνύς τὴν μήτραν ἐκάστων, τοῦ μὲν νοῦ πρὸς τὰς νοητὰς καταλήψεις, τοῦ δὲ λόγου πρὸς τὰς διὰ φωνῆς ἐνεργείας, τῶν δὲ αἰσθήσεων πρὸς τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ὑποκειμένων ἐγγινομένας φαντασίας, τοῦ δὲ σώματος πρὸς τὰς οἰκείους αὐτῷ σχέσεις τε καὶ κινήσεις ἀόρατος καὶ σπερματικὸς καὶ τεχνικὸς

<sup>1</sup> Wend. prints εἰ τις (Pap.) διοιγνύειν (Pap. and some mss.). He suggests ds olós te kai for εἰ τις και to preserve the infinitive.

<sup>a</sup> Apparently a proverbial saying already quoted in Quod

WHO IS THE HEIR, 116-119

which precedes all else, and is not the lore of each science a superstructure built on nature, whereas if we do not start with this as a groundwork, all that lore is imperfect? It was this, I take it, which led someone to say so aptly

The beginning is half the whole.<sup>a</sup>

In these words the hidden meaning of "beginning" is nature, the underlying root as it were, the setting needed for growth in each case, to whose credit the writer assigned half the whole. XXIV. Not without reason then did the oracle dedicate "beginnings" to the great Leader, God. And elsewhere he says "The Lord spake unto Moses saying 'sanctify to me every first born, first in generation, which openeth every womb among the sons of Israel from man to beast. It is to Me'" (Ex. xiii. 1, 2). Thus it is admitted here also that the first in time and value are God's possessions and especially the first in generation.<sup>b</sup> For since genus in every case is indestructible, to the indestructible God will it be justly assigned. And that is true too of one who opens the womb of all from man, that is reason and speech, to beast, that is sense and body. For he that opens the womb of each of these, of mind, to mental apprehensions, of speech, to the activities of the voice, of the senses, to receive the pictures presented to it by objects, of the body, to the movements and postures proper to it, is the invisible, seminal artificer, the divine Word, 117 118 119

Det. 64. Cf. Plato, Leg. vi. 753 ε, and the δσφ πλέον ἡμῶν παντός of Hesiod, Op. 40.

<sup>b</sup> The -γενῆ in πρωτογενῆ is equated by Philo with γένος in its philosophical sense. The play cannot be well brought out in translation.

PHILO

- θεῖός ἐστι λόγος, ὃς προσηκόντως ἀνακείσεται τῷ 120 πατρὶ. καὶ μὴν ὡςπερ αἱ ἀρχαὶ θεοῦ, οὕτως καὶ τὰ τέλη θεοῦ. μάρτυς δὲ Μωυσῆς προστάττων ἀφαιρεῖν καὶ ὁμολογεῖν τὸ τέλος τῷ 121 κυρίῳ. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐν κόσμῳ. πῶς; φυτοῦ μὲν ἀρχὴ σπέρμα, τέλος δ' ὁ καρπός, ἐκάτερον οὐ γεωργίας, ἀλλὰ φύσεως ἔργον. πάλιν ἐπιστήμης [490] ἀρχὴ μὲν ἡ φύσις, | ὡς ἐδείχθη, πέρας δ' οὐδ' ἦλθεν εἰς ἀνθρώπους. τέλειος γὰρ οὐδεὶς ἐν οὐδενὶ τῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων, ἀλλ' ἀψευδῶς αἱ τελειότητες καὶ ἀκρότητες ἐνός εἰσι μόνου. φοροῦμεθ' οὖν λοιπὸν ἡμεῖς ἐν τῷ τέλους καὶ ἀρχῆς μεθορίῳ, μαθάνοντες, διδάσκοντες, γεωπονοῦντες, ἐργαζό-μενοι τῶν ἄλλων ἕκαστον ὡς ἂν ἰδρῶντες,<sup>1</sup> ἵνα τι 122 καὶ γένησις πράττειν δοκῇ. γνωριμώτερον μέντοι τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰ τέλη κατὰ θεὸν ὡμολόγησεν ἐπὶ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως εἰπὼν. “ἐν ἀρχῇ ἐποίησε” καὶ πάλιν “συνετέλεσεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν 123 οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν.” νυνὶ μὲν οὖν “λάβετε μοι” φησὶ διδοὺς τὰ πρέπονθ' ἑαυτῷ καὶ προτρέπων τὰ δοθέντα μὴ κιβδηλεύειν, ἀλλ' ἀξίως τοῦ δόντος φυλάττειν, αὐθις δ' ἐν ἑτέροις ὁ μηδενὸς χρεῖος ὢν καὶ διὰ τοῦτο λαμβάνων μηδὲν ὁμολογήσει λαμβάνειν, ἔνεκα τοῦ πρὸς εὐσέβειαν ἀλεῖψαι καὶ προθυμίαν ὁσιότητος ἐμποιῆσαι καὶ πρὸς θεραπείαν ἀκουῆσαι τὴν ἑαυτοῦ, ὡς ἀποδεχομένου καὶ δεχομένου τὰς ψυχῆς ἐκουσίους 124 ἀρεσκείας καὶ γνησίους θεραπείας. “ἰδοὺ” γάρ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὡσανεὶ δρῶντες (but Pap. ὡσαν ἰδρουντες).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 119-124

which will be fitly dedicated to its Father.

And as the beginnings are God's, so also are the ends. 120

Moses testifies to this when he bids set apart and accord the end to the Lord (Num. xxxi. 28 ff.). And what happens in the world testifies to it also. How 121 so? you ask. In the plant the seed is the beginning and the fruit the end, and both are the work of nature, not of husbandry. Again in science, the beginning, as has been shewn, is nature, but its limit is actually outside the range of human possibilities. For no one reaches perfection in any of his pursuits, but undoubtedly all perfection and finality belong to One alone. And so we are fain<sup>a</sup> to range in the borderland between beginning and end, learning, teaching, tilling, and whatever work we carry on, labouring with the sweat of our brow, as it were, that the mere creature may seem to accomplish something. Still 122 more clearly indeed does Moses acknowledge that beginnings and ends are willed by God, when he says in the creation-story, "In the beginning He made" (Gen. i. 1), and afterwards, "God finished the heavens and the earth" (Gen. ii. 1, 2).

And so in the text we are treating, He says "take 123 ye for Me," thus giving to Himself what is His due and bidding us not to adulterate the gifts, but guard them in a way worthy of the Giver. And again elsewhere, He that has no need of aught and therefore takes nothing will acknowledge that He

"takes," in order to train us to piety, and to implant a zeal for holiness, and to spur us to His service, as one who welcomes and accepts the free-will homage and genuine service of the soul. For He says "be- 124

<sup>a</sup> This is an idiomatic use of λοιπόν, "it is left to us," "we have to." Thus it almost = "therefore."

PHILO

φησιν “ εἴληφα τοὺς Λευίτας ἀντὶ παντὸς πρωτοτόκου διανοίγοντος μήτραν παρὰ τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ· λύτρα αὐτῶν ἔσονται.” οὐκοῦν λαμβάνομεν καὶ δίδομεν, ἀλλὰ κυρίως μὲν λαμβάνομεν, καταχρηστικῶς δὲ δίδοναι λεγόμεθα δι’ ἧς αἰτίας εἶπον. εὐθυβόλως δὲ λύτρα ὠνόμασε τοὺς Λευίτας· εἰς ἐλευθερίαν γὰρ οὐδὲν οὕτως ἐξαιρεῖται τὴν διάνοιαν ὡς τὸ πρόσφυγα καὶ ἰκέτην γενέσθαι θεοῦ. τοῦτο δ’ ἡ ἱερωμένη φυλὴ Λευιτῶν ἐπαγγέλλεται.

- 125 XXV. Λελαληκότες οὖν τὰ πρόποντα περὶ τούτων ἀναδράμωμεν ἐπὶ τὰ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπερεθέμεθα γὰρ πολλὰ τῶν ὀφειλόντων ἀκριβωθῆναι. “ λάβε μοι ” φησί “ δάμαλι ” ἄζυγα καὶ ἀκάκωτον, ἀπαλὴν ἔτι καὶ νέαν καὶ σφριγῶσαν, ἠνιόχησιν καὶ παιδείαν καὶ ἐπιστάσιαν εὐμαρῶς δέξασθαι δυναμένην ψυχὴν· “ λάβε μοι κριόν,” λόγον ἀγωνιστὴν καὶ τέλειον, ἰκανὸν μὲν τὰ σοφίσματα τῶν ἀντιδοξούντων ἀνατεμεῖν τε καὶ λῦσαι, ἰκανὸν δὲ καὶ ἀσφάλειαν ὁμοῦ καὶ εὐκοσμίαν τῷ χρωμένῳ
- 126 περιποιῆσαι· “ λάβε μοι ” καὶ τὴν ἄπτουσαν<sup>1</sup> αἰσθησιν ἐπὶ τὸν αἰσθητὸν κόσμον, “ αἶγα,” πάντα “ τριετίζοντα,” κατ’ ἀριθμὸν τέλειον παγέντα, ἀρχὴν μεσότητα τελευτὴν ἔχοντα· πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> mss. διάγουσαν (but Pap. διπτουσαν). Why not διᾶπτουσαν, as Mangey before the discovery of Pap. suggested? This would still preserve the derivation of αἶξ from ᾶττ- which Philo obviously intends.

<sup>a</sup> “ Ransom ” (cf. De Sac. 118) does not appear in the Hebrew (E.V. “ The Levites shall be mine ”).

<sup>b</sup> Clearly, to suit the heifer, ψυχή must here be used in the limited sense of the mind or reasonable soul; yet in § 122 it is divided into reasonable and unreasonable. So, too, with hold, I have taken the Levites in place of everyone who opens the womb from among the sons of Israel ; they shall be their ransom " (Num. iii. 12). So then we take and give, but in the full sense of the word we take only ; it is by a license of language that we are said to give, for the reasons which I have mentioned. Note that He gives the Levites a correct name in calling them " ransom." <sup>a</sup> For nothing so well redeems the mind to freedom, as to take refuge with God and become His suppliant. And such is the profession of the consecrated tribe of Levi.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 124-126

XXV. We have said what was fitting on these points. 125
Let us now return to the original subject, for we postponed much of what requires precise discussion. Take for me, it says, a " heifer " unyoked, undamaged, tender, young and fresh in spirit, a soul, <sup>b</sup> that is, which can easily receive guidance and instruction and ruling ; " take for me a ram," that is speech active in argument and fully developed, competent to analyse and refute the sophisms of controversialists and to provide its possessor with a safe and well-ordered life ; <sup>c</sup> take for me also the sense that dashes and darts on 126 to the sensible world, the she-goat that is ; and take them all three years old, that is, formed according to the perfect number with beginning, middle and end. And further take for the ram and the goat. By definition they correspond to the good side of λόγος and αίσθησις, but in § 132 are divided into good and bad. See also on § 225.

<sup>c</sup> Rhetoric is here conceived of as a means of defending the innocent, and therefore a safeguard against injustice. But there is also an allusion to the thought developed in De Mut. 246, that the sheep is the best of animals because its wool provides man with protection from the weather and decent covering (ἀσφάλειαν καὶ κόσμον).

PHILO

- δὲ τούτοις “ τρυγὸνα καὶ περιστερὰν;” τὴν τε θείαν καὶ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην σοφίαν, πτηνὰς μὲν ἀμφοτέρας καὶ ἄνω πηδᾶν μεμελετηκυίας, διαφερούσας δ’ ἀλλήλων, ἣ διαφέρει γένος εἶδους ἢ
- 127 μίμημα ἀρχετύπου. φιλέρημος μὲν γὰρ ἡ θεία
[491] σοφία, διὰ τὸν μόνον θεόν, | οὐ κτήμᾶ ἐστι, τὴν μόνωσιν ἀγαπῶσα—συμβολικῶς αὕτη τρυγὸν καλεῖται—, ἡμερος δὲ καὶ τιθασὸς καὶ ἀγελαῖος ἡ ἑτέρα, τὰ ἀνθρώπων ἄσθη περιπολοῦσα καὶ διαίτη τῇ μετὰ θνητῶν ἀσμενίζουσα· περιστερᾶ ταύτην
- 128 ἀπεικάζουσιν. XXVI. ταύτας μοι δοκεῖ τὰς ἀρετὰς Μωυσῆς αἰνιξάμενος μαίας Ἑβραίων ὀνομάσαι Σεπφώραν τε καὶ Φουάν· ἡ μὲν γὰρ ὄρνιθιον, Φουὰ δὲ ἐρυθρὸν ἐρμηνεύεται. τῆς μὲν οὖν θείας ἐπιστήμης ὄρνιθος τρόπον τὸ αἰεὶ μετεωροπολεῖν ἴδιον, τῆς δὲ ἀνθρωπίνης αἰδῶ καὶ σωφροσύνην ἐμποιεῖν, ὧν τὸ ἐρυθριᾶν ἐφ’ οἷς ἄξιον
- 129 δεῖγμα ἐναργέστατον. “ ἔλαβεν δὲ ” φησὶν “ αὐτῷ πάντα ταῦτα.” τοῦτ’ ἔπαινός ἐστι τοῦ σπουδαίου, τὴν ἱερὰν ὧν ἔλαβε παρακαταθήκην, ψυχῆς, αἰσθήσεως, λόγου, θείας σοφίας, ἀνθρωπίνης ἐπιστήμης, καθαρῶς καὶ ἀδόλως μὴ ἑαυτῷ, μόνω δὲ τῷ πεπιστευκότι φυλάξαντος.
- 130 εἰτ’ ἐπιλέγει· “ διεῖλεν αὐτὰ μέσα,” τὸ τίς μὴ προστιθείς, ἵνα τὸν ἄδεικτον ἐννοῆς θεὸν τέμνοντα τὰς τῶν σωμάτων καὶ τὰς τῶν πραγμάτων ἐξῆς ἀπάσας ἡρμόσθαι καὶ ἠνώσθαι δοκούσας φύσεις τῷ τομῆι τῶν συμπάντων ἑαυτοῦ λόγῳ, ὃς εἰς τὴν ὄξυτάτην ἀκονηθεὶς ἀκμὴν διαιρῶν

WHO IS THE HEIR, 126-130

me a turtle-dove and a pigeon, that is divine and human reason, both of them winged creatures, skilled by practice to speed upwards, yet differing from each other, as the genus differs from the species, or the copy from the archetype. For Divine wisdom 127 is a lover of solitudes, since loneliness is dear to her because of the solitary God who is her owner, and thus in parable she is called the turtle-dove. The other is gentle and tame and sociable, frequenting the cities of men and pleased to dwell with mortals. Men liken her to a pigeon. XXVI. These virtues 128 Moses, I think, spoke of in allegory when he named the midwives of the Hebrews, Zipporah and Phuah (Ex. i. 15), for Zipporah is by interpretation "bird" and Phuah "ruddy." It is a special property of divine wisdom that it ever soars aloft like a bird, of human wisdom that it implants modesty and discretion; and a blush, where the matter calls for blushing, is the clearest proof of the presence of these qualities. "Abraham took all 129 these for Him" (Gen. xv. 10) says the text. These words speak the praise of the man of worth who faithfully and honestly guards the sacred trust, which he has received of soul, sense, and speech, of divine wisdom and human knowledge, but guards it not for himself, but solely for Him who gave the trust. Then he continues, "he divided 130 them in the middle," but he does not add who this "he" is. He wishes you to think of God who cannot be shewn, as severing through the Severer of all things, that is his Word, the whole succession of things material and immaterial whose natures appear to us to be knitted together and united. That severing Word whetted to an edge of utmost

PHILO

- 131 οὐδέποτε λήγει. τὰ γὰρ αἰσθητὰ πάντα ἐπειδὴν μέχρι τῶν ἀτόμων καὶ λεγομένων ἡμερῶν διεξέλθη, πάλιν ἀπὸ τούτων τὰ λόγῳ θεωρητὰ εἰς ἀμυθήτους καὶ ἀπεριγράφους μοίρας ἄρχεται διαιρεῖν οὗτος ὁ τομεύς, καὶ “τὰ πέταλα τοῦ χρυσίου τέμνει τρίχας,” ὡς φησι Μωυσῆς, εἰς μῆκος ἀπλατῆς
- 132 ἀσωμάτοις γραμμαῖς ἐμφερές. ἕκαστον οὖν τῶν τριῶν διεῖλε μέσον, τὴν μὲν ψυχὴν εἰς λογικὸν καὶ ἄλογον, τὸν δὲ λόγον εἰς ἀληθές τε καὶ ψεῦδος, τὴν δὲ αἴσθησιν εἰς καταληπτικὴν φαντασίαν καὶ ἀκατάληπτον· ἅπερ εὐθὺς τμήματα “ἀντιπρόσωπα τίθησιν ἀλλήλοις,” λογικὸν ἄλογον, ἀληθές ψεῦδος, καταληπτὸν ἀκατάληπτον, ἀπολιπῶν τὰ πτηνὰ ἀδιαίρετα· τὰς γὰρ ἀσωμάτους καὶ θείας ἐπιστήμας εἰς μαχομένας ἐναντιότητας ἀδύνατον τέμνεσθαι.
- 133 XXVII. Πολὺν δὲ καὶ ἀναγκαῖον ὄντα λόγον τὸν περὶ τῆς εἰς ἴσα τομῆς καὶ περὶ ἐναντιοτήτων οὔτε παρήσομεν οὔτε μηκυνοῦμεν, ἀλλ’ ὡς ἔστιν ἐπιτέμνοντες ἀρκεσθησόμεθα μόνοις τοῖς καιρίοις.
- [492] καθάπερ | γὰρ ἡμῶν τὴν ψυχὴν καὶ τὰ μέλη μέσα διεῖλεν ὁ τεχνίτης, οὕτως καὶ τὴν τοῦ παντὸς
- 134 οὐσίαν, ἥνικα τὸν κόσμον ἐδημιούργει. λαβὼν γὰρ αὐτὴν ἥρξατο διαιρεῖν ὧδε· δύο τὸ πρῶτον ἐποίει τμήματα, τό τε βαρὺ καὶ κοῦφον, τὸ παχυ-μερές ἀπὸ τοῦ λεπτομεροῦς διακρίνων· εἴθ’ ἑκάτερον πάλιν διαιρεῖ, τὸ μὲν λεπτομερές εἰς αἶρα καὶ πῦρ, τὸ δὲ παχυμερές εἰς ὕδωρ καὶ γῆν, ἃ καὶ στοιχεῖα αἰσθητὰ αἰσθητοῦ κόσμου, ὡσανεὶ
- 135 θεμελίους, προκατεβάλετο. πάλιν δὲ τὸ βαρὺ καὶ

<sup>a</sup> καταληπτικός and καταληπτός seem to be convertible

WHO IS THE HEIR, 131-135

sharpness never ceases to divide. For when it has 131 dealt with all sensible objects down to the atoms and what we call "indivisibles," it passes on from them to the realm of reason's observation and proceeds to divide it into a vast and infinite number of parts. It divides the "plates of gold," as Moses tells us, "into hairs" (Ex. xxxvii. 10), that is into length without breadth, like immaterial lines. So it 132 divided each of the three in the middle, the soul into rational and irrational, speech into true and false, sense into presentations, where the object is real and apprehended, and presentations where it is not.<sup>a</sup> These sections He at once placed "opposite to each other," rational to irrational, true to false, apprehending to non-apprehending. The birds He left undivided, for incorporeal and divine forms of knowledge cannot be divided into conflicting opposites.

XXVII. The subject of division into equal parts 133 and of opposites is a wide one, and discussion of it essential. We will neither omit nor protract it, but abridge it as far as possible and content ourselves with the vital points only. Just as the great Artificer divided our soul and limbs in the middle, so too, when He wrought the world, did He deal with the being of all that is. This He took and began to 134 divide as follows. First He made two sections, heavy and light, thus distinguishing the element of dense from that of rare particles. Then again He divided each of these two, the rare into air and fire, the dense into water and land, and these four He laid down as first foundations, to be the sensible elements of the sensible world. Again He made 135 terms, since the mind may be conceived of as grasping the φαντασία or vice versa. See further App. p. 569.

PHILO

- κοῦφον καθ' ἑτέρας ἔτεμνεν ἰδέας, τὸ μὲν κοῦφον εἰς ψυχρὸν τε καὶ θερμὸν—ἐπεφήμισε δὲ τὸ μὲν ψυχρὸν ἀέρα, τὸ δὲ θερμὸν φύσει πῦρ—, τὸ δὲ βαρὺ εἰς ὑγρὸν τε αὖ καὶ ξηρὸν· ἐκάλεσε δὲ τὸ μὲν ξηρὸν 136 γῆν, τὸ δὲ ὑγρὸν ὕδωρ. ἕκαστον δὲ τούτων ἄλλας τομὰς ἐδέχετο· γῆ μὲν γὰρ εἰς ἠπείρους καὶ νήσους διηρείτο, ὕδωρ δὲ εἰς θάλασσαν καὶ ποταμοὺς καὶ ὄσον πότιμον <καὶ οὐ πότιμον><sup>1</sup>, ἀήρ δὲ εἰς τὰς θέρους καὶ χειμῶνος τροπὰς, πῦρ δὲ εἰς τὸ χρειῶδες —ἄπληστον δ' ἔστι καὶ φθαρτικὸν τοῦτο—καὶ κατὰ τούναντίον εἰς τὸ σωτήριον, ὅπερ εἰς τὴν οὐρανοῦ 137 σύστασιν ἀπεκληροῦτο. ὥσπερ δὲ τὰ ὄλοσχερῆ, οὕτω καὶ τὰ κατὰ μέρος ἔτεμνεν, ὧν τὰ μὲν ἄψυχα, τὰ δ' ἔμψυχα ἦν· καὶ τῶν ἀψύχων τὰ μὲν ἐν ταυτῷ μένοντα, ὧν δεσμὸς ἕξις, τὰ δ' οὐ μεταβατικῶς, ἀλλ' αὐξητικῶς κινούμενα, ἃ φύσις ἢ ἀφάνταστος ἐζώου· καὶ τούτων τὰ μὲν τῆς ἀγρίας ὕλης οἰστικά ἀγρίων καρπῶν, οἱ τροφή θηρίοις εἰσίν, τὰ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρου, ὧν γεωργία τὴν προστασίαν καὶ ἐπιμέλειαν ἔλαχε· τίκτει δὲ καρποὺς τῷ πάντων ἡμερωτάτῳ ζώων πρὸς ἀπόλαυσιν, 138 ἀνθρώπῳ. καὶ μὴν ὄν τρόπον τὰ ἄψυχα, καὶ τὰ ψυχῆς μεμοιραμένα διήρει—τούτων γὰρ ἐν μὲν ἀλόγων, ἐν δὲ λογικῶν ἀπέκρινεν εἶδος—καὶ λαβῶν ἐκάτερον πάλιν ἔτεμνεν τὸ μὲν ἄλογον εἰς ἀτίθασόν

<sup>1</sup> <καὶ οὐ πότιμον> is my insertion. Cf. De Som. i. 18 in a similar discussion, καὶ τὸ μὲν πότιμον, τὸ δ' οὐ πότιμον. A triple division into sea, rivers, and drinkable is not very reasonable.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 569.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 135-138

a second division of heavy and light on different principles. He divided the light into cold and hot, giving to the cold the name of air and to the naturally hot the name of fire. The heavy He divided into wet and dry, and He called the dry "land" and the wet "water." Each of these was subjected to 136 further dissections. Land was divided into continents and islands, water into sea and rivers and into drinkable and undrinkable, air into the changes which mark summer and winter, and fire into the merely useful variety, which is also voracious and destructive, and on the other hand the preservative variety which was set apart to form the heaven.<sup>a</sup>

Just as He divided the main con- 137 stituents of the universe, so did He also with their subdivisions. These are partly living and partly lifeless. Among the lifeless some remain in the same place, held together by the tie of "cohesion"<sup>b</sup>; others move by expansion, without changing their position, vitalized by a natural and unconscious<sup>c</sup> growth, and among them, those which are of wild stuff produce wild fruits, which serve for food to the beasts of the field. Others are of a stuff which admits of cultivation, the management of which is a charge allotted to husbandry, and these produce fruits for the enjoyment of the animal most removed from the wild, that is man. Further, as He had divided the 138 lifeless, so did He with those which participate in life, distinguishing one species as rational, the other as irrational. Then again He split up each of these. The irrational He divided into the domesticated

<sup>b</sup> See note on Leg. All. ii. 22, and the fuller explanation both of ἔξις and φύσις in this sense in Quod Deus 35 ff.

<sup>c</sup> Or "incapable of receiving impressions"; cf. De Op. 13, De Plant. 13.

PHILO

- τε καὶ χειρόηθες εἶδος, τὸ δὲ λογικὸν εἰς ἀφθαρτόν 139 τε καὶ θνητόν. καὶ τοῦ θνητοῦ δύο μοίρας εἰργά-ζετο, ὧν τὴν μὲν ἀνδρῶν, τὴν δὲ γυναικῶν ἐπ-εφήμισε. καὶ κατ' ἄλλον μὲν[τοι]<sup>1</sup> τρόπον τὸ ζῶον εἰς ἄρρεν ἔτεμνε καὶ θῆλυ, ἐδέχετο δὲ καὶ ἄλλας ἀναγκαίας τομάς, αἱ διέστελλον πτηνὰ μὲν χερσαίων, χερσαῖα δὲ ἐνύδρων, ἐνυδρα δὲ ἀμφοῖν τῶν 140 ἄκρων. οὕτως ὁ θεὸς ἀκονησάμενος τὸν τομέα τῶν συμπάντων αὐτοῦ λόγον διήρει τὴν τε ἄμορφον καὶ ἄποιον τῶν ὅλων οὐσίαν καὶ τὰ ἐξ αὐτῆς ἀπο-κριθέντα τέτταρα τοῦ κόσμου στοιχεῖα καὶ τὰ διὰ τούτων παγέντα ζῶα τε αὐτὰ καὶ φυτά.
- 141 XXVIII. Ἐπεὶ δ' οὐ μόνον φησὶ “διεῖλεν,” ἀλλὰ καὶ “μέσα διεῖλεν,” ἀναγκαῖον κἄν ὀλίγα περὶ τῶν ἴσων τμημάτων ὑπομνήσαι. τὸ μὲν
 [493] γὰρ ἄκρως κατὰ μέσον | διαιρεθὲν ἴσα ἀποτελεῖ
 142 τμήματα. ἄνθρωπος μὲν οὖν οὐδεὶς δύναται ἀκριβῶς ἂν ποτε εἰς ἴσα διελεῖν οὐδέν, ἀλλ' ἀνάγκη τῶν τμημάτων τὸ ἕτερον ἐνδεῖν ἢ περιττεύειν, καὶ εἰ μὴ μείζονι, ἀλλὰ τοι βραχεῖ μέρει πάντως, ὃ τάχα τὴν αἴσθησιν ἐκφεύγει τοῖς ἀδρομερεστέροις ἐκ φύσεως καὶ ἔθους προσβάλλουσιν ὄγκοις, τοὺς δὲ ἀτόμους καὶ ἀμερεῖς καταλαβεῖν ἀδυνατοῦσαν.
- 143 ἰσότητος δὲ οὐδέν γενητόν<sup>2</sup> αἴτιον ἀδεκάστῳ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθείας εὐρίσκεται. εἰσὶν οὖν ὁ θεὸς μόνος ἀκριβοδίκαιος εἶναι καὶ μέσα μόνος δύνασθαι διαιρεῖν τὰ τε σώματα καὶ πράγματα, ὡς μηδὲν

<sup>1</sup> Wend.'s text retains μέντοι and places a colon after θῆλυ, thus making an antithesis between the sex-division of mankind and that of animals as a whole, which seems not very reasonable. Possibly also ἐτέμνε<το>.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἴσον (Pap. ηττον).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 138-143

and undomesticated, and the rational into immortal and mortal. Of the mortal He made two portions, 139 one of which He named men, the other women. And while following one principle<sup>a</sup> He split up the animal kingdom as a whole into male and female, it was also subjected to other necessary partitions, which distinguished the winged from land animals, these from the aquatic, the last named being inter- 140 mediate to the other two. Thus God sharpened the edge of his all-cutting Word, and divided universal being, which before was without form or quality, and the four elements of the world which were formed by segregation from it, and the animals and plants which were framed with them as materials.

XXVIII. But the text not only says "He divided" 141 but also "He divided them in the middle"; and it is therefore necessary to make a few remarks on the subject of equal sections, for when anything is divided exactly in the middle it produces equal sections. Now no man can divide anything into 142 equal sections with exactitude, but one of the sections is sure to be either less or greater than the other. Even if there is no great difference, there must always be a small one which easily eludes our perception, which by nature and habit establishes contact with masses of greater volume, but is unable to grasp those which do not admit of partition or division. No created thing is found to produce equality 143 if tested by the unprejudiced standard of truth. It seems, then, that God alone is exact in judgement and alone is able to "divide in the middle" things material and immaterial, in such a way that no <sup>a</sup> Or "on another principle," if Wend.'s text and punctuation is followed. See critical note.

PHILO

τῶν τμημάτων μηδ' ἀκαρεῖ καὶ ἀμερεῖ τινι πλεόν ἢ ἔλαττον γενέσθαι, τῆς δ' ἀνωτάτω καὶ ἄκρας 144 ἰσότητος μεταλαχεῖν ἰσχύσαι. εἰ μὲν οὖν τὸ ἴσον μίαν εἶχεν ἰδέαν, ἰκανῶς ἂν τὰ λεχθέντα εἴρητο, πλείονων δ' οὐσῶν οὐκ ἀποκνητέον τὰ ἀρμόττοντα προσθεῖναι. λέγεται γὰρ ἴσον καθ' ἓνα μὲν τρόπον ἐν ἀριθμοῖς, ὡς δύο δυσὶ καὶ τρία τρισὶ καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ταύτῃ, καθ' ἕτερον δὲ ἐν μεγέθεσιν, ὧν μήκη, πλάτη, βάθη, διαστάσεις εἰσὶν, παλαιστῆς γὰρ παλαιστῆ καὶ πήχει πήχυς ἴσα μεγέθει· δυνάμει δὲ ἔστιν ἄλλα, ὡς τὰ ἐν σταθμοῖς καὶ 145 μέτροις. ἀναγκαῖα δὲ ἔστιν ἰσότητος ἰδέα καὶ ἡ διὰ ἀναλογίας, καθ' ἣν καὶ τὰ ὀλίγα τοῖς πολλοῖς καὶ τὰ βραχέα τοῖς μείζουσιν ἴσα νενόμισται· ἢ καὶ πόλεις ἐπὶ καιρῶν εἰώθασι χρῆσθαι κελεύουσαι τὸ ἴσον ἕκαστον τῶν πολιτῶν ἀπὸ τῆς οὐσίας εἰσφέρειν, οὐ δήπου ἐν ἀριθμῷ, ἀλλ' ἀναλογία τοῦ περὶ τὸν κληρὸν<sup>1</sup> τιμήματος, ὥστ' ὁ δραχμὰς ἑκατὸν εἰσενεγκῶν τῷ τὸ τάλαντον εἰσενεγκόντι δόξαι ἂν ἐπιδεδωκέναι τὸ ἴσον.

146 XXIX. τούτων προϋποτυπωθέντων ἴδε πῶς μέσα διελῶν ἴσα διεῖλε κατὰ πάσας τὰς ἰσότητος ἰδέας ἐν τῇ τοῦ παντὸς οὐρανοῦ γενέσει.
 ἀριθμῷ μὲν οὖν ἴσα τὰ βαρέα τοῖς κούφοις ἔτεμνε, δύο δυσὶ, γῆν καὶ ὕδωρ, τὰ βάρος ἔχοντα, τοῖς φύσει κούφοις, ἀέρι καὶ πυρί, καὶ πάλιν ἐν ἐνί, τὸ μὲν ξηρότατον τῷ ὑγροτάτῳ, γῆν ὕδατι, τὸ δὲ

<sup>1</sup> mss. and Pap. καιρὸν.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 569.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 570.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 143-146

section is greater or less than another by even an infinitesimal difference, and each can partake of the equality which is absolute and plenary. Now if 144 equality had only one form, what has been said would be enough ; but as it has several forms we must not shrink from adding what is fitting.

The term " equal " is applied in one way to numbers, as when we say that two is equal to two, and three to three, and the same with other numbers. It is applied in another way to magnitudes, the dimensions of which are lengths, breadths and depths. For one handbreadth is equal to another handbreadth and one cubit to another cubit in magnitude. Other things again are equal in capacity or force, as is the case with weights and measures of content.<sup>a</sup>

One essential form of equality is the proportional, in 145 which the few are regarded as equal to the many, and the small to the greater.<sup>b</sup> This is often employed by states on special occasions when they order each citizen to make an equal contribution from his property, not of course numerically equal, but equal in the sense that it is proportionate to the valuation of his estate, so that one who had paid 100 drachmas might be considered to have given a sum equal to one who paid a talent.

XXIX. In 146 the light of this preliminary sketch, observe how God in " dividing in the middle," actually did divide equally according to all the forms of equality, when he created the universe. First, as to equality of number he made the light parts equal in number to the heavy parts, earth and water which are heavy being two, and fire and air which are naturally light being two also. Again by this division we have one and one in the driest and the wettest, that is earth

PHILO

- ψυχρότατον τῷ θερμοτάτῳ, πυρὶ ἀέρα, τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τρόπον καὶ σκότος φωτὶ καὶ ἡμέραν νυκτὶ καὶ χειμῶνι θέρος καὶ ἔαρι μετόπωρον καὶ ὅσα τούτων 147 συγγενῆ· μεγέθει δ' ἴσα ἐν οὐρανῷ μὲν τοὺς παραλλήλους κύκλους, τοὺς τε ἰσημερινούς, ἔαρινόν καὶ μετοπωρινόν, καὶ τοὺς τροπικούς, θερινόν τε καὶ χειμερινόν, ἐπὶ γῆς δὲ ζώνας, δύο μὲν ἴσας ἀλλήλαις, αἱ πρὸς τοῖς πόλοις εἰσὶ κατεψυγμέναι καὶ διὰ τοῦτ' ἀοίκητοι, δύο δὲ τὰς μεθορίους τούτων τε καὶ τῆς διακεκαυμένης, ἃς δι' εὐκρασίαν φασὶν οἰκεῖσθαι, τὴν μὲν πρὸς τοῖς νοτίοις, τὴν 148 δὲ πρὸς τοῖς βορείοις κειμένην. μήκει δ' ἴσα ἐστὶ καὶ τὰ χρόνου διαστήματα, ἡ μεγίστη [494] ἡμέρα τῇ μεγίστῃ νυκτὶ καὶ πάλιν ἡ | βραχυτάτῃ τῇ βραχυτάτῃ καὶ ἡ μέση τῇ μέσῃ. τὰ δὲ τῶν ἄλλων ἡμερῶν τε καὶ νυκτῶν ἴσα μεγέθη μάλιστα 149 μηνύειν αἱ ἰσημερίαι δοκοῦσιν. ἀπὸ μὲν γὰρ τῆς ἔαρινῆς ἄχρι θερινῶν τροπῶν ἡ μὲν ἡμέρα πρόσθεσιν, ἡ δὲ νύξ ἀφαίρεσιν δέχεται, ἕως ἂν ἡ τε μεγίστη ἡμέρα καὶ βραχυτάτῃ νύξ ἀποτελεσθῶσιν· ἀπὸ δὲ θερινῶν τροπῶν ἀνακάμπτων ὁ ἥλιος τὴν αὐτὴν ὁδὸν οὔτε θάττον οὔτε βραδύτερον, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἔχοντα διαστήματα, τάχισιν ἴσοις χρώμενος μέχρι τῆς μετοπωρινῆς ἰσημερίας ἔρχεται, καὶ ἴσην ἀποτελέσας ἡμέραν νυκτὶ παραύξειν ἄρχεται τὴν νύκτα μειῶν τὴν ἡμέραν ἄχρι 150 χειμερινῆς τροπῆς· καὶ ὅταν ἀποτελέσῃ νύκτα μὲν μεγίστην, ἡμέραν δὲ βραχυτάτην, κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ πάλιν διαστήματα ἀνακάμπτων ἐπὶ τὴν ἔαρινὴν ἰσημερίαν ἀφικνεῖται. οὕτως τὰ χρόνων διαστή-

WHO IS THE HEIR, 146-150

and water, and in the coldest and the hottest, that is air and fire. In the same way we have one and one in darkness and light, in day and night, in winter and summer, in spring and autumn, and in the other examples of the same nature. For equality of magnitude, He gave us the parallel circles in heaven, those of the equinox in spring and autumn, and those of the solstice in summer and winter, while on earth there are the zones, two of which are equal to each other, namely those which adjoin the poles, frigid and therefore uninhabited, and two which are bordered by the last named and the torrid zone, these two habitable, as we are told, because of their temperate climate, one of them on the south side and the other on the north. The time intervals, 148 too, are equal in length, the longest day to the longest day and the shortest to the shortest and the two which come half-way to each other. And equality in magnitude in the other days and nights is shewn particularly well in the equinoxes. For from the 149 spring equinox to the summer solstice something is continually taken from the night and added to the day, until the longest day and shortest night are finally reached. And after the summer solstice the sun turns back along the same course, moving neither quicker nor slower, but with the same unchanging intervals, and thus maintaining equal speed it reaches the autumn equinox, and after completing the equality of day and night begins to increase the night and diminish the day until the winter solstice. And when it has brought the night to its longest and 150 the day to its shortest, it turns back again observing the same intervals and arrives at the spring equinox. In this way the time intervals, though they seem to ματα ἄνισα εἶναι δοκοῦντα ἰσότητος τῆς κατὰ τὸ μέγεθος ἐν οὐχὶ ταῖς αὐταῖς ἀλλ' ἐν διαφορούσαις τοῦ ἔτους ὥραις μεταποιεῖται. XXX.

PHILO

- 151 τὸ παραπλήσιον μέντοι καὶ ἐν τοῖς μέρεσι τῶν ζώων καὶ μάλιστα ἀνθρώπων θεωρεῖται. ποὺς γὰρ ποδὶ καὶ χεὶρ χεὶρὶ καὶ τὰ ἄλλα σχεδὸν ἅπαντα ἴσα μεγέθει, τὰ ἐπὶ δεξιὰ τοῖς κατ' εὐώνυμα.

τὰ δ' ἴσα δυνάμει πάμπολλά ἐστὶν ἐν τε ξηροῖς καὶ ὑγροῖς, ὧν ἡ ἐπὶ κρισις ἐν μέτροις καὶ πλάστιγξι καὶ τοῖς παραπλησίοις θεωρεῖται.

- 152 Ἐναλογία δὲ σχεδὸν τὰ πάντα ἐστὶν ἴσα, μικρά τε αὐ καὶ μεγάλα ὅσα ἐν τῷ παντὶ κόσμῳ. λέγουσι γὰρ οἱ ἀκριβέστατα περὶ τῶν τῆς φύσεως ἐξητακότες, ὅτι ἀναλογία μὲν ἴσα τὰ τέτταρα στοιχειᾶ ἐστὶν, ἀναλογία δὲ καὶ ὁ κόσμος ἅπας κραθεὶς τὸ ἴσον ἐκάστω τῶν μερῶν ἀπονεμούσῃ συνέστη τε

- 153 καὶ συσταθεὶς εἰς ἅπαν διαμένει· καὶ τὰ περὶ ἡμᾶς μέντοι τέτταρα, ξηρόν, ὑγρόν, ψυχρόν τε αὐ καὶ θερμόν, τὴν δι' ἀναλογίας ἰσότητα κερασαμένην ἀρμόσασθαι, καὶ μηδὲν ἄλλο <ἡμᾶς><sup>1</sup> ἢ κρᾶσιν εἶναι τῶν τεσσάρων δυνάμεων ἀναλογίας ἰσότητι κρα-

- 154 θεισῶν. XXXI. ἐπιὼν δέ τις ἕκαστα μῆκος ἂν ἄπειρον τῷ λόγῳ δύναιτ' ἂν περιθεῖναι. τὰ <γὰρ> βραχύτατα ζῶα τοῖς μεγίστοις ἀναλογία σκοπῶν ἴσα ἂν εὖροι, ὡς χελιδόνα ἀετῷ καὶ τρίγλαν κήτει καὶ μύρμηκα ἐλέφαντι. καὶ γὰρ σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴ καὶ πάθη, ἀλγηδόνες τε καὶ ἡδοναί, πρὸς δὲ καὶ οἰκειώσεις καὶ ἀλλοτριώσεις καὶ ὅσα ζώων

<sup>1</sup> ἡμᾶς is absent from the mss., but Pap. has ητιαιαν.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 150-154

be unequal, may lay claim to equality of magnitude, not indeed at the same, but at different seasons of the year. XXX. Much the same may 151 be observed in the parts of living animals, particularly of men. For one foot or one hand is equal in magnitude to the other and in almost all cases the same holds that the right side is equal to the left.

As for equality in force or capacity there is a host of examples in both wet and dry substances, of which we form our estimate by means of measures of content, balances and the like.

As for proportional equality, we find it practically 152 in everything great or small, throughout the whole world. Those who have most carefully examined the facts of nature say that the four elements are proportionally equal, and that the whole world received and retains for ever its frame, through being compounded according to this same proportion, which assigned an equal measure to each of the parts. They tell us, too, that our four constituents, dry, wet, 153 cold and hot, have been mixed and harmonized by proportional equality and that we are nothing more than a compound of the four factors mixed on this principle. XXXI. If we went into each case, we 154 could prolong the consideration of the subject to infinity. For we should find on observation that the smallest animals are proportionally equal to the largest, as the swallow to the eagle, the mullet to the whale, and the ant to the elephant. For their body, soul<sup>a</sup> and feelings, whether of pain or pleasure, and also their affinities and their aversions and every other sensation of which animal nature is capable,

<sup>a</sup> i.e. their φαντασία and ὄμμα; see Leg. All. ii. 23. Perhaps "consciousness" or "animal nature."

PHILO

- φύσις χωρεῖ, πάντα σχεδόν ἔστιν ὁμοιότροπα τῷ 155 τῆς ἀναλογίας ἰσούμενα κανόνι. οὕτως ἐθάρρησαν ἔνιοι καὶ τῷ παντὶ κόσμῳ τὸ βραχύτατον ζῶον, ἄνθρωπον, ἴσον ἀποφῆναι κατιδόντες ὅτι ἐκάτερον ἐκ σώματος καὶ ψυχῆς καθέστηκε λογικῆς, ὥστε καὶ ἐναλλάττοντες βραχὺν μὲν κόσμον τὸν ἄνθρωπον, μέγαν δὲ ἄνθρωπον ἔφασαν τὸν κόσμον 156 εἶναι. ταῦτα δ' οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ διδάσκουσιν, ἀλλ' ἐγνώσαν ὅτι ἡ τοῦ θεοῦ τέχνη, [1495] καθ' ἣν | ἐδημιούργει τὰ σύμπαντα, οὔτε ἐπίτασιν οὔτε ἄνεσιν δεχομένη, μένουσα δὲ ἡ αὐτὴ κατὰ τὴν ἐν ὑπερβολαῖς ἀκρότητα τελείως ἕκαστον τῶν ὄντων δεδημιούργηκε, πάσιν ἀριθμοῖς καὶ πάσαις ταῖς πρὸς τελειότητα ἰδέαις καταχρησαμένου τοῦ 157 πεποιηκότος. XXXII. “κατὰ γὰρ τὸν μικρὸν καὶ κατὰ τὸν μέγαν,” ὡς φησι Μωυσῆς, ἔκρινε γεννῶν καὶ σχηματίζων ἕκαστα, μήτε δι' ἀφάνειαν ὕλης ὑφελών τι τοῦ τεχνικοῦ μήτε διὰ λαμπρότητα 158 προσθείς· ἐπεὶ καὶ ὅσοι τῶν τεχνιτῶν εἰσι δόκιμοι, ἃς ἂν παραλάβωσιν ὕλας, εἴτε πολυτελεῖς εἶεν εἴτε καὶ εὐτελέσταται, δημιουργεῖν ἐθέλουσιν ἐπαινετῶς. ἤδη δὲ τινες καὶ προσφιλοκαλοῦντες τὰ ἐν ταῖς εὐτελεστέραις οὐσίαις τεχνικώτερα τῶν ἐν ταῖς πολυτελέσιν εἰργάσαντο βουλευθέντες προσ-θήκη τοῦ ἐπιστημονικοῦ τὸ κατὰ τὴν ὕλην ἐνδέον 159 ἐπαισιῶσαι. τίμιον δ' οὐδὲν τῶν ἐν ὕλαις παρὰ θεῷ· διὸ τῆς αὐτῆς μετέδωκε πᾶσι τέχνης ἐξ ἴσου. παρὸ καὶ ἐν ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς λέγεται· “εἶδεν ὁ θεὸς τὰ πάντα ὅσα ἐποίησεν, καὶ ἰδοὺ καλὰ λίαν,” τὰ δὲ τοῦ

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 570.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 154-159

are with hardly an exception alike when equalized by the rule of proportion. On this principle some have ventured to affirm that the tiny animal man is equal to the whole world, because each consists of body and reasonable soul, and thus they declare that man is a small world and alternatively the world a great man.

This pronouncement of theirs is not wide of the mark. They judge that the master art of God by which He wrought all things is one that admits of no heightening or lowering of intensity<sup>a</sup> but always remains the same and that through its transcendent excellence it has wrought in perfection each thing that is, every number and every form that tends to perfectness being used to the full by the Maker. XXXII. For He judged equally about the little and the great, to use Moses' words (Deut. i. 17), when He generated and shaped each thing, nor was He led by the insignificance of the material to diminish, or by its splendour to increase, the art which He applied. For all craftsmen of repute, whatever materials they use, whether they be costly or of the cheapest, wish so to use them, that their work shall be worthy of praise. In fact people have been known to produce a higher class of work with the cheaper than with the more costly substances; their feeling for beauty was enhanced<sup>b</sup> and by additional science they wished to compensate for inferiority of material. But with God no kind of material is held in honour, and therefore He bestowed upon them all the same art, and in equal measure. And so in the holy Scriptures we read, "God saw all things which He had made and behold, they were very good" (Gen. i.

<sup>b</sup> Probably a reminiscence of the φιλοκαλούμεν μετ' εὐτελείας of Thuc. ii. 40.

PHILO

- αὐτοῦ τυγχάνοντα ἐπαίνου παρὰ τῷ ἐπαινοῦντι
- 160 πάντως ἐστὶν ἰσότημα. ἐπήνεσε δὲ ὁ θεὸς οὐ τὴν δημιουργηθεῖσαν ὕλην, τὴν ἄψυχον καὶ πλημμελῆ καὶ διαλυτὴν, ἔτι δὲ φθαρτὴν ἐξ ἑαυτῆς ἀνώμαλόν τε καὶ ἄνισον, ἀλλὰ τὰ ἑαυτοῦ τεχνικὰ ἔργα κατὰ μίαν ἴσῃν καὶ ὁμαλὴν δύναμιν καὶ ἐπιστήμην ὁμοίαν καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν ἀποτελεσθέντα. παρὸ καὶ τοῖς τῆς ἀναλογίας κανόνισιν ἴσα καὶ ὅμοια πάντα πᾶσιν ἐνομήσθη κατὰ τὸν τῆς τέχνης καὶ ἐπιστήμης λόγον.
- 161 XXXIII. Ἰσότητος δὲ εἰ καὶ τις ἄλλος ἐπαινέτης γέγονε Μωυσῆς, πρῶτον μὲν ὑμνῶν ἀεὶ καὶ πανταχοῦ καὶ δικαιοσύνην, ἧς ἴδιον, ὡς καὶ αὐτό που δηλοῖ τοῦνομα, τὸ δίχα τέμνειν εἰς μοίρας τὰ τε σώματα καὶ τὰ πράγματα ἴσας, εἶτα ψέγων ἀδικίαν, τὴν ἀνισότητος τῆς ἐχθίστης δημιουργόν.
- 162 ἀνισότης δὲ τοὺς διδύμους πολέμους ἔτεκε, τόν τε ξενικὸν καὶ τὸν ἐμφύλιον, ὡς ἔμπαλιν εἰρήνην ἰσότης. τὰ δ' ἐγκώμια δικαιοσύνης καὶ τοὺς ψόγους ἀδικίας ἐναργέστατα διασυνίστησιν, ὅταν λέγῃ· “οὐ ποιήσετε ἄδικον ἐν κρίσει, ἐν μέτροις, ἐν σταθμοῖς, ἐν ζυγοῖς· ζυγὰ δίκαια καὶ στάθμια δίκαια καὶ μέτρα δίκαια καὶ χοῦς δίκαιος ἔσται ὑμῖν,” καὶ ἐν Ἐπινομίδι “οὐκ ἔσται ἐν μαρσίππῳ σου στάθμιον καὶ στάθμιον, μέγα ἢ μικρόν· οὐκ ἔσται ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ σου μέτρον καὶ μέτρον, μέγα ἢ μικρόν· στάθμιον ἀληθινὸν καὶ δίκαιον ἔσται σοι, ἵνα πολυήμερος γένη ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἧς κύριος ὁ θεός σου δίδωσί σοι ἐν κλήρῳ, ὅτι βδέλυγμα κυρίῳ

<sup>a</sup> δίκη being supposed to be derived from δίχα.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 159-162

31), and things which receive the same praise must be of equal honour in the eyes of the praiser. Now 160
God praised not the material which He had used for His work, material soul-less, discordant and dissoluble, and indeed in itself perishable, irregular, unequal, but He praised the works of His own art, which were consummated through a single exercise of power equal and uniform, and through knowledge ever one and the same. And thus by the rules of proportion everything was accounted similar and equal to everything else, according to the principle which His art and His knowledge followed.

XXXIII. Moses too above all others shews him- 161 self a eulogist of equality ; first by always and everywhere lauding justice too whose special property it is, as the name itself seems to shew,<sup>a</sup> to divide into two equal parts things material and immaterial ; secondly by censuring injustice, the creator of inequality in its most hateful form. Inequality is the mother 162 of the twins, foreign war and civil war, just as its opposite, equality, is the mother of peace. Moses presents most clearly his glorification of justice and his censure of injustice, when he says " ye shall do nothing unjust in judgement, in measures, in weights, in balances ; your balances shall be just, your weights just and your measures just and your quart just " (Lev. xix. 35, 36) and in Deuteronomy, " There shall not be in thy bag divers weights, great and small : there shall not be in thy house divers measures, great and small. A true and a just weight thou shalt have, that thy days may be long in the land, which the Lord thy God gives thee in inheritance, because every one who doeth these things is an abomination to the Lord, every one who doeth injustice

PHILO

- 163 πᾶς ποιῶν ταῦτα, πᾶς ποιῶν ἄδικα.” οὐκοῦν ὁ φιλοδίκαιος θεὸς ἀδικίαν βδελύττεται καὶ μεμίσηκε, στάσεως καὶ κακῶν ἀρχήν. ποῦ δ’ ἰσότητα τὴν δικαιοσύνης τροφὸν ὁ νομοθέτης οὐκ ἀποδέχεται ἀρξάμενος | ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ παντὸς οὐρανοῦ γενέσεως; “διεχώρισε” γὰρ φησὶν “ὁ θεὸς ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ φωτὸς καὶ ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ σκότους· καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ὁ θεὸς τὸ φῶς ἡμέραν καὶ τὸ σκότος νύκτα.” ἡμέραν γὰρ καὶ νύκτα καὶ
- 164 φῶς καὶ σκότος ἰσότης ἔταξε<sup>1</sup> τοῖς οὐσι. διείλεν ἰσότης καὶ τὸν ἄνθρωπον εἰς ἄνδρα καὶ γυναῖκα, δύο τμήματα, ἄνισα μὲν ταῖς ῥώμαις, πρὸς ὃ δὲ ἔσπευσεν ἢ φύσις, τρίτου τινὸς ὁμοίου γένεσιν, ἰσαίτατα. “ἐποίησε” γὰρ φησὶν “ὁ θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρωπον, κατ’ εἰκόνα θεοῦ ἐποίησεν αὐτόν, ἄρσεν καὶ θῆλυ ἐποίησεν” οὐκέτ’ αὐτόν, ἀλλ’ “αὐτοὺς” ἐπιφέρει πληθυντικῶς, ἐφαρμόττων τὰ εἶδη τῶ γενέει διαιρεθέντα, ὡς εἶπον, ἰσότητι. XXXIV.
- 165 ψυχὸς γε μὴν καὶ καῦμα καὶ θέρος καὶ ἔαρ ἀνέγραψε, τὰς ἐτησίους ὥρας πάλιν τῶ αὐτῶ τομεί διαιρουμένας. αἶ γε μὴν πρὸ ἡλίου τρεῖς ἡμέραι ταῖς μεθ’ ἡλίου ἰσάριθμοι γεγόνασιν, ἐξάδος τμηθείσης ἰσότητι πρὸς αἰῶνος καὶ χρόνου δῆλωσιν· αἰῶνι μὲν γὰρ τὰς πρὸ ἡλίου τρεῖς ἀνατέθεικε, χρόνῳ δὲ τὰς μεθ’ ἡλίου, ὅς ἐστι μίμημα αἰῶνος.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Wend. suggests, ἔταξεν (so Pap.) <έν> τοῖς οὐσι.

<sup>a</sup> The point of the sentence is not clear. Perhaps he means that, as we have already shewn (§ 99) that day and night are essentially equal, Moses, by putting them at the outset of the creation story, praises equality. Or the stress may lie on ἀνὰ μέσον as in itself indicating equality (so in § 166). But in this case γὰρ is unintelligible. Perhaps correct to ἄρα.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 163-166

(Deut. xxv. 13-16). So then the God who loves 163 justice hates and abominates injustice, the source of faction and evil.

As for equality, the nurse of justice, where does the Lawgiver fail to shew his approval? We find it first in the story of the creation of the whole heaven. "God separated," he says, "between the light and between the darkness, and God called the light day and the darkness night" (Gen. i. 4, 5). For equality gave day and 164 night, light and darkness, their place among the things which are.<sup>a</sup> Equality too divided the human being into man and woman, two sections unequal indeed in strength, but quite equal as regards what was nature's urgent purpose, the reproduction of themselves in a third person. "God made man," he says, "made him after the image of God. Male and female He made"—not now "him" but "them" (Gen. i. 27). He concludes with the plural, thus connecting with the genus mankind the species which had been divided, as I said, by equality. XXXIV. Then he mentions cold and heat, summer 165 and spring, the seasons of the year, as being separated by the same divider, equality (Gen. viii. 22). Again the three days before the sun's creation are equal in number to the three which followed it (Gen. i. 5 ff.), the whole six being divided by equality to express time and eternity.<sup>b</sup> For God dedicated the three before the sun to eternity, and the three after it to time, which is a copy of eternity.<sup>c</sup> And the 166

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 570.

<sup>c</sup> A reminiscence of Timaeus 37 D. See Quod Deus 32 and note. The analogy to the Timaeus shews that  $\chi\rho\acute{o}\nu\omega$  and not  $\eta\lambda\iota\omicron\nu$  is the antecedent of  $\delta\varsigma$ , as otherwise it might have been thought to be by comparison with De Mig. 40.

PHILO

- 166 τὰς δὲ τοῦ ὄντος πρώτας δυνάμεις, τὴν τε χαριστικήν, καθ' ἣν ἔκοσμοπλάστει, ἢ προσαγορεύεται θεός, καὶ τὴν κολαστικήν, καθ' ἣν ἄρχει καὶ ἐπιστατεῖ τοῦ γενομένου, ἢ προσονομάζεται κύριος, ὑπ' αὐτοῦ φησιν ἔστῶτος ἐπάνω μέσου διαστέλλεσθαι. “λαλήσω γάρ σοι” φησὶν “ἄνωθεν τοῦ ἱλαστηρίου ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν δυεῖν Χερουβὶμ,” ἢ ἐπιδείξῃ ὅτι αἱ πρεσβύταται τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεις ἰσάζουσιν, ἢ τε δωρητικὴ καὶ κολαστήριος, αὐτῷ
- 167 τομεῖ χρώμεναι. XXXV. τί δ'; αἱ στήλαι τῶν γενικῶν δέκα νόμων, ἃς ὀνομάζει πλάκας, οὐ δύο εἰσὶν ἰσάριθμοι τοῖς τῆς ψυχῆς μέρεσι, λογικῶ καὶ ἀλόγῳ, ἃ παιδευθῆναί τε καὶ σωφρονισθῆναι χρή, τεμνόμεναι πάλιν ὑπὸ τοῦ θεσμοθέτου<sup>1</sup> μόνου; “αἱ γὰρ πλάκες ἔργον θεοῦ ἦσαν, καὶ ἡ γραφὴ γραφὴ θεοῦ κεκολαμμένη ἐν ταῖς πλαξί.” καὶ μὴν τῶν ἐν αὐταῖς δέκα λόγων, οἱ κυρίως εἰσὶ θεσμοί, διαίρεσις ἴση γέγονεν εἰς πεντάδας, ὧν ἡ μὲν προτέρα τὰ πρὸς θεὸν δίκαια,
- 169 ἡ δὲ ἑτέρα τὰ πρὸς ἀνθρώπους περιέχει. τῶν μὲν οὖν πρὸς θεὸν δικαίων πρῶτός ἐστι θεσμὸς ὁ ἐναντιούμενος τῇ πολυθέῳ δόξῃ, διδάσκων ὅτι μοναρχεῖται ὁ κόσμος· δεύτερος δὲ ὁ περὶ τοῦ μὴ θεοπλαστεῖν τὰ μὴ αἷτια γραφῶν καὶ πλαστῶν ἐπιβούλοις τέχναις, ἃς<sup>2</sup> Μωυσῆς ἐξήλασε τῆς καθ'

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read θεσμοθέτου <θεοῦ>. The absolute use of θεσμοθέτης for God as legislator does not seem to have a parallel.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. als from Pap. This is undue subservience to the Papyrus. The relative attraction is confined in Greek to defining relative clauses, i.e. those without which the antecedent is unintelligible. See Madvig, Greek Syntax, 103 R. 1.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 166-169

primary Potencies of the Existent, namely that through which He wrought the world, the beneficent, which is called God, and that by which He rules and commands what He made, that is the punitive, which bears the name of Lord, are as Moses tells us, separated by God Himself standing above and in the midst of them. "I will speak to thee," it says, "above the mercy-seat in the midst of the two Cherubim" (Ex. xxv. 21).<sup>a</sup> He means to shew that the primal and highest Potencies of the Existent, the beneficent and the punitive, are equal, having Him to divide them. XXXV. Again, 167 are not the slabs of the ten general laws, which he calls tables, two, thus equal in number to the parts of the soul, the rational and irrational, which must be trained and chastened? These tables too were cut<sup>b</sup> by the Divine Legislator and by Him only. For "the tables were the work of God and the writing on them was the writing of God, graven on the tables" (Ex. xxxii. 16). Further, the ten words 168 on them, divine ordinances in the proper sense of the word, are divided equally into two sets of five, the former comprising duties to God, and the other duties to men. The first commandment among the duties 169 to God, is that which opposes the creed of polytheism, and its lesson is that the world has one sole ruler. The second forbids us to make gods of things which are not the causes of existence, employing for that purpose the mischievous arts of the painter and sculptor which Moses expelled from his common-

<sup>a</sup> The same interpretation of the Cherubim is given in De Fuga 100, and (of the Cherubim in Gen. iii.) De Cher. 27 ff.

<sup>b</sup> "Cut" covers both the cutting out and the graving of the tables, but also suggests the thought of God as the τομείς.

PHILO

- αὐτὸν πολιτείας αἰδίων φυγὴν ἐπ' αὐταῖς ψηφι-
 [497] σάμενος, ἢν' ὁ μόνος καὶ | πρὸς ἀλήθειαν τιμᾶται
 170 θεός· τρίτος δὲ ὁ περὶ ὀνόματος κυρίου,<sup>1</sup> <οὐ τοῦ> ὁ οὐδ' ἦλθεν εἰς γένεσιν—ἄρρητον γὰρ τὸ ὄν—, ἀλλὰ τοῦ ταῖς δυνάμεσιν ἐπιφημισθέντος, διείρηται γὰρ αὐτὸ μὴ λαμβάνειν ἐπὶ ματαιῶ· τέταρτος δὲ ὁ περὶ τῆς ἀειπαρθένου καὶ ἀμήτορος ἑβδομάδος, ἵνα τὴν ἀπραξίαν αὐτῆς μελετῶσα γένεσις εἰς μνήμην τοῦ ἀοράτως πάντα δρῶντος ἔρχηται· 171 πέμπτος δὲ ὁ περὶ γονέων τιμῆς· καὶ γὰρ οὗτος ἱερὸς ἔχων τὴν ἀναφορὰν οὐκ ἐπ' ἀνθρώπους, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τὸν σποράς καὶ γενέσεως τοῖς ὅλοις αἴτιον, παρ' ὃν μήτηρ τε καὶ πατήρ γεννᾶν ἔδοξαν, οὐ 172 γεννῶντες, ἀλλ' ὄργανα γενέσεως ὄντες. μεθόριος δ' ὁ θεσμὸς οὗτος ἐγράφη<sup>2</sup> τῆς τε πρὸς εὐσέβειαν τεινούσης πεντάδος καὶ τῆς ἀποτροπᾶς τῶν πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοίους ἀδικημάτων περιεχούσης, ἐπειδήπερ οἱ θνητοὶ γονεῖς τέλος εἰσὶν ἀθανάτων δυνάμεων, αἱ πάντα γεννῶσαι κατὰ φύσιν ἐπέτρεψαν ὑστάτῳ καὶ τῷ θνητῷ γένει μιμησαμένῳ τὴν περὶ τὸ γεννᾶν τέχνην σπείρειν· ἀρχὴ μὲν γὰρ γενέσεως ὁ θεός, τὸ δ' ἔσχατον καὶ ἀτιμότατον, τὸ θνητὸν 173 εἶδος, τέλος. ἢ δ' ἑτέρα πεντάς ἐστιν ἀπαγόρευσις μοιχείας, ἀνδροφονίας, κλοπῆς, ψευδομαρτυρίας, ἐπιθυμίας. οὗτοι γενικοὶ σχεδὸν πάντων ἀμαρτημάτων εἰσὶ κανόνες, ἐφ' οὓς ἕκαστον

<sup>1</sup> I suggest κυρίου <τοῦ θεοῦ> in accordance with the i.xx.; κύριος alone is not the name given to both Potencies, as the sequel implies. See App. p. 570.

<sup>2</sup> So Wend. from Pap.: mss. ἐτάγη.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 570.

<sup>b</sup> Or "seventh day." See App. p. 570.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 169-173

wealth<sup>a</sup> and sentenced to perpetual banishment. The purpose of this law is that the sole and true god may be duly honoured. The third is concerned with 170 the name of the Lord, not that name the knowledge of which has never even reached the world of mere becoming—He that is cannot be named in words—but the name which is given to His Potencies. We are commanded not to take this name in vain. The fourth is concerned with the number Seven,<sup>b</sup> the ever-virgin, the motherless. Its purpose is that creation, observing the inaction which it brings, should call to mind Him who does all things invisibly.<sup>c</sup> The fifth is about honouring parents. This is of the 171 sacred kind, since its reference is not to men, but to Him who causes all things to be sown and come into being, through whom it is that the father and mother appear to generate, though they do not really do so, but are the instruments of generation. This commandment was graven on the borderline 172 between the set of five which makes for piety to God and the set which comprises the prohibitions against acts of injustice to our fellows. The mortal parentage is but the final form which immortal powers take. They in virtue of their nature generate all things, but have permitted mortality also at the final stage to copy their creative art and to beget. For God is the primary cause of generation, but the nethermost and least honoured kind, the mortal-kind, is the ultimate. The other set of five forbids 173 adultery, murder, theft, false witness, covetousness. These are general rules forbidding practically all sins, <sup>c</sup> See note on De Mig. 91. The sense needed here is rather "who ever works." Perhaps ἀεί has fallen out before ἀοπάτως.

PHILO

- ἀναφέρεσθαι τῶν ἐν εἴδει συμβέβηκεν.
- 174 XXXVI. ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ἐνδελεχεῖς θυσίας ὄρᾳς εἰς ἴσα διηρημένας, ἣν τε ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῶν οἱ ἱερεῖς προσφέρουσι τῆς σεμιδάλεως καὶ τὴν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἔθνους τῶν δυεῖν ἀμνῶν, οὓς ἀναφέρειν διείρηται. πρῶτῳ γὰρ τὰ ἡμίση τῶν λεχθέντων καὶ τὰ ἕτερα δειλινῆς ἐκέλευσεν ἱεουργεῖν ὁ νόμος, ἵνα καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν μεθ' ἡμέραν καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν νύκτωρ ἀρδομένων ἅπασιν ἀγαθῶν ὁ θεὸς εὐχαριστήται.
- 175 ὄρᾳς καὶ τοὺς προτιθεμένους ἄρτους ἐπὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς τραπέζης, ὡς <εἰς> ἴσα μέρη διανεμηθέντες οἱ δώδεκα ἀριθμῶ καθ' ἑξάδα τίθενται μνημεῖα τῶν ἰσαρίθμων φυλῶν, ὧν τὴν ἡμίσειαν ἢ ἀρετὴ Λεῖα κεκλήρωται ἐξ τεκοῦσα φυλάρχας, τὴν δ' ἕτεραν ἡμίσειαν οἱ τε Ῥαχὴλ
- 176 καὶ οἱ τῶν παλλακῶν νόθοι. ὄρᾳς καὶ τοὺς ἐπὶ τοῦ ποδήρου δύο λίθους τῆς σμαράγδου πρὸς τε τοῖς δεξιοῖς καὶ πρὸς τοῖς εὐωνύμοις ἰσότητι διηρημένους, οἷς καθ' ἑξάδα ἐγγέλυπται τὰ τῶν δώδεκα φυλαρχῶν ὀνόματα, θεία γράμματα ἐστηλιτευμένα, θείων φύσεων ὑπομνήματα.
- 177 τί δ'; οὐχὶ δύο ὄρη συμβολικῶς δύο γένη λαβῶν καὶ πάλιν ἰσότητι διακρίνας ἀναλογούσῃ τὸ μὲν ἀπένειμε τοῖς εὐλογούσι, τὸ δ' αὖ τοῖς κατ-
- [498] αρωμένοις ἐξ ἑφ' ἑκατέρου | στήσας φυλάρχας, ἵνα τοῖς χρείοις νουθεσίας οὖσιν ἐπιδείξῃ, ὅτι καὶ ἰσάριθμοι <ταῖς> εὐλογίαις αἱ ἀραι καὶ σχεδόν, εἰ

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the twelve signs of the Zodiac. See Quaest. in Ex. ii. 109, where this is definitely stated, the two emeralds being supposed to represent the two hemispheres, to each of which six of the twelve signs at different parts of the year belong.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 173-177

and to them the specific sins may in each case be referred. XXXVI. To pass to a different 174 matter, you find the same division into equal parts in the permanent sacrifices, both in the oblation of fine flour, which the priests offer for themselves, and in that offered on behalf of the nation, consisting of the two lambs which they are ordered to bring. In both these the law prescribes that half of the offerings named shall be sacrificed in the morning and half in the evening (Lev. vi. 20; Ex. xxix. 38, 39), that God may be thanked both for the day-time and the night-time blessings which He showers upon all.

Observe also the loaves set forth upon 175
the holy table, how the twelve are divided into equal parts and placed in sets of six each, as memorials of the twelve tribes, half of them belonging to Leah or Virtue the mother of six patriarchs, and half to the children of Rachel and the base-born sons of the concubines. You see, too, how the two emeralds on 176 the long robe, one on the right and one on the left, are divided equally, on which are cut the names of the twelve patriarchs, six on each, inscribed by divine graving, to remind us of divine beings (Ex. xxviii. 9-12).<sup>a</sup>

Once more, does not Moses 177 take two mountains, that is symbolically two kinds, and again distinguishes between them according to proportional equality, assign one to those who bless, the other to those who curse? Then he places upon them the twelve patriarchs (Deut. xxvii. 11-13) to shew to those who need warning, that curses are equal in number to blessings and (if we may say so

So also De Spec. Leg. i. 87, though there it is said of the twelve stones on the breastplate in Ex. xxviii. 21. For divine natures = heavenly bodies cf. De Conf. 133.

PHILO

178 θέμις εἰπεῖν, ἰσότιμοι; ὁμοίως γὰρ οἱ τε ἔπαινοι τῶν ἀγαθῶν καὶ οἱ ψόγοι τῶν μοχθηρῶν ὠφελουσιν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸ φυγεῖν τὸ κακὸν τῷ τάγαθὸν ἐλέσθαι παρὰ τοῖς εὖ φρονουσιν ὁμοιον καὶ ταυτὸν ἐνομίσθη.

179 XXXVII. καταπλήττει με καὶ ἡ τῶν προσαγομένων τῷ ἰλασμῷ δυεῖν τράγων ἐπὶ κρισις ὁμοῦ καὶ διανομὴ τεμνομένων ἀδήλων καὶ ἀτεκμάρτων τομεῖ, κλήρω· λόγων γὰρ δυεῖν ὁ μὲν τὰ τῆς θείας ἀρετῆς πραγματευόμενος ἀνιερουταὶ καὶ ἀνατίθεται θεῷ, ὁ δὲ τὰ τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης κακοδαιμονίας ἐζηλωκῶς γενέσει τῇ φυγάδι· καὶ γὰρ ὃν ἔλαχεν αὕτη κληρον, ἀποπομπᾶιον καλοῦσιν οἱ χρησιμοί, ἐπειδὴ μετανίσταται καὶ διώκισται καὶ μακρὰν 180 ἀπελήλαται σοφίας. ἐπισήμων γε μὴν καὶ ἀσήμων ὡσπερ νομισμάτων, οὕτως καὶ πραγμάτων ὄντων ἐν τῇ φύσει πολλῶν ὁ ἀόρατος τομεὺς οὐ δοκεῖ σοι διελεῖν πάντ' εἰς μοίρας ἴσας καὶ τὰ μὲν ἐπίσημα καὶ δόκιμα τῷ παιδείας ἐραστῇ, τῷ δὲ ἀμαθαίνοντι τὰ ἀτύπωτα καὶ ἄσημα προσνεῖμαι; “ ἐγένετο ” γὰρ φησι “ τὰ μὲν ἄσημα τοῦ Λάβαν, τὰ δὲ 181 ἐπίσημα τοῦ Ἰακώβ.” καὶ γὰρ ἡ ψυχὴ, τὸ κῆρινον, ὡς εἶπέ τις τῶν ἀρχαίων, ἐκμαγεῖον, σκληρὰ μὲν οὔσα καὶ ἀντίτυπος ἀπωθεῖ καὶ ἀποσειέται τοὺς ἐπιφερομένους χαρακτηῆρας καὶ ἀσχημάτιστος ἐξ ἀνάγκης διαμένει, πειθήνιος δ' ὑπάρχουσα καὶ μετρίως ὑπέικουσα βαθεῖς τοὺς τύπους δέχεται καὶ ἀναμαξαμένη τὰς σφραγίδας ἄκρως διαφυλάττει τὰ ἐνσημανθέντα ἀνεξάλειπτα 182 εἶδη. XXXVIII. θαυμαστὴ μέντοι καὶ

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Plant. 61 and note.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 178-182

without offence) of equal value. For praises given 178 to the good and censure given to the bad are equally beneficial, since, in the judgement of men of sense, avoiding evil and choosing good are one and the same.

XXXVII. I am deeply impressed, 179 too, by the contrast made between the two he-goats offered for atonement, and the difference of fate assigned to them even when the division is effected by that uncertain and fortuitous divider, the lot. We see two ways of thinking; one whose concern is with things of divine virtue is consecrated and dedicated to God; the other whose aspirations turn to poor miserable humanity is assigned to creation the exile. For the lot which fell to creation is called by the oracles the lot of dismissal<sup>a</sup> (Lev. xvi. 8), because creation is a homeless wanderer, banished far away from wisdom. Further, nature abounds in things 180 which bear some shape or stamp and others which do not, even as it is with coins, and you may note how the invisible Severer divides them all into equal parts and awards those that are approved by their stamp to the lover of instruction, but those that have no stamp or mark to the man of ignorance. For we are told "the unmarked fell to Laban, but the marked to Jacob" (Gen. xxx. 42). For the soul is a 181 block of wax, as one of the ancients said,<sup>b</sup> and if it is hard and resistant it rejects and shakes off the attempted impressions and inevitably remains an unformed mass, whereas if it is docile and reasonably submissive it allows the imprints to sink deep into it, and thus reproducing the shape of the seal preserves the forms stamped upon it, beyond any possibility of effacement. XXXVIII. Marvellous too 182

<sup>b</sup> Theaetetus 191 c; cf. Quod Deus 43.

PHILO

- ἡ τοῦ τῶν θυσιῶν αἵματος ἴση διανομή, ἣν ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς Μωυσῆς φύσει διδασκάλῳ χρησάμενος διένειμε. “λαβὼν” γάρ φησι “τὸ ἥμισυ τοῦ αἵματος ἐνέχεεν εἰς κρατῆρας· τὸ δὲ ἥμισυ προσέχεε πρὸς τὸ θυσιαστήριον,” ὅπως ἀναδιδάξῃ, ὅτι τὸ σοφίας ἱερὸν γένος διττὸν ἐστι, τὸ μὲν θεῖον, τὸ δὲ ἀν-
- 183 θρώπινον· καὶ τὸ μὲν θεῖον ἀμιγῆς καὶ ἄκρατον, οὗ ἔνεκα τῷ ἀμιγεί καὶ ἀκράτῳ καὶ κατὰ τὴν μόνωσιν μονάδι ὄντι σπένδεται θεῷ, τὸ δὲ ἀνθρώπινον μικτὸν καὶ κεκραμένον, ὃ τοῦ μικτοῦ καὶ συνθέτου καὶ κεκραμένου γένους κατασκευάζονται ἡμῶν, ὁμόνοιαν καὶ κοινωνίαν καὶ τί γὰρ ἄλλο ἢ κρᾶσιν μερῶν τε καὶ ἡθῶν ἐργασόμενον.
- 184 ἀλλὰ γὰρ καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς τὸ μὲν ἀμιγῆς καὶ ἄκρατον μέρος ὃ ἀκραιφνέστατος νοῦς ἐστιν, ὃς ἀπ’ οὐρανοῦ καταπνευσθεὶς ἄνωθεν ὅταν ἄνοσος καὶ ἀπήμων διαφυλαχθῇ, τῷ καταπνεύσαντι καὶ ἀπαθῇ παντὸς κακοῦ διαφυλάξαντι προσηκόντως ὅλος εἰς ἱερὰν
- [499] σπονδὴν ἀναστοιχειωθείς ἀνταποδίδοται· | τὸ δ’ αὖ μικτὸν γένος τὸ αἰσθήσεών ἐστιν, ᾧ κρατῆρας
- 185 οἰκείους ἡ φύσις ἐδημιούργησε. κρατῆρες δὲ ὀράσεως μὲν ὀφθαλμοί, ἀκοῆς δὲ ὠτα καὶ μυκτῆρες ὀσφρήσεως καὶ τῶν ἄλλων αἰ ἀρμόττουσαι δεξαμεναί. τούτοις ἐπιχει τοῖς κρατήρησιν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος τοῦ αἵματος ἀξιῶν τὸ ἄλογον ἡμῶν μέρος ψυχωθῆναι καὶ τρόπον τινὰ λογικὸν γενέσθαι, ταῖς μὲν νοῦ θεαῖς περιόδοις<sup>1</sup> ἀκολουθήσαν, ἀγνεῦσαν δὲ τῶν ὀλκὸν ἀπατεῶνα προτεινόντων δύναμιν αἰσθητῶν.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. and Pap. νουθεσίας (-as). The text here printed is according to Wend.’s conjecture, though he does not actually adopt it. See App. p. 571.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 571.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 182-186

is the equal distribution of the sacrificial blood which the high priest Moses,<sup>a</sup> following Nature's guidance, made. He took, we read, the half of the blood and poured it into mixing-bowls and the half he poured upon the altar (Ex. xxiv. 6), to shew us that sacred wisdom is of a twofold kind, divine and human. The divine kind is without mixture or 183 infusion and therefore is poured as an offering to God, who knows no mixture or infusion and is in His isolation a unity. But the human is mixed with infusion and thus is scattered abroad upon us, who are a mixed compounded product of infusion, to create in us oneness of mind and fellowship, and in fact a "mixing" of our various parts and ways of conduct. But the part of the soul which is free from mixture and infusion is the mind in its perfect purity. This mind filled with the breath of inspira- 184 tion from heaven above is guarded from malady and injury, and then reduced to a single element is fitly rendered in its entirety as a holy libation to Him who inspired it and guarded it from all evil that could harm it. The mixed kind is the senses, and for this nature has created the proper mixing-bowls. The eyes are the "bowls" of sight, the 185 ears of hearing, the nostrils of the sense of smell, and each of the others has its fitting vessel. On these bowls the holy Word<sup>b</sup> pours of the blood, desiring that our irrational part should be quickened and become in some sense rational, following the divine courses of the mind, and purified from the objects of sense, which lure it with all their deceitful and seductive force. And was 186

<sup>b</sup> The High Priest as often is identified with the Logos. Cf. De Mig. 102.

PHILO

- 186 ἀρά γε οὐχὶ τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον καὶ τὸ δίδραχμον διενεμήθη τὸ ἅγιον, ἵνα τὸ μὲν ἡμῖσιν αὐτοῦ, τὴν δραχμὴν, καθιερώμεν λύτρα τῆς ἑαυτῶν ψυχῆς κατατιθέντες, ἣν ὁ μόνος ἀψευδῶς ἐλεύθερος καὶ ἐλευθεροποιὸς θεὸς ὤμῆς καὶ πικρᾶς παθῶν καὶ ἀδικημάτων δεσποτείας ἰκετευθεὶς, ἔστι δ' ὅτε καὶ χωρὶς ἰκεσίας, ἀνὰ κράτος ἐκλύει, τὸ δ' ἕτερον μέρος τῷ ἀνελευθέρῳ καὶ δουλοπρεπεῖ γένει καταλίπωμεν, οὗ κεκοινώνηκεν ὁ λέγων· “ ἠγάπηκα τὸν κύριόν μου,” τὸν ἠγεμόνα ἐν ἐμοὶ νοῦν, “ καὶ τὴν γυναῖκά μου,” τὴν φίλην καὶ οἰκουρὸν παθῶν αἰσθησιν, “ καὶ τὰ παιδιά,” τὰ κακὰ τούτων
- 187 ἔγγονα, “ οὐκ ἄπειμι ἐλεύθερος.” ἀνάγκη γὰρ καὶ τῷ τοιούτῳ γένει κληρὸν ἄκληρον καὶ ἀποπομπαιὸν ἐκ τοῦ διδράχμου δοθῆναι, ἐναντίον τῇ ἀνατεθειμένῃ δραχμῇ τε καὶ μονάδι· μονὰς δὲ οὔτε προσθήκην οὔτε ἀφαίρεσιν δέχεσθαι πέφυκεν, εἰκὼν οὔσα τοῦ
- 188 μόνου πλήρους θεοῦ. χαῦνα γὰρ τά γε<sup>1</sup> ἄλλα ἐξ ἑαυτῶν, εἰ δέ που καὶ πυκνωθείη, λόγῳ σφίγγεται θείῳ. κόλλα γὰρ καὶ δεσμὸς οὗτος πάντα τῆς οὐσίας ἐκπεπληρωκῶς· ὁ δ' εἷρας καὶ συνυφήνας ἕκαστα πλήρης αὐτὸς ἑαυτοῦ κυρίως ἐστίν, οὐ
- 189 δεηθεὶς ἑτέρου τὸ παράπαν. XXXIX. εἰκότως οὖν ἐρεῖ Μωυσῆς· “ ὁ πλουτῶν οὐ προσθήσει, καὶ ὁ πενόμενος οὐκ ἐλαττώσει ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡμῖσους τοῦ διδράχμου,” ὅπερ ἐστίν, ὡς ἔφην, δραχμὴ τε καὶ

<sup>1</sup> My correction for τε in Wend.'s and Mangey's texts.

<sup>a</sup> Or, if we follow the parallel passage in De Cher. 73 where the children of mind are the various mental activities, 376

WHO IS THE HEIR, 186-189

not the consecrated didrachmon portioned out on the same principle? We are meant to consecrate one half of it, the drachma, and pay it as ransom for our own soul (Ex. xxx. 12, 13), which God who alone is truly free and a giver of freedom releases with a mighty hand from the cruel and bitter tyranny of passions and wrongdoings, if we supplicate him, sometimes too without our supplication. The other half we are to leave to the unfree and slavish kind of which he is a member who says "I have come to love my master," that is "the mind which rules within me," and my wife, that is "sense" the friend and keeper of the passion's household, "and the children," that is the evil offspring of the passions.<sup>a</sup> "I will not go out free" (Ex. xxi. 5). For 187 to such a kind, as its share in the didrachmon, must needs be given the lot which is no lot, the lot of dismissal which is the opposite of the dedicated drachma. The drachma is a unit, and a unit admits neither of addition nor subtraction, being the image of God who is alone in His unity and yet has fullness. Other things are in themselves without coherence, 188 and if they be condensed, it is because they are held tight by the divine Word, which is a glue and bond, filling up all things with His being.<sup>b</sup> He who fastens and weaves together each separate thing is in literal truth full of His own self, and needs nothing else at all. XXXIX. With reason then will Moses say, 189 "He that is rich shall not add, and he that is poor shall not diminish, from the half of the didrachmon" (Ex. xxx. 15). That half, as I said, is both a drachma and those of sense the various sense processes, τούτων will refer to νοῦς and αἰσθησις. But κακά points rather to πάθη as the parents.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 571.

PHILO

μονάς· ἢ πᾶς ἂν ἀριθμὸς εἴποι τὸ ποιητικὸν ἐκεῖνο

ἐν σοὶ μὲν λήξω, σέο δ' ἄρξομαι.

- 190 λήγει τε γὰρ ἀναλυόμενος ὁ κατὰ σύνθεσιν ἀπειράκις ἄπειρος ἀριθμὸς εἰς μονάδα, ἄρχεται τε αὖ πάλιν ἀπὸ μονάδος εἰς ἀπερίγραφον συντιθέμενος πλήθος. διόπερ οὐδ' ἀριθμὸν, ἀλλὰ στοιχείον καὶ ἀρχὴν ἀριθμοῦ ταύτην ἔφασαν, οἷς ζητεῖν ἐπι-191 μελές. ἔτι τοίνυν τὴν οὐράνιον τροφήν—σοφία δέ ἐστιν—τῆς ψυχῆς, ἣν καλεῖ μάννα, διανέμει πᾶσι τοῖς χρησομένοις θεῖος λόγος ἐξ [500] ἴσου, πεφροντικῶς | διαφερόντως ἰσότητος. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ Μωυσῆς λέγων· “ οὐκ ἐπλεόνασεν ὁ τὸ πολύ, καὶ ὁ τὸ ἔλαττον οὐκ ἠλαττόνησεν,” ἠνίκα τῷ τῆς ἀναλογίας ἐχρήσαντο θαυμαστῶ καὶ περι-μαχῆτῳ μέτρῳ· δι' οὗ συνέβη μαθεῖν, ὅτι ἕκαστος “ εἰς τοὺς καθήκοντας ” παρ' ἑαυτῷ συνέλεξεν οὐκ ἀνθρώπους μᾶλλον ἢ λογισμοὺς καὶ τρόπους· ὁ γὰρ ἐπέβαλεν ἐκάστῳ τοῦτ' ἀπεκληρώθη προ-νοητικῶς, ὡς μήθ' ὑστερῆσαι μήτ' αὖ περιττεῦσαι.
- 192 XL. τὸ δὲ παραπλήσιον τῆς κατ' ἀναλογίαν ἰσότητος ἔστιν εὐρεῖν καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ λεγομένου Πάσχα. Πάσχα δέ ἐστιν, ὅταν ἡ ψυχὴ τὸ μὲν ἄλογον πάθος ἀπομαθεῖν μελετᾷ, τὴν δ' 193 εὐλογον εὐπάθειαν ἐκουσίως πάσχη· διείρηται γάρ, “ ἐὰν ὀλίγοι ὦσιν οἱ ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, ὥστε μὴ ἱκανοὺς εἶναι εἰς τὸ πρόβατον, τὸν πλησίον γείτονα προσ-

<sup>a</sup> Hom. Iliad ix. 97.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. all numbers are after all only so many units.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 571.

<sup>d</sup> Or, as Philo seems to understand the phrase, “those

WHO IS THE HEIR, 189-193

and a unit, to which every number might well address the words of the poet,

With thee I'll cease, with thee I will begin.<sup>a</sup>

For the whole series of numbers to infinity multiplied by infinity ends when resolved in the unit<sup>b</sup> and begins with the unit when arranged in an unlimited series. And therefore those who study such questions declare that the unit is not a number at all, but the element and source from which number springs.<sup>c</sup>

Further, the heavenly food of the soul, wisdom, which Moses calls "manna," is distributed to all who will use it in equal portions by the divine Word, careful above all things to maintain equality. Moses testifies to this in the words, "He that had much, had not too much, and he that had less did not lack" (Ex. xvi. 18), when they measured by the admirable and precious standard of proportion. And through this we come to understand how when each collected in his own store for his "belongings,"<sup>d</sup> these belongings are not human beings so much as thoughts and dispositions. For what fell to each was of set purpose so allotted, that there was neither short-coming nor superabundance.

XL. We may find a similar example of this proportioned equality in what is called the Passover, which is held when the soul studies to unlearn irrational passion and of its own free will experiences the higher form of passion which reason sanctions. For it is laid down that "if there be few in the house, so that they are not enough for the sheep, they shall which were meet and right for him," connecting it no doubt with the Stoics' τὰ καθήκοντα. The E.V. is different — "They gathered every man according to his eating."

PHILO

λαβεῖν, κατ' ἀριθμὸν ψυχῶν, ἵν' ἕκαστος τὸ ἀρκοῦν αὐτῷ συναριθμῆται," μοῖραν, ἧς ἔστιν ἐπάξιός τε καὶ χρεῖος, εὕρισκόμενος.

- 194 ἔπειδ' ἀν δὲ καὶ τρόπον χώρας τὴν ἀρετὴν εἰς τοὺς οἰκήτορας αὐτῆς ἐβελήσῃ διανεμῆναι, τοῖς πλείοσι πλεονάζειν καὶ τοῖς ἐλάττωσιν ἐλαττοῦν τὴν κατάσχεσιν προστάττει, δικαίων μῆτε τοὺς μείζους ἐλαττόνων ἀξιούν—κενοὶ γὰρ ἐπιστήμης ἔσονται—μῆτε τοὺς ἐλάττους μειζόνων· χωρῆσαι γὰρ τὸ μέγεθος αὐτῶν οὐ δυνήσονται. XLI.

- 195 τῆς δὲ κατ' ἀριθμὸν ἰσότητος ἐναργέστατον δεῖγμα ἔστι τὰ τε τῶν δώδεκα ἀρχόντων ἱερὰ δῶρα καὶ ἔτι τὰ ἀπὸ τῶν δώρων διανεμόμενα τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν· “ ἐκάστῳ ” γὰρ φησὶ “ τῶν υἱῶν Ἀαρὼν ἔσται τὸ ἴσον.” παγκάλῃ δὲ καὶ ἡ περὶ τὴν
- 196 σύνθεσιν τῶν ἐκθυμιωμένων ἔστιν ἰσότης· λέγεται γάρ· “ λάβε σεαυτῷ ἡδύσματα, στακτὴν, ὄνυχα καὶ χαλβάνην ἡδυσμοῦ καὶ λίβανον διαφανῆ, ἴσον ἴσω, καὶ ποιήσουσιν αὐτὸ θυμίαμα, μύρον μυρσιβοῦ ἔργον συνθέσεως καθαρᾶς, ἔργον ἅγιον.” ἕκαστον γὰρ τῶν μερῶν ἐκάστῳ φησὶ δεῖν ἴσον συνέρχεσθαι
- 197 πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ὄλου κρᾶσιν. ἔστι δ' οἶμαι τὰ τέτταρα ταῦτα, ἐξ ὧν τὸ θυμίαμα συντίθεται, σύμβολα τῶν στοιχείων, ἐξ ὧν ἀποτελέσθη σύμπας ὁ κόσμος. στακτὴν μὲν γὰρ ὕδατι, γῆ δὲ ὄνυχα, χαλβάνην δὲ ἀέρι, τὸν δὲ διαφανῆ λιβανωτὸν πυρὶ ἀπεικάζει· στακτὴ μὲν γὰρ παρὰ τὰς σταγόνας ὕδατῶδες, ξηρὸν δὲ ὄνυξ καὶ γεῶδες, τῇ δὲ χαλβάνῃ τὸ ἡδυσμοῦ πρὸς τὴν ἀέρος ἔμφασιν

WHO IS THE HEIR, 193-197

take in the next neighbour, according to the number of souls, that each may reckon what is sufficient for him" (Ex. xii. 4), thus gaining the portion which he deserves and needs. On the other hand, 194 when Moses would portion out virtue, like a country, to virtue's inhabitants he bids the more have more and the less to lessen their possession (Num. xxxv. 8), for he holds it right not to adjudge smaller shares to the greater, since then they will be devoid of knowledge, nor greater to the less, since they will not be able to contain the greatness of their shares.

XLI. Of numerical equality we have 195 the clearest example in the sacred gifts of the twelve rulers (Num. vii. 10 ff.) and further in the distributions made to the priests from the gifts. Each of the sons of Aaron, it says, shall have what is equal (Lev. vi. 40). We have also a splendid 196 example of equality in the composition of the frankincense offering. For we read "take to thyself sweet spices, oil drop of cinnamon, cloves and galbanum of sweetening and clear gum of frankincense, each in equal parts and they shall make of it incense, a perfume work of the perfumer of pure composition, a holy work" (Ex. xxx. 34, 35). Each of the parts, we see from his words, must be brought in equal measure, to make the combination of the whole. Now these 197 four, of which the incense is composed, are, I hold, a symbol of the elements, out of which the whole world was brought to its completion. Moses is likening the oil drop to water, the cloves to earth, the galbanum to air, and the clear gum to fire. For oil drop is watery because of its dripping, cloves are dry and earthy, and the words "of sweetening" are added to galbanum, to bring out the idea of air

PHILO

- προσετέθη—τὸ γὰρ εὐῶδες ἐν ἀέρι,—τῷ δὲ λιβα-198 ωτῷ τὸ διαφανὲς πρὸς φωτὸς ἔνδειξιν. διὸ καὶ τὰ βάρους ἔχοντα τῶν κούφων διεχώρισε, τὰ μὲν τῷ συμπλεκτικῷ συνδέσμῳ ἐνώσας, τὰ δὲ [501] διαλελυμένως ἐξενεγκῶν· ἔφη γάρ· “ λάβε σεαυτῷ ἡδύσματα, στακτὴν, ὄνυχα,” ταῦτα ἀσύνδετα, τῶν βάρους ἔχόντων, ὕδατός τε καὶ γῆς, σύμβολα, εἶτα ἀφ’ ἐτέρας ἀρχῆς μετὰ συμπλοκῆς “ καὶ χαλβάνην ἡδυσμοῦ καὶ λίβανον διαφανῆ,” ταῦτα πάλιν καθ’ ἑαυτά, τῶν κούφων, ἀέρος καὶ πυρός, [τὰ] σημεῖα.
 199 τὴν δὲ τούτων ἐμμελῆ σύνθεσιν τε καὶ κράσιν τὸ πρεσβύτατον καὶ τελειότατον ἔργον ἅγιον ὡς ἀληθῶς εἶναι συμβέβηκε, τὸν κόσμον, ὃν διὰ συμβόλου τοῦ θυμιάματος οἴεται δεῖν εὐχαριστεῖν τῷ πεποιηκότι, ἵνα λόγῳ μὲν ἢ μυρεψικῆ τέχνη κατασκευασθεῖσα σύνθεσις ἐκθυμιάται, ἔργῳ δὲ ὁ θεῖα σοφία δημιουργηθεὶς κόσμος ἅπας ἀνα-200 φέρηται πρῶτὴ καὶ δειλινῆς ὀλοκαυτούμενος. βίος γὰρ ἐμπρεπῆς κόσμῳ τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ποιητῇ συνεχῶς καὶ ἀδιαστάτως εὐχαριστεῖν, μονονοῦκ ἐκθυμῶντι καὶ ἀναστοιχειοῦντι ἑαυτὸν πρὸς ἔν-δειξιν τοῦ μηδὲν θησαυρίζεσθαι, ἀλλ’ ὅλον ἑαυτὸν ἀνάθημα ἀνατιθέναι τῷ γεγεννηκότι θεῷ.
 201 XLII. θαυμάζω καὶ τὸν μετὰ σπουδῆς ἀ-πνευστὶ δραμόντα συντόνως ἱερὸν λόγον, “ ἵνα στῆ μέσος τῶν τεθνηκότων καὶ τῶν ζώντων· εὐθὺς ” γὰρ φησι Μωυσῆς “ ἐκόπασεν ἡ θραῦσις.” ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἔμελλε κοπάσαι καὶ ἐπικουφίσαι τὰ περιθρύπτοντα καὶ καταγνύντα καὶ συντρί-382

WHO IS THE HEIR, 197-201

since air has fragrance, and the word "clear" to gum to indicate light. For the same reason he set 198 the heavy substances apart from the light, connecting the latter in a single phrase by means of the conjunction "and," but stating the heavy in the unconnected form. First he said "take to thyself sweet spices, oil drop of cinnamon, cloves, both these with the asyndeton, symbols of the heavy substances earth and water." Then he makes a fresh beginning using the conjunction, "and galbanum of sweetness and clear gum of frankincense," and these two, which indicate the light elements, air and fire, are also joined by an "and." And the mixture thus harmoniously 199 compounded proves to be that most venerable and perfect work, a work in very truth holy, even the world, which he holds should under the symbol of the incense offering give thanks to its Maker, so that while in outward speech it is the compound formed by the perfumer's art which is burnt as incense, in real fact it is the whole world, wrought by divine wisdom, which is offered and consumed morning and evening in the sacrificial fire. Surely it is a 200 fitting life-work for the world, that it should give thanks to its Maker continuously and without ceasing, wellnigh evaporating itself into a single elemental form, to shew that it hoards nothing as treasure, but dedicates its whole being at the shrine of God its Begetter.

XLII. I marvel 201 too when I read of that sacred Word, which ran in impetuous breathless haste "to stand between the living and the dead." For at once, says Moses, "the breaking was abated" (Num. xvi. 47, 48). And indeed how could all that shatters and crushes and ruptures our soul fail to be abated and lightened,

PHILO

βοντα τὴν ἡμετέραν ψυχὴν, διακρίναντος καὶ δια-τειχίσαντος τοῦ θεοφιλοῦς τοὺς ὀσίους, οἱ ζῶσιν ἀψευδῶς, ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνοσίων, οἱ τεθνήκασιν πρὸς 202 ἀλήθειαν, λογισμῶν; τῷ γὰρ ἐγγὺς εἶναι πολλάκις νοσοῦντων καὶ οἱ σφόδρα ὑγιαίνοντες ἐνδεξάμενοι τὴν ἐκείνων νόσον ἐμέλλησαν τελευτῆσαι. τοῦτο δ' ἀμήχανον ἔτι παθεῖν ἦν διαζευχθέντας ὄρω μέσῳ παγέντι δυνατωτάτῳ, ὃς τὰς ἐφόδους καὶ ἐπιδρομὰς τοῦ χείρονος μέρους ἀπὸ τοῦ βελτίονος 203 ἀπώσσει. τεθαύμακα δὲ ἔτι μᾶλλον, ἐπειδὴν κατ-ακούων τῶν λογίων ἀναδιδάσκωμαι, ὃν τρόπον εἰσηλθὲν ἡ νεφέλη μέση τῆς τε Αἰγυπτιακῆς καὶ τῆς Ἰσραηλιτικῆς στρατιᾶς· ὑπὸ γὰρ τοῦ φιλοπαθοῦς καὶ ἀθέου τὸ ἐγκρατὲς καὶ θεοφιλὲς γένος οὐκέτ' εἴασε διώκεσθαι τὸ σκεπαστήριον καὶ σωτήριον τῶν φίλων, ἀμυντήριον δὲ καὶ κολαστή-204 ριον τῶν ἐχθρῶν ὄπλον, ἡ νεφέλη. διανοίαις μὲν γὰρ ἀρετώσαις ἡρέμα σοφίαν ἐπιφεκάζει, τὴν ἀπαθῆ φύσει παντὸς κακοῦ, λυπραῖς δὲ καὶ ἀγόνοις ἐπιστήμης ἀθρόας κατανίφει τιμωρίας, κατακλυσμὸν 205 φθορὰν οἰκτίστην ἐπιφέρουσα. τῷ δὲ ἀρχαγγέλῳ καὶ πρεσβυτάτῳ λόγῳ δωρεὰν ἔδωκεν ἐξαίρετον ὃ τὰ ὄλα γεννήσας πατῆρ, ἵνα μεθόριος στὰς τὸ γενόμενον διακρίνη τοῦ πεποιηκότος. ὃ δ' αὐτὸς ἰκέτης μὲν ἐστὶ τοῦ θνητοῦ κηραίνοντος αἰεὶ πρὸς τὸ ἄφθαρτον, πρεσβευτῆς δὲ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος 206 πρὸς τὸ ὑπήκοον. ἀγάλλεται δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ δωρεᾷ καὶ [502] σεμνυνόμενος αὐτὴν | ἐκδιηγεῖται φάσκων· “ καὶ γὰρ εἰστήκειν ἀνὰ μέσον κυρίου καὶ ὑμῶν,” οὔτε ἀγένητος ὡς ὁ θεὸς ὢν οὔτε γενητὸς ὡς ὑμεῖς, ἀλλὰ μέσος τῶν ἄκρων, ἀμφοτέροις ὀμηρεῦων, παρὰ μὲν τῷ φυτεύσαντι πρὸς πίστιν τοῦ μὴ

WHO IS THE HEIR, 201-206

when the God-beloved separates and walls off the consecrated thoughts, which veritably live, from the unholy which are truly dead? For often proximity 202 to the sick brings to the very healthiest the infection of their sickness and sure death in its train. But this fate was no longer possible to the consecrated, hedged in by the mightiest of pales, fixed in the midst to repel from the better sort the onslaught and inroads of the worse. Still more am I lost in admira- 203 tion, when I listen to the oracles and learn how the cloud entered in the midst between the hosts of Egypt and Israel (Ex. xiv. 20). For the further pursuit of the sober and God-beloved race by the passion-loving and godless was forbidden by that cloud, which was a weapon of shelter and salvation to its friends, and of offence and chastisement to its enemies. For on minds of rich soil that cloud sends 204 in gentle showers the drops of wisdom, whose very nature exempts it from all harm, but on the sour of soil, that are barren of knowledge, it pours the blizzards of vengeance, flooding them with a deluge of destruction most miserable. To His 205 Word, His chief messenger, highest in age and honour, the Father of all has given the special prerogative, to stand on the border and separate the creature from the Creator. This same Word both pleads with the immortal as suppliant for afflicted mortality and acts as ambassador of the ruler to the subject. He glories in this prerogative and proudly 206 describes it in these words ' and I stood between the Lord and you ' (Deut. v. 5), that is neither uncreated as God, nor created as you, but midway between the two extremes, a surety to both sides ; to the parent, pledging the creature that it should never altogether σύμπαν ἀφηνιάσαι ποτὲ καὶ ἀποστῆναι τὸ γεγονὸς ἀκοσμίαν ἀντὶ κόσμου ἐλόμενον, παρὰ δὲ τῷ φύντι πρὸς εὐελπιστίαν τοῦ μήποτε τὸν ἴλεω θεὸν περιιδεῖν τὸ ἴδιον ἔργον. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἐπικηρυκεύομαι τὰ εἰρηναῖα γενέσει παρὰ τοῦ καθαιρεῖν πολέμους ἐγνωκότος εἰρηνοφύλακος αἰεὶ θεοῦ.

PHILO

- 207 XLIII. Διδάξας οὖν ἡμᾶς περὶ τῆς εἰς ἴσα τομῆς ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος καὶ πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἐναντίων ἐπιστήμην ἄγει φάσκων ὅτι τὰ τμήματα “ ἔθηκεν ἀντιπρόσωπα ἀλλήλοις.” τῷ γὰρ ὄντι πάνθ’ ὅσα ἐν κόσμῳ σχεδὸν ἐναντία εἶναι πέφυκεν, ἀρκτέον
- 208 δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν πρώτων· θερμὸν ἐναντίον ψυχρῷ καὶ ξηρὸν ὑγρῷ καὶ κοῦφον βαρεῖ καὶ σκότος φωτὶ καὶ νύξ ἡμέρα, καὶ ἐν οὐρανῷ μὲν ἡ ἀπλανῆς τῇ πεπλανημένη φορᾶ, κατὰ δὲ τὸν ἀέρα αἰθρία νεφώσει, νηνεμία πνεύμασι, θέρει χειμῶν, ἔαρι μετόπωρον—τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἀνθεῖ, τῷ δὲ φθίνει τὰ [δ’] ἔγγεια,—πάλιν ὕδατος τὸ γλυκὺ τῷ πικρῷ καὶ
- 209 γῆς ἡ στείρα τῇ γονίμῳ. καὶ τᾶλλα δὲ ἐναντία προὔπτα, σώματα ἀσώματα, ἔμφυχα ἄψυχα, λογικὰ ἄλογα, θνητὰ ἀθάνατα, αἰσθητὰ νοητά, καταληπτὰ ἀκατάληπτα, στοιχεῖα ἀποτελέσματα, ἀρχὴ τελευτή, γένεσις φθορά, ζωὴ θάνατος, νόσος ὑγεία, λευκὸν μέλαν, δεξιὰ εὐώνυμα, δικαιοσύνη ἀδικία, φρόνησις ἀφροσύνη, ἀνδρεία δειλία, σωφροσύνη ἀκολασία, ἀρετὴ κακία, καὶ τὰ τῆς ἐτέρας πάντα
- 210 εἶδη τοῖς τῆς ἐτέρας εἶδεσι πᾶσι· πάλιν γραμματικὴ ἀγραμματία, μουσικὴ ἀμουσία, παιδεία ἀπαιδευσία, συνόλως τέχνη ἀτεχνία· καὶ τὰ ἐν ταῖς τέχναις, φωνήεντα στοιχεῖα καὶ ἄφωνα, ὀξεῖς καὶ

WHO IS THE HEIR, 206-210

rebel against the rein and choose disorder rather than order ; to the child, warranting his hopes that the merciful God will never forget His own work. For I am the harbinger of peace to creation from that God whose will is to bring wars to an end, who is ever the guardian of peace."

XLIII. Having taught us the lesson of equal 207 division the Scripture leads us on to the knowledge of opposites, by telling us that "He placed the sections facing opposite each other" (Gen. xv. 10).
For in truth we may take it that everything in the world is by nature opposite to something else. Let us begin with what comes first. Hot is opposite to 208 cold, dry to wet, light to heavy, darkness to light, night to day. In heaven we have the course of the fixed stars opposite to the course of the planets, in the air cloudless to cloudy, calm to wind, summer to winter, spring when earth's growths bloom to autumn when they decay, again in water, sweet to bitter, and in land, barren to fruitful. And the other op- 209 posites are obvious: corporeal, incorporeal ; living, lifeless ; mortal, immortal ; sensible, intelligible ;
comprehensible, incomprehensible ; elementary, completed ; beginning, end ; becoming, extinction ;
life, death ; disease, health ; white, black ; right, left ; justice, injustice ; prudence, folly ; courage, cowardice ; continence, incontinence ; virtue, vice ;
and all the species of virtue are opposite to all the species of vice. Again we have the opposite con- 210 ditions of the literary and the illiterate, the cultured and the uncultured, the educated and the uneducated, and in general the scientific and the unscientific, and in the subject matter of the arts or sciences there are vocal sounds or vowels and non-

PHILO

- βαρεῖς φθόγγοι, εὐθείαι καὶ περιφερεῖς γραμμαί· 211 καὶ ἐν ζώοις καὶ φυτοῖς ἄγονα γόνιμα, πολυτόκα ὀλιγοτόκα, ὠπτόκα ζωοτόκα, μαλάκια<sup>1</sup> ὄστρακό-212 δερμα, ἄγρια ἡμερα, μονωτικά ἀγελαῖα· καὶ πάλιν πενία πλοῦτος, δόξα ἀδοξία, δυσγένεια εὐγένεια, ἔνδεια περιουσία, πόλεμος εἰρήνη, νόμος ἀνομία, εὐ-φυΐα ἀφυΐα, ἀπονία πόνος, νεότης γῆρας, ἀδυναμία δύναμις, ἀσθένεια ῥώμη. καὶ τί δεῖ τὰ καθ' ἕκαστον ἀναλέγεσθαι ἀπερίγραφα καὶ ἀπέρατ'<sup>2</sup> ὄντα 213 τῷ πλήθει; παγκάλως οὖν ὁ τῶν τῆς φύσεως ἐρμηνεύς πραγμάτων, τῆς ἀργίας καὶ ἀμελετησίας ἡμῶν λαμβάνων οἶκτον ἐκάστοτ' ἀφθόνως<sup>3</sup> ἀναδιδάσκει, καθὰ καὶ νῦν, "τὴν ἀντιπρόσωπον" ἐκάστων θέσιν οὐχ ὀλοκλήρων, ἀλλὰ
 [503] τμημάτων ὑπαρχόντων· | ἐν γὰρ τὸ ἐξ ἀμφοῖν τῶν
 214 ἐναντίων, οὐ τμηθέντος γνώριμα τὰ ἐναντία. οὐ τοῦτ' ἐστίν, ὃ φασιν Ἕλληνες τὸν μέγαν καὶ ἀοίδιμον παρ' αὐτοῖς Ἡράκλειτον κεφάλαιον τῆς αὐτοῦ προστησάμενον φιλοσοφίας αὐχεῖν ὡς ἐφ' εὐρέσει καινῆ; παλαιὸν γὰρ εὖρεμα Μωυσέως ἐστὶ τὸ ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ τὰ ἐναντία τμημάτων λόγον ἔχοντα ἀποτελεῖσθαι, καθάπερ ἐναργῶς ἐδείχθη.
 215 XLIV. Ταῦτα μὲν οὖν καὶ ἐν ἑτέροις ἀκριβώσομεν. ἄξιον δὲ καὶ ἐκεῖνο μὴ παρησυχασθῆναι· τὰ γὰρ λεγόμενα διχοτομήματα τριῶν ζώων δίχα διαιρεθέντων<sup>4</sup> ἐξ ἐγένετο, ὡς ἔβδομον τὸν τομέα

<sup>1</sup> Or μαλακά as mss. Wend prints μαλάκεια (presumably from Pap.), but μαλάκια is the ordinary form.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἀπέραν(σ)τα: Pap. ἀπορατ. See App. p. 572.

<sup>3</sup> mss. ἕκαστον ἀφανῶς (Pap. ἀφονως).

<sup>4</sup> mss. διαιρεθέντων: Pap. δίχα αἰρεθέντων.

<sup>a</sup> Probably Moses rather than God.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 210-215

vocal sounds or consonants, high notes and low notes, straight lines and curved lines. In animals 211 and plants there are barren and productive, prolific and unprolific, viviparous and oviparous, soft-skinned and shell-skinned, wild and tame, solitary and gregarious. In another class there are poverty and 212 riches ; eminence and obscurity ; high birth and low birth ; want and abundance ; war, peace ; law, lawlessness ; gifted nature, ungifted nature ; labour, inaction ; youth, age ; impotence, power ; weakness, strength. Why attempt to enumerate all and each of them, when their number is infinite and illimitable ?

How excellent then is 213 this lesson, which the interpreter<sup>a</sup> of Nature's facts in his pity for our sluggishness and carelessness lavishes on us always and everywhere, as he does in this passage, that in every case it is not where things exist as wholes, but where they exist as divisions or sections, that they must be "set facing opposite each other." For the two opposites together form a single whole, by the division of which the opposites are known. Is not this the truth which 214 according to the Greeks Heracleitus, whose greatness they celebrate so loudly, put in the fore front of his philosophy and vaunted it as a new discovery ? Actually, as has been clearly shewn, it was Moses who long ago discovered the truth that opposites are formed from the same whole, to which they stand in the relation of sections or divisions.

XLIV. This point will be discussed in detail else- 215 where. But there is another matter which should not be passed over in silence. What are called the half-pieces of the three animals when they are divided into two made six altogether and thus the

PHILO

- εἶναι λόγον, διαστέλλοντα τὰς τριάδας, μέσον 216 αὐτὸν ἰδρυμένον. τὸ παραπλήσιόν μοι δοκεῖ σαφέστατα μεμνηῦσθαι καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς ἱερᾶς λυχνίας· δεδημιούργηται γὰρ ἐξ καλαμίσκους ἔχουσα, τρεῖς ἑκατέρωθεν, ἐβδόμη δὲ αὐτῇ μέση, διαιρούσα καὶ διακρίνουσα τὰς τριάδας. “τορευτὴ” γάρ ἐστι, τεχνικὸν καὶ δόκιμον θεῖον ἔργον, “ἐξ ἑνὸς χρυσοῦ καθαροῦ”. τὸ γὰρ ἓν καὶ μόνον καὶ καθαρὸν ὄντως ἐβδομάδα τὴν ἀμήτορα γεγέννηκεν ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ μόνου, μὴ προσχρησάμενον ὕλη τὸ 217 παράπαν. χρυσοῦν δ’ οἱ ἐγκωμιάζοντες πολλὰ μὲν καὶ ἄλλα λέγουσι τῶν εἰς ἔπαινον, δύο δὲ τὰ ἀνωτάτω, ἓν μὲν, ὅτι ἰὸν οὐ παραδέχεται, ἕτερον δέ, ὅτι εἰς ὑμένας λεπτοτάτους ἀρραγῆς διαμένων ἐλαύνεται τε καὶ χεῖται. σύμβολον οὖν εἰκότως μείζονος φύσεως γέγονε, ἧ ταθεῖσα καὶ κεχυμένη καὶ φθάσασα πάντη πλήρης ὅλη δι’ ὅλων ἐστίν, εὐαρμόστως καὶ τὰ ἄλλα συνυφήνασα.
 218 περὶ τῆς προειρημένης λυχνίας ὁ τεχνίτης διαλεγόμενος πάλιν φησίν, ὅτι “ἐκ τῶν καλαμίσκων εἰσὶν οἱ βλαστοὶ ἐξέχοντες, τρεῖς ἑκατέρωθεν, ἐξισούμενοι ἀλλήλοις· καὶ τὰ λαμπάδια αὐτῶν, ἃ ἐστὶν ἐπὶ τῶν ἄκρων, καρυωτὰ ἐξ αὐτῶν· καὶ τὰ ἀνθέμια ἐν αὐτοῖς, ἧ ὥσιν ἐπ’ αὐτῶν οἱ λύχνοι καὶ τὸ ἀνθέμιον τὸ ἔβδομον ἐπ’ ἄκρου τοῦ λαμπαδίου ἐπὶ τῆς κορυφῆς ἄνωθεν, στερεὸν ὅλον χρυσοῦν· καὶ ἐπτὰ λυχνοὺς ἐπ’ 219 αὐτῆς<sup>1</sup> χρυσοῦς”. ὥστε διὰ πολλῶν ἤδη κατασκευάζεσθαι, ὅτι ἐξὰς εἰς δύο τριάδας ὑπὸ μέσου τοῦ ἐβδόμου λόγου διήρηται, καθάπερ ἔχει νυνί·

<sup>1</sup> mss. and Pap. αὐτοῖς: Wend. supports his correction by § 221 (LXX. αὐτῆς, i.e. λυχνίας).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 215-219

Severer, the Word, who separates the two sets of three and stationed himself in their midst, was the seventh. The same is clearly shewn, I think, in 216 the holy candlestick also, which is wrought with six branches, three on each side, and itself in the middle makes the seventh, dividing and separating the threes. It is "chased," a work of art, approved and divine, made "of one piece of pure gold" (Ex. xxv. 36). For the One, alone and absolutely pure, has begotten the Seven, whom no mother bore, begotten her by himself alone, and employing no other medium whatsoever.

Now those who sound the praises 217 of gold, among its many laudable qualities, place these two highest, first that it is proof against rust, secondly that when it is beaten and fused into the thinnest possible sheets, it remains unbroken. Thus it naturally becomes the symbol of a higher nature, which when stretched and fused and reaching out on every side, is still complete in its fullness throughout and weaves everything else into a harmonious whole.

Again, of the aforesaid 218 candlestick the Master-craftsman says in his discourse that "there are branchlets jutting out from the branches, three on each side, equal to each other, and their lamps at the end of them come out from them in nut shape, and the flower-patterns in them, that the candle-bearers may be on them, and the seventh flower-pattern at the end of the lamp, on the top above, all of solid gold, and seven golden candle-bearers on it" <sup>a</sup> (Ex. xxxviii. 15-17). Thus 219 by many proofs it is now established that the Six is divided into two Threes by the Word, the Seventh in their midst, just as we find in the present passage.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 572.

PHILO

- πᾶσα γὰρ ἡ λυχνία σὺν τοῖς ὀλοσχερεστάτοις μέρεσιν αὐτῆς, ἃ ἕξ ἐστίν, <ἕξ ἐπτὰ><sup>1</sup> ἐπάγη, λαμπαδίων ἐπτὰ, ἀνθεμίων ἐπτὰ, λύχνων ἐπτὰ.
 220 διαιροῦνται δὲ οἱ μὲν ἐξ λύχνου τῷ ἐβδόμῳ, τὰ δὲ ἀνθέμια ὁμοίως τῷ μέσῳ καὶ τὰ λαμπάδια τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐβδόμου καὶ μέσου, οἱ δὲ ἕξ καλαμίσκοι καὶ οἱ ἐκπεφυκότες ἴσοι βλαστοὶ
 [504] ὑπ' αὐτοῦ τοῦ | στελέχους τῆς <λυχνίας οὔσης><sup>2</sup>
 221 ἐβδόμης. XLV. πολὺν δ' ὄντα τὸν περὶ ἐκάστου λόγον ὑπερθετέον εἰσαυθίς. τοσοῦτο δὲ αὐτὸ μόνον ὑπομνηστέον, ὅτι τῆς κατ' οὐρανὸν τῶν ἐπτὰ πλανήτων χορείας μίμημά ἐστιν ἡ ἱερὰ 222 λυχνία καὶ οἱ ἐπ' αὐτῆς ἐπτὰ λύχνοι. πῶς; ἐρήσεταιί τις ἴσως· ὅτι, φήσομεν, ὄνπερ τρόπον οἱ λύχνοι, οὕτως καὶ τῶν πλανήτων ἕκαστος φωσφορεῖ· λαμπρότατοι γὰρ ὄντες ἀυγοειδεστάτας ἄχρι γῆς ἀποστέλλουσιν ἀκτίνας, διαφερόντως δ' ὁ 223 μέσος τῶν ἐπτὰ, ἥλιος. μέσον δ' αὐτὸν οὐ μόνον ἐπεὶ μέσῃν ἐπέχει χώραν, ὡς ἠξιώσαντινες, καλῶ, ἀλλ' ὅτι καὶ θεραπεύεσθαι καὶ δορυφορεῖσθαι πρὸς ὑπασπιζόντων ἐκατέρωθεν ἀξιώματος ἔνεκα καὶ μεγέθους καὶ ὠφελειῶν, ἃς τοῖς ἐπιγείοις ἅπασιν 224 παρέχει, δίκαιος ἄλλως ἐστί. τὴν δὲ τῶν πλανηήτων τάξιν ἀνθρωποὶ παγίως μὴ κατειληφότες—τί δ' ἄλλο τῶν κατ' οὐρανὸν ἴσχυσαν κατανοῆσαι βεβαίως;—εἰκοτολογοῦσιν, ἄριστα δ' ἐμοὶ στοχάζε-σθαι δοκοῦσιν οἱ τὴν μέσῃν ἀπονενεμηκότες ἠλίω

<sup>1</sup> <ἕξ ἐπτὰ> is my insertion: Wend. notes the corruption in the mss., since the genitives λαμπαδίων etc. have no construction.

<sup>2</sup> My insertion; τῆς ἐβδόμης clearly needs a noun. Mangey 392

WHO IS THE HEIR, 219-224

For the whole candlestick with its principal parts, six in number, consists of sevens, seven lamps, seven flower-patterns, seven candle-bearers. The six 220 candle-bearers are divided by the seventh, and so also the flower-patterns by the middle one, and the lamps in the same way by their seventh in the middle, and the six branches and the six branchlets which grow out of them by the main-stalk of the candlestick, which is seventh to them. XLV. On 221 each of these there is much to say, but it must be postponed to another occasion. Only thus much should be noted. The holy candlestick and the seven candle-bearers on it are a copy of the march of the choir of the seven planets.<sup>a</sup> How so? perhaps we 222 shall be asked. Because, we shall reply, each of the planets is a light-bringer, as the candle-bearers are. For they are supremely bright and transmit the great lustre of their rays to the earth, especially the central among the seven, the sun. I call it central, 223 not merely because it holds the central position, which some give as the reason, but because apart from this it has the right to be served and attended by its squires on either side, in virtue of its dignity and magnitude and the benefits which it provides for all that are on the earth. Now the order of the planets 224 is a matter of which men have no sure apprehension—indeed is there any other celestial phenomenon which can be known with real certainty?—and therefore they fall back on probabilities. But the best conjecture, in my opinion, is that of those who proposed τῆς ἐβδόμης <λυχνίας>. I suggest that the similarity of οὐσης to οὖς τῆς caused the omission.

<sup>a</sup> This explanation of the candlestick is also given by Josephus, Ant. iii. 6, 7.

---

PHILO

τάξιν, τρεῖς μὲν ὑπὲρ αὐτὸν καὶ μετ' αὐτὸν τοὺς ἴσους εἶναι λέγοντες, ὑπὲρ αὐτὸν μὲν φαίνοντα, φαέθοντα, πυρόεντα, εἰθ' ἥλιον, μετ' αὐτὸν δὲ στίλβοντα, φωσφόρον, τὴν ἀέρος γείτονα σελήνην.

225 ἐπίγειον οὖν βουλευθεὶς ἀρχετύπου τῆς κατ' οὐρανὸν σφαίρας ἑπταφεγγοῦς μίμημα παρ' ἡμῖν ὁ τεχνίτης γενέσθαι πάγκαλον ἔργον προσέταξε, τὴν λυχνίαν, δημιουργηθῆναι. δέδεικται δὲ καὶ ἡ πρὸς ψυχὴν ἐμφύερα αὐτῆς· ψυχὴ γὰρ τριμερῆς μὲν ἐστὶ, δίχα δὲ ἕκαστον τῶν μερῶν, ὡς ἐδείχθη, τέμνεται, μοιρῶν δὲ γενομένων ἐξ ἑβδομος εἰκότως τομεὺς ἦν ἀπάντων ὁ ἱερός καὶ θεῖος λόγος.

226 XLVI. ἄξιον δὲ μηδ' ἐκείνο παρ-ησυχασθῆναι· τριῶν ὄντων ἐν τοῖς ἀγίοις σκευῶν, λυχνίας, τραπέζης, θυμιατηρίου, τὸ μὲν θυμιατήριον εἰς τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν στοιχείων εὐχαριστίαν ἀνάγεται, ὡς ἐδείχθη πρότερον, ἐπεὶ καὶ αὐτὸ μοίρας ἔχει τῶν τεττάρων, γῆς μὲν τὰ ξύλα, ὕδατος δὲ τὰ ἐπιθυμιώμενα—πρότερον γὰρ τηκόμενα εἰς λιβάδας αὐθις ἀναλύεται,—τὸν δὲ ἀτμὸν ἀέρος, πυρὸς δὲ τὸ ἔξαπτόμενον—καὶ ἡ σύνθεσις δὲ λιβανωτοῦ καὶ χαλβάνης ὄνυχός τε καὶ στακτῆς τῶν στοιχείων σύμβολον,—ἡ δὲ τράπεζα εἰς τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν θνητῶν ἀποτελεσμάτων εὐχαριστίαν—ἄρτοι γὰρ καὶ σπονδεῖα ἐπιτίθενται αὐτῇ, οἷς ἀνάγκη χρῆσθαι τὰ τῆς τροφῆς δεόμενα,—ἡ δὲ λυχνία εἰς τὴν ὑπὲρ τῶν

---

<sup>a</sup> Elsewhere (e.g. De Conf. 21) this tripartite division is into νοῦς, θῦμος and ἐπιθυμία. But we nowhere have any suggestion of these being subdivided, and the ὡς ἐδείχθη leaves no doubt that the reference is to the classification given in § 132, where the three parts were ψυχὴ, λόγος (as speech) and αἶσθησις. The best we can make of it is that assign the middle place to the sun and hold that there are three above him and the same number below him. The three above are Saturn, Jupiter and Mars, and the three below are Mercury, Venus and the Moon, which borders on the lower region of air. So the Master-craftsman, wishing that we should 225 possess a copy of the archetypal celestial sphere with its seven lights, commanded this splendid work, the candlestick, to be wrought. We have shewn, too, its resemblance to the soul. For the soul is tripartite, and each of its parts, as has been shewn, is divided into two,<sup>a</sup> making six parts in all, to which the holy and divine Word, the All-severer, makes a fitting seventh.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 224-226

XLVI. Another point too 226 should not be passed over in silence. The furniture of the sanctuary is threefold, candlestick, table and altar of incense. In the altar, as was shewn above,<sup>b</sup> we have the thought of thanksgiving for the elements, for the altar itself contains parts of the four elements. Its wood is of earth, the incense offered on it of water, since it is first melted and then resolved into drops, while the perfume is of air and the part which is ignited of fire; moreover the compound made of frankincense, galbanum, cloves and oil of cinnamon (Ex. xxx. 34) is a symbol of the elements. In the table we have thanksgiving for the mortal creatures framed from these elements, since loaves and libations, which creatures needing food must use, are placed on it. In the candlestick we have thanksgiving for all the celestial world, here ψυχή is the whole ψυχή in its wider sense, there in the sense of the mind or ψυχή ψυχῆς (cf. § 55). But even so we shall not get consistency. See note on § 125.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. in § 199, though there it is the θυμίαμα only and not the θύματήριον which gives thanks.

PHILO

- κατ' οὐρανὸν ἀπάντων, ἵνα μηδὲν μέρος τοῦ
 [505] κόσμου | δίκην ἀχαριστίας ὄφλη, ἀλλ' εἰδῶμεν ὅτι πάντα τὰ μέρη τὰ κατ' αὐτὸν εὐχαριστεῖ, τὰ στοιχεῖα, τὰ ἀποτελέσματα, οὐ τὰ ἐπὶ γῆς μόνον, 227 ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἐν οὐρανῷ. XLVII. ἄξιον δὲ σκέψασθαι, διὰ τί τῆς τραπέζης καὶ τοῦ θυμιατηρίου τὰ μέτρα δηλώσας τῆς λυχνίας οὐδὲν ἀνέγραψε· μήποτε δι' ἐκεῖνο, ὅτι τὰ μὲν στοιχεῖα καὶ τὰ θνητὰ ἀποτελέσματα, ὧν ἡ τράπεζα καὶ τὸ θυμιατήριον σύμβολα, μεμέτρηται περατωθέντα ὑπ' οὐρανοῦ—αἶε γὰρ τὸ περιέχον τοῦ περιεχομένου μέτρον,—ὁ δ' οὐρανός, οὗ σύμβολόν ἐστιν ἡ 228 λυχνία, ἀπειρομεγέθης ἐστὶ. περιέχεται γὰρ ὑπ' οὐδενὸς σώματος, οὔτε ἰσομεγέθους αὐτῷ οὔτε ἀπείρου, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὑπὸ κενοῦ κατὰ Μωυσῆν<sup>1</sup> διὰ τὴν ἐν τῇ ἐκπυρώσει<sup>2</sup> μυθευομένην τερατολογίαν· ἔστι δὲ ὄρος αὐτοῦ ὁ θεός, ἡνίοχος καὶ κυβερνήτης 229 αὐτοῦ. ὥσπερ οὖν ἀπερίληπτον τὸ ὄν, οὕτως καὶ τὸ ὀριζόμενον ὑπ' αὐτοῦ μέτροις τοῖς εἰς τὴν ἡμετέραν ἐπίνοιαν ἤκουσιν οὐ μεμέτρηται, καὶ τάχα ἐπεὶ κυκλοτερῆς ὦν καὶ ἄκρως εἰς σφαῖραν ἀποτετορνευμένος μήκους καὶ πλάτους οὐ μετέχει.
 230 XLVIII. Εἰπὼν οὖν τὰ πρόποντα περὶ τούτων ἐπιλέγει· “ τὰ δὲ ὄρνεα οὐ διείλεν,” ὄρνεα καλῶν τοὺς πτηνοὺς καὶ πεφυκότας μετεωροπολεῖν δύο

<sup>1</sup> ἀλλ' . . . Μωυσῆν comes in Pap. after σώματος in the previous line, and in the mss. which do not omit it after περιέχεται γάρ. But see App. p. 572.

<sup>2</sup> Some mss. and Pap. πυρώσει, others πυργώσει, which Mangey adopted, rejecting ἀλλ' . . . Μωυσῆν and supposing a reference to the tower of Babel.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 226-230

that so no part of the universe may be guilty of unthankfulness and we may know that all its parts give thanks, the elements and the creatures framed from them, not only those on earth, but those in heaven.

XLVII. A question worth consideration is why the writer states the measurements of the table and the altar but says nothing about the measurements of the candlestick. Probably the reason is that the four elements and the mortal creatures framed from them, which are symbolized by the table and the altar, are measured and defined within limits by heaven, since that which contains is the measurement of that which is contained. On the other hand heaven, which is symbolized by the candlestick, is of infinite magnitude, not comprehended by any material substance either equal in size to it or infinite, nor again, as Moses shews, by a void, the existence of which is implied in the marvelmongers' fable of the general conflagration.<sup>a</sup> God is its boundary, God who guides and steers it. And so just as the Existent is incomprehensible, so also that which is bounded by Him is not measured by any standards which come within our powers of conception. Perhaps too it is immeasurable in the sense that being circular and rounded off into a perfect sphere it possesses neither length nor breadth.

XLVIII. Having said what was fitting on these matters, Moses continues, "the birds He did not divide" (Gen. xv. 10). He gives the name of birds to the two words or forms of reason, both of which are flagration, ἐκπύρωσις, with that of the void is explained in De Aet. 102. Fire implies expansion, and so when the world is thus immensely expanded it must expand into a void. In the same sense S. V. F. li. 537. There still remain, however, difficulties in the passage. See App. p. 572.

PHILO

- λόγους, ἓνα μὲν ἀρχέτυπον <τὸν> ὑπὲρ ἡμᾶς, 231 ἕτερον δὲ μίμημα τὸν καθ' ἡμᾶς ὑπάρχοντα. καλεῖ δὲ Μωυσῆς τὸν μὲν ὑπὲρ ἡμᾶς εἰκόνα θεοῦ, τὸν δὲ καθ' ἡμᾶς τῆς εἰκόνος ἔκμαγεῖον. “ἐποίησε” γάρ φησιν “ὁ θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρωπον” οὐχὶ εἰκόνα θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ “κατ' εἰκόνα”. ὥστε τὸν καθ' ἕκαστον ἡμῶν νοῦν, ὃς δὴ κυρίως καὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀνθρωπὸς ἐστι, τρίτον εἶναι τύπον ἀπὸ τοῦ πε-ποιηκότος, τὸν δὲ μέσον παράδειγμα μὲν τούτου, 232 ἀπεικόνισμα δὲ ἐκείνου. φύσει δὲ ἄτμη-τος ὁ ἡμέτερος γέγνε νοῦς. τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἄλογον ψυχῆς μέρος ἐξαχῆ διελὼν ὁ δημιουργὸς ἐπτὰ μοίρας εἰργάζετο, ὄρασιν, ἀκοήν, γεῦσιν, ὄσφρησιν, ἀφήν, φωνήν, γόνιμον, τὸ δὲ λογικόν, ὃ δὴ νοῦς ὠνομάσθη, ἄσχιστον εἶασε κατὰ τὴν τοῦ παντὸς 233 ὁμοιότητα οὐρανοῦ. καὶ γὰρ ἐν τούτῳ λόγος ἔχει τὴν μὲν ἐξωτάτω<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἀπλανῆ σφαῖραν ἄτμητον φυλαχθῆναι, τὴν δ' ἐντὸς ἐξαχῆ τμηθεῖσαν ἐπτὰ κύκλους τῶν λεγομένων πλανήτων ἀποτελέσαι.
 ὁ γάρ, οἶμαι, ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ ψυχῆ, τοῦτο οὐρανοῦ ἐν κόσμῳ. τὰς οὖν νοερὰς καὶ λογικὰς δύο φύσεις, τὴν τε ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ τὴν ἐν τῷ παντί, συμβέβη-κεν ὀλοκλήρους καὶ ἀδιαιρέτους εἶναι. διὸ λέγεται.
 [506] “τὰ δὲ ὄρνεα οὐ | διεῖλε.” περιστερᾶ
 234 μὲν <οὖν> ὁ ἡμέτερος νοῦς, ἐπειδὴ τιθασὸν καὶ σύντροφον ἡμῖν ἐστι τὸ ζῶον, εἰκάζεται, τῷ δὲ τούτου παραδείγματι ἢ τρυγῶν. ὁ γὰρ θεοῦ λόγος φιλέρημος καὶ μονωτικός, ἐν ὄχλῳ τῷ τῶν γεγονότων καὶ φθαρσομένων οὐχὶ φυρόμενος, ἀλλ'

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἐξωτάτην : Pap. ανωτατω (ἐξωτάτω in De Cher. 22).

<sup>a</sup> See De Op. 117 and note.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 230-234

winged and of a soaring nature. One is the archetypal reason above us, the other the copy of it which we possess. Moses calls the first the "image of 231 God," the second the cast of that image. For God, he says, made man not "the image of God" but "after the image" (Gen. i. 27). And thus the mind in each of us, which in the true and full sense is the "man," is an expression at third hand from the Maker, while between them is the Reason which serves as model for our reason, but itself is the effigies or presentment of God. Our 232 mind is indivisible in its nature. For the irrational part of the soul received a sixfold division from its Maker who thus formed seven parts, sight, hearing, taste, smell, touch, voice and reproductive faculty.<sup>a</sup> But the rational part, which was named mind, He left undivided. In this he followed the analogy of the heaven taken as a whole. For we are told that 233 there the outermost sphere of the fixed stars is kept unsevered, while the inner sphere by a sixfold division produces the seven circles of what we call the wandering stars.<sup>b</sup> In fact I regard the soul as being in man what the heaven is in the universe. So then the two reasoning and intellectual natures, one in man and the other in the all, prove to be integral and undivided and that is why we read "He did not divide the birds." Our mind is 234 likened to a pigeon, since the pigeon is a tame and domesticated creature, while the turtle-dove stands as the figure of the mind which is the pattern of ours. For the Word, or Reason of God, is a lover of the wild and solitary, never mixing with the medley of things that have come into being only to perish, <sup>b</sup> Cf. Timaeus 36 D and De Cher. 22 f.

PHILO

- ἄνω φοιτᾶν εἰθισμένος αἰεὶ καὶ ἐνὶ ὁπαδὸς εἶναι μόνῳ μεμελετηκῶς. ἄτμητοι μὲν οὖν αἱ δύο φύσεις, ἣ τε ἐν ἡμῖν τοῦ λογισμοῦ καὶ ἣ ὑπὲρ ἡμᾶς τοῦ θείου λόγου, ἄτμητοι δὲ οὐσαι μυρία 235 ἄλλα τέμνουσιν. ὃ τε γὰρ θεῖος λόγος τὰ ἐν τῇ φύσει διεΐλε καὶ διένειμε πάντα, ὃ τε ἡμέτερος νοῦς, ἅττ' ἂν παραλάβῃ νοητῶς πράγματά τε καὶ σώματα, εἰς ἀπειράκεις ἄπειρα διαιρεῖ μέρη καὶ 236 τέμνων οὐδέποτε λήγει. τοῦτο δὲ συμβαίνει διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸν ποιητὴν καὶ πατέρα τῶν ὄλων ἐμφέρειαν. τὸ γὰρ θεῖον ἀμιγές, ἄκρατον, ἀμερέστατον ὑπάρχον ἅπαντι τῷ κόσμῳ γέγονεν αἴτιον μίξεως, κράσεως, διαιρέσεως, πολυμερείας· ὥστε εἰκότως καὶ τὰ ὁμοιωθέντα, νοῦς τε ὁ ἐν ἡμῖν καὶ ὁ ὑπὲρ ἡμᾶς, ἀμερεῖς καὶ ἄτμητοι ὑπάρχοντες διαιρεῖν καὶ διακρίνειν ἕκαστα τῶν ὄντων ἐρρωμένως δυνήσονται.
- 237 XLIX. Λαλήσας οὖν περὶ τῶν ἀτμήτων καὶ ἀδιαιρέτων ὄρνέων φησὶν ἐξῆς· “κατέβη δὲ ὄρνεα ἐπὶ τὰ σώματα, τὰ διχοτομήματα,” ὁμωνυμία μὲν χρησάμενος, τὴν δὲ πραγματικὴν διαμάχην ἐναργέστατα τοῖς ὄραν δυναμένοις διασυνιστάς· παρὰ φύσιν γὰρ ἔστι τὸ καταβαίνειν ὄρνεα, 238 τοῦ μετεωροπολεῖν ἕνεκα πετερωθέντα. καθάπερ γὰρ τοῖς χερσαίοις οἰκειότατον χωρίον γῆ καὶ μάλιστα τοῖς ἐρπετοῖς, ἃ μηδ' ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς ἰλυσπώμενα ἀνέχεται, φωλεοὺς δὲ καὶ καταδύσεις ζητεῖ τὸν ἄνω χῶρον ἀποδιδράσκοντα διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὰ κάτω συγγένειαν, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ

<sup>a</sup> The Hebrew has a different word for these birds, which

WHO IS THE HEIR, 234-238

but its wonted resort is ever above and its study is to wait on One and One only. So then the two natures, the reasoning power within us and the divine Word or Reason above us, are indivisible, yet indivisible as they are they divide other things without number. The divine Word separated and apportioned all that 235 is in nature. Our mind deals with all the things material and immaterial which the mental process brings within its grasp, divides them into an infinity of infinities and never ceases to cleave them. This is 236 the result of its likeness to the Father and Maker of all. For the Godhead is without mixture or infusion or parts and yet has become to the whole world the cause of mixture, infusion, division and multiplicity of parts. And thus it will be natural that these two which are in the likeness of God, the mind within us and the mind above us, should subsist without parts or severance and yet be strong and potent to divide and distinguish everything that is.

XLIX. After speaking of the birds which were 237 left unsevered and undivided, he continues "and the birds came down to the carcasses, the half-pieces" (Gen. xv. 11). He employs the same word "birds,"<sup>a</sup> but shews very clearly to those who have eyes to see the contrast in fact between the two kinds of birds. For it is against nature that birds whose wings were given them to soar on high should come down. Just as earth is the most suitable place for creatures 238 of the land, particularly reptiles, which in their wriggling course cannot even bear to be above ground, but make for holes and crannies and, since their natural place is below, avoid what is above, the A.V. translates by "fowls," the R.V. by "birds of prey."

PHILO

τοῖς πτηνοῖς ὁ ἀήρ ἐνδιαίτημα οἰκείον, κούφοις διὰ τὴν πτέρωσιν ὁ φύσει κούφος. ὅταν οὖν τὰ ἀεροπόρα αἰθεροβατεῖν ὀφείλοντα καταβαίῃη, πρὸς χέρσον ἀφικνούμενα τῷ κατὰ φύσιν ἀδυνατεῖ 239 χρῆσθαι βίῳ. τούναντίον δὲ Μωυσῆς καὶ ὅσα τῶν ἔρπετῶν ἄνω δύναται πηδᾶν οὐ μετρίως ἀποδέχεται· φησὶ γοῦν· “ ταῦτα φάγεσθε ἀπὸ τῶν ἔρπετῶν τῶν πετεινῶν, ἃ πορεύεται ἐπὶ τεσσάρων, ἃ ἔχει σκέλη ἄνωτέρω τῶν ποδῶν, ὥστε πηδᾶν ἐν αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς.” ταῦτα δ’ ἐστὶ σύμβολα ψυχῶν, ὅσαι τρόπον ἔρπετῶν προσερριζωμέναι τῷ γήινῳ σώματι καθαρθεῖσαι μετεωροπολεῖν ἰσχύουσιν, οὐρανὸν ἀντικαταλλάξά-240 μенаι γῆς καὶ φθορᾶς ἀθανασίαν. πάσης οὖν βαρυδαιμονίας ἀναπεπλήσθαι νομιστέον ἐκείνας, αἵτινες ἐν ἀέρι καὶ αἰθέρι τῷ καθαρωτάτῳ τραφεῖσαι μετανέστησαν τὸν θείων ἀγαθῶν κόρον οὐ | [507] δυνηθεῖσαι φέρειν ἐπὶ τὸ θνητῶν καὶ κακῶν χωρίον
 γῆν. ἐπιφοιτῶσι δ’ ἔννοιαι μυρίαὶ περὶ μυρίων πραγμάτων ὄσων, αἱ μὲν ἐκούσιοι, αἱ δὲ κατ’ ἄγνοίαν, οὐδὲν διαφέρουσαι πτηνῶν, αἷς τὰ κατιόντα 241 ἐξωμοίωσεν ὄρνεα. τῶν δὲ ἐννοιῶν ἡ μὲν ἄνω φορὰ τὴν ἀμείνω τάξιν ἔλαχε συνοδοιπορούσης ἀρετῆς τῆς πρὸς τὸν οὐράνιον<sup>1</sup> καὶ θεῖον χῶρον<sup>2</sup> ἀγούσης, τὴν χεῖρω δὲ ἡ κάτω κακίας ἀφηγουμένης καὶ ἀντισπώσης βία. δηλοῖ δὲ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> mss. οὐρανὸν; Pap. θειων ουρανιων.

<sup>2</sup> So mss.: Wend. from Pap. χορὸν. While χορὸς θεῖος is common in Philo (cf. Phaedrus 247 A), we have in a passage similar to this, De Som. i. 151, σοφοὶ μὲν γὰρ τὸν δλύμπιον καὶ

WHO IS THE HEIR, 238-241

so too the air is the suitable habitat for the birds, its natural lightness matching with the lightness which the wings give them. So when the denizens of the air, who should rather be explorers of the realm of ether, "descend," it is to the land that they come and there they cannot live their natural life.

Conversely Moses gives high approval <sup>239</sup> to those reptiles which can leap upwards. Thus he says, "These shall ye eat of the flying reptiles which go on four legs, which have legs above their feet, so as to leap with them from the earth" (Lev. xi. 21). These are symbols of the souls which though rooted like reptiles to the earthly body have been purified and have strength to soar on high, exchanging earth for heaven, and corruption for immortality. Surely <sup>240</sup> then we must suppose that misery wholesale and all-pervading must be the lot of those souls which reared in air and ether at its purest have left that home for earth the region of things mortal and evil, because the good things of God bred in them an intolerable satiety. And here they become the resort of thoughts and notions, numberless as the subjects with which they are concerned, some willingly admitted, some in mere ignorance. These thoughts are just like winged creatures and it is to them that he likens "the birds which come down."

Some of our thoughts fly up, others <sup>241</sup> down. To the upward flight falls the better lot, for it has for its fellow-traveller virtue leading it to the divine and heavenly region; to the downward flight the worse lot falls, since vice goes in front and pulls it with might and main if it resists. How οὐράνιον χῶρον ἔλαχον οἰκεῖν, where χορδῶν is impossible, and χῶρον suits τόπων better.

---

PHILO

τὰ ὀνόματα οὐχ ἤκιστα τὴν τῶν τόπων ἐναντιότητα· ἀρετὴ μὲν γὰρ οὐ μόνον παρὰ τὴν αἵρεσιν ὀνομάσθη, ἀλλὰ καὶ παρὰ τὴν ἄρσιν—αἵρεται γὰρ καὶ μετεωρίζεται διὰ τὸ αἰεὶ τῶν ὀλυμπίων ἐρᾶν,— 242 πίπτειν τοὺς χρωμένους αὐτῇ βιάζεσθαι. τὰ γοῦν πολέμια τῆς ψυχῆς ἐννοήματα ἐπιποτώμενα καὶ ἐπιφοιτῶντα κάτεισι μὲν αὐτά, καταβάλλει δὲ καὶ τὴν διάνοιαν αἰσχροῦς ἐπιφερόμενα σώμασιν οὐ πράγμασιν,<sup>1</sup> αἰσθητοῖς οὐ νοητοῖς, ἀτελέσιν οὐχ ὀλοκλήροις, ἐφθαρμένοις οὐχὶ τοῖς ζῶσιν. οὐ γὰρ μόνον σώμασιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ σωμάτων δίχα διαιρεθέντων τμήμασιν ἐπιφοιτᾷ· τὰ δ' οὕτως διαιρεθέντα ἀμήχανον ἀρμονίαν δέξασθαι καὶ ἔνωσιν, τῶν πνευματικῶν τόνων, οἱ συμφυέστατος δεσμός
 243 ἦσαν, διακοπέντων. L. εἰσηγεῖται δὲ γνώμην ἀληθεστάτην διδάσκων, ὅτι δικαιοσύνη μὲν καὶ πᾶσα ἀρετὴ ψυχῆς, ἀδικία δὲ καὶ πᾶσα κακία σώματος ἐρῶσι, καὶ ὅτι τὰ τῷ ἐτέρῳ φίλα τῷ ἐτέρῳ πάντως ἐχθρά ἐστι, καθὰ καὶ νῦν· αἰνιττόμενος γὰρ τοὺς ψυχῆς πολεμίους ὄρνεα εἰσήγαγε γλιχόμενα ἐμπλέκεσθαι καὶ ἐμφύεσθαι σώμασι καὶ σαρκῶν ἐμφορεῖσθαι, ὧν τὰς ἐφόδους καὶ ἐπιδρομὰς ἐπισχεῖν βουληθεῖς ὁ ἀστείος λέγεται αὐτοῖς συγκαθίσαι,<sup>2</sup> οἷα πρόεδρος τις ἢ πρόβουλος

<sup>1</sup> So mss. and Pap.: Wend. σώμασι καὶ πράγμασι. See App. p. 573.

<sup>2</sup> So LXX.: mss. and Pap. ἐγκαθίσαι.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. κακία is derived from the two words κάτω κεχωρηκέναι, the consonants in the second word being supposed to supply the second κ in κακία.

<sup>b</sup> For this use of πνεῦμα cf. πνεύματος ἐνωτικοῦ δυνάμει De Op. 131, and the definition of ξῆσις in Quod Deus 35 as 404

WHO IS THE HEIR, 241-243

opposite are the climes to which these two belong is shewn most clearly by their names. Virtue is so named not only because we choose it (αἴρεσις) but also from its uplifting (ἄρσις), for it is lifted up and soars on high, because it ever yearns for the celestial. Vice is so called because it has "gone down"<sup>a</sup> and compels those who have to do with it to fall down likewise. Thus thoughts hostile to the soul, 242 when they hover over it or perch upon it, not only come down themselves, but also bring downfall to the understanding, when in hideous fashion they pounce upon things material, not immaterial; which are of the senses, not of the intelligence; of imperfection, not of soundness; of corruption not of life. For they perch not only on bodies, but on sections of bodies divided in two. And it is impossible that bodies so divided should admit of joining or unifying, since the currents of spirit force,<sup>b</sup> which were their congenital ligament, have been broken into.

L. Moses also brings before 243 us a thought of profound truth in teaching us that justice and every virtue love the soul, while injustice and every vice love the body; that what is friendly to the one is utterly hostile to the other—a lesson given in this passage as elsewhere. For in a figure he pictures the enemies of the soul as birds, eager to intertwine and ingraft themselves in bodies and to glut themselves with flesh, and it is to restrain the onsets and inroads of such that the man of worth is said to sit down in their company (Gen. xv. 11), like a chairman or president of a council.

πνεῦμα ἀναστρέφον ἐφ' ἑαυτό. In fact the three terms πνεῦμα, ἔξις, τόνος for a permeating and binding force seem more or less convertible. See the sections headed πνεῦμα, ἔξις, τόνος in S. V. F. ii. 439-462.

PHILO

- 244 ὧν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ καὶ τὰ οἰκεία ὑπὸ ἐμφυλίου στάσεως διεισθῆκει καὶ τὰ ἐχθρὰ στίφη διεφέρετο, βουλὴν ἀπάντων συναγαγὼν ἐσκόπει περὶ τῶν διαφόρων, ἢν', εἰ δύναίτο, πειθοῖ χρώμενος καὶ τὸν ξενικὸν πόλεμον καταλύσαι καὶ τὴν ἐμφύλιον ταραχὴν ἀνέλοι. τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ὥσπερ νέφος ἐπιρ-ράξαντας ἀκαταλλάκτως ἔχοντας λυσιτελὲς ἦν ἀπο-σκεδάσαι, τοῖς δὲ τὴν παλαιὰν συγγένειαν οἰκειώσα-245 σθαι. δυσμενεῖς μὲν οὖν ἄσπονδοι καὶ ἀκατάλλακτοι γράφονται ψυχῆς ἀφροσύναι καὶ ἀκολασίαι δειλίαι τε καὶ ἀδικίαι καὶ ὅσαι ἄλλαι ἐκ πλεοναζούσης ὀρμῆς εἰώθασιν φύεσθαι ἄλογοι ἐπιθυμίαι, σκιρτῶσαι καὶ ἀπαυχενίζουσαι καὶ τὸν εὐθὺν δρόμον τῆς διανοίας ἐπέχουσαι, πολλάκις
[509] | δὲ καὶ τὸ σύμπαν αὐτῆς σχῆμα σπαράττουσαι
246 τε καὶ καταβάλλουσαι. τὰ δὲ τῶν ἐνσπόνδων εἶναι δυναμένων προσκρούσματα τοιαυτὰ ἔστιν, ὁποίας εἶναι συμβέβηκε τὰς σοφιστῶν δῶγματικὰς ἔριδας· ἧ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς ἓν ἀπονέουσι τέλος, θεωρίαν τῶν τῆς φύσεως πραγμάτων, λέγουτ' ἂν εἶναι φίλοι, ἧ δ' οὐχ ὁμογνωμονοῦσιν ἐν ταῖς κατὰ μέρος ζητήσεσιν, ἐμφυλίῳ στάσει χρησθαι, ὥσπερ οἱ ἀγένητον εἶναι λέγοντες τὸ πᾶν τοῖς γένεσιν εἰσηγουμένοις αὐτοῦ, καὶ πάλιν οἱ φθαρῆσεσθαι τοῖς φθαρτὸν μὲν εἶναι φύσει, μηδέποτε δὲ φθαρησόμενον διὰ τὸ κραταιοτέρῳ δεσμῷ, τῇ τοῦ πεποιηκότος βουλήσει, συνέχεσθαι, καὶ οἱ μηδὲν εἶναι ὁμολογοῦντες ἀλλὰ πάντα

<sup>a</sup> This seems to be the force of the imperfects. Philo is falling back upon his reading and no doubt the conditions described in the following sections belong rather to a past time than to his own.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 244—246

History tells us<sup>a</sup> how when discord reigned at home 244 through civil faction, or hostile bands were at variance, such a one would summon a council of all concerned and investigate the points of difference, that if possible he might by his powers of persuasion make an end of the external war or put down the civil commotion. In the one case he would scatter abroad the foes who rushed in irreconcilable hatred like a storm cloud, in the other he would restore the old feeling of intimate kinship—each a useful work.

Now the list of deadly and irreconcilable 245 enemies of the soul comprises its follies, its acts of cowardice and injustice and all the other irrational lusts so constantly born of over-abundant appetite,<sup>b</sup> which prance and struggle against the yoke and hinder the straight onward course of the understanding, and often rend and overthrow its whole frame.

But with those who might be 246 allies the causes of offence are such as we find in the wranglings of the sophists on questions of dogma. In so far as their minds are fixed on one end to discover the facts of nature, they may be said to be friends, but in that they do not agree in their solutions of particular problems they may be said to be engaged in civil strife. Thus those who declare the universe to be uncreated are at strife with those who maintain its creation; those who say that it will be destroyed with those who declare that though by nature destructible it will never be destroyed, being held together by a bond of superior strength, namely the will of its Maker; those who maintain that nothing is, but all things become, with those who hold the opposite opinion; those who argue at

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Conf. 90 and note.

PHILO

- γίνεσθαι τοῖς ὑπολαμβάνουσι τάναντία, καὶ οἱ πάντων χρημάτων ἄνθρωπον μέτρον εἶναι διεξιόντες τοῖς τὰ αἰσθήσεως καὶ τὰ διανοίας κριτήρια συγχέουσι, καὶ συνόλως οἱ πάντα ἀκατάληπτα εἰσηγούμενοι τοῖς γνωρίζεσθαι πάμπολλα φάσκουσιν. καὶ ἥλιος μέντοι καὶ σελήνη καὶ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός, γῆ τε καὶ ἀήρ καὶ ὕδωρ, τά τε ἐξ αὐτῶν σχεδὸν πάντα τοῖς σκεπτικοῖς ἔριδας καὶ φιλονεικίας παρεσχήκασιν, οὐσίας καὶ ποιότητας, μεταβολάς τε αὐτῶν καὶ τροπὰς καὶ γενέσεις, ἔτι δὲ φθορὰς αὐτῶν ἀναζητοῦσιν· μεγέθους τε πέρι καὶ κινήσεως τῶν κατ' οὐρανὸν οὐ πάρεργον ποιούμενοι τὴν ἔρευναν ἑτεροδοξοῦσιν οὐ συμφερόμενοι, μέχρις ἂν ὁ μαιευτικὸς ὁμοῦ καὶ δικαστικὸς ἀνὴρ συγκαθίσας θεάσῃται τὰ τῆς ἐκάστου γεννήματα ψυχῆς καὶ τὰ μὲν οὐκ ἄξια τροφῆς ἀπορρίψῃ, τὰ δ' ἐπιτήδεια διασώσῃ καὶ προνοίας τῆς ἀρμοστούσης ἀξιώσῃ. τὰ δὲ κατὰ τὴν φιλοσοφίαν μεστὰ διαφωνίας γέγονε τὸν πιθανὸν καὶ στοχαστικὸν νοῦν τῆς ἀληθείας ἀποδιδρασκούσης· τὸ γὰρ δυσεύρετον καὶ δυσθῆρατον αὐτῆς τὰς λογικὰς, ὡς οἶμαι, στάσεις ἐγέννησε.
- 249 LI. “ Περὶ δὲ ἡλίου ” φησί “ δυσμὰς ἕκστασις ἐπέπεσεν<sup>1</sup> τῷ Ἀβραάμ, καὶ ἰδοὺ φόβος σκοτεινὸς μέγας ἐπιπίπτει αὐτῷ.” ἕκστασις ἢ μὲν ἐστὶ λύττα μανιώδης παράνοϊαν ἐμποιοῦσα κατὰ γῆρας ἢ μελαγχολίαν ἢ τινα ὁμοιότροπον ἄλλην αἰτίαν, ἢ δὲ σφοδρὰ κατάπληξις ἐπὶ τοῖς ἑξαπιναιῶς καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So LXX: MSS. ἔπεσε: Pap. ἐπεστήσε.

<sup>a</sup> For the philosophical opinions mentioned in this section see App. p. 574.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 246-249

length that man is the measure of all things with those who make havoc of the judgement-faculty of both sense and mind; and, to put it generally, those who maintain that everything is beyond our apprehension with those who assert that a great number of things are cognizable.<sup>a</sup> And indeed sun 247 and moon and the whole heaven, also earth and air and water and practically all that they produce, have been the cause of strife and contention to the inquirers when they probe into their essential natures and qualities, their changes and phases, the processes by which they come into being and finally cease to be. For as to the magnitude and movement of the heavenly bodies with all their absorbing research they come to different and conflicting opinions, until the man-midwife<sup>b</sup> who is also the judge takes his seat in their midst and observes the brood of each disputant's soul, throws away all that is not worth rearing, but saves what is worth saving and approves it for such careful treatment as is required. The history of philosophy is full of 248 discordance, because truth flees from the credulous mind which deals in conjecture. It is her nature to elude discovery and pursuit, and it is this which in my opinion produces these scientific quarrellings.

LI. "About sunset" it continues, "an 'ecstasy' 249 fell upon Abraham and lo a great dark terror falls upon him" (Gen. xv. 12). Now "ecstasy" or "standing out" takes different forms. Sometimes it is a mad fury producing mental delusion due to old age or melancholy or other similar cause. Sometimes it is extreme amazement at the events which <sup>b</sup> Cf. Socrates' use of the figure in Theaetetus 151 c and elsewhere.

PHILO

- [509] ἀπροσδοκῆτως | συμβαίνειν εἰωθόσιν, ἥ δὲ ἡρεμία διανοίας, εἰ δὴ πέφυκέ ποτε ἡσυχάζειν, ἥ δὲ πασῶν ἀρίστη ἔνθεος κατοκωχή τε καὶ μανία, ἥ 250 τὸ προφητικὸν γένος χρῆται. τῆς μὲν οὖν πρώτης ἐν ταῖς <ἐν> Ἐπινομίδι γραφείσαις ἀραῖς διαμέμνηται—παραπληξίαν γάρ φησι καὶ ἀορασίαν καὶ ἔκστασιν διανοίας καταλήψεσθαι τοὺς ἀσεβοῦντας, ὡς μηδὲν διοίσειν τυφλῶν ἐν μεσημβρία καθάπερ ἐν βαθεῖ σκότῳ ψηλαφόντων,— 251 τῆς δὲ δευτέρας πολλαχοῦ—“ ἐξέστη” γάρ φησιν “ Ἰσαὰκ ἔκστασιν μεγάλην, καὶ εἶπε· τίς οὖν ὁ θηρεύσας μοι θήραν καὶ ἐνεγκῶν μοι, καὶ ἔφαγον ἀπὸ πάντων πρὸ τοῦ σέ ἐλθεῖν, καὶ εὐλόγησα αὐτόν; καὶ εὐλογημένος ἔστω;” καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰακώβ ἀπιστοῦντος τοῖς λέγουσιν, ὅτι “ ζῆ Ἰωσήφ καὶ ἄρχει πάσης γῆς Αἰγύπτου”· “ ἐξέστη” γάρ φησι “ τῇ διανοίᾳ, οὐ γὰρ ἐπίστευσεν αὐτοῖς,” καὶ ἐν Ἐξαγωγῇ κατὰ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν· “ τὸ γὰρ ὄρος ” φησί “ τὸ Σινὰ ἐκαπνίζετο ὄλον διὰ τὸ καταβεβηκέναι τὸν θεὸν ἐπ’ αὐτὸ ἐν πυρί, καὶ ἀνέβαινον ὁ καπνὸς ὡσεὶ ἀτμὶς καμίνου· καὶ ἐξέστη πᾶς ὁ λαὸς σφόδρα,” καὶ ἐν τῷ Λευι-τικῷ κατὰ τὴν τῶν ἱερῶν τελείωσιν ἡμέρα τῇ ὀγδόῃ, ὅποτε “ ἐξῆλθε πῦρ ἀπ’ οὐρανοῦ καὶ κατ-ἔφαγε τὰ ἐπὶ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, τὰ τε ὀλοκαυτώ-ματα καὶ τὰ στέατα”· λέγεται γὰρ εὐθύς· “ καὶ εἶδε πᾶς ὁ λαὸς καὶ ἐξέστη, καὶ ἔπεσαν ἐπὶ πρόσωπον·” ἥ γὰρ τοιαύτη ἔκστασις πτόησιν καὶ δειρῆν κατάπληξιν ἐμποιεῖ—252 Ἄλλ’ οὐκ ἄξιον θαυμάσαι καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἡσαῦ, so often happen suddenly and unexpectedly. Sometimes it is passivity of mind, if indeed the mind can ever be at rest ; and the best form of all is the divine possession or frenzy<sup>a</sup> to which the prophets as a class are subject.

The first form is mentioned 250 in the curses described in Deuteronomy, where he says that madness and loss of sight and "ecstasy" of mind will overtake the impious, so that they shall differ in nought from blind men groping at noonday as in deep darkness (Deut. xxviii. 28, 29).

The second we have in several places. Isaac was 251 astonished with a great ecstasy and said, "who is it then who has made a hunting and brought to me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest and I blessed him, and let him be blessed" (Gen. xxvii. 33). And again when Jacob disbelieved those who told him that "Joseph lives and is ruler over all Egypt," he was in an "ecstasy," we are told, "in his mind, for he did not believe them" (Gen. xlv. 26). Also in Exodus, in the account of the congregation, it says, "for Mount Sinai was all covered with smoke, because God came down to it in fire and the smoke rose up like vapour of a furnace, and all the people were in a great 'ecstasy'" (Ex. xix. 18). Also in Leviticus at the completion of the sacrifices on the eighth day, when "fire came out from heaven and devoured what was on the altar, both the whole burnt offerings and the fats"; for the next words are, "and all the people saw it and were in an 'ecstasy,' and fell upon their faces" (Lev. ix. 24): a natural consequence, for an "ecstasy" in this sense produces great agitation and terrible consternation.

Incidentally in the story of Jacob and Esau there 252

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 574.

PHILO

ὅτι εἰδὼς κυνηγεῖν αἰεὶ θηρεύεται καὶ πτερνίζεται τὴν τέχνην ἐπὶ βλάβῃ κτησάμενος, οὐκ ὠφελεία, θηρεύειν δὲ οὐδέποτε ἐσπούδασε, καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰακώβ, ὅτι θηρεύει μὴ μάθων, ἀλλὰ φύσει κινούμενος, τὸ πάθος, καὶ φέρει τῷ δοκιμαστῇ, ὃς εἰ δοκιμὸν ἐστὶ διαγνώσεται, διὸ ἀπὸ πάντων φάγε-253 ται;<sup>1</sup> πάντα γὰρ τὰ τῆς ἀσκήσεως ἐδώδιμα καθ-ἔστηκεν, ἢ ζήτησις, ἢ σκέψις, ἢ ἀνάγνωσις, ἢ ἀκρόα-σις, ἢ προσοχή, ἢ ἐγκράτεια, ἢ ἐξαδιαφόρησις τῶν ἀδιαφόρων. ἀπὸ πάντων δὲ τὰς ἀπαρχὰς δῆπου-θεν ἔφαγεν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα· ἔδει γὰρ ὑπολείπε-σθαι καὶ τῷ ἀσκητῇ τροφὰς οἰκείας ὡς ἄθλα.
 254 “πρὸ τοῦ σέ ἐλθεῖν” φυσικῶς· εἰ γὰρ ἔλθῃ τὸ πάθος εἰς τὴν ψυχὴν, οὐκ ἀπο-λαύσομεν ἐγκρατείας· ἐλέγχει δὲ καὶ τὸν φαῦλον ὡς βραδὺν καὶ ὀκνηρὸν καὶ μελλητὴν πρὸς τὰ παιδείας ἔργα, ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς τὰ ἀκολασίας.
 255 ἐργοδιώκτας οὖν Αἴγυπτος ἔχει πρὸς τὴν τῶν παθῶν ἐπισπεύδοντας ἀπόλαυσιν, Μωυσῆς δ'

<sup>1</sup> Wend. does not put a mark of interrogation. If this is not a mere misprint, he must have understood οὐκ ἄξιον θαυμάσαι as “there is no need to wonder.”

---

<sup>a</sup> The irrelevance of these five sections to the disquisition on “ecstasy” led Mangey to consider them an interpolation from another treatise. But the irrelevance does not differ in kind from Philo’s other ramblings, and we have a sort of apology for it in § 256. The remarks are based on the texts quoted to illustrate the second sense of “ecstasy” in § 251. He feels that though they were quoted for that purpose, they each have their moral which he does not wish to omit.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 574.

<sup>c</sup> The allegory of §§ 252-254 is very confused. Jacob

WHO IS THE HEIR, 252-255

are thoughts well worthy of our admiration.<sup>a</sup> Esau, though he has the knowledge needed for the chase, is ever hunted and supplanted, because he has acquired his skill not to do good but harm, and moreover is never quick or zealous in his hunting. Jacob hunts passion not through teaching, but moved to it by nature, and brings the game to the tester who will decide whether it will stand the test. For this purpose the tester will eat of all that he brings. For all the elements of practice are food fit for eating, 253 inquiry, examination, reading, listening to instruction, concentration, perseverance, self-mastery, and power to treat things indifferent as indeed indifferent.<sup>b</sup> Of all these the tester naturally eats samples<sup>b</sup> only, not the whole. For the Practiser must have his proper food left to him, like prizes for his efforts.

Another lesson. The words "before 254 thou camest" are true to nature. For if passion has entered the soul we shall not get enjoyment from self-mastery. Secondly, they convict the bad of sloth and slackness and backwardness to the tasks of instruction, though not to those of incontinence.<sup>c</sup> And so it is Egypt which has its "task-drivers" 255 (Ex. v. 6) who urge others to the enjoyment of the "hunts," i.e. supplants, πάθος symbolized by Esau (though elsewhere Esau is rather folly). But the game he brings so quickly (a sign as in De Sac. 64 and elsewhere of gifts sent direct from nature and God) turns out to be the qualities of the "Practiser." These qualities are submitted to the testing soul before πάθος can enter it, otherwise their flavour would be lost. Here Esau is still πάθος, but the next moment he is rather the worthless man hunting in a sense for the good, but failing through procrastination and slackness, and thus a contrast to the zeal of the man of worth. This zeal for the good implies an equal zeal to flee from evil, and the texts in § 255 illustrate this.

ἔμπαλιν μετὰ σπουδῆς παραγγέλλει τὸ Πάσχα ἐσθίειν, τὴν ἀπὸ τούτων διάβασιν εὐωχεῖσθαι. καὶ ὁ Ἰούδας φησὶν· “ εἰ μὴ γὰρ ἐβραδύναμεν, | [510] ἤδη ἂν ὑπεστρέψαμεν δὶς,” οὗ φησι κατέβημεν εἰς Αἴγυπτον, ἀλλ’ ἐκεῖθεν ἐπανεσώθημεν.

256 εἰκότως καὶ Ἰακώβ τεθαύμακεν, εἰ ἔτι ὁ ἐν σώματι νοῦς, Ἰωσήφ, ζῆ πρὸς ἀρετὴν καὶ ἄρχει τοῦ σώματος, ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἄρχεται πρὸς αὐτοῦ.

Καὶ τᾶλλα ἐπιῶν ἂν τις ὑποδείγματα τάληθές ἰχνεύειν δυνηθείη. πρόκειται δ’ οὐ περὶ τούτων νῦν ἀκριβολογεῖσθαι, διὸ ἐπὶ τὰ ἐξῆς τρεπτέον, 257 τῆς δὲ τρίτης ἐν οἷς τὰ περὶ τὴν τῆς γυναικὸς γένεσιν φιλοσοφεῖ—“ ἐπέβαλε γὰρ ὁ θεὸς ” φησὶν “ ἕκστασιν ἐπὶ τὸν Ἀδάμ, καὶ ὑπνωσεν,” ἕκστασιν τὴν ἡσυχίαν καὶ ἡρεμίαν τοῦ νοῦ παραλαμβάνων· ὑπνος γὰρ νοῦ ἐγρήγορσις ἐστὶν αἰσθήσεως, καὶ γὰρ ἐγρήγορσις διανοίας αἰσθήσεως ἀπραξία,—

258 LII. τῆς δὲ τετάρτης ὁ νῦν σκοποῦμεν· “ περὶ δὲ ἡλίου δυσμᾶς ἕκστασις ἐπέπεσεν τῷ Ἀβραάμ.” ἐνθουσιῶντος καὶ θεοφορήτου τὸ πάθος. ἀλλ’ οὐχὶ τοῦτο μόνον διασυνίστησιν<sup>1</sup> αὐτὸν προφήτην, ἀλλὰ καὶ γράμμα ρητὸν ἐστηλιτευμένον <ἐν> ἱεραῖς βίβλοις, ἡνίκα τις ἐπεχείρησε τὴν ἐκ φύσεως ἄρχουσαν ἀρετὴν, Σάρραν, αὐτοῦ διοικίξειν, ὡς οὐκ ἴδιον σοφοῦ καὶ μόνου κτήμα, ἀλλὰ παντὸς τοῦ φρόνησιν ἐπιμορφάζοντος.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀλλὰ συνίστησι: Pap. (?) συνιστησι.

<sup>a</sup> For the interpretation of the tasks as lower pleasures cf. De Conf. 93.

<sup>b</sup> Of course the first is what the Judah of the story did

WHO IS THE HEIR, 255-258

passions ;<sup>a</sup> it is Moses who bids eat the Passover and celebrate the crossing from passion "with haste" (Ex. xii. 11). So too Judah, "for if we had not delayed, we should already have returned twice over" (Gen. xliii. 10). He does not mean "we should have gone down twice to Egypt," but "we should have come up thence in safety."<sup>b</sup> Natural too 256 is the wonder of Jacob that the mind within the body still lives to virtue and rules that body (Gen. xlv. 26), instead of being ruled by it.

In the same way if we went through the other examples we should be able to trace the truth they teach, but the task before us now is not to work these out in detail, and therefore we must turn to the next point. We have the third sort of ecstasy when 257 Moses finds a lesson of wisdom in the story of the creation of woman. God "cast," he says, "an ecstasy on Adam and he slept" (Gen. ii. 21). Here by ecstasy he means passivity and tranquillity of mind. For sleep of mind is waking of sense, since waking of the understanding is inaction of sense.

LII. The fourth kind of ecstasy we 258 find in the passage we are now examining. "About sunset there fell upon Abraham an ecstasy," that is, what the inspired and God-possessed experience. Yet it is not merely this experience which proves him a prophet, but we have also the actual word written and recorded in the holy Scriptures, when another tried to take Sarah from his home, Sarah the virtue whose nature is to rule, as though that virtue was not the peculiar possession of the wise and of him alone, but belonged to any who counterfeits good mean, but the delay which the Judah-mind, as Philo sees it, regrets can only be delay in escaping from Egypt.

PHILO

- “ ἀπόδος ” γάρ φησι “ τὴν γυναῖκα τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, ὅτι προφήτης ἐστὶ καὶ προσεύξεται περὶ σοῦ, καὶ 259 ζήσεις.” παντὶ δὲ ἀστείῳ προφητεῖαν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος μαρτυρεῖ· προφήτης γὰρ ἴδιον μὲν οὐδὲν ἀποφθέγγεται, ἀλλότρια δὲ πάντα ὑπηχοῦντος ἑτέρου· φαύλῳ δ’ οὐ θέμις ἐρμηνεῖ γενέσθαι θεοῦ, ὥστε κυρίως μοχθηρὸς οὐδεὶς ἐνθουσιᾷ, μόνῳ δὲ σοφῷ ταῦτ’ ἐφαρμόττει, ἐπεὶ καὶ μόνος ὄργανον θεοῦ ἐστὶν ἡχείον, κρουόμενον καὶ πλητ-260 τόμενον ἀοράτως ὑπ’ αὐτοῦ. πάντας γοῦν ὁπό-σους ἀνέγραψε δικαίους κατεχομένους καὶ προφητεύοντας εἰσήγαγεν. ὁ Νῶε δίκαιος· ἀρ’ οὐ καὶ εὐθύς προφήτης; ἢ τὰς εὐχὰς καὶ κατάρας ἃς ἐπὶ ταῖς αἰθῆς γενεαῖς ἐποιήσατο ἔργων ἀληθείᾳ βεβαιωθείσας οὐ κατεχόμενος 261 ἐθέσπισε; τί δὲ Ἰσαάκ; τί δὲ Ἰακώβ; καὶ γὰρ οὗτοι διὰ τε ἄλλων πολλῶν καὶ μάλιστα διὰ τῶν εἰς τοὺς ἐκγόνους προσηρήσεων ὁμολογοῦνται προφητεύσαι. τὸ γὰρ “ συνάχθητε, ἵνα ἀπαγγείλω τί ἀπαντήσεται ὑμῖν ἐπ’ ἐσχάτῳ τῶν ἡμερῶν ” ἐνθουσιῶντος ἦν· ἢ γὰρ τῶν μελλόντων
 262 κατάληψις ἀνοίκειος ἀνθρώπῳ. τί δὲ |
 [511] Μωυσῆς; οὐ προφήτης ἄδεται πανταχοῦ; λέγει γάρ· “ ἐὰν γένηται ὑμῶν προφήτης κυρίου, ἐν ὁράματι αὐτῷ γνωσθήσομαι, Μωυσῆ δὲ ἐν εἶδει, καὶ οὐ δι’ αἰνιγμάτων,” καὶ πάλιν “ οὐκ ἀνέστη ἔτι προφήτης ὡς Μωυσῆς, ὃν ἔγνω κύριος αὐτὸν 263 πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον.” παγκάλως

WHO IS THE HEIR, 258-263

sense. For the text runs, " restore the woman to the man, because he is a prophet and shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live " (Gen. xx. 7). Now 259 with every good man it is the holy Word which assures him his gift of prophecy. For a prophet (being a spokesman) has no utterance of his own, but all his utterance came from elsewhere, the echoes of another's voice. The wicked may never be the interpreter of God, so that no worthless person is " God-inspired " in the proper sense. The name only befits the wise, since he alone is the vocal instrument of God, smitten and played by His invisible hand. Thus, all whom Moses describes as just are 260 pictured as possessed and prophesying.

Noah was just. Is he not in the same breath shewn as a prophet ? Were not the curses which he called down on subsequent generations, the prayers which he made on their behalf, all of which the actual event confirmed, uttered by him under divine possession ?

What of Isaac ? What of Jacob ? 261 They too are confessed as prophets by many other evidences, but particularly by their speeches addressed to their children. For " Gather ye together that I may proclaim what shall happen to you at the end of the days " (Gen. xlix. 1) were the words of one inspired. For apprehension of the future does not belong to man.

What of Moses ? Is he 262 not everywhere celebrated as a prophet ? For it says, " if a prophet of the Lord arise among you, I will be known to him in vision, but to Moses in actual appearance and not through riddles " (Num. xii. 6, 8), and again " there no more rose up a prophet like Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face " (Deut. xxxiv. 10).

Admirably then 263

PHILO

- οὖν τὸν ἐνθουσιῶντα μηνύει φάσκων “περὶ ἡλίου δυσμᾶς ἔκστασις ἐπέπεσεν.” LIII. ἡλίον διὰ συμβόλου τὸν ἡμέτερον καλῶν νοῦν· ὅπερ γὰρ ἐν ἡμῖν λογισμός, τοῦτο ἐν κόσμῳ ἡλίος, ἐπειδὴ φωσφορεῖ ἐκάτερος, ὁ μὲν τῷ παντὶ φέγγος αἰσθητὸν ἐκπέμπων, ὁ δὲ ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς τὰς νοητὰς 264 διὰ τῶν καταλήψεων αὐγᾶς. ἕως μὲν οὖν ἔτι περιλάμπει καὶ περιπολεῖ ἡμῶν ὁ νοῦς μεσημβρινὸν οἷα φέγγος εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν ψυχὴν ἀναχέων, ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ὄντες οὐ κατεχόμεθα· ἐπειδὴν δὲ πρὸς δυσμᾶς γένηται, κατὰ τὸ εἰκὸς ἔκστασις καὶ ἡ ἔνθεος ἐπιπίπτει κατοκωχὴ τε καὶ μανία. ὅταν μὲν γὰρ φῶς τὸ θεῖον ἐπιλάμψη, δύεται τὸ ἀνθρώπινον, ὅταν δ’ ἐκείνο δύηται, τοῦτ’ ἀνίσχει 265 καὶ ἀνατέλλει. τῷ δὲ προφητικῷ γένοι φιλεῖ τοῦτο συμβαίνειν· ἐξοικίζεται μὲν γὰρ ἐν ἡμῖν ὁ νοῦς κατὰ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ πνεύματος ἀφίξιν, κατὰ δὲ τὴν μετανάστασιν αὐτοῦ πάλιν εἰσοικίζεται· θέμις γὰρ οὐκ ἔστι θνητὸν ἀθανάτῳ συνοικῆσαι. διὰ τοῦτο ἡ δύσις τοῦ λογισμοῦ καὶ τὸ περὶ αὐτὸν σκότος ἔκστασιν καὶ θεοφόρητον μανίαν ἐγέννησε.
 266 τὸ δὲ ἀκόλουθον προσυφαίνει τῇ γραφῇ φάσκων “ἐρρέθη πρὸς Ἀβραάμ”· ὄντως γὰρ ὁ προφήτης, καὶ ὁπότε λέγειν δοκεῖ, πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἡσυχάζει, καταχρῆται δὲ ἕτερος αὐτοῦ τοῖς φωνητηρίοις ὄργανοις, στόματι καὶ γλώττῃ, πρὸς μήνυσιν ὧν ἂν θέλῃ· τέχνη δὲ ἀοράτῳ καὶ παμ-μούσῳ ταῦτα κρούων εὐήχη καὶ παναρμόνια καὶ γέμοντα συμφωνίας τῆς πάσης ἀποτελεῖ.
- 267 LIV. Τίνα δ’ ἐστὶν ἡ ἐρρέθη προθεσπισθέντα,

<sup>a</sup> Philo apparently finds in the impersonal ἐρρέθη a sug-418

WHO IS THE HEIR, 263-267

does he describe the inspired when he says " about sunset there fell on him an ecstasy." LIII. " Sun " is his name under a figure for our mind. For what the reasoning faculty is in us, the sun is in the world, since both of them are light-bringers, one sending forth to the whole world the light which our senses perceive, the other shedding mental rays upon ourselves through the medium of apprehension. So 264 while the radiance of the mind is still all around us, when it pours as it were a noonday beam into the whole soul, we are self-contained, not possessed. But when it comes to its setting, naturally ecstasy and divine possession and madness fall upon us. For when the light of God shines, the human light sets ; when the divine light sets, the human dawns and rises. This is what regularly befalls the fellowship of 265 the prophets. The mind is evicted at the arrival of the divine Spirit, but when that departs the mind returns to its tenancy. Mortal and immortal may not share the same home. And therefore the setting of reason and the darkness which surrounds it produce ecstasy and inspired frenzy. To connect 266 what is coming with what is here written he says " it was said to Abraham " <sup>a</sup> (Gen. xv. 3). For indeed the prophet, even when he seems to be speaking, really holds his peace, and his organs of speech, mouth and tongue, are wholly in the employ of Another, to shew forth what He wills. Unseen by us that Other beats on the chords with the skill of a master-hand and makes them instruments of sweet music, laden with every harmony.

LIV. It is well to hear what these predictions 267 gestion that the prophetic inspiration comes to the prophet in a mysterious way, which he does not understand.

PHILO

καλὸν ἀκοῦσαι· πρῶτον μὲν, ὅτι τῷ φιλαρέτῳ κατοικεῖν οὐ δίδωσιν ὁ θεὸς ὡς ἐν οἰκείᾳ γῆ τῷ σώματι, ἀλλὰ παροικεῖν ὡς ἐν ἀλλοδαπῇ μόνον ἐπιτρέπει χώρα. “ γινώσκων ” γάρ φησι “ γνώση, ὅτι πάροικον ἔσται τὸ σπέρμα σου ἐν γῆ οὐκ ἴδια.” παντὸς δὲ φαύλου συγγενὲς τὸ σώματος χωρίον, ἐν ᾧ μελετᾷ κατοικεῖν, οὐ παροικεῖν.

- 268 ἐν μὲν δὴ παιδεύμα τούτο· ἕτερον δέ, ὅτι τὰ δουλείαν καὶ κάκωσιν καὶ δεινήν, ὡς αὐτὸς ἔφη, ταπεινώσιν ἐπάγοντα τῇ ψυχῇ τὰ κατὰ γῆν ἔστιν “ οὐκ ἴδια<sup>1</sup> ”· νόθα γὰρ καὶ ξένα διανοίας τὰ σώματος ὡς ἀληθῶς πάθη, σαρκὸς ἐκπεφυκότα, ἣ προσ-
- 269 ἐρρίζωται. τετρακόσια δὲ ἔτη γίνεται ἡ δουλεία κατὰ τὰς τῶν τεττάρων παθῶν δυνάμεις. ἀρχούσης μὲν γὰρ ἡδονῆς μετεωρίζεται καὶ φυσᾶται
- [512] τὸ φρόνημα, χαύνῳ | κουφότητι ἐξαιρόμενον· ὅταν δὲ ἐπιθυμία κρατήσῃ, ἔρως ἐγγίνεται τῶν ἀπόντων καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ὡσπερ ἀπ’ ἀγχόνης ἐλπίδος ἀτελοῦς ἐκρέμασε· διψῆ μὲν γὰρ αἰεὶ, πιεῖν δὲ ἀδυνατεῖ
- 270 ταντάλειον τιμωρίαν ὑπομένουσα. κατὰ δὲ τὴν τῆς λύπης δυναστείαν συνάγεται καὶ συστέλλεται φυλλορροούντων καὶ ἀφαναινομένων τρόπον δένδρων· τὸ γὰρ εὐθαλὲς αὐτῆς καὶ πῖον ἰσχυαίνεται. φόβου γε μὴν τυραννήσαντος οὐδεὶς ἔτι μένειν ἀξιοῖ, δρασμῶ δὲ καὶ φυγῇ χρῆται, μόνως ἂν οὕτως σωθῆσθαι προσδοκῶν· ἐπιθυμία μὲν γὰρ ὄλκον ἔχουσα

<sup>1</sup> οὐκ ἴδια] so two mss.; Pap. apparently doubtful, for Wend. gives “ Pap. (οικιδ)ια.” The other mss. have οἰκῖδια, which Mangey, Wend., and apparently all editors and translators read. But apart from οἰκῖδιον not occurring elsewhere in Philo, οὐκ ἴδια is wanted as a lesson on the last two words of the text, the former lesson being on πάροικον, and this second lesson is further emphasized by νόθα καὶ ξένα.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 267-270

were, which were thus said to him. First that God does not grant as a gift to the lover of virtue that he should dwell in the body as in homeland, but only permits him to sojourn there, as in a foreign country. For "knowing thou shalt know," he says, "that thy seed shall be sojourners in a land<sup>a</sup> which is not their own" (Gen. xv. 3). But every fool takes the body for the place of his nativity and studies to dwell there, not to sojourn.

This is one lesson. 268

Another is that the things of earth which bring slavery and ill-treatment and dire humiliation,<sup>b</sup> to use his own words, are "not our own." For the passions of the body are truly bastards, outlanders to the understanding, growths of the flesh in which they have their roots.

"And the slavery is for 269 four hundred years"; thus he shews the powers exercised by the four passions. When pleasure rules, the temper is high flown and inflated, uplifted with empty levity. When desire is master, a yearning for what is not arises and suspends the soul on unfulfilled hope as on a noose. For the soul is ever athirst yet never able to drink, suffering the torments of a Tantalus. Under the sovereignty of grief it is 270 pinched and shrinks, like trees which shed their leaves and wither; for its bloom and richness turn into leanness. Finally when fear has made itself lord no one thinks it good to stand his ground, but abandons himself to flight, expecting that in this alone will safety be found. For while desire has a power of attraction and forces us to the pursuit of the

<sup>a</sup> Or "earth," as Philo interprets it below.

<sup>b</sup> An allusion to the unquoted part of the text καὶ δουλώσουσιν αὐτοὺς καὶ κακώσουσιν αὐτοὺς καὶ ταπεινώσουσιν αὐτοὺς.

PHILO

δύναμιν, κἄν φεύγη τὸ ποθούμενον, διώκειν ἀναγκάζει, φόβος δ' ἔμπαλιν ἀλλοτριότητα ἐμποιῶν διοικίζει καὶ μακρὰν τοῦ φαινομένου διίστησιν.

- 271 LV. αἱ δὲ τῶν λεχθέντων ἡγεμονίαι παθῶν βαρεῖαν τοῖς ἀρχομένοις ἐπάγουσι δουλείαν, ἄχρῃς ἂν ὁ βραβευτῆς καὶ δικαστῆς θεὸς διακρίνη τὸ κακούμενον ἀπὸ τοῦ κακοῦντος καὶ τὸ μὲν εἰς ἐλευθερίαν ἐξέλθαι παντελῆ, τῷ δὲ τὰπίχειρα ὧν
- 272 ἐξήμαρτεν ἀποδῶ. λέγεται γάρ· “ τὸ δὲ ἔθνος ᾧ ἂν δουλεύσωσι κρινῶ ἐγώ· μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα ἐξελεύσονται ὧδε μετὰ ἀποσκευῆς πολλῆς.” ἀνάγκη γὰρ θνητὸν ὄντα τῷ τῶν παθῶν ἔθνει πιεσθῆναι καὶ τὰς οἰκείους τῷ γενομένῳ κῆρας ἀναδέξασθαι, βούλημα δὲ θεοῦ τὰ σύμφυτα κακὰ τοῦ γένους
- 273 ἡμῶν ἐπικουφίζειν· ὥστε καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν ἀρχῇ τὰ οἰκεία πεισόμεθα ὧμῶν γενόμενοι δεσποτῶν δούλοι, καὶ ὁ θεὸς τὸ οἰκεῖον ἐργάσεται ἑαυτῷ, ἄφεισιν καὶ ἐλευθερίαν ταῖς ἰκέτισιν αὐτοῦ ψυχαῖς προκηρύξας, οὐ μόνον λύσιν δεσμῶν καὶ ἐξοδὸν ἐκ τῆς περιπεφρουρημένης εἰρκτῆς παρασχόμενος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐφόδια δούς, ἅπερ ἀποσκευὴν ἐκάλεσε. τί δὲ τοῦτ'
- 274 ἐστίν; ἐπειδὴν ἄνωθεν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ καταβὰς ὁ νοῦς ἐνδεθῆ ταῖς σώματος ἀνάγκαις, εἶτα ὑπὸ μηδεμιᾶς δελεασθεῖς οἶα ἀνδρόγυνος ἢ γύνανδρος τὰ ἡδέα ἀσπάσσηται κακὰ, μείνας δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς ἑαυτοῦ φύσεως ἀνήρ ὄντως τραχηλίζει μᾶλλον ἢ τραχηλίζεσθαι δύνηται, τοῖς τῆς ἐγκυκλίου μουσικῆς

<sup>a</sup> ἀνάγκαις echoes the δουλώσωσι of the text just quoted, as κακὰ echoes the κακώσωσι.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 270-274

desired object even though it flee from our grasp, fear on the other hand creates a sense of estrangement and sunders and removes us far from the sight we dread.

LV. The sovereignties of the 271 passions here named entail a grievous slavery on their subjects, until God the arbiter and judge makes a separation between the ill-treater and the ill-treated, brings forth the one to full liberty and renders to the other the recompense for his misdeeds. For we read, "the nation whom they shall 272 serve I will judge, and after this they shall come out hither with much stock" (Gen. xv. 14). It must needs be that mortal man shall be oppressed by the nation of the passions and receive the calamities which are proper to created being, but it is God's will to lighten the evils which are inherent in our race. So while we shall suffer at first such things as 273 are proper to ourselves, enslaved as we are to cruel masters, God will accomplish the work which is proper to Himself in proclaiming redemption and liberty to the souls which are His suppliants, and not only will He provide release from bonds and an issue from the closely-guarded prison, but give us also the viaticum which he here calls "stock."
What is the meaning of this? It is when the mind 274 which has come down from heaven, though it be fast bound in the constraints<sup>a</sup> of the body, nevertheless is not lured by any of them to embrace like some hybrid, man-woman or woman-man,<sup>b</sup> the pleasant-seeming evils, but holding to its own nature of true manhood has the strength to be victor instead of victim in the wrestling-bout. Reared in all the lore of the schools, it acquires therefrom

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 574.

PHILO

ἐντραφεῖς<sup>1</sup> ἅπασιν,<sup>2</sup> ἐξ ὧν θεωρίας λαβὼν ἡμερον ἐγκράτειαν καὶ καρτερίαν, ἐρρωμένως ἀρετάς, ἐκτήσατο, μετανιστάμενος καὶ κάθοδον τὴν εἰς τὴν πατρίδα εὐρισκόμενος πάντ' ἐπάγεται τὰ παιδείας, ἅπερ ἀποσκευὴ καλεῖται.

275 LVI. Τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ τούτων εἰπὼν ἐπιλέγει· “ σὺ δὲ ἀπελεύσῃ πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας σου μετ’ εἰρήνης τραφεῖς ἐν γῆρα καλῶ.” οὐκοῦν οἱ μὲν | [513] ἀτελεῖς καὶ πολεμούμεθα καὶ δουλεύομεν καὶ μόλις ἀπαλλαγὴν τῶν ἐπικρεμασθέντων φοβερῶν εὐρισκόμεθα, τὸ δὲ τέλειον γένος ἀδούλωτον, ἀπολέμητον, εἰρήνη καὶ ἐλευθερίᾳ βεβαιοτάτῃ ἐντρεφόμενον.

276 δογματικῶς δὲ τὸν ἀστείον οὐκ ἀποθνήσκοντα, ἀλλ’ ἀπερχόμενον εἰσήγαγεν, ἵν’ ἄσβεστον καὶ ἀθάνατον τὸ τῆς κεκαθαρμένης ἄκρως ψυχῆς ἀποφανῆ γένος, ἀποδημία τῇ ἐνθένδε πρὸς οὐρανὸν χρῆσόμενον, οὐ διαλύσει καὶ φθορᾶ, ἣν
 277 ἐπάγειν θάνατος δοκεῖ. μετὰ δὲ τὸ

“ ἀπελεύσῃ ” γέγραπται τὸ “ πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας σου ”· ποίους πατέρας, ἄξιον σκέψασθαι. τοὺς μὲν γὰρ ἐν τῇ Χαλδαίων χώρᾳ βεβιωκότας, οἷς μόνοις ἐχρήσατο συγγενέσιν, οὐκ ἂν λέγοι, διὰ τὸ χρησιμῶ τῶν ἀφ’ αἵματος ἀπάντων διωκίσθαι. “ εἶπε ” γάρ φησι “ κύριος τῷ Ἀβραάμ· ἄπελθε ἐκ τῆς γῆς σου καὶ ἐκ τῆς συγγενείας σου καὶ ἐκ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ πατρός σου εἰς τὴν γῆν ἣν σοι δείξω· 278 καὶ ποιήσω σε εἰς ἔθνος μέγα.” τὸν γὰρ ἄλλο-

<sup>1</sup> mss. and Pap. ἐγγραφεῖς.

<sup>2</sup> A noun seems to be wanted either as a substitute for or in addition to ἅπασιν. Wend. suggests προπαιδύμασι or παιδεύμασι (or perhaps μαθήμασι).

WHO IS THE HEIR, 274-278

a longing for the higher contemplation, and wins the sturdy virtues of self-mastery and perseverance ; and thus when the pilgrim wins his return to his native land, he takes with him all these fruits of instruction, which are here called " stock." <sup>a</sup>

LVI. Having said thus much on these points also <sup>275</sup> he continues, " but thou shalt depart to thy fathers nourished with peace, in a goodly old age " <sup>b</sup> (Gen. xv. 15). So then we who are imperfect are victims both of war and slavery, and hard-won is our release from the terrors which menace us. But the perfect are a race subject neither to war nor slavery, but nourished in peace and freedom sure and secure.

And when he represents the good man as not dying <sup>276</sup> but departing, there is sound doctrine in the words. He would have the nature of the fully purified soul shewn as unquenchable and immortal, destined to journey from hence to heaven, not to meet with dissolution and corruption, which death appears to bring.

After " thou shalt depart " come <sup>277</sup> the words " to thy fathers." What fathers ? This is worth inquiring. For Moses could not mean those who had lived in the land of the Chaldeans, who were the only kinsfolk Abraham had, seeing that the oracle had set his dwelling away from all those of his blood. For we read, " the Lord said unto Abraham ' depart from thy land and from thy kinsfolk and from the house of thy father unto the land which I shall shew thee, and I will make thee into a great nation ' " (Gen. xii. 1, 2). Was it <sup>278</sup> reasonable that he should again have affinity with the

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 575.

<sup>b</sup> The μετ' εἰρήνης or ἐν εἰρήνῃ of the LXX is of course intended to go with ἀπελεύση.

PHILO

- τριωθέντα ἐπιφροσύνη θεία πῶς ἦν τοῖς αὐτοῖς εὐλογον οἰκειοῦσθαι πάλιν; πῶς δὲ τὸν ἔθνους καὶ γένους ἐτέρου μέλλοντα ἡγεμόνα ἔσσεσθαι προσκληροῦσθαι τῷ παλαιῷ; οὐ γὰρ ἂν ἐχαρίζετο καινὸν τρόπον τινὰ καὶ νέον ἔθνος καὶ γένος αὐτῷ ὁ θεός, εἰ μὴ τοῦ ἀρχαίου κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς 279 ἀπεσχοίνιζεν. ἐθνάρχης γὰρ καὶ γενάρχης ὡς ἀληθῶς ἐστὶν οὗτος, ἀφ' οὗ καθάπερ ἀπὸ ρίζης τὸ σκεπτικὸν καὶ θεωρητικὸν τῶν τῆς φύσεως πραγμάτων ἀνέβλασθεν ἔρνος, ὄνομα Ἰσραήλ· ἐπεὶ καὶ “ τὰ παλαιὰ ἐκ προσώπου νέων ἐκφέρειν ” διείρηται. ποῦ γὰρ ἀρχαιολογίας ἔτι καὶ παλαιῶν καὶ κατημαξευμένων ἐθῶν ὄφελος, οἷς ἐξαπιναίως οὐ προσδοκήσασιν ἀθρόα καὶ νέα ὤμβρησεν ἀγαθὰ; 280 LVII. πατέρας οὖν οὐχ ὧν μετ-ἀνάστατος ἐγένετο ἢ ψυχὴ καλεῖ τοὺς ἐν τοῖς Χαλδαϊκοῖς κατορωρυγμένους μνήμασιν, ἀλλ' ὡς μὲν ἐνιοί φασι, ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους ἀστέρας—τὴν γὰρ τῶν κατὰ γῆν ἀπάντων γένεσιν διὰ τούτων λόγος ἔχει συνίστασθαι,—ὡς δέ τινες νομίζουσι, τὰς ἀρχετύπους ἰδέας, τὰ νοητὰ καὶ ἀόρατα ἐκεῖνα τῶν αἰσθητῶν καὶ ὄρωμένων τούτων παραδείγματα, πρὸς ἃ τὴν τοῦ σοφοῦ διάνοιαν 281 μετοικίζεσθαι. τινὲς δὲ πατέρας ὑπ-ετόπασαν εἰρῆσθαι τὰς τέτταρας ἀρχάς τε καὶ δυνάμεις, ἐξ ὧν συνέστηκεν ὁ κόσμος, γῆν ὕδωρ αἴρα καὶ πῦρ· εἰς γὰρ ταύτας ἕκαστον τῶν γενο-282 μένων φασὶν ἀναλύεσθαι δεόντως. καθάπερ γὰρ

<sup>a</sup> See note on De Sac. 79.

<sup>b</sup> Mangey took this to mean “ whose souls have departed,” “ quorum animae demigrarunt,” and he might have alleged in support De Sac. 10 τὴν πρὸς τὸν ὄντα μετανάστασιν ψυχῆς of very persons from whom he had been alienated by the forethought of God? Or that he who was to be the captain of another race and nation should be associated with that of a former age? God would not bestow on him a fresh and in a sense a novel race and nation, if he were not cutting him right adrift from the old. Surely he is indeed the founder of the nation 279 and the race, since from him as root sprang the young plant called Israel, which observes and contemplates all the things of nature. So we are told to bear out the old from the face of the new (Lev. xxvi. 10).<sup>a</sup> Rightly, for how shall they on whom the rain of new blessings has fallen in all its abundance, sudden and unlooked for, still find profit in old-world lore and the ruts of ancient customs?

WHO IS THE HEIR, 278-282

LVII. No; by 280 "fathers" he does not mean those whom the pilgrim soul has left behind,<sup>b</sup> those who lie buried in the sepulchres of Chaldaea, but possibly, as some say, the sun, moon and other stars to which it is held that all things on earth owe their birth and framing, or, as others think, the archetypal ideas which, invisible and intelligible there, are the patterns of things visible and sensible here—the ideas in which, as they say, the mind of the Sage finds its new home.

Others again have surmised that by "fathers" are 281 meant the four first principles and potentialities, from which the world has been framed, earth, water, air and fire. For into these, they say, each thing that has come into being is duly resolved. Just as nouns and 282

Moses' death. But apart from the singular  $\psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ , such a description of the death of the "fathers" would be pointless here, and the allegorical use of  $\mu\epsilon\tau\alpha\nu\iota\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\theta\alpha\iota$  and kindred words throughout this meditation (e.g. § 274) leaves no doubt that the words are to be taken as in the translation.

PHILO

ὀνόματα καὶ ῥήματα καὶ τὰ λόγου μέρη πάντα συνέστηκε μὲν ἐκ τῶν τῆς γραμματικῆς στοιχείων, ἀναλύεται δὲ πάλιν εἰς ἔσχατα ἐκείνα, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἕκαστος ἡμῶν συγκριθεὶς ἐκ τῶν τεττάρων καὶ δανεισάμενος ἀφ' ἐκάστης οὐσίας μικρὰ [514] μόρια, | καθ' ὠρισμένας περιόδους καιρῶν ἐκτίνει τὸ δάνειον, εἰ μὲν τι ξηρὸν εἶη, ἀποδιδούς γῆ, εἰ δὲ τι ὑγρὸν, ὕδατι, εἰ δὲ ψυχρὸν, ἀέρι, εἰ δ' ἔνθερον, πυρί. τὰ μὲν σωματικὰ ταῦτα, τὸ δὲ νοερὸν καὶ οὐράνιον τῆς ψυχῆς γένος πρὸς αἰθέρα τὸν καθαρῶτατον ὡς πατέρα ἀφίξεται. πέμπτη γάρ, ὡς ὁ τῶν ἀρχαίων λόγος, ἔστω τις οὐσία κυκλοφορητική, τῶν τεττάρων κατὰ τὸ κρείττον διαφέρουσα, ἐξ ἧς οἱ τε ἀστέρες καὶ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανὸς ἔδοξε γεγενῆσθαι, ἧς κατ' ἀκόλουθον θετέον καὶ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην ψυχὴν ἀπόσπασμα.

284 LVIII. Τὸ δὲ “ μετ' εἰρήνης τραφεῖς ” οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ προσδιώρισται, ἀλλ' ὅτι σχεδὸν τὸ πλεῖστον ἀνθρώπων γένος ἐπὶ πολέμῳ καὶ τοῖς ἐκ πολέμου κακοῖς πᾶσι τρέφεται. πόλεμος δ' ὁ μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν ἐκτός ἐστιν, ὃν ἀδοξία καὶ πενία καὶ δυσγένεια καὶ τὰ ὁμοιότροπα ἐπάγουσιν, ὁ δ' ἀπὸ τῶν ἐμφυλίων, κατὰ μὲν τὸ σῶμα ἀσθένειαι, λῶβαι, πηρώσεις παντελεῖς καὶ κηρῶν σωρὸς ἄλλων ἀμυθῆτων, κατὰ δὲ τὴν ψυχὴν πάθη, νοσήματα, ἀρρωστήματα, αἰ<sup>1</sup> ἀφροσύνης καὶ ἀδικίας καὶ τῶν ὁμοτυράνων χαλεπαὶ καὶ βαρύταται ἐπαναστάσεις 285 καὶ ἀκαθαίρετοι δυναστεῖαι. “ μετ' εἰρήνης οὖν

<sup>1</sup> My correction for ms. and Pap.? δι': Wend. proposed ἐτι δ'.

<sup>a</sup> στοιχεῖα being the regular term for the letters of the alphabet.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 575.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 282-285

verbs and all parts of speech which are composed of the "elements" in the grammatical sense<sup>a</sup> are finally resolved into the same, so too each of us is composed of the four mundane elements, borrowing small fragments from the substance of each, and this debt he repays when the appointed time-cycles are completed, rendering the dry in him to earth, the wet to water, the cold to air, and the warm to fire.<sup>b</sup> These all 283 belong to the body, but the soul whose nature is intellectual and celestial will depart to find a father in ether, the purest of the substances.<sup>c</sup> For we may suppose that,<sup>d</sup> as the men of old declared, there is a fifth substance, moving in a circle,<sup>b</sup> differing by its superior quality from the four. Out of this they thought the stars and the whole of heaven had been made and deduced as a natural consequence that the human soul also was a fragment thereof.

LVIII. The words "nourished with peace" are 284 not a pointless addition, but mean that the greater part of the human race are with little exception "nourished" for war and all its attendant evils. Now war sometimes arises from things outside us, waged against us by ill-repute and poverty and mean birth and the like. Sometimes it arises from intestine enemies—in the body, sicknesses, maimings, complete disablements of the senses and numberless other calamities piled on each other; in the soul, passions, diseases and infirmities of mind, the fierce and bitter insurrections, the inexpugnable despotisms of folly and injustice and their fellow usurpers. So, then, if a man be "nourished with peace" he 285

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Philo is willing to accept this explanation of "fathers," if with the four elements for the body is coupled the fifth for the soul.

PHILO

- τραφείς" γαληνὸν καὶ εὖδιον κτησάμενος βίον, εὐδαίμον' ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ μακάριον . . . <sup>1</sup>.
 πότε οὖν τοῦτο συμβήσεται; ὅταν εὐδοῇ μὲν τὰ ἔκτος πρὸς εὐπορίαν καὶ εὐδοξίαν, εὐδοῇ δὲ τὰ σώματος πρὸς ὑγίειάν τε καὶ ἰσχύν, εὐδοῇ δὲ τὰ 286 ψυχῆς πρὸς ἀπόλασιν ἀρετῶν. χρήζει γὰρ ἕκαστον οἰκείων δορυφόρων· δορυφορεῖται δὲ σῶμα μὲν εὐδοξία καὶ περιουσία καὶ ἀφθονία πλούτου, ψυχὴ δὲ τῷ τοῦ σώματος ὀλοκλήρῳ καὶ κατὰ πάντα ὑγιεινῷ, ὃ δὲ νοῦς ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐπιστήμας θεωρημάτων· ἐπεὶ ὅτι γε εἰρήνης οὐχ ἦν αἱ πόλεις ἄγουσι μέμνηται, σαφές ἐστι τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσι ταῖς ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς· μεγάλους <γὰρ> καὶ βαρεῖς πολέμους Ἀβραὰμ ἀνεδέξατο, οὓς καθηρηκῶς 287 φαίνεται. καὶ ἡ τῆς πατρῴας μέντοι γῆς ἀπόλεψις μετανισταμένῳ καὶ πάλιν οἰκῆσαι μὴ δυναμένῳ, φορουμένῳ δὲ ὧδε κἀκεῖσε καὶ ἐρήμους καὶ ἀτριβεῖς ὁδοὺς ἀλωμένῳ τῷ μὴ θεοπροπίοις καὶ τισι θεσφότοις πεπιστευκότι βαρὺς ἦν πόλεμος.
 ἀλλ' ἔδει γὰρ καὶ τρίτον τι τῶν φοβερῶν προσεπιδαψιλεύσασθαι, λιμόν, μεταναστάσεως καὶ 288 πολέμου κακὸν χεῖρον. ποίαν οὖν εἰρήνην ἤγαγεν; τὸ γὰρ, οἶμαι, μετανίστασθαι καὶ ἀνίδρυτον εἶναι καὶ βασιλέων ἀμάχοις ἐναντιοῦσθαι δυνάμεσι<sup>2</sup> καὶ λιμῷ πιέζεσθαι πόλεμον οὐχ ἓνα, πολλοὺς δὲ καὶ 289 πολυτρόπους ἔοικε μηνύειν. ἀλλ' ἓν γε ταῖς δι' ὑπονοιῶν ἀποδόσεσιν εἰρήνης ἀκράτου δείγμα ἕκαστον αὐτῶν εἶναι συμβέβηκε· παθῶν γὰρ |

<sup>1</sup> The sentence seems imperfect as it stands; either read as Mangey <ὁ> γαληνὸν κτλ. sc. ἐστι or more likely a verb has been lost: Wend. ἀπελεύσεται (or perhaps ἀπεισι after τραφεῖς).

<sup>2</sup> mss. and Pap. δυνάμενον or μὴ δυνάμενον: Mangey's text has βασιλεύσιν . . . μὴ δυνάμενον.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 285-289

will depart, having gained a calm, unclouded life, a life of true bliss and happiness. When will this be found? When there is welfare outside us, welfare in the body, welfare in the soul, the first bringing ease of circumstance and good repute, the second health and strength, the third delight in virtues. For each part needs its own proper guards.<sup>a</sup> 286

The body is guarded by good repute and unstinted abundance of wealth, the soul by the complete health and soundness of the body, the mind by the acquired lore of the various forms of knowledge. Such is the meaning of the text. For that he is thinking of a peace other than that which states enjoy is clear to those who are versed in the holy Scriptures. For Abraham underwent great and severe wars, which he is shewn to have fought to the finish. And 287

further, the mere leaving of his fatherland, to emigrate without any possibility of dwelling there again, to be borne hither and thither and to wander over desolate and untrodden roads were in itself a grievous war for one who had no divine message or promise wherein to trust. Still more he had, to crown this profusion of terrors, a third, famine (Gen. xii. 10), an evil worse than migration and war. What kind 288 of peace, then, was his? For surely to be a homeless emigrant, to be confronted by kings with overwhelming forces and to feel the stress of famine would seem to indicate not one war only, but many and manifold. But if we turn to the allegorical exposi- 289

tion of the words, each of these three proves to be an evidence of peace pure and simple. For dearth and <sup>a</sup> Cf. De Conf. 18 f.

PHILO

[515] ἔνδεια καὶ λιμὸς καὶ καθαίρεσις ἐχθρῶν ἀδικημάτων καὶ μετανάστασις ἀπὸ Χαλδαικῆς δόξης πρὸς τὴν φιλόθεον, τουτέστιν ἀπὸ τοῦ γεγονότος αἰσθητοῦ πρὸς τὸ νοητὸν καὶ πεπονηκὸς αἴτιον, εὐνομίαν καὶ εὐστάθειαν κατασκευάζουσιν.

- 290 Ὑπισχνεῖται δὲ τῷ τοιαύτην ἄγοντι εἰρήνην καλὸν γῆρας, οὐ δήπου τὴν πολυχρόνιον ἀλλὰ τὴν μετὰ φρονήσεως ζωὴν· τὸ γὰρ εὐήμερον πολυετίας κρεῖττον, ὅσω καὶ βραχύτερον φῶς σκότους αἰωνίου. μίαν γὰρ ἡμέραν ὑγιῶς εἶπέ τις προφητικὸς ἀνὴρ βούλεσθαι βιώναι μετ' ἀρετῆς ἢ μυρία ἔτη ἐν σκιᾷ θανάτου, θάνατον<sup>1</sup> μέντοι τῶν φαύλων αἰνιττόμενος
- 291 βίον. τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ καὶ νῦν ἔργοις μᾶλλον ἢ ῥήμασι<sup>2</sup> διασυνίστησι Μωυσῆς· ὃν γὰρ ἀναγράφει γήρα χρησόμενον καλῶ, τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ σχεδὸν ἀπάντων ὀλιγοχροניώτατον εἰσήγαγε, φιλοσοφῶν καὶ διδάσκων ἡμᾶς, τίς ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν εὐγῆρας ἐστίν, ἵνα μὴ πολὺν<sup>3</sup> τύφον ἐπὶ τοῦ φανεροῦ σώματός ποτε ἀποδεξώμεθα γέμοντα αἰσχύνης καὶ πολλῶν ὄνειδῶν, ἀλλ' εὐβουλίαν καὶ σταθερότητα ψυχῆς ἰδόντες τὸ γέρως ἀδελφὸν καὶ παρώνυμον καλὸν
- 292 γῆρας ἐπιφημίσωμέν τε καὶ μαρτυρήσωμεν. δογματικῶς οὖν ἄκουε κατὰ τὸν νομοθέτην μόνον τὸν ἀστείον εὐγῆρων καὶ μακροβιώτατον, ὀλιγοχροניώ-

<sup>1</sup> Pap. θανατον: mss. σκιάν: perhaps θανάτου σκιάν.

<sup>2</sup> Pap. εν τοις . . ρημασι: mss. ἔργον . . ῥήμα.

<sup>3</sup> Pap. πολυ: mss. παλαιὸν (πολιόν). See App. p. 575.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 289-292

famine of passions, the rout of enemies in the shape of wrongdoings, the migration from the creed of the Chaldeans to the creed of the lovers of God, that is, from the created and sensible to the intelligible and creative Cause—these build up the fabric of good order and stability.

To him who enjoys a peace like this Moses 290 promises a goodly old age, not meaning, we may be sure, the life of long duration, but the life lived wisely. For the welfare of a day ranks as far above multitude of years, as the briefer daylight above an eternity of darkness. It was a wholesome saying of a man of prophetic gifts that he would rather live a single day with virtue than ten thousand years in the shadow of death (Ps. lxxxiv. [lxxxiii.] 11)<sup>a</sup> where under the figure of death he indicates the life of the wicked. And Moses in the present instance shews 291 the same by the facts he records rather than by words. For this Abraham, whom he here describes as destined to a goodly old age, is represented by him as more short-lived than practically all who went before him. Thus he shews to us, who are his scholars in wisdom, who it is whose old age is happy, to the end that we should not look with favour on all the abounding vanity of the outward body, a vanity full of shame and rich in reproaches, but recognizing in right judgement and stability of soul that goodly old age, which both in name and nature is twin brother of "reward,"<sup>b</sup> give it its rightful title and testify to its truth. Learn then thy lesson and hear 292 how the lawgiver tells us that happy old age and longest span of life is only for the good, but briefest

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 575.

<sup>b</sup> For the play on γῆρας and γέρας cf. De Sobr. 16.

PHILO

- τατον δὲ τὸν φαῦλον, ἀποθνήσκειν αἰὶ μανθάνοντα, μᾶλλον δὲ τὴν ἀρετῆς ζωὴν ἤδη τετελευτηκότα.
- 293 LIX. Λέγεται δ' ἐξῆς· “τετάρτη δὲ γενεᾷ ἀποστραφήσονται ὧδε,” οὐχ ἵνα αὐτὸ μόνον μνηυθῆ χρόνος, ἐν ᾧ τὴν ἱερὰν οἰκήσουσι γῆν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ τελείαν ἀποκατάστασιν ψυχῆς παρα-στήσαι. γίνεται δὲ ὡσανεὶ τετάρτη γενεᾷ· ὃν
- 294 δὲ τρόπον, ἄξιον συνδιασκέψασθαι. ἀποκυθὲν τὸ βρέφος ἄχρι τῆς πρώτης ἑπταετίας ἐν ἡλικίᾳ τῇ παιδικῇ ψυχῆς ἀκραιφνοῦς μεμοίραται, λείψω μάλιστα ἐμφεροῦς κηρῶ, τοῖς ἀγαθῶν καὶ κακῶν χαρακτήρησι μήπω τετυπωμένης· καὶ γὰρ ὅσα γράφεσθαι δοκεῖ, ὑγρότητι ἐπαλειφόμενα συγχεῖται.
- 295 πρώτη μὲν ἦδε ὡσανεὶ γενεὰ ψυχῆς· δευτέρα δέ, ἣτις μετὰ τὴν παιδικὴν ἡλικίαν κακοῖς ἀρχεται συζῆν, ἃ τε ἐξ ἑαυτῆς εἴωθε γεννᾶν ψυχὴ καὶ ὅσα παρὰ τῶν ἄλλων ἀσμένη δέχεται. διδάσκαλοί τε γὰρ ἀμαρτημάτων μυρίοι, τίτθαι καὶ παιδαγωγοὶ καὶ γονεῖς καὶ οἱ κατὰ πόλεις γεγραμμένοι καὶ ἄγραφοι νόμοι θαυμάζοντες ἃ χρὴ γελᾶσθαι, καὶ ἄνευ τῶν διδαξόντων αὐτομαθῆς ἐστὶν αὐτῇ πρὸς τὰ ὑπαίτια, ὡς ὑπ' εὐφορίας αἰὶ κακῶν βρίθειν.
- 296 “ἔγκειται” γὰρ φησι Μωυσῆς “ἡ διάνοια τοῦ [516] ἀνθρώπου | ἐπιμελῶς ἐπὶ τὰ πονηρὰ ἐκ νεότητος.”
 ἡδ' ἐστὶν ἡ ἐπαρτοτάτη γενεὰ μὲν συμβολικῶς, κυρίως δὲ ἡλικία, καθ' ἣν τό τε σῶμα ἡβᾷ καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ πεφύσσηται, τῶν ἐντυφομένων ἀναρριπιζο-

---

<sup>a</sup> The phrase is apparently intended to be the converse of the Platonic thought of the wise man studying to die to the body, cf. De Gig. 14. But it seems strange, and Mangey suggested λανθάνοντα. Possibly φθάνοντα, which would carry on the thought of ὀλιγοχρονώτατον.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 292-296

is the life of the wicked, since he is ever studying to die<sup>a</sup> or rather has died already to the life of virtue.

LIX. Next we have "but in the fourth generation 293 they shall come back hither" (Gen. xv. 16). These words are meant not only to state the date at which they should inhabit the holy land, but to bring before us the thought of the complete restoration of the soul. That restoration may be said to come in the fourth generation. How it comes deserves our careful consideration. The infant from the day of its 294 birth for the first seven years, that is through the age of childhood, possesses only the simplest elements of soul, a soul which closely resembles smooth wax and has not yet received any impression of good or evil, for such marks as it appears to receive are smoothed over and confused by its fluidity. This is 295 what we may call the first generation of the soul. The second is that which follows childhood and begins to associate with evils, both these engendered by the soul of its own motion, and those which are willingly accepted at the hands of others. For the instructors to sin are legion, nurses and "pedagogues"<sup>b</sup> and parents and the laws of cities, written and unwritten, which extol what should be derided; and apart from and before such instruction, the soul is its own pupil in the school of guilt, so that it is throughout weighed down by its capacity for producing ill. "The mind 296 of man," says Moses, "is carefully intent upon wickedness from youth" (Gen. viii. 21). The curse is heaviest on this "generation," to use the figurative term for the literal "age," in which the body is in its bloom and the soul inflated, when the smouldering passions are being fanned into a flame, consuming

<sup>b</sup> Or "home-tutors."

PHILO

- μένων παθῶν, “ ἄλως τε καὶ ἀστάχυς καὶ πεδία ”
- 297 καὶ ὅσα ἂν τύχῃ καταπιμπράντων. ταύτην τὴν ἐπίνοσον γενεὰν ἢ ἡλικίαν ὑπὸ τινος τρίτης οἶα ὑπὸ ἰατρικῆς φιλοσοφίας νοσηλευθῆναι χρή, κατεπασθεῖσαν λόγοις ὑγιεινοῖς καὶ σωτηρίοις, δι’ ὧν κένωσιν μὲν ἐνδέξεται τῆς ἀμέτρου τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων πλησμονῆς, πλήρωσιν δὲ λιμηρᾶς κενώσεως τῶν κατορθωμάτων καὶ ἐρημίας δεινῆς.
- 298 μετὰ τὴν θεραπείαν οὖν ταύτην γενεᾷ τετάρτῃ φύεται ψυχῇ δύναμις τε καὶ ῥώμη κατὰ τὴν τῆς φρονήσεως βεβαιωτάτην ἀνάληψιν καὶ τὸ ἐν ἀπάσαις ἀρεταῖς ἀκλινές τε καὶ πάγιον. τοῦτ’ ἐστὶ τὸ λεγόμενον· “ τετάρτῃ δὲ γενεᾷ ἀποστραφήσονται ὧδε.” κατὰ γὰρ τὸν δειχθέντα τέταρτον ἀριθμὸν ἀποστραφεῖσα τοῦ διαμαρτάνειν ἡ ψυχὴ κληρονόμος
- 299 ἀποδεικνύται σοφίας. πρῶτος μὲν γὰρ ἀριθμὸς, καθ’ ὃν οὔτε ἀγαθῶν οὔτε κακῶν λαβεῖν ἔνοιαν ἔστιν, ἀτυπώτου τῆς ψυχῆς ὑπαρχούσης· δεύτερος δέ, καθ’ ὃν φορᾷ τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων χρώμεθα· τρίτος δέ, ἐν ᾧ θεραπευόμεθα, τὰ νοσερὰ διωθούμενοι καὶ τὴν ἀκμὴν τῶν παθῶν ἀφηβῶντες· τέταρτος δέ, ἐν ᾧ παντελοῦς ὑγιείας καὶ ῥώσεως μεταποιούμεθα, ὅποτε ἀποστρεφόμενοι τὰ φαῦλα τοῖς καλοῖς ἐγχειρεῖν δοκοῦμεν, πρότερον δὲ οὐκ ἔξεστι.
- 300 LX. Τὸ δὲ ἄχρι τίνος, αὐτὸς μὲνύσει λέγων· “ οὐπω γὰρ ἀναπεπλήρωνται αἱ ἀνομίαι τῶν Ἀμορραίων.” δίδωσι δὲ ἀφορμὴν τοῖς ἀσθενεστέροις τὰ τοιαῦτα, ὡς ὑπολαμβάνειν, ὅτι Μωυσῆς εἰμαρμένην καὶ ἀνάγκην ὡς αἰτίας τῶν γινομένων

WHO IS THE HEIR, 296-300

“ threshing-floor and standing corn and fields ”
(Ex. xxii. 6) and whatever lies in their path. This 297 stricken generation or age must be tended on its sickbed by a third, taking the form of philosophy with its healing art, and put under the spell of sound and salutary reasonings. Through these it will be able to void the vast overload of sins and to fill its void, its starvation, its fearful emptiness of right actions.

So after this healing treatment 298
there grows in the fourth generation within the soul power and vigour, because it has fully and firmly apprehended good sense and is immovably established in all virtues. This is what is meant by the saying “ in the fourth generation they shall turn back hither.” For under that fourth number, to which he points, the soul turns back from sinning and is declared the heir of wisdom. The first number is 299 that under which it is impossible to form any conception of good or ill and the soul receives no impressions. Under the second we experience the onrush of sin. The third is that in which we receive the healing treatment, when we cast off the elements of sickness and the crisis of passion is reached and passed. The fourth is that in which we make good our claim to complete health and strength, when we feel that we are turning back from wickedness and laying our hands to the good. Till then we may not do so.<sup>a</sup>

LX. How that “ until ” is fixed he will himself 300 shew us, when he says “ for the iniquities of the Amorites are not yet fulfilled ” (Gen. xv. 16). Such words as these give weaker minds a handle for supposing that Moses represents fate and necessity as <sup>a</sup> For the thought of §§ 293-299 cf. De Sacr. 18 f. and note.

PHILO

- 301 ἀπάντων εισάγει. χρή δὲ μὴ ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι ἀκολουθίαν μὲν καὶ εἰρμὸν καὶ ἐπιπλοκὰς αἰτιῶν ἄτε φιλόσοφος καὶ θεοφράδμων ἀνὴρ οἶδεν, τούτοις δ' οὐκ ἀνάπτει τὰς τῶν γινομένων αἰτίας. ἐφантаσιώθη γὰρ πρεσβύτερον ἄλλο ἐποχούμενον τοῖς ὅλοις ἡνίοχου τρόπον ἢ κυβερνήτου· πηδαλιουχεῖ γὰρ τὸ κοινὸν τοῦ κόσμου σκάφος, ᾧ τὰ πάντα ἐμπλεῖ, καὶ τὸ πτηνὸν ἄρμα, τὸν σύμπαντα οὐρανόν, ἡνιοχεῖ χρώμενον αὐτεξουσίῳ καὶ αὐτο-302 κράτορι βασιλείᾳ. τί οὖν καὶ περὶ τούτων λεκτέον; ἐρμηνεύονται Ἀμορραῖοι λαλοῦντες, τὸ δὲ μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν ἀνθρώπῳ δωρηθὲν ὑπὸ φύσεως, τὸν λόγον, μυρίοι τῶν λαβόντων διέφθειραν ἀχαρίστως καὶ ἀπίστως τῇ δούσῃ προσενεχθέντες. οὗτοι δὲ εἰσιν οἱ γόητες, οἱ κόλακες, οἱ πιθανῶν σοφισμάτων εὔρεται, ἰ
 [517] φενακίσαι καὶ παρακρούσασθαι μόνον εὖ εἰδότες, τοῦ ἀψευδεῖν οὐ πεφροντικότες. ἐπιτηδεύουσι μέντοι καὶ ἀσάφειαν, ἀσάφεια δὲ βαθὺ σκότος ἐν
 303 λόγῳ, κλέπταις δὲ συνεργὸν τὸ σκότος. οὗ χάριν Μωυσῆς τὸν ἀρχιερέα δηλώσει καὶ ἀληθείᾳ διακεκόσμηκεν, ἀρίδην ἀξιῶν εἶναι καὶ ἀληθῆ τὸν τοῦ σπουδαίου λόγον. οἱ δὲ πολλοὶ τὸν ἄδην καὶ ψευδῆ μεταδιώκουσιν, ᾧ συνεπιγράφεται πᾶς ὁ τῶν ἀγελαίων καὶ ἡμελημένων ἀνθρώπων ἀπατώ-304 μενος ὄχλος. ἕως μὲν οὖν “ οὐκ ἀναπεπλήρωται τὰ ἀμαρτήματα τῶν Ἀμορραίων,” τουτέστι τῶν σοφιστικῶν λόγων διὰ τὸ ἀνεξέλεγκτον, ἀλλ' ἔτι

---

<sup>a</sup> Presumably the critics meant that the text represented God as wishing to bring the people to the Holy Land earlier, but unable to do so till some other event had taken place.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 301-304

the cause of all events.<sup>a</sup> But we should recognize 301 that while as a philosopher and interpreter of God he understood that causes have their sequence, connexion and interplay, he did not ascribe the causation of events to these subsidiary factors. He envisaged something else higher than and antecedent to these, a Someone who is borne on the universe like a charioteer or pilot. He steers the common bark of the world, in which all things sail; He guides that winged chariot, the whole heaven, exerting an absolute sovereignty which knows no authority but its own.

What then must be our 302 explanation of these particular words? This.—The name Amorites is by interpretation “talkers.” Now speech is the greatest boon given by nature to mankind, but the gift has been marred by thousands of the recipients who have dealt ungratefully and faithlessly with the power which gave it. Such are impostors, flatterers, inventors of cunning plausibilities, who know well how to cheat and mislead, but that only, and have no thought for honest truth. And further, they practise a lack of clearness, which in speech is profound darkness, and darkness is the fellow-worker of thieves. It is for this reason that 303 Moses adorned the high priest with Manifestation and Truth<sup>b</sup> (Ex. xxviii. 26), judging that the speech of the man of worth should be transparent and true. But the speech which most aim at is obscure and false, and this is accepted by all the deluded multitude of common and unmeritable men. So long then as 304 “the sins of the Amorites,” that is of sophistical arguments, “are not fulfilled,” because they have <sup>b</sup> The Urim and Thummim of the E.V. (Ex. xxviii. 30), cf. Leg. All. iii. 123 f.

PHILO

- ὄλκον<sup>1</sup> ἔχοντα δύναμιν ταῖς πιθανότησιν ἡμᾶς ἐπάγεται, [καὶ] ἀποστραφῆναι καὶ καταλιπεῖν αὐτὰ οὐ δυνάμενοι τῷ δελεάζεσθαι καταμένομεν.
- 305 ἔάν δὲ πᾶσαι αἱ ψευδεῖς πιθανότητες διελεγχθῶσιν ὑπὸ τῶν ἀληθῶν πίστεων καὶ πλήρεις αὐτῶν καὶ ἐπιχειλεῖς αἱ ἁμαρτίαι περιφανῶσιν, ἀποδρασόμεθα ἀμεταστρεπτί καὶ μονοноῦ τὰ ἀπόγαια ἀράμενοι τῆς τῶν ψευσμάτων καὶ σοφι-σμάτων χώρας ἐξαναθησόμεθα, τοῖς ἀληθείας ναυλοχωτάτοις ὑποδρόμοις καὶ λιμέσιν ἐνορμί-
- 306 σασθαι ἐπειγόμενοι. τοιοῦτον δὴ τὸ δηλούμενον ὑπὸ τῆς προτάσεως· ἀμήχανον γὰρ ἀποστραφῆναι καὶ μισῆσαι καὶ καταλιπεῖν τὸ πιθανὸν ψεῦδος, εἰ μὴ τὸ περὶ αὐτὸ ἁμάρτημα πλήρες ἀναφανείη καὶ τέλειον· ἀναφανεῖται δὲ ἐκ τοῦ μὴ περιέργως<sup>2</sup> διελεγχθῆναι κατὰ τὴν τοῦ ἀληθοῦς ἀντίταξιν καὶ βεβαίωσιν.
- 307 LXI. Λέγει δὲ ἐξῆς· “ ἐπεὶ δὲ ἐγένετο ὁ ἥλιος πρὸς δυσμαῖς, φλόξ ἐγένετο,” δηλῶν ὅτι ἀρετὴ πρᾶγμα ἐστὶν ὀψίγονον καὶ μὴν, ὡς ἔφασάν τινες, πρὸς αὐταῖς ταῖς τοῦ βίου δυσμαῖς βεβαιούμενον.
 ἀρετὴν δὲ ἀπεικάζει φλογί· καθάπερ γὰρ ἡ φλόξ καίει μὲν τὴν παραβληθεῖσαν ὕλην, φωτίζει δὲ τὸν γείτονα ἀέρα, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἐμίπηρησι μὲν τὰ ἁμαρτήματα ἢ ἀρετῇ, φέγγους δὲ τὴν ὅλην ἀνα-
- 308 πίμπλησι διάνοιαν. ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἔτι τῶν ἀδιαιρέτων καὶ ἀμερίστων λόγων ἐπικρατούντων ταῖς πιθανότησιν, οὓς Ἀμορραίους ἀνακαλεῖ, περιφανεστάτην καὶ ἄσκιον αὐγὴν ἰδεῖν οὐ δυνά-

<sup>1</sup> mss. and Pap. ἔτι ἐνδίολκον, a word otherwise unknown, though retained in the lexica. It is difficult to see on what principles it is formed.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 304-308

not been refuted, but still in virtue of their powers of attraction seduce us with their plausibilities, while their enticements make us powerless to turn from and leave them, we remain where we are.<sup>a</sup>

But if ever all the plausible fallacies are refuted by 305 true beliefs, and thus the cup is filled to the brim and their sins appear in their true light, we shall run for our lives without a backward glance, or (shall we say ?) slip our cable and sail clean away from the land of falsehood and sophistry, eager to find an anchorage in the most secure of all roadsteads, the haven of truth. Such is the lesson expressed in the 306 problem here presented. For it is impossible to turn back from, to hate, to leave the plausible falsehood, unless the sin involved in it be revealed complete and consummated. And this revelation will be made when, confronted by the firm evidence of truth, it receives the much-needed<sup>b</sup> refutation.

LXI. He continues, "but when the sun was at its 307 setting a flame arose" (Gen. xv. 17). Thus he shews that virtue is a late birth and indeed, as some have said, established firmly only at the very close of life's day. He likens virtue to a flame, for just as the flame consumes the fuel which lies at hand but gives light to the air in its neighbourhood, so virtue burns up the sins but fills the whole mind with its beam.

But while those unanalysed and un- 308 classified ways of thinking, which he calls Amorites, govern us with their plausibilities, we cannot see the

<sup>a</sup> Or "remain unable," etc.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "not unnecessarily." Or, if we read παρέργως (see crit. note), "thoroughly and carefully."

---

<sup>2</sup> So Pap. and some mss.: others μὴ παρέργως, a very common collocation in Philo, cf. (e.g.) § 40. So Mangey.

PHILO

μεθα· κλιβάνου δ' ειλικρινές πῦρ οὐκ ἔχοντος, ἀλλ' ὡς αὐτὸς ἔφη καπνιζομένου τρόπον διακειόμεθα, σπινθήρσι μὲν τῆς ἐπιστήμης ὑποτυφόμενοι, μήπω δὲ καθαρῶ πυρὶ δοκιμασθῆναι καὶ κραταιωθῆναι 309 δυνάμενοι. πολλή δὲ τῶ σπείραντι τοὺς σπινθήρας χάρις, ἵνα μὴ νεκρῶν τρόπον σωμάτων ὁ νοῦς ὑπὸ παθῶν καταψυχθῆ, ἀλλ' ἔνθερμος ὢν καὶ χλιαινό-
 310 μένος ὑπεκκαύμασιν ἀρετῆς ζωπυρῆται μέχρι τοῦ τὴν εἰς πῦρ ἱερόν, ὡς ὁ Ναδάβ καὶ Ἀβιούδ, καπνὸς δὲ γίνεται
 [518] μὲν πρὸ πυρός, | δακρύνειν δὲ βιάζεται τοὺς πλησιάζοντας. ἀμφοτέρα δὲ φιλεῖ συμβαίνειν· τοῖς τε γὰρ ἀρετῆς ἀγγελοῖς προσχωροῦντες<sup>1</sup> τελειότητα ἐλπίζομεν, καὶ εἰ μήπω δυναίμεθα τυχεῖν αὐτῆς, οὐκ ἀδακρυτὶ διάγομεν ἀνιῶμενοι. πολὺς γὰρ ὅταν ἡμερος ἐντακῆ, πρὸς τὴν τοῦ ποθουμένου θήραν ἐπισπεύδει καὶ ἄχρι τοῦ συλ-
 311 λαβεῖν κατηφεῖν ἀναγκάζει. κλιβάνῳ δὲ νῦν ἐξωμοίωσε τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ φιλομαθοῦς καὶ ἐλπίδα τελειώσεως ἔχοντος, ἐπειδὴ τροφῆς πεττο-μένης<sup>2</sup> ἐκότερον ἀγγεῖόν ἐστιν, ὁ μὲν τῆς διὰ σιτίων φθαρτῶν, ἡ δὲ τῆς δι' ἀφθάρτων ἀρετῶν.
 αἱ δὲ λαμπάδες τοῦ πυρὸς αἱ δαδουχούμεναι τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> τοῖς . . . ἀγγέλοις mss. and Pap.: Wend. corrects to ταῖς . . . αὐγαῖς. For προσχωροῦντος (so Wend.) the mss. have προσχορεύοντες or προχορεύοντες (Pap.?): Mangey ἐγχορεύοντες. See App. p. 575.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. inserts συγκρατιοῦν from Pap. which apparently has κραταιοῦν preceded by a space, or illegibility, of some kind, which he regards as representing three letters. But συγκρατιοῦν is unknown to the lexica, and if it exists must be transitive, and we should expect τροφήν rather than τροφῆς. If Pap. is to be followed, I should suggest ὡσεὶ (or rays in their full unshadowed brightness. We are in the same plight as the furnace which has no clear fire, but to use his own word (Gen. xv. 17) is "smoking." The flickerings of knowledge are smouldering within us, but we cannot as yet bear the strengthening test of pure fire. Yet great thanks are due to 309 Him who sowed these flickering sparks, to the end that the mind should not be chilled by passion like dead bodies, but, warmed and heated by the glowing coals of virtue, be quickened into flame, till it finds its full conversion into sacred fire, like Nadab and Abihu<sup>a</sup> (Lev. x. 2).

Now smoke comes 310 before fire and forces those who approach it to shed tears. Both these, in the moral sphere, are a common experience. When we draw near to the forerunners of virtue we hope for its consummation, and if we cannot yet attain it our days are spent in sorrow and tears. For when some strong absorbing yearning has sunk into us, it urges us on to the quest of the desired object and forces us to be heavy of heart, until it is within our grasp.

Again in this 311 passage he compares the soul of him who loves learning and hopes for its consummation to a furnace or oven, because each serves as a vessel wherein is prepared nourishing food, in the one case the food of corruptible meats, in the other that of incorruptible virtues.

Again the torches of fire borne as in the mystic torch-rite are the judgements of <sup>a</sup> For the construing of the fate of Nadab and Abihu as an exaltation by fire to heaven cf. Leg. All. ii. 58.

---

οὐα) κραταιόν. But, as in § 76, I have thought it better to omit it.

PHILO

- δαδούχου θεοῦ κρίσεις<sup>1</sup> εἰσίν, αἱ λαμπραὶ καὶ διανγεῖς, αἷς ἔθος μέσον τῶν διχοτομημάτων, λέγω δὲ τῶν ἐναντιοτήτων, ἐξ ὧν ἅπας ὁ κόσμος συνέστηκε,
- 312 διάγειν. λέγεται γάρ· “λαμπάδες πυρός, αἱ διήλθον μέσον τῶν διχοτομημάτων,” ἵνα γνῶς, ὅτι αἱ θεῖαι δυνάμεις διὰ μέσων καὶ πραγμάτων καὶ σωμάτων ἰοῦσαι φθείρουσι μὲν οὐδὲν—μένει γὰρ ἀπαθῆ τὰ διχοτομήματα,—διαιροῦσι δὲ καὶ διαστελλοῦσι σφόδρα καλῶς τὰς ἐκάστων φύσεις.
- 313 LXII. Τῆς οὖν τῶν εἰρημένων ἐπιστήμης κληρονόμος δεόντως ἀποδείκνυται ὁ σοφός· “ἐν γὰρ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ” φησὶν “ἐκείνῃ διέθετο κύριος τῷ Ἀβραάμ διαθήκην λέγων· τῷ σπέρματί σου δώσω τὴν γῆν
- 314 ταύτην.” ποίαν γῆν δηλοῖ, εἰ μὴ τὴν προειρημένην, ἐφ’ ἣν ποιεῖται τὴν ἀναφοράν; ἧς ἐστὶν ὁ καρπὸς κατάληψις ἀσφαλῆς καὶ βεβαία τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ σοφίας, καθ’ ἣν τὰ σύμπαντα τοῖς τομεύσιν ἑαυτοῦ διαφυλάττει ἀπαθῆ τὰ ἀγαθὰ κακοῦ κατὰ
- 315 τὰ ἐπὶ τοῖς τὴν γένεσιν ἀφθάρτοις.<sup>2</sup> εἶτ’ ἐπιλέγει· “ἀπὸ τοῦ ποταμοῦ Αἰγύπτου ἕως τοῦ ποταμοῦ τοῦ μεγάλου [ποταμοῦ] Εὐφράτου,” δηλῶν ὅτι οἱ τέλειοι τὰς μὲν ἀρχὰς ἔχουσιν ἀπὸ σώματος καὶ αἰσθήσεως καὶ τῶν ὀργανικῶν μερῶν, ὧν ἄνευ ζῆν οὐκ ἔνεστι—χρήσιμα γὰρ πρὸς τὴν ἐν τῷ μετὰ σώματος βίῳ παιδείαν,—τὰ δὲ τέλη ἐπὶ τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ σοφίαν, τὸν μέγαν ὡς ἀληθῶς

<sup>1</sup> κρίσεις is the reading of the mss. (Pap. not stated): Wend. unreasonably, as it seems to me, even if he finds it in Pap., corrects to κρίσις.

<sup>2</sup> The last part of this sentence is noted by Wend. as corrupt. I suggest and have translated καθ’ ἣν τὰ σύμπαντα τοῖς τομεύσιν ἑαυτοῦ δια<κρίνας> φυλάττει ἀπαθῆ τὰ ἀγαθὰ κακοῦ καθὰ πρέπει τοῖς τὴν γένεσιν ἀφθάρτοις. See App. p. 576.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 311-315

God the torch-bearer, judgements bright and radiant, whose wont it is to range between the half-pieces, that is between the opposites of which the whole world is composed. For we read " torches of fire 312 which passed through between the half-pieces " (Gen. xv. 17). Thus you may know how highly excellent is the work of the Potencies of God as they pass through the midst of material and immaterial things. They destroy nothing—for the half-pieces remain unharmed—but divide and distinguish the nature of each.

LXII. Rightly then is the Sage declared to be the 313 heir of the knowledge of the truths here mentioned. For " on that day," says Moses, " God made a covenant with Abraham, saying, " to thy seed will I give this land " (Gen. xv. 18). What land does he 314 mean, but that which was mentioned before to which he now refers,<sup>a</sup> the land whose fruit is the sure and stedfast apprehension of the wisdom of God, by which through His dividing powers He separates all things and keeps untouched by evil those that are good, as it is meet they should be kept for those who are born to life imperishable?<sup>b</sup> Then 315 he continues, " from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates " (Gen. xv. 18). Here he shews how it stands with the perfected. Their perfecting begins with the body and sense and the parts which serve as organs, without which we cannot live, since they are needed for our training while in the life of the body. It ends in the attainment of the wisdom of God, that truly great river, brimming over with

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in Gen. xv. 17, which was interpreted as wisdom in §§ 98 and 99.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 576. ◦

PHILO

ποταμόν, χαρᾶς καὶ εὐφροσύνης καὶ τῶν ἄλλων 316 πλημμυροῦντα ἀγαθῶν. οὐ γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ ποταμοῦ Εὐφράτου ἕως τοῦ Αἰγύπτου ποταμοῦ τὴν χώραν περιέγραψεν—οὐ<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ἂν ἀρετὴν εἰς τὰ σωματικὰ πάθη κατεβίβασεν,—ἀλλ' ἔμπαλιν “ἀπὸ τοῦ Αἰγύπτου ἕως τοῦ μεγάλου Εὐφράτου.” ἀπὸ γὰρ τῶν θνητῶν αἱ βελτιώσεις γίνονται πρὸς τὰ ἄφθαρτα.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey, οὕτως, “for that would have been to” etc.

WHO IS THE HEIR, 316

joy and gladness<sup>a</sup> and all other blessings. For note 316 that he does not fix the limits of the land as stretching from the river Euphrates to the river of Egypt<sup>b</sup>—he would never have made virtue take a downward course into the bodily passions—but in the opposite order, from the river of Egypt to the great Euphrates. For all progress in good begins with the mortal and proceeds to the imperishable.

<sup>a</sup> There is evidently a play on the resemblance of Εὐφράτης and εὐφροσύνη; cf. its description as εὐφραίνοντα τὴν διανοίαν Leg. All. i. 72.

<sup>b</sup> Or “the river Aegyptus.” In the Quaestiones (Gen. iii. 5) Philo, commenting on this passage, quotes Odyssey xiv. 255 to shew that the old name for the Nile was Egyptus.

ON MATING WITH
THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES
(DE CONGRESSU QUAERENDAE ERUDITIONIS GRATIA)<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> I have thought it better not to attempt to alter the traditional Latin title (which is given by Wendland without quaerendae), absurd as it is. The subject of the treatise is the training of the mind by the school subjects, the training being termed "mating," or "intercourse," because the union of Abraham with Hagar is the allegorical form in which it is set. The Greek would be better expressed, though possibly not in the best Latin, by "De coniugio cum primordiis erudiendi."

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THE subject of this treatise is Gen. xvi. 1-6 with some omissions.

1. Now Sarai, Abram's wife, was not bearing to him, and she had a handmaiden, an Egyptian, named Hagar.

2. And Sarai said to Abram : " Behold the Lord hath shut me out from bearing. Go in therefore unto my handmaiden that I may have children from her." And Abram hearkened to the voice of Sarai.

3. And Sarai the wife of Abram, after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, took Hagar, the Egyptian, her handmaid, and gave her to Abram her husband as a wife.

4. And he went in unto Hagar, and she conceived, and she saw that she was with child, and her mistress was dishonoured before her.

5. And Sarai said to Abram, " I am wronged at thy hands. I have given my handmaiden to thy bosom. But seeing that she was with child, I was dishonoured before her. The Lord judge between thee and me."

6. And Abram said to Sarai, " Behold thy handmaid is in thy hands. Do with her as is pleasing to thee." And Sarai afflicted her.

This treatise, though it has little of the eloquence and spirituality which brighten most of the others, has a special interest of its own. Nowhere else in

PHILO

Philo nor, so far as I know, in any other Greek writer do we find so full a treatment of the Stoic doctrine, that the accepted school course or Encyclyia was the proper preparation for philosophy.<sup>a</sup> Apart from this there are many remarks on the value of the different subjects and the relations of teacher and pupil, which are both sensible and acute, however fantastical we may think their allegorical setting.

Philo begins by pointing out that while Virtue or Wisdom which are represented by Sarah is never barren, she is at this stage in the story Sarai (Σάρα not Σάρρα), that is wisdom in the individual, who is as yet incapable of begetting by her. Stress therefore is to be laid on "she was not bearing for him" (1-12), and when in Sarah's own words this limitation is not mentioned, we must ascribe it to the delicacy of feeling which true wisdom shews for others (13). The immature soul must therefore resort to the handmaid, the Encyclyia, and the list of these is given with some remarks on the educational value of each (14-19). The first thing we note about the handmaid of the story is her race. She is an Egyptian, of the body that is, and the Encyclyia depend on the senses in a way in which the higher philosophy does not (20-21). Secondly her name—Hagar, means a sojourner, and the relation of the sojourner to the full citizen expresses that of the Encyclyia to philosophy (22-23).

The thought that Abraham, the soul which learns by teaching, needs Hagar, naturally leads to the consideration of the case of Jacob, the soul which progresses through practice. He has two wives and <sup>a</sup> For some remarks on this and Philo's attitude in general towards "secular" education see General Introduction, Vol. I, pp. xvi ff.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES

two concubines, and the functions of these four are described in a long and difficult allegory<sup>a</sup> (24-33). On the other hand Isaac has but one wife and no concubine. Thus again he appears in his regular part as the "self-taught," the "gifted by nature," for such a soul has not the need of the extraneous aids which the other two require (34-38). Thence we pass to remarks on other cases of wives and concubines, a short one on Manasseh (39-43), and a more elaborate one on Nahor, Abraham's brother<sup>b</sup> (44-53). Finally comes the thought that the bad also has a wife in the mind, which bears vice, and a concubine in the body, which bears passion. This is founded on the notice of Esau's son's concubine and passes into a denunciation of the Esau-mind itself, as the nature which represents both hardness and fiction (54-62).

"He hearkened to the voice of Sarah." This raises the thought how little real attention there is in the people who attend lectures and the like, how little memory even if they attend, and how little practice even if they remember (63-68). But further, the phrase "listened to her voice," instead of "listened to her," suggests the natural attitude of the Abraham-mind, as against the Jacob-mind which "practises" and thus thinks more of personal example than of what is said (69-70).

"Sarai the wife of Abram took Hagar and gave her to Abram." Virtue (or philosophy) is actively willing to give to the immature soul its preparation through the Encyclia (71, 72), while on the other hand the seemingly unnecessary repetition of the word "wife" shews the stress which philosophy justly lays on her status. She is always the wife and the other only the handmaid (73). Philo illustrates this from his personal experience. He tells how he delighted as a youth in literature, mathematics and music, yet always recognized that they were but stepping-stones to the higher study of ethics, which teaches us to control the lower nature, and how thus he avoided the error of those who treat these inferior studies as an occupation for life (74-80).

<sup>a</sup> See notes on § 24.

<sup>b</sup> See note on § 45.

PHILO

Abraham had "dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan" when he took Hagar. Even for the Encyclopaedia the soul is not at first fit. Childhood, in which we are dominated by bodily things, and early boyhood, in which we learn the difference between right and wrong, are both too early. While Egypt signifies the body and its passions, Canaan stands for vice, and it is only after we have passed some time in the stage in which vice is possible that we have the ability for these solid studies (81-88). But the number ten is not to be pressed. It is just the perfect number (89), and Philo takes the opportunity to descant on the prominence of it in the Pentateuch. Noah as tenth from Adam (90); Abraham as tenth combatant against the nine kings, a number which signifies hostility (91-93); the offering of tithes on various occasions, followed by the familiar insistence on the duty to offer of everything mental as well as bodily (94-106); the passover in which the lamb is killed on the tenth day (106); the Atonement and the proclamation of the Jubilee also on that day (107-108). Other examples follow, most of which, as for instance the account of the presents with which Isaac wooed Rebecca, and the ten curtains of the tabernacle, whose four colours represented the four elements, digress into morals and fancies drawn from the content of these passages, quite apart from the Ten interest (109-119). He concludes with the remarks that after all these examples were unnecessary, since the Ten Commandments in themselves are enough to prove his point (120).

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES

After reiterating the necessity of postponing school instruction to a suitable age, Philo proceeds to the words "He went in unto her." This indicates the right attitude of the scholar to the teacher (121-122), but the teacher also will often do well to make the advances, as Leah did to Jacob (122-123), though again Knowledge may sometimes veil her face to try the sincerity of her pupils, as Tamar did before she gave herself to Judah (124-125). So too the word συνέλαβε, "she conceived" (lit. "she took"), has in Greek no mark of the gender, and thus in our allegory we may interpret that the "taking" is mutual (126).

Contrasted with this right view of the relation of the two is the arrogance of many teachers who think that the progress of their gifted pupils is due to themselves (127). When knowledge takes this attitude it may be described by the phrase "to have in the womb," used of Hagar's pregnancy, whereas Rebecca was said to "receive in the womb," for the "receive" and "have" represent respectively reverent humility and self-conceit (128-130). He finds "received" used in the story of Moses' birth and this leads to an eulogy of Moses and the tribe of Levi (131-134). Somewhat loosely connected with this is a short interpretation of a law by which the man who struck a woman and caused a premature birth was punished by a fine or death, according as the child born dead was fully formed or not. To destroy the fruits of another's mind is always a crime, but a greater when the idea is fully formed, than when it is not (135-138).

PHILO

“When she saw that she was pregnant.” Philo is confident that the first “she” is Sarah because philosophy sees into the nature of the “arts” which make up the Encyclicia better than the arts see themselves. He gives the accepted definitions of “art” and “knowledge” and likens their relation to each other to that of sense to mind (139-145). Then follows a remarkable illustration of this, shewing that at the back of geometry lie the definitions of point, line and the like, which come from philosophy, and similarly that though the grammaticus may expound literature, he must go to philosophy for the nature of the parts of speech and the logic of sentences (146-150).

Philosophy rightly resents the ignoring of her claims which is represented in the words “I was dishonoured before her,” and to her complaints the true student will answer with Abraham’s words: “She is in thy hands,” and leave the lower knowledge to the treatment expressed in “and she afflicted or ill-treated her,” always remembering however that by this word (ἐκάκωσε) only admonishing or correcting is meant (151-157).

What form the admonishing would take Philo does not discuss, but passes off into a justification of his giving this meaning to ἐκάκωσεν and this takes up the rest of the treatise. Consideration of the demoralizing effects of luxury shews that affliction if regulated by law is beneficial (158-160), and the use of the unleavened bread, called in Deuteronomy bread of affliction, and of bitter herbs at the Paschal Feast agree with this, for feasts are things of joy and the ordinance must mean that chastening toil is a joy to the earnest soul (161-162). So too at the end of the story of the bitter water of Marah we read that at Marah God gave Israel laws—the law of justice (163). The same text says that at Marah God tried Israel, tried them that is with the test of toil to which so many succumb (164-165). Yet again the waters of Marah became sweet, that is the toil is sweetened by the love of toil (166). The lesson of the unleavened bread at the Passover is confirmed by the unleavened shewbread and the prohibition of leaven in the sacrifices (167-169). So when we find in Deuteronomy “ He afflicted thee and made thee weak with hunger ” coupled with “ He fed thee with Manna ”—the word of God—we understand that the affliction is one of discipline and the famine a dearth of passion and vice (170-174). So too when Isaac blesses Jacob, even slavery is part of the blessing, and in Proverbs “ the Lord chastens whom He loves ” (175-177). Philo concludes the argument with what he thinks a clinching proof, that if the law speaks of “ ill-treating or afflicting with evil,” it implies that afflicting may exist without evil (178-179).<sup>a</sup>

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES

The last section reiterates the necessity of giving the passage an allegorical sense, and implies, if it does not actually say so, that on the literal view the story would be nothing more than an unworthy record of women's jealousies.

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 178.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΗΣ ΠΡΟΣ ΤΑ
ΠΡΟΠΑΙΔΕΥΜΑΤΑ ΣΥΝΟΔΟΥ

<sup>1</sup> [519] I. “Σάρα δὲ ἡ γυνὴ Ἀβραὰμ οὐκ ἔτικτεν αὐτῷ. ἦν δὲ αὐτῇ παιδίσκη Αἰγυπτία, ἣ ὄνομα Ἄγαρ. εἶπε δὲ Σάρα πρὸς Ἀβραάμ· ἰδοὺ, συνέκλεισέ με κύριος τοῦ μὴ τίκτειν, εἴσελθε πρὸς τὴν παιδίσκην μου, ἵνα τεκνοποιήσῃς ἐξ αὐτῆς.” τὸ Σάρας ὄνομα μεταληφθέν ἐστὶν “ἀρχὴ μου”. φρόνησις δὲ ἡ ἐν ἐμοὶ καὶ σωφροσύνη ἡ ἐν ἐμοὶ καὶ ἡ ἐπὶ μέρους δικαιοσύνη καὶ ἐκάστη τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν, ἦν περὶ ἐμὲ μόνον εἶναι συμβέβηκεν, ἀρχὴ ἐστὶν ἐμοῦ μόνου· ἐπιστατεῖ γὰρ μου καὶ ἡγεμονεῖ πειθαρχεῖν ἐγνωκότος, βασιλὶς ἐκ φύσεως ὑπάρ-
<sup>3</sup> χουσα. ταύτην Μωυσῆς, τὸ παραδοξό-
τατον, καὶ στείραν ἀποφαίνει καὶ πολυγονωτάτην, εἴ γε τὸ πολυανθρωπότατον τῶν ἐθνῶν ἐξ αὐτῆς ὁμολογεῖ γενέσθαι. τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ἡ ἀρετὴ πρὸς μὲν τὰ φαῦλα πάντα ἐστείρωται, τῶν δὲ ἀγαθῶν εὐτοκία χρῆται τοιαύτη, ὡς μηδὲ μαιευτικῆς <sup>4</sup> τέχνης—φθάνει γὰρ ἀποτίκτουσα—δεῖσθαι. τὰ μὲν οὖν ζῶα καὶ φυτὰ διαλείποντα τὸν πλείω χρόνον ἅπαξ ἢ δις τὸ πλείστον τοὺς οἰκείους δι’ ἐνιαυτοῦ φέρει καρπούς, καθ’ ὃν ἔταξεν ἀριθμὸν ἐκάστοις ἢ φύσις ἐναρμοζόμενον ταῖς ἐτησίαις

<sup>a</sup> For the thought cf. De Cher. 5.

ON MATING WITH THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES

I. "Now Sarah the wife of Abraham was not bearing 1 him children, but she had an Egyptian handmaiden named Hagar, and Sarah said to Abraham, 'Behold the Lord hath closed me that I should not bear. Go in unto my handmaid and beget children from her'" (Gen. xvi. 1, 2). Now Sarah's name is, by interpre- 2 tation, "sovereignty of me," and the wisdom in me, the self-control in me, the individual righteousness and each of the other virtues whose place is confined to the "me," are a sovereignty over me only.<sup>a</sup> That sovereignty rules and dominates me, who have willed to render obedience to it, in virtue of its natural queenship. This ruling power Moses 3 represents as at once barren and exceedingly prolific, since he acknowledges that from her sprang the most populous of nations. A startling paradox, yet true.
For indeed virtue is barren as regards all that is bad, but shews herself a fruitful mother of the good; a motherhood which needs no midwifery, for she bears before the midwife comes.<sup>b</sup> Animals and plants bear 4 the fruit proper to them only after considerable intervals, once or twice at most in the year, the number being determined for each by nature and adjusted

<sup>b</sup> An allusion to Ex. i. 19; cf. De Mig. 142.

PHILO

ῥαις· ἀρετὴ δὲ οὐ διαλείπουσα ἀνελλιπῶς δὲ καὶ ἀδιαστάτως κατὰ τοὺς ἡμερεῖς χρόνους αἰεὶ γεννᾷ, βρέφη μὲν οὐδαμῶς, λόγους δὲ ἀστείουσ καὶ [520] βουλάς | ἀνεπιλήπτους καὶ ἐπαινετὰς πράξεις.

5 II. ἀλλ' οὔτε πλοῦτος, ᾧ μὴ δυνατόν ἐστι χρῆσθαι, τοὺς κεκτημένους ὠφελεί οὔτε ἡ φρονήσεως εὐτοκία, ἐὰν μὴ καὶ ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς τὰ ὠφέλιμα τίκτη. τοὺς μὲν γὰρ εἰσάπαν ἀξίους ἔκρινε τῆς συμβιώσεως αὐτῆς, οἱ δ' οὔπω <τὴν> ἡλικίαν ἔδοξαν ἔχειν, ὡς ἐπαινετῆς καὶ σώφρονος οἰκουρίας ἀνέχεσθαι· οἷς τὰ προτέλεια τῶν γάμων ἐφῆκε ποιεῖσθαι, ἐλπίδα καὶ τοῦ θύσειν τοὺς γάμους

6 παρασχούσα. Σάρα οὖν, ἡ ἀρχουσά μου τῆς ψυχῆς ἀρετῆ, ἔτικτε μὲν, ἐμοὶ δ' οὐκ ἔτικτε· οὐ γὰρ ἡδυνάμην πω νέος ὢν τὰ γεννήματα αὐτῆς παραδέχεσθαι, τὸ φρονεῖν, τὸ δικαιοπραγεῖν, τὸ εὐσεβεῖν, διὰ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν νόθων παίδων, οὓς ἀπεκύησάν μοι αἱ κεναὶ δόξαι. τροφαὶ γὰρ αἱ τούτων καὶ συνεχεῖς ἐπιμέλειαὶ καὶ φροντίδες ἄληκτοι<sup>1</sup> τῶν γνησίων καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς ἀστῶν

7 ὀλιγωρεῖν ἠνάγκασαν. καλὸν οὖν εὐχεσθαι τὴν ἀρετὴν μὴ μόνον τίκτην, ἢ καὶ δίχα εὐχῆς εὐτοκεῖ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς τίκτην, ἵνα τῶν σπερμάτων καὶ γεννημάτων αὐτῆς μεταλαγχάνοντες εὐδαιμονώμεν. εἴωθε γὰρ θεῷ μόνῳ τίκτην, τὰς ἀπαρχὰς ὢν ἔτυχεν ἀγαθῶν εὐχαρίστως ἀποδιδούσα τῷ τὴν ἀειπάρθενον μήτραν, ὡς φησι

8 Μωυσῆς, ἀνοίξαντι. καὶ γὰρ τὴν λυχνίαν, τὸ ἀρχέτυπον τοῦ μιμήματος παράδειγμα, ἐκ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀλεκτοι.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. in Ex. xxv. 37, in the "pattern shewn to Moses in the mount" (v. 40), the lamps are to give light ἐξ ἐνὸς προ-460

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 4-8

to the seasons of the year. But virtue has no such intervals. She bears ceaselessly, successively, from moment to moment, and her offspring are no infants, but honest words, innocent purposes and laudable acts.

II. But as wealth which one cannot use <sup>5</sup> does not profit the owner, so the motherhood of virtue profits not if the offspring be not profitable for ourselves. Some she judges quite worthy to share her life, but others she thinks have not yet reached the age to submit to her admirable and chaste and sober domesticity. Such she allows to celebrate the preliminaries of marriage, and holds out hopes of consummating the full rite in the future.

So Sarah, the <sup>6</sup> virtue which rules my soul, was a mother, but not a mother for me. For young as I was I could not yet receive her offspring, wisdom, justice, piety, because of the multitude of bastard children whom vain imaginations had borne to me. The nurture of these, the constant supervision, the ceaseless anxiety, compelled me to take little thought of the genuine, the truly free-born. It is well then to pray that virtue <sup>7</sup> may not only bear (she does that in abundance without our prayers), but also may bear for ourselves, that we, by sharing in what she sows and genders, may enjoy happiness. For in ordinary course she bears for God only, thankfully rendering the first-fruits of the blessings bestowed upon her to Him who, as Moses says, opens the womb which yet loses not its virginity (Gen. xxix. 31).

In confirmation of <sup>8</sup> this we read that the candlestick, that is the original pattern of the later copy,<sup>a</sup> gives light from one part σῶπον (E.V. "over against it"). In the narrative of the making of the candlestick, Ex. xxxviii. 5 f. (xxxvii. 17), this point is not repeated.

PHILO

τοῦ ἐνὸς μέρους φησὶ φαίνειν, δηλονότι τοῦ πρὸς θεόν· ἐβδόμη γὰρ οὔσα καὶ μέση τῶν ἐξ καλαμίσκων διχα διηρημένων εἰς τριάδας, ἐκατέρωθεν δορυφορούντων, ἄνω τὰς αὐγὰς ἀποστέλλει πρὸς τὸ ὄν,<sup>1</sup> λαμπρότερον ἡγουμένη τὸ φέγγος ἢ ὡς δύνασθαι θνητὴν αὐτῷ προσβάλλειν ὄψιν.

- 9 III. διὰ τοῦτο οὐ φησι μὴ τίκτειν τὴν Σάραν, ἀλλ' αὐτῷ τινι μὴ τίκτειν. οὐ γὰρ ἔσμεν ἱκανοὶ δέξασθαι πω γονὰς ἀρετῆς, εἰ μὴ πρότερον ἐντύχοιμεν αὐτῆς τῇ θεραπαίνιδι· θεραπαίνις δὲ σοφίας ἢ διὰ 10 τῶν προπαιδευμάτων ἐγκύκλιος μουσική.<sup>2</sup> ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν μὲν οἰκίαις αὔλαιοι πρόκεινται κλισιάδων, ἐν δὲ πόλεσι τὰ προάστεια, δι' ὧν εἴσω βαδίζειν ἔνεστιν, οὕτως καὶ ἀρετῆς πρόκειται τὰ ἐγκύκλια· ταῦτα γὰρ ὁδὸς ἐστὶν ἐπ' ἐκείνην φέρουσα.
- 11 Χρῆ δ' εἰδέναι, ὅτι τῶν μεγάλων ὑποθέσεων μεγάλα καὶ τὰ προοίμια εἶναι συμβέβηκε. μεγίστη δὲ ὑπόθεσις ἀρετῆ· καὶ γὰρ περὶ μεγίστην ὕλην καταγίνεται, τὸν σύμπαντα ἀνθρώπων βίον. εἰκότως οὖν οὐ βραχέσι χρήσεται προοιμίοις, ἀλλὰ γραμματικῇ, γεωμετρῖα, ἀστρονομία, ῥητορικῇ,
[521] μουσικῇ, τῇ | ἄλλη λογικῇ θεωρίᾳ πάσῃ, ὧν ἐστὶ σύμβολον ἢ Σάρας θεραπαίνις "Ἄγαρ, ὡς
12 ἐπιδείξομεν. "εἶπε" γὰρ φησι "Σάρα πρὸς Ἀβραάμ· ἰδοὺ συνέκλεισέ με κύριος τοῦ μὴ τίκτειν· εἴσελθε πρὸς τὴν παιδίσκην μου, ἵνα τεκνοποιήσης ἐξ αὐτῆς." τὰς σωματῶν πρὸς σώματα μίξεις καὶ ὁμιλίας ἡδονὴν ἐχούσας τὸ τέλος ὑπεξ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔν.

<sup>2</sup> Some MSS. add καὶ ἡ λογικὴ σοφισμάτων γεῦσις (νεῦσις), the last word being evidently a corruption for εὔρεσις. Cf. § 29. The interpolators did not understand that μουσική is here used in the more general sense.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 8-12

only, that is the part where it looks towards God. For being seventh in position, and placed between the six branches, divided as they are into triplets which guard it on either side, it sends its rays upwards towards the Existent, as though feeling that its light were too bright for human sight to look upon it (Ex. xxv. 37, 31).

III. This is why Moses <sup>9</sup> does not say that Sarah did not bear, but only that she did not bear for some particular person. For we are not capable as yet of receiving the impregnation of virtue unless we have first mated with her handmaiden, and the handmaiden of wisdom is the culture gained by the primary learning of the school course. For, just as in houses we have outer doors in front of <sup>10</sup> the chamber doors, and in cities suburbs through which we can pass to the inner part, so the school course precedes virtue ; the one is a road which leads to the other.

Now we must understand that great themes need <sup>11</sup> great introductions ; and the greatest of all themes is virtue, for it deals with the greatest of materials, that is the whole life of man. Naturally, then, virtue will employ no minor kind of introduction, but grammar, geometry, astronomy,<sup>a</sup> rhetoric, music, and all the other branches of intellectual study. These are symbolized by Hagar, the handmaid of Sarah, as I shall proceed to shew. For Sarah, we are told, said <sup>12</sup> to Abraham : " Behold, the Lord has shut me out from bearing. Go in unto my handmaid, that thou mayest beget children from her." In the present discussion, we must eliminate all bodily unions or

See App. p. 577.

PHILO

- αιρετέον τοῦ παρόντος λόγου· κοῦ γὰρ πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἔστι σύνοδος ἐξ αὐτῆς ἐφιεμένου παιδοποιεῖσθαι, εἰ δὲ μὴ δύναιτο εὐθύς, ἀλλὰ τοι τὴν θεραπευίθη αὐτῆς, τὴν μέσσην παιδείαν, ἐγγυᾶσθαι διδασκο-
- 13 μένου. IV. ἄξιον δὲ τῆς αἰδοῦς καταπλαγῆναι σοφίαν, ἥτις τὸ βραδὺ πρὸς γένεσιν ἢ τελέως ἄγονον οὐκ ἠξίωσεν ἡμῖν ὀνειδίσαι, καίτοι τοῦ χρησμοῦ τάληθές εἰπόντος, ὅτι “ οὐκ ἔτικτεν,” οὐ διὰ φθόνον, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν ἡμῶν αὐτῶν ἀνεπιτηδειότητα· “ συνέκλεισε ” γάρ φησι “ μὲ κύριος τοῦ μὴ τίκτειν,” καὶ οὐκέτι προστίθησιν “ ὑμῖν,” ἵνα μὴ προφέρειν ἀτυχίαν καὶ ὀνειδίζειν ἑτέροις
- 14 δοκῆ. “ εἴσελθε ” οὖν φησι “ πρὸς τὴν παιδίσκην μου,” τὴν τῶν μέσων καὶ ἐγκυκλίων ἐπιστημῶν μέσσην παιδείαν, “ ἵνα τεκνοποιήσῃ πρότερον ἐξ αὐτῆς”· αὐθις γὰρ δυνήσῃ καὶ τῶν πρὸς τὴν δέσποιαν ὁμιλιῶν <ἐπὶ> γενέσει παίδων
- 15 γνησίων ἀπόνασθαι. γραμματικὴ μὲν γὰρ ἱστορίαν τὴν παρὰ ποιηταῖς καὶ συγγραφεύσιν ἀναδιδάξασα<sup>1</sup> νόησιν καὶ πολυμάθειαν ἐργάσεται καὶ καταφρονητικῶς ἔχειν ἀναδιδάξει τῶν ὅσα αἰ κεναὶ δόξαι τυφοπλαστοῦσι, διὰ τὰς κακοπραγίας, αἷς τοὺς ἀδομένους παρ’ αὐτοῖς ἠρωάς τε καὶ
- 16 ἡμιθέους λόγος ἔχει χρῆσασθαι. μουσικὴ δὲ τὸ μὲν ἄρρυθμον [ἐν] ῥυθμοῖς, τὸ δ’ ἀνάρμοστον ἁρμονία, τὸ δ’ ἀπωδὸν καὶ ἐκμελὲς μέλει κατεπάδουσα τὸ ἀσύμφωνον εἰς συμφωνίαν ἄξει. γεωμετρία δ’ ἰσότητος καὶ ἀναλογίας ἐμβαλ-

<sup>1</sup> Or perhaps, as Wendland conjectures, ἀναπτύξασα. See § 148 and note.

<sup>a</sup> Or “ delicate feeling.” The genitive is one of cause, a common construction with θανμάζω and similar verbs.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 12-16

intercourse which has pleasure as its object. What is meant is a mating of mind with virtue. Mind desires to have children by virtue, and, if it cannot do so at once, is instructed to espouse virtue's handmaid, the lower instruction. IV. Now we may 13 well feel profound admiration for the discretion<sup>a</sup> shewn by Wisdom. She refrains from reproaching us with our backwardness or complete impotence in generation, though, as the text truly stated, it was through our unfitness that she was not bearing, and not because she grudged us offspring. Thus she says, "The Lord has shut me out from bearing," and does not go on to add, "for you." She does not wish to seem to upbraid and reproach others for their misfortune. "Go in, then," she says, "to 14 my handmaid, the lower instruction given by the lower branches of school lore, that first you may have children by her," for afterwards you will be able to avail yourself of the mistress's company to beget children of higher birth. For grammar 15

teaches us to study literature in the poets and historians, and will thus produce intelligence and wealth of knowledge. It will teach us also to despise the vain delusions of our empty imagination by shewing us the calamities which heroes and demi-gods who are celebrated in such literature are said to have undergone.<sup>b</sup>

Music will charm away the 16 unrhythmic by its rhythm, the inharmonious by its harmony, the unmelodious and tuneless by its melody,<sup>c</sup> and thus reduce discord to concord. Geometry will sow in the soul that loves to learn the seeds of equality

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 577.

<sup>c</sup> The accepted division of music was into rhythm, harmony, and melody; cf. De Agr. 137.

PHILO

- λομένη τὰ σπέρματα εἰς ψυχὴν φιλομαθῆ γλαφυρότητι συνεχοῦς θεωρίας δικαιοσύνης ζῆλον
- 17 ἔμπουήσει. ῥητορικὴ δὲ καὶ τὸν νοῦν πρὸς θεωρίαν ἀκονησαμένη καὶ πρὸς ἑρμηνείαν γυμνάσασα τὸν λόγον καὶ συγκροτήσασα λογικὸν ὄντως ἀποδείξει τὸν ἄνθρωπον ἐπιμεληθεῖσα τοῦ ἰδίου καὶ ἐξαιρέτου, ὃ μηδενὶ τῶν ἄλλων ζώων ἢ
- 18 φύσις δεδώρηται. διαλεκτικὴ δὲ ἢ ῥητορικῆς ἀδελφὴ καὶ δίδυμος, ὡς εἰπόντινες, τοὺς ἀληθεῖς τῶν ψευδῶν λόγους διακρίνουσα καὶ τὰς τῶν σοφισμάτων πιθανότητος ἐλέγχουσα μεγάλην νόσον ψυχῆς, ἀπάτην, ἀκέσεται. τούτοις οὖν καὶ τοῖς παραπλησίοις ἐνομιλῆσαι καὶ ἐμπρομελετῆσαι λυσιτελές· ἴσως γάρ, ἴσως, ὃ πολλοῖς συνέβη, διὰ τῶν ὑπηκόων ταῖς βασιλίαις ἀρεταῖς
- 19 γνωρισθησόμεθα. οὐχ ὄρας, ὅτι καὶ τὸ σῶμα [522] ἡμῶν οὐ πρότερον πεπηγυῖαις | καὶ πολυτελέσι χρεῖται τροφαῖς, πρὶν ἢ ταῖς ἀποικίλοις καὶ γαλακτώδεσιν ἐν ἡλικίᾳ τῇ βρεφώδει; τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ τρόπον καὶ τῇ ψυχῇ παιδικὰς μὲν νόμισον εὐτρεπίσθαι τροφὰς τὰ ἐγκύκλια καὶ τὰ καθ' ἕκαστον αὐτῶν θεωρήματα, τελειότερας δὲ καὶ πρεπούσας ἀνδράσιν ὡς ἀληθῶς τὰς ἀρετάς.
- 20 V. Οἱ δὲ πρῶτοι τῆς μέσης παιδείας χαρακτῆρες διὰ δυεῖν παρίστανται συμβόλων, τοῦ τε γένους καὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος. γένος μὲν ἐστὶν Αἴγυπτία, καλεῖται δὲ Ἄγαρ, τοῦτο δὲ ἑρμηνευθέν ἐστὶ παροίκησης· ἀνάγκη γὰρ τὸν ἐγχορεύοντα ταῖς ἐγκυκλίαις θεωρίαις καὶ πολυμαθείας ἑταῖρον ὄντα τῷ γεώδει καὶ Αἴγυπτίῳ προσκεκληρῶσθαι σώ-

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 16-20

and proportion, and by the charm of its logical continuity will raise from those seeds a zeal for justice.

Rhetoric, sharpening the mind to the observation of facts, and training and welding thought to expression,<sup>a</sup> will make the man a true master of words and thoughts, thus taking into its charge the peculiar and special gift which nature has not bestowed on any other living creature. Dialectic, the sister and twin,<sup>b</sup> as some have said, of Rhetoric, distinguishes true argument from false, and convicts the plausibilities of sophistry, and thus will heal that great plague of the soul, deceit. It is profitable then to take these and the like for our associates and for the field of our preliminary studies. For perhaps indeed it may be with us, as it has been with many, that through the vassals we shall come to the knowledge of the royal virtues. Observe too that our body is not nourished in the earlier stages with solid and costly foods. The simple and milky foods of infancy come first. Just so you may consider that the school subjects and the lore which belongs to each of them stand ready to nourish the childhood of the soul, while the virtues are grown-up food, suited for those who are really men.

V. The primary characteristic marks of the lower education are represented by two symbols giving its race and its name. In race it is Egypt, but its name is Hagar, which is by interpretation "sojourning."<sup>c</sup> The votary of the school studies, the friend of wide learning, must necessarily be associated with the earthly and Egyptian body; since he needs eyes <sup>a</sup> The θεωρία represents the technical εὐπείσις. See on De Mig. 35.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 577.

<sup>c</sup> See note on Leg. All. iii. 244.

PHILO

- ματι, χρήζοντα καὶ ὀφθαλμῶν, ὡς ἰδεῖν καὶ ἀναγνῶναι, καὶ ὧτων, ὡς προσσεχεῖν τε καὶ ἀκοῦσαι, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων αἰσθήσεων, ὡς ἕκαστον
- 21 τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἀναπτύξαι. δίχα γὰρ τοῦ κρίνοντος τὸ κρινόμενον οὐ πέφυκε καταλαμβάνεσθαι· κρίνει δὲ τὸ αἰσθητὸν αἰσθήσις, ὥστ' ἀκριβωθῆναί τι τῶν κατὰ τὸν αἰσθητὸν κόσμον, ἐν οἷς ἡ πλείων μοῖρα τοῦ φιλοσοφεῖν, οὐκ ἐνῆν ἄνευ αἰσθήσεως. αἰσθήσις δέ, τὸ σωματοειδέστερον ψυχῆς μέρος, τῷ τῆς ὅλης ψυχῆς ἀγγεῖω προσερρίζωται, τὸ δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς ἀγγεῖον Αἴγυπτος διὰ συμβόλου προσονομάζεται.
- 22 Χαρακτήρ μὲν εἰς ὃ ἀπὸ τοῦ γένους οὖτος, ὃν ἡ θεραπαινὶς ἀρετῆς ἔλαχεν· ὃ δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὀνόματος ποῖός ἐστιν, ἐπισκεψώμεθα. τὴν μέσην παιδείαν παροίκου λόγον ἔχει συμβέβηκεν· ἐπιστήμη μὲν γὰρ καὶ σοφία καὶ ἀρετὴ πᾶσα αὐθιγενῆς καὶ αὐτόχθων καὶ πολίτις ὡς ἀληθῶς ἐστι μόνη τοῦ παντός, αἱ δὲ ἄλλαι παιδεῖαι δευτέρων καὶ τρίτων καὶ ὑστάτων ἄθλων τυγχάνουσαι μεθόριοι ξένων καὶ ἀστῶν εἰσιν· οὐδετέρου τε γὰρ γένους ἀκράτου καὶ πάλιν ἀμφοῖν κατὰ τινα κοινωνίαν ἐφάπτονται.
- 23 πάροικος γὰρ τῷ μὲν ἐνδιατρίβειν ἀστοῖς, τῷ δὲ μὴ κατοικεῖν ἀλλοδαποῖς ἰσοῦται· καθάπερ, οἶμαι, καὶ οἱ θεοὶ παῖδες, ἧ μὲν κληρονομοῦσι τὰ τῶν θεμένων, τοῖς γνησίοις, ἧ δ' οὐ γεγέννηται πρὸς αὐτῶν, τοῖς ὀθνείοις. ὃν δὴ λόγον ἔχει δέσποινα μὲν πρὸς θεραπαινίδα, γυνὴ δὲ ἀστὴ πρὸς παλλακὴν, τοῦτον ἔξει τὸν λόγον ἀρετῆ Σάρρα πρὸς παιδείαν Ἄγαρ· ὥστ' εἰκότως τοῦ θεωρίαν καὶ ἐπιστήμην ἐζηλωκότος, Ἀβραὰμ ὄνομα, γένοιτ' ἂν ἡ μὲν ἀρετὴ, Σάρρα, γυνή, παλλακὴ δὲ Ἄγαρ, ἡ ἐγκύκλιος μουσικὴ πᾶσα.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 20-23

to see and read, ears to listen and hear, and the other senses to unveil the several objects of sense. For the 21 thing judged cannot be apprehended without one to judge it, and it is sense which judges the sensible, and therefore without sense it is always impossible to obtain accurate knowledge of any of the phenomena in the sensible world which form the staple of philosophy. Sense being the bodily part of the soul is riveted to the vessel of the soul as a whole, and this soul-vessel is symbolically called Egypt.

This, then, is one of the marks of the handmaid of 22 virtue, namely that of race. Let us now consider the nature of the other mark, that of name. The lower education is in the position of a sojourner. For knowledge and wisdom and every virtue are native born, indigenous, citizens in the truest sense, and in this they are absolutely alone; but the other kinds of training, which win second or third or last prizes, are on the border-line between foreigners and citizens. For they belong to neither kind in its pure form, and yet in virtue of a certain degree of partnership they touch both. The sojourner in so far as he is staying in the 23 city is on a par with the citizens, in so far as it is not his home, on a par with foreigners. In the same way, I should say, adopted children, in so far as they inherit from their adopters, rank with the family; in so far as they are not their actual children, with outsiders. Sarah, virtue, bears, we shall find, the same relation to Hagar, education, as the mistress to the servant-maid, or the lawful wife to the concubine, and so naturally the mind which aspires to study and to gain knowledge, the mind we call Abraham, will have Sarah, virtue, for his wife, and Hagar, the whole range of school culture, for his concubine.

PHILO

- 24 Ὡτινι μὲν οὖν φρόνησις ἐκ διδασκαλίας περι-γίνεται, τὴν Ἄγαρ οὐκ ἂν ἀποδοκιμάζοι· πάντῃ γὰρ ἀναγκαία ἢ τῶν προπαιδευμάτων κτήσις. VI. εἰ δέ τις τοὺς ὑπὲρ ἀρετῆς ἄθλους ἐγνωκῶς δια-πονεῖν μελέταις χρήται συνεχέσιν ἀνευδότης ἔχων πρὸς ἀσκησιν, δύο μὲν ἀστάς, παλλακὰς δὲ τὰς
 [523] ἴσας, τῶν ἀστῶν | θεραπαινίδας, ἄξεται. φύσιν
 25 δὲ καὶ ἰδέαν ἔλαχεν αὐτῶν ἐκάστη διάφορον. αὐτίκα τῶν ἀστῶν ἢ μὲν ἐστὶν ὑγιεινοτάτη καὶ εὐσταθεστάτη καὶ εἰρηνικωτάτη κίνησις, ἣν ἀπὸ τοῦ συμβεβηκότος ὠνόμασε Λείαν. ἢ δὲ ἔοικεν ἀκόνῃ, καλεῖται δὲ Ῥαχήλ, πρὸς ἣν ὁ φίλαθλος καὶ φιλογυμναστής νοῦς παραθηγόμενος ὀξύνεται· ἐρμηνεύεται δὲ ὄρασις βεβηλώσεως, οὐκ ἐπειδὴ βεβήλωσ ὄρα, ἀλλὰ τοῦναντίον, ὅτι τὰ ὄρατὰ καὶ αἰσθητὰ παρὰ τὴν ἀκήρατον φύσιν τῶν ἀοράτων καὶ νοητῶν οὐκ εὐαγῆ βέβηλα δὲ εἶναι νομίζει.
 26 τῆς γὰρ ψυχῆς ἡμῶν διμεροῦς ὑπαρχούσης καὶ τὸ μὲν λογικὸν τὸ δὲ ἄλογον ἐχούσης, ἀρετὴν ἐκατέρῳ ὑπάρχειν συμβέβηκε, Λείαν μὲν τῷ λογικῷ, τῷ δὲ 27 ἀλόγῳ<sup>1</sup> Ῥαχήλ. γυμνάζει γὰρ ἡμᾶς ἢ μὲν διὰ τῶν αἰσθήσεων καὶ τῶν τοῦ ἀλόγου μερῶν πάντων καταφρονητικῶς ἔχειν ὦν ἀλογεῖν ἄξιον, δόξης καὶ πλούτου καὶ ἡδονῆς, ἃ περιβλεπτα καὶ
- <sup>1</sup> MSS. τὸ λογικὸν καὶ τὸ ἄλογον, which might be kept, if with some MSS. we read ἐκατέρον ἔχειν above for ἐκατέρῳ ὑπάρχειν.

<sup>a</sup> The allegory of §§ 24-33 is in some ways difficult and very different from Philo's usual way of treating the two wives of Jacob. Elsewhere Rachel is αἰσθησις or σώματος εὐμορφία. Here no doubt she is connected with τὸ ἄλογον and trains us through the senses and so far is entitled to have the bodily function of "swallowing" as her handmaid, but her function is to teach us the inferiority of sense, while Leah is no longer the virtue which "refuses" vice and is "weary" with effort

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 24-27

He then who gains wisdom by instruction will not 24 reject Hagar, for the acquisition of these preliminary subjects is quite necessary, (VI.) but, anyone whose mind is set on enduring to the end the weary contest in which virtue is the prize, who practises continually for that end, and is unflagging in self-discipline, will take to him two lawful wives and as handmaids to them two concubines.<sup>a</sup> And to each of them is given a different 25 nature and appearance. Thus one of the lawful wives is a movement, sound, healthy and peaceful, and to express her history Moses names her Leah or "smooth."<sup>b</sup> The other is like a whetstone. Her name is Rachel, and on that whetstone the mind which loves effort and exercise sharpens its edge.
Her name means "vision of profanation," not because her way of seeing is profane, but on the contrary, because she judges the visible world of sense to be not holy but profane, compared with the pure and undefiled nature of the invisible world of mind. For 26 since our soul is twofold, with one part reasoning and the other unreasoning, each has its own virtue or excellence, the reasoning Leah, the unreasoning Rachel.

The virtue we call Rachel, acting 27 through the senses and the other parts of our un-reasoning nature, trains us to despise all that should be held of little account, reputation and wealth and (see note on De Cher. 41), but the virtue which proceeds to noble life without a conflict. In fact, she is rather akin to the αὐτομαθής Isaac, and Rachel to the ἀσκητής Jacob. Why this Leah needs oratorical power for her handmaid is not clear to me.

<sup>b</sup> Philo here and in § 31 adopts the Epicurean term λεία κίνησις, which he has used with disparagement in De Post. 79, and with a qualification in De Agr. 142 (see notes). The name is also derived from the Greek instead of the Hebrew in Leg. All. ii. 59, but in a somewhat different sense.

PHILO

περιμάχητα ὁ πολὺς καὶ ἀγελαῖος ἀνθρώπων ὄχλος κρίνει δεδεκασμέναις μὲν ἀκοαῖς, δεδεκασμένῳ δὲ 28 καὶ τῷ ἄλλῳ τῶν αἰσθήσεων δικαστηρίῳ· ἡ δὲ ἀναδιδάσκει τὴν ἀνώμαλον καὶ τραχεῖαν ὁδὸν ἄβατον φιλαρέτοις ψυχαῖς ἐκτρέπεσθαι, λείως δὲ διὰ τῆς λεωφόρου βαίνειν ἄνευ πταισμάτων καὶ 29 τῶν ἐν ποσὶν ὀλίσθων. ἀναγκαίως οὖν τῆς μὲν προτέρας ἔσται θεραπαινὶς ἢ διὰ τῶν φωνητηρίων ὀργάνων ἐρμηνευτικὴ δύναμις καὶ ἡ λογικὴ<sup>1</sup> σοφισμάτων εὗρεσις εὐστόχῳ πιθανότητι καταγοητεύουσα, τῆς δὲ ἀναγκαῖαι τροφαί, πόσις τε 30 καὶ βρώσις. ὀνόματα δὲ ἡμῖν τῶν δυεῖν θεραπεινίδων ἀνέγραψε, Ζέλφαν τε καὶ Βάλλαν. ἡ μὲν οὖν Ζέλφα μεταληφθεῖσα πορευόμενον καλεῖται στόμα, τῆς ἐρμηνευτικῆς καὶ διεξοδικῆς σύμβολον δυνάμεως, ἡ δὲ Βάλλα κατάποσις, τὸ πρῶ-τον καὶ ἀναγκαιότατον θνητῶν ζώων ἔρεισμα· καταπόσει γὰρ τὰ σώματα ἡμῶν ἐνορμεῖ, καὶ τὰ τοῦ ζῆν πείσματα ἐκ ταύτης ὡς ἀπὸ κρηπίδος 31 ἐξήπται. πάσαις οὖν ταῖς εἰρημέναις δυνάμεσιν ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἐνομιλεῖ, ταῖς μὲν ὡς ἐλευθέ-ραις καὶ ἀσταῖς, ταῖς δὲ ὡς δούλαις καὶ παλλακίσιν.
 ἐφίεται μὲν γὰρ τῆς Λείας κινήσεως—λεία δὲ κίνησις ἐν μὲν σώματι γινομένη ὑγείαν, ἐν δὲ ψυχῇ καλοκάγαθίαν καὶ δικαιοσύνην ἂν ἐργάσαιτο—, Ῥαχὴλ δὲ ἀγαπᾷ πρὸς τὰ πάθη παλαίων καὶ πρὸς

<sup>1</sup> I suspect a lacuna between λογικὴ and σοφισμάτων. See App. p. 577.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 577.

<sup>b</sup> In the interpretation of Zilpah's name διεξοδικῆς represents πορευόμενον and ἐρμηνείας (-ευτικῆς) represents στόμα. The former corresponds to the εὗρεσις of technical rhetoric and pleasure, which the vulgar mass of ordinary men who accept the verdict of dishonest hearsay and the equally dishonest court of the other senses, judge worthy of their admiration and their efforts. Leah 28 teaches us to avoid the rough and uneven path, impassable to virtue-loving souls, and to walk smoothly along the level highway where there are no stumbling-blocks or aught that can make the foot to slip.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 27-31

Necessarily then Leah will have for her 29 handmaid the faculty of expression by means of the vocal organs, and on the side of thought the art of devising clever arguments whose easy persuasiveness is a means of deception,<sup>a</sup> while Rachel has for her's the necessary means of sustenance, eating and drinking. Moses has given us, as the names of these 30 two handmaidens, Zilpah and Bilhah (Gen. xxx. 3, 9). Zilpah by interpretation is "a walking mouth,"<sup>b</sup> which signifies the power of expressing thought in language and directing the course of an exposition, while Bilhah is "swallowing," the first and most necessary support of mortal animals. For our bodies are anchored on swallowing, and the cables of life are fastened on to it as their base.

With all 31 these aforesaid faculties the Man of Practice mates, with one pair as free-born legitimate wives, with the other pair as slaves and concubines. For he desires the smooth, the Leah movement, which will produce health in the body, noble living and justice in the soul. He loves Rachel when he wrestles with the passions and when he goes into training to gain self-control, thus appears in § 33 as ἡ κατὰ διάνοιαν πηγὴ διεξοδος, a rather vague word, signifying a fully worked out narrative or disquisition, is used because the ὁδός in it corresponds to πορευόμενον. Hence the use of the word "course" in the translation.

PHILO

- ἐγκράτειαν ἀλειφόμενος καὶ τοῖς αἰσθητοῖς πᾶσιν 32 ἀντιπαττόμενος. διττοὶ μὲν γὰρ ὠφελείας τρόποι, ἢ κατὰ ἀπόλαυσιν ἀγαθῶν ὡς ἐν εἰρήνῃ ἢ κατὰ [524] ἀντίταξιν καὶ ὑφαίρεσιν κακῶν ὡς ἐν | πολέμῳ.
 Λεία μὲν οὖν ἔστι, καθ' ἣν συμβαίνει τὰ πρε-σβύτερα καὶ ἡγεμονεύοντα ἀγαθὰ καρποῦσθαι, Ῥαχὴλ δέ, καθ' ἣν τὰ ὡς ἂν ἐκ πολέμου λάφυρα.
 33 τοιαύτη μὲν ἢ πρὸς τὰς ἀστὰς συμβίωσις. χρήζει δὲ ὁ ἀσκητῆς Βάλλας μὲν, καταπόσεως, ἀλλὰ ὡς δούλης καὶ παλλακίδος—ἄνευ γὰρ τροφῆς καὶ ζωῆς οὐδ' ἂν τὸ εὖ ζῆν περιγένοιτο, ἐπειδὴ τὰ μέσα τῶν ἀμεινόνων αἰεὶ θεμέλιοι,—χρήζει δὲ καὶ Ζέλφας, διεξοδικῆς ἐρμηνείας, ἵνα τὸ λογικὸν αὐτῷ διχόθεν συνερανίζηται πρὸς τελειώσιν, ἔκ τε τῆς κατὰ διάνοιαν πηγῆς καὶ ἐκ τῆς περὶ τὸ φωνητήριον ὄργανον ἀπορροῆς.
- 34 VII. Ὅτι οὗτοι μὲν καὶ πλειόνων γυναικῶν καὶ παλλακίδων, οὐκ ἀστῶν μόνον, ἄνδρες ἐγένοντο, ὡς αἱ ἱεραὶ μνηνοῦσι γραφαί· τῷ δὲ Ἰσαὰκ οὔτε πλείους γυναιῖκες οὔτε συνόλως παλλακή, μόνη δ' 35 ἡ κουρίδιος ἄχρι παντὸς συνοικεῖ. διὰ τί; ὅτι καὶ ἡ διδακτικὴ ἀρετὴ, ἣν Ἀβραὰμ μέτεισι, πλειόνων δέεται, γνησίων μὲν τῶν κατὰ φρόνησιν, νόθων δὲ τῶν κατὰ τὰ ἐγκύκλια προπαιδεύματα θεωρημάτων, καὶ ἡ δι' ἀσκήσεως τελειομένη, περὶ ἣν Ἰακώβ ἐσπουδακεῖν φαίνεται· διὰ πλειόνων γὰρ καὶ διαφερόντων αἱ ἀσκήσεις δογμάτων, ἡγουμένων ἐπομένων, προαπαντῶντων ὑστεριζόντων, πόνους τοτὲ μὲν ἐλάττους τοτὲ δὲ μείζους ἐχόντων.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 31-35

and takes his stand to oppose all the objects of sense. For help may take two forms. It may act by giving 32 us enjoyment of the good, the way of peace, or by opposing and removing ill, the way of war. So it is Leah through whom it comes to pass that he reaps the higher and dominant blessings, Rachel through whom he wins what we may call the spoils of war. Such is his life with the legitimate wives. But the 33 Practiser needs also Bilhah, "swallowing," though only as the slave and concubine, for without food and the life which food sustains we cannot have the good life either, since the less good must always serve as foundation for the better. He needs Zilpah too, the gift of language giving expression to the course of an exposition, that the element of words and thoughts may make its twofold contribution to the perfecting process, through the fountain of thought in the mind and the outflow through the tongue and lips.

VII. Now Abraham and Jacob, as the Holy Scrip- 34 tures tell us, became the husbands of several women, concubines as well as legitimate wives, but Isaac had neither more wives than one nor any concubine at all, but his lawful wife is the one who shares his home throughout. Why is this? It is because the virtue 35 that comes through teaching, which Abraham pursues, needs the fruits of several studies, both those born in wedlock, which deal with wisdom, and the base-born, those of the preliminary lore of the schools. It is the same with the virtue which is perfected through practice, which Jacob seems to have made his aim. For many and different are the truths in which practice finds its exercising ground, truths which both lead and follow, hasten to meet it and lag behind, and entail sometimes greater, sometimes less

PHILO

- 36 τὸ δὲ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, οὐ κεκοινώνηκεν Ἰσαάκ, ἢ εὐπαθειῶν ἀρίστη χαρά, φύσεως ἀπλήης καὶ ἀμιγοῦς καὶ ἀκράτου μεμοίραται, μήτε ἀσκήσεως μήτε διδασκαλίας δεόμενον, ἐν οἷς παλλακίδων ἐπιστημῶν, οὐκ ἀστῶν μόνον, ἐστὶ χρεία. θεοῦ γὰρ τὸ αὐτομαθὲς καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον ἄνωθεν ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ καλὸν ὀμβρήσαντος ἀμήχανον ἦν ἔτι δούλαις καὶ παλλακαῖς συμβιῶναι τέχναις, νόθων δογμάτων οἶα
- 37 παίδων ὀρεχθέντα. δεσποίνης γὰρ καὶ βασιλίδος ἀρετῆς ὁ τούτου λαχὼν τοῦ γέρως ἀνὴρ ἀναγράφεται· καλεῖται δὲ παρὰ μὲν Ἑλλησιν ὑπομονή, παρὰ δὲ Ἑβραίοις Ἑρεβέκκα. ζητεῖ γὰρ ὁ ἄπονον καὶ ἀταλαίπωρον εὐράμενος σοφίαν δι' εὐμοιρίαν φύσεως καὶ εὐτοκίαν ψυχῆς οὐδὲν τῶν εἰς βελτίω-
- 38 σιν. ἔχει γὰρ ἐν ἐτοιμῷ τέλεια τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ δῶρα χάρισι ταῖς πρεσβυτέραις ἐπιπνευσθέντα, βούλεται δὲ καὶ εὐχεται ταῦτα ἐπιμεῖναι. παρό μοι δοκεῖ καὶ ὁ εὐεργέτης, ἵνα διαιωνίζωσιν αἱ χάριτες αὐτοῦ τῷ λαβόντι, γυναιῖκα τὴν ἐπιμονὴν ἐγγυῆσαι.
- 39 VIII. Ἀνάμνησίς γε μὴν μνήμης τὰ δευτερεῖα φέρεται καὶ ὁ ἀναμνησκόμος τοῦ μεμνημένου·
- [525] ὁ μὲν | γὰρ ἔοικε τῷ συνεχῶς ὑγιαίνοντι, ὁ δὲ τῷ ἐκ νόσου ἀναλαμβάνοντι· λήθη γὰρ νόσος μνήμης.
- 40 ἀνάγκη δὲ τὸν ὑπομνήσει χρώμενον ἐκλαθέσθαι πρότερον ὧν ἐμέμνητο. τὴν μὲν οὖν μνήμην Ἑφραῖμ, ἐρμηνευόμενον καρποφορίαν, ὁ ἱερός ὀνομάζει λόγος, τὴν δὲ ἀνάμνησιν ἐκ λήθης Μανασσῆν
- 476

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 36-40

labour. But the self-learnt kind, of which Isaac is a 36 member, that joy which is the best of the good emotions, is endowed with a simple nature free from mixture and alloy, and wants neither the practice nor the teaching which entails the need of the concubine as well as the legitimate forms of knowledge. When God rains down from heaven the good of which the self is a teacher and learner both, it is impossible that that self should still live in concubinage with the slavish arts, as though desiring to be the father of bastard thoughts and conclusions. He who has obtained this prize is enrolled as the husband of the queen and mistress virtue. Her name in the Greek means "constancy"; in the Hebrew it is Rebecca. He who has gained the wisdom that comes without 37 toil and trouble, because his nature is happily gifted and his soul fruitful of good, does not seek for any means of betterment: for he has ready beside him in 38 their fulness the gifts of God, conveyed by the breath of God's higher graces, but he wishes and prays that these may remain with him constantly. And therefore I think his Benefactor, willing that His graces once received should stay for ever with him, gives him Constancy for his spouse.

VIII. Again, reminiscence takes the second place 39 to memory, and so with the reminded and the rememberer. The conditions of these two resemble respectively continuous health and recovery from disease, for forgetting is a disease of memory. The 40 man who is reminded must necessarily have forgotten what he remembered before. So the holy word names memory Ephraim, which by interpretation is "fruit-bearing," while reminding or reminiscence is called in the Hebrew Manasseh, that is "from

PHILO

- 41 προσαγορεύουσιν Ἑβραῖοι. ὄντως γὰρ ἡ μὲν τοῦ μεμνημένου ψυχὴ καρποφορεῖ ἃ ἔμαθεν οὐδὲν ἀποβάλλουσα αὐτῶν, ἡ δὲ τοῦ ἀναμνήσει χρωμένου ἔξω λήθης γίνεται, ἢ πρὶν ὑπομνησθῆναι κατέσχητο. μνημονικῶ μὲν οὖν ἀνδρὶ ἀστὴ συμβιοῖ γυνή, μνήμη, ἐπιλανθανομένῳ δὲ παλλακίς, ἀνάμνησις, Σύρα τὸ γένος, ἀλαζὼν καὶ ὑπέραυχος· Συρία γὰρ
- 42 ἐρμηνεύεται μετεωρία.<sup>1</sup> τῆς δὲ παλλακίδος ταύτης, ἀναμνήσεως, υἱὸς ἔστι Μαχεῖρ, ὡς Ἑβραῖοι καλοῦσιν, ὡς δὲ Ἕλληνες, πατρός<sup>2</sup>. νομίζουσι γὰρ οἱ ἀναμνησκόμενοι τὸν πατέρα νοῦν αἴτιον εἶναι τοῦ ὑπομνησθῆναι, καὶ οὐ λογιζονται, ὅτι ὁ αὐτὸς οὗτος ἐχώρησέ ποτε καὶ λήθην, οὐκ ἂν δεξάμενος
- 43 αὐτήν, εἰ παρ' αὐτὸν ἦν τὸ μεμνησθαι. λέγεται γάρ· “ ἐγένοντο υἱοὶ Μανασσῆ, οὓς ἔτεκεν αὐτῷ ἡ παλλακὴ ἡ Σύρα, τὸν Μαχεῖρ· Μαχεῖρ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Γαλαάδ.”

Καὶ Ναχωρ μέντοι, ὁ ἀδελφὸς Ἀβραάμ, ἔχει δύο γυναῖκας, ἀσθὴν τε καὶ παλλακὴν· ὄνομα δὲ τῆς μὲν ἀστῆς Μελχά, Ῥουμὰ δὲ τῆς παλλακίδος.

44 ἀλλ' οὐχ ἱστορικὴ γενεαλογία ταῦτ' ἐστὶν ἀναγραφείσα παρὰ τῷ σοφῷ νομοθέτῃ—μηδεὶς τοῦτ' εὖ φρονῶν ὑπονοήσειεν,—ἀλλὰ πραγμάτων ψυχὴν ὠφελῆσαι δυναμένων διὰ συμβόλων ἀνάπτυξις. τὰ δ' ὀνόματα μεταβαλόντες εἰς τὴν ἡμετέραν διάλεκτον εἰσόμεθα τὴν ὑπόσχεσιν ἀληθῆ. φέρ' οὖν ἕκαστον αὐτῶν ἐρευνήσωμεν.

<sup>1</sup> So mss.: Wendland μετέωρα, which the mss. have in Leg. All. iii. 18. The neuter plural seems strange; μετεωρία, however, is only quoted from Latin writers and in the sense of “forgetfulness.”

<sup>2</sup> Cohn suggested <ἐργήγορσις> πατρός, from “Onomastica, ed. Lag. 195. 68.” This I have not been able to see.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 41-44

forgetfulness.” For it is quite true that the soul of 41 the rememberer has the fruits of what he learned and has lost none of them, whereas the soul of the reminded comes out of forgetfulness which possessed him before he was reminded. The man of memory then is mated to a legitimate wife, memory ; the forgetful man to a concubine, reminiscence, Syrian by race, boastful and arrogant, for Syria is by interpretation “ loftiness.” This concubine has for a son, in the 42 Hebrew, Machir, meaning with us “ the father’s,” for people who recall to memory think that the father mind was the cause of their being reminded, and do not reflect that this same mind also contained the forgetfulness, for which it would not have had room, if memory were present with it. We read, “ The 43 sons of Manasseh were those whom the Syrian concubine bore to him, Machir, and Machir begat Gilead ” (Gen. xlv. 20).<sup>a</sup>

Nahor too, the brother of Abraham, has two wives, legitimate and concubine, and the name of the legitimate wife was Milcah, and the name of the concubine Reumah (Gen. xxii. 23, 24). Now let no 44 sane man suppose that we have here in the pages of the wise legislator an historical pedigree. What we have is a revelation through symbols of facts which may be profitable to the soul. And if we translate the names into our own tongue, we shall recognize that what is here promised is actually the case. Let us inquire then into each of them.

<sup>a</sup> This verse is not in the Hebrew here, but the substance of it appears in both Hebrew and LXX in 1 Chron. vii. 14.

- 45 IX. Ναχώρ ἐρμηνεύεται φωτὸς ἀνάπαισις, Μελχὰ δὲ βασιλίσσα, Ῥουμὰ δὲ ὀρώσά τι. τὸ μὲν οὖν φῶς ἔχειν κατὰ διάνοιαν ἀγαθόν, τὸ δὲ ἀναπαυόμενον καὶ ἡρεμοῦν καὶ ἀκίνητον οὐ τέλειον ἀγαθόν· ἡσυχία μὲν γὰρ τὰ κακὰ χρῆσθαι λυσιτελές, τὰ 46 δὲ ἀγαθὰ κινήσει συμφέρον. τίς γὰρ ὄνησις εὐφώνου ἡσυχάζοντος ἢ μὴ αὐλοῦντος αὐλητοῦ ἢ κιθαριστοῦ μὴ κιθαρίζοντος ἢ συνόλως τεχνίτου τὰ κατὰ τὴν τέχνην μὴ ἐνεργοῦντος; ἢ γὰρ ἄνευ πράξεως θεωρία ψιλὴ πρὸς οὐδὲν ὄφελος τοῖς ἐπιστήμοσιν· οὐ γὰρ ὁ παγκρατιάζειν ἢ πυκτεῦειν ἢ παλαίειν εἰδὼς ἐξαγκωνισθεὶς ἀπόνοιτ' ἂν ἀθλήσεως ἢ ὁ τὴν τοῦ τρέχειν ἐπιστήμην ἐκμαθὼν, εἰ ποδαγρικῶ χρῆσαιτο πάθει ἢ τινα ἄλλην περὶ
 47 τὰς βάσεις κῆρα ἀναδέξαιτο. φῶς δὲ ψυχῆς ἡλιοειδέστατον ἐπιστήμη· καθάπερ γὰρ τὰ ὄμματα αὐγαῖς, καὶ ἡ διάνοια σοφία περιλάμπεται καὶ |
 [526] ὀξυδερκέστερα ἐμβλέπειν ἐγχρισμένη καινοῖς αἰεὶ
 48 θεωρήμασιν ἐθίζεται. φωτὸς οὖν ἀνάπαισις ἐρμηνεύεται Ναχώρ εἰκότως· ἢ μὲν γὰρ Ἀβραάμ ἐστὶ τοῦ σοφοῦ συγγενῆς, φωτὸς τοῦ κατὰ σοφίαν μετέσχηκεν· ἢ δ' οὐ συναποδεδήμεκεν αὐτῷ τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ γενομένου πρὸς τὸ ἀγένητον καὶ τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου πρὸς τὸν κοσμοπλάστην ἀποδημίαν, χωλὴν καὶ ἀτελῆ τὴν ἐπιστήμην ἐκτήσατο, ἀναπαυομένην καὶ μένουσαν, μᾶλλον δ' ἀνδριάντος
 49 ἀψύχου τρόπον πεπηγυῖαν. τῆς γὰρ Χαλδαϊκῆς

<sup>a</sup> In the allegory of §§ 45-53, Nahor represents any philosophy which does not rise to the acknowledgement of God, not merely astrology, though for a moment in § 49 it seems to be identified with it. Rather its highest study is astrology, a science for which, so far as it recognizes the harmony of the heavens, Philo has considerable respect, cf.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 45-49

IX. Nahor means "rest of light"<sup>a</sup>; Milcah, "queen"; 45 and Reumah, "seeing something." Now to have light in the mind is good, yet what is at rest, quiet and immovable, is not a perfect good; it is well that things evil should be in a state of stillness; motion on the other hand is the proper condition for the good.
For what use is the flute-player, however fine a per- 46 former he may be, if he remain quiet and does not play, or the harpist if he does not use his harp, or in general any craftsman if he does not exercise his craft? No knowledge is profitable to the possessors through the mere theory if it is not combined with practice: a man may know how to contend in the pancratium, to box or to wrestle, yet if his hands be tied behind his back he will get no good from his athletic training; so too with one who has mastered the science of running, if he suffers from gout or from any other affliction of the feet. Now knowledge is 47 the great sunlight of the soul. For as our eyes are illuminated by the sun's rays, so is the mind by wisdom, and anointed with the eyesalve of ever fresh acquisitions of knowledge it grows accustomed to see with clearer vision. Nahor is therefore properly called "rest of light": in so far as he is wise Abra- 48 ham's kinsman, he has obtained a share in wisdom's light; but in so far as he has not accompanied him abroad in his journey from the created to the un-created, and from the world to the world's Framer, the knowledge he has gained is halting and incomplete, resting and staying where it is, or rather standing stockstill, like a lifeless statue. For he does not 49

De Mig. 178 ff. Its lower study is sceptical quibbling, and these two represent respectively the lawful wife and the concubine.

PHILO

- οὐ μετανίσταται χώρας, τουτέστι τῆς περὶ ἀστρονομίαν θεωρίας οὐ διαζεύγνυται, τὸ γενόμενον πρὸ τοῦ πεποικηκότος καὶ κόσμον πρὸ θεοῦ τετιμηκώς, μᾶλλον δὲ τὸν κόσμον αὐτὸν θεὸν αὐτοκράτορα νομίζων, οὐκ αὐτοκράτορος ἔργον θεοῦ.
- 50 X. Μελχὰν δὲ ἄγεται γυναικα, οὐκ ἀνθρώπων ἢ πόλεων ἀφηγουμένην, <ἦν> τύχη, βασιλίδα, ἀλλ' ὁμώνυμον αὐτὸ μόνον ἐκείνη. καθάπερ γὰρ τὸν οὐρανόν, ἅτε κράτιστον ὄντα τῶν γεγονότων, βασιλέα τῶν αἰσθητῶν εἶποι τις ἂν οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ, οὕτως καὶ τὴν περὶ αὐτὸν ἐπιστήμην, ἣν μετίασιν οἱ ἀστρονομοῦντες καὶ Χαλδαῖοι διαφερόντως,
- 51 βασιλίδα τῶν ἐπιστημῶν. γυνὴ μὲν οὖν ἦδε ἀστή, παλλακὴ δὲ ἣ ἔν τι τῶν ὄντων ὀρώσα, κἂν εἰ πάντων εὐτελέστατον ὑπάρχοι. τῷ μὲν οὖν ἀρίστῳ γένοι τὸ ἄριστον ὄραν, τὸ ὄντως ὄν, συμβέβηκεν—Ἰσραὴλ γὰρ ὄρων θεὸν ἐρμηνεύεται,—τῷ δὲ δευτερείων ἐφιεμένῳ τὸ δεύτερον, τὸν αἰσθητὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν ἐν αὐτῷ τῶν ἀστέρων ἐναρμόνιον τάξιν καὶ πάμμουσον ὡς ἀληθῶς χορείαν.
- 52 τρίτοι δὲ εἰσιν οἱ σκεπτικοί, τῶν μὲν ἐν τῇ φύσει κρατίστων, αἰσθητῶν τε καὶ νοητῶν, οὐκ ἐφαπτόμενοι, περὶ μικρὰ μέντοι σοφίσματα τριβόμενοι καὶ γλισχρολογούμενοι. τούτοις ἣ ὀρώσά τι κἂν<sup>1</sup> τὸ μικρότατον παλλακὴς Ῥουμὰ συνοικεῖ μὴ δυναμένοις πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀμεινόνων ἐλθεῖν ἔρευναν,
- 53 ἐξ ὧν τὸν ἑαυτῶν βίον ὀνήσουσιν. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν ἰατροῖς ἣ λεγομένη λογιατρεία πολὺ τῆς τῶν καμνόντων ὠφελείας ἀποστατεῖ—φαρμάκοις γὰρ καὶ χειρουργίαις καὶ διαίταις, ἀλλ' οὐ λόγοις, αἱ νόσοι θεραπεύονται,—οὕτω καὶ ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καὶ.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 49-53

remove from the land of Chaldaea, that is he does not sever himself from the study of astrology; he honours the created before the creator, and the world before God, or rather he holds that the world is not the work of God but is itself God absolute in His power.

X. But in Milcah he marries 50 a queen, not a ruler of men or perhaps cities, but one who merely bears the same name with a different meaning. For just as heaven, being the best and greatest of created things, may be rightly called the king of the world of our senses, so the knowledge of heaven, which the star-gazers and the Chaldaeans especially pursue, may be called the queen of sciences. Milcah, then, is the legitimate wife, but the concubine 51 is she who sees one thing of what is, though it be but the meanest of all. Now to see the best, that is the truly existing, is the lot of the best of races, Israel, for Israel means seeing God. The race or kind that strives for the second place sees the second best, that is the heaven of our senses, and therein the well-ordered host of the stars, the choir that moves to the fullest and truest music.

Third are the 52 sceptics, who do not concern themselves with the best things in nature, whether perceived by the senses or the mind, but spend themselves on petty quibbles and trifling disputes. These are the house-mates of Reumah, who "sees something," even the smallest, men incapable of the quest for the better things which might bring profit to their lives. In 53 the case of physicians what is called word-medicine is far removed from assistance to the sick, for diseases are cured by drugs and surgery and prescriptions of diet, but not with words; and so too in philosophy

PHILO

λογοπῶλαι καὶ λογοθηραὶ τινες αὐτὸ μόνον εἰσί, τὸν ἀρρωστημάτων γέμοντα βίον θεραπεύειν οὔτε ἐθέλοντες οὔτε ἐπιτηδεύοντες, ἐκ πρώτης δὲ ἡλικίας ἄχρι γήρως ἐσχάτου γνωσιμαχοῦντές τε [527] καὶ συλλαβομαχοῦντες οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσιν, | ὥσπερ τῆς εὐδαιμονίας ἐπ' ὀνομάτων καὶ ῥημάτων [καὶ] ἀπεράντῳ καὶ ἀνηνύτῳ περιεργία κειμένης, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν τῷ τὸ ἦθος, τὴν τοῦ ἀνθρωπέου <βίου> πηγῆν, ἄμεινον καταστήσασθαι, τὰς μὲν κακίας ὑπερορίους φυγαδεύσαντα αὐτοῦ, τὰς δὲ ἀρετὰς εἰσοικίσαντα.<sup>1</sup>

- 54 XI. Παλλακὰς μέντοι [ἦ]<sup>2</sup> δόξας καὶ δόγματα προσίενται καὶ οἱ φαῦλοι. φησὶ γοῦν ὅτι Θαμνά, ἡ παλλακὴ Ἐλιφὰς τοῦ υἱοῦ Ἡσαῦ, ἔτεκε τῷ Ἐλιφὰς τὸν Ἀμαλήκ. ὡ τῆς τοῦ ἀπογόνου λαμπρᾶς δυσγενείας· ὅψει δὲ αὐτοῦ τὴν δυσγένειαν, ἐὰν ἀποστὰς τοῦ περὶ ἀνθρώπων ταῦτα εἰρησθαι νομίζειν τὴν ψυχὴν ὥσπερ ἐξ ἀνατομῆς
- 55 ἐπισκέπτῃ. τὴν μὲν τοίνυν ἄλογον καὶ ἄμετρον ὄρμην τοῦ πάθους Ἀμαλήκ προσαγορεύει· μεταληφθεὶς γάρ ἐστι λαὸς ἐκλείχων· καθάπερ γὰρ ἡ τοῦ πυρὸς δύναμις τὴν παραβληθεῖσαν ὕλην ἀναλίσκει, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τὸ πάθος ἀναζέον τὰ ἐν ποσὶ πάντα ἐπιλιχμᾶται καὶ διαφθείρει.
- 56 τούτου τοῦ πάθους πατὴρ Ἐλιφὰς ἀναγράφεται δεόντως· ἐρμηνεύεται γάρ· θεὸς με διέσπειρεν. ἀλλ' οὐχ ὅταν ἀνασκεδάσῃ ἢ διασπείρῃ καὶ σκορα-

<sup>1</sup> τινε must be understood as subject to καταστήσασθαι; otherwise grammar will require φυγαδεύσαντας (-es?) and εἰσοικίσαντας (-es?).

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps read παλλακὰς μέντοι <καὶ ἀστὰς>, δόξας κτλ. See App. p. 578.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 53-56

there are men who are merely word-mongers and word-hunters, who neither wish nor practise to cure their life, brimful of infirmities as it is, but from their earliest years to extreme old age contend in battles of argument<sup>a</sup> and battles of syllables and blush not to do so. They act as though happiness depended on the endless fruitless hypercriticism of words as such,<sup>b</sup> instead of on establishing on a better basis character, the fount of human life,<sup>c</sup> by expelling the vices from its borders and planting there the virtues as settlers in their stead.

XI. The wicked, too, take to them as concubines, 54 opinions and doctrines. Thus he says that Timna, the concubine of Eliphaz, the son of Esau, bore Amalek to Eliphaz (Gen. xxxvi. 12). How distinguished is the misbirth of him whose descent is here given! What the misbirth is you will see, if you cast away all thought that these words refer to men and turn your attention to what we may call the anatomy of soul-nature.<sup>d</sup> It is then the unreasoning and un- 55 measured impulse or appetite of passion which he calls Amalek, for the word by translation means "people licking up." For as the force of fire consumes the fuel laid before it, so too the boiling of passion licks up and destroys all that stands in its way. This passion is rightly declared to 56 have Eliphaz for its father, for Eliphaz means "God hath dispersed me." And is it not true that when God scatters and disperses the soul and ejects

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 577.

<sup>b</sup> Lit. "nouns and verbs," see note on De Mig. 49.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 578.

<sup>d</sup> Lit. "observe the soul as it were by anatomy."

PHILO

- κίση τὴν ψυχὴν ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ ὁ θεός, τὸ ἄλογον εὐθύς γεννᾶται πάθος; τὴν μὲν γὰρ ὄρατικὴν αὐτοῦ φιλόθεον ὄντως διάνοιαν, κληματίδα εὐγενῆ, καταφυτεύει ρίζας ἀποτεινῶν πρὸς αἰδιότητα καὶ εὐφορίαν καρπῶν διδοὺς πρὸς κτῆσι καὶ ἀπό-
- 57 λαισιν ἀρετῶν. διὸ καὶ Μωυσῆς εὐχεται φάσκων· “εἰσαγαγὼν καταφύτευσον αὐτούς,” ἵνα μὴ ἐφ- ἡμερα ἀλλ' ἀθάνατα καὶ μακραίωνα γένηται τὰ θεῖα βλαστήματα. τῆν δὲ ἄδικον καὶ ἄθεον ψυχὴν φυγαδεύων ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ πορρωτάτω διέσπειρεν εἰς τὸν ἡδονῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν καὶ ἀδικημάτων χώρον. ὁ δὲ χώρος οὗτος προσφυέστατα ἀσεβῶν καλεῖται, οὐχ ὁ μυθεύμενος ἐν “Αἰδου· καὶ γὰρ ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν “Αἰδῆς ὁ τοῦ μοχθηροῦ βίος ἐστίν, ὁ ἀλάστωρ καὶ παλαμναῖος καὶ πάσαις ἀραῖς ἔνοχος.
- 58 XII. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἐτέρωθι τὸ γράμμα τοῦτο ἐστηλιτευμένον· “ἠνίκα διεμέριζεν ὁ ὕψιστος ἔθνη, ὡς διέσπειρεν υἱοὺς Ἀδάμ,” τοὺς γηγῆνους ἅπαντας τρόπους οὐράνιον οὐδὲν ἀγαθὸν ἐσπουδακότας ἰδεῖν ἤλασεν, ἀοίκους καὶ ἀπόλιδας καὶ σποράδας ὄντως ἐργασάμενος. οὐδενὶ γὰρ τῶν φαύλων οὐκ οἶκος, οὐ πόλις, οὐκ ἄλλο τῶν εἰς κοινωνίαν οὐδὲν διασώζεται, ἀλλ' ἀνίδρυτος ὢν σπεῖρεται, πάντῃ φορούμενος καὶ μετανιστάμενος αἰεὶ καὶ μηδαμόθι στηριχθῆναι δυνάμενος.
- 59 γίνεται οὖν τῷ φαύλῳ ἐξ ἀσθῆς μὲν κακία, τὸ δὲ πάθος ἐκ παλλακῆς. λογισμοῦ γὰρ ἡ μὲν ὅλη [528] ψυχὴ καθάπερ ἀσθὴ σύμβιος | —ψυχὴ δὲ ἐπίληπτος τίκτει κακίας,—ἡ δὲ τοῦ σώματος φύσις παλλακῆ,

<sup>a</sup> Or “graft.”

<sup>b</sup> Or simply “recorded.”

<sup>c</sup> i.e. including the ἄλογον part of the soul as well as the “soul's soul” or mind. Cf. Quis Rerum 55.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 56-59

it with contumely from His presence unreasoning passion is at once engendered? The mind which truly loves God, that has the vision of Him, He "plants in," as a branch<sup>a</sup> of goodly birth, and He deepens its roots to reach to eternity and gives it fruitfulness for the acquisition and enjoyment of virtue. That is why Moses prays in these words, 57 "Bring them in and plant them in" (Ex. xv. 17), that the saplings of God's culture may not be for a day but age-long and immortal. On the other hand he banishes the unjust and godless souls from himself to the furthest bounds, and disperses them to the place of pleasures and lusts and injustices. That place is most fitly called the place of the impious, but it is not that mythical place of the impious in Hades. For the true Hades is the life of the bad, a life of damnation and blood-guiltiness, the victim of every curse.

XII. And elsewhere we have this text, 58 graven as on a stone,<sup>b</sup> "When the Highest divided the nations, when He dispersed the sons of Adam" (Deut. xxxii. 8), that is, when He drove away all the earthly ways of thinking which have no real desire to look on any heaven-sent good, and made them homeless and cityless, scattered in very truth. For none of the wicked have preserved for them home or city, nor aught else that tends to fellowship, but they are scattered without settlement, driven about on every side, ever changing their place, nowhere able to hold their ground.

So then the wicked man 59 begets vice by his legitimate wife and passion by his concubine. For the soul as a whole<sup>c</sup> is the legitimate life-mate of reason, and if it be a soul of guilt it brings forth vices. The bodily nature is the concubine, and

PHILO

- δι' ἧς ἡ γένεσις τοῦ πάθους θεωρεῖται· ἡδονῶν γὰρ 60 καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν χώρα τὸ σῶμα. καλεῖται δὲ Θαμνά, ἧς μεταληφθέν ἐστὶ τοῦνομα ἔκλειψις σαλευομένη· ἐκλείπει γὰρ καὶ ἀδυνατεῖ ἡ ψυχὴ τῷ πάθει, σάλον καὶ κλύδωνα πολὺν ἀπὸ σώματος ἐνδεξαμένη διὰ τὸν καταρραγέοντα βαρὺν χειμῶνα 61 ἐξ ἀμετρίας ὀρμῆς. κεφαλὴ δὲ ὡς ζώου πάντων τῶν λεχθέντων μερῶν ὁ γενάρχης ἐστὶν Ἡσαῦ, ὃς τοτὲ μὲν ποίημα, τοτὲ δὲ δρυὶς ἐρμη-νεύεται, δρυὶς μὲν, παρόσον ἀκαμπῆς καὶ ἀνένδοτος ἀπειθής τε καὶ σκληραύχην φύσει, συμβούλω χρώμενος ἀνοία, δρύϊνος ὄντως, ποίημα δέ, παρὄσον πλάσμα καὶ μῦθος ἐστὶν ὁ μετὰ ἀφροσύνης βίος, τραγωδίας καὶ κενοῦ κόμπου καὶ πάλιν γέλωτος καὶ κωμικῆς χλεύης ἀνάπλεως, ὑγιᾶς ἔχων οὐδέν, κατειψευσμένος, ἐκτετοξευκῶς ἀλήθειαν, τὴν ἀποιοῦν καὶ ἀνείδειον καὶ ἀπλαστον φύσιν ἐν οὐδεὶ 62 λόγῳ τιθέμενος, ἧς ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἐρᾷ. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ Μωυσῆς φάσκων, ὅτι “ ἦν Ἰακώβ ἀπλαστος, οἰκῶν οἰκίαν,” ὥστε ὁ ἐναντίος τούτῳ ἄοικος ἂν εἶη, πλάσματος καὶ ποιήματος καὶ μυθικῶν λήρων ἑταῖρος, μᾶλλον δὲ σκηνη καὶ μῦθος αὐτός.
 63 XIII. Ἡ μὲν δὴ λογισμοῦ φιλοθεάμονος πρὸς ἀστὰς καὶ παλλακίδας δυνάμεις σύνοδος, ὡς οἶόν τε ἦν, εἴρηται· τὸν δ' εἰρμὸν τοῦ λόγου συνυφαν-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. note on De Sac. 17.

<sup>b</sup> Throughout these sections there is a play upon the technical literary use of ποίημα and πλάσμα. While ποίημα in this sense is a poem in general, πλάσμα is used of fictitious but possible material such as was used in comedy, while μῦθος gives the legendary matter which formed the staple of tragedy. The double use of ποίημα in Quod Det. 125 is somewhat similar.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 59-63

we see that through it passion is generated, for the body is the region of pleasures and lusts. This 60 concubine is called Timna, whose name translated is "tossing faintness." For the soul faints and loses all power through passion when it receives from the body the flood of tossing surge caused by the storm wind which sweeps down in its fury, driven on by unbridled appetite.

And of all the mem- 61
bers of the clan here described Esau is the progenitor, the head as it were of the whole creature,—Esau whose name we sometimes interpret as "an oak," sometimes as "a thing made up."<sup>a</sup> He is an oak because he is unbending, unyielding, disobedient and stiff-necked by nature, with folly as his counsellor, oak-like in very truth; he is a thing made up because the life that consorts with folly is just fiction and fable, full of the bombast of tragedy on the one hand and of the broad jesting of comedy on the other;<sup>b</sup> it has nothing sound about it, is utterly false and has thrown truth overboard; it makes no account of the nature which is outside qualities<sup>c</sup> and forms and fashionings, the nature which the Man of Practice loves. To this Moses testifies when he says, "Jacob 62 was a plain or unfashioned man, living in a house" (Gen. xxv. 27). And therefore Esau his opposite must be houseless, and the friend of fiction and make-up and legendary follies, or rather himself the actor's stage and the playwright's legend.

XIII. We have now to the best of our ability 63 described the mating of the reason which yearns to see and learn with the faculties both of the lawful and the concubine type. We must now continue the thread of our discourse by examining the words <sup>c</sup> Again a play (not translatable) on πολιμα.

PHILO

τέον τὰκόλουθα διερευνῶντας. “ ὑπήκουσε ” φησὶν “ Ἄβραάμ τῆς φωνῆς Σάρρας ”· ἀναγκαῖον γὰρ τοῖς παραγγέλμασιν ἀρετῆς τὸν μαθητὴν πειθ-64 αρχεῖν. οὐ πάντες δὲ πειθαρχοῦσιν, ἀλλ’ ὅσοις σφοδρὸς ἔρως ἐντέτηκεν ἐπιστήμης· ἐπεὶ καθ’ ἑκάστην σχεδὸν ἡμέραν τὰ τε ἀκροατήρια καὶ τὰ θέατρα πληροῦνται, διεξέρχονται δὲ ἀπνευστὶ συν-εῖροντες τοὺς περὶ ἀρετῆς λόγους οἱ φιλοσοφοῦντες.
 65 ἀλλὰ τί τῶν λεγομένων ὄφελος; ἀντὶ γὰρ τοῦ προσέχειν ἐτέρωσε τὸν νοῦν ἀποστείλαντες οἱ μὲν πλοῦ καὶ ἐμπορίας, οἱ δὲ προσόδων καὶ γεωργίας, οἱ δὲ τιμῶν καὶ πολιτείας, οἱ δὲ τῶν ἀφ’ ἑκάστης τέχνης καὶ ἐπιτηδεύσεως κερδῶν, ἄλλοι δὲ τιμωρίας ἐχθρῶν, οἱ δὲ τῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐρωτικαῖς ἐπιθυμίαις ἀπολαύσεων καὶ συνόλως ἐτέρων ἕτεροι διαμέμνηνται, ὡς ἔνεκα τῶν ἐπιδεικνυμένων κεκω-φῆσθαι, τοῖς μὲν σώμασι παρεῖναι μόνον, ταῖς δὲ διανοαῖς ἀπηλλάχθαι, εἰδώλων καὶ ἀνδριάντων 66 διαφέρειν μηδέν. εἰ δέ τινες καὶ προσἔχουσι, τοσοῦτον χρόνον καθέζονται μόνον ἀκούοντες, ἀπαλλαγέντες δ’ οὐδενὸς τῶν εἰρημένων διαμέμνηνται, καὶ ἦκον τερφθῆναι δι’ ἀκοῆς μᾶλλον ἢ ὠφελθῆναι· ὥστε οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ἴσχυσεν ἢ ψυχὴ συλλαβεῖν καὶ κυφορῆσαι, ἀλλ’ ἅμα τὸ κινεῖν τὴν [529] ἡδονὴν αἴτιον | ἡσύχασε καὶ ἡ προσοχὴ κατεσβέσθη.
 67 τρίτοι δὲ εἰσιν οἷς ἔναυλα μὲν τὰ λεχθέντα ὑπηχεῖ, σοφισταὶ δὲ ἀντὶ φιλοσόφων ἀνευρίσκονται. τούτων ὁ μὲν λόγος ἐπαινετός, ὁ δὲ βίος ψεκτός ἐστι· δυνατοὶ μὲν γὰρ εἰπεῖν, 68 ἀδύνατοι δὲ εἰσι πράττειν τὰ βέλτιστα. μόλις οὖν

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 63-67

which follow. Abraham, it says, "hearkened to the voice of Sarah" (Gen. xvi. 2), for the learner must needs obey the commands of virtue. Yet not all do obey, only those in whom the strong longing for knowledge has become ingrained. Hardly a day passes but the lecture-halls and theatres are filled with philosophers discoursing at length, stringing together without stopping to take breath their disquisitions on virtue. Yet what profit is there in their talk? For instead of attending, the audience dismiss their minds elsewhere, some occupied with thoughts of voyaging and trading, some with their farming and its returns, others with honours and civic life, others on the profits they get from their particular trade and business, others with the vengeance they hope to wreak on their enemies, others with the enjoyments of their amorous passions, the class of thought in fact differing with the class of person. Thus, as far as what is being demonstrated is concerned, they are deaf, and while they are present in the body are absent in mind, and might as well be images or statues.

And any who do attend sit all the time merely hearing, and when they depart they remember nothing that has been said, and in fact their object in coming was to please their sense of hearing rather than to gain any profit; thus their soul is unable to conceive or bring to the birth, but the moment the cause which stirred up pleasure is silent their attention is extinguished too.

There is a third class, who carry away an echo of what has been said, but prove to be sophists rather than philosophers. The words of these deserve praise, but their lives censure, for they are capable of saying the best, but incapable of doing it.

PHILO

ἔστιν εὐρεῖν προσεκτικὸν καὶ μνημονικόν, τὸ πράττειν τοῦ λέγειν προτιμῶντα, ἃ δὴ μαρτυρεῖται τῷ φιλομαθεῖ διὰ τοῦ “ ὑπήκουσε τῆς φωνῆς Σάρρας.” οὐ γὰρ ἀκούων ἀλλ’ ὑπακούων εἰσάγεται· τὸ δέ ἐστι τοῦ συναινεῖν καὶ πειθαρχεῖν εὐθυβολώτατον

69 ὄνομα. οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ δὲ πρόσκειται τὸ “ τῆς φωνῆς,” ἀλλὰ μὴ τῆς φωνούσης Σάρρας ὑπακοῦσαι. ἴδιον γὰρ τοῦ μανθάνοντος φωνῆς καὶ λόγων ἀκροᾶσθαι, διδάσκεται γὰρ τούτοις μόνοις· ὁ δὲ ἀσκήσει τὸ καλὸν ἀλλὰ μὴ διδασκαλία κτώμενος οὐ τοῖς λεγομένοις ἀλλὰ τοῖς λέγουσι προσέχει, μιμούμενος τὸν ἐκείνων βίον ἐν ταῖς κατὰ
70 μέρος ἀνεπιλήπτοις πράξεσι. λέγεται γὰρ ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἰακώβ, ἥνικα εἰς τὸν συγγενικὸν γάμον πέμπεται· “ εἰσήκουσεν Ἰακώβ τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐπορεύθη εἰς τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν,” οὐ τῆς φωνῆς οὐδὲ τῶν λόγων—τοῦ γὰρ βίου μιμητὴν ἔδει τὸν ἀσκητὴν, οὐκ ἀκροατὴν λόγων εἶναι· τοῦτο μὲν γὰρ ἴδιον τοῦ διδασκομένου, ἐκείνο δὲ τοῦ διαθλοῦντος,—ἵνα κἀνταῦθα διαφορὰν ἀσκητοῦ καὶ μανθάνοντος καταλάβωμεν, τοῦ μὲν κοσμομένου κατὰ τὸν λέγοντα, τοῦ δὲ κατὰ τὸν ἐκείνου λόγον.

71 XIV. “ Λαβοῦσα ” οὖν φησι “ Σάρρα ἡ γυνὴ Ἀβραάμ ἤγαγε τὴν Αἰγυπτίαν, τὴν ἑαυτῆς παιδίσκην, μετὰ δέκα ἔτη τοῦ οἰκῆσαι Ἀβραάμ ἐν γῆ Χαναάν, ἔδωκε τῷ Ἀβραάμ τῷ ἀνδρὶ αὐτῆς αὐτῷ γυναικα.” βάσκανον μὲν καὶ πικρὸν καὶ κακόηθες φύσει κακία, ἡμερον δὲ καὶ κοινωνικὸν καὶ εὐμενὲς

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 68-71

Rarely then shall we find one who combines attention, 68 memory and the valuing of deeds before words, which three things are vouched for in the case of Abraham, the lover of learning, in the phrase " He hearkened to the voice of Sarah," for he is represented not as hearing, but as hearkening, a word which exactly expresses assent and obedience. There is a 69 point, too, in the addition " to the voice," instead of " he hearkened to Sarah speaking." For it is a characteristic mark of the learner that he listens to a voice and to words, since by these only is he taught.
whereas he who acquires the good through practice, and not through teaching, fixes his attention not on what is said, but on those who say it, and imitates their life as shewn in the blamelessness of their successive actions. Thus we read in the case of 70 Jacob, when he was sent to marry into his mother's family, " Jacob heard his father and mother, and went to Mesopotamia " (Gen. xxviii. 7). " Heard them," it says, not their voice or words, for the practiser must be the imitator of a life, not the hearer of words, since the latter is the characteristic mark of the recipient of teaching, and the former of the strenuous self-exerciser. Thus this text too is meant as a lesson to us that we may realize the difference between a learner and a practiser, how the course of one is determined by what a person says, the other by the person himself.

XIV. The verse continues, " So Sarah the wife of 71 Abraham, ten years after Abraham dwelt in Canaan, took Hagar the Egyptian her handmaid and gave her to Abraham her husband as his wife " (Gen.
xvi. 3). Now vice is malignant and sour and ill-minded by nature, while virtue is gentle and sociable

PHILO

- ἀρετή, πάντα τρόπον τοὺς εὐφυῶς ἔχοντας ὠφελεῖν 72 ἢ δι' αὐτῆς ἢ δι' ἑτέρων ἐθέλουσα. νυνὶ γοῦν μήπω δυναμένοις ἡμῖν ἐκ φρονήσεως παιδοποιεῖσθαι τὴν ἑαυτῆς ἐγγυᾶ θεραπευρίδα, τὴν ἐγκύκλιον, ὡς ἔφην, παιδεῖαν, καὶ μονοноῦ προξενεῖν καὶ νυμφοστολεῖν ὑπομένει· αὐτὴ γὰρ λέγεται λαβοῦσα διδόναι τῷ 73 ἀνδρὶ αὐτῆς γυναῖκα ταύτην. ἄξιον δὲ διαπορηῆσαι, διὰ τί νυνὶ πάλιν γυναῖκα τοῦ Ἀβραάμ εἶπε τὴν Σάρραν, πολλάκις ἤδη πρότερον μεμηνυκῶς· οὐ γὰρ μακρολογίας τὸ φαυλότατον εἶδος, ταυτολογίαν, ἐπιτετήδευκε. τί οὖν λεκτέον; ἐπειδὴ μέλλει τὴν θεραπευρίδα φρονήσεως, τὴν ἐγκύκλιον παιδεῖαν, ἐγγυᾶσθαι, φησὶν ὅτι οὐκ ἐξελάβετο τῶν πρὸς τὴν δέσποιναν αὐτῆς ὁμολογιῶν, ἀλλ' οἶδε μὲν ἐκείνην ἑαυτοῦ νόμῳ καὶ γνώμῃ γυναῖκα, ταύτην δὲ ἀνάγκῃ καὶ βία καιροῦ. τοῦτο δὲ παντὶ συμβαίνει φιλομαθεῖ· μάρτυς δ' ὁ πεπονηθὼς γένοιτο ἂν ἀψευ-
 74 δέστατος. | ἐγὼ γοῦν ἠνίκα πρῶτον
 [530] κέντροις φιλοσοφίας πρὸς τὸν πόθον αὐτῆς ἀν-ηρεθίσθην, ὠμίλησα κομιδῇ νέος ὢν μιᾶ τῶν θερα-παινίδων αὐτῆς, γραμματικῇ, καὶ ὅσα ἐγέννησα ἐκ ταύτης, τὸ γράφειν, τὸ ἀναγινώσκειν, τὴν ἱστορίαν 75 τῶν παρὰ ποιηταῖς, ἀνέθηκα τῇ δεσποίνῃ. καὶ πάλιν ἑτέρα συνελθόν, γεωμετρία, καὶ τοῦ κάλλους ἀγάμενος—εἶχε γὰρ συμμετρίαν καὶ ἀναλογίαν ἐν τοῖς μέρεσι πᾶσι—τῶν ἐγγόνων οὐδὲν ἐνοσφισάμην, 76 ἀλλὰ τῇ ἀστῇ φέρων ἐδωρησάμην. ἐσπούδασα καὶ τρίτῃ συνελθεῖν—ἦν δὲ εὐρυθμος, εὐάρμοστος, ἐμ-

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 71-76

and kindly, willing in every way, either by herself or others, to help those whom nature has gifted. Thus in the case before us, since as yet we are unable 72 to beget by wisdom, she gives us the hand of her maiden, who is, as I have said, the culture of the schools; and she does not shrink, we may almost say, to carry out the wooing and preside over the bridal rites; for she herself, we are told, took Hagar and gave her as wife to her husband. Now 73

it is worth considering carefully why in this place Moses again calls Sarah the wife of Abraham, when he has already stated the fact several times; for Moses did not practise the worst form of prolixity, namely tautology. What must we say then? This. When Abraham is about to wed the handmaid of wisdom, the school culture, he does not forget, so the text implies, his faith plighted to her mistress, but knows that the one is his wife by law and deliberate choice, the other only by necessity and the force of occasion. And this is what happens to every lover of learning; personal experience will prove the most infallible of testimonies. For instance 74

when first I was incited by the goads of philosophy to desire her I consorted in early youth with one of her handmaids, Grammar, and all that I beget by her, writing, reading and study of the writings of the poets, I dedicated to her mistress. And again I kept 75 company with another, namely Geometry, and was charmed with her beauty, for she shewed symmetry and proportion in every part. Yet I took none of her children for my private use, but brought them as a gift to the lawful wife. Again my ardour moved 76 me to keep company with a third; rich in rhythm, harmony and melody was she, and her name was

PHILO

μελής, μουσική δὲ ἐκαλεῖτο—καὶ ἐγέννησα ἐξ αὐτῆς διατονικὰ χρώματα καὶ ἑναρμόνια, συνημμένα, διεξευγμένα μέλη, τῆς διὰ τεττάρων, τῆς διὰ πέντε, τῆς διὰ πασῶν συμφωνίας ἐχόμενα, καὶ πάλιν οὐδὲν αὐτῶν ἀπεκρυψάμην, ἵνα πλουσία μοι γένηται ἢ ἀσπὴ γυνή, μυρίων οἰκετῶν ὑπηρετου-77 μένη πλήθει. τινὲς γὰρ τοῖς φίλτροις τῶν θεραπαινίδων δελεασθέντες ὀλιγώρησαν τῆς δεσποίνης, φιλοσοφίας, καὶ κατεγήρασαν οἱ μὲν ἐν ποιήμασιν, οἱ δὲ ἐν γραμμαῖς, οἱ δὲ ἐν χρωμάτων κράσεσιν, οἱ δὲ ἐν ἄλλοις μυρίοις, οὐ δυνηθέντες 78 ἐπὶ τὴν ἀσπὴν ἀναδραμεῖν. ἔχει γὰρ ἐκάστη τέχνη γλαφυρότητας, ὀλοκούς τινὰς δυνάμεις, ὑφ' ὧν ἔνιοι ψυχαγωγούμενοι καταμένουσιν, ἐκκλησησμένοι τῶν πρὸς φιλοσοφίαν ὁμολογιῶν. ὁ δὲ ἐμμένων ταῖς συνθήκαις πορίζει πάντα πανταχόθεν πρὸς τὴν ἀρέσκειαν αὐτῆς. εἰκότως οὖν τῆς πίστεως αὐτὸν ἀγάμενος ὁ ἱερός λόγος φησὶν, ὅτι καὶ νῦν ἦν αὐτῷ γυνὴ Σάρρα, ὅτε τὴν θεραπαινίδα πρὸς τὴν ἐκείνης 79 ἀρέσκειαν ἠγάγετο. καὶ μὴν ὥσπερ τὰ ἐγκύκλια συμβάλλεται πρὸς φιλοσοφίας ἀνάληψιν, οὕτω καὶ φιλοσοφία πρὸς σοφίας κτήσιν. ἔστι γὰρ φιλο-σοφία ἐπιτήδευσις σοφίας, σοφία δὲ ἐπιστήμη θείων καὶ ἀνθρωπίνων καὶ τῶν τούτων αἰτίων.
 γένοιτ' ἂν οὖν ὥσπερ ἡ ἐγκύκλιος μουσικὴ φιλο-80 σοφίας, οὕτω καὶ φιλοσοφία δούλη σοφίας. φιλο-σοφία δὲ ἐγκράτειαν μὲν γαστρός, ἐγκράτειαν δὲ

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 76-80

Music, and from her I begat diatonics, chromatics and enharmonics, conjunct and disjunct melodies, conforming with the consonance of the fourth, fifth or octave intervals.<sup>a</sup> And again of none of these did I make a secret hoard, wishing to see the lawful wife a lady of wealth with a host of servants ministering to her. For some have been ensnared by the 77 love lures of the handmaids and spurned the mistress, and have grown old, some doting on poetry, some on geometrical figures, some on the blending of musical "colours,"<sup>b</sup> and a host of other things, and have never been able to soar to the winning of the lawful wife.<sup>c</sup> For each art has its charms, its powers of attraction, 78 and some beguiled by these stay with them and forget their pledges to Philosophy. But he who abides by the covenants he has made provides from every quarter everything he can to do her service. It is natural, then, that the holy word should say in admiration of his faithfulness that even then was Sarah his wife when he wedded the handmaid to do her service. And indeed just as the school subjects 79 contribute to the acquirement of philosophy, so does philosophy to the getting of wisdom. For philosophy is the practice or study of wisdom, and wisdom is the knowledge of things divine and human and their causes.<sup>d</sup> And therefore just as the culture of the schools is the bond-servant of philosophy, so must philosophy be the servant of wisdom. Now philo- 80 sophy teaches us the control of the belly and the

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. iii. 122, De Post. 104, De Agr. 137.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 578.

<sup>c</sup> For the tendency to prolong the study of the Encyclia beyond what Philo considered the proper time cf. De Ebr. 51.

<sup>d</sup> See App. p. 579.

PHILO

- τῶν μετὰ γαστέρα, ἐγκράτειαν δὲ καὶ γλώττης ἀναδιδάσκει. ταῦτα λέγεται μὲν εἶναι δι' αὐτὰ αἰρετά, σεμνότερα δὲ φαίνοιτ' ἄν, εἰ θεοῦ τιμῆς καὶ ἀρεσκείας ἕνεκα ἐπιτηδεύοιτο. μεμνησθαι οὖν δεῖ τῆς κυρίας, ὅποτε μέλλοιμεν αὐτῆς <τὰς> θεραπαινίδας μνάσθαι· καὶ λεγόμεθα μὲν ἄνδρες εἶναι τούτων, ὑπαρχέτω δ' ἡμῖν ἐκείνη πρὸς
- 81 ἀλήθειαν γυνή, μὴ λεγέσθω.
- [531] XV. | Δίδωσι δ' οὐκ εὐθύς εἰς τὴν Χανααίων γῆν ἀφικομένῳ, ἀλλὰ μετὰ δεκαετίαν τῆς ἐκεῖ διατριβῆς. τί δὲ τοῦτ' ἐστίν, οὐκ ἀμελῶς ἐπισκεπτέον· ἐν ἀρχῇ μὲν τῆς γενέσεως ἡμῶν ἡ ψυχὴ συντρόφοις τοῖς πάθεσι μόνοις χρῆται, λύπαις, ἀλγηδόσι, πτόαις, ἐπιθυμίαις, ἡδοναῖς, ἃ διὰ τῶν αἰσθήσεων ἐπ' αὐτὴν ἔρχεται, μήπω τοῦ λογισμοῦ βλέπειν δυναμένου τὰ τε ἀγαθὰ καὶ κακὰ καὶ ἣ διαφέρει ταῦτα ἀλλήλων ἀκριβοῦν, ἀλλ' ἔτι νυστάζοντος καὶ ὡς ἐν ὕπνῳ βαθεῖ καταμεμυκός.
- 82 χρόνου δὲ προϊόντος ὅταν ἐκβαίνοντες τῆς παιδικῆς ἡλικίας μειρακιούσθαι μέλλωμεν, τὸ δίδυμον στέλεχος εὐθύς ἐκ μιᾶς, ἀρετὴ καὶ κακία, φύεται ρίζης· καὶ ποιούμεθα μὲν τὴν κατάληψιν ἀμφοῖν, αἰρούμεθα δὲ πάντως τὴν ἑτέραν, οἱ μὲν εὐφυεῖς
- 83 ἀρετὴν, κακίαν δ' οἱ ἐναντίοι. τούτων προϋποτυπωθέντων εἰδέναι χρή, ὅτι παθῶν μὲν Αἴγυπτος σύμβολόν ἐστι, κακιῶν δὲ ἡ Χανααίων γῆ· ὥστ' εἰκότως ἀναστήσας ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου τὸν
- 84 λεὼν εἰς τὴν Χανααίων εἰσάγει χώραν. ἄνθρωπος γάρ, ὡς ἔφην, ἅμα μὲν τῇ γενέσει τὸ Αἰγύπτιον πάθος ἔλαχεν οἰκεῖν ἡδοναῖς καὶ ἀλγηδόσι προσερριζωμένος, αὐθις δ' ἀποικίαν στέλλεται τὴν πρὸς

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 80-84

parts below it, and control also of the tongue. Such powers of control are said to be desirable in themselves, but they will assume a grander and loftier aspect if practised for the honour and service of God. So when we are about to woo the handmaids we must remember the sovereign lady, and let us be called their husbands, but let her be not called but be in reality our true wife.

XV. Next Sarah gives Hagar to Abraham, not at 81 once after his arrival in the land of the Canaanites, but after he has stayed there for ten years. The meaning of this requires careful consideration. In the first stage of our coming into existence the soul is reared with none but passions to be its comrades, griefs, pains, excitements, desires, pleasures, all of which come to it through the senses, since the reason is not yet able to see good and evil and to form an accurate judgement of the difference between them, but is still slumbering, its eyes closed as if in deep sleep. But as time goes on, when we leave 82 the stage of boyhood and are adolescent, there springs from the single root the twofold stalk, virtue and vice, and we form an apprehension of both, but necessarily choose one or the other, the better-natured choosing virtue, the opposite kind vice.

Following on this preliminary sketch 83 we must know that Egypt symbolizes sense, and the land of the Canaanites vice, and thus it is natural that when Moses brings the people out of Egypt he should lead them into the country of the Canaanites. The man, as I have said, at his first coming into being 84 receives for his habitation Egyptian passion, and his roots are fixed in pleasures and pains; but after awhile he emigrates to a new home, vice. The κακίαν, ἤδη τοῦ λογισμοῦ πρὸς τὸ ὀξυώπεστερον ἐπιδεδωκότος καὶ καταλαμβάνοντος μὲν ἀμφότερα, ἀγαθὸν τε αὐτὸ καὶ κακόν, τὸ δὲ χεῖρον αἰρουμένου διὰ τὸ πολὺ μετέχειν τοῦ θνητοῦ, ὧς τὸ κακὸν οἰκείον, ἐπεὶ καὶ τούναντίον τῷ θείῳ, τὸ ἀγαθόν.

PHILO

85

XVI. ἀλλ' αἱ μὲν φύσει πατρίδες αὐται, παιδικῆς μὲν ἡλικίας τὸ πάθος, Αἴγυπτος, ἡβώσης δὲ κακία, ἡ Χαναανίτις. ὁ δὲ ἱερὸς λόγος, καίτοι σαφῶς ἐπιστάμενος τὰς τοῦ θνητοῦ γένους πατρίδας ἡμῶν, ὑποτίθεται τὰ πρακτέα καὶ συν-οῖσοντα παραγγέλλων μισεῖν τὰ ἔθνη καὶ τὰ νόμιμα
86 καὶ τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα αὐτῶν ἐν οἷς φησι· “ καὶ εἶπε κύριος πρὸς Μωυσῆν λέγων· λάλησον τοῖς υἱοῖς Ἰσραὴλ καὶ ἐρεῖς πρὸς αὐτούς· ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν· κατὰ τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα γῆς Αἰγύπτου, ἐν ἣ κατοικήσατε ἐπ' αὐτῆς, οὐ ποιήσετε· καὶ κατὰ τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα γῆς Χαναάν, εἰς ἣν ἐγὼ εἰσάγω ὑμᾶς ἐκεῖ, οὐ ποιήσετε· καὶ τοῖς νομίμοις αὐτῶν οὐ πορεύσεσθε· τὰ κρίματά μου ποιήσετε, καὶ τὰ προστάγματά μου φυλάξεσθε, πορεύεσθε ἐν αὐτοῖς· ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν. καὶ φυλάξεσθε πάντα τὰ προστάγματά μου καὶ τὰ κρίματά μου, καὶ ποιήσετε αὐτά. ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς·
87 ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεὸς ὑμῶν.” οὐκοῦν ἢ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ζωῇ περιπατοῦντός<sup>1</sup> ἐστὶν ἐν ταῖς τοῦ θεοῦ κρίσεσι
[532] καὶ προστάξεσιν, | ὥστε θάνατος ἂν εἴη τὰ τῶν ἀθέων ἐπιτηδεύματα. τίνα δὲ τὰ ἀθέων εἴρηται·

<sup>1</sup> MSS. περὶ παντός.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 84-87

reason has by this time advanced to a higher degree of vision, and while it apprehends both alternatives, good and evil, chooses the worst, because mortality is so large an ingredient in the reason, and evil is native to mortality as its opposite, good, is to the divine.

XVI. Now according to nature 85 these are the native-lands of the two ages : Egypt, that is passion, of the age of childhood ; Canaan, that is vice, of the age of adolescence. But the holy word, though it knows full well what are the native-lands of our mortal race, sets before us what we should do and what will be for our good, by bidding us hate the habits and the customs and the practices of those lands. It does so in the following words, " And the 86 Lord spake unto Moses, saying : ' Speak unto the sons of Israel, and thou shalt say unto them " I am the Lord your God. According to the practices of the land of Egypt, in which ye dwelt therein, ye shall not do ; and according unto the practices of the land of Canaan, into which I bring you there, you shall not do, and by their customs ye shall not walk. Ye shall do My judgements and ye shall keep My ordinances, walk in them. I am the Lord your God. And ye shall keep all My ordinances and My judgements, and ye shall do them. He that doeth them shall live in them. I am the Lord your God ' " (Lev. xviii. 1-5). So then the true life is the life of him 87 who walks in the judgements and ordinances of God, so that the practices of the godless must be death. And what the practices of the godless are we have been told. They are the practices of passion and

PHILO

τὰ πάθους καὶ κακιῶν ἐστίν,<sup>1</sup> ἐξ ὧν τὰ ἀσεβῶν καὶ ἀνοσιουργῶν<sup>2</sup> πλήθη φύεται.

88 Μετὰ δεκαετίαν οὖν τῆς πρὸς Χαναναίους μεταοικίας ἀξόμεθα τὴν Ἄγαρ, ἐπειδήπερ εὐθὺς μὲν γενόμενοι λογικοὶ τῆς φύσει βλαβεράς ἀμαθίας καὶ ἀπαιδευσίας μεταποιούμεθα, χρόνῳ δ' ὕστερον καὶ ἐν ἀριθμῷ τελείῳ, δεκάδι, νομίμου<sup>3</sup> παιδείας τῆς ὠφελεῖν δυναμένης εἰς ἐπιθυμίαν ἐρχόμεθα.

89 XVII. Τὸν δὲ περὶ δεκάδος λόγον ἐπιμελῶς μὲν ἠκρίβωσαν μουσικῶν παῖδες, ὕμνησε δὲ οὐ μετρίως ὁ ἱερώτατος Μωυσῆς, ἀναθεὶς αὐτῇ τὰ κάλλιστα, τὰς ἀρχάς,<sup>4</sup> τὰς ἀπαρχάς, τὰ τῶν ἱερέων ἐνδελεχῆ δῶρα, τὴν τοῦ Πάσχα διατήρησιν, τὸν ἰλασμόν, τὴν διὰ πεντηκονταετίας ἄφεσίν τε καὶ εἰς τὰς ἀρχαίας λήξεις ἐπάνοδον, τὴν κατασκευὴν τῆς ἀδιαλύτου σκηνῆς, ἄλλα μυρία, ὧν μακρὸν ἂν εἴη μεμνήσθαι.

90 τὰ δὲ καίρια οὐ παρετέον.<sup>5</sup> αὐτίκα τὸν Νῶε ἡμῖν—πρῶτος δ' οὗτος δίκαιος ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἀνερρήθη γραφαῖς—ἀπὸ τοῦ διαπλασθέντος ἐκ γῆς εἰσάγει δέκατον, οὐκ ἐνιαυτῶν πλήθος παραστήσαι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τινὰ δὲ ἀθεώρητα πάθους καὶ κακιῶν ἐστίν.—The text printed is my conjecture. Mangey retains the ms. text and translates, ignoring the neuter τινὰ, “quidam non perpendunt affectus et vitia.” Markland’s ἀτινα δὴ is an improvement, but still leaves ἀθεώρητα in the unnatural sense of “regardless of” (and therefore “practising”). Moreover, the words are quite pointless. With the correction the argument proceeds quite logically. The later part of the quotation tells us that he who does God’s ordinances will live. It follows that the practices of the godless are death. If you ask what are the practices of the godless, the first part of the text has told us (εἰρηται) that they are the practices of Egypt and Canaan, that is (see § 85) passion and vice. We might perhaps get even nearer to the mss. by omitting τὰ before ἀθέων.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 87-90

vices, from which spring the many multitudes of the impious and the workers of unholiness.

So then ten years after our migration to the 88 Canaanites we shall wed Hagar, since as soon as we have become reasoning beings we take to ourselves the ignorance and indiscipline whose nature is so mischievous<sup>a</sup> and only after a time and under the perfect number ten do we reach the desire for the lawful discipline which can profit us.

XVII. Now the lore of the decad has been care- 89 fully discussed in detail in the schools of the musicians, and is extolled in no ordinary degree by the holiest of men, Moses, who connects with it things of special excellence, governments, the first-fruits, the recurrent gifts of the priests, the observation of the passover, the atonement, the liberation and return to the old possessions in the fiftieth year, the furnishing of the permanent tabernacle, and others without number. These it would take too long to mention, but crucial examples must not be omitted.

For instance, he represents Noah, the first man re- 90 corded as just in holy scriptures, as the tenth descendant from the man who was moulded from the earth; and in doing so he does not wish to set before

<sup>a</sup> Or perhaps "the natural (and harmful) ignorance," which, though a less obvious way of taking the words, agrees better with the thought that ignorance is the παρῆς of the man.

---

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps read ἀνοσιῶν ἔργων; general practices are the progenitors of particular deeds.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. νομίμω (-ως).

<sup>4</sup> So one MS.: the rest εὐχὰς, which Mangey preferred, but see beginning of § 92, and the thought of ἀρχὰς recurs in § 110.

<sup>5</sup> MSS. παρεατέον or παριτέον.

PHILO

- βουλόμενος, ἀλλὰ διδάξει σαφῶς, ὅτι ὡσπερ δεκάς ἀριθμῶν τῶν ἀπὸ μονάδος ἐστὶ πέρασ τελειότατον, οὕτω τὸ δίκαιον ἐν ψυχῇ τέλειον καὶ πέρασ ὄντως
- 91 τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πράξεων. τὴν μὲν γὰρ πολλαπλασιαζομένην ἐφ' ἑαυτὴν τριάδα πρὸς ἐνάτου γένεσιν ἀριθμοῦ πολεμιωτάτην ἐξείπον οἱ χρησιμοί, τὴν δὲ ἐπιβεβηκυῖαν μονάδα πρὸς ἐκπλή-
- 92 ρωσιν δεκάδος ὡς φίλην ἀπεδέξαντο. σημεῖον δέ τὰς ἐννέα τῶν βασιλέων ἀρχάς, ἠνίκα ἡ ἐμφύλιος ἀνερριπίσθη στάσις, τῶν τεττάρων παθῶν πρὸς τὰς πέντε αἰσθήσεις κονισαμένων καὶ πόρθησιν καὶ κατασκαφὴν κινδυνευούσης τρόπον πόλεως τῆς ὄλης<sup>1</sup> ἀναδέχεσθαι ψυχῆς, ἐκστρατεύσας ὁ σοφὸς
- 93 Ἀβραὰμ κατέλυσε δέκατος ἐπιφανείς. οὗτος ἀντὶ χειμῶνος γαλήνην καὶ ὑγίαν ἀντὶ νόσου καὶ ζωῆν, εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, ἀντὶ θανάτου παρεσκεύασε, τοῦ νικηφόρου θεοῦ τροπαιοφόρον αὐτὸν ἀναδείξαντος, ᾧ καὶ τὰς δεκάτας χαριστήρια τῆς νίκης
- 94 ἀνατίθησι. καὶ παντὸς μέντοι τοῦ ἐλθόντος “ ὑπὸ τὴν ράβδον,” λέγω δὲ τὴν παιδείαν, ἡμέρου καὶ τιθασοῦ θρέμματος τὸ δέκατον ἀποκρίνεται, νόμου προστάξει γινόμενον “ ἅγιον,” ἵν' ἐκ πολλῶν διδασκώμεθα τὴν δεκάδος πρὸς θεὸν οἰκειότητα καὶ τὴν τοῦ ἐννέα ἀριθμοῦ πρὸς τὸ
- 95 θνητὸν ἡμῶν γένος. XVIII. ἀλλὰ γὰρ [533] οὐκ ἀπὸ ζώων | μόνον ἀπάρχεσθαι δεκάτας, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ὅσα ἐκ γῆς βλαστάνει διείρηται. “ πᾶσα ” γὰρ φησι “ δεκάτη τῆς γῆς ἀπὸ τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. αὐλῆς: Wend. conjectures ἀλούσης.

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 59. Here the phrase seems to be used of the animal or unreasoning nature, ignoring the mind. For the “city” of the story is Sodom, which is a “soul blind of us any particular number of years, but to shew us clearly that, just as ten is the end of the numbers which start from one and most perfect, so justice in the soul is perfect and the true end of our life's actions.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 90-95

For when three is multiplied by 91 itself and thus produces the number nine, the oracles pronounce it to be a number of great hostility, while the added one which completes the ten they approve of as friendly. This is shewn in the incident of 92 Abraham and the nine kings. When the civil war burst into flames, and the four passions prepared for combat with the five senses, when the whole soul<sup>a</sup> was on the point to suffer sacking and razing like a city, wise Abraham took the field, and appearing as the tenth, made an end of all nine governments (Gen. xiv.). He provided calm in the place of storm, health for 93 sickness, and life we may truly say for death, being declared the winner of the trophies by God the victory-giver, to whom too he dedicated the tenths as thank-offerings for his victory (Gen. xiv. 20).

Further, everything that comes "under the rod," the 94 rod of discipline,<sup>b</sup> that is every tame and docile creature, has a tenth set apart from it which by the ordinance of the law becomes "holy" (Lev. xxvii. 32), that so through many reminders we may learn the close connexion of ten with God and of nine with our mortal race.

XVIII. But indeed it is 95 commanded to offer tenths as first-fruits, not only from animals, but from all that springs from the earth. "Every tenth of the earth," it says, "from the seed reason" (§ 109). Wendland's ἀλούσης (agreeing with πάλως) may be right.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Leg. All. iii. 89 f., De Post. 97. For ten as the number of παιδεία cf. note on De Sac. 122.

PHILO

σπέρματος καὶ τοῦ καρποῦ τοῦ ξυλίνου ἐστὶν ἅγιον τῷ κυρίῳ· καὶ πᾶσα δεκάτη βοῶν καὶ προβάτων, καὶ πᾶν ὃ ἂν διέλθῃ ἐν τῷ ἀριθμῷ ὑπὸ τὴν ῥάβδον, 96 τὸ δέκατον ἔσται ἅγιον τῷ κυρίῳ.” ὄρας, ὅτι καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ περὶ ἡμᾶς ὄγκου σωματικοῦ, ὃς γεώδης καὶ ξύλινος ὄντως ἐστίν, οἶεται δεῖν ἀπάρχεσθαι; ἡ γὰρ ζωὴ καὶ διαμονὴ καὶ αὐξήσις καὶ ὑγίεια αὐτῷ θεία γίνεται χάριτι. ὄρας δ’ ὅτι καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ζῶων ἀλόγων—ταῦτα δ’ εἰσὶν αἰσθήσεις—πάλιν ἀπάρχεσθαι διείρηται; τὸ γὰρ ὄραν καὶ ἀκούειν καὶ ὀσφραίνεσθαι καὶ γεύεσθαι, ἔτι δὲ ἄπτεσθαι δωρεαὶ θεῖαι, ὑπὲρ ὧν εὐχαριστητέον.

97 ἀλλὰ γὰρ οὐ μόνον ἐπὶ τοῖς ξυλίνοις καὶ γήινοις σώματος ὄγκοις<sup>1</sup> οὐδ’ ἐπ’ ἀλόγοις ζώοις, ταῖς αἰσθήσεσι, τὸν εὐεργέτην ἐπαινεῖν διδασκόμεθα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ νῷ, ὃς κυρίως εἰπεῖν ἀνθρώπος ἐστὶν ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ, κρείττων ἐν χείροσι καὶ ἀθάνατος ἐν θνητῷ.

98 διὰ τοῦτο οἶμαι τὰ πρωτότοκα καθιέρωσε πάντα, τὴν δεκάτην, λέγω Λευιτικὴν φυλὴν, ἀντικαταλλαξάμενος πρὸς διατήρησιν καὶ φυλακὴν ὁσιότητος καὶ εὐσεβείας καὶ λειτουργιῶν, αἱ πρὸς τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ τιμὴν ἀναφέρονται. τὸ γὰρ πρῶτον καὶ ἄριστον ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ὁ λογισμὸς ἐστὶ, καὶ ἄξιον τὰς συνέσεως καὶ ἀγχυνοίας καταλήψεώς τε καὶ φρονήσεως καὶ τῶν ἄλλων δυνάμεων, ὅσαι περὶ αὐτόν εἰσι, ἀπαρχὰς ἀνατιθέναι θεῷ τῷ τὴν εὐφορίαν τοῦ διανοεῖσθαι 99 παρασχόντι. ἐνθένδε ὁ μὲν ἀσκητικὸς ὄρμηθεις εὐχόμενος εἶπε· “ πάντων ὧν ἂν μοι δῶς, δεκάτην ἀποδεκατώσω σοί,” ὁ δὲ χρησμὸς ὁ μετὰ τὰς ἐπινικίους εὐχὰς ἀναγραφείς, ἃς ὁ τὴν αὐτομαθῆ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. σωματικοῖς.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 95-99

and from the fruit of wood, and every tenth of oxen and sheep, and everything that passes through in the number under the rod the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord" (Lev. xxvii. 30, 32). Observe that he thinks 96 that first-fruits are due from our body, the cumbersome mass which is indeed of earth and of wood. For its life and survival, growth and health, come to it by the grace of God. Note too that we are also bidden to give first-fruits of the unreasoning creatures within us, the senses, for sight and hearing and smell and taste and touch also are gifts of God for which we must give thanks.

Yet not only for the 97 wooden and earthen mass of the body, not only for the unreasoning creatures, the senses, are we taught to praise the Benefactor, but also for the mind which may be truly called the man within the man, the better part within the worse, the immortal within the mortal. This is why, I believe, He sanctified all the 98 first-born, and took as their ransom the tenth, that is the tribe of Levi, that they should observe and maintain holiness and piety and the rites which are offered for the honour of God. For the first and best thing in us is the reason, and it is only right that from its intelligence, its shrewdness, its apprehension, its prudence and the other qualities which belong to it, we should offer first-fruits to God, who gave to it its fertility of thinking. It was this feeling which 99 prompted the Man of Practice when he vowed thus, 'Of all that thou givest me, I will give a tenth to thee' (Gen. xxviii. 22); which prompted the oracle that follows the blessing given to the victor by Melchisedek the holder of that priesthood, whose

PHILO

- καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον λαχὼν ἱερωσύνην ποιεῖται Μελχισεδέκ, “ ἔδωκε γὰρ αὐτῷ ” φησὶν “ δεκάτην ἀπὸ πάντων,” ἀπὸ τῶν κατ’ αἴσθησιν τὸ καλῶς αἰσθάνε-σθαι, ἀπὸ τῶν κατὰ λόγον τὸ εὖ λέγειν, ἀπὸ τῶν
- 100 κατὰ νοῦν τὸ εὖ διανοεῖσθαι. παγκάλως
 οὖν καὶ ἀναγκαίως ἅμα ἐν εἴδει παραδιηγήματος, ἡνίκα τῆς οὐρανοῦ καὶ θείας τροφῆς τὸ μνημεῖον ἐν στάμνῳ χρυσῷ καθιεροῦτο, φησὶν ὡς ἄρα “ τὸ γομὸρ τὸ δέκατον τῶν τριῶν μέτρων ἦν.” ἐν ἡμῖν γὰρ αὐτοῖς τρία μέτρα εἶναι δοκεῖ, αἴσθησις, λόγος, νοῦς· αἰσθητῶν μὲν αἴσθησις, ὀνομάτων δὲ καὶ ῥημάτων καὶ τῶν λεγομένων ὁ λόγος, νοητῶν δὲ
- 101 νοῦς. ἀφ’ ἐκάστου δὴ τῶν τριῶν μέτρων τούτων ἀπαρκτέον ὡσπερ τινὰ ἱερὰν δεκάτην, ἵνα καὶ τὸ λέγειν καὶ τὸ αἰσθάνεσθαι καὶ τὸ καταλαμβάνειν ἀνυπαίτιως καὶ ὑγιεινῶς κατὰ θεὸν ἐξετάζηται· τὸ
- [534] γὰρ ἀληθινὸν καὶ | δίκαιον μέτρον τοῦτ’ ἐστὶ, τὰ δὲ 102 καθ’ ἡμᾶς ψευδῆ τε καὶ ἄδικα. XIX. εἰκότως οὖν καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν θυσιῶν τὸ μὲν δέκατον τοῦ μέτρον τῆς σεμιδάλεως τοῖς ἱερείοις ἐπὶ τὸν βωμὸν συναν-ενεχθήσεται, ὁ δὲ ἕνατος ἀριθμὸς, τὸ λείψανον τοῦ δεκάτου, παρ’ ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς παραμενεῖ.
- 103 τούτοις συνάδει καὶ ἡ τῶν ἱερέων ἐνδελεχῆς θυσία· τὸ γὰρ δέκατον τὸ τοῦ οἴφι σεμιδάλεως αἰεὶ δι-είρηται προσφέρειν αὐτοῖς. ἔμαθον γὰρ τὸν ἕνατον ὑπερβαίνοντες αἰσθητὸν δοκῆσαι θεὸν τὸν δέκατον καὶ μόνον ὄντα ἀψευδῶς προσκυνεῖν. ἐννέα γὰρ ὁ κόσμος ἔλαχε μοίρας, ἐν οὐρανῷ μὲν ὀκτώ, τὴν τε ἀπλανῆ καὶ ἑπτὰ τὰς πεπλατηγημένας ἐν τάξεσι

<sup>a</sup> Or “Him who is tenth and alone truly exists”; or “Him who is truly tenth and alone” (cf. § 10), referring to the mystical identity of the Ten and the One.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 99-104

tradition he had learned from none other but himself. For "he gave him," it runs, "a tenth from all" (Gen. xiv. 20); from the things of sense, right use of sense; from the things of speech, good speaking; from the things of thought, good thinking.

Admirable then, and demanded by the facts, are the 100 words added as a sort of side utterance, when while telling us how the memorial of the divine and heaven-sent food was enshrined in a golden jar he continues, "the omer was the tenth part of three measures" (Ex. xvi. 36). For we seem to contain three measures, sense, speech, mind; sense measuring the objects of sense, speech the parts of speech and what we say, and mind the things of mind. Of each of these three 101 measures we must offer as it were a holy tenth, that speech, sense perception and apprehension may be judged soundly and blamelessly according to God's standard, for this is the true and just measure, while our measures are false and unjust. XIX. So too it 102 is only natural that in the matter of sacrifices the tenths of the measure of fine flour should be brought with the victims to the altar (Ex. xxix. 40), while the numbers up to nine, what is left by the tenth, remain with ourselves.

And the recurrent oblation of the priests is in agreement with this; they 103 are commanded to offer always the tenth of the ephah of fine flour (Lev. vi. 20), for they have learned to rise above the ninth, the seeming deity, the world of sense, and to worship Him who is in very truth God, who stands alone as the tenth.<sup>a</sup> For to the 104 world belong nine parts, eight in heaven, one of the stars which wander not and seven of those that wander, though the order of their wandering is ever

PHILO

φερομένας ταῖς αὐταῖς, ἐνάτην δὲ γῆν σὺν<sup>1</sup> ὕδατι
καὶ ἀέρι· τούτων γὰρ μία συγγένεια τροπᾶς καὶ 105 μεταβολᾶς παντοίας δεχομένων. οἱ μὲν οὖν πολλοὶ τὰς ἐννέα ταύτας μοίρας καὶ τὸν παγέντα κόσμον ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐτίμησαν, ὁ δὲ τέλειος τὸν ὑπεράνω τῶν ἐννέα, δημιουργὸν αὐτῶν, δέκατον θεὸν· ὅλον γὰρ ὑπερκύψας τὸ ἔργον ἐπόθει τὸν τεχνίτην, καὶ ικέτης καὶ θεραπευτῆς ἐσπούδαζεν αὐτοῦ γενέσθαι.
διὰ τοῦτο δεκάτην ἐνδεδελεχῆ τῷ δεκάτῳ καὶ μόνῳ 106 καὶ αἰωνίῳ ὁ ἱερεὺς ἀνατίθησι. τοῦτ' ἐστὶ κυρίως εἰπεῖν τῷ ψυχικὸν Πάσχα, ἢ <ἀπὸ> παντὸς πάθους καὶ παντὸς αἰσθητοῦ διάβασις πρὸς τὸ δέκατον, ὃ δὴ νοητὸν ἐστὶ καὶ θείον· λέγεται γάρ· “δεκάτῃ τοῦ μηνὸς τούτου λαβέτωσαν ἕκα-στος πρόβατον κατ’ οἰκίαν,” ἵνα ἀπὸ τῆς δεκάτης τῷ δεκάτῳ καθιερωθῆ τὰ θύματα διατηρηθέντα ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ κατὰ δύο μοίρας ἐκ τριῶν πεφωτισμένη, μέχρις ἂν ὅλη δι’ ὅλων γενομένη φέγγος οὐράνιον, οἷα πλησιφαῆς σελήνη κατὰ δευτέρας ἑβδομάδος παραύξησιν, μὴ μόνον φυλάττειν ἀλλὰ καὶ ἱερουργεῖν ἤδη δύνηται τὰς ἀσινεῖς καὶ ἀμώμους προ-107 κοπᾶς. τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ἰλασμός<sup>2</sup>—καὶ γὰρ οὗτος δεκάτῃ τοῦ μηνὸς βεβαιοῦται, τὸν δέκατον ἰκετευούσης θεὸν ψυχῆς καὶ τὴν ταπεινότητα καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὴν σὺν (ἐν).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἰλασμούς.

<sup>a</sup> The imperfects are difficult. The translation suggests that though “gnomic” like the aorist ἐτίμησαν, and not referring specially to the past, they differ from the aorist in expressing continuity. Cf. Quis Rerum 17.

<sup>b</sup> The thought of the section is that the sheep taken on the tenth day, when the moon is two thirds on its way to fullness, is an allegory of a soul which has reached a certain stage of the same, while earth with water and air make the ninth, for the three form a single family, subject to changes and transformations of every kind. Now 105 the mass of men pay honour to these nine parts and to the world which is formed from them, but he that has reached perfection honours Him that is above the nine, even their maker God, who is the tenth. For he continues to soar above all the artificer's work and desire<sup>a</sup> the artificer Himself, ever eager to be His suppliant and servant. That is why the priest offers recurrently a tenth to Him who is tenth and alone and eternal.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 104-107

We find this "ten" plainly 106 stated in the story of the soul's passover, the crossing from every passion and all the realm of sense to the tenth, which is the realm of mind and of God; for we read "on the tenth day of this month let everyone take a sheep for his house" (Ex. xii. 3), and thus beginning with the tenth day we shall sanctify to Him that is tenth the offering fostered in the soul whose face has been illumined through two parts out of three, until its whole being becomes a brightness, giving light to the heaven like a full moon by its increase in the second week. And thus it will be able not only to keep safe, but to offer as innocent and spotless victims its advances on the path of progress.<sup>b</sup>

We find the same in the pro- 107 pitiation which is established on the tenth day of the month (Lev. xxiii. 27), when the soul is suppliant to God the tenth, and is schooled to know the humilia-progress and preserves (or increases?) it till it reaches its consummation, when it offers itself to God. For the connexion of the sheep with moral progress cf. De Sac. 112 προκοπήs δὲ πρόβατον, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸ δηλοῖ τοῦνομα (derived from προβαίνω) σύμβολον. φωτισμός and παραύξησηs are the regular terms for the "lighting up" and increasing of the moon.

- οὐδένεϊαν τοῦ γενητοῦ περίνοια<sup>1</sup> λογισμοῦ πεποιθυίας καὶ τὰς ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς καλοῖς ὑπερβολὰς καὶ ἀκρότητας τοῦ ἀγενήτου δεδιδραγμένης. Ἰλεως οὖν καὶ ἄνευ ἱκετείας Ἰλεως εὐθύς γίνεται τοῖς ἑαυτοὺς 108 οἰήσει φυσωμένοις. τοῦτ' ἐστὶν ἄφεις, τοῦτ' ἐλευθερία παντελῆς ψυχῆς ὃν ἐπλανήθη τε πλάνον ἀποσειομένης καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἀπλανῆ φύσιν μεθορμιζομένης καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς κλήρους ἐπανιούσης, [535] οὗς ἔλαχεν, ἥνικα λαμπρὸν | ἔπνει καὶ τοὺς περὶ τῶν καλῶν πόνους ἤθλει.<sup>2</sup> τότε γὰρ αὐτὴν τῶν ἀθλῶν ἀγάμενος ὁ ἱερός λόγος ἐτίμησε, γέρας ἐξαίρετον δούς, κλῆρον ἀθάνατον, τὴν ἐν ἀφθάρτῳ 109 γένει τάξιν. τοῦτο καὶ Ἀβραάμ ὁ σοφός ἱκετεύει, μελλούσης ἐμπίπρασθαι λόγῳ μὲν τῆς Σοδομίτιδος γῆς, ἔργῳ δὲ τῆς ἐστειρωμένης τὰ καλὰ καὶ τυφλῆς τὸν λογισμὸν ψυχῆς, ἢ, ἐὰν εὐρεθῆ τὸ δικαιοσύνης μνημείον, ἢ δεκάς, ἐν αὐτῇ, τύχη τινὸς ἀμνηστίας· ἄρχεται μὲν οὖν τῆς ἱκεσίας ἀπὸ τοῦ τῆς ἀφέσεως ἀριθμοῦ, πεντηκοντάδος, λήγει δὲ εἰς δεκάδα, τὴν τελευταίαν ἀπολύτρωσιν.
 110 XX. ἀφ' οὗ μοι δοκεῖ καὶ Μωυσῆς μετὰ τὴν χιλιάρχων καὶ ἑκατοντάρχων καὶ πεντη-κοντάρχων αἴρεσιν ἐπὶ πᾶσι δεκαδάρχους χειροτονεῖν, ἢ, εἰ μὴ δύναιτο διὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων τάξεων βελτιοῦσθαι ὁ νοῦς, ἀλλὰ τοι διὰ τῶν

<sup>1</sup> mss. περινοίαν (-as): Mangey adopted περινοία, but took it as "having learnt by sagacity of reason the nothingness," etc., a sense which πεποιθυίας cannot, I think, bear. The translation given above is just grammatical, but awkward in the extreme. For conjectures see Appendix, p. 579.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἤνθει.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 107-110

tion and nothingness of its trust in the sagacity of a created reason, and how transcendent and supreme is the Uncreated in all that is good. And so He becomes propitious, and propitious even at once without their supplication, to those who afflict and belittle themselves and are not puffed up by vaunting and self-pride.

We find it in the "release" (Lev. xxv. 9 ff.), in the perfect freedom of soul which shakes off the wandering of its past and finds a new harbour in the nature which wanders not, and returns to the heritages which it received in the years when the breath of its spirit was fresh and strong, and travail which has the good for its prize exercised its energy. For then the holy word, in admiration of its efforts, honoured it, and gave it a special guerdon, an undying heritage, its place in the order of the imperishable.

We find it in the suppliant prayer of wise Abraham, who when fire was about to consume what is called the land of Sodom, but is in reality a soul barren of good and blind of reason, prayed that if there should be found in it that token of righteousness, the ten, it might receive some remission of punishment (Gen. xviii. 32). He begins indeed his supplication with fifty, the number of release, but ends with ten, which closes the possibility of redemption.

XX. It is on the same principle, as it seems to me, that Moses, after choosing rulers of thousands and hundreds and fifties, appointed rulers of tens last of all (Ex. xviii. 25), so that if the mind could not be bettered through the work of the senior ranks, it might get purification through the hindermost.

institution of the Jubilee year, Philo refers to its proclamation on the 10th day of the month.

- 111 ὑστάτων καθαίρηται. πάγκαλον δὲ δόγμα καὶ ὁ τοῦ φιλομαθοῦς παῖς ἔμαθεν, ἥνικα τὴν θαυμαστὴν ἐκείνην ἐπρέσβευε πρεσβείαν, αὐτομαθεὶ σοφῶ προξενῶν οἰκειοτάτην ἀρετὴν, ἐπίμονήν. “δέκα γὰρ καμήλους λαμβάνει,” τὴν δεκάδος, λέγω δὲ παιδείας ὀρθῆς, ἀνάμνησιν, ἀπὸ πολλῶν
- 112 ἀπείρων μὲν οὖν τοῦ κυρίου μνημῶν. λαμβάνει δὲ καὶ “τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐκείνου” δῆλον ὡς οὐκ ἄργυρον οὐδὲ χρυσὸν ἢ τινα ἄλλα τῶν ἐν ὕλαις φθαρταῖς—τὴν γὰρ ἀγαθοῦ πρόσρησιν οὐδέποτε τούτοις ἐπέφημισε Μωυσῆς,—ἀλλὰ τὰ γνήσια, ἃ δὴ ψυχῆς ἐστὶ μόνα, ἐφοδιάζεται καὶ ἐμπορεύεται, διδασκαλίαν, προκοπὴν, σπουδὴν, πόθον, ζῆλον, ἐνθουσιασμούς, προφητείας, τοῦ κατορθοῦν ἔρωτα· οἷς ἐμμελετῶν καὶ ἐνασκούμενος, ὅταν ὥσπερ ἐκ πελάγους ἐνορμίζεσθαι λιμένι μέλλῃ, λήψεται δύο μὲν ἐνώτια, ἀνὰ δραχμὴν ὀλκὴν, ψέλια δὲ δέκα χρυσῶν ἐπὶ τὰς χεῖρας τῆς προξενουμένης. ὡ θεοπρεποῦς κόσμου, δραχμὴν μίαν<sup>1</sup> εἶναι τὸ ἄκουσμα καὶ μονάδα ἀρραγῆ καὶ ὀλκὸν φύσει—ἀκοὴν γὰρ οὐδενὶ σχολάζειν ἐμπρεπές, ὅτι μὴ λόγῳ ἐνί, ὅς ἂν τὰς τοῦ ἐνὸς ἀρετὰς καὶ μόνου θεοῦ καλῶς διεξέρχεται,—δέκα δὲ χρυσῶν τὰ ἐγχειρήματα· πράξεις γὰρ αἱ κατὰ σοφίαν τελείους ἀριθμοῖς βεβαιοῦνται, καὶ ἔστιν ἐκάστη τιμιωτέρα χρυσοῦ.
- 114 XXI. τοιαύτη τίς ἐστὶ καὶ ἡ ἀριστίνδην ἐπικριθεῖσα τῶν ἀρχόντων εἰσφορά, ἣν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μὲν: perhaps, as Wendland conjectures, μὲν μίαν.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 111-114

And that is the high truth, too, which 111 the servant of the lover of learning had mastered when he went as ambassador on that splendid errand, wooing for the man of self-taught wisdom the bride most suited to him, constancy (Gen. xxiv. 10) ; for out of the many or rather countless memories of his lord, he takes "ten camels," that is the "reminding"<sup>a</sup> which right instruction figured by the ten produces.
He takes too of "his goods," clearly meaning not 112 gold or silver or any others which are found in perishable materials, for Moses never gave the name of good to these ; but genuine goods, which are soul-goods only, he takes for his journey's provisions and his trading wares,—teaching, progress, earnestness, longing, ardour, inspiration, prophecy, and the love of high achievement. By practice and exercising him- 113 self in these, when the time comes for him to leave the seas, so to speak, and anchor in harbour, we shall find that he takes two ear-rings, drawing a weight<sup>b</sup> of a drachma, and bracelets of ten weights of gold for the hands of the bride, whom he courts for his master (Gen. xxiv. 22). Truly a glorious adorning, first that the thing heard should be a single drachma, a unit without fractions whose nature is to draw, for it is not well that hearing should devote itself to aught save one story only, a story which tells in noble words the excellences of the one and only God ; secondly, that the undertakings of the hands should be of ten weights of gold, for the actions of wisdom rest firmly on perfect numbers and each of them is more precious than gold. XXI. Such too is that 114 tribute of the princes, chosen as the best that they

<sup>a</sup> For the symbolism of camels = memory, and Philo's reasons for it, cf. De Post. 148 f.

<sup>b</sup> For the play on ὀλκή, ὀλκός, see De Mig. 202.

PHILO

ἐποίησαντο, ἥνίκα ἡ ψυχὴ κατασκευασθεῖσα ὑπὸ φιλοσοφίας ἱεροπρεπῶς τὰ ἐγκαίνια ἤγεν αὐτῆς εὐχαριστοῦσα τῷ διδασκάλῳ καὶ ὑφηγητῇ θεῷ. “θυῖσκη γὰρ δέκα χρυσῶν πλήρη θυμιάματος ἀνατίθηναι,” ἵνα τὰς ὑπὸ φρονήσεως καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς ἀναδιδομένας αὔρας ὁ μόνος ἐπικρίνη σοφός.

115 ἔπειδὰν δὲ δόξωσιν εἶναι προσηνεῖς, τὸ ἐφύμιον |
[536] ἄσεται Μωυσῆς λέγων· “ὡσφρανθῆ κύριος ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας,” τὸ ὁσφρανθῆναι τιθεὶς ἐπὶ τοῦ συναινεσαι· οὐ γὰρ ἀνθρωπόμορφος οὐδὲ μυκτῆρων ἢ τινων ἄλλων ὀργανικῶν μερῶν χρεῖος.

116 προῖων δὲ καὶ τὸ θεῖον ἐνδιαίτημα, τὴν σκηνὴν, “δέκα αὐλαίας” ἐρεῖ· τὸ γὰρ τῆς ὅλης πηγμα σοφίας ἀριθμὸν τέλειον εἶληχε, δεκάδα· σοφία δὲ αὐλή καὶ βασιλείον ἐστι τοῦ πανηγεμόνος καὶ

117 μόνου βασιλέως αὐτοκράτορος. ὁ μὲν δὴ νοητὸς οἶκος οὗτος, αἰσθητὸς δ’ ὁ κόσμος ἐστίν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰς αὐλαίας ἐκ τοιούτων συνύφηεν, ἃ τῶν τεττάρων στοιχείων σύμβολά ἐστιν· ἐκ γὰρ βύσσου καὶ ὑακίνθου καὶ πορφύρας καὶ κοκκίνου δημιουργοῦνται, τεττάρων, ὡς ἔφην, ἀριθμῷ.<sup>1</sup> σύμβολον δὲ γῆς μὲν ἡ βύσσοσ—φύεται γὰρ ἐκ ταύτης,—ἀέρος δὲ ὁ ὑακίνθος—μέλας γὰρ οὗτος φύσει,—ὔδατος δὲ ἡ πορφύρα—τὸ γὰρ τῆς βαφῆς αἴτιον ἐκ

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey: mss. and Wendland ἀριθμῶν.

<sup>a</sup> Or “chosen (by God) in virtue of the princes’ special rank or merit”; cf. Plato, Legg. 855 c τὸ τῶν περυσινῶν ἀρχόντων ἀριστίνδην ἀπομερισθὲν δικαστήριον. Mangey’s translation, “per optimates viritim facta collatio,” gives no adequate sense to ἀριστίνδην.

<sup>b</sup> There is an obvious play on αὐλή and αὐλαίας which cannot be reproduced in English.

<sup>c</sup> Or “the adornment (i.e. the curtains) is perceived by

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 114-117

had,<sup>a</sup> which they offered when the soul, equipped by the love of wisdom, celebrated its dedication in right holy fashion, giving thanks to the God who was its teacher and guide. For the worshipper offers "a censer of ten gold weights, full of incense" (Num. vii. 14, 20, etc.), that God who alone is wise might choose the perfumes exhaled by wisdom and every virtue. And when these perfumes are pleasant in 115 His judgement, Moses will celebrate them in a hymn of triumph in the words "The Lord smelt a scent of sweet fragrance" (Gen. viii. 21). Here he uses smell in the sense of accept, for God is not of human form, nor has need of nostrils or any other parts as organs.

And further on he will speak of 116 God's dwelling-place, the tabernacle, as being "ten curtains" (Ex. xxvi. 1), for to the structure which includes the whole of wisdom the perfect number ten belongs, and wisdom is the court<sup>b</sup> and palace of the All-ruler, the sole Monarch, the Sovereign Lord. This dwelling is a house perceived by the mind, yet 117 it is also the world of our senses,<sup>c</sup> since he makes the curtains to be woven from such materials as are symbolical of the four elements; for they are wrought of fine linen, of dark red,<sup>d</sup> of purple and of scarlet, four in number as I said. The linen is a symbol of earth, since it grows out of earth; the dark red of air, which is naturally black; the purple of water, since the means by which the dye is produced, the shell-fish sense." The translation above is given in the belief that the thought is something less obvious. Philo finding the tabernacle apparently identified with the curtains (ποιήσεις σκηνην δέκα αύλαίας) infers the mystical identity of the two worlds, cf. De Mig. 205. But it is difficult to extract this sense from the words as they stand. Perhaps read αισθητός δέ και κόσμος.<sup>d</sup> Or "dark blue."

PHILO

- θαλάττης, ἡ ὁμωνυμοῦσα κόγχη,—πυρὸς δὲ τὸ κόκκινον· ἐμφερέστατον γὰρ φλογί.
- 118 πάλιν γε μὴν Αἴγυπτον ἀφηγιάσασαν, ἡνίκα τὸν ἀντίθεον<sup>1</sup> ἀπεσέμνυνε νοῦν τὰ παράσημα τῆς βασιλείας ἀναδοῦσα αὐτῷ, τὸν θρόνον, τὸ σκῆπτρον, τὸ διάδημα, δέκα πληγαῖς καὶ τιμωρίαις ὁ τῶν ὄλων
- 119 ἐπίτροπος καὶ κηδεμῶν νουθετεῖ. τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τρόπον καὶ Ἀβραὰμ ὑπισχνεῖται τῷ σοφῷ οὔτε πλειόνων οὔτε ἐλαττόνων, ἀλλὰ αὐτὸ μόνον δέκα ἐθνῶν ἀπώλειαν καὶ παντελεῖ φθορὰν ἐργάσασθαι καὶ τὴν τῶν ἀναιρεθέντων χώραν δώσειν τοῖς ἐγγόνοις αὐτοῦ, πανταχοῦ δεκάδι καὶ πρὸς ἔπαινον καὶ πρὸς ψόγον καὶ πρὸς τιμὴν καὶ πρὸς κόλασιν καταχρηῆσθαι δικαίων.
- 120 καίτοι τί τούτων μεμνήμεθα; τὴν γὰρ ἱερὰν καὶ θείαν νομοθεσίαν<sup>2</sup> δέκα τοῖς σύμπασι λόγοις Μωυσῆς ἀναέγραφεν· οὗτοι δὲ εἰσι θεσμοί, τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἀπείρων νόμων γενικὰ κεφάλαια, ρίζαι καὶ ἀρχαὶ <καὶ> πηγαὶ ἀέναοι διαταγμάτων προστάξεις καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεις περιεχόντων ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ
- 121 τῶν χρωμένων. XXII. εἰκότως οὖν μετὰ δεκαετίαν τῆς εἰς Χαναναίων γῆν<sup>3</sup> ἀφίξεως ἢ πρὸς τὴν Ἄγαρ κοινωνία γίνεται· οὐ γὰρ εὐθύς λογικοὶ γενόμενοι πλαδῶσης ἔτι τῆς διανοίας ὀρεχθῆναι παιδείας τῆς ἐγκυκλίου δυνάμεθα, ἀλλ' ἐπειδὰν σύνεσιν καὶ ἀγχίνουσαν κραταιωσάμενοι μηκέτι κούφη καὶ ἐπιπολαίω, ἀλλὰ βεβαίᾳ καὶ παγίᾳ γνώμῃ περὶ ἀπάντων χρώμεθα.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀντίθετον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐκκλησίαν — a very drastic alteration, for which, however, there seems no alternative; unless indeed we substituted ἀναεδίδαχεν for ἀναέγραφεν. But the congregation though often called "holy" could hardly be called "divine."

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 117-121

which bears the same name, comes from the sea ; and the scarlet of fire, since it closely resembles flame. Again rebellious Egypt, when it 118 glorified the mind which usurps the place of God, and bestowed on it the emblems of sovereignty, the throne, the sceptre, the diadem, is admonished through ten plagues and punishments by the Guardian and Ruler of all.

In the same way He promises 119 to wise Abraham that He will work the ruin and complete destruction of just ten nations, neither more nor less, and will give the land of the victims to his descendants (Gen. xv. 18-20). Thus everywhere he thinks well to extend the meaning of the ten, to cover both praise and blame, honour and chastisement.

But why note such examples as 120 these, when the holy and divine law is summed up by Moses in precepts which are ten in all, statutes which are the general heads, embracing the vast multitude of particular laws, the roots, the sources, the perennial fountains of ordinances containing commandments positive and prohibitive for the profit of those who follow them ?

XXII. It is quite natural, then, that the mating with 121 Hagar should take place when ten years have elapsed from the arrival in the land of the Canaanites ; for we cannot desire the training of the schools the moment we become reasoning beings, as the understanding is still soft and flaccid. That only comes when we have hardened our intelligence and quickness of mind and possess about all things a judgement which is no longer light and superficial, but firm and steady.

---

<sup>3</sup> All mss. but one γῆς, which points to Mangey's conjecture τῆς εἰς Χαναανῶν <ἐκ Χαλδαίων> γῆς.

- 122 [537] Διὸ τὰκόλουθον προσυφαίνεται | τὸ “ εἰσῆλθε πρὸς Ἄγαρ”. ἦν γὰρ ἀρμόττον τῷ μανθάνοντι πρὸς ἐπιστήμην διδάσκαλον φοιτᾶν, ἵνα ἀναδιδαχθῆ τὰ προσήκοντα ἀνθρώπου φύσει παιδεύματα. νυνὶ μὲν ὁ γνώριμος εἰς διδασκάλου βαδίζων εἰσάγεται· προεκτρέχει δὲ πολλάκις ἐξοικίσασα φθόνον ἀφ’ 123 ἑαυτῆς καὶ τοὺς ἔχοντας εὐφυνῶς ἐπισπᾶται. τὴν γοῦν ἀρετὴν, Λεῖαν, ἔστιν ἰδεῖν προαπαντῶσαν καὶ λέγουσαν τῷ ἀσκητῇ· “ πρὸς μὲ εἰσελεύσῃ σήμερον,” ἥνικα ἐκεῖνος ἀγρόθεν ἐπαρήει. ποῦ<sup>1</sup> γὰρ ὤφειλεν <εἰς>ελθεῖν ὁ τῶν ἐπιστήμης σπερμάτων καὶ φυτῶν ἐπιμελητής, ὅτι μὴ πρὸς τὴν γεωρ-124 γηθεῖσαν ἀρετὴν ; XXIII. ἔστι δ’ ὅτε καὶ ἀποπειρωμένη τῶν φοιτητῶν, ὡς ἔχουσι προθυμίας καὶ σπουδῆς, οὐχ ὑπαντᾶ μὲν, ἐγκαλυψα-μένη δὲ τὸ πρόσωπον ὡσπερ Θάμαρ ἐπὶ τριόδου καθέζεται, πόρνης δόξαν παρασχούσα τοῖς ὁδῶ βαδίζουσιν, ἵνα οἱ περιέργως ἔχοντες ἀνακαλύψαντες ἀναφήνωσι καὶ καταθεάσωνται τὸ ἄφαιστον καὶ ἀμίαντον καὶ παρθένιον ὄντως αἰδοῦς καὶ 125 σωφροσύνης ἐκπρεπέστατον κάλλος. τίς οὖν ὁ ἔξεταστικός καὶ φιλομαθῆς καὶ μηδὲν ἄσκεπτον καὶ ἀδιερεύνητον τῶν ἐγκεκαλυμμένων πραγμάτων παραλιπεῖν ἀξιῶν ἔστιν, ὅτι μὴ ὁ ἀρχιστράτηγος καὶ βασιλεὺς καὶ ταῖς πρὸς θεὸν ὁμολογίαις ἐμμένων τε καὶ χαίρων, ὄνομα Ἰούδας ; “ ἐξέκλινε ” γὰρ φησι “ πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν ὁδὸν καὶ εἶπεν· ἔασόν με εἰσελθεῖν πρὸς σέ ”—ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἔμελλε παραβιάζεσθαι—καὶ σκοπεῖν, τίς τε ἡ ἐγκεκαλυμμένη 126 δύναμις ἔστι καὶ ἐπὶ τί παρεσκευάσται. μετὰ τοίνυν

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. and Wendland ποῦ.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 122-126

That is why the text continues with the words that 122 follow, "He went in unto Hagar" (Gen. xvi. 4), for it was well that the learner should resort to knowledge as his teacher, to be instructed in the lessons suited to human nature. In the present case the pupil is represented as going to the teacher's school, but often knowledge rids herself of grudging pride, runs out to meet the gifted disciples, and draws them into her company. And so we may see that Leah, 123 or virtue, goes forth to meet the Man of Practice when he was returning from the field, and says to him, "Thou shalt come in unto me to-day" (Gen. xxx. 16); for whither indeed should he go in, he who is tending the seeds and saplings of knowledge, save to virtue, the field of his husbandry?

XXIII. But sometimes she makes trial of her scholars, 124 to test their zeal and earnestness; and then she does not meet them, but veils her face and sits like Tamar at the cross-roads, presenting the appearance of a harlot to the passers-by (Gen. xxxviii. 14, 15). Her wish is that inquiring minds may unveil and reveal her and gaze upon the glorious beauty, inviolate, undefiled and truly virginal, of her modesty and chastity. Who then is he, the investigator, the lover 125 of learning, who refuses to leave aught of the things that are veiled, unexamined and unexplored? He can only be the chief captain, the king, whose name is Judah, who persists and rejoices in confessing and praising God. "He turned aside his path to her" (Gen. xxxviii. 16) it says, and said "Suffer me to come in unto thee." "Suffer me," he means (for he would not use force to her), "suffer me to see what is the virtue which veils its face from me, and what purpose it is prepared to serve." And so then after he went 126

PHILO

τὸ εἰσελθεῖν γέγραπται “καὶ συνέλαβε” καὶ τὸ “τίς” ῥητῶς οὐ μεμνήνται· συλλαμβάνει γὰρ καὶ συναρπάζει ἢ μὲν τέχνη τὸν μανθάνοντα ἐρωτικῶς ἔχει ἀναπεΐθουσα ἑαυτῆς, ὁ δὲ μανθάνων τὴν διδάσκουσαν, ὅποτε φιλομαθῆς εἴη.

- 127 Πολλάκις δέ τις τῶν μέσας ἐπιστήμας<sup>1</sup> ὑφηγουμένων γνωρίμου τυχῶν εὐφυοῦς ἠΰχησεν ἐπὶ τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ μόνος ὑπολαβὼν τῷ φοιτητῇ γεγονέναι τῆς εὐμαθίας αἴτιος, καὶ μετεωρίσας καὶ φυσήσας ἑαυτὸν ὑψαυχενεῖ· καὶ τὰς ὀφρῦς εὖ μάλα ἀνασπάσας τετύφωται καὶ παρὰ τῶν βουλομένων συνδιατρίβειν πάμπολλα αἰτεῖ· οὓς δ’ ἂν αἰσθηταὶ πένητας μὲν, διψῶντας δὲ παιδείας, ἀποστρέφεται, ὥσπερ θησαυρόν τινα σοφίας μόνος ἀνευρηκῶς.
- 128 τοῦτ’ ἐστὶ τὸ “ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχειν,” οἰδεῖν καὶ τετυφῶσθαι καὶ ὄγκον πλείονα τοῦ μετρίου περιβεβλήσθαι, δι’ ὧν καὶ τὴν κυρίαν τῶν μέσων ἐπιστημῶν, ἀρετὴν, ἔδοξάν τινες ἀτιμάζειν, ἐπιτιμον οὖσαν ἐξ ἑαυτῆς. ὅσαι μὲν οὖν ψυχαὶ μετὰ φρονήσεως κνοφοροῦσι <μετὰ><sup>2</sup> πραγμάτων τικτουσιν ὁμως, τὰ συγκεχυμένα διακρίνουσαι καὶ |

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πολλάκις δέ τινα τῶν μέσων ἐπιστημῶν ὑφηγουμένου(-η), which Mangey keeps with ὑφηγούμενος.

<sup>2</sup> <μετὰ> is my insertion: Mangey takes πραγμάτων as object of κνοφοροῦσι (surely impossible) and reads ὁμοίως for ὁμως (i.e. all these souls bear in the same way): Wendland proposed <ἀνευ> πραγμάτων . . . ἀπόνως. I understand Philo to mean that these souls, before they attain their εὐτοκία, have to go through the pains suggested by διαστέλλουσαι τὰ συγκεχυμένα. I have not found the combination μετὰ πραγμάτων as antithesis to the common ἀνευ, but σὺν πράγμασι and μετὰ πραγματείας are quoted.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 126-129

in to her, we read of a conceiving or taking<sup>a</sup> (Gen. xxxviii. 18). Who it is who conceives or takes we are not told in so many words. For the art or science that is studied does seize and take hold of the learner and persuades him to be her lover, and in like manner the learner takes his instructress, when his heart is set on learning.

Often on the other hand some teacher of the lower 127 subjects, who has chanced to have a gifted pupil, boasts of his own teaching power, and supposes that his pupil's high attainments are due to him alone. So he stands on tiptoe, puffs himself out, perks up his neck and raises high his eyebrows, and in fact is filled with vanity, and demands huge fees from those who wish to attend his courses ; but when he sees that their thirst for education is combined with poverty, he turns his back on them as though there were some treasures of wisdom which he alone has discovered.

That is the condition called 128 "having in the womb," a swollen, vanity-ridden condition, robed in a vesture of inordinate pride, which makes some people appear to dishonour virtue, the essentially honourable mistress in her own right of the lower branches of knowledge. The souls then 129 whose pregnancy is accompanied with wisdom, though they labour, do bring their children to the birth, for they distinguish and separate what is in con-

<sup>a</sup> i.e. grammatically the subject of συνέλαβε may be either. Philo must not be thought to deny that in the literal story the subject must be Tamar, but spiritually both learner and teacher may be said συνλαμβάνειν in its original sense of to seize or take, and he considers himself entitled to find this secondary thought in the text.

PHILO

- [538] διαστέλλουσαι, καθάπερ ἡ Ῥεβέκκα—λαβοῦσα γὰρ ἐν γαστρὶ τῶν διττῶν διανοίας<sup>1</sup> ἔθνῶν ἐπιστήμην, ἀρετῆς τε καὶ κακίας, εὐτοκία χρωμένη τὴν ἑκατέρου φύσιν διαστέλλει τε καὶ διακρίνει.—ὄσαι δὲ ἄνευ φρονήσεως, ἢ ἀμβλίσκουσιν ἢ δύσεριν καὶ σοφιστὴν βάλλοντα καὶ τοξεύοντα ἢ βαλλόμενον
- 130 καὶ τοξευόμενον ἀποκύουσι. καὶ μήποτε εἰκότως· αἱ μὲν γὰρ λαμβάνειν, αἱ δὲ ἔχειν ἐν γαστρὶ οἴονται, παμμεγέθους <οὔσης> διαφορᾶς. αἱ μὲν γὰρ ἔχειν νομίζουσαι τὴν αἴρεσιν<sup>2</sup> καὶ γένεσιν ἑαυταῖς ἐπιγράφουσαι σεμνομυθοῦσιν, αἱ δὲ λαμβάνειν ἀξιούσαι τὸ μὲν μηδὲν οἰκεῖον ἐξ ἑαυτῶν ἔχειν συνομολογοῦσι, τὰ δὲ σπέρματα καὶ τὰς γονὰς ἐξωθεν ἀρδομένας καταλαμβάνουσαι καὶ θαυμάζουσαι<sup>3</sup> τὸν διδόντα κακὸν μέγιστον, φιλαυτίαν, ἀγαθῶ τελείῳ,
- 131 θεοσεβεία, διωθοῦνται. XXIV. τοῦτον τὸν τρόπον καὶ τὰ νομοθετικῆς τῆς παρὰ ἀνθρώποις κατεβλήθη σπέρματα· “ἦν γὰρ τις” φησὶν “ἐκ τῆς φυλῆς Λευί, ὃς ἔλαβε τῶν θυγατέρων τῶν Λευί, καὶ ἔσχεν αὐτήν. καὶ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔλαβε καὶ ἔτεκεν ἄρρεν· ἰδόντες δὲ αὐτὸ ἀστείον ὃν ἐσκέπασαν
- 132 αὐτὸ μῆνας τρεῖς.” οὗτός ἐστι Μωυσῆς, ὁ καθαρώτατος νοῦς, ὁ ἀστείος ὄντως, ὁ νομοθετικὴν ὁμοῦ καὶ προφητείαν ἐνθουσιώσῃ καὶ θεοφορήτῳ σοφία λαβών, ὃς γένος ὦν τῆς Λευιτικῆς φυλῆς καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. διανοίαις.

<sup>2</sup> The word hardly makes sense: ? ἄροσιν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. καταλαμβάνουσι καὶ θαυμάζουσι.

• Cf. De Cher. 9 ff.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 129-132

fusion within them, just as Rebecca, receiving in her womb the knowledge of the two nations of the mind, virtue and vice, distinguished the nature of the two and found therein a happy delivery (Gen. xxv. 23). But where its pregnancy is without wisdom, the soul either miscarries or the offspring is the quarrelsome sophist <sup>a</sup> who shoots with the bow (Gen. xxi. 20), or is the target of the bowman. And this contrast is to be expected. For the one kind of soul thinks that it receives in the womb, and the other that it has in the womb, and that is a mighty difference. The latter, supposing that they "have," with boastful speech ascribe the choice and the birth to themselves. The former claim but to receive, and confess that they have of themselves nothing which is their own. They accept <sup>b</sup> the seeds of impregnation that are showered on them from outside, and revere the Giver, and thus by honouring God they repel the love of self, repel, that is, the greatest of evils by the perfect good. 130

XXIV. In this way 131
too were sown the seeds of the legislative art which we men enjoy. "There was," says the Scripture, "a man of the tribe of Levi who took one of the daughters of Levi and had her to wife, and she received in her womb and bore a male child, and seeing that he was goodly they guarded him for three months" (Ex. ii. 1, 2). This is Moses, the mind of purest quality, 132 the truly "goodly," <sup>c</sup> who, with a wisdom given by divine inspiration, received the art of legislation and prophecy alike, who being of the tribe of Levi both <sup>b</sup> Or "seize upon." The word expresses something less passive than λαμβάνειν but escapes the thought of self-satisfaction which he finds in εχειν.

<sup>c</sup> See note on De Conf. 106.

PHILO

- τὰ πρὸς πατρὸς καὶ τὰ πρὸς μητρὸς ἀμφιθαλῆς τῆς 133 ἀληθείας ἔχεται. μέγιστον δὲ ἐπάγγελμα τοῦ γενάρχου τῆς φυλῆς ἐστὶ ταύτης· θαρρεῖ γὰρ λέγειν, ὅτι αὐτὸς μοι μόνος ἐστὶ θεὸς τιμητέος, ἄλλο δ' οὐδὲν τῶν μετ' αὐτόν, οὐ γῆ, οὐ θάλασσα, οὐ ποταμοί, οὐκ ἄερος φύσις, οὐ πνευμάτων οὐχ ὠρῶν<sup>1</sup> μεταβολαί, οὐ ζώων οὐ φυτῶν ἰδέαι, οὐχ ἥλιος, οὐ σελήνη, οὐκ ἀστέρων πλήθος ἐν τάξεσιν ἐναρμονίους περιπολούντων, οὐχ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός 134 τε καὶ κόσμος, μεγάλης καὶ ὑπερφυοῦς ψυχῆς τὸ αὔχημα, γένεσιν ὑπερκύπτειν καὶ τοὺς ὅρους αὐτῆς ὑπερβάλλειν καὶ μόνου τοῦ ἀγενήτου περιέχεσθαι κατὰ τὰς ἱεράς ὑφηγήσεις, ἐν αἷς διείρηται “ ἔχεσθαι αὐτοῦ.” τοιγάρτοι τοῖς ἐχομένοις καὶ ἀδιαστατῶς θεραπεύουσιν ἀντιδίδωσι κλῆρον αὐτόν.
 ἐγγυᾶται δέ μου τὴν ὑπόσχεσιν λόγιον, ἐν ᾧ 135 λέγεται· “ κύριός αὐτὸς κλῆρος αὐτοῦ.” οὕτως ἐν γαστρὶ λαμβάνουσαι μᾶλλον ἢ ἔχουσαι<sup>2</sup> αἱ ψυχαὶ τίκτειν πεφύκασιν. καθάπερ δ' οἱ σώματος ὀφθαλμοὶ πολλάκις μὲν ἀμυδρῶς πολλάκις δὲ τηλαυγῶς ὀρῶσι, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα τοτὲ μὲν ὑποσυγκεχυμένας καὶ ἀδήλους [539] τοτὲ δὲ καθαρὰς καὶ τρανὰς δέχεται τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν
 136 πραγμάτων | ἰδιότητος. ἡ μὲν οὖν ἀσαφῆς καὶ ἀδηλουμένη προσβολὴ ἔοικε τῷ μήπω κατὰ γαστρὸς ἐμβρῦον διατυπωθέντι, ἡ δὲ ἐναργῆς καὶ τρανῆ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀέρων οἱ καίρων.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔχουσαι μᾶλλον ἢ λαμβάνουσαι.

---

<sup>a</sup> Or “being of the tribe of Levi and equally fortunate both on his father's and his mother's side, holds fast to truth.” But the point of the last words is not clear in this rendering.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 132-136

on the father's and the mother's side has a double link<sup>a</sup> with truth. Great indeed is the profession of the founder of this tribe.<sup>b</sup> He has the courage to say, God and God alone must I honour, not aught of what is below God, neither earth nor sea nor rivers, nor the realm of air, nor the shiftings of the winds and seasons, nor the various kinds of animals and plants, nor the sun nor the moon nor the host of the stars, performing their courses in ranks of ordered harmony, no, nor yet the whole heaven and universe. A great and transcendent soul does such a boast bespeak, to soar above created being, to pass beyond its boundaries, to hold fast to the Uncreated alone, following the sacred admonitions in which we are told to cling to Him (Deut. xxx. 20), and therefore to those who thus cling and serve Him without ceasing He gives Himself as portion, and this my affirmation is warranted by the oracle which says, "The Lord Himself is his portion" (Deut. x. 9). Thus<sup>c</sup> we see the capacity to bear comes to souls by "receiving" rather than by "having in the womb."

But just as the eyes of the body often see dimly and often clearly, so the distinguishing characteristics which things present sometimes reach the eye of the soul in a blurred and confused, sometimes in a clear and distinct form. When the vision thus presented is indistinct and ill-defined, it is like the embryo not yet fully formed in the depths of the womb; when it is distinct and definite, it bears

<sup>b</sup> Levi, not Moses as Wendland seems to think. See App. p. 579.

<sup>c</sup> οὕτως takes us back to the argument, interrupted in § 133 by the meditation on the tribe of Levi, and, as often, marks the conclusion of the argument. In §§ 138-139 we have a different point, though suggested by it.

PHILO

- μάλιστα τῷ διαπεπλασμένῳ καὶ καθ' ἕκαστον τῶν ἐντός τε καὶ ἐκτός μερῶν τετεχνιτευμένῳ καὶ τὴν
- 137 ἀρμόττουσαν ἰδέαν ἀπειληφότι. νόμος δὲ ἐπὶ τούτοις ἐγράφη πάνυ καλῶς καὶ συμφερόντως τεθεὶς οὗτος· “ ἐὰν μαχομένων ἀνδρῶν δύο πατάξῃ τις γυναῖκα ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσαν καὶ ἐξέλθῃ τὸ παιδίον αὐτῆς μὴ ἐξεικονισμένον, ἐπιζήμιον ζημιωθήσεται· καθ' ὃ τι ἂν ἐπιβάλῃ ὁ ἀνὴρ τῆς γυναικός, δώσει μετὰ ἀξιώματος· ἐὰν δὲ ἐξεικονισμένον ᾖ, δώσει ψυχὴν ἀντὶ ψυχῆς.” οὐ γὰρ ἦν ὁμοιον, τέλειόν τε καὶ ἀτελὲς διανοίας ἔργον διαφθεῖραι, οὐδὲ εἰκαζόμενον καὶ καταλαμβανόμενον, οὐδὲ ἐλπιζόμενον
- 138 καὶ ἤδη ὑπάρχον. διὰ τοῦτο ὅπου μὲν ἐπιτίμιον ἄδηλον ἐπ' ἀδήλω πράγματι, ὅπου δὲ ὠρισμένον ἐπὶ τελείῳ νομοθετεῖται, τελείῳ δὲ οὐχὶ τῷ πρὸς ἀρετὴν, ἀλλὰ τῷ κατὰ τινα τέχνην τῶν ἀνεπιλήπ-των γενομένῳ· κυφορεῖ γὰρ αὐτό<sup>1</sup> οὐχ ἢ λαβοῦσα, ἀλλ' ἢ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα, οἷσιν πρὸ ἀτυφίας ἐπαγγελλομένη. καὶ γὰρ ἀμήχανον ἀμβλίσκειν τὴν ἐν γαστρὶ λαβοῦσαν, ἐπεὶ τὸ φυτὸν ὑπὸ τοῦ σπειραν-τος ἐμπρεπὲς τελεσφορεῖσθαι· τὴν δὲ ἔχουσαν οὐκ ἀνοίκειον, ἅτε νόσῳ χωρὶς ἰατροῦ κατεσχημένην.
- 139 XXV. Μὴ νομίσης δὲ τὴν Ἄγαρ λέγεσθαι ἑαυτὴν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αὐτόν.

<sup>a</sup> Philo means that “perfected” or “fully grown” is here used of things on a lower plane. Since the woman of the enactment is said “to have in the womb,” the allegory cannot mean that the perfected work of the mind is one of moral perfection. It refers rather to the fully formed ideas produced by “a system of conceptions coordinated for some useful end” (see the definition of “art” in § 141). Such arts have nothing wrong about them (ἀνεπιλήπτων), but cannot rank with the study of virtue. For this reduced sense of ἀνεπιλήπτος see note on De Mig. 207.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 136-139

a close analogy to the same embryo when fully shaped, with each of its parts inward and outward elaborated, and thus possessed of the form suited to it.

Now there is a law well and suitably enacted to deal 137 with this subject which runs thus : " When two men are fighting if one strikes a woman who has in the womb, and her child comes forth not fully formed, he shall be surely fined : according as the husband of the woman shall lay upon him he shall be fined with a valuation, but if the child be fully formed he shall give life for life " (Ex. xxi. 22, 23). This was well said, for it is not the same thing to destroy what the mind has made when it is perfect as when it is imperfect, when it is guesswork as when it is apprehended, when it is but a hope as when it is a reality. Therefore in one the thing in question and the 138 penalty are alike indefinite, in the other there is a specified penalty for a thing perfected. Note however that by " perfected " we do not mean perfected in virtue, but that it has attained perfection in some one of the arts to which no exception can be taken.<sup>a</sup> For the child in this case is the fruit of one who has in the womb, not has received in the womb, one whose attitude is that of self-conceit rather than of modesty. And indeed miscarriage is impossible for her who " has received in the womb," for it is to be expected that the Sower should bring the plant to its fulness : for her who " has in the womb " it is natural enough ; she is the victim of her malady, and there is no physician to help her.<sup>b</sup>

XXV. Do not suppose that by the words " When 139

<sup>b</sup> Or " if there is no physician." Philo, that is, may not intend to deny the possibility of a better fate for those " who have in the womb."

PHILO

ὄραν ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσαν διὰ τοῦ “ ἰδοῦσα<sup>1</sup> ὅτι ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχει,” ἀλλὰ τὴν κυρίαν αὐτῆς Σάρραν. καὶ γὰρ ὕστερον αὕτη περὶ ἑαυτῆς φησιν· “ ἰδοῦσα ὅτι 140 ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχει, ἠτιμάσθη<sup>2</sup> ἐνώπιον αὐτῆς.” διὰ τί; ὅτι αἱ μέσαι τέχναι, καὶ εἰ τὰ καθ’ αὐτάς, ὧν εἰσιν ἐγκύμονες, ὀρώσιν, ἀλλά τοι πάντως ἀμυδρῶς ὀρώσιν, ἀλλ’ ἐπιστήμαι τηλαυγῶς καὶ σφόδρα ἐναργῶς καταλαμβάνουσιν· ἐπιστήμη γὰρ πλέον ἐστὶ τέχνης, τὸ βέβαιον καὶ ἀμετάπτωτον ὑπὸ 141 λόγου προσειληφύια. τέχνης μὲν γὰρ ὄρος οὗτος· σύστημα ἐκ καταλήψεων συγγεγυμνασμένων<sup>3</sup> πρὸς τι τέλος εὐχρηστον, τοῦ εὐχρήστου διὰ τὰς κακο-τεχνίας ὑγιῶς προστιθεμένου· ἐπιστήμης δέ· κατάληψις ἀσφαλῆς καὶ βέβαιος, ἀμετάπτωτος ὑπὸ 142 λόγου. μουσικὴν μὲν οὖν καὶ γραμματικὴν καὶ τὰς συγγενεῖς καλοῦμεν τέχναις—καὶ γὰρ οἱ ἀποτελούμενοι δι’ αὐτῶν τεχνῆται λέγονται μουσικοὶ τε καὶ γραμματικοί,—φιλοσοφίαν δὲ καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀρετὰς ἐπιστήμας καὶ τοὺς ἔχοντας αὐτάς [540] ἐπιστήμονας· | φρόνιμοι γὰρ εἰσι καὶ σώφρονες καὶ φιλόσοφοι, ὧν οὐδὲ εἷς ἐν τοῖς τῆς διαπεπονημένης ἐπιστήμης σφάλλεται δόγμασι, καθάπερ οἱ προειρημένοι ἐν τοῖς τῶν μέσων τεχνῶν θεωρήμασιν.

<sup>1</sup> LXX εἶδεν, which perhaps should be read here.

<sup>2</sup> So LXX: MSS ἠτ(ο)ιμάσθη.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐγγεγυμνασμένων (-ον), which may be right. See App. p. 580.

<sup>a</sup> See App. 580.

<sup>b</sup> Or “apprehensions” as below. But the word seems to be used in a slightly different sense in the two definitions.

<sup>c</sup> Or perhaps “results arrived at,” in contrast to principles (δόγματα). That is to say, the difference between δόγματα

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 139-142

she saw that she had in the womb" (Gen. xvi. 4), it is meant that Hagar saw that it was so with herself. It is her mistress Sarah who saw, for afterwards Sarah says of herself, "Seeing that she had in the womb, I was dishonoured before her" (Gen. xvi. 5). Why is 140 this? Because the lower arts, even if they see their own products, which are carried in their womb, necessarily see them but dimly, while they are clearly and very distinctly apprehended by knowledge in its various forms. For knowledge is something more than art, as it has in addition a stability which no argument can shake. The definition of art is as 141 follows: <sup>a</sup> a system of conceptions <sup>b</sup> co-ordinated to work for some useful end, "useful" being a very proper addition to exclude mischievous arts. Knowledge on the other hand is defined as a sure and certain apprehension which cannot be shaken by argument.<sup>a</sup>

We give the name of arts 142 therefore to music, grammar and the kindred arts, and accordingly those who by means of them reach fulness of accomplishment are called artists, whether they are musicians or grammarians; but we give the name of knowledge to philosophy and the other virtues, and that of men of knowledge to those who possess these virtues. Those only are prudent and temperate and philosophers who without exception do not err in the dogmatic conclusions belonging to that form of knowledge which they have mastered by their diligence in the way that the above-mentioned err in the more theoretical conclusions<sup>c</sup> of the lower and θεωρήματα, which are often combined by Philo, lies not so much in that the latter are uncertain (Euclid did not consider his θεωρήματα uncertain), as in that they are slighter, and do not rise to the status of an important principle.

PHILO

- 143 ὥσπερ γὰρ ὀφθαλμοὶ μὲν ὀρώσιν, ὁ δὲ νοῦς δι' ὀφθαλμῶν τηλαυγέστερον, καὶ ἀκούει μὲν ὦτα, ὁ δὲ νοῦς δι' ὠτων ἄμεινον, καὶ ὀσφραίνονται μὲν οἱ μυκτῆρες, ἡ δὲ ψυχὴ διὰ ῥινῶν ἐναργέστερον, καὶ αἱ ἄλλαι αἰσθήσεις τῶν καθ' αὐτὰς ἀντιλαμβάνονται, καθαρώτερον δὲ καὶ εἰλικρινέστερον ἢ διάνοια—κυρίως γὰρ εἰπεῖν ἧδ' ἐστὶν ὀφθαλμὸς μὲν ὀφθαλμῶν, ἀκοὴ δὲ ἀκοῆς καὶ ἐκάστης τῶν αἰσθήσεων αἴσθησις εἰλικρινεστέρα, χρωμένῃ μὲν ἐκείναις ὡς ἐν δικαστηρίῳ ὑπηρέτισι, δικάζουσα δ' αὐτὴ τὰς φύσεις τῶν ὑποκειμένων, ὡς τοῖς μὲν συναινεῖν, τὰ δὲ ἀποστρέφεισθαι,—οὕτως αἱ μὲν λεγόμεναι μέσαι τέχναι ταῖς κατὰ τὸ σῶμα δυνάμεσιν ἐοικυῖαι τοῖς θεωρήμασιν ἐντυγχάνουσι κατά τινας ἀπλᾶς ἐπιβολάς, ἀκριβέστερον δὲ ἐπιστήμαι
- 144 καὶ σὺν ἐξετάσει περιττῇ. ὁ γὰρ νοῦς πρὸς αἴσθησιν, τοῦτ' ἐπιστήμη πρὸς τέχνην ἐστὶ· καθάπερ γὰρ αἴσθησις τις αἰσθήσεων, ὡς ἐλέχθη πρότερον, ἐστὶν ἡ ψυχὴ * * *<sup>1</sup> ἐκείνων μὲν οὖν ἐκάστη μικρὰ ἅττα τῶν ἐν τῇ φύσει παρεσπάσατο, περὶ ἃ πονεῖται καὶ πραγματεύεται, γραμμὰς μὲν γεωμετρία, φθόγγους δὲ μουσική, φιλοσοφία δὲ πᾶσαν τὴν τῶν ὄντων φύσιν· ὕλη γὰρ ἐστὶν αὐτῆς ὅδε ὁ κόσμος καὶ
- 145 πᾶσα ἢ τῶν ὄντων ὄρατὴ τε καὶ ἀόρατος οὐσία. τί οὖν θαυμαστόν, εἰ ἢ τὰ ὅλα καθορώσα θεᾶται καὶ τὰ μέρη, καὶ ἄμεινον ἐκείνων, ἅτε ὀφθαλμοῖς μείζοσι καὶ ὀξυδερκεστέροις ἐνοματωθεῖσα; εἰκότως οὖν ἡ κυρία φιλοσοφία τὴν μέσσην παιδείαν, τὴν

<sup>1</sup> Wendland supplies οὕτως τέχνη τις τεχνῶν ἐπιστήμη.

<sup>a</sup> Lit. "through simple applications (of the mind)." Cf. note on De Post. 79.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 143-145

arts. The following illustration may serve. The 143 eyes see, but the mind through the eyes sees further than the eyes. The ears hear, but the mind through the ears hears better than the ears. The nostrils smell, but the soul through the nose smells more vividly than the nose, and while the other senses apprehend the objects proper to them, the understanding apprehends with more purity and clarity.
For we may say quite properly that the mind is the eye's eye and the hearing's hearing and the purified sense of each of the senses ; it uses them as ushers in its tribunal, but itself passes judgement on the natures of the objects presented, giving its assent to some and refusing it to others. In the same way, what we call the lower or secondary arts, resembling as they do the bodily faculties, handle the questions which they answer without involved consideration,<sup>a</sup> but knowledge in each case does so with greater accuracy and minute examination. What the mind is to sense, 144 that knowledge is to art ; for just as, to repeat the statement, the soul is the sense of the senses, [so knowledge is the art of arts.] So each of the arts has detached and annexed some small items from the world of nature which engage its efforts and attention : geometry has its lines, and music its notes, but philosophy takes the whole nature of existing things ; for its subject matter is this world and every form of existence visible and invisible. Why wonder, then, 145 if when it surveys the whole of things it sees also the parts, and sees them better than those others, furnished as it is with stronger eyes and more penetrating sight ? Naturally then will the pregnancy of the handmaid, the lower instruction, be more visible to

PHILO

- θεραπεινίδα αὐτῆς, ἐγκύμονα θεάσεται μᾶλλον ἢ 146 ἐαυτὴν ἐκείνη. XXVI. καίτοι γ' οὐδέ τοῦτό τις ἀγνοεῖ, ὅτι πάσαις ταῖς κατὰ μέρος τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰ σπέρματα, ἐξ ὧν ἀναβλαστεῖν ἔδοξε τὰ θεωρήματα, φιλοσοφία δεδωρήται. ἰσόπλευρα γὰρ καὶ σκαληνὰ κύκλους τε καὶ πολυγώνια καὶ τὰ ἄλλα σχήματα γεωμετρία προσεξεῦρε, σημείου δὲ καὶ γραμμῆς καὶ ἐπιφανείας καὶ στερεοῦ φύσιν, ἃ δὴ ρίζαι καὶ θεμέλιοι τῶν λεχθέντων εἰσίν, οὐκέτι 147 γεωμετρία. πόθεν γὰρ αὐτῇ λέγειν ὀριζομένη, ὅτι σημεῖον μὲν ἐστὶν οὐ μέρος οὐδέν, γραμμὴ δὲ μῆκος ἀπλατές, ἐπιφάνεια δὲ ὁ μῆκος καὶ πλάτος μόνον ἔχει, στερεὸν δὲ ὁ τὰς τρεῖς ἔχει διαστάσεις, μῆκος, πλάτος, βάθος; ταῦτα γὰρ ἀνάκειται φιλοσοφία καὶ ἡ περὶ ὄρων πραγματεία πᾶσα τῷ 148 φιλοσόφῳ. τό γε μὴν γράφειν καὶ ἀναγινώσκειν γραμματικῆς τῆς ἀτελεστέρας ἐπ-ἀγγελμα, ἣν παρατρέποντές τινες γραμματιστικὴν καλοῦσι, τῆς δὲ τελειοτέρας ἀνάπτυξις τῶν παρὰ [541] ποιηταῖς τε καὶ συγγραφεῦσιν. | ἐπειδὴν οὖν περὶ τῶν τοῦ λόγου διεξέρχωνται μερῶν, τότε οὐ τὰ φιλοσοφίας εὐρήματα παρασπῶνταιί τε καὶ παρ᾽ 149 ἐργολαβοῦσι; ταύτης γὰρ ἴδιον ἐξετάζειν, τί σύν-δεσμος, τί ὄνομα, τί ῥῆμα, τί κοινὸν ὄνομα, τί ἴδιον, τί ἔλλιπές ἐν λόγῳ, τί πλήρες, τί ἀποφαντόν, τί ἐρώτημα, τί πύσμα, τί περιεκτικόν, τί εὐκτικόν,

---

<sup>a</sup> Or "prose-writers" in general. On the definition of γραμματικῆ here given see App. p. 580.

<sup>b</sup> The word (παρεργολαβεῖν) is not known elsewhere. L. & S. translate "take as an accessory." Stephanus (impossibly) "quaestum ex aliqua re facere." I understand the word, in accordance with the common use of πάρεργον for the mistress philosophy than it is to the handmaid herself. XXVI. And indeed this too is 146 general knowledge that all the particular arts have their origins and the germs from which the conclusions they reach seem to spring, as a gift from philosophy. For such further matters as isosceles and scalene triangles, and circles and polygons and the other figures are the discovery of geometry; but when we come to the nature of the point, the line, the superficies and the solid which are the roots and foundations of those named above, we leave geometry behind. For whence does she obtain the 147 definition of a point as that which has no parts, of a line as length without breadth, of superficies as that which has length and breadth only, and of a solid as that which has three dimensions, length, breadth, and depth? For these belong to philosophy, and the whole subject of definitions is the philosopher's province.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 145-149

Again the lower stage of grammar, 148 sometimes by a slight modification of γραμματική called γραμματιστική, undertakes to teach reading and writing, while the task of the higher stage is the elucidation of the writings of the poets and historians.<sup>a</sup> When therefore they discourse on the parts of speech, are they not encroaching on, and casually appropriating<sup>b</sup> the discoveries of philosophy? For it is the 149 exclusive property of philosophy to examine what a conjunction is, or a noun, or a verb, or a common as distinguished from a proper noun, or in the sentence what is meant by defective or complete or declaratory or inquiry, or question, or comprehensive, or pre-a thing of secondary importance, to imply that they adopt these terms without any thought of how they are arrived at or any conception of their importance.

PHILO

- τί ἀρατικόν<sup>1</sup>. τὰς γὰρ περὶ αὐτοτελῶν καὶ ἀξιωμα-των καὶ κατηγορημάτων πραγματείας ἧδ' ἐστὶν ἡ 150 συνθεῖσα. ἡμίφωνον δὲ ἡ φωνῆεν ἡ παντελῶς ἄφωνον στοιχείον ἰδεῖν, καὶ πῶς ἕκαστον τούτων εἴωθε λέγεσθαι; καὶ πᾶσα ἡ περὶ φωνῆς καὶ στοιχείων καὶ τῶν τοῦ λόγου μερῶν ἰδέα οὐ φιλοσοφία πεπόνηται καὶ κατήνυσται; βραχείας δ' ὥσπερ ἀπὸ χειμάρρου σπάσαντες λιβάδας καὶ βραχυτέρας ταῖς ἑαυτῶν ψυχαῖς ἐναποθλίψαντες τὸ κλαπὲν οἱ φῶρες οὐκ ἐρυθριῶσι προφέροντες ὡς ἴδιον.
- 151 XXVII. Οὐδ' χάρις φρναττόμενοι τῆς κυρίας, ἡ τὸ κῦρος ὄντως καὶ ἡ τῶν θεωρουμένων ἀνάκειται βεβαίωσις, ἀλογοῦσι. συναισθημένη δὲ αὕτη τῆς ὀλιγωρίας τούτων ἐλέγξει καὶ μετὰ παρρησίας φήσει· ἀδικοῦμαι καὶ παρασπονδοῦμαι τό γε ἐφ' 152 ὑμῖν ὁμολογίας παραβαίνουσιν. ἀφ' οὗ γὰρ ἐνεκολπίσασθε τὰ προπαίδεύματα, τῆς ἐμῆς θεραπειῆδος τὰ ἔγγυα, τὴν μὲν ὡς γαμετὴν ἐξετιμήσατε, ἐμὲ δὲ οὕτως ἀπεστράφητε, ὡς μηδὲ πώποτε ἐς ταῦτόν ἐλθόντες. ἀλλ' ἴσως ἐγὼ μὲν ταῦτα περὶ ὑμῶν ὑπέιληφα, ἐκ τῆς φανερᾶς πρὸς τὴν οἰκέτιν ὁμιλίᾳ τὴν ἀδηλον πρὸς ἐμὲ αὐτὴν ἀλλοτριώσιν τεκμαιρο-μένη· εἰ δ' ὑμεῖς ἐναντίως ἡ ὡς ὑπέιληφα διάκεισθε, γινῶναι μὲν ἀμήχανον ἑτέρω, ῥάδιον δὲ 153 μόνω θεῷ. διόπερ οἰκείως ἐρεῖ· “κρίναι ὁ θεὸς ἀνὰ μέσον ἐμοῦ καὶ σοῦ,” οὐ προκατεγνωκυῖα ὡς

<sup>1</sup> τί εὐκτικόν, τί ἀρατικόν is deduced by Wendland from εὐκτικόν M, ὀρατικόν A, εὐ τί κακὸν ἀρα SF, εὐ κακὸν δὲ τί H. For ἀρατικόν cf. De Agr. 140.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 149-153

catory, or imprecatory. For to her is due the system which embraces the study of complete sentences and propositions and predicates.<sup>a</sup> Again, the observation 150 of the semi-vowel, the vowel and the completely voiceless or consonant, and the usage of each, and the whole field of phonetics and the elements of sound and the parts of speech, have been worked out and brought to its consummation by philosophy. From this, as from a torrent, the plagiarists have drawn a few small drops, squeezed them into their still smaller souls, and do not blush to parade what they have filched as their own.

XXVII. So in their insolence they neglect the mis- 151 tress to whom the lordship really belongs, to whom is due the firm foundation of their studies. And she, conscious of their neglect, will rebuke them and speak with all boldness. "I am wronged and betrayed, in so far as you have broken faith with me. For ever since you took to your arms the lower forms 152 of training, the children of my handmaid, you have given her all the honour of the wedded wife, and turned from me as though we had never come together. And yet perhaps, in thinking this of you, I may be but inferring from your open company with her my servant a less certain matter, your alienation from me. But to decide whether your feelings are as I have supposed, or the opposite, is a task impossible for any other, but easy for God alone," and therefore 153 Sarah will say quite properly, "God judge between you and me" (Gen. xvi. 5). She does not hastily been already explained in the note to the parallel passage De Agr. 140, 141, see App. p. 580. It is a good example of Philo's capacity for looking at things from opposite points of view, that these distinctions are scoffed at as superfluous refinements, here they belong to true philosophy.

PHILO

- ἡδίκηκόςτος, ἀλλ' ἐνδοιάζουσα ὡς τάχ' ἂν ἴσως καὶ κατορθοῦντος· ὅπερ ἀψευδῶς οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἀναφαίνεται δι' ὧν ἀπολογούμενος καὶ τὸν ἐνδοιασμὸν αὐτῆς ἐξιώμενός φησιν· “ ἴδου ἡ παιδίσκη ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ σου, χρῶ αὐτῇ, ὡς ἂν σοι ἀρεστόν ᾗ.”
- 154 καὶ γὰρ ὁ παιδίσκην εἰπὼν ἀμφοτέρα ὁμολογεῖ, τότε δούλην καὶ τὸ νηπιάν<sup>1</sup> εἶναι—τὸ γὰρ τῆς παιδίσκης ὄνομα ἑκατέρω τούτων ἐφαρμόζει,—συνολογεῖ δὲ πάντως εὐθύς καὶ τάναντία, τῇ μὲν νηπιὰ τὴν τελείαν, τῇ δὲ δούλῃ τὴν κυρίαν, μονοноῦ βοῶν ἀντικρυς, ὅτι τὴν μὲν ἐγκύκλιον παιδείαν καὶ ὡς νεωτέραν καὶ ὡς θεραπαινίδα ἀσπάζομαι, τὴν δὲ ἐπιστήμην καὶ φρόνησιν ὡς τελείαν καὶ δέσποιναν
- 155 ἐκτετίμηκα. τὸ δὲ “ ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ σου ” δηλοῖ μὲν τὸ ὑποχείριός ἐστὶ σοι. σημαίνει δὲ καὶ τοιοῦτον ἕτερον· τὰ μὲν τῆς δούλης εἰς χεῖρας |
- [542] ἀφικνεῖται σώματος—σωματικῶν γὰρ ὀργάνων καὶ δυνάμεων τὰ ἐγκύκλια χρεῖα,—τὰ δὲ τῆς κυρίας εἰς ψυχὴν ἔρχεται· λογισμοῖς γὰρ τὰ κατὰ τε φρόνησιν
- 156 καὶ ἐπιστήμην ἀνατίθεται. ὥσθ' ὅσω δυνατώτερον καὶ δραστικώτερον καὶ τοῖς ὅλοις κρεῖττον διάνοια χειρός<sup>2</sup> ἐστὶ, τοσοῦτω τῆς ἐγκυκλίου μουσικῆς ἐπιστήμην καὶ φρόνησιν θαυμασιωτέραν εἶναι νενόμικα καὶ διαφερόντως ἐκτετίμηκα. λαβοῦσα οὖν, ᾧ καὶ ὑπάρχουσα καὶ πρὸς ἐμοῦ νομιζομένη κυρία, τὴν ἐμὴν ἅπασαν παιδείαν ὡς θεραπαινίδι χρῶ, “ ὡς
- 157 εὐάρεστόν σοι.” τὸ δὲ σοὶ εὐάρεστον οὐκ ἀγνοῶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. νήπιον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. χρείος.

<sup>a</sup> The argument implies that “thy hands” refers to the body, a natural thought if the address was to the soul, but not so appropriate when addressed to philosophy. For another suggestion see App. p. 581.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 153-157

condemn Abraham as a wrongdoer, but expresses a doubt as though perhaps his heart may be true and upright. That it is so is shewn unmistakably soon after, when he makes his defence and thereby heals her doubts. "Behold," he says, "the servant girl is in thy hands. Deal with her as is pleasing to thee" (Gen. xvi. 6). Indeed in calling her a servant girl <sup>154</sup> he makes a double admission, that she is a slave and that she is childish, for the name suits both of these. At the same time the words involve necessarily and absolutely the acknowledgment of the opposites of these two, of the full-grown as opposed to the child, of the mistress as opposed to the slave. They amount almost to a loud and emphatic confession: I greet the training of the schools, he implies, as the junior and the handmaid, but I have given full honour to knowledge and wisdom as the full-grown and the mistress. And the words "in thy hands" <sup>155</sup> mean no doubt "she is subject to thee," but they also signify something more, namely that while what is implied by the slave belongs to the domain of the hands in the bodily sense, since the school subjects require the bodily organs and faculties, what is implied by the mistress reaches to the soul, for wisdom and knowledge and their implications are referred to the reasoning faculties.<sup>a</sup> "And so," says Abraham, "in <sup>156</sup> the same degree as the mind is more powerful, more active and altogether better than the hand, I hold knowledge and wisdom to be more admirable than the culture of the schools and have given them full and special honour. Do thou then, who both art the mistress and art held as such by me, take all my training and deal with it as thy handmaid, 'even as is well-pleasing to thee.' And what is well-pleasing ὅτι πάντως ἐστὶν ἀγαθόν, εἰ καὶ μὴ προσηγές, καὶ ὠφέλιμον, εἰ καὶ μακρὰν τοῦ ἡδέος ἀφέστηκεν.

PHILO

- Ἀγαθὸν δὲ καὶ ὠφέλιμον τοῖς ἐλέγχου δεομένοις νοουθεσία, ὃ ἐτέρῳ ὀνόματι κάκωσιν ὁ ἱερός μὲν λέγει λόγος. XXVIII. διόπερ ἐπιφέρει· “καὶ ἐκάκωσεν αὐτήν,” ἴσον τῷ ἐνουθέτησε καὶ ἐσωφρόνισε. λυσιτελές γὰρ σφόδρα τοῖς ἐν ἀδείᾳ καὶ ἐκεχειρία, καθάπερ ἵπποις ἀφηνιασταῖς, ὅξυ κέντρον, ἐπεὶ μάστιγι μῶλις καὶ ἀγωγῇ δαμασθῆναι καὶ τιθασευσθῆναι δύνανται. ἢ τὰ προκείμενα ἄθλα οὐχ ὀρᾶς τοῖς ἀνεπιπλήκτοις<sup>1</sup>; λιπῶσιν, εὐρύνονται, παίνονται, λαμπρὸν πνέουσιν· εἶτα αἴρονται τὰ ἀσεβείας, οἱ πανάθλιοι καὶ βαρυδαίμονες, οἰκτρὰ βραβεῖα, <ἐπ’ > ἀθεότητι κηρυττόμενοι καὶ στεφανούμενοι. διὰ γὰρ τὴν λείως ῥέουσιν εὐτυχίαν ὑπέλαβον ἑαυτοὺς εἶναι τοὺς ὑπαργύρους καὶ ὑποχρύσους θεοὺς, νομίσματος κεκιβδηλευμένου τὸν τρόπον, τοῦ ἀληθινοῦ καὶ ὄντως ὄντος ἐκλαθόμενοι. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ καὶ Μωυσῆς ἐν οἷς φησιν· “ἐλιπάνθη, ἐπαχύνθη, ἐπλατύνθη καὶ ἐγκατέλιπε θεὸν τὸν ποιήσαντα αὐτόν”· ὥστε εἰ ἢ ἐπὶ πλέον ἄνεσις τὸ μέγιστον κακόν, ἀσέβειαν, ὠδίνει, τούναντίον ἢ μετὰ νόμου κάκωσις ἀγαθὸν τέλειον ἀποτίκτει, τὴν αἰίδιμον νοουθεσίαν.
- 161 ἐνθένδε ὀρμηθεῖς καὶ τῆς πρώτης ἐορτῆς τὸ σύμ-

<sup>1</sup> mss. τοῖς ἀνεπιπλήκτως or τοὺς ἀνεπιπλήκτους. The former may perhaps suggest τοῖς ἀνεπιπλήκτως <ζῶσι>.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 581.

<sup>b</sup> The article is difficult. The translation assumes that τοὺς . . . ὑποχρύσους is a belated epithet to ἑαυτοὺς like οἱ πανάθλιοι above. But this is very awkward. Perhaps better “they think themselves to be gods, these gods (of the pagans) whose very gold and silver is unreal.” There is an

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 157-161

to thee I know full well is altogether good, even if it be not agreeable, and profitable even if it be far removed from pleasant."

Yes, good and profitable. And such to those who need convincing of their errors is the admonishing which the holy text indicates under its other name of affliction. XXVIII. Therefore he adds "and she afflicted her" (Gen. xvi. 6), which means she admonished and chastised her. For the sharp spur is indeed profitable to those who live in security and ease, just as it is to unruly horses, since it is difficult to master or break them in merely with the whip or guiding hand. Or do you fail to see the rewards which await the unrebuked?<sup>a</sup> They grow sleek and fat, they expand themselves, and the breath of their spirit is lusty and strong, and then to their utter sorrow and misery they win the woeful prizes of impiety, proclaimed and crowned as victors in the contest of godlessness. For because of the smooth flow of their prosperity, veneered as they are with gold and silver,<sup>b</sup> like base coin, they fancy themselves to be gods, forgetting Him who is the true coin, the really Existent. I have Moses' testimony when he says, "He waxed fat, grew thick, was widened, and abandoned the God who made him" (Deut. xxxii. 15). It follows that if increased laxity is the parent of that greatest of ills, impiety, contrarywise affliction, regulated by law, breeds a perfect good, that most admirable thing, admonition.<sup>c</sup> On this same principle he calls the unleavened bread, allusion to Ex. xx. 23 θεὸς ἀργυροῦς καὶ θεὸς χρυσοῦς οὐ ποιήσετε. For the use of the prefix ὑπ- see App. p. 581.

<sup>c</sup> As κἀκωσις μετὰ νόμου has been stated to be another name for νουθεσία, this remark is extraordinarily weak. See App. p. 582.

PHILO

βολον “ ἄρτον κακώσεως ” εἶπε, τὰ ἄζυμα. καίτοι τίς οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅτι ἑορταὶ καὶ θαλαὶ περιποιούσιν ἰλαρὰς εὐφροσύνας καὶ εὐθυμίας, οὐ κακώσεις ;
 ἀλλὰ δῆλον, ὡς ὀνόματι κατακέχρηται πόνου, τοῦ 162 σωφρονιστοῦ. τὰ γὰρ πλείστα καὶ μέγιστα τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἀσκητικαῖς ἀθλήσεσι καὶ ἠβώσι πόνοις εἴωθε περιγίνεσθαι· ψυχῆς δὲ ἑορτὴ ζῆλος ὁ τῶν ἀρίστων καὶ τελεσφορῶν πόνος. οὗ χάριν διείρηται καὶ “ ἐπὶ πικρίδων τὰ ἄζυμα ἐσθίειν ” οὐχ ὡς προσεψήματος, ἀλλ’ ἐπειδὴ τὸ μὴ οἰδεῖν καὶ ἀναζεῖν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις, ἐστάλθαι δὲ καὶ συνῆχθαι πρὸς ἀηδίας οἱ πολλοὶ τίθενται, πικρὸν ἠγούμενοι [543] τὸ | ἀπομαθεῖν τὸ πάθος, ὅπερ ἐστὶν εὐφροσύνη καὶ
 163 ἑορτὴ διανοία φιλάθλῳ. XXIX. ταύτης ἕνεκά μοι δοκεῖ τῆς αἰτίας ἐν χωρίῳ, ὃ κέκληται πικρία, τὰ νόμιμα ἀναδίδαχθῆναι· ἡδὺ μὲν γὰρ τὸ ἀδικεῖν, ἐπίπονον δὲ τὸ δικαιοπραγεῖν· τοῦτο δὲ ἐστὶν ὁ ἀψευδέστατος νόμος. ἐξελθόντες γάρ, φησιν, ἐκ τῶν Αἰγυπτιακῶν παθῶν “ ἦλθον εἰς Μερρά, καὶ οὐκ ἠδύναντο πιεῖν ὕδωρ ἐκ Μερρῶν· πικρὸν γὰρ ἦν. διὰ τοῦτο ἐπωνομάσθη τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ τόπου ἐκείνου πικρία. καὶ διεγόγγυζεν ὁ λαὸς κατὰ Μωυσῆ λέγοντες· τί πίομεθα ; ἐβόησε δὲ Μωυσῆς πρὸς κύριον, καὶ ἔδειξεν αὐτῷ κύριος ξύλον, καὶ ἐνέβαλεν αὐτὸ εἰς τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ ἐγλυκάνθη τὸ ὕδωρ. ἐκεῖ ἔθετο αὐτῷ δικαιώματα καὶ 164 κρίσεις, κακεῖ αὐτὸν ἐπέιραζεν.” ἡ γὰρ ἀδηλος ἀπόπειρα καὶ δοκιμασία τῆς ψυχῆς ἐστὶν ἐν

<sup>a</sup> Or “ at the height of its vigour.” But the word is strange and perhaps to be suspected.

<sup>b</sup> Though these words run on in the LXX, there is really a stop at “ judgements,” which brings to an end the proof of the symbol of the first feast, "bread of affliction." And yet we all know that feasts and highdays produce cheerfulness and gladness, not affliction. Clearly he is extending the meaning of the word as a name for the chastener, toil, for the most numerous and most important of goods are wont to result from repeated strenuous contention and keen toiling, and the soul's feast is ardour for the best, and the consummation of toil. That is why we also have the command to "eat the unleavened bread with bitter herbs" (Ex. xii. 8), not as a relish, but because the mass of men hold that when they no longer swell and boil with desires, but are confined and compressed, they are in a state of discomfort; and they think that the unlearning of passion is a bitterness, though to a mind that welcomes effort that same is a joy and a feast.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 161-164

XXIX. For this cause I believe the lesson of the statutes of the law was given in a place whose name is bitterness, for injustice is pleasant and just-dealing is troublesome, and this is the most infallible of laws. For when they had gone out of the passions of Egypt, says the text, "they came to Marah, and they could not drink water from Marah, for it was bitter. Therefore the name of that place was called bitterness, and the people murmured against Moses, saying what shall we drink? And Moses called aloud to the Lord, and the Lord shewed him a tree; and he threw it into the water, and the water was sweetened. There He laid down for him ordinances and judgements" (Ex. xv. 23-25).

"And there He tried him" (ibid.), the text continues. Yes, for the trial and proving of the soul, the connexion of κακωσις and its bitterness with law. The final words raise a new point, its connexion with "trial."

PHILO

- τῷ πονεῖν καὶ πικραίνεσθαι· ὅπη γὰρ ταλαντεύσει, χαλεπὸν διαγνῶναι. οἱ μὲν γὰρ προκαμόντες ἀνέπεσον, βαρὺν ἀντίπαλον ἠγησάμενοι τὸν πόνον, καὶ τὰς χεῖρας ὑπ' ἀσθενείας ὥσπερ ἀπειρηκότες ἀθληταὶ καθῆκαν, παλινδρομεῖν εἰς Αἴγυπτον ἐπὶ 165 τὴν ἀπόλαυσιν τοῦ πάθους ἐγνωκότες. οἱ δὲ τὰ φοβερὰ καὶ δεινὰ τῆς ἐρήμης πάνυ τλητικῶς καὶ ἐρρωμένως ἀναδεχόμενοι τὸν ἀγῶνα τοῦ βίου διήθλησαν ἀδιάφθορον καὶ ἀήττητον φυλάξαντες καὶ τῶν τῆς φύσεως ἀναγκαίων κατέξαναστάντες, ὡς πείναν, δίψος, [ρίγος,] κρύος, θάλπος, ὅσα τοὺς ἄλλους εἴωθε δουλοῦσθαι, κατὰ πολλὴν ἰσχὺος 166 περιουσίαν ὑπάγεσθαι. αἴτιον δὲ ἐγένενετο οὐ ψιλὸς ὁ πόνος, ἀλλὰ σὺν τῷ γλυκανθῆναι· λέγει γάρ· “ἐγλυκάνθη τὸ ὕδωρ,” γλυκὺς δὲ καὶ ἡδὺς πόνος ἐτέρῳ ὀνόματι φιλοπονία καλεῖται. τὸ γὰρ ἐν πόνῳ γλυκὺ ἔρως ἐστὶ καὶ πόθος καὶ ζῆλος 167 καὶ φιλία τοῦ καλοῦ. μηδεὶς οὖν τὴν τοκαύτην κάκωσιν ἀποστρεφέσθω, μηδ' “ἄρτον κακώσεως” νομισάτω ποτὲ λέγεσθαι τὴν ἐορτῆς καὶ εὐφροσύνης τράπεζαν ἐπὶ βλάβῃ μᾶλλον ἢ ὠφελείᾳ· τρέφεται γὰρ τοῖς παιδείας δόγμασιν ἢ νουθετουμένη ψυχῇ.
 168 XXX. τὸ ἄζυμον πέμμα τοῦτο οὕτως ἐστὶν ἱερόν, ὥστε χρησιμοῖς προστέτακται δώδεκα ἄρτους ἄζυμους ταῖς φυλαῖς ἰσαρίθμους προτιθέναι ἐπὶ τῆς ἐν τοῖς ἀδύτοις χρυσοῦς τραπέζης, καὶ 169 καλοῦνται προθέσεως. καὶ νόμῳ δὲ ἀπείρηται πᾶσαν ζύμην καὶ πᾶν μέλι προσφέρειν τῷ βρωμῷ· χαλεπὸν γὰρ ἢ τὰς γλυκύτητας τῶν κατὰ τὸ σῶμα

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 164-169

with all its uncertainty, lies in toil and bitterness of heart, and it is uncertain because it is hard to discern which way the balance will incline. Some faint ere the struggle has begun, and lose heart altogether, counting toil a too formidable antagonist, and like weary athletes they drop their hands in weakness and determine to speed back to Egypt to enjoy passion. But there 165 are others who, facing the terrors and dangers of the wilderness with all patience and stoutness of heart, carry through to its finish the contest of life, keeping it safe from failure and defeat, and take a strong stand against the constraining forces of nature, so that hunger and thirst, cold and heat, and all that usually enslave the rest, are made their subjects by their preponderating fund of strength.

But this result is brought about not by toil unaided, 166 but by toil with sweetening. He says "the water was sweetened," and another name for the toil that is sweet and pleasant is love of labour. For what is sweet in toil is the yearning, the desire, the fervour, in fact the love of the good. Let no one, 167 then, turn away from affliction such as this, or think that, when the table of joy and feasting is called the bread of affliction, harm and not benefit is meant. No, the soul that is admonished is fed by the lessons of instruction's doctrine.

XXX. So holy 168 is this unleavened bake-meat, that the oracles ordain that twelve unleavened loaves, corresponding to the number of the tribes, be set forth on the golden table in the inmost shrine, and these are called the loaves of setting forth (Ex. xxv. 29). And further it is 169 forbidden by law to bring any leaven or any honey to the altar (Lev. ii. 11). For it is a hard matter to consecrate as holy the sweet flavours of bodily

PHILO

- ἡδονῶν ἢ τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς ἀραιὰς καὶ χαίνουσ ἐπ-ἄρσεις καθιεροῦν ὡς ἅγια, τὰ φύσει βέβηλα καὶ 170 ἀνίερα ἐξ αὐτῶν. ἄρ' οὖν οὐκ εἰκότως ἐπισεμνυόμενος ὁ προφήτης λόγος, ὄνομα Μωυσῆς, ἐρεῖ· “ μνησθήσῃ πᾶσαν τὴν ὁδὸν ἣν ἤγαγέ σε κύριος ὁ θεὸς ἐν ἐρήμῳ, ὅπως ἂν κακώσῃ σε καὶ ἐκπειράσῃ σε καὶ διαγνωσθῇ τὰ ἐν καρδίᾳ σου, εἰ [544] φυλάξεις ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ ἢ | οὐ· καὶ ἐκάκωσέ σε καὶ ἐλιμαγχόνησέ σε καὶ ἐψώμισέ σε τὸ μάννα, ὃ οὐκ ἤδειςαν οἱ πατέρες σου, ἵνα ἀναγγείλῃ σοι, ὅτι οὐκ ἐπ' ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ 171 ῥήματι ἐκπορευομένῳ διὰ στόματος θεοῦ; ” τίς οὖν οὕτως ἀνόσιός ἐστιν, ὡς ὑπολαβεῖν κακωτὴν τὸν θεὸν καὶ λιμὸν, οἴκτιστον ὄλεθρον, ἐπάγοντα τοῖς ἄνευ τροφῆς ζῆν μὴ δυναμένοις; ἀγαθὸς γὰρ καὶ ἀγαθῶν αἴτιος, εὐεργέτης, σωτήρ, τροφεύς, πλουτοφόρος, μεγαλόδωρος, κακίαν ὄρων ἱερῶν ἀπεληλακῶς· οὕτω γὰρ τὰ γῆς ἄχθη, τὸν τε Ἀδὰμ καὶ Εὐᾶν,<sup>1</sup> ἐφυγάδευσεν ἐκ τοῦ παραδείσου.
 172 μὴ παραγώμεθα οὖν ταῖς φωναῖς,<sup>2</sup> ἀλλὰ τὰ δι' ὑπονοιῶν σημαίνόμενα σκοπῶμεν καὶ λέγωμεν, ὅτι τὸ μὲν “ ἐκάκωσε ” ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ ἐπαίδευσε καὶ ἐνουθέτησε καὶ ἐσωφρόνισε, τὸ δὲ “ λιμῷ παρἔβαλεν ” οὐ σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν εἰργάσατο ἔνδειαν, ἀλλ' ἡδονῶν καὶ ἐπιθυμιῶν φόβων τε καὶ λύπης καὶ ἀδικημάτων καὶ συνόλως ἀπάντων ὅσα ἢ κακιῶν 173 ἐστὶν ἢ παθῶν ἔργα. μαρτυρεῖ δὲ τὸ ἐπιλεγό-μενον ἐξῆς· “ ἐψώμισέ σε τὸ μάννα. ” Ἄρα γε τὸν τὴν ἄπονον καὶ ἀταλαίπωρον τροφήν δίχα σπουδῆς

<sup>1</sup> So Mangey: mss. and Wendland Κάιν.

<sup>2</sup> See App. p. 582.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 169-173

pleasures or the risings of the soul in their leaven-like thinness and sponginess, so profane and unholy are they by their very nature. Is it not, then, 170 with legitimate pride that the prophet-word called Moses says, as we shall find, "Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee in the wilderness, that He might afflict thee and prove thee and the thoughts in thy heart might be tested, whether thou wilt keep His commandments or not, and He afflicted thee and made thee weak by famine and fed thee with manna which thy fathers knew not, that He might proclaim to thee that not alone on bread shall man live, but on every word that goeth forth through the mouth of God" (Deut. viii. 2). Who then is so impious as to suppose that God is 171 an afflictor, or evil-entreater, and that He sends famine, death in its most miserable form, on those who cannot live without food? For God is good and the cause of what is good, the benefactor, the saviour, the nourisher, the enricher, the bountiful giver, and He has expelled evil-mindedness from the holy boundaries. For so He banished those cumberers of the earth, both Adam and Eve,<sup>a</sup> from Paradise.

Let us not, then, be misled by the actual 172 words, but look at the allegorical meaning that lies beneath them, and say that "afflicted" is equivalent to "disciplined and admonished and chastened," and that "subjected to famine" does not mean that He brought about a dearth of food and drink, but a dearth of pleasures and desires and fears and grief and wrong-doings, and in general all the works of the vices or the passions. And this is confirmed by the words that 173 follow, "He fed thee with the manna." He who provided the food that costs no toil or suffering, the

PHILO

- τῶν ἀνθρώπων οὐκ ἐκ γῆς, ὡς ἔθος, ἀναδοθεῖσαν, ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ δέ, τεράστιον ἔργον, ἐπ' εὐεργεσία τῶν χρησομένων παρασχόμενον ἄξιον λέγειν λιμοῦ καὶ κακώσεως ἢ τούναντίον εὐθηνίας καὶ εὐετηρίας
- 174 ἀδείας τε καὶ εὐνομίας αἴτιον; ἀλλ' οἱ πολλοὶ καὶ ἀγελαῖοι νομίζουσι τοὺς λόγους θείους τρεφομένους ἀθλίως καὶ ταλαιπώρως ζῆν—ἀγευστοὶ γάρ εἰσι τοῦ παντρόφου γεύματος σοφίας,—οἱ δ' ἐν ταῖς εὐπαθείαις καὶ εὐφροσύναις λελήθασιν διάγοντες.
- 175 XXXI. οὕτω τοίνυν ἡ ποιά κάκωσις ὠφέλιμόν ἐστιν, ὥστε καὶ τὸ ταπεινώσατον αὐτῆς, ἡ δουλεία, μέγα ἀγαθὸν νενόμισται. καὶ ταύτην ἠΰξαστό τις ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἀναγραφαῖς πατήρ υἱῶ, τῷ ἄφρονι Ἡσαῦ ὁ ἄριστος Ἰσαάκ. εἶπε γάρ που·
- 176 “ἐπὶ μαχαίρα σου ζήσεις, καὶ τῷ ἀδελφῷ σου δουλεύσεις,” λυσιτελέστατον κρίνων τῷ πόλεμον ἀντ' εἰρήνης αἰρουμένῳ καὶ ὥσπερ ἐν μάχαις ὀπλοφοροῦντι διὰ τὴν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ στάσιν καὶ ταραχὴν ὑπηκόῳ γενέσθαι καὶ δουλεύσαι καὶ ἐπιτάγμασιν, ἅττ' ἂν ὁ σωφροσύνης ἐραστῆς
- 177 ἐπικελεύσῃ, πᾶσι πειθαρχεῖν. ἐνθὲνδε μοι δοκεῖ τις τῶν φοιτητῶν Μωυσέως, ὄνομα εἰρηνικός, ὃς πατρίῳ γλώττῃ Σαλομῶν καλεῖται, φάναι· “ παιδείας θεοῦ, υἱέ, μὴ ὀλιγῶρει, καὶ μὴ ἐκλύου ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἐλεγχόμενος· ὃν γὰρ ἀγαπᾷ κύριος ἐλέγχει, μαστιγοῖ δὲ πάντα υἱὸν ὃν παραδέχεται.” οὕτως ἄρα ἡ ἐπίπληξις καὶ νουθεσία [545] καλὸν νενόμισται, | ὥστε δι' αὐτῆς ἢ πρὸς θεὸν

° Or “agreement,” “covenant,” words which describe the normal relation of God and Israel. Wendland, suspecting the word, conjectures ὁμολογείται συγγένεια γίνεσθαι.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 173-177

food which without the cares and pains of men came not from the earth in the common way, but was sent, a wonder and a marvel from heaven for the benefit of those who should use it—can we rightly speak of Him as the author of famine and affliction? Should we not on the contrary call Him the author of thriving and prosperity and secure and ordered living? But 174 the multitude, the common herd, who have never tasted of wisdom, the one true food of us all, think that those who feed on the divine words live in misery and suffering, and little know that their days are spent in continued well-being and gladness.

XXXI. Thus so profitable a thing is affliction of one 175 sort, that even its most humiliating form, slavery, is reckoned a great blessing. Such slavery we read of in the holy scriptures as invoked by a father on his son, by the most excellent Isaac on the foolish Esau. There is a place where he says, "Thou shalt live on 176 thy sword and shalt be a slave to thy brother" (Gen. xxvii. 40). He judges it most profitable for him who chooses war instead of peace, who by reason of his inward tumult and rebellion is armed as it were with the weapons of war, that he should become a subject and a slave and obey all the orders that the lover of self-control may impose. Therefore, I think, 177 did one of Moses' disciples, who is named a man of peace, which is in our ancestral tongue Solomon, say as follows: "My son, despise not the discipline of God, nor faint when thou art rebuked by Him, for whom the Lord loveth He rebukes and scourges every son whom He receiveth" (Prov. iii. 11, 12). So we see that reproaching and admonition are counted so excellent a thing, that they turn our acknowledgment<sup>a</sup> of God into kinship with Him, for what relation

PHILO

- ὁμολογία συγγένεια γίνεται. τί γὰρ οἰκειότερον 178 υἱῷ πατρὸς ἢ υἱοῦ πατρί; ἀλλ' ἵνα μὴ λόγον ἐκ λόγου συνείροντες μηκύνειν δοκῶμεν, ἐναργεστάτην δίχα τῶν εἰρημένων πίστιν παρεξόμεθα τοῦ τὴν ποιὰν κάκωσιν ἀρετῆς ἔργον εἶναι· νόμος γὰρ ἐστὶ τοιοῦτος· “πᾶσαν χήραν καὶ ὀρφανὸν οὐ κακώσετε· ἐὰν δὲ κακία κακώσητε αὐτούς.” τί λέγει; ἄρ' ὑπὸ τινος ἐστὶν ἄλλου κακοῦσθαι; εἰ γὰρ κακίας ἔργα μόνης αἰ κακώσεις, περιττὸν τὸ ὁμολογούμενον γράφειν, ὃ καὶ δίχα 179 προσθήκης ἀνομολογηθήσεται. φήσῃ δὲ πάντως· οἶδα καὶ ὑπὸ ἀρετῆς ἐλεγχόμενον καὶ ὑπὸ φρονή-σεως παιδευόμενον. διόπερ οὐ πᾶσαν κάκωσιν ἐν αἰτία τίθεμαι, ἀλλὰ τὴν μὲν δικαιοσύνης καὶ νομοθετικῆς ἔργον οὖσαν—ἐπιπλήξει γὰρ σωφρονίζει—μάλιστα θαυμάζω, τὴν δὲ ἀφροσύνης καὶ κακίας, βλαβερὰν ὑπάρχουσαν, ἀποστρέφομαι καὶ κακίζω δεόντως.
- 180 “Ὅταν οὖν τὴν Ἄγαρ κακουμένην ὑπὸ Σάρρας ἀκούσης, μηδὲν τῶν ἐν ταῖς γυναικείαις ζηλοτυπίαις εἰωθότων γίνεσθαι ὑπονοήσης· οὐ γὰρ περὶ γυναικῶν ἐστὶν ὁ λόγος, ἀλλὰ διανοιῶν, τῆς μὲν γυμναζομένης ἐν τοῖς προπαιδεύμασι, τῆς δὲ τοὺς ἀρετῆς ἄθλους διαθλούσης.

---

<sup>a</sup> The argument in these sections depends, as often, on Philo's failure to understand the well-known Hebrew idiom. Cf., e.g., his treatment of βρώσει φάγη (Gen. ii. 16) in Leg. All. i. 97 and of θανάτῳ ἀποθανείσθε of the same text in Leg. All. i. 105.

THE PRELIMINARY STUDIES, 177-180

can be closer than that of a father to a son, or a son to a father? But lest the series of argument following argument should seem tedious and prolix, I will add but one proof, and that the clearest, to those here given, to shew that affliction or ill-usage of a kind is a work of virtue.<sup>a</sup> There is a law in the following terms: "Ye shall not evil-entreat any widow or orphan, but if ye evil-entreat them with evil<sup>b</sup>" (Ex. xxii. 22). What does he mean? Is it that one can be evil-entreated by some other thing than evil? For if evil-treatments are the work of evil and nothing else, it is superfluous to add what is a matter of agreement and will be admitted even without any further words. No doubt he means to say, "I know that one 179 may be rebuked by virtue and disciplined by wisdom, and therefore I do not hold all afflicting or evil-entreating to be blameworthy." When it is the work of justice and the power of the law which chastens by reproof I am filled with admiration. When it is the work of folly and vice and therefore harmful, I turn away from it and call it by the evil names that are its due.

When, then, you hear of Hagar as afflicted or evil- 180 entreated by Sarah, do not suppose that you have here one of the usual accompaniments of women's jealousy. It is not women that are spoken of here; it is minds—on the one hand the mind which exercises itself in the preliminary learning, on the other, the mind which strives to win the palm of virtue and ceases not till it is won.

<sup>b</sup> Or "evil-mindedness," and so throughout for κακία.

APPENDIX TO DE CONFUSIONE

§ 5. All of whom are agreed that the earth is the centre of the universe. Cf. Aristot. De Caelo, ii. 13, 293 α τῶν πλείστων ἐπὶ τοῦ μέσου κείσθαι (sc. τὴν γῆν) λεγόντων. The contrary opinion, that the centre is fire, was held by the Pythagoreans. Cf. also Diog. Laert. ix. 57.

§ 24. Creeping and flying . . . beasts. Evidently these represent the θῦμος and ἐπιθυμία in the whole ψυχή, though Philo does not show which is which, cf. § 21. Judging from that we may suppose that the "flying" are the ἐπιθυμῖαι.

§ 27. Veiled under their name of Sodomite. The phrase κατὰ γλώττιαν does not imply a Hebrew word, for the other two examples in the index (αἰθεῖν 156 below, "Ἀρης from ἀρήγειν, Leg. ad Gaium 112) are both Greek. A γλώσσα is often an obscure word which requires explanation (hence our glossary). So ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐδὲ ποιητὰς ἐπαινοῦμεν τοὺς κατὰ γλώσσαν γράφοντας ποιήματα, Lucian, Lexiph. 25. Cf. "lingua secretior, quas Graeci γλώσσας vocant," Quintilian, i. 35.

§ 44. Jer. xv. 10. Other mss. of the LXX have οὐκ ὠφέλησα οὐδὲ ὠφέλησάν με, and so some of the mss. of Philo. Origen, however, remarks that while most of the copies of the LXX have ὠφέλ-, the best and those most conforming to the Hebrew have ὠφείλ-. Wendland adopted ὠφείλ- on the grounds (1) that the better mss. of Philo have it, (2) that it is supported by the interpretation given in § 50. This last seems to me very doubtful, and altogether there is little or nothing to choose between the two.

§ 46. Fullest peace. The epithet ἀπόλεμος is applied to εἰρήνη in De Fug. 174, but in the sense of the true (inward) peace, and in somewhat the same way in De Op. 142. Here it seems pointless, unless we suppose that εἰρήνη conveys to

PHILO

Philo something short of an unbroken peace. The first half of this sentence almost repeats De Gig. 51.

§ 52. The touch, etc. The sentence as taken in the translation is extremely awkward. Further, the analogy of De Plant. 133, where ἀφή is called ἡ ἀνά πᾶν τὸ σῶμα σκιδραμένη δύναμις, suggests that τῶν ἐν τοῖς σώμασι δυνάμεων is the faculty of touch. This might be obtained if we omit the second τῶν and transpose κατὰ τὰς προσπιπτούσας τὸ after δυνάμεων, i.e. "about the faculties or sensations residing in our bodies corresponding to the particular substances which come in contact with them."

§ 55. τροφόν. This reading, which personifies Midian, fits better with τὸν ἐκγονοῦν αὐτῆς than τροφήν. On the other hand, the latter might be regarded as an allusion to Num. xxv. 2 "the people ate of their sacrifices," and Ps. cv. (cvi.) 28 καὶ ἐτελέσθησαν τῷ Βεελφεγῶρ καὶ ἔφαγον τὰς θυσίας νεκρῶν. To suppose an allusion to the Psalm will give extra point to νεκρῶν. Philo may have understood it to refer to the worshippers instead of to the idols.

Ibid. ὑμνοῦντα. This alteration of one letter will enable the sentence to be translated without any other change, though it is true that it would be more natural to take ἀφῶνον καὶ νεκρῶν as predicate after ἀποδεῖξαι rather than, as it is taken in the translation, as a further attribute to χορῶν. If ὑμνοῦντα is retained with Wendland (and his suggestion that it is an antithesis to ὀρώντος has some support from De Mig. 222 τυφλὸν γὰρ ὕπνος), some other alteration is required. Wendland himself suggested γελάσαντες or ἀγαπήσαντα for γελασθέντα. Mangey's suggestion of τελεσθέντα is very tempting, cf. De Mut. 196. But I see no way of fitting it into the construction. It can hardly be supposed that the idiom of τελεῖσθαι τελετήν can be extended to τελεῖσθαι Μαδιάμ.

§ 70. Submerged. Or "have taken refuge in." Cf. the use of ὑπόδρομος Quod Deus 156. Philo reads this sense into the LXX. ἐφυγον ὑπὸ τὸ ὕδωρ, which meant presumably "fled with the water over or threatening them." E.V. "fled against it."

§ 90. The other members of that fraternity and family. This passage follows the Stoic classification. The four passions and the four vices mentioned are those of the Stoics, who added, as secondary to the primary four, incontinence (ἀκρασία), stupidity (βραδύνοια), ill-advisedness (δυσβουλία),

APPENDICES

Diog. Laert. vii. 93. It is these last three which presumably are meant here.

§ 99. An appearance of brick. Wendland was inclined to correct εἶδος to ἔργον, in accordance with the quotation of the text above, and εἶδος might well be a slip of the scribe induced by the preceding εἶδει. But on the other hand εἶδος seems to be needed to represent the δοκεῖ of the interpretation. It seems to me safer to regard it as a slip of Philo himself, who for the moment thought that the εἶδος of the quotation went with πλινθον instead of with στερεώματος.

§ 103. The asphalt was clay. In the original quotation in § 2 the mss. shew, as the LXX itself, ἄσφαλτος ἐγένετο ὁ πῆλος. The question naturally arises whether we should emend the text there to bring it into conformity with this, as Wendland suggests (see footnote there). On the whole it seems to me better to leave it and to suppose that Philo here rests his argument on the order of the words. He seems sometimes to attribute an extraordinary value to order, cf. Quod Deus 72 and De Mig. 140.

§ 106. It is impossible to reproduce in translation the thoughts which the ἀστέιος of Ex. ii. 2 suggests here to Philo. Struck, like the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews (xi. 23), with the word applied to the infant Moses in the sense of a fine child, on which he also comments in De Congressu 132, he naturally enough connects it with the Stoic use for "virtuous." But he also remembers its connexion with ἄστυ, and this enables him to identify the ἀστέιον παιδίον with another ideal of the Stoics, the "world-citizen"; see De Op. 3 and note. The same play on the double meaning of ἀστέιος appears in § 109 ἀστέιοι . . . πολιτεύματι.

§ 108. θεοῦ δε ἕμνος. In support of the emendation suggested in the footnote, it may be noted that Ps. xlv. (xlvi.) 4 is actually interpreted in a way very similar to what I suggest here in De Som. ii. 246 ff. There we are told that the "city of God" signifies in one sense the world, in another, the soul of the Sage.

It is no objection, I think, that ἡ τοιαύδε naturally, though not necessarily, refers to πολιτεία rather than πόλις. If the city is God's, its πολιτεία must be God's also.

§ 111. ὁ νοῦς. While the use of "the mind" in the sense of an evil mind is quite Philonic, it does not occur elsewhere in this passage, and just above we have ὁ ἀφρων.

PHILO

The very easy correction to δνους seems to me therefore very probable.

§ 115. I have not been able to find elsewhere this argument or statement that the apparent examples of a providential administration of the world are sufficiently explained by τὸ αὐτόματον, and are not frequent enough to amount to even human, much less divine, providence. Philo does not repeat it in the arguments adduced by the inquirer in De Prov. 11. The sections of the De Nat. Deorum in which Cotta discusses "deorumne providentia mundus regatur" are lost.

§ 124. The causes which come higher, etc. I.e. apparently, mind and sense, which are nearer to the original Cause than the circumstances which we often call "causes." The word seems to be introduced to interpret the "firstlings" in Abel's offering. But a more natural sense would be obtained if we suppose that the scribe by a not unnatural slip wrote πρεσβυτέρας for νεωτέρας.

Philo seems to use αἰτία for secondary causes in preference to αἴτιον. He only uses it of God when contrasting Him with other αἰτίαι.

§ 137. περιττεύειν, κτλ. For my suggestion of πέρα τοῦ εἶναι που for περιττεύειν οὐ cf. Aristotle, Phys. iv. 1, p. 208 b 29 διὰ τὸ νομίζειν, ὡσπερ οἱ πολλοί, πάντα εἶναι που καὶ ἐν τόφῳ. For πέρα cf. πέρα μνήμης καὶ νοήσεως ἰστάμενον, De Mut. 12.

Ibid. In accordance with the derivation of that name. I.e. θεός from τίθημι. Philo always uses ἔτυμον and ἐτύμως in this technical way, cf. e.g. De Vita Mos. i. 17 δίδωσιν ὄνομα θεμένη Μωσῆν ἐτύμως διὰ τὸ ἐκ τοῦ ὕδατος αὐτὸν ἀνελεῖσθαι τὸ γὰρ ὕδωρ μῶν ὀνομάζουσι Αἰγύπιοι. The one example of those given in the index which at first sight appears to be an exception shews the rule most clearly. In Quod Omn. Prob. 73 we have οἱ ἐτύμως ἐπτά σοφοὶ προσονομασθέντες, which we might naturally suppose to mean that they were truly called wise. But examination shews that the allusion is to the supposed derivation of σοφός from σεβασμός, from which also ἐπτά is, according to Philo, derived (De Op. 127).

§ 141. ἀκοὴν μὴ μαρτυρεῖν. This is the form in which the mss. give the phrase in a similar passage in De Spec. Leg. iv. 61, and which is regularly used by Demosthenes and Isaeus. Wendland on that passage notes that here ἀκοῆ should be corrected to ἀκοήν.

APPENDICES

Philo is no doubt alluding to the Attic orators, particularly to Dem. Contra Eubuliden p. 1300 πάσι προσήκειν . . . μηδεμίαν προσάγειν ἀκοήν πρὸς τὸν τοιοῦτον ἀγῶνα. οὕτω γὰρ τοῦτ' ἀδικὸν καὶ σφόδρα πάλαι κέκριται, ὥστ' οὐδὲ μαρτυρεῖν ἀκοήν ἐῷσιν οἱ νόμοι, οὐδ' ἐπὶ τοῖς πάνυ φαύλοις ἐγκλήμασι. So too in ps.-Dem. Contra Steph. ii. p. 1130, Contra Leoch. p. 1027, where exception is made if the person who was heard is dead. See Dict. of Ant. art. "Akoēn Marturein." In De Spec. Leg. Philo definitely says, what he perhaps implies here, that the Attic legislators took the principle from Moses.

§ 149. Ryle, Philo and Holy Scripture, p. xxvi, supposes the reference to be to Ezra viii. 2. This is quite unnecessary. Ezra is nowhere else quoted by Philo, and Ryle's idea, that the use of βασιλικαί instead of the usual βασιλειαί points to a different group from the books of Kings, is fanciful.

§ 151. ἐπὶ τῆς πολιτίδος τὸ κατασκευαστόν. While the general sense of this is clear, the text is very doubtful. κατασκευαστόν ("artificial") for the regularity which seems artificial is strange but not impossible, and τὸ παραπλήσιον may be used as an adverb. But the word πολίτις, only known as the feminine of πολίτης, is impossible here, where fever or malaria is clearly meant.

I suggest very hesitatingly that τῆς πολιτίδος may be a corruption of τῆς σπληνίτιδος. The word σπληνίτις for a disease of the spleen is not found in the medical writers, but they constantly insist on the enlargement of the spleen as a regular symptom of malaria (see W. H. S. Jones, Malaria, index).

Wendland would correct to ἐπὶ τῆς πυρετοῦ καταβολῆς τὸ παραπλήσιον, which bears little resemblance to the text.

Mangey thought that the whole passage was an irrelevant interpolation. On the contrary, as an illustration of Philo's point, that we find harmony and regularity in things evil, it seems very appropriate.

Ibid. eis αὐτά. The phrase is, as it stands, unintelligible. I suggest and have translated eis αὐτὰς or eis αὐτὰς αὐτήν (with regard to themselves, i.e. each other). I understand Philo to mean that while the attacks recur at the same hour, they vary somewhat in nature, but the varieties also have a regular order. Whether this is medically untrue, or whether if it is, Philo is likely to have thought it true, I do not know.

PHILO

Wendland suggested αὐτὴν αἰεὶ. Mangey read εἰς τὰ γούδα. I think ἰσότητα might be worth considering.

§ 154. ὅς τι τῶν δυνάτων. This seems to me less unsatisfactory than Wendland's reading. But τι=ότιοῦν in this position is strange. Possibly οὐ τι (adverbial). Also ἔθος, for which Wendland would substitute θέμις, is odd. Altogether the text is unsatisfactory.

§ 164. The fortunes of tyrants. Philo doubtless has in mind the description of the miserable condition of tyrants in Republic, Bk. ix., particularly 576 B.

§ 165. Free licence to sin. This use of ἐκεχειρία (cf. τὴν εἰς τὸ ἀμαρτάνειν ἐκεχειρίαν, De Jos. 254) seems peculiar to Philo. It suggests that when it occurs without such explanatory phrases, as in De Cher. 92 and De Sac. 23, the meaning is rather licence in general, than, as it was translated there, "freedom from stress of business."

§ 173. Each of them as a whole. Did anyone deify the νοητὸς κόσμος? Philo perhaps means that the deification of the visible world ipso facto involved that of the invisible.

§ 174. ἐκάστων. I retain this, supposing that the army of the subordinates are regarded as formed of three kinds, (1) the Potencies who as agents in the creation of the two worlds stand above the rest, (2) the divine natures in heaven, i.e. the heavenly bodies, (3) the "souls" or angels in the lower air.

§§ 184-187. The sense of these sections is given also by Stobaeus, as from Chrysippus (S.V.F. ii. 471), with the same illustrations from the wine and water and oiled sponge, and much the same language throughout. There is, however, a complete difference in his use of the term μίξις, which he distinguishes from παράθεσις and applies to the ἀντιπαρέκτασις δι' ὄλων in dry substances while κράσις is reserved for the same in liquids. His example of μίξις is the mixture of fire and iron in heated iron. It does not follow that Philo made a mistake; the use of terms seems to have varied. Cf. ibid. 473.

§ 186. Resolved. Or "expanded." Some mss. ἀναπληροῦσθαι. See on the word Liddell & Scott (1927). The suggestion there that the word suggests "resolving into simple elements" is unnecessary.

§ 187. Confusion is the annihilation. Cf. S.V.F. 473 (also from Chrysippus) τὰς δὲ τινὰς (sc. μίξεις γίνεσθαι) συγχύσει, δι' ὄλων τῶν τε οὐσιῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν αὐταῖς ποιότητων συμφθειρομένων ἀλλήλαις, ὡς γίνεσθαι φησιν ἐπὶ τῶν λατρικῶν φαρμάκων, κατὰ σύμφθαρσιν τῶν μιγνυμένων ἄλλου τινὸς ἐξ αὐτῶν γεννωμένου σώματος.

APPENDICES

§ 198. Heinemann in a note added to Stein's translation considers that πεφορημένος is unsuitable here and suggests πεφυρημένος. But this comes from φυράω, which will not give any suitable meaning, and the word of which he is thinking is no doubt πεφυρμένος, from φύρω, which is certainly often combined with συγχέω, cf. particularly Spec. Leg. iv. 77 διαίρειτω καὶ διακρινέτω τὰς φύσεις τῶν πραγμάτων ἵνα μὴ φύρηται συγχεόμενα τοῖς παρασήμοις τὰ δόκιμα. However, the explanation of πεφορημένος given in the footnote seems to me satisfactory, cf. the combination of πεφορημένος with ἄσωτος to indicate the profligate in De Fug. 28, and πάντη φορούμενος associated with σπείρεται in the sense of διασπείρεται in De Cong. 58.

APPENDIX TO DE MIGRATIONE

§ 5. Soul as soul. This phrase, which occurred in Quod Det. 9, belongs, as Posner points out, to Stoic usage. See Sext. Emp. Adv. Math. vii. 233. The Stoics call the φαντασία a τύπωσις ἐν ψυχῇ ὡς ἂν ἐν ψυχῇ, because "impression on the soul" might in itself be applied to a pain felt in any part of the living organism. The addition, ὡς ἂν ἐν ψυχῇ signifies that it is "no chance part" which is affected, but the mind or dominant principle.

§ 17. Untouched by corruption and worthy of perpetual memory. What is the distinction between ἀξιομημόνευτα and ἀφθάρτα or ἀδιάφθορα? Apparently the former are Joseph's vision of, or hope for, the future, while the latter are the record of his life, so far as it is good. Philo may mean that while the record remains in the background as an example, the hope becomes the inspiring principle of the succeeding generations. If so, "ever to be borne in mind" might perhaps give better the sense of ἀξιομημόνευτα.

§ 21. He derided lusts, etc. Neither Mangey nor Wendland give the reference to Gen. xxxix. 14 and 17, where Potiphar's wife says "Lo, he hath brought in a Hebrew servant to mock at us" (ἐμπαίζειν ἡμῶν). Presumably they supposed the words to be a general description of Joseph's continence. But the form shews that it is a separate item in Joseph's virtues, each based on a separate text. "Us" is interpreted as meaning "all the passions." That in the story the "mocking" referred to Joseph's alleged misconduct matters little or nothing to Philo.

§ 23. ἀνέχεται . . . ἐνθάπτεται . . . παρέπεται. I have no hesitation in rejecting Mangey's and Wendland's emendation of these to infinitives. Not only would these require, as Wendland indeed saw, the insertion of τὸ (or rather οἶον τὸ to agree with πολλὰ), and perhaps the change of οὐ to μή, but the sense seems to me quite inferior. This particular "trait" has already been given as one of the ἀξιωμασημόμενυτα in § 18. I understand the sentence to sum up all that has been said and to assert that the good deeds and words are the "bones," which themselves cry to be taken from Egypt, and in fact never have been buried at all, a phrase quite inapplicable to Joseph himself. There would of course from this point of view be no objection to reading ἐνθάπτεσθαι dependent on ἀνέχεται, but no sufficient reason for the alteration.

APPENDICES

§ 24. διακρίνει παρελθόνων. The text is very perplexing. As H has παρελθόντα, Wendland suggests as a possibility διακρίνεται παρ' ἐλπίδα. This seems to me out of place. Mangey suggested διακρίνεται παραλυθέντα. The reading which Wendland actually prints, and which has been reproduced here, is not satisfactory, as the παρελθόνων is very pointless. I should hesitatingly suggest either διακρίνει παρελθόνων, "removes" and "separates," or better, as retaining the διακρίνεται of all mss., διακρίνεται παρεισεληθόντων, "is separated from adventitious accretions." παρεισέρχομαι in the sense of "invading surreptitiously" is used by Philo, De Op. 150, De Ebr. 157.

§ 32. Release. An allusion to the ordinance by which in the sabbatical year the land (here compared to the mind) was to be left fallow, Ex. xxxiii. 11 τῷ δὲ ἐβδόμῳ ἄφεσιν ποιήσεις καὶ ἀνήσεις αὐτήν, καὶ ἔδονται οἱ πτωχοὶ τοῦ ἔθνους σου. In Lev. xxv. 4-7 we have the same ordinance, but with ἀνάπανσις for ἄφεσις. Philo understands that the land by divine grace will bear plentifully of itself. Compare his φορὰ τῶν αὐτοματιζομένων ἀγαθῶν with τὰ αὐτόματα ἀναβαλίνοντα of Lev. He may also be thinking of the somewhat similar ordinance of the Jubilee year, ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, though there ἄφεσις means release for the people rather than for the land. On ὡσπερ τῶν ἐκουσίῳν Mangey wrote "omnino male" and proposed ὡς φόρτων τῶν ἐτησίῳν. But ἐκούσιος is in Philo's thought the direct antithesis of αὐτόματος.

§ 35. ἔσχον γὰρ ἐρμηνείαν, εὔρεσιν. I have adopted Markland's ἔσχον for σχεδόν, but see every reason against changing εὔρεσιν. The five elements of composition are εὔρεσις, τάξις or οἰκονομία, ἐρμηνεία (otherwise called φράσις, λέξις, ἀπαγγελία), μνήμη, ὑπόκρισις. Philo enumerates them in De Som. i. 205. Of these terms the two last belong entirely to spoken oratory, and τάξις would be out of place. When inspiration comes, the two things that come are "ideas" and "language."

PHILO

These two (in Latin inventio and elocutio) are often given as the kernel of composition, e.g. Quintilian, Pr. 12 "omnia inventionione atque elocutione explicanda sunt." See note on De Cher. 105.

§ 42. Insight. The not very common word εἰδησις is evidently introduced with reference to εἶδεν. So in the other place where Philo uses it (De Plant. 36), it is connected with the tree of knowledge, which in Gen. ii. 9 is the tree τοῦ εἶδέναι.

Ibid. To give teaching . . . to the ignorant, etc. Or it might be taken "to give teaching . . . is proper not for the ignorant, but only for the One who knows." Mangey translates the reading he adopted (see critical note), "decebat igitur ignorantes docere, commonstrareque illis singula, non vero scientem," apparently meaning that it is right to teach the ignorant, but not to teach God who knows. But apart from the question whether εἶχε εὐπρεπές can mean "decebat," this has no bearing on the proof that it is God who "shews."

§ 49. The various parts of speech. By Philo's time the primitive division into verbs, nouns, and conjunctions (the first two often standing alone in popular language) had been greatly developed and this is recognized in the συνδῶλος of § 48. The phrase οἱ εἰς ὀνομάτων καὶ ῥημάτων ἰδέας μεριζόμενοι may recur to the primitive division and suggest that there are only two main ἰδεαί (so the translation), or he may mean that verbs and nouns have their various ἰδεαί or subdivisions, the pronoun being a form of the noun and the adverb of the verb. See the loci classici in Quintilian, i. 4. 18, and Dion. Hal. De Comp. 2.

§ 54. Both in conduct of life and in principle. Philo's conception of moral "greatness," as shewn by his illustrations in § 55, is a full development and intensification of each particular virtue, and this he equates with the power to understand and know. Possibly, therefore, here τὰ περι τὸν βίον κατορθώματα = πλήθος, and τὰ περι λόγον = μέγεθος. If so, the former will represent the καθήκοντα or "daily duties" of the Stoics, and the latter their κατορθώματα proper, which connoted to them inwardness and sustained moral purpose. See note on Quod Deus 100.

§ 69. ἐπιγραφόμενος. This correction of Wendland's for αἰνιττόμενος is based on the close imitation of the passage in Clem. Alex. Protrept. 25 αἰνιττεται δε . . . τὸν πολλοὺς ἐπι-

APPENDICES

γραφόμενον ψευδωνύμου θεοῦ ἀντὶ τοῦ μόνου ὄντος θεοῦ, ὡσπερ ὁ ἐκ τῆς πόρνης τοὺς πολλοὺς ἐπιγράφεται πατέρας ἀγνοία τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν πατρός. Mangey suggested ἀναπλαττόμενος, which is not as good sense, though nearer to the mss.

§ 79. Mints them . . . before. The paraphrastic translation is an attempt to bring out Philo's play upon ἀσημος and ἐπίσημος as signifying (1) uncoined and coined money, (2) obscure and clear or conspicuous.

Ibid. In it. Philo quotes Ex. iv. 14 in three other places. In De Mut. 168 the mss. have as here ἐν αὐτῷ. In Quod Det. 126 and 135, they have, as the LXX itself, ἐν ἑαυτῷ and the comment on the latter of these shews that this is what Philo wrote. While printing ἐν αὐτῷ I feel very doubtful as to its correctness here and in De Mut.

§ 94. Realities. For the philosophical use of ὑπαρκτά cf. τεκμήριον τοῦ ὑπαρκτῆν εἶναι τὴν ἀρετὴν, Diog. Laert. vii., and ἔστι μὲν ὑπαρκτὸν πρᾶγμα σοφία, De Mut. 37. Compare the same point in De Sac. 43, where the force of ὑπαρκτά was unfortunately not properly recognized in the translation. Similarly in Leg. All. iii. 197 Ἀβραὰμ . . . τὰ μὲν ὑπάρχοντα . . . κατέχει, ἀποπέμπεται δὲ τὴν ἵππον τοῦ βασιλέως Σοδόμων ὡς καὶ τὰ ὑπαρκτά τῶν παλλακῶν, it now seems clear to me that we should read τὰ <μὴ> ὑπαρκτά, perhaps also τῶν <ἴων τῶν> παλλακῶν.

§ 125. The threefold divisions of eternity. Or "time." This curious interpretation of the three patriarchs is perhaps explained in § 154. "The clear sight of things present," and the "expectation of things to come," fit in fairly well with the αὐτομαθῆς and the προκόπτων, the characters regularly assigned to Isaac and Jacob, while the "memory of the past" suits, though not so well, the διδακτικὴ ἀρετὴ of Abraham. He may also be thinking of Ex. iii. 15, where "God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob" is God's αἰώνιον ὄνομα.

§ 138. Spin your airy fables. The word ἀερομυθεῖτε need not mean more than talk windily, cf. the use of ἀερόμυθος in the list of vices in De Sacr. 33. But there may be a special significance in it here, as the moon at any rate bordered on the ἀήρ (S. V. F. ii. 527).

§ 140. It does not say, etc. This amazing argument admits of no satisfactory explanation. It clearly demands that παιδίον may be nominative, but Mangey's suggestion to read Σάρραν is out of the question. Apart from other difficulties, the natural negation would be οὐχὶ Σάρρα. Nor can Philo be supposed to have really thought that Σάρρα was indeclinable, seeing that he uses Σάρρας in the same sentence and elsewhere Σάρραν itself. The least unsatisfactory explanation I can give is that he means that Σάρρα, like other O.T. names, which though capable of being declined in Greek are not declined, e.g. Ἀαρών, might conceivably be undeclinable and that therefore Moses, wishing to suggest that, though literally Sarah suckles Isaac, spiritually Isaac suckles Sarah, uses this form rather than the passive, in which no ambiguity would be possible. Possibly also he puts some reliance on παιδίον preceding Σάρρα. See on De Conf. 102.

PHILO

§ 150. The allusions in this section are (1) to Lot's settling in Sodom (Gen. xii. 32), which naturally signifies his "old complaint" of ἀμαθία, cf. De Conf. 27, (2) to his capture (xiv. 12) by the Four Kings, signifying the four passions, cf. De Congressu 22, (3) the quarrel between the shepherds of Lot and Abraham (xiii. 7), which Philo unfairly turns into a conflict between the two men.

§ 160. The idol of Egyptian vanity. The meaning of this is not clear. In the other places where Philo uses Αἰγυπτιακὸς τύφος it is with reference to the Golden Calf as being a return to Egyptian idolatry. The meaning therefore here may be that by riding behind Pharaoh he acknowledges him as a god. But in De Som. ii. 46, where this incident is referred to, Joseph himself is ὑποτυφόμενος, and ibid. 16 we have ἀναβαίνει ἐπὶ τὴν κενὴν δόξαν ὡς ἐφ' ἄρμα. This suggests that ἰδρύεται here may mean "seats himself on," but no real parallel is forthcoming. Mangey suggested ἐνδύεται.

§ 164. μελιτῶν. The μὲν αὐτῶν of the mss. seems to me to break down in two ways. There is no antithesis for the μὲν. Philo's μὲν indeed is occasionally not followed by δέ, but in these cases there is, wherever I have noted them, an antithesis to something which has gone before. Again, the plural αὐτῶν is quite out of place where both the people concerned are in the singular, and the one cannot be supposed to have any share in the labours of the other. It will be admitted that μελιτῶν makes excellent sense. Textually the ΛΙ of ΜΕΛΙΤΤΩΝ passes very easily into Ν, and Ῥ with no great difficulty into Τ, and when ΜΕΝΤΤΩΝ had thus been obtained the insertion of A to make sense would naturally follow.

APPENDICES

§ 165. ὕπ' εὐθυμίας. It is not clear what cheerfulness has to do with the φιλοθεάμων or why it opens the eyes of the soul. As all mss. (except H<sup>2</sup>) have ὑπὲρ εὐθυμίας, it is possible, I think, that the true reading may be ὕπ' ἐρεῦνης θείας, which exactly describes the φιλοθεάμων. Compare τῆς τῶν θείων ἐρεῦνης, Leg. All. iii. 71 and (for the objective use of θείος) τῆς θείας θεωρίας, § 150 above, and θείος ἡμερος, § 157.

§ 167. Arts copying Nature's works, etc. Cf. De Ebr. 90, where art is the μίμημα and ἀπεικόνισμα of nature, on which Adler remarks that, as the context shews, it does not mean that art imitates natural objects, but that it follows Nature's methods. So here ἔργων may be "ways of working," "processes."

§ 174. ὑποστειλῆται σε . . . The Hebrew and E.V. have "will not pardon thy transgression." Did the LXX. mean much the same "he will not shrink (from punishing)"? At any rate Philo would seem to have taken it in some such sense, for where the text is quoted in the Quaestiones (in Exod. ii. 13) the Latin version of the Armenian has "non enim verebitur te."

§ 180. For if it came into being and is one, etc. Philo takes ἓν in the full sense of the Stoic ἡνωμένον (cf. note on Quod Det. 49) and argues that if the world is ἡνωμένον, it must be composed of the same elements throughout and this, it is implied, will in itself effect συμπάθεια. Sext. Emp. Adv. Math. ix. 78 (S.V.F. ii. 1013) puts the Stoic argument in much the same way but in reverse order. Only ἡνωμένα exhibit συμπάθεια, and since there is συμπάθεια between the parts of the Cosmos, the Cosmos must be an ἡνωμένον σῶμα.

§ 206. διανιστάμενον. My suggestion of διανεσταμένον is made provisionally subject to better knowledge as to this perfect passive in the compounds of ἴστημι. In Timaeus 81 D there is at any rate some authority for διεσταμένοι. So the LXX in Num. xxxi. 48 καθεσταμένοι. Here a few mss. have διενιστάμενον. The present must mean "waking up," as in Quod Deus 97. Cohn's suggestion of διασυνιστάμενον (presumably meaning "proved to be such," i.e. μνημονικόν) does not give much point to ἄτε.

§ 207. That does not call for our censure. The application of the adjective ἀνεπιλήπτων, which usually denotes high praise, to the hybrid number seventy-five is at first sight strange, and Mangey's proposal <οὐκ> ἀνεπιλήπτου is textually, considering our experience of the omissions of the negative in Philo, quite sound. But it would really give an inferior sense. The stress is here laid on the virtues of seventy-five, not on its shortcomings, and if we give ἀνεπιλήπτου a somewhat reduced sense as in the translation (cf. ταμείας ἀνεπιλήπτου § 89, and De Cong. 138), that stress is well brought out. Midway between Joseph and Moses stands the Jacob soul, ὁ προκόπτων, and in its progress the seventy-five is a necessary and therefore "blameless" stage. This is immediately illustrated by §§ 208 ff., where Jacob even in victory is well-advised to return to Haran, that is, to the world of sense and even (§ 209), of opportunism.

PHILO

§ 210. ζωοτροφεῖ. Mr. Whitaker was inclined to adopt Mangey's suggestion of ζωπυρεῖ, which is in accordance with ζέον καὶ πεπυρωμένον. On the other hand ζωοτροφεῖ serves to carry on the parable in which the passions are the wild cattle reared by the κτηνοτρόφοι of Haran.

§§ 210, 211 (footnote). De Som. ii. 85 ff. looks as if the advice to temporize with angry people is to be taken more literally than I have suggested in the note.

§ 221. τῆ ἐτέρα. Further consideration shews beyond doubt that in De Sac. 37 where we printed, following Cohn and Mangey, οὐ τῆ ῥαστώνη ταῦτα ληπτά we should have put τῆ ἐτέρα or θατέρα. There one ms. has ῥαστώνη, others οὐ τη and οὐχ ἀπλῶς, while by far the best authority, the Papyrus, has ουθετερα, the origin of which is obvious. The phrase seems for some reason to have puzzled the scribes. It is strange that the two German scholars also failed to understand it, for even the old editions of Liddell & Scott record τῆ ἐτέρα λαμβάνειν "to get with little trouble," a proverb," and give the reference to Plato.

APPENDIX TO QUIS RERUM DIVINARUM HERES

§ 14. A spherical shape. Cf. Diog. Laert. vii. 158 ἀκούειν δὲ τοῦ μεταξύ τοῦ τε φωνούντος καὶ τοῦ ἀκούοντος ἀέρος πληττομένου σφαιροειδῶς, εἶτα κυματούμενον καὶ ταῖς ἀκοαῖς προσπίπτοντος, ὡς κυματοῦται τὸ ἐν τῇ δεξαμένῃ ὕδωρ κατὰ κύκλους ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐμβληθέντος λίθου, "we hear when the air between the sonant body and the organ of hearing suffers concussion, a vibration which spreads spherically and then forms waves and strikes upon the ears, just as the water in a reservoir forms wavy circles when a stone is thrown into it" (Hicks's translation). So too Plut. Epit. iv. 20 (Diels, Dox. p. 409), where contrasting the effect of the stone in the pool, he adds καὶ αὕτη μὲν (the pool) κυκλικῶς κινεῖται, ὃ δ' αἶψα σφαιρικῶς.

§ 17. Tense of . . . completed action. The Greek grammarians named the four tenses of past time (χρόνος παρεληλυθῶς) as follows: imperfect, παρατατικός; aorist, ἀόριστος; perfect, παρακείμενος; pluperfect, ὑπερσυντελικός. The name συντελικός for the aorist is sometimes, but rarely, found (see Greek Gramm. Part II. vol. iii. p. 85), but its use, perhaps to cover both aorist and perfect, is reflected in the name for the pluperfect and in the Latin term, perfectum tempus.

§ 25. Thou hast given me a tongue of instruction, etc. The reference for this almost verbatim quotation from Isaiah is given by J. Cohn. It seems to have escaped previous editors.

§ 29. ἀνεστοιχειωμένος. The word, which recurs in §§ 184 and 200, seems to mean "reduced to a single element"; cf. De Vit. Mos. ii. 288 ὃς αὐτὸν δυνάδα ἐντα, σῶμα καὶ ψυχὴν, εἰς μονάδος ἀνεστοιχείου φύσιν. L. & S. "into its elements."

§ 36. ἔφεσιν (mss. φύσιν). I have ventured on this correction because the ms. reading seems to me untranslatable.

PHILO

Mangey has "sinere ut naturae meae bonum interest"; Yonge, "to be indifferent to the sight of my own nature separated from the good"; J. Cohn, "wenn mein Wesen untergehen und nicht mehr die Schönheit schauen würde." I do not see how any of these can be got out of the Greek. Though not common, ἔφεςις in the sense of "desire" is sufficiently authenticated and, if right, was of course intended to echo ἐφίεμαι. At the same time, τὴν ἑμᾶντοῦ φύσιν makes a good antithesis to γένος, and the corruption may lie in τοῦ καλοῦ (as I have alternatively suggested), or in καταλυθεῖσαν.

§ 46. And when the better life, etc. The metaphor is not very clear. It would be made clearer (though at the expense of some awkwardness) if we take συνεπισπασθέν to agree with βάρος instead of with τοῦθ'. In that case the meaning would be that when that part of the mixed which belongs to the better life preponderates in its side of the scales, the base life in the other scale is pulled up and kicks the beam.

§ 52. Gave the name, etc. I do not see much sense in this expression, even if ἠνύμασεν can be taken (as by J. Cohn), as merely meaning "he described as." I am inclined to think that the ἐκείνην of Pap. is right. Though grammatically superfluous after ἦν, so much so as to be almost ungrammatical, it may be partly accounted for by the desire to emphasize the antithesis to ἑαυτοῦ, and it gives a clear sense: "he gave to her who was his own death the name of Life."

§ 75. πάνθειον. It is curious that the Lexica have not noticed the occurrence of this word in Philo, here and in De Aet. 10. Otherwise, apart from definite notices of the Pantheon at Rome, the only example given is a passage in Aristotle quoted by a scholiast and referring to the Pantheon at Olympia.

§ 76. As νοητῶν, added by the Papyrus after ἡμῶν, cannot be translated as it stands, I have not inserted it. It may be a mere slip induced by the νοητός above. Cohn suggested ἔξω γηίνων <καὶ ἐφίεμενος> νοητῶν. The phrase ὑπεξελθὼν ἐξ ἡμῶν for ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ is certainly strange, but may be modelled on the ὅς ἐξελεύσεται ἐκ σοῦ of the text.

§ 81. ἀλλὰ σωματικῶν <καὶ> τὰς ἐν τούτοις. Wendland's text makes the ἐν τούτοις almost unintelligible, unless we may suppose that ταῦτα stands for the phenomenal world; cf. §280 and De Ebr. 132 (and note). The insertion of καὶ and change of punctuation removes the difficulty satisfactorily, though ἐν is hardly the preposition we should expect. Mangey's suggestion of ἐν τόποις gets some support from De Sac. 68.

APPENDICES

§ 115. σπέρματα καὶ καταβολαί. It is hard to decide between this reading and Wendland's ("Are the seed-droppings of the plants the works of agriculture or invisible works of invisible nature?"). My preference for the former chiefly rests on a feeling that while σπέρματα may well be thought of as nature's work (cf. § 121), this cannot be said of the human agency expressed in καταβολαί.

§ 132. Where the object, etc. For the difference between φαντασία καταληπτική and ἀκατάληπτος see Diog. Laert. vii. 46 τῆς δὲ φαντασίας τὴν μὲν καταληπτικὴν, τὴν δὲ ἀκατάληπτον· καταληπτικὴν μὲν . . . τὴν γινομένην ἀπὸ ὑπάρχοντος κατ' αὐτὸ τὸ ὑπάρχον ἐναπεσφραγισμένην καὶ ἐναπομεμαγμένην· ἀκατάληπτον δὲ τὴν μὴ ἀπὸ ὑπάρχοντος, ἢ ἀπὸ ὑπάρχοντος μὲν, μὴ κατ' αὐτὸ δὲ τὸ ὑπάρχον· τὴν μὴ τρανῆ μηδὲ ἔκτυπον, "there are two species of presentation, the one apprehending a real object, the other not. The former . . . is defined as that which proceeds from a real object, agrees with that object itself, and has been imprinted seal-fashion and stamped upon the mind; the latter, or non-apprehending, that which does not proceed from any real object, or, if it does, fails to agree with the reality itself, not being clear or distinct" (Hicks's translation).

§ 136. Fire . . . heaven. The doctrine of the two kinds of fire is Stoic. See S.V.F. i. 120 where the "useful" fire is called ἄτεχνον (non-creative?), and the other τεχνικόν. The best parallel to Philo's language is in Cic. De natura deorum, ii. 40 from Cleanthes where of one he says, "ignis, quem usus vitae requirit, confector est et consumptor omnium idemque, quocumque invasit, cuncta disturbat ac dissipat": of the other, "contra ille corporeus vitalis et salutaris omnia conservat, alit, auget, sustinet sensuque adficit."

§ 144. Other things are equal in capacity, etc. Wendland's punctuation (a comma after μεγέθει) suggests that he understood the words as Mangey, Cohn, and Yonge all do, "cubit compared with cubit is equal in magnitude, but different in power" (Mangey "gravitate"). But this is hardly sense. It is quite easy to understand ἴσα from the preceding ἴσα μεγέθει, and we thus get the third form of equality, of which weights and measures of capacity are a natural example, and which is referred to again in § 151.

PHILO

§ 145. One essential form is the proportional, etc. Wendland refers to Aristot. Pol. viii. 1, p. 1301 b, where proportional equality is called λόγῳ or κατ' ἀξίαν. But there is no need to suppose any definite reference. The idea of ἀναλογία runs through all Greek arithmetic.

§ 156. No heightening or lowering of intensity. A Stoic phrase. The Stoics laid down that Virtue and the Good admitted neither of ἐπίτασις nor ἀνεσις (S. V. F. iii. 92), and in this differed from the τέχναι which did admit of such variations and gradations (ibid. 525). Thus Philo's words are a way of saying that God's art is like the Good and not like human art. For the antithesis of ἐπίτασις and ἀνεσις in a rather different sense cf. Quod Deus 162.

§ 165. The three which followed the sun's creation. This may no doubt mean that the fourth day, on which the sun was created, divided the first, second and third from the fifth, sixth and seventh. But the stress so constantly laid on the ἕξάς of creation, and equality (not the fourth day) being given as the divider, make it more probable that the three μεθ' ἡλιου are the fourth, fifth and sixth. If so, it is strange that the fourth should be called "after the sun." Should we read μεθ' ἡλιου in both places?

§ 169. From his commonwealth. Or "from his own commonwealth." On a similar passage, De Gig. 59, I suggested that Philo was hinting at a comparison between the πολιτεία of Moses and that of Plato, which expelled some forms of poetry for the same reasons as are here given for expelling painting and sculpture, viz. their tendency to produce illusion and deception. No such reason, however, is given here, and further observation of Philo's usage inclines me to think that his use of the reflexive pronoun in such phrases is not to be pressed.

§ 170. <οὐ τοῦ> δ κτλ. That the negative has fallen out is evident. Mangey however proposed <οὐχ> δ, which is quite possible, though οὐ τοῦ δ is more strictly grammatical. If, as suggested in the footnote, we read τοῦ κυρίου <τοῦ θεοῦ>, it would certainly be preferable to follow it by οὐχ δ. That Philo should have written six ου's in succession is hardly credible.

Ibid. The number Seven. The definite use by Philo of ἑβδομάς for the seventh day (ἑβδομή) is certainly rare, but is difficult to avoid here, or in De Vit. Mos. i. 205. For the epithets applied to the ἑβδομάς cf. De Op. 100, and Leg. All. i. 15. In the first of them the idea is ascribed to philosophers other than the Pythagoreans, in the second to the Pythagoreans themselves.

APPENDICES

§ 182. The high priest Moses. As Moses in the history is not high priest, Mangey thought this should be corrected to ἀρχιπροφήτης. But Moses' function here is that of high priest, and he is actually given the title in De Vit. Mos. ii. 75 and elsewhere.

§ 185. νοῦ θείαις or νουθεσίαις. How is the latter to be translated? "Following the admonitions in its revolutions"? Mangey, who suggested and perhaps intended to translate προόδοις for περιόδοις, has "sequendo castigationis ductum"; Yonge, "following the guidance of admonition"; J. Cohn, "zu bestimmter Zeit den Mahnungen Folge leistet." There is no suggestion that any of these adopted νουθεσίαις, which is given by one ms. and would make the phrase more tolerable. I accept Wendland's conjecture with confidence, and suggest that νοῦ περιόδοις is taken from Timaeus 47 B ἵνα τὰς ἐν οὐρανῷ κατιδόντες τοῦ νοῦ περιόδους χρῆσάμεθα ἐπὶ τὰς περιφορὰς τὰς τῆς παρ' ἡμῖν διανοήσεως, and again (ibid. D) ταῖς ἐν ἡμῖν τῆς ψυχῆς περιόδοις. We have already had the combination θείαις περιόδοις in § 88, where the general sense of the passage is in close agreement with Timaeus 47, and though there is less analogy between that and the context here, Philo's love of the dialogue will account for his here introducing the phrase.

§ 188. Filling . . . being. J. Cohn and Leisegang (Index) take this as "filled all existing things." But is πάντα τῆς οὐσίας for πᾶσαν τὴν οὐσίαν Greek? On the other hand it seems doubtful whether ἐκπληροῦν is, like πληροῦν, followed by the genitive. Perhaps read πάντα <τὰ> τῆς οὐσίας.

§ 190. And therefore those who study such questions, etc. Cf. Diog. Laert. viii. 25 of the Pythagorean tenets: ἀρχὴν μὲν ἀπάντων μονάδα· ἐκ δὲ τῆς μονάδος ἀόριστον δυνάδα ὡς ἂν ἕλλην τῇ μονάδι αἰτίῳ ὄντι ὑποστῆναι· ἐκ δὲ τῆς μονάδος καὶ τῆς ἀόριστου δυνάδος τοὺς ἀριθμούς, "the principle of all things is the monad or unit; arising from this monad the undefined dyad or two serves as material substratum to the monad, which is cause; from the monad and the undefined dyad spring numbers" (Hicks's translation).

PHILO

§ 212. ἀπέρατα or ἀπέραντα. If, as would appear from Liddell & Scott (1927), the evidence for the existence of ἀπέρατος in the sense of "unlimited" depends mainly or entirely on Philo, it seems doubtful whether it is worth much. Two examples of ἀπέρατος are given in the index apart from this passage. In one of these ἀπέρατος φλόξ, De Mig. 100, the natural meaning is "impassable." In the other, De Fug. 57, we have ἀπέρατος αἰών in all mss. Here, as stated in the footnote, the mss. are all for ἀπέραντα, though the Papyrus may be said to favour the other. Unless better evidence is forthcoming, there would seem to be good grounds for following the mss. here, and correcting to ἀπέραντος, as Mangey wished, in De Fug. 57.

§ 218. Lamps . . . candle-bearers. I do not vouch for the accuracy of the translation of these terms, which concern the study of the LXX rather than that of Philo. Mangey gives "cauliculi" for λαμπάδια (but also for καλαμίσκοι), and "lucernae" for λύχνοι. J. Cohn translates the two by "Kelche" and "Lampen." When he gives "Kelche" (cups) he is presumably equating λαμπάδια with κρατῆρες in the parallel account of the chandelier in Ex. xxv. 31. The received text of the LXX has ἐνθήμια (sockets?) for ἀνθήμια.

§ 228. The general conflagration. While the general sense of the section is made perfectly clear by the passages referred to in the footnote, there remain the following questions:

(a) The position of the words ἀλλὰ . . . Μωσῆν. Wendland was confident that these words had been written in the margin of the archetype and inserted in different places by different scribes, and omitted by others, and only at last placed in their right position by himself. This is probable enough, but is it quite certain that the Papyrus erred in placing them between σώματος and οὔτε ἰσομεγέθους, since in De Aet. 102 the void, as postulated by the Stoics, is said to be ἄπειρον (and so too S.V.F. ii. 536-540)? Is it impossible that Philo while quoting this should safeguard his statement by adding ἰσομεγέθους?

(b) How did Moses disprove the void? Does Philo mean that since in De Aet. 19 Moses is said to have asserted the eternity of the world in Gen. viii. 22, he thereby denied the ἐκπύρωσις, and consequently the void also? If so, the meaning of διὰ will differ somewhat from that given in the translation, i.e. "nor does the fable of the ἐκπύρωσις, if we follow Moses, justify us in postulating the existence of the void.”

APPENDICES

(c) The chief difficulty of the passage is that διά must be unnaturally strained to yield either meaning. I am inclined to think there is a corruption somewhere. I suggest, very tentatively of course, a lacuna after διά, e.g. δια<φερόμενον τοῖς εισηγουμένοις> τὴν ἐν τῇ κτλ.; cf. De Mig. 180.

§ 242. σώμασιν οὐ πράγμασιν. I feel little doubt that Wendland was wrong in changing οὐ to καί. The balance of the sentence and the stress laid on σώματα throughout the passage, which is a meditation on τὰ σώματα τὰ διχοτομήματα of his text, in themselves support the ms. reading. Wendland may have taken πράγματα to be an interpretation of διχοτομήματα. But surely Philo's interpretation of the word (an interpretation of course entirely opposed to that which he has given in the earlier chapters) is that “bodies cut in two” signify the lifelessness and incompleteness of material things. The question, however, must be decided by the other passages where σώματα and πράγματα are set in antithesis. These are as follows:

(a) De Mut. 60 ἐνιοὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν . . . μώμους ἀεὶ τοῖς ἀμώμοις προσάπτειν ἐθελόντων οὐ σώμασι μᾶλλον ἢ πράγμασι. (The πράγματα attacked by these cavillers are the allegorical explanations of literal difficulties.)

(b) Ibid. 173 Πεντεφρῆ τὸν . . . ἀρχιμάγειρον . . . ἐν ἀψύχοις καὶ νεκροῖς καλινδούμενον οὐ σώμασι μᾶλλον ἢ πράγμασι. I.e., the chief cook in the spiritual sense lives in an environment of dead ideas.

(c) De Som. ii. 101 εὐξαίμην ἂν οὖν καὶ αὐτὸς δυνηθῆναι τοῖς γνωσθεῖσιν ὑπὸ τούτων ἐμμεῖναι βεβαίως· ὀπτῆρες γὰρ καὶ κατὰσκοποι καὶ ἔφοροι πραγμάτων οὐ σωμάτων εἰσὶν ἀκριβοδίκαιοι. This is said of the sons of Jacob representing the wise, and rebuking the empty dreams of Joseph.

In all these apparently πράγματα signifies things belonging to the mental world, ideas in fact, though they need not necessarily be good, as in (b), just as the νοῦς of Egypt is an evil mind. But the antithesis becomes clearer in

(d) Ibid. 134 τὸν μὲν γὰρ φρονήσεως ἀσκητὴν ὑπολαμβάνομεν ἥλιον, ἐπειδὴ περὶ ὃ μὲν τοῖς σώμασιν ὁ δὲ τοῖς κατὰ ψυχὴν πράγμασιν ἐμπαρέχει φῶς. Here πράγματα is definitely connected with νοητά as opposed to αἰσθητά, and the sense is exactly in agreement with our passage, as I understand it.

PHILO

§ 246. The different opinions mentioned in this section represent problems which Philo would constantly have heard disputed in contemporary discussions. In so far as they refer to the historic schools, we may say (1) that the creation of the universe was maintained by the Stoics and Epicureans and denied by the Peripatetics; (2) the words about the eternity of the universe and the reason given for it are almost a quotation from Timaeus 41 B, though there it is the "lesser gods," not the universe, which are spoken of; (3) "becoming" and "being" may be assigned respectively to Heracleitus and the Eleatic school, but Philo was familiar with the antithesis in Plato, e.g. Theaetetus 152, where also (4) he found the famous saying of Protagoras that "man is the measure of all things." He takes it in what may have been its original, though perhaps not the generally accepted, meaning, as opposed to the sceptical view that our mind and senses are untrustworthy, and so also in the other two places where he quotes it (De Post. 35 and De Som. ii. 193), though there it is its profanity as claiming for man what belongs only to God which is stressed. (5) "Those who maintain that everything is beyond our apprehension" are the sceptics, both those of the school of Pyrrho and the later Academy, while "those who assert that a great number of things are cognizable" are the non-sceptical philosophers in general, none of whom would assert more than that knowledge was generally, but not universally, attainable.

§ 249. Divine possession or frenzy. Philo in this description of prophetic "ecstasy" evidently has in mind Phaedrus 244 E and 245 A in which the words κατοκωχή τε και μανία occur (followed at once by the phrase ἀπαλήν και ἄβατον ψυχήν which he has already used in § 38). Cf. § 264.

§ 253. To treat things indifferent as indeed indifferent. So in Quod Det. 122 it is the characteristic of justice ἐξαιαφορεῖν τὰ μεθόρια κακίας και ἀρετῆς, such as wealth, reputation and office, while on the other hand in De Post. 81, if Mangey's emendation is accepted, the misuser of natural gifts ἐξαιαφορεῖ τὰ διάφορα. The words ἐξαιαφορεῖν and -ησις are not quoted from any other writer than Philo.

Ibid. ἀπαρχάς is used here in a general sense, as there is no thought of offering to a god; cf. Dion. Hal. De Comp. iii. λόγων ἀπαρχάς, "specimen passages."

§ 274. Or woman-man. This addition is strange. In the other two places recorded, where Philo uses the word, it is as here coupled with ἀνδρόγυνος, but in contrast with it of a woman who adopts masculine dress or habits—an idea which is quite alien here. I suspect that it is an interpolation.

APPENDICES

Ibid. Stock. See General Introduction, vol. i. p. xvi, though the statement there requires some correction. The ἀποσκευή is not the Encyclia, but the whole fruits of παιδεία of which the Encyclia are the first stage.

§ 282. The phraseology of the section is taken from Timaeus 42 Ε πυρός καὶ γῆς ὑδατός τε καὶ ἀέρος ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου δανειζόμενοι μόρια, ὡς ἀποδοθησόμενα πάλιν.

§ 283. Moving in a circle. Cf. Aristot. De Caelo, i. 2 and 3, where it is laid down that while the four elements have a rectilinear, the ether or fifth element has a circular movement. So also Philo of the heaven in De Somn. i. 21. See also Quod Deus 46 and note.

§ 290. In the shadow of death. The LXX actually has (like the Hebrew) ἐπὶ σκηνώμασι ἁμαρτωλῶν. This curious slip of memory was no doubt partly due to the sound σκ in both phrases.

§ 291. πολύν. This reading of Wendland's, based on the πολύ of Pap., does not seem to me satisfactory. Wendland himself, while noting the πολιόν of G, says "fortasse recte." Yet "grey-haired vanity" also seems strange. I should prefer to read πολιῶν (fem.) or πολιᾶς, both well-known terms for old age.

§ 310. τοῖς . . . ἀγγέλοις. While I retain and translate this, I do not think it satisfactory. The use of ἄγγελος is strange and only distantly paralleled by De Mut. 162 αὐγὴ γὰρ αὐγῆς ἄγγελος. But though Wendland accepted Mangey's ταῖς . . . αὐγαῖς as certain, it seems to me even less satisfactory, at any rate when coupled with Wendland's προσχωροῦντες or Mangey's ἐγχορεύοντες. There is no great likeness of form, and the sense is poor. The clause evidently interprets κάπνος γίνεται πρὸ πυρός. At this stage there are no "rays," and while "hope" may fairly stand for "smoke," to say "when we approach the rays we hope," is a poor equivalent to "smoke comes before fire," and Mangey's "as we move amid the rays we hope" is none at all. It would, however, be much improved if we read πρῶ (πρωί) ἐγχορεύοντες, i.e. "in our first stage of experiencing the rays, we hope" (and nothing more).

PHILO

Perhaps we might bring it still nearer to the mss. by putting ἀγγέλους for ἀγγέλοις. The oven or furnace is actually called an ἀγγεῖον ἀρετῆς a few lines below, and though there, as well as in § 308, we are the furnace, not in it, such a variation of the figure is not impossible. After all it is not really the furnace which smokes, but the fuel in it, and if we read τοῖς τε γὰρ ἀρετῆς ἀγγεῖοις πρῶ (πρωί) ἐγχορεύοντες τελειότητα ἐλπίζομεν, we have a text almost identical with that of the mss. and Pap., and giving a sense intelligible in itself (though not in complete agreement with its environment), that "when we are in the early stage of playing the part of fuel in the furnaces in which virtue is produced, we emit only the smoke of hoping for the full flame." (This general use of χορεύω and ἐγχορεύω is common enough in Philo, see e.g. De Fug. 45 ὁ ἐτι χορεύων ἐν τῷ θνητῷ βίω.)

§ 314. καθ' ἣν . . . ἀφθάρτοις. The text suggested in the footnote, which might be varied by <διακρίνας> διαφυλάττει for δια<κρίνας> φυλάττει, and κατὰ τὰ ἄ for καθά, is fairly near to the mss. and seems to me to give a satisfactory sense. Mangey strangely accepted Markland's feeble suggestion of τοῖς τιμῶσιν αὐτόν for τοῖς τομεύσιν ἐαυτοῦ.

Ibid. Who are born to life imperishable. With the change of ἐπί to πρέπει (or perhaps to ἔδει), these words present no difficulty. I understand them to be an interpretation, which in fact is needed, of τῷ σπέρματί σου. That the "seed of Abraham" should be called "those who in their origin are incorruptible" is natural enough.

APPENDIX TO DE CONGRESSU

§ 11. Astronomy. Astronomy of an elementary kind was regularly included among the Encyclia, but is not named by Philo in his other lists of the subjects, doubtless because, as often in other writers, it is regarded as a branch of geometry. Cf. Quintilian, i. 10. 46 "quid quod se eadem geometria tollit ad rationem usque mundi? in qua siderum certos constitutosque cursus numeris docet."

§ 15. The calamities . . . undergone. This thought of the ethical value of history and poetry (epic and tragic) has already been brought out in De Sac. 78 f. See also De Abr. 23.

§ 18. Sister and twin. Though ὡς εἶπόν τινες indicates that this is a definite quotation from some writer or writers, the close relation of dialectic to rhetoric, though much discussed by the Stoics (see S. V. F. i. 75, ii. 294), is not described by this phrase in any source known to us. Aristotle speaks of rhetoric as being (1) ἀντίστροφον (counterpart), (2) παραφνές (offshoot), (3) μέρος (part), (4) ὁμοίωμα (copy), of rhetoric (Aristot. Rhet. i. 1. 1, i. 2. 7).

§ 29. On the side of thought . . . deception. It seems to me almost incredible that Leah's handmaid, oratory or rhetoric, should on the side of ideas be limited to sophistical rhetoric, though one might understand this sort being admitted with the other, as indeed we find in De Agr. 13. Below in § 33 there is no such disparagement. I am strongly inclined to suspect a lacuna such as ἡ λογική sc. δύναμις <τῆς διανοίας, οὐχ> ἡ κτλ. Or for τῆς διανοίας we might conjecture τῶν πραγμάτων (facts), in which case ἡ λογική would still agree with εὐρεσις.

§ 53. Battles of argument. Elsewhere in Philo this word and γνωσιμαχία seem to be used generally for contention, without any particular meaning attaching to γνωσι-. Here, however, in combination with συλλαβομαχοῦντες, it seems necessary to give the γνωσι- a more definite meaning, such as "of argument" or "as to knowledge."

PHILO

§ 54. The fount of human life. Cf. S.V.F. i. 205 ἡθός ἐστι πηγὴ βίου, ἀφ' ἧς αἱ κατὰ μέρος πράξεις ρέουσι.

Ibid. <ἀστάς>. That ἀστάς has been lost, as suggested in the footnote, seems to me very probable, though possibly a better form of the sentence, preserving the first ἦ of all mss., and the ἦ before δόγματα of some, would be παλλακὰς μέντοι ἦ ἀστάς, δόξας ἦ δόγματα. It is true that no Biblical example of the ἀστή of the wicked man is given, but in § 59 her existence as the mother of κακία, while the παλλακή is the mother of πάθος, is assumed. If we make this insertion, the conjunction of δόξα (= παλλακή) with δόγμα (= ἀστή) gets a clear meaning. As it stands, this conjunction, which is not recorded elsewhere, is otiose. But in De Sac. 5 we have them contrasted, the καλὸν δόγμα, Abel, with the ἄτοπος δόξα, Cain, and in general δόγμα, though, as in this case, it may be bad, is associated with principles and convictions arrived at by reason in contrast to unreasoning δόξα. That the former should produce vicious principles (κακία) and the latter fleeting passion is quite in keeping.

§ 77. Doting on poetry . . . musical colours. Clem. Al. (Strom. i. p. 332) reproduces these words as κατεγήρασαν οἱ μὲν αὐτῶν ἐν μουσικῇ, οἱ δὲ ἐν γεωμετρίᾳ, ἄλλοι δὲ ἐν γραμματικῇ, οἱ πλεῖστοι δὲ ἐν ῥητορικῇ. Hence Mangey strangely thought that γραμμαῖς should be corrected to γραμματικῇ, though in his translation he retains it as "delineationibus." But Philo's ποιήμασι gives Clement's γραμματικῇ, as his γραμμαῖς gives γεωμετρία. γραμμαῖς cannot mean "drawing," as Yonge certainly and Mangey presumably supposed. It is a regular term for geometrical figures, and γραμμικαὶ ἀποδείξεις for geometrical proofs (Quintilian i. 10. 38.) Mangey translates χρωμάτων κράσει by "temperaturis colorum," which leaves it doubtful whether he thought, as Yonge did, that it meant painting. There can be no reasonable doubt that it refers to the χρώματα of music. Though Aristotle laid stress on γραφικὴ as a means of education, it never appears among the Encyclia. On the other hand the χρώματα, as shown in § 76, are an important element in music. Aristides Quintilianus (p. 18) gives this explanation of the name: χρῶμα, τὸ διὰ ἡμιτονίων συντεινόμενον· ὡς γὰρ τὸ μεταξὺ λευκοῦ καὶ μέλανος χρῶμα καλεῖται, οὕτω τὸ διὰ μέσων ἀμφοῖν θεωρούμενον χρῶμα καλεῖται. This suggests that κράσεις χρωμάτων may mean blendings which constitute χρώματα rather than blendings of them, but I leave this to the experts.

APPENDICES

§ 79. For philosophy, etc. For this Stoic definition cf. S. V. F. ii. 36 τὴν φιλοσοφίαν φασὶν ἐπιτήδευσιν εἶναι σοφίας, τὴν δὲ σοφίαν ἐπιστήμην θείων τε καὶ ἀνθρωπίνων πραγμάτων. Cicero gives it in a form nearer to Philo, De Off. ii. 5 "nec quicquam aliud est philosophia . . . praeter studium sapientiae. Sapientia autem est, ut a veteribus philosophis definitum est, rerum divinarum et humanarum causarumque, quibus eae res continentur, scientia."

§ 107. περινοῖα λογισμοῦ πεποιθίας. The translation given assumes (1) that πεποιθίας (of a soul trusting) is not coordinate with the other participles, (2) that γενητοῦ agrees with λογισμοῦ; neither of which seems likely, though grammatically possible. Moreover, Philo would probably have written τοῦ πεποιθέναι instead of πεποιθίας. Wendland conjectured περὶ πάντα λογισμῶ μεμαθηκίας. This seems very arbitrary. Cohn suggested περινοῖα καὶ λογισμῶ πεπονθίας. But if this means "experiencing through reasoning the nothingness of creation," it does not seem to me Greek. I suggest as slightly better to transfer περ. λογ. πεπ. and read ἰκετευούσης θεὸν ψυχῆς περινοῖα λογισμοῦ <οὐ> πεποιθίας καὶ τὴν ταπεινότητα καὶ οὐδενείαν τοῦ γενητοῦ καὶ τὰς ἐν ἅπασιν τοῖς καλοῖς ὑπερβολὰς καὶ ἀκρότητας τοῦ ἀγενήτου δεδιδαγμένης. This will make good sense and run smoothly, and it seems more likely that Philo thinks that human sagacity (περίνοια) or even human reason proves worthless in this supreme abasement, than that it is the agent by which the soul is schooled to humiliate itself, as Cohn's and Wendland's suggestions imply. Textually the loss of οὐ after λογισμοῦ is negligible and the departure from the mss., apart from the slight change of -αν to -α, lies in the transference of the three difficult words. I shall not be surprised however if it does not give general satisfaction.

§ 133. The founder of this tribe. Wendland gives as reference for the saying "God alone must I honour" Ex. xx. 3, i.e. the First Commandment, and therefore presumably took the γενάρχης to be Moses. But the reference is, I think, to the Blessing of Levi (Deut. xxxiii. 9) "who saith to his father and his mother I have not seen thee, and his brothers he knew not and his sons he disclaimed." In Leg.

PHILO

All. ii. 51 Philo has made a very similar use of this text (though there the father and the mother are mind and body), inferring from it that the Levi-mind rejects all such things for the sake of having God as his portion, in accordance with the words of Deut. x. 9, which he again quotes here. And the same interpretation of Deut. xxxiii. 9 is given in De Fug. 89, where Levi is called ὁ ἀρχηγέτης τοῦ θιάσου τούτου.

§ 141. A system of conceptions, etc. For this Stoic definition cf. S. V. F. i. 73, ii. 93 f. Sometimes in a longer form, συγγεγυμνασμένων καὶ ἐπὶ τέλος εὐχρηστον τῷ βίῳ λαμβανόντων (έχόντων) τὴν ἀναφόραν, where the masculine λαμβανόντων shews that συγγ. also is masculine and that not the conceptions but the things conceived of are coordinated. As ἐγγεγυμνασμένων appears in some examples (see S. V. F. i. 73), Wendland is perhaps somewhat rash in altering to συγγ. If ἐγγ. is retained, translate "exercised upon."

Ibid. For the definition of ἐπιστήμη, given in practically the same words as here, see S. V. F. i. 68.

§ 148. Elucidation of the . . . poets and historians. This definition with minor variations was the accepted one. In the grammar of Dionysius Thrax, which furnished the model for the later grammarians, both Greek and Latin, it appears in the form ἐμπειρία τῶν παρὰ ποιηταῖς τε καὶ συγγραφεῦσι ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ λεγομένων. The definition brings out the important fact that γραμματική originally suggested literary study rather than what we call grammar.

§ 149. The only terms in this list which either need explanation or have not had it on De Agr. 140, 141 are ἀποφαντὸν and περιεκτικόν. From Diog. Laert. vii. 65 it appears that ἀποφαντὸν which I have rendered by "declaratory" = ἀξιωμα, i. e. a statement which must be either true or false, which cannot be said of the forms of speech (ἐρώτημα, etc.) which follow. While D. L. himself defines ἀξιωμα as πράγμα αὐτοτέλές ἀποφαντὸν ὅσον ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ, he has confused his interpreters by quoting Chrysippus: ἀξιωμα ἐστὶ τὸ ἀποφαντὸν ἢ καταφαντὸν ὅσον ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ, ὅλον Ἡμέρα ἐστὶ, Δίῳ περιπατεῖ. This has led Hicks to translate ἀποφαντὸν "capable of being denied," as opposed to καταφαντὸν. But this is surely to confuse ἀποφαντός from ἀποφαίνω with ἀποφατικός from ἀπόφημι. Liddell & Scott both in the earlier and in the recent edition make the confusion worse, as while giving ἀποφ. as "asserting," they say under καταφ. "to be affirmed, opposed to ἀποφαντός." I feel no doubt that ἀποφ. is "affirming" or "capable of being affirmed," and I should explain the καταφαντόν of Chrysippus as a synonym, which some preferred, unless indeed he means that ἀποφ. is used of such sentences as ἡμέρα ἐστί, and καταφ. of such as Δίων περιπατεῖ. Also it might easily be a gloss.

APPENDICES

It should be added that as to ἀποφαντικός, sometimes used for the indicative mood, the examples shew that no doubt is possible, and ἀποφαντικός can hardly be separated from ἀποφαντός.

As for περιεκτικόν, it is most probably a mistake for προστακτικόν (imperative), which appears in D. L.'s list. At any rate if it is genuine, it must have some meaning unknown to us. The only sense in which we meet the word is for a place in which a number of things or persons are collected, e.g. ἀμπελών, παρθενών. Stephanus, indeed, has a statement, which L. & S. have copied, that περιεκτικόν ῥήμα is a verb in the middle voice, but no authority is given. And both these meanings are impossible in a list which contains different forms of sentences.

§ 155. "In thy hands." I suspect that Philo suggests in this section that the Greek of the text quoted may mean not only "The handmaid is in thy hands (or power)," but also "Thy handmaid is in the hands." It must be remembered that when he gives two alternative meanings for a passage, he does not think, as we should, that one must be the right one. To his mind they may both be intended. If we suppose that he is here commenting on "Thy handmaid is in the hands," the argument will become much clearer. The supposition will involve reading here ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ for ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ σου, but there is not much difficulty in this. A scribe failing to see the point might very naturally add σου.

§ 159. Unrebuked. Or "whose licence is unchecked." Mangey suspected ἀνεπίληκτος in this sense, and perhaps it more generally means "not liable to rebuke," "blameless." But see Plato, Legg. 695 B, where it is applied to the undisciplined boyhood of Cyrus's sons, who left to women and eunuchs became οἴους ἦν εἰκὸς αὐτοῦς γενέσθαι τροφῆ ἀνεπιλήκτω τραφέντας. So too in manhood they are τρυφῆς μεστοὶ καὶ ἀνεπιληξίας.

Ibid. ὑπαργύρους καὶ ὑποχρύσους. These adjectives, which Mangey translated by "aureos et argenteos," ignoring the ὑπο-, are at first sight very difficult. All the evidence in the dictionaries hitherto given goes to prove that the prefix indicates not that the silver or gold conceals some other metal, but that it is covered or concealed by it. Thus while ὑπάργυρος may suggest a base coin, because the silver is coated with gold, ὑπόχρυσος would only suggest gold concealed by some baser metal. An article, however, by A. Körte in Hermes, 1929, pp. 262 f., to which Dr. Rouse called my attention, brings considerable evidence from inscriptions of the third century, as well as a line from Menander, 170 ff. (ὑπόχρυσος δακτύλιός τις οὔτσσί, αὐτὸς σιδηροῦς), to shew that ὑποχ. is used of iron rings or the like gilded over. Körte does not deal with ὑπάργυρος, but the same principle will apply. He connects the prefix with the common use of ὑπο- in adjectives, particularly in medical language, to indicate "somewhat," e.g. ὑπόλευκος "whitish." While he translates ὑπόχρυσος "gilded," it need not be inferred, I think, that the word in itself means this. Rather the two words are opposed to ὀλόχρυσος, ὀλάργυρος, and indicate that the gold and silver are not the predominant, or at least not the sole elements. But since, as a matter of fact, the admixture of gold or silver would regularly take the form of a coating, "veneered" or "plated" may stand.

PHILO

§ 160. Admonition. I do not think that Philo can have written νουθεσίαν. Apart from the absurdity pointed out in the footnote, the ὥστε demands something inferred from the text, which has stated that those who live without κάκωσις forsake God. The inference must be that those who are under κάκωσις cleave to Him. I think Philo must have written εὐσέβειαν or θεοσέβειαν, which by some blunder was changed to νουθεσίαν as νομοθεσίαν to ἐκκλησίαν in § 120.

§ 171. Ève. Here again one can only suppose a similar blunder, possibly assisted by the similarity of KAIETAN to KAIN. Though Wendland retains the ms. text, it seems to me incredible that Philo should have thought that Cain was expelled from Paradise. At any rate, even if Philo wrote Cain, he meant to write Eve.

PHILO

IN TEN VOLUMES (AND TWO SUPPLEMENTARY VOLUMES)

V

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY
F. H. COLSON, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

AND

THE REV. G. H. WHITAKER, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS
HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS
LONDON
WILLIAM HEINEMANN LTD

MCMLXXXVIII

CONTENTS OF VOLUME V

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	vii
LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS . . . . .	ix
ON FLIGHT AND FINDING (DE FUGA ET INVENTIONE)—
Introduction . . . . .	3
Text and Translation . . . . .	10
ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES (DE MUTATIONE NOMINUM)—
Introduction . . . . .	128
Text and Translation . . . . .	142
ON DREAMS, THAT THEY ARE GOD-SENT (QUOD A DEO MITTANTUR SOMNIA or DE SOMNIIS)—
BOOK I. Introduction . . . . .	285
Text and Translation . . . . .	294
BOOK II. Introduction . . . . .	433
Text and Translation . . . . .	442
APPENDICES—
I. To De Fuga et Inventione . . . . .	581
II. To De Mutatione Nominum . . . . .	586
III. To De Somniis , i. . . . .	593
IV. To De Somniis , ii. . . . .	606 SUPPLEMENT TO TEXTUAL FOOTNOTES IN
VOLS. I.-V. . . . .	613

PREFACE TO VOLUME V

IN this volume we reach the end of the third of Cohn and Wendland's six volumes, and with it the end also of what is perhaps the most important part of Philo's work, in which, to repeat the words used by us in the General Introduction, he expounds what he considers to be the inner and spiritual meaning of various incidents and texts in Genesis.<sup>a</sup>

Mr. Whitaker remains a substantial contributor to this volume, even more so than in Vol. IV. At his death in 1930 he left in ms. the whole of De Fuga and De Somniis, i., and about a fifth of De Somniis, ii. They had not been revised, but though I have made considerable alterations and corrections, especially in De Somniis, i., and though the introductions entirely, and the notes almost entirely, are my unassisted work, the translation of this part is fundamentally his. Still, as I said in the Preface to Vol. IV., both in what I have left unchanged and in what I have altered or corrected I must take the final responsibility.

<sup>a</sup> For some account of the nature of the work which still remains to be done see General Introduction, Vol. I. p. x.

PREFACE

I wish to call the attention of such readers as are interested in the minutiae of the text of this and the preceding volumes to the supplementary list printed on pp. 613 ff., where also I have modified somewhat the remarks I made on this subject in the Preface to Vol. IV.

F. H. C.

February 1934.

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

SHOWING THEIR DIVISION INTO VOLUMES IN THIS EDITION

VOLUME

- I. On the Creation (De Opificio Mundi)
Allegorical Interpretation (Legum Allegoriae)
- II. On the Cherubim (De Cherubim)
On the Sacrifices of Abel and Cain (De Sacrificiis Abelis et Caini)
The Worse attacks the Better (Quod Deterius Potiori
insidiari solet)
On the Posterity and Exile of Cain (De Posteritate Caini)
- III. On the Unchangeableness of God (Quod Deus im-mutabilis sit)
On Husbandry (De Agricultura)
On Noah's Work as a Planter (De Plantatione)
On Drunkenness (De Ebrietate)
On Sobriety (De Sobrietate)
- IV. On the Confusion of Tongues (De Confusione Lin-guarum)
On the Migration of Abraham (De Migratione Abrahami)
Who is the Heir (Quis Rerum Divinarum Heres)
On the Preliminary Studies (De Congressu quaerendae Eruditionis gratia)
- V. On Flight and Finding (De Fuga et Inventione)
On the Change of Names (De Mutatione Nominum)
On Dreams (De Somniis)
- VI. On Abraham (De Abrahamo)
On Joseph (De Iosepho)
Moses (De Vita Mosis)

LIST OF PHILO'S WORKS

VOLUME

- VII. On the Decalogue (De Decalogo)
On the Special Laws Books I-III (De Specialibus Legibus)
- VIII. On the Special Laws Book IV (De Specialibus Legibus)
On the Virtues (De Virtutibus)
On Rewards and Punishments (De Praemiis et Poenis)
- IX. Every Good Man is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit)
On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa)
On the Eternity of the World (De Aeternitate Mundi)
Flaccus (In Flaccum)
Hypothetica<sup>1</sup> (Apologia pro Iudaeis)
On Providence<sup>1</sup> (De Providentia)
- X. On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium)
- GENERAL INDEX TO VOLUMES I-X

SUPPLEMENT

- I. Questions and Answers on Genesis<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin)
- II. Questions and Answers on Exodus<sup>2</sup> (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum)
- GENERAL INDEX TO SUPPLEMENTS I-II

<sup>1</sup> Only two fragments extant.

<sup>2</sup> Extant only in an Armenian version.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING
(DE FUGA ET INVENTIONE <sup>a</sup>)

<sup>a</sup> In Mangey's and earlier editions the Latin title is given as De Profugis.

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THIS treatise, which follows at once on the preceding, continues the exposition of Genesis xvi. from the middle of vs. 6 to vs. 12, omitting vs. 10. These verses are quoted in full in § 1, but the discussion is chiefly confined to a few words or phrases, namely "fled," "found," and "fountain." The first point to be noted is that Hagar fled. Flight may be due to three different causes: hatred, fear, and shame (2-3). Hagar is an example of the third, and the story shows that the inward monitor or Elenchus, which is typified by the angel, taught her that this shame must be tempered by courage (4-6).

But we must first say something about the other two causes of flight. Hatred was the cause of Jacob's flight from Laban. Here the two may stand from one point of view for the materialistic and the theistic creed respectively, and from another for the fool and the wise (7-13). On either interpretation the Jacob soul, finding itself unable to correct the Laban soul, will flee from association with it and repudiate it. Jacob's wives, that is his powers, joined in this repudiation, and that part of their speech in which they say that God has taken from Laban his wealth and glory and given them to themselves lead to a short meditation on true wealth and glory (15-19). A further proof of the need of flight is drawn from

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING

Other thoughts on flight are suggested by the cities of refuge. The law states that the intentional murderer shall be put to death, but that the unintentional homicide may find refuge in an appointed place (53). Before, however, considering this latter point, he notes that the first clause of the law runs : " If a man strikes another and he dies, let him be put to death with death." Philo, as so often, fails to understand that the last words of this are the Greek translation of the common Hebrew idiom for " surely be put to death," and infers that " dying with death " indicates the real, the spiritual death (54-55). Other texts are quoted to shew that, as virtue is the true life, vice is the true death (56-59), though, in another sense, vice can never die, as shewn by the sign given to Cain (60-64). Another part of the same text, where it is said of the involuntary homicide that God delivered the victim to his hands, suggests that God employs subordinate ministers for the lower, though beneficial and necessary, work of punishment, and this he supports, as elsewhere, by the use of " we " in the first chapter of Genesis, and the entrustment of cursing to the less worthy and of blessing to the worthier tribes (65-74). Again, the words " I will give thee a place " may be understood to mean that God Himself is the place where the innocent can take refuge (75-76). When we read that the wilful murderer who takes refuge in a sanctuary shall be dragged from it and put to death, it means that the voluntary evil-doer, who takes refuge with God, that is, ascribes to Him the responsibility for his sins, blasphemes (77-82); and how deadly a sin blasphemy against the Divine Parent is, is shown by the very next words where the death penalty is assigned to those who speak ill of their earthly parents (83-84). The cities of refuge are only for those who truly understand the difference between the voluntary and involuntary (85-86).

PHILO

As to the cities of refuge, four questions arise : (1) why they are in Levitical territory ; (2) why they are six in number ; (3) why three are beyond Jordan and three in Canaan ; (4) why the refugee must remain till the death of the High Priest (87). The answer to the first is that the Levites themselves are fugitives from human ties, and also, as in the story of Exodus xxxii., the slayers of their kinsfolk, interpreted as the body, the unreasoning nature, and speech (88-93). To the second and the third questions the answer is that, of the six potencies of God where the guiltless may take refuge, three stand far above humanity, while three are closer to our nature (95-105). To answer the fourth point, which he thinks can hardly be understood literally without absurdity, Philo identifies the High Priest with the Logos and points out various analogies between the two. He thus explains the ordinance as meaning that, while this High Priest lives in the soul, the sins which have been banished cannot return (106-118).

The second part of the treatise (119-175) is concerned with finding, which naturally calls up the idea of seeking. We have four variants of this : not seeking and not finding, seeking and finding, not seeking and finding, seeking and not finding (119-120). The first of these is dismissed very rapidly with one or two illustrations of which Pharaoh's obstinacy is the chief (121-125). Seeking and finding is shewn in the case of Joseph who, prompted by a " man," that is the inward monitor, " found " his brethren in Dothan, the place of those who have abandoned delusion (126-131); of Isaac who asked "where is the victim?" and "found" that God would provide it (132-135); of the Israelites who asked about the manna, and "found" that it was the Word of God (137-139); of Moses who, when questioning his mission, "found" the answer in "I will be with you" (140-142). For seeking and not finding we have the examples of Laban seeking the images, the Sodomites seeking the door, Korah seeking the priesthood, and Pharaoh seeking Moses to kill him (143-148). Then follows a more elaborate allegorizing of the story of Judah's intercourse with Tamar into a picture of the earnest soul wooing piety, to which he first gives as pledges the ring of trustworthiness, the chain of consistency, and the staff of discipline, and afterwards, to test her fidelity, sends the kid which represents the good things of secular life. The connexion of this story with the subject lies in the phrase "the messenger did not 'find' her" (149-156). Then, after a shorter spiritualizing of the incident of the goat of the sin-offering in Leviticus x. (157-160),<sup>a</sup> the story of the Burning Bush is interpreted as the fruitless desire of the soul to know the causes of phenomena which are ever perishing and yet are ever renewed (161-165).

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING

The fourth head of finding without seeking suggests many points which have been noted elsewhere; primarily, of course, the self-taught nature, Isaac, and then the delivery of the Hebrew women before the midwives come, the speed with which Jacob found the meat which God delivered into his hand, and the automatic growth on the fallow land in the

<sup>a</sup> See note ad loc.

PHILO

Sabbatical year (166-172). This last naturally leads to some thought on the Sabbatical gift of peace (173-174), but to Philo's mind the best example is the promise to the Israelites in Deuteronomy of cities, houses, cisterns, vineyards, oliveyards, for which they have not laboured, all of them really types of spiritual blessings (175-176).

The next phrase in the text which calls for discussion is "spring of water." "Spring" is used as the symbol for five different things: first for the mind, which in the Creation story is described as the spring which waters the whole face of the earth, i.e. of the body (177-182); secondly it is used for education, and thus the twelve springs of Elim or "gateway" signify the Encyclia, the gateway to knowledge; and, since beside these springs there grew up seventy palm-trees, we have a short digression on the virtues of the two numbers (183-187). Thirdly there are the springs of folly, and this is illustrated by the phrase "uncovering the fount of the woman," where the woman is sense and her husband mind, and uncovering the fount comes when the sleeping mind allows each of the senses to have free play (188-193). Fourthly there are the springs of wisdom, from which Rebecca drew (194-196); and fifthly God Himself, Who is called by Jeremiah the fountain of life. And since Jeremiah adds that the wicked dig for themselves broken cisterns which hold no water, we see the contrast with the wise who, like Abraham and Isaac, dig real wells (197-201).

The fountain by which Hagar was found was the fountain of wisdom, but hers was not yet a soul which could draw from it (202). The treatise concludes with shorter notes on a few other phrases in the passage. When the angel asked, "Whence comest thou, and whither goest thou?" it was not because he did not know the answer, since his omniscience is shewn by his knowing that the child would be a boy. The first part of the question was a rebuke for her flight, the second an indication of the uncertainty of the future (205-206). Something is added about the description given in the angel's words of the Ishmael or sophist nature (207-211). And finally we note that Hagar acknowledges the angel as God, for to one in her lower stage of servitude God's servants are as God Himself (211-end).

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING

ΠΕΡΙ ΦΥΓΗΣ ΚΑΙ ΕΥΡΕΣΕΩΣ

[546]
1 I. | “Καὶ ἐκάκωσεν αὐτὴν Σάρα, καὶ ἀπέδρα ἀπὸ προσώπου αὐτῆς. εὗρε δὲ αὐτὴν ἄγγελος κυρίου ἐπὶ τῆς πηγῆς τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, ἐπὶ τῆς πηγῆς ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ Σούρ. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῇ ὁ ἄγγελος κυρίου· παιδίσκη Σάρας, πόθεν ἔρχῃ, καὶ ποῦ πορεύῃ; καὶ εἶπεν· ἀπὸ προσώπου Σάρας τῆς κυρίας μου ἐγὼ ἀποδιδράσκω. εἶπε δὲ αὐτῇ ὁ ἄγγελος κυρίου· ἀποστράφηθι πρὸς τὴν κυρίαν σου καὶ ταπεινώθητι ὑπὸ τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῆς. καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῇ ὁ ἄγγελος κυρίου· <ἴδου> σὺ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχεις, καὶ τέξῃ υἱόν, καὶ καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰσμαήλ, ὅτι ἐπήκουσε κύριος τῇ ταπεινώσει σου. οὗτος ἔσται ἀγροῖκος ἄνθρωπος· αἱ χεῖρες αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ πάντας καὶ αἱ χεῖρες πάντων ἐπ’ αὐτόν.”

2 εἰρηκότες ἐν τῷ προτέρῳ τὰ πρέποντα περὶ τῶν προπαιδευμάτων καὶ περὶ κακώσεως, ἐξῆς τὸν περὶ φυγάδων ἀναγράφομεν τόπον. μέμνηται γὰρ πολλαχοῦ τῶν ἀποδιδρασκόντων, καθάπερ καὶ νῦν φάσκων ἐπὶ τῆς Ἄγαρ, ὅτι κακωθεῖσα “ἀπέδρα ἀπὸ προσώπου τῆς κυρίας.”

3 Αἰτίας οὖν ἔγωγε τρεῖς εἶναι νομίζω φυγῆς, μῖσος, φόβον, αἰδῶ. μῖσει μὲν οὖν καὶ γυναῖκες

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING

I. " And Sarai evil-entreated her, and she fled <sup>1</sup> from her face. And an angel of the Lord found her at the fountain of water in the wilderness, at the fountain in the way to Shur. And the angel of the Lord said unto her, ' Handmaid of Sarai, whence comest thou ? and whither goest thou ? ' And she said, ' From the face of Sarai my mistress I am fleeing. ' And the angel of the Lord said unto her, ' Return to thy mistress, and humble thyself under her hands ' (Gen. xvi. 6-9). And the angel of the Lord said unto her, ' Behold, thou art with child, and shalt bear a son ; and thou shalt call his name Ishmael, because the Lord hath hearkened to thy humiliation. He shall be a dweller in the fields ; his hands shall be against all men, and all men's hands shall be against him ' " (ibid. 11, 12).

Having in the <sup>2</sup> preceding treatise said what was fitting about the courses of preliminary training and about evil-entreatment, we will next proceed to set forth the subject of fugitives. For the Lawgiver has in several places made mention of those who run away, as he does here, saying of Hagar that upon being evil-entreated " she ran away from the face of her mistress."

There are, I think, three motives for flight : hatred, <sup>3</sup> fear, and shame. From hatred wives leave husbands

PHILO

ἄνδρας καὶ ἄνδρες γυναῖκας ἀπολείπουσι, φόβῳ δὲ τοὺς γονεῖς παῖδες καὶ δεσπότας οἰκέται, αἰδοῖ δὲ τοὺς ἑταίρους, ὅποτε μὴ καθ' ἡδονὴν τι πράξειαν αὐτοῖς, οἱ φίλοι· ἤδη δὲ καὶ πατέρας οἶδα διὰ τὸ ἀβροδίαιτον αὐστηρὸν καὶ φιλόσοφον βίον παίδων ἐκτραπομένους<sup>1</sup> καὶ δι' αἰδῶ τὸν ἀγρὸν πρὸ τῆς 4 πόλεως οἰκεῖν ἐλομένους. τῶν τριῶν τούτων αἰτιῶν ἔστιν εὐρεῖν ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς γραφαῖς ὑπομνήματα.
 ὁ γοῦν ἀσκητῆς Ἰακώβ μίσει μὲν τὸν πενθερὸν
 [547] Λάβαν, φόβῳ δὲ τὸν ἀδελφὸν Ἡσαῦ | ἀποδιδράσκει, 5 ὡς αὐτίκα παραστήσομεν.<sup>2</sup> ἢ δ' Ἄγαρ ἀπαλλάτ-τεται δι' αἰδῶ· σημεῖον δὲ τὸ ὑπαντᾶν αὐτῇ ἄγγελον, θεῖον λόγον, ἃ χρῆ παραινέσοντα καὶ ὑψηγησόμενον ἐπανόδου τῆς εἰς τὸν δεσποίνης οἶκον, ὃς καὶ θαρσύνων φησὶν· “ ἐπήκουσε κύριος τῆ ταπεινώσει σου,” ἦν οὔτε διὰ φόβον ἔσχες οὔτε διὰ μῖσος—τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀγεννοῦς, τὸ δὲ φιλαπεχθή-6 μονος πάθος ψυχῆς,—ἀλλ' ἔνεκα τοῦ σωφροσύνης ἀπεικονίσματος, αἰδοῦς. εἰκὸς γὰρ ἦν, εἰ διὰ φόβον ἀπεδίδρασκε, τῆ τὸν φόβον ἐπανατειναμένη παρηγορησαί πρᾶσπαθεῖν· τῆνικαῦτα γὰρ ἀσφαλές ἦν ἐπανερχεσθαι τῆ φυγούσῃ, πρότερον δ' οὔ.
 ἀλλὰ τῆ μὲν οὐδεὶς προεντυγχάνει ἅτε ἐξευμενισθείσῃ δι' ἑαυτῆς, τὴν δὲ ὁ δι' εὐνοίαν φίλος ὁμοῦ καὶ σύμβουλος ἔλεγχος διδάσκει μὴ αἰδέσθαι μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ εὐτολμία χρῆσθαι· ἦμισυ γὰρ ἀρετῆς εἶναι τὴν δίχα τοῦ θαρρεῖν αἰδῶ.

7 II. Τοὺς μὲν οὖν ἀκριβεστέρους χαρακτηῆρας ὁ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἐντραπομένους (W.H.D.R.), a frequent synonym for αἰδέσθαι. <sup>2</sup> MSS. παραστήσομαι.

<sup>a</sup> Or “by conviction” (personified). See note on Quod Deus 125.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 3-7

and husbands wives ; from fear children leave their parents and servants their masters ; from shame friends leave their fellows when something they have done displeases them. I know fathers whose effeminacy has made them unwilling to face the strict and philosophic life of their sons, and who out of shame have chosen to live in the country instead of in the city. Instances of the working of these 4 three motives are to be found in the sacred writings. Jacob, the Practiser, as we shall presently shew, flies from his father-in-law Laban out of hatred, from his brother Esau out of fear. Hagar's motive 5 for departing is shame. A sign of this is the fact that an angel, a Divine Word, meets her to advise the right course, and to suggest return to the house of her mistress. This angel addresses her in the encouraging words, "The Lord hath hearkened to thy humiliation" (Gen. xvi. 11), a humiliation prompted neither by fear nor by hatred, the one the feeling of an ignoble, the other of a quarrelsome soul, but by shame, the outward expression of inward modesty. Had she run away 6 owing to fear, the angel would probably have moved her who had inspired the fear to a gentler frame of mind ; for then, and not till then, would it have been safe for the fugitive to go back. But no angel first approached Sarai, seeing that she is favourably disposed of her own accord. But it is Hagar who is taught by the angel monitor,<sup>a</sup> whose goodwill to her makes him at once her friend and counsellor, not to feel only shame, but to be of good courage as well ; pointing out that shame apart from confidence is but a half virtue.

II. The ensuing argument will bring to light the 7

PHILO

ἐξῆς μηνύσει λόγος. ἐπανιτέον δ' ἐπὶ τὰ προταθέντα<sup>1</sup> κεφάλαια καὶ ἀρκτέον ἀπὸ τῶν μίσους χάριν ἀποδιδρασκόντων. “ ἔκρυψε ” γάρ φησιν “ Ἰακώβ Λάβαν τὸν Σύρον, τοῦ μὴ ἀπαγγεῖλαι αὐτῷ ὅτι ἀποδιδράσκει, καὶ ἀπέδρα αὐτὸς καὶ τὰ αὐτοῦ 8 πάντα.” τίς οὖν αἰτία τοῦ μίσους; ποθεῖς γὰρ ἴσως δὴ τοῦτο<sup>2</sup> μαθεῖν. εἰσὶ τινες οἱ τὴν ἄποιον καὶ ἀνείδεον καὶ ἀσχημάτιστον οὐσίαν θεοπλα-στοῦντες, τὸ κινοῦν αἴτιον οὔτε εἰδότες οὔτε παρὰ τῶν εἰδόντων μαθεῖν σπουδάσαντες, ἀγνοία δὲ καὶ ἀμαθία κεκρημένοι τοῦ καλλίστου μαθήματος, οὐ πρώτου καὶ μόνου τὴν ἐπιστήμην ἐκπονεῖν ἦν 9 ἀναγκαῖον. ὁ Λάβαν τοῦ γένους ἐστὶ τούτου· τὴν γὰρ ἄσημον αὐτῷ ποιήμην οἱ<sup>3</sup> χρησιμοὶ προσνέμουσιν· ἄσημος δὲ ἐν μὲν τοῖς ὅλοις ἢ ἄποιος ὕλη, ἐν ἀνθρώποις δὲ ἢ ἀμαθῆς ψυχὴ καὶ ἀπαιδ-10 γώγητος. ἕτεροι δ' εἰσὶ τῆς ἀμείνονος μοίρας, οἱ νοῦν ἔφασαν ἐλθόντα πάντα διακοσμῆσαι, τὴν ἐξ ὀχλοκρατίας ἐν τοῖς οὖσιν ἀταξίαν εἰς ἀρχῆς νομίμου, βασιλείας, τάξιν ἀγαγόντα. τοῦ θιάσου τούτου χορευτῆς Ἰακώβ ἐστίν, ὃς ἐπιστατεῖ τῆς ἐπισήμου ποικίλης ἀγέλης· ἐπίσημον δὲ πάλιν καὶ ποικίλον ἐν μὲν τοῖς ὅλοις τὸ εἶδος, ἐν δὲ ἀνθρώποις ἢ εὐπαίδευτος καὶ φιλομαθῆς διάνοια.
 11 πολλοῦ δὴ τοῦ φύσει κοινωνικοῦ σπάσας ὁ ἐπίσημος καὶ μοναρχίας ἀληθοῦς ἑταῖρος ἔρχεται πρὸς τὸν ἄσημον, ὑλικὰς μὲν, ὡς εἶπον ἤδη, θεοπλαστοῦντα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. προτεθέντα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τι τοῦ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. οὐ.

<sup>a</sup> The allusion to Anaxagoras in § 10 perhaps suggests that some definite persons or school is meant, possibly his predecessors the Ionic philosophers. See App. p. 581.

<sup>b</sup> See Diog. Laert. ii. 6 (the opening words of Anaxagoras's

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 7-11

more subtle traits of shame. I must now go back to the heads suggested, and must begin with those who run away because of hatred. We are told that "Jacob kept Laban the Syrian in the dark, so as not to tell him that he is fleeing, and he fled, himself and all that belonged to him" (Gen. xxxi. 20 f.). What, 8 then, was the cause of the hatred? You would like perhaps to be told this. There are people who fashion their God out of substance devoid of quality or form or shape <sup>a</sup>; but the moving Cause they neither know, nor have taken any trouble to learn from those who do know Him. They have neither mastered nor do they study the fairest subject of all, the first, nay the only one, whose knowledge it was a vital matter for them to acquire. Laban is of this class; for the 9 sacred oracles assign to him the flock that is without mark (Gen. xxx. 42); and in the universe it is the matter devoid of quality and in men the ignorant and untutored soul that is without mark. Others there 10 are of the better part, who said that Mind came and ordered all things,<sup>b</sup> bringing the disorder that prevailed in existing things as the result of mob-rule into the order of regular government under a king. Of this company Jacob is a votary, who is in charge of the variegated flock, marked and distinguished; and in the universe it is form that has variety and distinction, while among men it is the understanding, well-trained and loving to learn. The man of mark, associate of true monarchy, has 11 imbibed in full measure the inbred spirit of fellowship, and comes to the man of no mark, when he fashions, as I said before, material sovereignties as treatise), πάντα χρήματα ἦν ὁμοῦ· εἶτα νοῦς ἐλθὼν αὐτὰ δικέκμησε.

PHILO

- ἡγεμονίας, ἔξω δὲ τούτων δραστήριον μηδεμίαν 12 νομίζοντα, διδάξων ὅτι οὐκ ὀρθογνωμονεῖ. γέγονέ τε γὰρ ὁ κόσμος καὶ πάντως ὑπ' αἰτίου τινὸς γέγονεν· ὁ δὲ τοῦ ποιούντος λόγος αὐτός ἐστιν ἢ σφραγίς, ἣ τῶν ὄντων ἕκαστον μεμόρφωται· παρὸ [548] καὶ τέλειον | τοῖς γινομένοις ἐξ ἀρχῆς παρακο-λουθεῖ τὸ εἶδος, ἅτε ἐκμαγεῖον καὶ εἰκῶν τελείου 13 λόγου. τὸ γὰρ γενόμενον ζῶον ἀτελὲς μὲν ἐστὶ τῷ ποσῷ—μάρτυρες δὲ αἱ καθ' ἡλικίαν ἐκάστην παραυξήσεις,—τέλειον δὲ τῷ ποιῷ· μένει γὰρ ἢ αὐτῇ ποιότης ἅτε ἀπὸ μένοντος ἐκμαγεῖσα καὶ 14 μηδαμῇ τρεπομένου θείου λόγου. III. ὁρῶν δ' ὅτι πρὸς μάθησιν καὶ νόμιμον<sup>1</sup> ἐπιστάσιαν κεκώφωται, δρασμὸν εἰκότως βουλεύεται· δέδιδε γάρ, μὴ πρὸς τῷ μηδὲν ἰσχυσαὶ ὀνησαὶ ἔτι καὶ ζημιωθῆ. βλαβεραὶ γὰρ αἱ μετὰ ἀνοήτων συνουσίαι, καὶ ἄκουσα πολλάκις ἢ ψυχὴ τῆς ἐκείνων φρενοβλαβείας ἀπομάττεται τὰ εἶδωλα· καὶ ὄντως ἐστὶν ἐχθρὸν φύσει παιδεία ἀπαιδευσία καὶ φιλοπονία 15 ἀμελετησία. παρὸ καὶ φωνῆν αἱ ἀσκητικαὶ δυνάμεις ἀφείσαι κεκράγασι τὰς αἰτίας τοῦ μίσους παραδιηγούμεναι· “ μὴ ἐστὶν ἡμῖν ἔτι μερὶς ἢ κληρονομία ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν; οὐχ ὡς ἀλλότριαι λελογίσμεθα αὐτῷ; πέπρακε γὰρ ἡμᾶς καὶ κατέφαγε καταβρώσει τὸ ἀργύριον ἡμῶν.
 πᾶς ὁ πλοῦτος καὶ ἢ δόξα, ἣν ἀφείλετο ὁ θεὸς τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν, ἡμῖν ἔσται καὶ τοῖς τέκνοις ἡμῶν.” 16 ἐλεύθεραι γὰρ καὶ τοῖς ὀνόμασι καὶ τοῖς ἐνθυμῆ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μόμιμον.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 581.

<sup>b</sup> Or “giving in addition.”

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 11-16

Divine, and holds no sovereignty outside of these to be efficient,—comes to him to teach him that he is mistaken. For the world has come into being, and 12 assuredly it has done so under the hand of some Cause ; and the Word of Him who makes it is Himself the seal, by which each thing that exists has received its shape. Accordingly from the outset form in perfection accompanies the things that come into being, for it is an impress and image of the perfect Word. For the living creature that has come 13 into being is imperfect in quantity, as is shewn by its constant growth as its age advances, but perfect in quality ; for the same quality continues, inasmuch as it is the impress of a Divine Word ever continuing and free from every kind of change.<sup>a</sup> III. 14

Jacob, seeing that Laban has grown deaf to instruction or lawful authority, naturally plans to run away, fearing lest, besides being unable to help, he should suffer harm at his hands. For association with men devoid of sense is hurtful, and the soul often involuntarily takes the impressions of their mad folly ; and in the nature of things culture feels a repugnance towards lack of culture, and painstaking towards carelessness. And so the faculties of the 15 Practiser lift their voice aloud, proclaiming<sup>b</sup> their grounds for hatred : “ Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father’s house ? Are we not counted of him strangers ? For he hath sold us, and hath also quite devoured our money. All the riches and the glory, which God took away from our father, shall be for us and for our children ” (Gen. xxxi. 14-16). For being free both in names<sup>c</sup> and in senti- 16

<sup>a</sup> I can give no satisfactory explanation of “ names.” See App. pp. 581 f.

PHILO

μασιν οὐδένα τῶν ἀφρόνων νομίζουσι πλούσιον ἢ ἔνδοξον εἶναι, πάντας δ', ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ἀδόξους καὶ πένητας, κἂν βασιλέων πολυχρύσων τύχας ὑπερβάλλωσιν. οὐ γάρ φασι τὸν πλοῦτον τοῦ πατρός, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἀφαιρεθέντα πλοῦτον, οὐδὲ τὴν ἐκείνου δόξαν, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀφαιρεθείσαν αὐτοῦ δόξαν 17 σχήσειν. ἐστέρηται δ' ὁ φαῦλος τοῦ ἀληθινοῦ πλούτου καὶ τῆς ἀψευδοῦς εὐδοξίας· τὰ γὰρ ἀγαθὰ ταῦτα φρόνησις καὶ σωφροσύνη καὶ αἱ συγγενεῖς περιποιούσι διαθέσεις, ὧν αἱ φιλάρετοι ψυχαὶ κληρο-18 νομοῦσιν. οὐκοῦν οὐ τὰ προσόντα τῷ μοχθηρῷ, τὰ δ' ὧν ἐκείνος ἐστέρηται περιουσία καὶ εὐκλεία τοῖς ἀστείοις ἐστίν· ἐστέρηται δὲ ἀρετῶν, αἱ δὴ κτήματα τῶνδε γεγόνασιν, ἵνα καὶ τὸ ἐτέρωθι λεχθὲν συνάδῃ· “ τὰ βδελύγματα Αἰγύπτου θύσομεν κυρίῳ τῷ θεῷ ”· τέλεια γὰρ καὶ ἄμωμα ἱερεῖα αἱ ἀρεταὶ καὶ αἱ κατὰ ἀρετὰς πράξεις, ἃς τὸ φιλο-19 παθὲς Αἰγύπτιον βδελύττεται σῶμα. καθάπερ γὰρ ἐνταῦθα φυσικῶς τὰ βέβηλα παρ' Αἰγυπτίους ἱερὰ παρὰ τοῖς ὀξὺ καθορώσι λέγεται καὶ πάντα θύεται, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ὧν ἐστέρηται καὶ ἀφήρηται πᾶς ἄφρων, τούτων κληρονόμος ἔσται ὁ καλο-[549] κἀγαθίας ἐταῖρος· ταῦτα | δὲ ἐστὶ δόξα ἀληθοῦς ἐπιστήμης ἀδιαφοροῦσα καὶ πλοῦτος οὐχ ὁ τυφλός, ἀλλ' ὁ τῶν ὄντων ὀξυδερκέστατος, ὃς οὐδὲν παρα-δέχεται νόμισμα κίβδηλον, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἄψυχον τὸ παράπαν, εἰ καὶ δόκιμον εἶη.

* The meaning seems to be that while the three Aristotelian ἀγαθὰ, viz. τὰ περὶ ψυχὴν, τὰ περὶ σῶμα and τὰ ἐκτός may be δόκιμα in a sense, for even the Stoics admitted “ preferable indifferents ” among the two latter, only the first is acceptable to the true Practiser. See Quod Det. 7 and note, also De Gig. 38.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 16-19

ments, they deem no senseless man to be rich or glorious, but all such, speaking broadly, to be poor and inglorious, even if they surpass in fortune wealthy kings. For they do not say that they will have their father's wealth, but that which was taken away from their father, nor his glory, but the glory that was taken away from him. The worthless man is destitute 17 of the real riches and the true gloriousness ; for these good things are won by sound sense and self-mastery and the dispositions akin to these, which are the inheritance of virtue-loving souls. Accordingly it is not 18 the things that pertain to the good-for-nothing man, but those of which he has been stripped, that are affluence and renown to the worthy. Virtues are what has been stripped from him, and has become the property of the worthy, thus bringing into harmony what is said elsewhere : " we will sacrifice the abominations of Egypt to the Lord our God " (Exod. viii. 26) ; for victims perfect and free from blemish are the virtues and virtuous conduct, and these the Egyptian body, in its devotion to the passions, abominates. For even as in this passage, understood in 19 accordance with reality, things which Egyptians reckon profane are called sacred in the estimation of the keen-sighted, and are all offered in sacrifice ; exactly in the same way, the things of which every foolish man has been deprived and stripped, these the comrade of nobility of character will inherit. And these are real glory, indistinguishable from knowledge, and wealth, not the blind wealth, but that which has the keenest sight for the things that actually are, which accepts no counterfeit coinage, nay nothing whatever that is soulless, even though it be approved coin.<sup>a</sup>

PHILO

- 20 Προσηκόντως οὖν ἀποδράσεται τὸν τῶν θείων ἀγαθῶν ἀμέτοχον, ὃς καὶ ἐν οἷς ἕτερον αἰτιᾶται διαβάλλων ἑαυτὸν λέληθεν, ἐπειδὰν φῆ· “εἰ ἀν- ἡγγειλάς μοι, ἐξαπέστειλα ἄν σε.” αὐτὸ γὰρ τοῦτο φυγῆς ἦν ἄξιον, εἰ μυρίων δεσποτῶν δούλος ὢν, ἐπιμορφάζων ἀρχὴν καὶ ἡγεμονίαν, ἐλευθερίαν
- 21 ἄλλοις ἐκήρυττες. ἐγὼ δέ, φησί, τῆς ἐπ’ ἀρετὴν ἀγούσης ὁδοῦ συνεργὸν ἄνθρωπον οὐκ ἔλαβον, ἀλλ’ ὑπήκουσα χρησμῶν θείων κελευόντων ἐνθένδε
- 22 ἀπαίρειν, οἳ καὶ μέχρι νῦν με ποδηγετοῦσι. πῶς δ’ ἂν με ἐξαπέστειλας; ἢ, ὡς σεμνολογούμενος διεξήεις, μετ’ “εὐφροσύνης” τῆς ἐμοὶ λυπηρᾶς καὶ “μουσικῶν” ἀμουσῶν καὶ “τυμπάνων” [καὶ]<sup>1</sup> κτύπων ἀνάρθρων καὶ ἀλόγων πληγὰς ἐμφορούντων ψυχῇ δι’ ὠτων καὶ μετὰ “κιθάρας,” ἀλύρων καὶ ἀναρμόστων οὐκ ὀργάνων μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πράξεων; ἀλλὰ γὰρ ταῦτ’ ἐστὶν ὧν ἕνεκα φυγὴν ἐβούλευσα, σὺ δ’, ὡς ἔοικεν, ἀντισπάσματά μου τῆς φυγῆς ἐπενόεις, ἵνα παλινδρομήσω διὰ τὸ ἀπα- τηλὸν καὶ εὐπαράγωγον φύσει τῶν αἰσθήσεων, αἷς μόλις ἴσχυσα ἐπιβῆναι.
- 23 IV. Μῖσος μὲν δὴ τοῦ λεχθέντος δρασμοῦ γέγονεν αἴτιον, φόβος δὲ τοῦ λεχθησομένου. “εἶπε” γάρ φησι “Ῥεβέκκα πρὸς Ἰακώβ· ἰδοῦ, Ἡσαῦ ὁ ἀδελφός σου ἀπειλεῖ (σοι) ἀποκτεῖναί σε. νῦν οὖν, τέκνον, ἄκουσόν μου τῆς φωνῆς καὶ ἀναστὰς ἀπόδραθι πρὸς Λάβαν τὸν ἀδελφόν μου εἰς Χαρρὰν καὶ οἴκησον μετ’ αὐτοῦ ἡμέρας τινάς, ἕως τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> I have bracketed καὶ as disturbing the symmetry of the sentence. The LXX has μετ’ εὐφροσύνης καὶ μετὰ μουσικῶν καὶ τυμπάνων καὶ κιθάρας. Each of the four terms receives in turn its negative qualification.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 20-23

Right fitly, therefore, will Jacob run away from the 20 man who has no part in the good things of God, the man who, even in finding fault with another, impugns himself without knowing it when he says, "If thou hadst told me, I would have sent thee forth" (Gen. xxxi. 27). For this alone would have been a sufficient ground for flight, if, when you were the slave of ten thousand masters, you assumed the style of dominion and lordship and proclaimed liberty to others. I how- 21 ever, says Jacob, took no man to help me to find the way that leads to virtue, but paid heed to Divine oracles bidding me depart hence, and to this moment they guide my steps. And how wouldst thou have 22 sent me forth? Would it have been, as thou didst grandiloquently recount, "with merriment" that caused me pain, and "music" all unmusical, and "drums" noises inarticulate and meaningless, inflicting blows on the soul through the ears, "and with cithara" (ibid.), not instruments but modes of conduct void of melody or harmony? Nay, these are the very things that made me plan flight; but you, it seems, devised them as means of diverting me back from flight, to induce me to retrace my steps for the sake of the power to cheat and mislead inbred in those senses which I had with difficulty gained strength to tread underfoot.

IV. Hatred, then, was the cause of the flight that 23 has been spoken of, but fear of that of which I am about to speak. For we read as follows: "Rebecca said to Jacob, 'Lo, Esau thy brother threatens to kill thee. Now therefore, child, listen to my voice and arise and flee to Laban my brother to Haran, and live with him for some days, until the wrath and ἀποστρέψαι τὸν θυμὸν καὶ τὴν ὀργὴν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου, καὶ ἐπιλάθῃται ἃ πεποίηκας αὐτῷ· καὶ ἀπο-24 στείλασα μεταπέμφομαί σε ἐκείθεν.” ἄξιον γὰρ δεδιέναι, μὴ τὸ χεῖρον τῆς ψυχῆς μέρος ἐξ ἐνέδρας λοχῆσαν ἢ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ φανεροῦ κοιισάμενον ἀνατρέψῃ καὶ καταβάλλῃ τὸ κρεῖττον. συμβουλή δ’ ἀρίστη τῆς ὀρθογνώμονος ἐπιμονῆς, ‘Ρεβέκκας ἦδε·

PHILO

 25 ἐπειδὴν ἴδῃς, φησί, τὸν φαῦλον πολὺ(ν) ῥέοντα κατὰ ἀρετῆς καὶ ὧν ἀλογεῖν προσῆκε πολὺν λόγον ἔχοντα, πλούτου, δόξης, ἡδονῆς, καὶ τὰδικεῖν ἐπαινοῦντα ὡς αἴτιον ἐκάστου τῶν εἰρημένων—πολυαργύρους γὰρ καὶ πολυχρύσους καὶ ἐνδόξους τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας μάλιστα γίνεσθαι,—μὴ τὴν ἐναντίαν ὁδὸν τραπόμενος εὐθὺς ἀχρηματίαν καὶ ἀτυφίαν αὐστηρόν τε καὶ μονωτικὸν βίον ἐπιτηδεύσης· ἀνερεθίσεις γὰρ τὸν ἀντίπαλον καὶ βαρύτερον ἐχθρὸν ἀλείψεις κατὰ
 26 σεαυτοῦ. τί ἂν οὖν ἐργασάμενος ἐκφύγῃς τὰ παλαιίσματ’ αὐτοῦ, σκόπει. συνεχέσθητι τοῖς αὐτοῖς, οὐκ ἐπιτηδεύμασι λέγω, τοῖς δὲ τῶν εἰρημένων ποιητικοῖς, τιμαῖς, ἀρχαῖς, ἀργύρῳ, χρυσῷ, [550] κτήμασι, χρώμασι, σχήμασι διαφόροις, κάλλεσι, καὶ ὅταν ἐντύχῃς, οἷα δημιουργὸς ἀγαθὸς εἶδος ἄριστον ταῖς ὑλिकाῖς οὐσίαις ἐγγάραξον καὶ ἐπαι-
 27 νετὸν ἀποτέλεσον ἔργον. ἢ οὐκ οἶδας, ὅτι ναῦν ἰδιώτης μὲν παραλαβὼν σώζεσθαι δυναμένην ἀνατρέπει, κυβερνητικὸς δὲ ἀνὴρ καὶ τὴν ἀπολλυμένην

<sup>a</sup> For a comparison of this interpretation of fleeing from Esau’s wrath with that given in De Mig. 210, 211 see App. p. 582.

<sup>b</sup> Or “prepare,” “give strength to,” a definite reference to the gymnastic school. So below παλαιίσματα = wrestling-grips.

anger of thy brother turn away, and he forget the things which thou hast done to him : and I will send and fetch thee thence ' ' (Gen. xxvii. 42-45). For <sup>24</sup> there is reason to fear lest the worse part of the soul set an ambush and lie in wait, or even openly arm, and then overthrow and cast down the better part. And this is excellent advice given by Rebecca, that is, by judicious Patience.<sup>a</sup> Whenever, she says, you <sup>25</sup> see the base one flowing in full current against virtue, and taking much account of things which it ought to disregard, of wealth, fame, pleasure, when he extols injustice as the author of each of these, and points out that it is mostly wrongdoers who attain to fame and to abundance of gold and silver, do not take at once the opposite direction, and practise penury and humility and a strict and un-social mode of life ; for in this way you will rouse your adversary's spirit and stimulate <sup>b</sup> a more dangerous foe to the contest against you. Consider, <sup>26</sup> then, by what course of action you are to escape his machinations. Adapt yourself, not to his pursuits and practices, but to the objects which serve to create them <sup>c</sup>—honours, offices, silver, gold, possessions, different forms and colours, beautiful objects. And whenever you meet with these, do as a good artist does, and engrave upon the material substances a form as good as possible, and thus accomplish a work which may win men's praise. You know well how, when <sup>27</sup> an unskilled man takes charge of a vessel that is quite capable of making a safe voyage, he upsets it, whereas a skilled helmsman often saves one which <sup>c</sup> Or τῶν εἰρημένων may refer to wealth, fame, and pleasure, § 25. See App. pp. 582 f.

PHILO

πολλάκις ἔσωσε, καὶ τῶν καμνόντων οἱ μὲν ἀπειρία τῶν θεραπευόντων χρησάμενοι σφαλερῶς τὰ σώματα ἔσχον, οἱ δὲ ἐμπειρία καὶ τὰς σφαλερὰς νόσους ἀπέφυγον; καὶ τί δεῖ μηκύνειν; αἰεὶ γὰρ τὰ μετὰ τέχνης ἔλεγχός ἐστι τῶν σὺν ἀτεχνία γινομένων, καὶ ὁ τούτων ἀληθῆς ἔπαινος ἀψευδῆς 28 ἐκείνων ἐστὶ κατηγορία.

V. εἰς οὖν θέλης διελέγξαι τὸν πολυχρήματον φαῦλον, μὴ ἀποστραφῆς τὴν ἐν χρήμασι περιουσίαν. ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἢ ἀνελεύθερος καὶ δουλοπρεπῆς ὀβολοστάτης καὶ τοκογλύφος, βαρυδαίμων ἀνὴρ, ἀναφανεῖται ἢ ἔμπαλιν ἄσωτος πεφορημένος, λαφύττειν καὶ σπαθῶν ἐτοιμότητος, ἑταιρῶν καὶ πορνοτρόφων καὶ μαστροπῶν καὶ παντὸς ἀκολάστου θιάσου χορηγὸς 29 φιλοτιμότητος. σὺ δὲ ἔρανον παρέξεις πένησι φίλων, χαριεῖ<sup>1</sup> δωρεὰς τῇ πατρίδι, συνεκδώσεις θυγατέρας ἀπόροις γονεῦσιν αὐταρκεστάτην προῖκα ἐπιδούς, μονονοῦκ εἰς μέσον προθεῖς τὰ ἴδια καλέσεις ἐπὶ μετουσίαν ἅπαντας τοὺς ἀξίους χάρι-30 τος.

τὸν αὐτὸν μέντοι τρόπον καὶ δοξομανοῦντα καὶ ἐπικομπάζοντα βουλευθεῖς ὄνειδίσαι μοχθηρόν, δυνηθεῖς ἐντιμος εἶναι μὴ ἀποστραφῆς τὸν παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς ἔπαινον· οὕτως γὰρ τὸν μακρὰ βαίοντα καὶ φρυαττόμενον ἄθλιον ὑποσκελιεῖς. ὁ μὲν γε τῷ ἐπιφανεῖ καταχρήσεται πρὸς ὕβριν καὶ ἀτιμίαν ἀμεινόνων ἐτέρων, αὐξων τοὺς χεῖρους ἐπ' αὐτοῖς· σὺ δὲ ἔμπαλιν τοῖς ἀξίοις is sinking ; and how sick folk, under the care of inexperienced attendants, fall into a dangerous condition of body, while those who meet with experienced attendants recover even from dangerous diseases. I need not labour the point. It is invariably the case that what is done with skill shews up and convicts what is done without it, and true praise accorded to the one is sure condemnation of the other.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. χάριτο(α)s.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 27-30

V. If, then, you desire <sup>28</sup> thoroughly to expose the worthless man of wealth, do not refuse abundance of wealth. He, miserable creature, will be seen in his true colours, either with the instincts of a slave rather than a gentleman, a skinflint and a splitpenny ; or on the other hand as living in a whirl of prodigality, ever ready to fling away money and to guzzle—an ever-active patron of courtesans, pimps, panders, and every licentious crew. You will contribute freely to needy friends, <sup>29</sup> will make bountiful gifts to serve your country's wants, you will help parents without means to marry their daughters, and provide them with an ample dowry ; you will all but throw your private property into the common stock and invite all deserving of kindness to take a share.

In exactly the <sup>30</sup> same way, when someone is crazy after fame and full of boastfulness, if you wish to cast reproach on the sorry fellow, do not turn your back upon popular applause if you have an opportunity of winning honour, and then, while the poor braggart strides conceitedly along, you will send him tumbling. While he will misuse his distinguished position to insult and disgrace others better than himself, and will exalt worse men above them, you on the other hand will make all worthy men sharers in the ad-

PHILO

- ἅπασι μεταδώσεις τῆς εὐκλείας, ἀσφάλειαν μὲν περιποιῶν τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς, βελτιῶν δὲ τοὺς χείρους
- 31 νουθεσίᾳ. κἂν ἐπ' ἄκρατον μέντοι καὶ πολυτελεῖς τραπέζας ἴης, θαρρῶν ἴθι· τὸν γὰρ ἀκράτορα αἰσχυνεῖς διὰ τῆς σεαυτοῦ δεξιότητος. ὁ μὲν γὰρ πεσὼν ἐπὶ γαστέρα καὶ πρὸ τοῦ στόματος τὰς ἀπλήστους διοίξας ἐπιθυμίας ἀκόσμως ἐμφορήσεται καὶ τὰ τοῦ πλησίον ἐπισπάσεται καὶ πάντ' ἐπιλιχμώμενος οὐκ ἐρυθριάσει· καὶ διακορῆς ἐδωδῆς ἐπειδὰν γένηται, χανδὸν, ὡς οἱ ποιηταὶ λέγουσι, “πίνων” γέλωτα καὶ χλεύην παρέξει τοῖς ὀρώσι.
- 32 σὺ δ' ἄνευ μὲν ἀνάγκης χρῆση τοῖς μετρίοις, ἐὰν δέ που βιασθῆς εἰς πλειόνων ἀπόλαυσιν ἐλθεῖν, λογισμὸν τῆς ἀνάγκης ἐπιστήσας ἡγεμόνα τὴν ἡδονὴν εἰς ἀηδίαν οὐδέποτε ἐκτρέψεις, ἀλλ', εἰ χρῆ τὸν τρόπον εἰπεῖν τοῦτον, νηφάλια μεθυσθήσῃ.
- 33 VI. μέμψαιτ' ἂν οὖν δεόντως ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῖς ἀν-
[551] εξετάστως ἀπολείπουναι τὰς ἐν τῷ | πολιτικῷ βίῳ πραγματείας καὶ πορισμοὺς καὶ δόξης καὶ ἡδονῆς καταπεφρονηκέναι λέγουσιν. ἀλαζονεύονται γάρ, οὐ καταφρονουσί, τὸ ῥυπᾶν καὶ σκυθρωπάζειν αὐστηρῶς τε καὶ αὐχμηρῶς ἀποζῆν δελέατα προτιθέντες, ὡς δὴ κοσμιότητος καὶ σωφροσύνης καὶ
34 καρτερίας ἐρασταί. τοὺς δ' ἀκριβεστέρους ἀπατᾶν οὐ δύνανται διακύπτοντας εἴσω καὶ μὴ τοῖς ἐν ἐμφανεί παραγομένους. ταῦτα γὰρ προκαλύμματα

<sup>a</sup> Or “good behaviour.” See App. p. 583.

<sup>b</sup> Odyssey xxi. 294:

οἶνός σε τρώει μελιδῆς, ὅς τε καὶ ἄλλους βλάβπει, ὅς ἂν μιν χανδὸν ἔλη μῆδ' αἴσιμα πίνῃ.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 30-34

vantages of your good name, securing the position of the better kind, and improving the worse by your counsel.

Again, if you go to a luxurious 31 repart where the wine flows freely, go without hesitation ; for you will put the intemperate man to shame by having yourself well in hand.<sup>a</sup> He will fall upon his belly and open his insatiable appetites before he opens his mouth, cram himself in unseemly fashion, grab at his next neighbour's food, and gobble up everything without a blush ; and when he is thoroughly sated with eating, he will as the poets say " drink with a yawning maw,"<sup>b</sup> and incur the mocking and ridicule of all who see him. But you, 32 when there is no compulsion, will drink in moderation ; and should you be forced in any case to indulge more freely, you will place the compulsion under the charge of reason, and never debase pleasure to the displeasure of others, but, if we may so speak, get soberly drunken.<sup>c</sup>

VI. Truth would there- 33 fore rightly find fault with those who without full consideration give up the business and financial side of a citizen's life, and say that they have conceived a contempt for fame and pleasure. For they do not despise these things, they are practising an imposture. Their dirty bodies and gloomy faces, the rigour and squalour of their pinched life, are so many baits to lead others to regard them as lovers of orderliness and temperance and endurance. But they are 34 unable to deceive the more sharp-sighted, who peer inside and refuse to be taken in by what meets the eye. For they thrust this back as mere screening <sup>a</sup> For the milder sense carried by μεθύειν see Introduction to De Plant. Vol. III. p. 209, where St. John ii. 10 δραν μεθυσθῶσι (R.V. " have drunk freely ") was quoted.

PHILO

ὄντα ἐτέρων ἀναστείλαντες, τὰ ἐναποκείμενα ἔνδον, ὅποια ἄττα τὴν φύσιν ἐστίν, ἐθεάσαντο καί, εἰ μὲν εἷη καλά, ἐθαύμασαν, εἰ δὲ αἰσχρά, ἐχλεύασαν καὶ 35 τῆς ὑποκρίσεως ἐμίσησαν. λέγωμεν οὖν τοῖς τοιούτοις· τὸν ἄμικτον καὶ ἀκοινωνήτον μονότροπόν τε καὶ μονωτικὸν βίον ζηλοῦτε; τί γὰρ τῶν ἐν κοινωσίᾳ καλῶν προεπεδείξασθε; ἀργυρισμὸν ἀποστρέψατε; γενόμενοι γὰρ χρηματισταὶ δικαιοπραγεῖν ἠθελήσατε; τῶν γαστρὸς καὶ μετὰ γαστέρα ἡδονῶν ἐπιμορφάζοντες ἀλογεῖν, ἡνίκα τὰς εἰς ταῦτα ἀφθόλους ὕλας εἴχετε, ἐμετριάσατε; δόξης καταφρονεῖτε; γενόμενοι γὰρ ἐν τιμαῖς ἀτυφίαν ἠσκήσατε; πολιτείαν ἐγελάσατε ὑμεῖς, ἴσως ὡς χρήσιμόν ἐστι τὸ πρᾶγμα οὐ κατανοή-36 σαντες. πρότερον οὖν ἐγγυμνάσασθε καὶ προεμμελετήσατε τοῖς τοῦ βίου πράγμασιν ἰδίους τε καὶ κοινοῖς καὶ γενόμενοι πολιτικοὶ τε καὶ οἰκονομικοὶ δι' ἀδελφῶν ἀρετῶν, οἰκονομικῆς τε καὶ πολιτικῆς, κατὰ πολλὴν περιουσίαν τὴν εἰς ἕτερον καὶ ἀμείνω βίον ἀποικίαν στείλασθε· τὸν γὰρ πρακτικὸν τοῦ θεωρητικοῦ βίου, προάγωνά τινα ἀγῶνος τελειοτέρου, καλὸν πρότερον διαθλῆσαι. οὕτως τὴν ὄκνου καὶ ἀργίας κατηγορίαν ἀποδρά-37 σεσθε. οὕτως καὶ τοῖς Λευίταις τὰ μὲν ἔργα ἐπιτελεῖν ἄχρι πεντηκονταετίας διείρηται, ἀπαλλαγείσι δὲ τῆς πρακτικῆς ὑπηρεσίας σκοπεῖν

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 34-37

of quite different things, and get a view of the true nature of the things concealed within, which, if they are beautiful, they admire, but if ugly, ridicule and loathe them for their hypocrisy. To such 35 men, then, let us say : Do you affect the life that eschews social intercourse with others, and courts solitary loneliness ? Well, what proof did you ever give before this of noble social qualities ? Do you renounce money-making ? When engaged in business, were you determined to be just in your dealings ? Would you make a show of paying no regard to the pleasures of the belly and the parts below it—say, when you had abundant material for indulging in these, did you exercise moderation ? Do you despise popular esteem ? Well, when you held posts of honour, did you practise simplicity ? State business is an object of ridicule to you people. Perhaps you have never discovered how serviceable a thing it is. 36

Begin, then, by getting some exercise and practice in the business of life both private and public ; and when by means of the sister virtues, household-management and statesmanship, you have become masters in each domain, enter now, as more than qualified to do so, on your migration to a different and more excellent way of life. For the practical comes before the contemplative life ; it is a sort of prelude to a more advanced contest ; and it is well to have fought it out first. By taking this course you will avoid the imputation of shrinking from it through sheer laziness. 37

It was on this principle too that the Levites were charged to perform their active service until the age of fifty (Numb. iv. 3 ff.), but, when released from their practical ministry, to make everything an object of

PHILO

ἕκαστα καὶ θεωρεῖν, τῆς ἐν τῷ πρακτικῷ βίῳ κατορθώσεως γέρας λαβόντας ἕτερον βίον, ὃς ἐπιστήμη καὶ θεωρία μόνη χαίρει.

38 καὶ ἄλλως ἀναγκαῖον, τοὺς τῶν θείων ἀξιοῦντας μεταποιεῖσθαι δικαίων τὰ ἀνθρώπεια πρότερον ἐκπληρῶσαι· πολλὴ γὰρ εὐήθεια τῶν μειζόνων ὑπολαμβάνειν ἐφίξεσθαι ἀδυνατοῦντας τῶν ἐλαττόνων περιγίνεσθαι. γνωρίσθητε οὖν πρότερον τῇ κατ' ἀνθρώπους ἀρετῇ, ἵνα καὶ τῇ πρὸς θεὸν συσταθῆτε.

39 VII. Τοιαῦτα ὑφηγεῖται τῷ ἀσκητικῷ ἢ ὑπομονῇ, τὰς δὲ λέξεις ἀκριβωτέον. “ἴδου” φησὶν “Ἡσαῦ ὁ ἀδελφός σου ἀπειλεῖ σοι”—ἀλλ’ οὐχ ὁ δρύινος καὶ ὑπ’ ἀμαθίας ἀπειθῆς τρόπος, ὄνομα Ἡσαῦ, ἐγκότως ἔχει καὶ τὰ τῆς θνητῆς ζωῆς προτείνων ἐπ’ ὀλέθρῳ δελέατα, χρήματα, δόξαν, ἡδονάς, τὰ συγγενῇ τούτοις, κατὰ σοῦ φονᾶ;—“σὺ δέ, ὦ τέκνον, ἀπόδραθι τὸν ἐν τῷ παρόντι ἀγῶνα·

[552] οὐπω γὰρ εἰς τὸ παντελὲς | ἐπιδέδωκέ σοι τὰ τῆς ρώμης, ἀλλ’ ἔτι οἶα παιδὸς<sup>1</sup> οἱ ψυχικοὶ τόνοι μαλ-40 θακώτεροι.” διὸ καὶ τέκνον αὐτὸν προσεῖπε, τὸ δ’ ἐστὶν εὐνοίας καὶ ἡλικίας ὄνομα ἐν ταύτῳ· τὸν γὰρ ἀσκητικὸν τρόπον καὶ νέον παρὰ τὸν τέλειον καὶ φιλίας ἄξιον εἶναι τίθεμεν. ὁ δὲ τοιοῦτος ἱκανὸς μὲν ἐστὶ τὰ προτιθέμενα παισὶν<sup>1</sup> ἄθλα ἄρασθαι, τὰ δὲ ἀνδράσιν οὐδέπω δυνατός· ἀνδρῶν δὲ ἄριστον 41 ἄθλον ἢ θεοῦ μόνου θεραπεία. τοιγαροῦν ἐπειδὰν μήπω τελείως καθαρθέντες, δόξαντες δὲ αὐτὸ<sup>2</sup> μόνον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. φησὶν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τοῦτο.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 37-41

observation and contemplation ; receiving as a prize for duty well done in the active life a quite different way of life whose delight is in knowledge and study of principles alone. And apart from this, 39 it is a vital matter that those who venture to make the claims of God their aim and study should first have fully met those of men ; for it is sheer folly to suppose that you will reach the greater while you are incapable of mastering the lesser. Therefore first make yourselves familiar with virtue as exercised in our dealings with men, to the end that you may be introduced to that also which has to do with our relation to God.

VII. Such is the substance of the advice which 39 Patience gives to the Man of Practice, but the actual words need detailed treatment. "Behold," she says, "Esau thy brother is threatening thee." Is it not the case that the character which is hard and wooden, whose ignorance makes it disobedient, the character called "Esau," nurses a grudge, and, offering the baits of this mortal life to destroy thee, money, fame, pleasures, and the like, is bent on killing thee ? "But do thou, my child, flee from the present contest : for not yet has thy strength reached its full development, but, as is natural in a boy, the sinews of thy soul lack firmness." This is why she addressed 40 him as "child," a title at the same time expressive of kindly feeling and suited to a tender age ; for we regard the character of the Practiser both as young compared with the fully developed and as lovable. Such a one is quite capable of winning the prizes that are offered to boys, but is not as yet able to carry off those offered to men ; and the best prize that men can obtain, is to minister to the only God. So, when 41 we present ourselves at the courts in which we are ἐκνύφασθαι τὰ καταρρυπαίνοντα ἡμῶν τὸν βίον, ἐπ' αὐλὰς τῆς θεραπείας ἀφικώμεθα, θάπτον ἢ προσελθεῖν ἀπεπηδήσαμεν, τὴν αὐστηρὰν δίαιταν αὐτῆς καὶ τὴν ἄνπνον θρησκείαν<sup>1</sup> καὶ τὸν συνεχῆ καὶ

PHILO

42 ἀκάματον πόνον οὐκ ἐνεγκόντες. ἀποφεύγετε οὖν ἐν τῷ παρόντι καὶ τὸ κάκιστον καὶ τὸ ἄριστον, κάκιστον μὲν τὸ μυθικὸν πλάσμα, τὸ ἄμετρον καὶ ἐκμελὲς ποίημα, τὸ ὑπ' ἀμαθίας σκληρὸν καὶ δρύινον ὄντως νόημα καὶ πείσμα, ὧν Ἡσαῦ ἐπώνυμος, ἄριστον δὲ τὸ ἀνάθημα· τὸ γὰρ θεραπευτικὸν γένος ἀνάθημά ἐστι θεοῦ, ἱερώμενον

43 τὴν μεγάλην ἀρχιερωσύνην αὐτῷ μόνῳ. τὸ μὲν γὰρ συνδιατρίβειν κακῶ βλαβερώτατον, τὸ δὲ ἀγαθῷ τελείῳ σφαλερώτατον. ὁ γοῦν Ἰακώβ καὶ τὸν Ἡσαῦ ἀποδιδράσκει καὶ τῶν γονέων διοικίζεται· ἀσκητικὸς γὰρ ὧν καὶ ἔτι διαθλῶν φεύγει μὲν κακίαν, ἀρετῇ δὲ τελεία καὶ αὐτομαθεῖ συζῆν

44 ἀδυνατεῖ. VIII. διόπερ ἀποδημήσει πρὸς Λάβαν, οὐ τὸν Σύρον, ἀλλὰ τὸν ἀδελφὸν τῆς μητρός, τὸ δ' ἐστὶν εἰς τὰς τοῦ βίου λαμπρότητας ἀφίξεται· λευκὸς γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται Λάβαν. ἀφικόμενος δὲ οὐχ ὑψαυχενήσει, φυσώμενος ταῖς τυχηραῖς εὐπραγίαις· μεταληφθεὶς γὰρ ὁ Σύρος ἐστὶ μετέωρος. νυνὶ δὲ τοῦ Σύρου Λάβαν οὐχὶ μέμνηται, τοῦ δὲ

45 Ῥεβέκκας ἀδελφοῦ. αἱ γὰρ κατὰ τὸν βίον ὕλαι φαύλῳ μὲν παραδοθεῖσαι μετέωρον ἐξαίρουσι τὸν κενὸν φρονήσεως νοῦν, ὅστις ὠνόμασται Σύρος, ἐραστῇ δὲ παιδείας ἐπιμένοντι τοῖς καλοκάγαθιαις

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀρέσκειαν.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Cong. 61, 62 and note.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 41-45

to minister not yet thoroughly purified, but having just washed off, as we think, the spots which smirch our life, we hurry away from that ministry more quickly than we came to it, not brooking its severe way of living, and the unsleeping observance and the continuous and unflagging toil which it demands.

Flee, then, at present both that which <sup>42</sup> is worst, and that which is best. Worst is the fabulous fiction,<sup>a</sup> the poem without metre or melody, the conception and persuasion <sup>b</sup> which ignorance has rendered hard and wooden in very deed. From this Esau derives his name. Best is the dedicated offering; for the ministering kind is a sacred offering to God, consecrated for the great high priesthood to Him alone. To spend one's days with evil is most hurtful : <sup>43</sup> to do so with perfect goodness most dangerous. So Jacob both flees from Esau and moves away from his parents; for being bent on practice and still engaged in a contest, he flies from evil, but is incapable of sharing the life of perfect virtue that learns untaught. VIII. Consequently he will go abroad to Laban, not <sup>44</sup> the Syrian, but his mother's brother. This means that he will arrive amid the splendours of life, for "Laban" signifies "bright." And when he has arrived, he will not be elated by his good fortune and have a lofty mien; for, though "aloft" is the translation of "Syrian," there is no mention here of the Syrian Laban, but only of the brother of Rebecca. For the <sup>45</sup> ways and means of life placed at the disposal of a worthless man carry his mind up into the height, empty as it is of sound sense, and such a mind is called "Syrian," but for the man enamoured of discipline, steadfastly and firmly persisting in the prin-

<sup>b</sup> Or perhaps "confidence." See App. p. 583.

σταθερῶς καὶ παγίως δόγμασιν * * *<sup>1</sup> οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ Ῥεβέκκας ἀδελφός, τῆς ἐπιμονῆς· οἰκεῖ δὲ τὴν Χαρράν, ἣ μεταληφθεῖσά εἰσι τρώγλαι, σύμβολον τῶν αἰσθήσεων<sup>2</sup>. ὁ γὰρ ἔτι χορεύων ἐν τῷ θνητῷ βίῳ χρεῖος τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὀργάνων ἐστίν.

- 46 “ οἴκησον ” οὖν φησὶν “ ὦ τέκνον, μετ’ αὐτοῦ ” μὴ τὸν ἅπαντα αἰῶνα, ἀλλ’ “ ἡμέρας τινάς, ” τοῦτο [553] δ’ ἐστὶ τὴν τῶν αἰσθήσεων | χώραν κατάμαθε, γνῶθι σαυτὸν καὶ τὰ σαυτοῦ μέρη, τί τε ἕκαστον καὶ πρὸς τί γέγονε καὶ πῶς ἐνεργεῖν πέφυκε καὶ τίς ὁ τὰ θαύματα κινῶν καὶ νευροσπαστῶν ἀόρατος ἀοράτως εἶτε ὁ ἐν σοὶ νοῦς εἶτε ὁ τῶν συμπάντων.
- 47 ἐπειδὰν δὲ σαυτὸν ἐξετάσης, καὶ τὰ ἴδια τοῦ Λάβαν ἀκριβῶσον, τὰς τῆς κενῆς δόξης λαμπρὰς νομιζόμενας εὐπραγίας, ὑφ’ ὧν μηδεμιᾶς ἀλῶς, πάσας δ’ οἶα ἀγαθὸς δημιουργὸς τεχνικῶς ταῖς οἰκείαις ἐφάρμοσον χρεῖαις. ἐὰν γὰρ ἐπιδείξῃ γενόμενος ἐν τῷ πολιτικῷ καὶ πεφυρμένῳ τούτῳ βίῳ σταθερὸν καὶ εὐπαίδευτον ἦθος, μεταπέμψομαί σε ἐκεῖθεν, ἵνα τύχῃς οὐπὲρ καὶ οἱ σοὶ γονεῖς ἄθλου· τὸ δ’ ἄθλον ἐστὶν ἡ ἀκλινῆς καὶ ἀνένδοτος<sup>3</sup> τοῦ μόνου θεραπεία σοφοῦ.
- 48 IX. Τὰ δ’ ὅμοια καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ὑφηγεῖται, μικρὰ προσθείς· λέγει γάρ· “ ἀναστὰς ἀπόδραθι εἰς τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν εἰς τὸν οἶκον Βαθουήλ, τοῦ πατρὸς τῆς μητρὸς σου, καὶ λάβε ἐκεῖθεν σαυτῷ γυναῖκα ἐκ τῶν θυγατέρων Λάβαν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ τῆς μητρὸς 49 σου.” πάλιν καὶ οὗτος οὐ Σύρον εἶπε τὸν Λάβαν, ἀλλὰ Ῥεβέκκας ἀδελφόν, μέλλοντα κατ’ ἐπιγαμίαν

<sup>1</sup> For the lacuna real or supposed see App. p. 583.

<sup>2</sup> Mangey τῶν <ὀπῶν τῶν> αἰσθήσεων; cf. De Mig. 188.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀνευδο(ύ)αστος.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 45-49

principles of nobility of character . . . this is the brother of Rebecca, or "Persistence"; and he dwells in "Haran," which in our language is "cavities," a symbol of the senses; for the man who is still moving upon the stage of this mortal life cannot dispense with the organs of sense. This mother 46 therefore says, "child, make thine abode with him," not for ever, but "for a few days" (Gen. xxvii. 44). This means "Learn well the country of the senses; know thyself, and the parts of which thou dost consist, what each is, and for what it was made, and how it is meant to work, and who it is that, all invisible, invisibly sets the puppets<sup>a</sup> in motion and pulls their strings, whether it be the Mind that is in thee or the Mind of the Universe. And when thou hast 47 examined thyself, make too a precise scrutiny of all that is peculiar to Laban, even the triumphs of vainglory which are accounted so brilliant. Be not caught by any of these, but, like a good craftsman, skilfully adapt them all to thine own requirements. For if, when placed in this turbid scene of state and city life, thou shalt have displayed a steadfast and well-disciplined character, I will fetch thee thence (Gen. xxvii. 45), that thou mayest obtain the very prize obtained by thy parents: and the prize is the unfaltering and untiring ministry to the only wise Being."

IX. Similar instructions are given him by his father, 48 with slight additions; for he says, "Rise up and flee away into Mesopotamia, to the house of Bethuel thy mother's father, and take to thee thence a wife from the daughters of Laban thy mother's brother" (Gen. xxviii. 2). Notice here again how he too, when 49 speaking of Laban as intended to become a con-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Op. 117.

PHILO

τῷ ἀσκητῇ κῆδος συνάπτειν. “ ἀπόδραθι οὖν εἰς τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν,” τουτέστιν εἰς μέσον τὸν χειμάρρουν ποταμὸν τοῦ βίου, καὶ μὴ ἐπικλυθεὶς ἐγκαταποθῆς, στηριχθεὶς δὲ βαιοτάτην<sup>1</sup> ἄνωθεν καὶ 50 τῶν πραγμάτων σθεναρῶς ἀπώθει. τὸν γὰρ σοφίας οἶκον εὐδίων καὶ γαληνὸν λιμένα εὐρήσεις, ὃς ἐνορμιζόμενόν σε ῥαδίως ὑποδέξεται· σοφίας δὲ ὄνομα Βαθουήλ ἐν χρησιμοῖς ἄδεται, τοῦτο δὲ μεταληφθὲν θυγάτηρ θεοῦ προσαγορεύεται, καὶ γνησία γε θυγάτηρ καὶ ἀειπάρθενος, ἀψαύστου καὶ ἀμιάντου φύσεως ἐπιλαχοῦσα διὰ τε τὴν 51 εαυτῆς κοσμιότητα καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀξίωμα τοῦ γεννή-σαντος. πατέρα δὲ τῆς Ῥεβέκκας Βαθουήλ εἶπε. καὶ πῶς ἦ γε θυγάτηρ τοῦ θεοῦ, σοφία, λέγοιτ’ ἂν ἐνδίκως εἶναι πατήρ; ἢ διότι ὄνομα μὲν θῆλυ σοφίας ἐστίν, ἄρρεν δὲ ἡ φύσις; καὶ γὰρ αἱ ἀρεταὶ πᾶσαι προσήσεις μὲν ἔχουσι γυναικῶν, δυνάμεις δὲ καὶ πράξεις ἀνδρῶν τελειοτάτων· ἐπειδὴ τὸ μετὰ τὸν θεόν, κἂν εἰ τῶν ἄλλων ἀπάντων πρεσβύτατον εἶη, δευτέραν ἔχον<sup>2</sup> χώραν θῆλυ ὡς ἂν παρὰ ἄρρεν τὸ τὰ ὅλα ποιοῦν ἐλέχθη κατὰ τὴν πρὸς τᾶλλα ὁμοιότητα· αἰεὶ γὰρ προνομίαν τοῦ ἄρρενος ἔχοντος ἐνδεῖ καὶ ὑστερίζει τὸ θῆλυ.

52 λέγωμεν οὖν μηδὲν τῆς ἐν τοῖς ὀνόμασι δια-φορᾶς φροντίσαντες τὴν θυγατέρα τοῦ θεοῦ σοφίαν ἄρρενά τε καὶ πατέρα εἶναι, σπείροντα καὶ γεννῶντα ἐν ψυχαῖς μάθησιν, παιδείαν, ἐπιστήμην, φρόνησιν,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βεβαιοτάτην.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἔχεις οὐ ἔχει.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 49-52

nexion by marriage with the Practiser, called him not "Syrian" but "brother of Rebecca." "Flee away," he says, "into Mesopotamia," into the midst, that is, of the torrent of life's river, and take care that thou be not overwhelmed by it and drowned, but set thyself firmly, and beat back with vigour the current of affairs as it comes dashing upon thee with utmost violence, from above and from either side and from all directions. For thou shalt find 50 the house of wisdom a calm and fair haven, which will welcome thee kindly as thou comest to thy moorings in it; and it is wisdom's name that the holy oracles proclaim by "Bethuel," a name meaning in our speech "Daughter of God"; yea, a true-born and ever-virgin daughter, who, by reason alike of her own modesty and of the glory of Him that begot her, hath obtained a nature free from every defiling touch.

He called Bethuel Rebecca's father. 51 How, pray, can Wisdom, the daughter of God, be rightly spoken of as a father? Is it because, while Wisdom's name is feminine, her nature is manly? As indeed all the virtues have women's titles, but powers and activities of consummate men. For that which comes after God, even though it were chiefest of all other things, occupies a second place, and therefore was termed feminine to express its contrast with the Maker of the Universe who is masculine, and its affinity to everything else. For pre-eminence always pertains to the masculine, and the feminine always comes short of and is lesser than it.

Let us, then, pay no heed to the discrepancy in the 52 gender of the words, and say that the daughter of God, even Wisdom, is not only masculine but father, sowing and begetting in souls aptness to learn, dis-

PHILO

καλὰς καὶ ἐπαινετὰς πράξεις. ἐνθένδε ὁ ἀσκητῆς [554] Ἰακώβ μνᾶται γάμον ἑαυτῷ· πόθεν γὰρ | ἄλλοθεν ἢ ἐκ τοῦ σοφίας οἴκου κοινωνὸν εὐρήσει γνώμην ἀνεπίληπτον, ἣ πάντα συνδιατρίβει τὸν αἰῶνα;

53 X. Λελάληκε δ' ἀκριβέστερον περὶ φυγῆς, ἠνίκα τὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀνδροφόνοις ἐτίθει νόμον, ἐν ᾧ πάντ' ἐπεξῆλθε τὰ εἶδη, τὸ ἐκουσίου φόνου, τὸ ἀκουσίου, τὸ ἐπιθέσεώς τε καὶ<sup>1</sup> βουλευσεως. λέγε τὸν νόμον·
 "ἐὰν πατάξῃ τις τινα καὶ ἀποθάνῃ, θανάτῳ θανα-τοῦσθω· ὁ δὲ οὐχ ἑκὼν, ἀλλ' ὁ θεὸς παρέδωκεν αὐτὸν εἰς τὰς χεῖρας αὐτοῦ, δώσω σοι τόπον, οὐ φεύξεται ὁ φονεύσας. ἐὰν δέ τις ἐπιθῆται τῷ πλησίον ἀποκτεῖναι αὐτὸν δόλῳ καὶ καταφύγῃ, ἀπὸ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου λήψῃ αὐτὸν θανατῶσαι."

54 . σαφῶς εἰδώς, ὅτι περιττὸν ὄνομα οὐδὲν τίθησιν ὑπὸ τῆς τοῦ πραγματολογεῖν ἀμυθήτου φορᾶς, ἠπόρουσαν κατ' ἑμαυτόν, διὰ τί τὸν ἐκουσίως κτείναντα οὐκ εἶπε θανατοῦσθαι μόνον, ἀλλὰ θανάτῳ 55 θανατοῦσθαι· τίμη γὰρ ἄλλῳ ὁ ἀποθνήσκων ἢ θανατῳ τελευτᾷ; φοιτήσας οὖν παρὰ γυναῖκα σοφὴν, ἣ σκέψις ὄνομα, τοῦ ζητεῖν ἀπηλλάγην· ἐδίδαξε γὰρ με, ὅτι καὶ ζῶντες ἐνιοὶ τεθνήκασιν καὶ τεθνηκότες ζῶσιν. τοὺς μὲν γε φαύλους ἄχρι γήρως ὑστάτου παρατεινοντάς νεκροὺς ἔλεγεν εἶναι τὸν μετ' ἀρετῆς βίον ἀφηρημένους, τοὺς δὲ ἀστείους, καὶ τῆς πρὸς σῶμα κοινωνίας διαζευχθῶσι, ζῆν εἰσαεῖ, ἀθανάτου μοίρας ἐπιλαχόντας.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὸ ἐπιθέσεως, τὸ βουλήσεως, but see § 78, where assault and premeditation form a single head.

<sup>a</sup> So Mangey; Wendland places the comma before ὑπό, perhaps taking it "through my perpetual tendency to argue I began" etc. See on De Som. i. 230.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 52-56

cipline, knowledge, sound sense, good and laudable actions. It is from this household that Jacob the Practiser seeks to win a bride. To what other place than to the house of wisdom shall he go to find a partner, a faultless judgement, with whom to spend his days for ever ?

X. The lawgiver has spoken in greater detail on 53 the subject of flight when laying down the law respecting manslaughter, in which he goes into all the different forms, that of intentional slaying, that of unintentional, that of deliberate assault. Read the Law : " If a man smite another and he die, let him die the death. But he that did not intend it, but God delivered him into his hands, I will give thee a place to which the slayer shall flee. And if a man attack his neighbour to slay him by guile and he take refuge, from the altar shalt thou take him to put him to death " (Exod. xxi. 12-14). Well 54 knowing that he never puts in a superfluous word, so vast is his <sup>a</sup> desire to speak plainly and clearly, I began debating with myself why he said that the intentional slayer is not to be put to death only but " by death to be put to death." " In what other 55 way," I asked myself, " does a man who dies come to his end save by death ? " So I attended the lectures of a wise woman, whose name is " Consideration," and was rid of my questioning ; for she taught me that some people are dead while living, and some alive while dead. She told me that bad people, prolonging their days to extreme old age, are dead men, deprived of the life in association with virtue, while good people, even if cut off from their partnership with the body, live for ever, and are granted immortality. XI. She confirmed what 56

PHILO

56 XI. ἐπιστοῦτο μέντοι καὶ χρησιμοῖς τὸν ἑαυτῆς λόγον, ἐνὶ μὲν τοιῶδε· “οἱ προσκείμενοι κυρίῳ τῷ θεῷ, ζήτε πάντες ἐν τῇ σήμερον”· τοὺς γὰρ πρόσφυγας καὶ ἰκέτας τοῦ θεοῦ μόνους ζῶντας οἶδε, νεκροὺς δὲ τοὺς ἄλλους· ἐκείνοις δ’, ὡς ἔοικε, καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν μαρτυρεῖ διὰ τοῦ προσθεῖναι “ζήτε ἐν

57 τῇ σήμερον.” σήμερον δ’ ἐστὶν ὁ ἀπέρατος<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἀδιεξίτητος αἰὼν· μηνῶν γὰρ καὶ ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ συνόλως χρόνων περίοδοι δόγματα ἀνθρώπων εἰσὶν ἀριθμὸν ἐκτετιμηκότων· τὸ δ’ ἀψευδὲς ὄνομα αἰῶνος ἢ σήμερον. ἥλιος γὰρ οὐκ ἀλλαττόμενος ὁ αὐτός ἐστιν αἰεὶ, ποτὲ μὲν ὑπὲρ γῆς ποτὲ δὲ ὑπὸ γῆν ἰών, παρ’ ὃν ἡμέρα καὶ νύξ, τὰ αἰῶνος μέτρα, διεκρί-

58 θησαν· ἐτέρῳ δ’ ἐπιστοῦτο τοιῶδε χρησμῶ· “ἰδοὺ δέδωκα πρὸ προσώπου σου τὴν ζωὴν καὶ τὸν θάνατον, τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ τὸ κακόν”— οὐκοῦν, ὦ πάνσοφε, τὸ μὲν ἀγαθὸν καὶ ἡ ἀρετὴ ἐστὶν ἡ ζωὴ, τὸ δὲ κακὸν καὶ ἡ κακία ὁ θάνατος· καὶ ἐν ἑτέροις· “αὕτη ἡ ζωὴ σου καὶ ἡ μακρότης τῶν ἡμερῶν, ἀγαπᾶν κύριον τὸν θεόν σου.” ὄρος ἀθανάτου βίου κάλλιστος οὗτος, ἔρωτι καὶ φιλίᾳ θεοῦ ἀσάρκῳ καὶ ἀσωμάτῳ κατεσχῆσθαι.

59
555] Οὕτως | οἱ μὲν ἱερεῖς Ναδαῶβ καὶ Ἀβιουδ, ἵνα

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps ἀπέρατος. See note on Quis Rerum 212.

<sup>a</sup> Or “eternity,” but there is not here that opposition between time and eternity which we sometimes have in Philo, e.g. Quod Deus 32. Perhaps “the ages” is the best English equivalent.

<sup>b</sup> The thought is not very clear. Perhaps “the sun measures time by its presence and absence. Thus it is always some day and therefore at each moment ‘to-day.’”

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 56-59

she said by holy oracles also, one of them to this effect: "Ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive all of you at this day" (Deut. iv. 4). For only those who have taken refuge in God and become His supplicants does Moses recognize as living, accounting the rest to be dead men. Indeed he evidently ascribes immortality to the former by adding "ye are alive 'to-day.'" Now "to-day" <sup>57</sup> is the limitless age that never comes to an end; for periods of months and years, and of lengths of time generally, are notions of men arising from the high importance which they have attached to number. But the absolutely correct name for "endless age" <sup>a</sup> is "to-day." For the sun never changes, but is always the same, going now above, now below, the earth; and through it day and night, the measures of endless age, are distinguished. <sup>b</sup> Another <sup>58</sup> oracle by which she verified her statement was this: "Behold, I have given before thy face life and death, good and evil" (Deut. xxx. 15). Accordingly, thou wisest of teachers, goodness and virtue is life, evil and wickedness is death. Again, elsewhere: "This is thy life and length of days, to love the Lord thy God" (Deut. xxx. 20). This is a most noble definition of deathless life, to be possessed by a love of God and a friendship for God with which flesh and body have no concern.

It is thus that the priests Nadab and Abihu <sup>c</sup> die <sup>59</sup>

It might be given more clearly by translating in a different order; "For the sun, though its course is sometimes above sometimes below the earth, and thus creates the distinction between daytime and night-time, which serves as a measure of the ages, is always the same sun." Perhaps read  $\pi\alpha\rho' \delta$  for  $\pi\alpha\rho' \delta\nu$ . The same thought appears in Leg. All. iii. 25.

<sup>c</sup> Cf. Leg. All. ii. 58, Quis Rerum 309.

PHILO

ζήσωσιν, ἀποθνήσκουσιν θνητῆς ζωῆς ἄφθαρτον ἀντικαταλλαττόμενοι βίον καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ γενομένου πρὸς τὸ ἀγέννητον μετανιστάμενοι· ἐφ' ὧν<sup>1</sup> τὰ σύμβολα τῆς ἀφθαρσίας ἄδεται, ὅτι<sup>2</sup> ἐτελεύτησαν ἐνώπιον κυρίου, τουτέστιν ἔζησαν· νεκρὸν γὰρ οὐ θέμις εἰς ὄψιν ἔλθειν τοῦ θεοῦ. καὶ πάλιν “ τοῦτό ἐστιν ὃ εἶπε κύριος· ‘ ἐν τοῖς ἐγγιζουσί μοι ἁγιασθήσομαι,’ ” “ νεκροὶ δ’ ” ὡς καὶ ἐν ὕμνοις λέγεται, “ οὐκ αἰνέσουσι κύριον ”· ζώντων γὰρ τὸ ἔργον.

60 Κάιν δ’ ὁ ἐναγῆς καὶ ἀδελφοκτόνος οὐδαμοῦ τῆς νομοθεσίας ἀποθνήσκων εὐρίσκεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ λόγιόν ἐστιν ἐπ’ αὐτῷ χρησθὲν τοιοῦτον· “ ἔθετο κύριος ὁ θεὸς τῷ Κάιν σημεῖον, τοῦ μὴ 61 ἀνελεῖν αὐτὸν πάντα τὸν εὐρίσκοντα.” διὰ τί; ὅτι, οἶμαι, ἡ ἀσέβεια κακὸν ἐστὶν ἀτελεύτητον, ἐξαπτόμενον καὶ μηδέποτε<sup>3</sup> σβεσθῆναι δυνάμενον, ὡς τὸ ποιητικὸν ἀρμόττειν ἐπὶ κακίας εἰπεῖν·

ἡ δέ τοι οὐ θνητή, ἀλλ’ ἀθάνατον κακὸν ἐστίν, ἀθάνατον δ’ ἐν τῷ παρ’ ἡμῖν βίῳ, ἐπεὶ πρὸς γε τὴν ἐν θεῷ ζωὴν ἄψυχον καὶ νεκρὸν καὶ “ κοπρίων,” 62 ὡς ἔφη τις, “ ἐκβλητότερον.” XII. ἀλλ’ ἔδει γε πάντως χώρας ἀπονεμηθῆναι διαφερούσας πράγμασι διαφέρουσιν, οὐρανὸν μὲν ἀγαθῶ, τὰ δὲ περιγεια κακῶ. τὸ μὲν οὖν ἀγαθὸν ἀνώφοιτόν ἐστι, <sup>1</sup> MSS. ῶ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὅτε (τότε).

<sup>3</sup> MSS. μηδέπω.

<sup>a</sup> In E.V. Ps. cxv. 17.

<sup>b</sup> The real meaning of the text no doubt is “ He set a sign upon Cain, in order that no one should kill him.” But the fuller discussion of the text in Quod Det. 177 shows that Philo, with little respect for grammar, takes it as in the translation, viz. that the distinctive mark of the Cain-soul is that it can never be killed.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 59-62

in order that they may live, receiving an incorruptible life in exchange for mortal existence, and being translated from the created to the uncreate. Over them a proclamation is uttered betokening immortality, "They died before the Lord" (Lev. x. 2), that is "They came to life," for a corpse may not come into God's presence. And again, "This is that which the Lord hath said, 'I will be sanctified in them that draw nigh unto me'" (Lev. x. 3), "But dead men," as we hear in the Psalms, "shall not praise the Lord" (Psalm cxiii. 25)<sup>a</sup>: for that is the work of living men. On the other hand, 60 of Cain the accursed fratricide's death no mention is found anywhere in the Books of the Law—nay, there is an oracle uttered concerning him which says, "The Lord God set a sign on Cain, even this, that no man that found him should kill him" (Gen. iv. 15).<sup>b</sup> Why so? Because, I suppose, impiety is 61 an evil that cannot come to an end, being ever set alight and never able to be quenched, so that we may fitly apply to wickedness the poet's words:

No mortal is she, but a deathless ill.<sup>c</sup>

It is in life as we know it that it is "deathless," for in relation to the LIFE in God it is a lifeless corpse, "more utter refuse than dung," as one has said.<sup>d</sup> XII. Now, it was quite fitting that different regions 62 should be allotted to different things, heaven to a good thing, the earthly parts to an evil thing. That which is good is a thing upward-soaring; and should

<sup>c</sup> Odyssey xii. 118.

<sup>d</sup> Heraclitus. The phrase νεκρες κοπρίων ἐκβλητότεροι is quoted as from him by several writers. See Bywater, Heracliti Ephesii reliquiae 85.

PHILO

- κᾶν εἴ ποτε ἔλθοι πρὸς ἡμᾶς—φιλόδωρος γὰρ ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ,—σπουδάζει παλινδρομῆσαι δικαίως· τὸ δὲ κακὸν ἐνταυθοῖ καταμένει, πορρωτάτω θείου χοροῦ διωκισμένον, περιπολοῦν τὸν θνητὸν βίον καὶ μὴ δυνάμενον ἐκ τοῦ ἀνθρωπίνου γένους
- 63 ἀποθανεῖν. τοῦτό τις καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ σοφία θαυμασθέντων ἀνὴρ δόκιμος ἐφώνησε μεγαλειότερον ἐν Θεαιτήτῳ φάσκων· “ ἄλλ’ οὐτ’ ἀπολέσθαι τὰ κακὰ δυνατόν—ὑπεναντίον γάρ τι τῷ ἀγαθῷ<sup>1</sup> αἰεὶ εἶναι ἀνάγκη—οὔτε ἐν θεοῖς<sup>2</sup> αὐτὰ ἰδρῦσθαι, τὴν δὲ θνητὴν φύσιν καὶ τόνδε τὸν τόπον περιπολεῖ<sup>3</sup>. διὸ καὶ πειρᾶσθαι χρὴ ἐνθένθε ἐκείσε φεύγειν ὅτι τάχιστα. φυγὴ δὲ ὁμοίωσις θεῷ κατὰ τὸ δυνατόν· ὁμοίωσις δὲ δίκαιον καὶ ὄσιον μετὰ φρονήσεως
- 64 γενέσθαι.” εἰκότως οὖν ὁ Καῖν οὐκ ἀποθανεῖται, τὸ κακίας σύμβολον, ἣν αἰεὶ δεῖ ζῆν ἐν τῷ θνητῷ γένει παρ’ ἀνθρώποις. <sup>4</sup> ὥστ’ οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τὸ “ θανάτῳ θανατοῦσθαι ” λέλεκται τὸν ἀνδροφόνον διὰ τὰς δεδηλωμένας αἰτίας.
- 65 XIII. Τὸ δὲ “ οὐχ ἐκῶν, ἀλλ’ ὁ θεὸς παρέδωκεν ” ἐπὶ τῶν τὸν ἀκούσιον φόνον δρώντων πάνυ καλῶς εἴρηται. δοκεῖ γὰρ αὐτῷ τὰ μὲν ἐκούσια γνώμης τῆς ἡμετέρας ἔργα εἶναι, τὰ δὲ ἀκούσια θεοῦ· λέγω δὲ οὐ τὰ ἀμαρτήματα, ἀλλὰ τούναντίον ὅσα

<sup>1</sup> So Plato: mss. γὰρ τῷ θεῷ.

<sup>2</sup> So Plato: mss. θεοῖς, which Wendland retains. Philo may have deliberately wished to avoid the thought of “ gods.”

<sup>3</sup> So Plato: mss. περιπολεῖν, which Wendland retains.

<sup>4</sup> Wendland puts a colon before ὥστε. But the following clause does not belong to the Cain meditation, which is a digression, but refers to the whole argument begun in § 54 and broken off in § 60.

<sup>a</sup> See App. pp. 583 f.

it ever come to us, in the bounty of its Father, it hastens, as is meet and right, to retrace its steps; but that which is evil stays here, removed as far as possible from the Divine Company,<sup>a</sup> making our mortal life its haunt, and incapable of quitting the human race by dying. This truth found noble 63 utterance in the Theaetetus, where a man highly esteemed, one of those admired for their wisdom, says: "Evils can never pass away; for there must always remain something which is antagonistic to good. Having no place among the gods in heaven, of necessity they hover around the mortal nature and this earthly sphere. Wherefore we ought to fly away from earth to heaven as quickly as we can; and to fly away is to become like God, as far as this is possible; and to become like Him is to become holy, just, and wise."<sup>b</sup> Naturally, therefore, Cain will 64 not die, being the symbol of wickedness, which must of necessity ever live among men in the race that is mortal. There is, then, for the reasons that have been pointed out, definite point in the direction that the manslayer "be put by death to death."

XIII. The words, "not intentionally, but God 65 delivered him into his hands," are admirably employed of those who commit an unintentional homicide. The writer feels that intentional acts are acts of our own determination, and that unintentional acts are God's acts: I mean not the sins, but, on the contrary, all acts that are a punishment for sins.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>b</sup> Theaetetus 176 A, B (Jowett's translation).

<sup>c</sup> i.e. Philo distinguishes between the ordinary sense of ἀκούσια meaning our involuntary and unavoidable slips and that in which it indicates the acts in which we are unconsciously God's ministers. In § 76 he seems to drop this distinction.

PHILO

- 66 [556] ἁμαρτημάτων ἐστὶ κόλασις. | ἀπρεπὲς γὰρ θεῷ
 τὸ κολάζειν ἅτε πρώτῳ καὶ ἀρίστῳ νομοθέτῃ, κολάζει<sup>1</sup> δὲ <δι> ὑπηρετούντων ἐτέρων, οὐ δι' ἑαυτοῦ. τὰς μὲν γὰρ χάριτας καὶ δωρεὰς καὶ εὐεργεσίας αὐτὸν ἀρμόττει προτείνειν ἅτε ἀγαθὸν καὶ φιλόδωρον ὄντα φύσει, τὰς δὲ τιμωρίας οὐκ ἄνευ μὲν ἐπικελεύσεως τῆς ἑαυτοῦ βασιλέως ἅτε ὑπάρχοντος, δι' ἄλλων δέ, οἱ πρὸς τοιαύτας χρείας 67 εὐτρεπεῖς εἰσι. μαρτυρεῖ δέ μου τῷ λόγῳ ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἐν οἷς φησιν· “ὁ θεὸς ὁ τρέφων με ἐκ νεότητος, ὁ ἄγγελος ὁ ῥυόμενός με ἐκ πάντων τῶν κακῶν.” τὰ μὲν γὰρ πρεσβύτερα ἀγαθὰ, οἷς ἡ ψυχὴ τρέφεται, ἀνέθηκε θεῷ, τὰ δὲ νεώτερα, ὅσα ἐκ φυγῆς ἁμαρτημάτων περιγίνεται, θεράποντι 68 θεοῦ. διὰ τοῦτ', οἶμαι, καὶ ἡνίκα τὰ τῆς κοσμοποιίας ἐφιλοσόφει, πάντα τᾶλλα εἰπὼν ὑπὸ θεοῦ γενέσθαι μόνον τὸν ἄνθρωπον ὡς ἂν μετὰ συνεργῶν ἐτέρων ἐδήλωσε διαπλασθέντα. “εἶπε” γὰρ φησιν “ὁ θεός· ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον κατ' εἰκόνα ἡμετέραν,” πλήθους διὰ τοῦ “ποιήσωμεν” 69 ἐμφαινομένου. διαλέγεται μὲν οὖν ὁ τῶν ὄλων πατὴρ ταῖς ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεσιν, αἷς τὸ θνητὸν ἡμῶν τῆς ψυχῆς μέρος ἔδωκε διαπλάττειν μιμουμέναις τὴν αὐτοῦ τέχνην, ἡνίκα τὸ λογικὸν ἐν ἡμῖν ἐμόρφου, δικαίων ὑπὸ μὲν ἡγεμόνος τὸ ἡγεμονεῦον ἐν ψυχῇ, τὸ δ' ὑπήκοον πρὸς ὑπηκόων δημιουργ-70 γείσθαι. κατεχρήσατο <δὲ> καὶ ταῖς μεθ' ἑαυτοῦ δυνάμεσιν οὐ διὰ τὸ λεχθὲν μόνον, ἀλλ' ὅτι ἐμελλεν

<sup>1</sup> mss. κολάζειν, which perhaps might be retained. To understand ἐμπρεπὲς from ἀπρεπὲς might be paralleled in Philo.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 66-70

For it is unbecoming to God to punish, seeing that 66
He is the original and perfect Lawgiver : He punishes not by His own hands but by those of others who act as His ministers. Boons, gifts, benefits it is fitting that He should extend, since He is by nature good and bountiful, but punishments by the agency of others who are ready to perform such services, though not without his command given in virtue of his sovereignty.

The Practiser testifies 67 to what I say in the words, " God who nourishes me from youth, the Angel who delivers me out of all my evils " (Gen. xlviii. 15 f.). He ascribes to God the more important good things, by which the soul is nourished, and the less important, which come about by escape from sins, to God's minister. <sup>a</sup>

It is for this reason, I imagine, that Moses, when 68 treating in his lessons of wisdom of the Creation of the world, after having said of all other things that they were made by God, described man alone as having been fashioned with the co-operation of others. His words are : " God said, let us make man after our image " (Gen. i. 26), " let us make " <sup>b</sup> indicating more than one. So the Father of all things 69 is holding parley with His powers, whom He allowed to fashion the mortal portion of our soul by imitating the skill shewn by Him when He was forming that in us which is rational, since He deemed it right that by the Sovereign should be wrought the sovereign faculty in the soul, the subject part being wrought by subjects. And He employed the powers that 70 are associated with Him not only for the reason mentioned, but because, alone among created

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. iii. 177, De Conf. 181.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Conf. 169.

- ἢ ἀνθρώπου ψυχὴ μόνη κακῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν ἐννοίας λαμβάνειν καὶ χρῆσθαι ταῖς ἐτέραις, εἰ μὴ δυνατὸν ἀμφοτέραις. ἀναγκαῖον οὖν ἠγγήσατο τὴν κακῶν γένεσιν ἐτέροις ἀπονεῖμαι δημιουργοῖς, τὴν δὲ
- 71 τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἑαυτῷ μόνῳ. XIV. διὸ καὶ λεχθέντος πρότερον “ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον” ὡς ἂν ἐπὶ πλήθους, ἐπιφέρεται τὸ ὡς ἂν ἐφ’ ἐνός· “ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρωπον.” τοῦ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀνθρώπου, ὃς δὴ νοῦς ἐστὶ καθαρῶτατος, εἰς ὃ μόνος θεὸς δημιουργός, τοῦ δὲ λεγομένου καὶ κεκραμένου μετ’ αἰσθήσεως τὸ πλήθος.
- 72 οὗ χάριν ὁ μὲν κατ’ ἐξοχὴν ἄνθρωπος σὺν τῷ ἄρθρῳ μεμῆνυται—λέγεται γάρ· “ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρωπον,” τὸν ἀειδῆ καὶ ἄκρατον ἐκείνον λογισμὸν,—ὃ δὲ ἄνευ τῆς τοῦδε προσθήκης· τὸ γὰρ “ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον” ἐμφαίνει τὸν ἐξ ἀλόγου καὶ λογικῆς συνυφανθέντα φύσεως.
- 73 ἐπόμενος τούτοις τό τε εὐλογεῖν τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς καὶ τὸ καταρᾶσθαι τοῖς ὑπαιτίοις ἀνέθηκεν οὐχὶ τοῖς αὐτοῖς, καίτοι γε ἀμφοτέρων ἐχόντων ἔπαινον, ἀλλ’ ἐπειδὴ τὸ μὲν εὐλογεῖν τοὺς ἀξίους ἡγεμονίαν ἔχει τὴν ἐν ἐγκωμίοις, τὸ δ’ ἄρα τῶν φαύλοις τίθεσθαι δευτέραν τάξιν, τῶν ἐπὶ ταῦτα χειρο-
- [557] τονηθέντων— | εἰσὶ δὲ οἱ τοῦ γένους ἀρχηγῆται δώδεκα ἀριθμῶ, φυλάρχας αὐτοὺς ὀνομάζειν ἔθος—ἐξ μὲν τοὺς ἀμείνους ἔταξεν ἐπὶ τῆς εὐλογίας, Συμεῶν, Λευί, Ἰούδαν, Ἰσάχαρ, Ἰωσήφ καὶ Βενιαμίν, τοὺς δ’ ἐτέρους ἐπὶ τῆς κατάρας, τὸν τε πρῶτον καὶ τὸν ὕστατον τῶν Λείας, Ῥουβὴν καὶ Ζαβουλών, καὶ τοὺς ἐκ τῶν θεραπεινίδων νόθους beings, the soul of man was to be susceptible of conceptions of evil things and good things, and to use one sort or the other, since it is impossible for him to use both.<sup>a</sup> Therefore God deemed it necessary to assign the creation of evil things to other makers, reserving that of good things to Himself alone.

<sup>a</sup> Literally, “unless it is possible,” which of course it is not, ei μή, as often, indicating a reductio ad absurdum.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 70-73

XIV. Wherefore also, while in the former 71 case the expression used was "let us make man," as though more than one were to do it, there is used afterwards an expression pointing to One, "God made the man" (Gen. i. 27). For of the real man, who is absolutely pure Mind, One, even the only God, is the Maker; but a plurality of makers produce man so-called, one that has an admixture of sense-perception. That is why he who is man in 72 the special sense is mentioned with the article. The words run "God made the man," that invisible reasoning faculty free from admixture. The other has no article added; for the words "let us make man" point to him in whom an irrational and rational nature are woven together. In 73 adherence to the same principle he ascribes the blessing of the good and the cursing of the guilty to different persons. Both, it is true, receive praise, but blessing those worthy of blessing enjoys the prerogative which belongs to eulogies, while the laying of curses on the evil occupies but a second place. Therefore of those appointed for this purpose, the chiefs of the race, twelve in number, whom we are accustomed to call tribe-leaders, he set the six best over the blessing, Symeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Joseph and Benjamin; and the other six over the cursing, the first and the last of the sons of Leah, Reuben and Zabulon, and the four bastard-born of

PHILO

- 74 τέτταρας. τῆς γὰρ βασιλείου καὶ (τῆς) ἱερωμένης φυλῆς οἱ ἡγεμόνες ἐν τῇ προτέρᾳ τάξει χορευούσιν, Ἰούδας τε καὶ Λευί. εἰκότως οὖν καὶ τοὺς ἄξια θανάτου δρῶντας ἐτέρων χερσὶν ἐκδίδωσιν ἐπὶ τιμωρία, βουλόμενος ἡμᾶς ἀναδιδάσκειν, ὅτι ἡ κακοῦ φύσις μακρὰν ἀπελήλαται χοροῦ θείου, ὁπότε καὶ τὸ μιμηλάζον ἀγαθὸν κακῶ, ἢ τιμωρία, δι' ἐτέρων βεβαιοῦται.
- 75 Τὸ δὲ “ δώσω σοι τόπον, οὗ φεύξεται ὁ φονεύσας ” ἀκουσίως, πάνυ καλῶς εἰρησθαί μοι δοκεῖ· τόπον γὰρ καλεῖ νῦν οὐ χώραν ἐκπεπληρωμένην ὑπὸ σώματος, ἀλλὰ δι' ὑπονοιῶν αὐτὸν τὸν θεόν, ἐπειδὴ περιέχων οὐ περιέχεται καὶ ὅτι καταφυγὴ τῶν ὄλων ἐστί. θέμις οὖν τῷ δόξαντι τροπῇ χρῆσασθαι ἀκουσίῳ φάναι κατὰ θεὸν συμβῆναι τὴν τροπῇ, ὅπερ<sup>1</sup> οὐ θέμις τῷ ἐκουσίως ἀμαρτόντι. “ δώσειν ” δέ φησιν οὐ τῷ κτείναντι, ἀλλ' ᾧ διαλέγεται, ὥσθ' ἕτερον μὲν εἶναι τὸν οἰκήτορα, ἕτερον δὲ τὸν φεύγοντα. τῷ μὲν γὰρ ἑαυτοῦ λόγῳ ὁ θεὸς πατρίδα οἰκεῖν τὴν ἐπιστήμην ἑαυτοῦ, ὡς ἂν αὐτόχθονι, δεδώρηται, τῷ δ' ἐν ἀκουσίῳ γενομένῳ σφάλμασι καταφυγὴν, ὡς ὀθνεῖω ξένην, οὐχ ὡς πατρίδα ἀστώ.
- 77 XV. Ταῦτα καὶ περὶ τῶν ἀκουσίῳ φιλοσοφήσας περὶ τῆς ἐπαναστάσεως καὶ βουλευσεως ἐξῆς νομοθετεῖ φάσκων· “ εἰ δέ τις ἐπιθῆται τῷ πλησίον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὥσπερ.

<sup>a</sup> The point of the sentence is not quite clear. Perhaps the meaning is that by placing the two clearly superior tribes in the first list, Moses indicates that this list is as a whole superior.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 584.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 74-77

the handmaids (Deut. xxvii. 12 f.). For the leaders 74 of the royal and of the priestly tribe hold a position in the former list, Judah and Levi.<sup>a</sup> Quite naturally, then, does He give up for punishment into the hands of others those who commit acts deserving death. He wishes to teach us that the nature of evil is far removed from the Divine Company, inasmuch as even the good thing which imitates evil, punishment, is ratified by means of others.

The terms in which the announcement " I will 75 give thee a place where the " unintentional " slayer shall take refuge " is made, seem to me to be excellently chosen. For here He uses the word " place," not of a space entirely filled by a body,<sup>b</sup> but symbolically of God Himself, since He contains and is not contained, and because He is the Refuge for the whole universe. It is lawful, therefore, for one 76 who feels that he has fallen into an unintentional offence, to say that the offence came about as God ordained, a statement which the deliberate wrongdoer may not make. Further He says that He " will give " not to the slayer but to him whom He is addressing,<sup>c</sup> which shews that the dweller in the place is a different person from him who escapes thither. For to His Word, as to one indigenous, God has given His knowledge as a fatherland to dwell in, but to one who has fallen into unintentional offences He has given it as a place of refuge, as a strange land to an alien, not as a fatherland to one with a citizen's rights.

XV. After treating in this way of unintentional 77 acts he goes on to legislate concerning assault and premeditation, saying, " If a man set upon his ἀποκτεῖναι αὐτὸν δόλω καὶ καταφύγη<sup>1</sup>” ἐπὶ τὸν θεόν, τὸν προειρημένον συμβολικῶς τόπον, παρ’ ὃν ζῆν συμβέβηκε τοῖς πᾶσι· καὶ γὰρ ἐτέρωθί 78 φησιν· “ὃς ἂν φύγη ἐκεῖ, καὶ ζήσεται.” ἀλλ’ οὐ ζωὴ μὲν ἔστιν αἰώνιος ἢ πρὸς τὸ ὄν καταφυγή, θάνατος δ’ ὁ ἀπὸ τούτου δρασμός; εἰ δέ τις ἐπιτίθεται, πάντως ἐκ προνοίας ἀδικεῖ, καὶ τὸ σὺν δόλω πραττόμενον ἐκουσίως ἔνοχον, ὡς τὸ ἀδόλως

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Philo takes the " thee " of the text to be the Logos.

PHILO

79 ἔμπαλιν οὐδ’ ὑπαίτιον. οὐδὲν οὖν τῶν ὑπούλως καὶ δολερῶς καὶ ἐκ προνοίας πραττομένων ἀδικημάτων ἄξιον λέγειν γίνεσθαι κατὰ θεόν, ἀλλὰ καθ’ ἡμᾶς αὐτούς. ἐν ἡμῖν γὰρ αὐτοῖς, ὡς ἔφην, οἱ τῶν κακῶν<sup>2</sup> εἰσι θησαυροί, παρὰ θεῷ δὲ οἱ μόνων
80 ἀγαθῶν. ὃς ἂν οὖν καταφύγη, τὸ δ’ ἔστιν ὃς ἂν τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων μὴ ἑαυτὸν ἀλλὰ θεὸν αἰτιᾶται, κολαζέσθω, τῆς μόνοις ἰκέταις πρὸς σωτηρίαν καὶ ἀσφάλειαν καταφυγῆς, τοῦ βωμοῦ, στερουόμενος, καὶ μήποτ’ εἰκότως· ἀμώμων γὰρ ἱερείων, λέγω
[558] δὲ ψυχῶν ἀσινῶν καὶ κεκαθαρμένων, τὸ | θυσιαστήριον ἀνάπλεῶν ἔστι· δυσίατος δὲ ἢ παντελῶς ἀνίατος μῶμος τὸ φάσκειν καὶ κακῶν αἴτιον εἶναι
81 τὸ θεῖον. φίλαντοι δὴ μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι σπουδᾶσαντες οἱ τοιοῦτοι τρόποι πάντες εἶναι βαινέτωσαν ἔξω περιρραντηρίων, ἵν’ ὡς μιαιοὶ καὶ ἀκάθαρτοι μηδ’ ἐξ ἀπόπτου τὴν ἱερὰν φλόγα τῆς ἀνακαιομένης ἀσβέστου ψυχῆς καὶ θεῷ καθαγιζομένης ὀλοκλήρῳ
82 καὶ παντελεῖ δυνάμει θεάσωνται. παγκάλως τις τῶν πάλαι σοφῶν εἰς ταῦτ’ οὗτο συν-

<sup>1</sup> So according to Mangey in the New College ms.: Wend.’s mss. have καταφύγη ποιεῖ, from which Cohn suggests, I think with great probability, καταφύγη· πῶι;

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κακιῶν.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 77-82

neighbour to slay him by guile and flee for refuge " (Exod. xxi. 14) to God, even to Him Who has been already symbolically called a place, Who is the occasion of life to all; for in another place likewise it says, " Whosoever shall flee there shall live " (Deut. xix. 5). And is it not life eternal to take refuge with Him 78 that is, and death to flee away from Him? But if a man sets upon another he certainly deliberately commits a wrong, and that which is done intentionally with guile incurs guilt, even as, on the other hand, no blame attaches to the act in which there is no guile. Accordingly it is not right to say that any wrongs 79 committed with secret hostility and with guile and as the result of premeditation are done as God ordains; they are done as we ordain. For as I have said, the treasures of evil things are in ourselves; with God are those of good things only. Whosoever, 80 therefore, takes refuge, that is, whosoever blames not himself but God for his sins, let him be punished, by being deprived of the refuge which is a place of deliverance and safety for suppliants only, namely the altar. Is not this meet and right? For the place of sacrifice is wholly occupied by victims free from blemish, that is by innocent and purified souls; and it is a blemish that can hardly, if at all, be remedied, to assert that the Deity is the cause of evil things as of all others. All such characters have made self- 81 love their aim rather than love of God. Let them go forth outside the hallowed precincts, that in their foulness and uncleanness they may not behold even from afar the sacred flame of the soul ascending in unquenchable fire, and with power entire and unimpaired being sacrificed to God. In daring 82 and noble language one of the wise men of old has δραμῶν ἐθάρρησεν εἰπεῖν, ὅτι “ θεὸς οὐδαμῇ οὐ-δαμῶς ἄδικος, ἀλλ’ ὡς οἶόν τε δικαιοτάτος, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτῷ ὁμοιότερον οὐδὲν ἢ ὃς ἂν ἡμῶν αὐ<sup>1</sup> γένηται ὅτι δικαιοτάτος. περὶ τοῦτον<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἡ ὡς ἀληθῶς δεινότης ἀνδρὸς καὶ οὐδενία τε καὶ ἀνανδρία. ἡ μὲν γὰρ τούτου γνώσις σοφία καὶ ἀρετὴ ἀληθινή, ἡ δὲ ἄγνοια ἀμαθία τε καὶ κακία ἐναργής.

PHILO

 αἱ δὲ ἄλλαι δεινότητες δοκοῦσαι καὶ σοφαίαι ἐν μὲν 83 πολιτικαῖς δυναστείαις γιγνόμεναι φορτικάι, ἐν δὲ ἀγεσθαι τὸν ἀνιέρων καὶ κακῆγορον τῶν θείων ἀπὸ τῶν ἱερωτάτων καὶ ἐκδίδοσθαι ἐπὶ τιμωρία φησὶν ἐξῆς· “ ὃς τύπτει πατέρα ἢ μητέρα, τελευτάτω ” καὶ ὁμοίως “ ὁ κακῆγορῶν πατέρα καὶ μητέρα 84 τελευτάτω.” μονονοῦ γὰρ βοᾷ καὶ κέκραγεν, ὅτι τῶν εἰς τὸ θεῖον βλασφημούντων οὐδενὶ συγγνώμης μεταδοτέον. εἰ γὰρ οἱ τοὺς θνητοὺς κακῆγορήσαντες γονεῖς ἀπάγονται τὴν ἐπὶ θανάτῳ, τίος ἀξίους χρὴ νομίζειν τιμωρίας τοὺς τὸν τῶν ὄλων πατέρα καὶ ποιητὴν βλασφημεῖν ὑπομένοντας; τίς δ’ ἂν γένοιτο αἰσχίων κακῆγορία ἢ τὸ φάσκειν μὴ παρ’ ἡμᾶς, ἀλλὰ παρὰ θεὸν γένεσιν εἶναι τῶν 85 κακῶν; ἐλαύνετε οὖν, ἐλαύνετε, ᾧ μύσται καὶ ἱεροφάνται θείων ὀργίων, τὰς μιγάδας καὶ σύγ-κλυδας καὶ πεφυρμένας, δυσκαθάρτους καὶ δυσεκπλύτους ψυχὰς, αἱ ἄκλειστα μὲν ᾧτα, ἄθυρον δὲ γλῶτταν, ὄργανα τῆς ἑαυτῶν βαρυδαιμονίας εὐ-τρεπῆ, περιφέρουσιν, ἵνα καὶ πάντων καὶ ᾧν μὴ

<sup>1</sup> So Plato: mss. εἶ.

<sup>2</sup> Plato τούτου (presumably neuter): Wend. does not note this: I retain τοῦτον with doubt.

<sup>a</sup> Theaetetus 176 c. See App. p. 584.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 82-85

brought out the truth which I am enforcing. "In no case and in no way," he says, "is God unrighteous: He is absolute righteousness; and nothing exists more like Him than whoso of us in his turn attains to the greatest possible righteousness. It is by his relation to Him that a man's real attainment is determined, as well as his worthlessness and failure to attain real manhood. For to know Him is true wisdom and virtue, and ignorance of Him is manifest stupidity and wickedness. All other seeming attainments and proofs of wisdom so called, if displayed in gaining political power, are merely vulgar; if in practising handicrafts, merely mechanical." <sup>a</sup> XVI. After 83 directing, then, that the man who is profane and reviles things sacred be led away from the most holy spots and given up to punishment, he goes on to say, "He that smiteth father or mother, let him die," and likewise "he that revileth father or mother, let him die" (Exod. xxi. 15 f.). He as good as proclaims in a loud 84 voice that no pardon must be granted to a blasphemer against God. For if those who have reviled mortal parents are led away for execution, what penalty must we consider that those have merited who take upon them to blaspheme the Father and Maker of the universe? And what more foul reviling could be uttered than the statement, that the origination of evil lies not at our door but at God's? Drive off, 85 then, ye initiates and hierophants of holy mysteries, drive off the motley crowd, flotsam and jetsam, souls hardly capable of cleansing and purifying, carrying about wherever they go ears ever unclosed, and tongue ever unconfined, ready instruments of their miserable condition in their longing to hear all that heaven forbids us to hear, and to tell out such things

PHILO

θέμις ἀκούωσι καὶ πάντα<sup>1</sup> καὶ ὅσα μὴ χρεῶν ἐκλα-86 λῶσιν. ὅσοι δὲ διαφορὰν ἐκουσίων καὶ ἀκουσίων ἐπαιδεύθησαν καὶ εὐφημον στόμα ἀντὶ κακηγόρου γλώττης ἔλαχον, κατορθοῦντες μὲν ἐπαινετοί, σφαλλόμενοι δὲ μὴ κατὰ γνώμην οὐ πάνυ ψεκτοί· διὸ καὶ πόλεις αὐτοῖς εἰς καταφυγὴν ἀπεκρίθησαν.

87 XVII. | "Ἀξίον δὲ τῶν περὶ τὸν τόπον αὐτὰ τὰ [559] ἀναγκαῖα μάλιστα ἀκριβῶσαι. ἔστι δ' ἀριθμῶ τέτταρα· ἐν μὲν, διὰ τί οὐκ ἐξ ὧν αἱ ἄλλαι φυλαὶ πόλεων ἔλαχον, ἀλλ' ἐξ ὧν ἡ Λευιτικὴ μόνη, φυγάσι πόλεις ἀπεκρίθησαν· δεύτερον δέ, διὰ τί ἐξ ἀριθμῶ καὶ οὔτε πλείους οὔτε ἐλάττους· τρίτον, τί δήποτε τρεῖς μὲν πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, αἱ δ' ἕτεραι<sup>2</sup> ἐν τῇ Χαναanaίων γῆ· τέταρτον, διὰ τί προθεσμία τοῖς φυγάσιν ὄρισται τοῦ κατελθεῖν ὁ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως 88 θάνατος. λεκτέον οὖν περὶ ἐκάστου τὰ ἀρμόττοντα, ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ πρώτου λαβόντας. εἰς τὰς ἀπονεμηθείσας Λευίταις μόνοις πόλεις φεύγειν διείρηται πάνυ προσηκόντως· καὶ γὰρ οἱ Λευῖται τρόπον τινὰ φυγάδες εἰσὶν, ἔνεκα ἀρεσκείας θεοῦ γονεῖς καὶ τέκνα καὶ ἀδελφοὺς καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν 89 θνητὴν συγγένειαν ἀπολελοιπότες. ὁ γοῦν ἀρχηγέτης τοῦ θιάσου τούτου λέγων εἰσάγεται τῷ πατρὶ καὶ τῇ μητρὶ· "οὐχ ἐώρακα ὑμᾶς, καὶ τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς οὐ γινώσκω, καὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς ἀπογινώσκω"

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καὶ πάντων or omit.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τὰς ἕτερας: perhaps retain and add e.g. λέγει.

<sup>a</sup> Or "achieve (full) righteousness" (in something of the Stoic sense), i.e. are free from the ἀκούσια as well as the ἐκούσια; cf. De Agr. 177 ff.

<sup>b</sup> The connexion of thought seems to be as follows: the blasphemer who ascribes ἐκούσια ἀμαρτήματα to God and not only he but all the profane and irreverent must be avoided,

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 86-89

as should never find utterance. But all who have 86 been trained to discriminate between intentional and unintentional actions, and have been given lips that can keep a holy silence in place of a reviling tongue, are praiseworthy when they go aright,<sup>a</sup> and are not much to blame when they fail without meaning it :
that is why cities of refuge were set apart for them
(Num. xxxv.).<sup>b</sup>

XVII. It is worth while to treat with particular 87 detail those aspects of the subject which are of vital importance.<sup>c</sup> They are four in number : first, why cities set apart for fugitives were chosen, not from the cities allotted to the other tribes, but from those assigned to the tribe of Levi only ; secondly, for what reason they were six in number, and neither more nor less ; thirdly, why three were beyond the Jordan, and the others in the land of Canaan ; fourthly, why the time appointed beforehand for the return of the fugitives was the death of the High Priest.

On each of these points we must say what is pertinent, 88 beginning with the first. The direction to fly to the cities allotted to Levites only is wholly appropriate, for the Levites too are in a certain sense fugitives, having, for the sake of being well-pleasing to God, forsaken parents and children and brothers and all their mortal kindred. So the original founder of this 89 company is represented as saying to his father and mother, " I have not seen you, my brethren I know not, and my sons I know no more " (Deut. xxxiii. 9), while those who know better than to be guilty of this particular blasphemy and of profanity in general will find in God a refuge for their unintentional errors.

<sup>c</sup> The translation ignores αὐτά. Perhaps it is used like the frequent αὐτὸ μόνον for "just these," in which case ἀναγκαῖα may be taken as "absolutely necessary."

PHILO

ὑπὲρ τοῦ δίχα μεβολκῆς θεραπεύειν τὸ ὄν. ἢ δ' ἀψευδῆς φυγῆ στέρησις τῶν οἰκειοτάτων καὶ φιλιότητων ἐστίν. φυγάδας οὖν φυγάσι παρακατατίθεται πρὸς τὴν ὦν εἰργάσαντο ἀμνηστίαν, δι' ὁμοί-90 τητα ἔργων. ἀρ' οὖν διὰ τοῦτο μόνον ἢ καὶ δι' ἐκεῖνο, (ὅτι) ἢ τῶν νεωκόρων Λευιτικῆ φυλῆ τοὺς θεοπλαστήσαντας τὸν χρυσοῦν μόσχον, τὸν Αἰγυπτιακὸν τύφον, ἠβηδὸν ἐξ ἐπιδρομῆς κατέκτειναν, ὀργῇ δικαίᾳ σὺν ἐνθουσιασμῶ καὶ τινι κατοκωχῇ θεοφορήτῳ χρησάμενοι; "καὶ κτείνει ἕκαστος ἀδελφὸν καὶ πλησίον καὶ τὸν ἔγγιστα," ἀδελφὸν μὲν ψυχῆς τὸ σῶμα, τὸ δὲ λογικοῦ πλησίον τὸ ἄλογον, τὸν δὲ ἔγγιστα νοῦ τὸν προ-
 91 φορικὸν λόγον. οὕτως γὰρ ἂν μόνως θεραπευτικὸν γένοιτο τοῦ τῶν ὄντων ἀρίστου τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ἄριστον, πρῶτον μὲν εἰ ἀναλυθεῖ ὁ ἄνθρωπος εἰς ψυχὴν, διαζευχθέντος καὶ διακοπέντος αὐτῷ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σώματος καὶ τῶν ἀνηνύτων ἐπιθυμιῶν· εἶτα τῆς ψυχῆς ἀποβαλούσης, ὡς ἔφην, τὸ πλησίον τοῦ λογικοῦ, τὸ ἄλογον—καὶ γὰρ αὐτὸ<sup>1</sup> χειμάρρου τρόπον πενταχῇ σχιζόμενον διὰ πασῶν τῶν αἰσθήσεων οἷα δεξαμενῶν τὴν τῶν παθῶν 92 ἀνεγείρει φορᾶν—· εἴθ' ἐξῆς τοῦ λογισμοῦ διοικίσαντος καὶ διαζεύξαντος τὸν ἐγγυτάτω δοκοῦντα εἶναι, τὸν προφορικὸν λόγον, ἢ' ὁ κατὰ διάνοιαν ἀπολειφθῆ μόνος, ἔρημος σώματος, ἔρημος αἰσθή-

<sup>1</sup> Unless Philo uses the nominative for the demonstrative, αὐτό seems pointless: perhaps τοῦτο.

<sup>a</sup> So L. & S. render the word; perhaps rather "all those of military age," = Latin pubes.

<sup>b</sup> In the parallel passage De Ebr. 69 ff. the "neighbour" is the senses themselves.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 89-92

that I may without distraction minister to Him that is. And a flight that is real exile is loss of our nearest and dearest. It is on the ground, then, of a similarity in their doings that the Lawgiver commits fugitives to the keeping of fugitives, that they may obtain an amnesty for what they had done. Was 90 this, then, the only reason, or was it also because the Tribe of Levi, consisting of those who had the care of the Tabernacle, rushed upon and slew from the young upwards<sup>a</sup> those who fashioned into a god the golden calf, the Egyptian folly? They did this under the impulse of righteous anger accompanied by an inspiration from above and a God-sent possession: "And each man slays brother and neighbour and his nearest" (Exod. xxxii. 27), for the body is "brother" of the soul, the irrational part of us neighbour of the rational, and the word of utterance "next of kin" to mind. For in this way only could 91 that which is best in ourselves become capable of ministering before Him Who is Best of all Existences, if in the first place the man were resolved into soul, his brother body and its interminable cravings being broken off and cut in twain; if in the next place the soul rid itself, as I have said, of that neighbour of our rational element, the irrational,<sup>b</sup> which like a torrent in five divisions pours through the channels of all the senses and rouses the violence of the passions; if in 92 the next place the reasoning faculty sever and banish from itself that which has the appearance of being closest to it, the word of utterance. All this is to the end that the word or thought<sup>c</sup> within the mind may be left behind by itself alone, destitute of body, <sup>c</sup> With ὁ κατὰ διάνοιαν sc. λόγος = ἐνδιάθετος, the regular antithesis to προφορικός.

PHILO

σεως, ἔρημος γεγωνοῦ λόγου προφορᾶς· ἀπολειφθεῖς γάρ, τῇ κατὰ τὴν μόνωσιν διαίτη χρώμενος, τὸ μόνον <ὄν> καθαρῶς καὶ ἀμεθέλκτως ἀσπάσεται. |
 93 [560] πρὸς γε μὴν τοῖς εἰρημένοις κἀκείνο ὑπομνηστέον, ὅτι ἡ Λευιτικὴ φυλὴ νεωκόρων καὶ ἱερέων ἐστίν, οἷς ἡ τῶν ἀγίων ἀνάκειται λειτουργία· λειτουργοῦσι δὲ καὶ οἱ τὸν ἀκούσιον φόνον δρῶντες, εἴ γε κατὰ Μωυσῆν “ ὁ θεὸς παραδίδωσιν εἰς τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν ” τοὺς θανάτου ἄξια εἰργασμένους πρὸς ἀναίρεσιν. ἀλλ’ οἱ μὲν ἐτάχθησαν ἐπὶ τῷ τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς σεμνύνειν, οἱ δ’ ἐπὶ τῷ τοὺς ὑπαιτίους κολάζειν.

94 XVIII. Αὐταὶ μὲν εἰσιν αἱ αἰτίαι, ὧν ἔνεκα οἱ τὸν ἀκούσιον φόνον δράσαντες εἰς μόνας τὰς τῶν νεωκόρων φεύγουσι πόλεις. τίνες δέ εἰσι καὶ διὰ τί ἀριθμῶ ἕξ, ἐπομένως λεκτέον. μήποτ’ οὖν ἡ μὲν πρεσβυτάτη καὶ ἐχυρωτάτη καὶ ἀρίστη μητρόπολις, οὐκ αὐτὸ μόνον πόλις, ὁ θεῖός ἐστι λόγος, 95 ἐφ’ ὃν πρῶτον καταφεύγειν ὠφελιμώτατον. αἱ δ’ ἄλλαι πέντε, ὡς ἂν ἀποικίαι, δυνάμεις εἰσὶ τοῦ λέγοντος, ὧν ἄρχει ἡ ποιητικὴ, καθ’ ἣν ὁ ποιῶν λόγῳ τὸν κόσμον ἐδημιούργησε· δευτέρα δ’ ἡ βασιλική, καθ’ ἣν ὁ πεποιηκὼς ἄρχει τοῦ γενομένου· τρίτη δ’ ἡ ἰλως, δι’ ἧς ὁ τεχνίτης οἰκτεῖρει

<sup>a</sup> Mangey and Wend. suspected τοῦ λέγοντος and suggested δντος or ἡγεμόνος. But Philo sometimes thinks of the Logos as in the literal sense the “word” which God speaks. It is particularly natural here in connexion with creation, where every creative act is preceded by “God said.” Cf. De Som. i. 75.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 92-95

destitute of sense-perception, destitute of utterance in audible speech ; for when it has been thus left, it will live a life in harmony with such solitude, and will render, with nothing to mar or to disturb it, its glad homage to the Sole Existence.

Another point to be called to mind, in addition to 93 those which have been mentioned, is that the Tribe of Levi is that of ministers of the Tabernacle and priests, on whom rests the service of the Sanctuary, and those who commit unintentional homicide are also engaged in a service, since, as Moses tells us, " God delivers into their hands " (Exod. xxi. 13) for destruction those that have done deeds worthy of death. But, while the Levites were appointed for the exaltation of the good, these others were appointed for the chastisement of the guilty.

XVIII. Such are the reasons for the perpetrators 94 of unintentional homicide taking refuge only in the cities of the Tabernacle attendants. We must next say what those cities are, and why they are six in number. It would seem, then, that the chiefest and surest and best mother-city something more than just a city, is the Divine Word, and that to take refuge first in it is supremely advantageous. The other 95 five, colonies as it were, are powers of Him who speaks that Word,<sup>a</sup> their leader being creative power, in the exercise of which the Creator produced the universe by a word <sup>b</sup> ; second in order is the royal power, in virtue of which He that has made it governs that which has come into being ; third stands the gracious power, in the exercise of which the Great Artificer takes pity and compassion on his own work ;

<sup>b</sup> Or " He who created the world through the Word wrought His work," etc.

PHILO

καὶ ἔλεεί τὸ ἴδιον ἔργον· τετάρτη δ' ἡ * * *<sup>1</sup> νομοθετικῆς μοῖρα, δι' ἧς ἃ μὴ χρῆ γίνεσθαι ἀπαγορεύει.
 96 πάγκαλοι δὲ καὶ εὐερέκεσταται πόλεις, ἀξίων σώζεσθαι ψυχῶν τὸν αἰῶνα ἄρισταί γε κατα-φυγαί· χρηστὴ δὲ καὶ φιλόανθρωπος ἡ διάταξις, ἀλείφει καὶ ῥῶσαι πρὸς εὐελπιστίαν (ἱκανή· ἧς) τίς ἂν ἐδυνήθη μᾶλλον τοσαύτην τῶν δυναμένων εὐεργετεῖν ἀναδείξαι ἀφθονίαν διὰ τὰς διαφορὰς τῶν ἐν τροπαῖς ἀκουσίοις γενομένων, οἷς οὔτε ἰσχύς 97 οὔτε [ἧ] ἀσθένεια ἡ αὐτῆ; προτρέπει δὴ τὸν μὲν ὠκυδρομεῖν ἱκανὸν συντείνειν ἀπνευστὶ πρὸς τὸν ἀνωτάτω λόγον θεῖον, ὃς σοφίας ἐστὶ πηγὴ, ἵνα ἀρυσάμενος τοῦ νάματος ἀντὶ θανάτου ζῶν ἀίδιον ἄθλον εὕρηται· τὸν δὲ μὴ οὕτως ταχὺν ἐπὶ τὴν ποιητικὴν καταφεύγει δύναμιν, ἣν Μωυσῆς ὀνο-μάζει θεόν, ἐπειδὴ δι' αὐτῆς ἐτέθη καὶ διεκοσμήθη τὰ σύμπαντα—τῷ γὰρ ὅτι γέγονε τὸ πᾶν καταλα-βόντι μεγάλου<sup>2</sup> κτῆσις ἀγαθοῦ περιγίνεται, ἡ τοῦ πεποικηκότος ἐπιστήμη, ἡ δ' εὐθὺς ἀναπείθει τὸ 98 γενόμενον ἐρᾶν τοῦ φυτεύσαντος—· τὸν δὲ μὴ οὕτως ἔτοιμον ἐπὶ τὴν βασιλικὴν—φόβῳ γὰρ ἄρχοντος τὸ ὑπήκοον, εἰ καὶ μὴ εὐνοία πατρὸς τὸ ἔκγονον, ἀνάγκη σωφρονιζούσῃ νουθετεῖται—· τῷ δὲ μὴ φθάνοντι πρὸς τοὺς λεχθέντας ὄρους ὡς μακρὰν διεστῶτας ἀφικνεῖσθαι καμπτήρες εἴσω πεπήγασιν ἕτεροι δυνάμεων ἀναγκαίων, τῆς ἴλεω, τῆς προσταττούσης ἃ δεῖ, τῆς ἀπαγορευούσης ἃ μὴ δεῖ.

<sup>1</sup> Wend. proposes, to fill up the lacuna, νομοθετικῆ, δι' ἧς προστάττει ἃ δεῖ, πέμπτη δ' ἡ. See below, §§ 98, 100, 104.

<sup>2</sup> mss. μεγάλη.

<sup>a</sup> An allusion as often to the derivation of θεός from τίθημι.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 95-99

fourth (is the legislative power, by which He prescribes duties incumbent on us; and fifth) that division of legislation, by which He prohibits those things which should not be done. Right goodly cities 96 are they, and exceeding strong in their ramparts, noblest refuges for souls meet to be in safety for ever: kind and beneficent is the ordinance, with power to stimulate and brace to hopefulness. What ordinance could better shew the rich abundance of these beneficial powers adapted to the differences in the victims of involuntary lapses, so various both in their strength and in their weakness? The man who is capable of 97 running swiftly it bids stay not to draw breath but pass forward to the supreme Divine Word, Who is the fountain of Wisdom, in order that he may draw from the stream and, released from death, gain life eternal as his prize. One less swift-footed it directs to the power to which Moses gives the name "God," since by it the Universe was established and ordered.<sup>a</sup> It urges him to flee for refuge to the creative power, knowing that to one who has grasped the fact that the whole world was brought into being a vast good accrues, even the knowledge of its Maker, which straightway wins the thing created to love Him to whom it owes its being. One who is less ready it 98 urges to betake himself to the kingly power, for fear of the sovereign has a force of correction to admonish the subject, where a father's kindness has none such for the child. For him who fails to reach the posts just mentioned, because he thinks them too far distant, another set of goals have been set up nearer the starting-point—the gracious power, the power which enjoins duties, and that which forbids offences; those in fact which are indispensable. For he that 99

PHILO

- 99 ὁ τε γὰρ προλαβὼν, | ὡς οὐκ ἀπαραίτητον ἀλλ'
 [561] εὐμενὲς δι' ἡμερότητα φύσεώς ἐστι τὸ θεῖον, κἂν ἀμάρτη πρότερον, αὐθις μετενόησεν ἀμνηστίας ἐλπίδι, ὁ τε ἔννοϊαν λαβὼν, ὅτι νομοθέτης ὁ θεός ἐστιν, πειθαρχῶν οἷς ἂν προστάτῃ πᾶσιν εὐδαι-μονήσει· ὁ δ' ὕστατος ὑστάτην εὐρήσεται καταφυγὴν, ἀποτροπὴν κακῶν, εἰ καὶ μὴ μετουσίαν 100 προηγουμένων ἀγαθῶν. XIX. αἶδ' εἰσὶν <αἶ> ἕξ πόλεις, ἃς καλεῖ φυγαδευτήρια, ὧν αἱ μὲν πέντε ἀπεικονίσθησαν καὶ ἔστιν αὐτῶν ἐν τοῖς ἀγίοις τὰ μιμήματα, προστάξεως μὲν καὶ ἀπαγορεύσεως οἱ ἐν τῇ κιβωτῷ νόμοι, τῆς δ' ἰλεω δυνάμεως τὸ ἐπίθημα τῆς κιβωτοῦ—καλεῖ δὲ αὐτὸ ἰλαστήριον,—ποιητικῆς δὲ καὶ βασιλικῆς τὰ ὑπό-101 πτερα καὶ ἐφιδρυμένα Χερουβίμ· ὁ δ' ὑπεράνω τούτων λόγος θεῖος εἰς ὄρατὴν οὐκ ἦλθεν ἰδέαν, ἅτε μηδενὶ τῶν κατ' αἴσθησιν ἐμφορῆς ὦν, ἀλλ' αὐτὸς εἰκὼν ὑπάρχων θεοῦ, τῶν νοητῶν ἅπαξ ἀπάντων ὁ πρεσβύτατος, ὁ ἐγγυτάτω, μηδενὸς ὄντος μεθορίου διαστήματος, τοῦ μόνου,<sup>1</sup> ὁ ἔστιν ἀψευδῶς, ἀφιδρυμένος.<sup>2</sup> λέγεται γάρ· “λαλήσω σοι ἄνωθεν τοῦ ἰλαστηρίου, ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν δυεῖν Χερουβίμ,” ὡσθ' ἡνίοχον μὲν εἶναι τῶν δυνάμεων τὸν λόγον, ἔποχον δὲ τὸν λαλοῦντα, ἐπικελευόμενον τῷ ἡνίοχῳ 102 τὰ πρὸς ὀρθὴν τοῦ παντὸς ἡνίοχῃσιν. ὁ μὲν οὖν ἄνευ τροπῆς, ἐκουσίῳ μὲν ἄπαγε, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἀκουσίῳ γεγονώς, αὐτὸν τὸν θεὸν κλήρον ἔχων, ἐν αὐτῷ μόνῳ κατοικήσει· οἱ δ' οὐκ ἐκ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τὸ (τῷ) μόνον.

<sup>2</sup> So MSS.: Wendland ἐφιδρυμένος.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 584.

<sup>b</sup> Philo apparently takes “thee” to be the Logos; cf.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 99-102

has made sure that the Godhead is not inexorable, but kindly, owing to gentleness of nature, even if he have first sinned, afterwards repents in hope of forgiveness ; and he that has taken in the thought that God is Lawgiver, will by obeying all His injunctions attain happiness ; while the last of the three will gain a third and last refuge, the averting of ills, even if he fail to obtain a share of God's principal good gifts.

XIX. Such are the six cities, which 100
Moses calls "places of refuge" (Num. xxxv. 12), five of which were represented by symbolic figures which are in the sanctuary, the Laws laid up in the ark being symbols of injunction and prohibition ; the lid of the ark, which he calls the Mercy-seat, representing the gracious power ; while the creative and kingly powers are represented by the winged Cherubim that rest upon it. The Divine Word, Who is 101 high above all these, has not been visibly portrayed, being like to no one of the objects of sense. Nay, He is Himself the Image of God, chiefest of all Beings intellectually perceived, placed nearest, with no intervening distance, to the Alone truly existent One.<sup>a</sup> For we read : " I will talk with thee <sup>b</sup> from above the Mercy-seat, between the two Cherubim " (Ex. xxv. 21), words which shew that while the Word is the charioteer of the Powers, He Who talks is seated in the chariot, giving directions to the charioteer for the right wielding of the reins of the Universe.

He, then, that has shewn himself free from even un- 102 intentional offence—intentional is not to be thought of—having God Himself as his portion (Deut. x. 9), will have his abode in Him alone ; while those who § 76. See also note on § 95, though here the Logos is spoken to, not the word spoken.

PHILO

προνοίας ἀλλ' ἀβουλήτοις χρησάμενοι σφάλμασι καταφυγὰς ἔξουσι τὰς εἰρημένας ἀφθόνοους καὶ πλουσίας οὕτως.<sup>1</sup>

- 103 Τῶν δὲ πρὸς καταφυγὴν πόλεων τρεῖς μὲν εἰσι πέραν, αἱ μακρὰν ἡμῶν τοῦ γένους ἀφεστᾶσι. τίνες αὐταί; ὁ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος λόγος καὶ ἡ ποιητικὴ καὶ βασιλικὴ δύναμις αὐτοῦ· τούτων γὰρ ὁ τε
- 104 οὐρανὸς καὶ σύμπας ὁ κόσμος ἐπικοινωνεῖ. αἱ δὲ προσεχεῖς<sup>2</sup> ἡμῖν καὶ ἐφαπτόμεναι τοῦ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἐπικήρου γένους, ᾧ μόνῳ συμβέβηκε διαμαρτάνειν, αἱ ἐντὸς εἰσι τρεῖς, ἡ ἰλεως, ἡ προστακτικὴ τῶν ποιητέων, ἡ ἀπαγορευτικὴ τῶν μὴ ποιητέων· αὐταί
- 105 γὰρ ἤδη ἡμῶν ἐφάπτονται. τίς γὰρ ἀπαγορεύσεως χρεῖα τοῖς μὴ μέλλουσιν ἀδικήσειν, τίς δὲ προσταξέως τοῖς μὴ πεφυκῶσι σφάλλῃσθαι, τίς δὲ τῆς ἰλεω τοῖς μηδ' ὄλως ἀμαρτησομένοις; ἀλλὰ τό γε ἡμέτερον γένος χρεῖον γέγονε τούτων διὰ τὸ πεφυκῆναι καὶ ἐπικλινῶς ἔχειν πρὸς τε τὰ ἐκούσια καὶ ἀκούσια ἀμαρτήματα.
- 106 XX. Τέταρτον καὶ λοιπὸν ἦν τῶν προταθέντων ἡ προθεσμία τῆς τῶν πεφευγόντων καθόδου, τοῦ ἀρχιερέως ὁ θάνατος, πολλὴν ἐν τῷ ῥητῷ μοι παρέχουσα δυσκολίαν. ἄνισος γὰρ ἡ τιμωρία κατὰ τῶν τὰ αὐτὰ δρασάντων νομοθετεῖται, εἴ γε οἱ
- [562] μὲν | πλείω χρόνον ἀποδράσσονται, οἱ δὲ ἐλάττω· μακροβιώτατοι γὰρ (οἱ μὲν), οἱ δὲ ὀλιγοχρονιώ-
- 107 τατοι τῶν ἀρχιερέων εἰοί· καὶ οἱ μὲν νέοι, οἱ δὲ πρεσβῦται καθίστανται· καὶ τῶν ἐαλωκότων ἐπ' ἀκουσίῳ φόνῳ οἱ μὲν ἐν ἀρχῇ τῆς ἱερωσύνης

<sup>1</sup> πόλεις perhaps (as Wendland) is needed. For the strange οὕτως Wendland suggests οὐσας: perhaps rather ὄντως.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 102-107

have fallen, not of set purpose but against their will, will have the refuges which have been mentioned, so freely and richly provided.

Now of the cities of refuge three are beyond the 103 River, far removed from our race. Which are these? The Word of the Sovereign Ruler, and His creative and His kingly power: for in fellowship with these are heaven and all the universe. But those which are 104 close to us and in actual contact with perishable mankind, the only race which sin has befallen, are the three within—the gracious power, the power which enjoins things that are to be done, and that which prohibits those which are not to be done; for these touch us closely. For what need is there of 105 prohibition in the case of those who are sure to do no wrong? What need of injunction for those whose nature exempts them from failure? And what need of recourse to the Gracious Power for those who will commit no sin at all? But our race stands in need of these powers by reason of its natural proneness both to intentional and unintentional sins.

XX. The fourth and only remaining point of those 106 proposed for consideration was the time prescribed for the return of the fugitives, namely, that of the death of the High Priest. If taken literally, this point presents, I feel, great difficulty. The penalty inflicted by law on those whose offences are identical is unequal, if some are to be fugitives for a longer, some for a shorter, period; for of the High Priests some are very long-lived, some the reverse; some are 107 appointed in youth, some in old age; and of those guilty of unintentional homicide some went into exile

---

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπικοινων(ι)αὶ δὲ προσεχεῖς: Mangey ἐστὶ κουνῶναι δὲ καὶ προσεχεῖς.

PHILO

- ἔφυγαδεύθησαν, οἱ δ' ἤδη μέλλοντος τελευτᾶν τοῦ ἱερωμένου, ὡς τοὺς μὲν αἰῶνα μακρόν τινα τῆς πατρίδος ἔστερηῆσθαι, τοὺς δ' αὐτὸ μόνον ἡμέραν, εἰ τύχοι, μεθ' ἣν τὸν αὐχένα ἐπαίροντες καὶ φρυατόμενοι καὶ γελῶντες τοὺς ἄγχιστα γένους τῶν 108 ἀνηρημένων ἀφίξονται. τὸ ἄπορον οὖν καὶ δυσαπολόγητον ἀποδρασόμεθα τῆς δι' ὑπονοιῶν φυσικῆς ἀποδόσεως ἐφιεμένοι. λέγομεν γὰρ τὸν ἀρχιερέα οὐκ ἄνθρωπον ἀλλὰ λόγον θεῖον εἶναι πάντων οὐχ ἔκουσίων μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀκουσίων 109 ἀδικημάτων ἀμέτοχον. οὔτε γὰρ ἐπὶ πατρί, τῷ νῶ, οὔτε ἐπὶ μητρί, τῇ αἰσθήσει, φησὶν αὐτὸν Μωυσῆς δύνασθαι μιαίνεσθαι, διότι, οἶμαι, γονέων ἀφθάρτων καὶ καθαρωτάτων ἔλαχεν, πατρὸς μὲν θεοῦ, ὃς καὶ τῶν συμπάντων ἐστὶ πατήρ, μητρὸς 110 δὲ σοφίας, δι' ἧς τὰ ὅλα ἦλθεν εἰς γένεσιν· καὶ διότι τὴν κεφαλὴν κέχρισται ἐλαίῳ, λέγω δὲ τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν φωτὶ αὐγοειδεῖ περιλάμπεται, ὡς ἀξιόχρεως “ ἐνδύσασθαι τὰ ἱμάτια ” νομισθῆναι—ἐνδύεται δ' ὁ μὲν πρεσβύτατος τοῦ ὄντος λόγος ὡς ἐσθῆτα τὸν κόσμον (γῆν γὰρ καὶ ὕδωρ καὶ ἀέρα καὶ πῦρ καὶ τὰ ἐκ τούτων ἐπαμπίσχεται), ἣ δ' ἐπὶ μέρους ψυχῇ τὸ σῶμα, ἣ δὲ τοῦ σοφοῦ διάνοια τὰς ἀρετάς—111 καὶ ὅτι τὴν κεφαλὴν “ οὐδέποτε ἀπομιτρῶσει,” τὸ

---

<sup>a</sup> Or “with,” “through,” as Philo understands the preposition. The meaning of the original is that as contact with a corpse entails defilement, the priests are only to touch the bodies of their nearest of kin (Lev. xxi. 2), but the High Priest not even these. Philo's allegory understands it to mean that with the ordinary man both father mind and mother sense may cause defilement, but the Logos is of other parentage.

<sup>b</sup> Or “the soul in the partial sense,” i.e. excluding the

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 107-111

at the outset of the High Priest's priesthood, some when the holder of the sacred office was nearing his end. Thus some have been cut off from their native place for a very long time indeed, others merely for a day, it may be, after which they will arrive with their heads in the air, insolently laughing at the nearest relatives of those whom they have slain.

Let us, then, have recourse to the scientific mode of 108 interpretation which looks for the hidden meaning of the literal words, and we shall escape from the difficulty and be able to give a reasonable account of the matter. We say, then, that the High Priest is not a man, but a Divine Word and immune from all unrighteousness whether intentional or unintentional. For Moses says that he cannot defile himself either 109 for <sup>a</sup> the father, the mind, nor for the mother, sense-perception (Lev. xxi. 11), because, methinks, he is the child of parents incorruptible and wholly free from stain, his father being God, who is likewise Father of all, and his mother Wisdom, through whom the universe came into existence; because, more- 110 over, his head has been anointed with oil, and by this I mean that his ruling faculty is illumined with a brilliant light, in such wise that he is deemed worthy "to put on the garments." Now the garments which the supreme Word of Him that is puts on as raiment are the world, for He arrays Himself in earth and air and water and fire and all that comes forth from these; while the body is the clothing of the soul considered as the principle of physical life,<sup>b</sup> and the virtues of the wise man's understanding. Moses 111 also says that "he shall never remove the mitre"

"ruling principle"; cf. De Op. 117 τῆς ἡμετέρας ψυχῆς τὸ δῖχα τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ μέρος.

PHILO

- βασιλείον οὐκ ἀποθήσεται διάδημα, τὸ σύμβολον τῆς οὐκ αὐτοκράτορος μὲν, ὑπάρχου δὲ καὶ θαυμαστῆς ἡγεμονίας, “ οὐδ’ αὖ τὰ ἱμάτια διαρρήξει ”·
- 112 ὃ τε γὰρ τοῦ ὄντος λόγος δεσμὸς ὢν τῶν ἀπάντων, ὡς εἴρηται, καὶ συνέχει τὰ μέρη πάντα καὶ σφίγγει κωλύων αὐτὰ διαλύεσθαι καὶ διαρτᾶσθαι· ἢ τ’ ἐπὶ μέρους ψυχῆ, καθόσον δυνάμεως μεμοίραται, τῶν τοῦ σώματος οὐδὲν ἀποσχίζεσθαι καὶ ἀποτέμνεσθαι μερῶν παρὰ φύσιν ἐᾶ, τὸ δ’ ἐπ’ αὐτῇ πάντα ὀλό-κληρα ὄντα ἄρμονίαν καὶ ἔνωσιν ἀδιάλυτον ἄγει τὴν πρὸς ἄλληλα· ὃ τε κεκαθαρμένος τοῦ σοφοῦ νοῦς ἀρρήκτους καὶ ἀπήμονας διαφυλάττει τὰς ἀρετάς, τὴν φυσικὴν αὐτῶν συγγένειάν τε καὶ κοινωνίαν ἄρμολάμενος εὐνοίᾳ παγιωτέρα.
- 113 XXI. οὗτος “ ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ψυχὴν τετελευτηκυῖαν,” ἢ φησι Μωυσῆς, “ οὐκ εἰσελεύσεται ”· θάνατος δὲ
- [563] ψυχῆς ὁ μετὰ κακίας | ἐστὶ βίος, ὥστε οὐδέ τις ἄγους, ὦν προσβάλλειν ἀφροσύνη φιλεῖ, ποτὲ προσ-
- 114 ἀψεται. τούτῳ καὶ παρθένος ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ γένους ἀρμόζεται, καθαρὰ καὶ ἀμίαντος καὶ ἀδιάφθορος εἰς αἰὲ γνῶμη· χήρας γὰρ καὶ ἐκβεβλημένης καὶ βεβήλου καὶ πόρνης ἀνὴρ οὐδέποτε γίνεται, πόλεμον ἄσπονδον καὶ ἀκήρυκτον πρὸς αὐτὰς αἰὲ συγκροτῶν.
 ἐχθρὸν γὰρ αὐτῷ τὸ χηρεύειν ἀρετῆς καὶ ἐκβεβλη-σθαι καὶ πεφυγαδεῦσθαι πρὸς αὐτῆς καὶ πᾶν ὃ τι ἂν ἦ βέβηλον πῆσμα καὶ ἀνίερον· τὸ δὲ πολυμιγῆς

<sup>a</sup> So G.H.W. This translation assumes that προσβάλλειν is used idiomatically, sc. ὀσμῆν. See examples in L. & S., e.g. κρέα ἰχθύων προσβάλλει, “the flesh smells like fish.” But the 70

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 111-114

from his head ; he shall not, that is to say, lay aside the kingly diadem, the symbol not of absolute sovereignty, but of an admirable vicereignty ; “ nor ” again “ shall he rend his clothes ” (Lev. xxi. 10) ; for the Word of Him that is is, as has been stated, the bond of all existence, and holds and knits together all the parts, preventing them from being dissolved and separated ; just as the principle of physical life, in so far as it has been endowed with power, suffers none of the parts of the body to be split or cut off contrary to nature, but, so far as in it lies, all the parts are complete, and maintain unbroken a mutual harmony and oneness ; and, in like manner, the purified mind of the wise man preserves the virtues free from breach or hurt, linking in a yet firmer concord the affinity and fellowship which is theirs by nature.

XXI. The High Priest, so Moses says, 113 “ shall not go in to any dead soul ” (Lev. xxi. 11).
 Death of soul is a life in the company of vice, so that what is meant is that he is never to come in contact with any polluting object, and of these folly always stinks.<sup>a</sup> To him there is betrothed moreover a maiden 114 of the hallowed people, pure and undefiled and of ever inviolate intention ; for never is he wedded to a widow or one divorced or to a profane woman or to a harlot (ibid. 13 f.), but against them he ever wages a truceless and unrelenting warfare. For hateful to him is widowhood from virtue, and the plight of one cast out and driven from her doors, and any conviction that is profane and unholy. But the promiscuous, use of such a phrase here seems to me rather strange, and I should prefer to remove the comma, take  $\omega\nu$  as  $=\tau\omega\nu$  & and translate “ of those which folly is wont to send in its way.” Cf. Quod Det. 98. Or perhaps with Mangey read  $\psi$  and translate “ which folly loves to approach.”

PHILO

- καὶ πολὺάνδρον καὶ πολὺθεον, ἄθεον<sup>1</sup> μὲν οὖν κακόν, πόρνην, οὐδὲ προσιδεῖν ἀξιοί, τὴν ἓνα ἄνδρα καὶ πατέρα τὸν ἡγεμόνα θεὸν ἐπιγεγραμμένην ἡγα-
- 115 πηκῶς. ὑπερβολὴ τις περὶ τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον τελειότητος ἐνορᾶται. τὸν μὲν γε τὴν μεγάλην εὐξάμενον εὐχὴν οἶδέ που καὶ ἀκουσίως σφαλλόμενον, εἰ καὶ μὴ ἐκουσίῳ γνώμῃ· λέγει γάρ· “ἐὰν δέ τις ἀποθάνῃ ἐπ’ αὐτῷ ἐξάπινα, παραχρῆμα μιανθήσεται”· τὰ γὰρ ἀβούλητα<sup>2</sup> ἔξωθεν αἰφνίδιον κατασκήπτοντα παραχρῆμα τὴν ψυχὴν οὐ πρὸς αἰῶνα μῆκιστον μαιίνει, ἅτε ὄντα ἀκουσία. τούτων δ’ ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς καθάπερ καὶ τῶν ἐκουσίων
- 116 ὑπεράνω στὰς ἀλογεῖ. ταῦτα δ’ οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ μοι λέλεκται, ἀλλ’ ὑπὲρ τοῦ διδάξαι, ὅτι φυσικωτάτῃ προθεσμίᾳ καθόδου φυγάδων ὁ τοῦ
- 117 ἀρχιερέως ἐστὶ θάνατος. ἕως μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἱερώτατος οὗτος λόγος ζῆ καὶ περίεστιν ἐν ψυχῇ, ἀμήχανον τροπὴν ἀκουσίον εἰς αὐτὴν κατελθεῖν· ἀμέτοχος γὰρ καὶ ἀπαράδεκτος παντὸς εἶναι πέφυκεν ἀμαρτήματος. ἐὰν δὲ ἀποθάνῃ, οὐκ αὐτὸς διαφθαρεῖς, ἀλλ’ ἐκ τῆς ἡμετέρας ψυχῆς διαζευχθεῖς, κάθοδος εὐθύς δίδοται τοῖς ἀκουσίοις<sup>3</sup> σφάλμασιν· εἰ γὰρ μένοντος καὶ ὑγιαίνοντος ἐν ἡμῖν ἐξωκίζετο, μετ-

<sup>1</sup> Mangey and Cohn would omit ἄθεον as inappropriate here, in which case surely καὶ should also be omitted before πολὺθεον or ἄθεον μὲν οὖν entirely (as Cohn). But see App. p. 584.

<sup>2</sup> mss. τὰ (τῶν) γὰρ ἀβουλοῦν(λή)των: perhaps, as Wendland suggests, τῶν γὰρ ἀβουλήτων <τινά>.

<sup>3</sup> So mss.: Wendland ἐκουσίοις following Ambrose, De fuga saeculi 2. 13, who in a paraphrase of the passage has “incipit anima peccatis patere voluntariis.” If this is right, presumably the thought is that while the offences when expelled were involuntary, if they return it will be as voluntary sins. The transition would be less abrupt if καὶ

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 114-117

polyandrous cause of polytheism, or rather atheism, the harlot, he deigns not even to look at, having learned to love her who had adopted, as her one Husband and Father, God the All-sovereign.

In this character we see perfection in something like 115 its highest form. On the other hand, as to the man who has vowed the Great Vow, the lawgiver seems to recognize that he does stumble unintentionally, even if not with deliberate intent; for he says, "If one die by him suddenly, he shall at once be defiled" (Num. vi. 9): for that which suddenly swoops down upon us from without, apart from any wish of our own, defiles the soul at once, though not for an interminable period, owing to its being unintentional.<sup>a</sup> But with such involuntary defilements, even as with those that are voluntary, the High Priest has no concern, but stands far up beyond their reach.

The observations which I have been making are 116 not beside the mark, but are meant to shew that the fixing of the High Priest's death as the term for the return of the exiles is in perfect accordance with the natural fitness of things (Num. xxxv. 25). For so long as this holiest Word is alive and is still 117 present in the soul, it is out of the question that an unintentional offence should come back into it; for this holy Word is by nature incapable of taking part in and of admitting to itself any sin whatever. But if the Word die, not by being itself destroyed, but by being withdrawn out of our soul, the way is at once open for the return of unintentional errors; for if it was abiding within us alive and well when they were

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quod Deus 89, De Agr. 175 and note.

---

was inserted after δίδοται, or we might read ἀκουσίους <καὶ ἐκουσίους>, cf. the end of § 115.

PHILO

- 118 ανισταμένου πάντως εισοικισθήσεται. γέρας γὰρ ἑξάϊρετον ὁ ἀμίαντος ἀρχιερεύς, ἔλεγχος, ἐκ φύσεως κεκάρπωται τὸ μηδέποτ' εἰς αὐτὸν παραδέξασθαι τόπον γνώμης ὄλισθον.<sup>1</sup> διόπερ ἄξιον εὐχεσθαι ζῆν ἐν ψυχῇ τὸν ἀρχιερέα ὁμοῦ καὶ βασιλέα, δικαστὴν ἔλεγχον, ὃς ὄλον ἡμῶν τὸ διανοίας ἀποκεκληρωμένος δικαστήριον ὑπ' οὐδενὸς τῶν ἀγομένων εἰς κρίσιν δυσωπείται.
- 119 XXII. Λελαληκότες οὖν τὰ ἀρμόττοντα περὶ φυγάδων τὴν κατὰ τὸν εἶρμόν ἀκολουθίαν συνυφανοῦμεν. λέγεται γὰρ ἐξῆς<sup>2</sup>. “ εὗρεν αὐτὴν ἄγγελος κυρίου,” κάθοδον ψηφισάμενος ὑπ' αἰδοῦς
 [564] κινδυνευσοῦση ψυχῇ πλανᾶσθαι καὶ μονονοῦ | προπομπὸς γινόμενος τῆς εἰς τὴν ἀπλανῆ γνώμην
 120 ἐπανόδου. χρήσιμον δὲ καὶ τὰ περὶ εὐρέσεως καὶ ζητήσεως φιλοσοφηθέντα τῷ νομοθέτῃ μὴ ἡσυχασθῆναι. τοὺς μὲν γὰρ εἰσάγει μηδὲν μῆτε ζητοῦντας μῆτε εὐρίσκοντας, τοὺς δὲ ἐν ἑκατέρῳ κατορθοῦντας, ἐνίους δὲ θάτερον περιπεποιημένους, ὧν οἱ μὲν ζητοῦντες οὐχ εὐρίσκουσιν, οἱ δ' εὐρίσκουσιν οὐ ζητήσαντες.
- 121 οἱ μὲν οὖν μῆτε εὐρέσεως μῆτε ζητήσεως ἐφιέμενοι τὸν λογισμὸν ἀπαιδευσιᾶ καὶ ἀμελετησιᾶ χαλεπῶς ἠκίσαντο καὶ δυνάμενοι ὄξυ καθορᾶν ἐπηρώθησαν. οὕτως φησὶ “ τὴν

<sup>1</sup> The text as it stands is untranslatable: Mangey suggests τὸ παράπαν for τόπον: I suggest ὄλισθον, “any room for lapse of purpose,” i.e. for any ἐκούσιον ἀμάρτημα.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἐξ ἀρχῆς.

<sup>a</sup> The interpretation of §§ 116-118 does not seem to be in keeping with what has gone before. Hitherto it was the

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 117-121

removed, assuredly when it departs and goes elsewhere they will be reinstated. For the Monitor, the 118 undefiled High Priest, enjoys as the fruit of his nature the special prerogative of never admitting into himself any uncertainty of judgement. Wherefore it is meet that we should pray that He who is at once High Priest and King may live in our soul as Monitor on the seat of justice, seeing that he has received for his proper sphere the entire court of our understanding, and faces unabashed all who are brought up for judgement there.<sup>a</sup>

XXII. Having now said all that was called for on 119 the subject of fugitives, we will go on to treat of what comes next in natural sequence. The next words are "An angel of the Lord found her" (Gen. xvi. 7)—the angel who decreed a return home to a soul whose shame was like to lead into wandering, and well-nigh was its escort back to the frame of mind which wanders not.

It will be an advantage 120 that the lawgiver's reflections about finding and seeking should not be passed over. He represents some as neither seeking nor finding anything, others as succeeding in both, some as having mastered one but not the other, either seeking and not finding, or finding without having sought.

Those with 121 no desire either to find or to seek grievously impair their faculty of reason, by refusing to train and exercise it, and, though capable of being keen-sighted, become blind. This is his meaning when he says that "involuntary offenders" themselves who found a refuge in the Powers of which the Logos himself was the chief. Here the thought is that the offences have been banished and will not return so long as we retain the Logos. He has in fact passed from the sense of  $\phi\epsilon\acute{\upsilon}\gamma\omega$  = "to take refuge" to that of  $\phi\epsilon\acute{\upsilon}\gamma\omega$  = "be banished."

PHILO

- γυναῖκα Ἰὼτ στραφεῖσαν εἰς τοῦπίσω γενέσθαι στήλην," οὐ μυθοπλαστῶν, ἀλλὰ πράγματος ἰδιό-122 τητα μηνύων. ὃς γὰρ ἂν ὀλιγωρήσας τοῦ διδά-σκοντος ὑπὸ ῥαθυμίας ἐμφύτου τε ὁμοῦ καὶ συν-ἤθους τὰ μὲν πρόσω καταλίπη, δι' ὧν ὄραν καὶ ἀκούειν καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις δυνάμεσιν ἔστι χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν φύσεως πραγμάτων ἐπίκρισιν, ἐκτραχηλίσας δ' αὐτὸν εἰς τοῦπίσω περιαγάγη, τὰ τυφλὰ τῶν ἐν τῷ βίῳ πραγμάτων μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν τοῦ σώματος μερῶν ἐξηλωκώς, ἀψύχου καὶ κωφῆς 123 λίθου τρόπον στηλιτεύεται. οὐ γὰρ ἔσχον, ἧ φησι Μωυσῆς, οἱ τοιοῦτοι τρόποι " καρδίαν συνιέναι καὶ ὀφθαλμοὺς βλέπειν καὶ ὠτα ἀκούειν," ἀλλὰ τυφλὸν καὶ κωφὸν καὶ ἀνόητον καὶ πάντῃ πηρὸν βίον ἀβίωτον ἑαυτοῖς ἐξείργασαντο, 124 οὐδενὶ τῶν δεόντων ἐφιστάντες. XXIII. ἡγεμῶν δ' ἐστὶ τοῦ χοροῦ τούτου ὁ τῆς σωματικῆς χώρας βασιλεύς. "ἐπιστραφεῖς" γὰρ φησι "Φαραὼ εἰσηλθεν εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐπέστησε τὸν νοῦν οὐδ' ἐπὶ τούτῳ," ἴσον τῷ ἐπ' οὐδενὶ τὸ παράπαν, ἀλλ' εἶασεν αὐτὸν οἷα φυτὸν ἀγεώργητον 125 ἀφαναίνεσθαι καὶ στειρούμενον ἀγονία χρῆσθαι. οἱ μὲν γε βουλευόμενοι καὶ σκοπούμενοι καὶ πάντ' ἐπιμελῶς ἐξετάζοντες ἀκονῶσι καὶ παραθήγουσιν αὐτόν. ὁ δὲ γυμναζόμενος τοὺς οἰκείους φέρει καρπούς, ἀγχινοῖάν τε καὶ σύνεσιν, δι' ὧν (τὸ ἀφενάκιστον περιγίνεται. ὁ δ' ἀπερίσκεπτος ἀμ-βλύνει καὶ περιθραύει τὰς φρονήσεως ἀκμάς.
 126 Τὸν μὲν οὖν ἄλογον καὶ ἀψύχον ὡς ἀληθῶς τῶν τοιούτων θίασον ἑατέον, τὸν<sup>1</sup> δὲ τῶν σκέψει καὶ εὐρέσει χρωμένων ἐπικριτέον. αὐτίκα τοίνυν ὁ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῶν.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 121-126

“ Lot’s wife turned backwards and became a pillar ” (Gen. xix. 26), and here he is not inventing a fable but indicating precisely a real fact. For a man who is led by innate and habitual laziness to pay no attention to his teacher neglects what lies in front of him, which would enable him to see and hear and use his other faculties for the observation of nature’s facts. Instead he twists <sup>a</sup> his neck and turns his face backwards, and his thoughts are all for the dark and hidden side—of life, that is, not of the body and its parts, and so he turns into a pillar and becomes like a deaf and lifeless stone. Speaking of such characters as these Moses says that they did not get “ a heart to understand, and eyes to see, and ears to hear ” (Deut. xxix. 4), but wrought out for themselves a life that was no life, blind and deaf and unintelligent and in every way maimed, setting themselves to nothing that demands their thoughts. XXIII. As leader of this company we see the king of the country which symbolizes the body ; for we read that “ Pharaoh turned and went into his house, and did not set his heart even to this ” (Ex. vii. 23, R.V. mg.), as much as to say that he set it to nothing at all, but allowed it like an untilled plant to wither away and become barren and bear nothing. It is whetted and made keen by those who consider and observe and examine all things carefully ; and when it is in exercise it bears its proper fruits, shrewdness and insight, which save it from being duped ; but the unobservant man blunts and crushes the edges of intelligence.

We must, then, let alone the irrational and truly lifeless company of such men as these, and scan well that of those who practise looking and finding. Our

<sup>a</sup> Or “ (almost) dislocates.”

PHILO

- πολιτικός μὲν ἦκιστα δὲ δοξομανῆς τρόπος, ἐφιήμενος τῆς ἀμείνονος γενεᾶς, ἣν ἀρεταὶ κεκλή-ρωνται, ζητῶν τε καὶ ἀνευρίσκων αὐτὴν εἰσάγεται.
- 127 “ εὖρε ” γάρ φησιν “ ἄνθρωπος τὸν Ἰωσήφ πλανώ-μενον ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ, καὶ ἠρώτησεν αὐτόν· τί ζητεῖς;
 ὁ δὲ εἶπεν· τοὺς ἀδελφούς μου ἐγὼ ζητῶ, ἀνάγ-γειλόν μοι, ποῦ βόσκουσιν. εἶπε δὲ αὐτῷ ὁ ἄν-θρωπος· ἀπήρκασιν ἐντεῦθεν· ἤκουσα γὰρ αὐτῶν λεγόντων· πορευθῶμεν εἰς Δωθαῖν. καὶ ἐπορεύθη
 [565] Ἰωσήφ κατόπιν τῶν ἀδελφῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ | εὖρεν
 128 αὐτοὺς ἐν Δωθαῖν.” ἐρμηνεύεται Δωθαῖν ἔκλειψις ἱκανή, σύμβολον ψυχῆς οὐ μέσως ἀλλὰ τελείως ἀποδεδρακυίας τὰς κενὰς δόξας, αἱ γυναικῶν μάλλον ἢ ἀνδρῶν ἐπιτηδεύμασιν εἰοικασί. διὸ πάνυ καλῶς ἡ ἀρετὴ Σάρρα “ τὰ γυναικεῖα ἐκλείπει,” περὶ ἃ πονοῦμεθα οἱ τὸν ἄνανδρον καὶ θῆλυον ὄντως βίον μεταδιώκοντες. ὁ δὲ σοφὸς καὶ “ ἐκλείπων προστίθεται ” κατὰ Μωυσῆν, φυσικώτατα· τὴν γὰρ τῆς κενῆς δόξης ἀφαίρεσιν πρόσθεσιν ἀληθείας 129 εἶναι συμβέβηκεν. εἰ δὴ τις ἔτ’ ἐν θνητῷ καὶ πολυμιγεί καὶ πολυμόρφῳ βίῳ διατρίβων καὶ κεχρημένος ἀφθόνοις ταῖς πρὸς περιουσίαν ὕλαις σκέπτεται καὶ ζητεῖ περὶ τῆς ἀμείνονος καὶ πρὸς τὸ καλὸν μόνον ἀφορώσης γενεᾶς, ἄξιος ἀποδοχῆς ἐστίν, ἂν μὴ πάλιν τὰ ὀνειράτα καὶ φαντάσματα τῶν νομιζομένων καὶ φαινομένων ἀγαθῶν ὑπανα-130 πλεύσαντα παρενημερήσῃ. μένων γὰρ ἐν ἀκιβδη-λεύτῳ τῇ ψυχικῇ σκέψει, κατ’ ἴχνος τῶν ζητου-

<sup>a</sup> E.V. “gave up the ghost . . . and was gathered (to his people).” Cf. De Sac. 5.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. seeking for the goods of the soul, instead of those of the body and outside the body.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 126-130

first example shall be the man who takes part indeed in public life, but is very far from having a mad thirst for fame : his ambition is for that better family, which the virtues have taken as their heritage, and he is represented as both seeking and finding it. For 127 we are told that " a man found Joseph wandering in the plain, and asked him, ' What art thou seeking ? ' and he said ' I am seeking my brethren ; tell me, where are they feeding their flocks ? ' And the man said to him, ' They have departed hence, for I heard them saying, Let us go to Dothan.' And Joseph went his way after his brethren, and found them in Dothan" (Gen. xxxvii. 15-17). Dothan means " a thorough for- 128 saking," and is the symbol of a soul that has in no half measure but completely run away from those empty notions which resemble the practices of women rather than those of men. Accordingly it is finely said that Sarah, who is Virtue, " forsakes the ways of women " (Gen. xviii. 11), those ways on which we toil who follow after the unmanly and really feminine life. But the wise man too " forsaking is added " (Gen. xxv. 8),<sup>a</sup> as Moses says in perfect accord with the nature of things : for the subtraction of vainglory is the addition of reality. If a man, while spending his 129 days in this mortal life full of such diverse elements and assuming so many phases, and while he has at his disposal abundant material for a life of luxury, makes that better family, which has an eye only for what is morally excellent, his study and quest, he is worthy of approbation, if the dreams and phantoms of things that have the name and appearance of good things do not rise to the surface again and get the better of him. For if he continues in that soul<sup>b</sup> 130 inquiry and keeps it free from alloy, he will not give

PHILO

- μένων βαίνων καὶ ἐπακολουθῶν οὐκ ἀνήσει πρό-131 τερον ἢ τοῖς ποθουμένοις ἐντυχεῖν. ἀλλ' οὐδέν' αὐτῶν<sup>1</sup> παρὰ μοχθηροῖς ἀνευρήσει· διὰ τί; “ἀπ-ἤρκασι γὰρ ἐντεύθεν;” τὰς μὲν ἡμετέρας σπουδὰς ἐκλιπόντες, μετοικισάμενοι δ' εἰς τὸν ἔρημον κακῶν εὐσεβῶν χώρον. λέγει δὲ ταῦτα ὁ ἀληθινὸς ἄνθρωπος, ὁ ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἔλεγχος, ὃς ἀποροῦσαν καὶ σκεπτομένην καὶ ζητοῦσαν αὐτὴν ἰδὼν εὐλαβεῖται, μὴ πλανηθεῖσα διαμάρτη τῆς ὀρθῆς ὁδοῦ.
- 132 XXIV. Πάνυ τεθαύμακα κάκεινους, τὸν μὲν φιλοπευστοῦντα περὶ τοῦ μέσου τῶν ἄκρων καὶ λέγοντα· “ἰδοὺ τὸ πῦρ καὶ τὰ ξύλα, ποῦ τὸ πρόβατον τὸ εἰς ὀλοκάρπωσιν,” τὸν δ' ἀποκρινόμενον· “ὁ θεὸς ὄψεται ἑαυτῷ πρόβατον εἰς ὀλοκάρπωσιν, τέκνον” καὶ ὕστερον τὸ ἀντιδοθὲν εὐρίσκοντα· “ἰδοὺ γὰρ κριὸς εἰς κατεχόμενος τῶν κεράτων ἐν 133 φυτῷ Σαβέκ.” ἴδωμεν οὖν, τί ὁ μὲν ζητῶν ἀπορεῖ, ὁ δ' ἀποκρινόμενος ἀποφαίνεται, καὶ τρίτον τί τὸ εὐρισκόμενον ἦν. ὁ μὲν οὖν πυνθάνεται τοιοῦτόν ἐστιν· ἰδοὺ τὸ δρῶν αἴτιον, τὸ πῦρ· ἰδοὺ καὶ τὸ πάσχον, ἡ ὕλη, τὰ ξύλα· ποῦ τὸ τρίτον, τὸ ἀποτέλεσμα; οἶον ἰδοὺ ὁ νοῦς, ἔνθερμον καὶ πεπυρω-
 134 μένον πνεῦμα· ἰδοὺ καὶ τὰ νοητά, ὡσανεὶ ὕλαι· ποῦ τὸ τρίτον, τὸ νοεῖν; πάλιν ἰδοὺ ἡ ὄρασις, ἰδοὺ τὸ χρῶμα, ποῦ τὸ ὄραν; καὶ συνόλως ἰδοὺ ἡ αἰσθησις, τὸ κριτήριον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ αἰσθητά, αἱ ὕλαι· τὸ οὖν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὐδενὶ τῶν: Wendland οὐδὲν αὐτῶν.

<sup>a</sup> For this interpretation of the “man” of Gen. xxxvii. 15 cf. Quod Det. 23.

<sup>b</sup> E.V. “thicket.” “Sabek” is a translation of the Hebrew word for thicket, which the LXX apparently took for the name of a plant.

<sup>c</sup> Or “the thing effected.”

<sup>d</sup> Or “spirit.” See App. pp. 584 f.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 130-134

up walking in the track of the objects of his quest, and following them up until he has reached those for whom he yearns. But none of them will he find 131 among the worthless. Why so? Because "they have departed hence," forsaking all that we care about, and have removed into the abode of the pious where no evil men are found. The speaker is the true "man,"<sup>a</sup> the Monitor, set over the soul, who, seeing its perplexity, its inquiring, its searching, is afraid lest it go astray and miss the right road.

XXIV. Another instance is that of those well- 132 known two whom I hold in great admiration. One is full of curiosity about the middle term between two others, and says, "Lo, the fire and the wood; where is the sheep for a whole burnt-offering?" The other replies, "God will see for Himself a sheep for a whole burnt-offering, Child"; and afterwards finds the substitute provided, for "behold a single ram held by the horns in a Sabek shrub"<sup>b</sup> (Gen. xxii. 7, 8, 13). Let us see, then, what the inquirer's difficulty is, and 133 what the answerer declares; and in the third place what the thing found was. Well, the inquiry he makes is of this kind: "Behold, the efficient cause, the fire; behold also, the passive object, the material, the wood; where is the third term, the finished result<sup>c</sup>?" As though he should say, "Behold the 134 mind, breath<sup>d</sup> all warm and on fire; behold also the objects which the mind perceives, materials, as it were; where is the third term, the mind's perception?" Or once more, "Here is sight; here is colour; where is the seeing?" and, quite generally, "Lo, here is sense-perception, the instrument for forming judgements; yes, and the objects of sense-perception, the material for it to work upon; where,

PHILO

- 135 αἰσθάνεσθαι ποῦ; ταῦτα πυνθανομένῳ δεόντως ἀποκρίνεται· “ὁ θεὸς ὄψεται ἑαυτῷ”· θεοῦ γὰρ ἔργον ἴδιον τὸ τρίτον. ἐπιφροσύνῃ γὰρ αὐτοῦ ὁ μὲν νοῦς καταλαμβάνει, ἡ δ’ ὄρασις ὄρα καὶ πᾶσα αἴσθησις αἰσθάνεται. “κριὸς δ’ εὐρίσκειται κατεχόμενος,” τουτέστι λόγος ἡσυχάζων
- 136 καὶ ἐπέχων. ἄριστον γὰρ ἱερεῖον ἡσυχία καὶ | [566] ἐποχὴ περὶ ὧν πάντως οὐκ εἰσι πίστεις. ῥητὸν γὰρ μόνον τοῦτο “ὁ θεὸς ὄψεται,” ᾧ γνώριμα τὰ πάντα, ὃς λαμπροτάτῳ φωτί, ἑαυτῷ, τὰ ὅλα αὐγάζει· τὰ δ’ ἄλλα οὐ ῥητὰ γενέσει, ἧς πολὺ κατακέχυται τὸ σκότος· ἡρεμία δ’ ἀσφαλὲς ἐν σκότῳ.
- 137 XXV. Ζητήσαντες καὶ τί τὸ τρέφον ἐστὶ τὴν ψυχὴν—“οὐ γὰρ” ἢ φησι Μωυσῆς “ἦδεισαν τί ἦν”—εὐρον μαθόντες ῥῆμα θεοῦ καὶ λόγον θεῖον, ἀφ’ οὗ πᾶσαι παιδεῖαι καὶ σοφίαι ῥέουσιν ἀένναοι. ἡδ’ ἐστὶν ἡ οὐράνιος τροφή, μηνύεται δ’ ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἀναγραφαῖς ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ αἰτίου λέγοντος· “ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ ὕψω ὑμῖν ἄρτους ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ”·
- 138 τῷ γὰρ ὄντι τὴν αἰθέριον σοφίαν ὁ θεὸς ταῖς εὐφύεσι καὶ φιλοθεάμοσις ἄνωθεν ἐπιψεκάζει διανοίαις· αἱ δὲ ἰδοῦσαι καὶ γευσάμεναι καὶ σφόδρ’ ἡσθεῖσαι ἔμαθον μὲν ὃ ἔπαθον, τὸ δὲ διαθὲν ἀγνοοῦσι. διὸ πυνθάνονται· “τί ἐστὶ τοῦτο,” ὃ μέλιτος γλυκύτερον, χιόνος δὲ λευκότερον εἶναι πέφυκε; διδαχ-

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 134-138

then, is the act of perceiving ? ” To these inquiries <sup>135</sup> the other gives the only right answer, “ God will see for Himself ” ; for the third term is God’s special work. For it is by His taking thought for them that the mind apprehends, and sight sees, and every sense perceives.

As for the words “ A ram is found held fast,” this is reason keeping quiet and in suspense. For the best offering is quietness and sus- <sup>136</sup> pense of judgement, in matters that absolutely lack proofs. The only word we may say is this, “ God will see.” To Him all things are known ; He sees all things distinctly, by clearest light, even by Himself.
No other word can be spoken by created beings on whom the darkness has been shed in full measure ;
and in darkness, safety lies in keeping still.

XXV. Another instance. When they sought what <sup>137</sup> it is that nourished the soul (for, as Moses says, “they knew not what it was ”) (Exod. xvi. 15), they became learners and found it to be a saying of God, that is the Divine Word, from which all kinds of instruction and wisdom flow in perpetual stream. This is the heavenly nourishment, and it is indicated as such in the sacred records, when the First Cause in his own person says, “ Lo, it is I that am raining upon you bread out of the heaven ” (ibid. 4) ; for in very deed <sup>138</sup> God drops from above the ethereal wisdom upon minds which are by nature apt and take delight in Contemplation ; and they see it and taste it and are filled with pleasure, being fully aware of what they feel, but wholly ignorant of the cause which produced the feeling. So they inquire “ What is this ” (ibid.
15) which has a nature making it sweeter than honey and whiter than snow ? And they will be taught by

PHILO

- θήσονται δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοπρόπου, ὅτι “ οὗτός ἐστιν 139 ὁ ἄρτος, ὃν ἔδωκε κύριος αὐτοῖς φαγεῖν.” τίς οὖν ὁ ἄρτος, εἶπέ. “ τοῦτο ” φησί “ τὸ ῥῆμα ὃ συν-ἔταξε κύριος.” ἡ θεία σύνταξις αὕτη τὴν ὄρατικὴν ψυχὴν φωτίζει τε ὁμοῦ καὶ γλυκαίνει, φέγγος μὲν τὸ ἀληθείας ἀπαστρέπτουσα, πειθοῖ δέ, ἀρετῆ γλυκεία, τοὺς διψῶντας καὶ πεινῶντας καλοκά-γαθίας ἐφηδύνουσα.
- 140 Ζητήσας καὶ ὁ προφήτης αὐτός, τί τὸ τοῦ κατορ-θοῦν αἴτιον, ἀνεῦρεν ὅτι ἡ θεοῦ μόνου σύνοδος.
 ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἠπόρει, τίς εἰμι καὶ τίς ὢν τὸ ὄρατικὸν γένος ἀπὸ τοῦ βασιλεύειν δοκοῦντος ἀντιθέου τρόπου ῥύσσομαι, διδάσκεται χρησμῶ, ὅτι “ ἔσομαι 141 μετὰ σοῦ.” ζητήσεις δ’ αἱ τῶν κατὰ μέρος ἔχουσι μὲν γλαφυρὰν θεωρίαν καὶ φιλόσοφον—πῶς γὰρ οὔ;—ἡ δὲ τοῦ τῶν ὄντων ἀρίστου καὶ ἀσυγκρίτου καὶ πάντων αἰτίου θεοῦ ζήτησις εὐφραίνει μὲν εὐθύς ἰόντας ἐπὶ τὴν σκέψιν, ἀτελής δ’ οὐ γίνεται, προὔπαντῶντος διὰ τὴν ἴλεω φύσιν ἑαυτοῦ ταῖς παρθένοις χάρισι καὶ ἐπιδεικνυμένου ἑαυτὸν τοῖς γλιχομένοις ἰδεῖν, οὐχ οἷός ἐστιν—ἀμήχανον γάρ, ἐπεὶ καὶ Μωυσῆς “ ἀπέστρεψε τὸ πρόσωπον· εὐλαβεῖτο γὰρ κατεμβλέψαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ,”—ἀλλ’ ὡς ἐνεχώρει γεννητὴν φύσιν τῇ 142 ἀπερινοήτῳ<sup>1</sup> δυνάμει προσβαλεῖν. ἀναγέγραπται καὶ τοῦτο ἐν τοῖς προτρεπτικοῖς· “ ἐπιστρα-φήσεσθε ” γὰρ φησι “ πρὸς κύριον τὸν θεὸν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. περι νοητὰ (-ῶ).

* These words of course really refer to the orders which follow as to the gathering of the manna. Philo takes them to refer to the preceding verse and thus identifies the manna with the “saying” and therefore also with the Logos. So also Leg. All. iii. 173.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 138-142

the seer that "This is the bread, which the Lord hath given them to eat" (ibid. 15). Tell me, then, of 139 what kind the bread is. "This saying," he says, "which the Lord ordained" <sup>a</sup> (ibid. 16). This Divine ordinance fills the soul that has vision alike with light and sweetness, flashing forth the radiancy of truth, and with the honied grace of persuasion imparting sweetness to those who hunger and thirst after nobility of character.

A seeker also was the prophet himself, to know 140 the cause of successful achievement, and he found that it was the presence with him of the only God. For when he asked in doubt, "Who am I, and what is there in me that I should deliver the race of vision from the character which fancies itself king and sets itself up against God?" he is instructed by a message from God, "I will be with thee" (Exod. iii. 11 f.). It is true, of course, that the seeking of partial and subordinate objects calls out in us the exercise of delicate and profound thought; but the seeking of 141 God, best of all existences, incomparable Cause of all things, gladdens us the moment we begin our search, and never turns out fruitless, since by reason of His gracious nature He comes to meet us with His pure and virgin graces, and shews Himself to those who yearn to see Him, not as He is, which is a thing impossible, since even Moses "turned away his face, for he was afraid to look upon God" (Exod. iii. 6), but so far as it was allowable that created nature should direct its gaze towards the Power that is beyond conception. This promise also is included in 142 the Exhortations,<sup>b</sup> where it is said "Ye shall turn <sup>b</sup> See note on § 170.

PHILO

[567] ὑμῶν, καὶ εὐρήσετε αὐτόν, ὅταν | ἐκζητήσητε αὐτόν ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ψυχῆς ὑμῶν.”

143 XXVI. Ἀποχρώντως λελαληκότες καὶ περὶ τούτων ἐπὶ τὸ τρίτον ἐξῆς τρεψώμεθα κεφάλαιον, ἐν ᾧ τὸ μὲν ζητεῖν ἦν, τὸ δ' εὐρίσκειν οὐχ εἶπετο. Λάβαν γοῦν ἀναζητήσας ὅλον τοῦ ἀσκητοῦ τὸν ψυχικὸν οἶκον “ οὐχ εὗρεν ” ἢ φησι Μωυσῆς “ τὰ εἶδωλα ”· πλήρης γὰρ πραγμάτων, οὐκ ὀνειράτων

144 καὶ κενῶν φαντασμάτων ἦν. οὐδ' οἱ τυφλοὶ διάνοιαν Σοδομίται σπουδάσαντες ἐκθύμως αἰσχῦναι τοὺς ἱεροὺς καὶ ἀμιάντους λόγους εὑρον τὴν εἰς τοῦτ' ἄγουσαν ὁδόν, ἀλλ', ὡς φησι τὸ λόγιον, “ παρελύθησαν ζητοῦντες τὴν θύραν,” καίτοι γε ἐν κύκλῳ πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκίαν περιθέοντες καὶ πάντα κινήσαντες λίθον πρὸς ἐκπλήρωσιν τῆς ἐκφύλου 145 καὶ ἀσεβοῦς ἐπιθυμίας. ἤδη τινὲς καὶ

ἀντὶ πυλωρῶν βασιλεῖς ἐθελήσαντες γενέσθαι καὶ τὸ κάλλιστον ἐν βίῳ, τάξιν, καταλύσαι οὐ μόνον τῆς ἀδίκως ἐλπισθείσης εὐπραγίας ἐσφάλησαν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἦν ἐν χερσὶν εἶχον ἐκβαλεῖν ἠναγκάσθησαν. ἱερωσύνης γὰρ τοὺς Κορὲ θιασώτας ὀρεχθέντας 146 * * *<sup>1</sup> ὁ νόμος διαμαρτεῖν φησιν ἀμφοῖν. ὥσπερ γὰρ οὐ τὰ αὐτὰ παῖδες καὶ ἄνδρες μανθάνουσιν, ἀλλ' ἐκατέρᾳ τῶν ἡλικιῶν εἰσιν ἀρμόττουσαι διδασκαλαίαι, οὕτως πεφύκασιν εἶναί τινες αἰεὶ παιδικαὶ ψυχαὶ καὶ ἐν σώμασι γεγηρακόσι καὶ

<sup>1</sup> Wend. proposes to fill up the lacuna: μὴ ἀρκουμένους τῇ νεωκόρων τάξει. Perhaps καίτοι ἤδη . . . ἔχοντας would account better for the loss of the words in the mss.

<sup>a</sup> Or “ although ” . . . still.” ὥσπερ . . . οὕτως seem here

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 142-146

back to the Lord your God, and shall find Him, when ye shall seek after Him, with all your heart, and with all your soul " (Deut. iv. 29 f.).

XXVI. Having said enough about those who seek 143 and find, let us turn next to our third head, in which there is, we said, seeking, but no finding follows. Laban falls under this head. He searched the whole of the soul-dwelling of the Practiser, and as Moses says " found not the idols " (Gen. xxxi. 33); for it was full of real things, not of dreams and empty phantoms.

The men of Sodom, too, blind 144 in understanding, when madly bent on bringing shame upon the sacred and undefiled Words, did not find the way that leads to this, but, as the sacred passage says, " wearied themselves in seeking the door " (Gen. xix. 11), although they ran all round the house and left no stone unturned to carry out their unnatural and unholy lust.

It has happened before 145 now, that men having conceived the desire to become kings instead of gate-keepers and to overthrow order, the most beautiful thing in human life, have not only failed of the success which they had unjustly hoped for, but have been compelled to part with the advantage which they held in their hands. For the Law tells us that the men of Korah's company, when they aimed at (priesthood and were not satisfied with the post of Tabernacle attendants), failed of both (Num. xvi.). For just as boys and men do not learn the 146 same things, but either age has its appropriate teachings, so <sup>a</sup> it is the nature of some souls to be always childish even in bodies that have grown old, and, on the other hand, to be full grown in bodies just reach-to be used in this adversative sense, as ut and ita often are in Latin, but I do not know of any parallel.

PHILO

ἔμπαλιν τελειόταται ἐν ἄρτι ἀκμάζουσι καὶ ἡβῶσιν. ὄφλοιεν ἂν οὖν εὐθήθειαν, ὅσοι μειζόνων ἢ κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτῶν φύσιν ἐρώσιν, ἐπειδὴ πᾶν τὸ ὑπὲρ δύναμιν ἐπιτάσει σφοδρότητος ἀπορρήττεται.

- 147 καὶ Φαραὼ “ ζητῶν ἀνελεῖν Μωυσῆν,” τὸ προφητικὸν γένος, οὐδέποτε εὐρήσει, καίτοι χαλεπὸν ἀκηκοῶς κατ’ αὐτοῦ λόγον ὡς ἐπικεχειρηκότος καθελεῖν τὴν σώματος ἅπασαν ἡγεμονίαν δυσὶ
- 148 προσβολαῖς· ὧν τὴν μὲν προτέραν ἐποιήσατο πρὸς τὸν Αἰγύπτιον τρόπον, ὃς ἐπετείχιζεν ἡδονὴν ψυχῇ—“ πατάξας γὰρ αὐτὸν ” οὐσία σποράδι “ κατέχωσεν, ἄμμω,” τοῦ αὐτοῦ νομίσας ἀμφοτέρα εἶναι τὰ δόγματα, καὶ ἡδονὴν ὡς πρῶτον καὶ μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν καὶ ἀτόμους ὡς τῶν ὄλων ἀρχάς, —τὴν δ’ ἑτέραν πρὸς τὸν κατακερματίζοντα τὴν φύσιν τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ καὶ τὸ μὲν ψυχῇ, τὸ δὲ σώματι, τὸ δὲ τοῖς ἐκτὸς ἀπονέμοντα. ὀλόκληρον γὰρ αὐτὸ βούλεται εἶναι, τῷ ἀρίστῳ τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν, διανοία μόνῃ, προσκεκληρωμένον καὶ μηδενὶ τῶν ἀψύχων ἐφαρμόττον.
- 149 XXVII. Οὐδὲ τὴν ἀνίκητον ἀρετὴν καὶ πικραινομένην ἐπὶ ταῖς καταγελάστοις τῶν ἀνθρώπων σπουδαῖς, ὄνομα Θάμαρ, ὃ διαπεμφθεῖς ἐπὶ τὴν [568] ζήτησιν αὐτῆς ἀνευρίσκει, | φυσικώτατα· λέγεται γάρ· “ ἀπέστειλε δὲ Ἰούδας τὸν ἔριφον ἐν χειρὶ τοῦ ποιμένου τοῦ Ὀδολλαμίτου κομίσασθαι τὸν ἀρραβῶνα παρὰ τῆς γυναικός· καὶ οὐχ εὗρεν αὐτήν. ἐπηρώτησε δὲ τοὺς ἀνδρας τοὺς ἐκ τοῦ τόπου· ποῦ

---

<sup>a</sup> Philo evidently interprets the two attacks as directed (1) against the Epicureans, (2) against the Peripatetics. The two schools however are not put on the same footing. The Epicurean is an Egyptian, who is smiting the Hebrew Stoic;

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 146-149

ing the prime of youth. All such as are enamoured of things too great for their nature will be convicted of foolishness, since every effort beyond our strength breaks down through over-violent straining.

Pharaoh, again, seeking to destroy Moses (Exod. ii. 147 15), that is, the prophetic nature, will never find him, albeit he has heard a grievous charge against him, namely, that he has attempted to overthrow the entire dominion of the body in two attacks.<sup>a</sup> The first of 148 these he made against the Egyptian character, which was assailing the soul from the vantage-ground of pleasure; for "after smiting him he covered him with sand" (Exod. ii. 12), a drifting, disconnected substance. He evidently regarded both doctrines as having the same author, the doctrine that pleasure is the prime and greatest good, and the doctrine that atoms are the elementary principles of the universe. Another attack (ibid. 13) was directed against him who splits up the nature of good into subdivisions, and assigns one to soul, one to body, one to things outside us. For he would have the good to be a complete whole, apportioned to the best element in us, to understanding alone, and in agreement with nothing lifeless.

XXVII. Again, it is in perfect keeping with the 149 nature of things that invincible Virtue, bitterly vexed at men's absurd aims—Tamar is her name—is not found by the messenger dispatched to seek her; for it is said, "And Judah sent the kid of the goats by the hand of his shepherd the Adullamite, to receive the pledge from the woman's hand: and he found her not. And he asked the men of the place, in the second case the wrongdoer whom Moses rebukes is a Hebrew as well as his opponent.

PHILO

ἐστὶν ἢ πόρνη ἢ γενομένη ἐν Αἰνὰν ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ;
 καὶ εἶπον· οὐκ ἦν ἐνταῦθα πόρνη. καὶ ἀπεστράφη πρὸς Ἰούδας καὶ εἶπεν· οὐχ εὖρον, καὶ οἱ ἄνθρωποι οἱ ἐκ τοῦ τόπου λέγουσι μὴ εἶναι ὧδε πόρνην. εἶπε δὲ Ἰούδας· ἐχέτω αὐτά, ἀλλὰ μὴ ποτε κατα-γελασθῶμεν· ἐγὼ μὲν ἀπέσταλκα τὸν ἔριφον τοῦ-τον, σὺ δὲ οὐχ εὖρηκας.” ὡ θαυμαστῆς δοκιμασίας, 150 ὡ ἱεροπρεποῦς πείρας. ἀρραβῶνά τις ἔδωκεν ὠνητικῶς ἔχουσα διάνοια τοῦ καλλίστου κτήματος, θεοσεβείας, διὰ τριῶν ἐνεχύρων ἢ συμβόλων, δακτυλίου, ὀρμίσκου, ῥάβδου,<sup>1</sup> βεβαιότητα καὶ πίστιν, εἰρμὸν καὶ ἀκολουθίαν λόγου πρὸς βίον καὶ βίου πρὸς λόγον, ὀρθὴν καὶ ἀκλινῆ παιδείαν, ἣ λυσιτελές 151 ἐπερεΐδεσθαι. τὸν ἀρραβῶνα τοῦτον εἰ καλῶς ἔδωκε, βασανίζει. τίς οὖν ἢ βάσανος; καθεῖναι τι δέλεαρ ὀλκῶ κεχρημένον δυνάμει, δόξαν ἢ πλοῦτον ἢ ὑγίαν σώματος ἢ τι τῶν ὁμοιοτρόπων, καὶ γινῶναι πρὸς πότερα καθάπερ ἐπὶ πλάστιγγος ταλαντεύσει· ῥοπή γὰρ εἰ γένοιτο πρὸς τι τούτων, ὁ ἀρραβῶν οὐ βέβαιος. ἀπέστειλεν οὖν τὸν ἔριφον κομίσασθαι τὸν ἀρραβῶνα παρὰ τῆς γυναικός, οὐ τοῦτο προηρημένος πάντως ἀπολαβεῖν, ἀλλ’ εἴ 152 ποτε ἀναξία τοῦ κατέχειν ἐκείνη γένοιτο. γενή-σεται δὲ πότε; ἤνικα ἂν τὰ διαφέροντα ἀδιαφόρων ἀντικαταλλάξῃται, τῶν γνησίων ἀγαθῶν τὰ νόθα προτιμήσασα· γνήσια μὲν οὖν ἀγαθὰ πίστις, εἰρμὸς καὶ ἀκολουθία λόγων πρὸς ἔργα, παιδείας κανῶν ὀρθῆς, ὡς ἔμπαλιν κακὰ ἀπιστία, τὸ ἀνακόλουθον, ἀπαιδευσία, τὰ δὲ νόθα, ὅσα τῆς ἀλόγου φορᾶς 153 ἀπῆρώρηται. ζητῶν οὖν “ οὐκ ἀνεύρειν

<sup>1</sup> Wend. suggests the insertion of δηλούσα before διὰ: better, as Cohn, δοῦσα after ῥάβδου.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 149-153

‘Where is the harlot that was at Enaim by the way-side?’ And they said, ‘There was no harlot here.’ And he returned to Judah and said, ‘I have not found her, and the men of the place say that there is no harlot here.’ And Judah said ‘Let her have them, but let us never be laughed to scorn; I have sent this kid, and thou hast not found her’” (Gen. xxxviii. 20-23). O admirable assay! O sacred test! A mind, 150 bent on purchasing that fairest possession, piety, gave a pledge in the form of three securities or symbols, a signet ring, a cord, a staff (ibid. 18): the first, steadfastness and fidelity; the second, sequence and correspondence of word with life and life with word; the third, straight and unbending discipline, on which it is an advantage to lean.<sup>a</sup> The mind is putting 151 to the test whether it did well to give this pledge. What, then, is the test? To drop some bait possessed of attractive power, fame or riches or health of body, or something of this kind, and to ascertain towards which side it sinks as on a pair of scales; for should there be an inclination towards any of these, the pledge is not safe. So he sent the kid thus to recover the pledge from the woman, not with the purpose of getting it back in any case, but only if she should ever prove unworthy to retain it. When 152 will she be proved such? Whenever she exchanges things that matter for things that do not, preferring counterfeits to genuine goods. Now genuine goods are fidelity, sequence and correspondence of words with acts, a standard of right discipline (as on the other hand evils are faithlessness, inconsistency, lack of discipline); while the counterfeits are all things that depend upon irrational impulse. He 153

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 585.

PHILO

αὐτὴν”· δυσεύρετον γὰρ ἢ καὶ παντελῶς ἀνεύρετον ἐν πεφυρμένῳ βίῳ τὸ καλόν. κἂν διαπύθῃται, εἰ ἔστι περὶ πάντα τὸν τόπον τοῦ καλοῦ πεπορνευμένη ψυχῇ, ῥητῶς ἀκούσεται, ὅτι οὔτε ἔστιν οὔτε ἦν πρότερον· ἀκόλαστος γὰρ ἢ μαχλὰς ἢ τριοδίτις σοβὰς ἢ τὸ τῆς ὥρας ἄνθος ἐπειωνίζουσα ἢ καθαρσίῳσι καὶ λουτροῖσι τὰ ἐκτὸς φαιδρυνομένη, τὰ δὲ ἐντὸς ῥυπῶσα, ἢ καθάπερ τὰ πινάκια χρώμασι τὴν ὄψιν ὑπογραφομένη χήτει φυσικῆς εὐμορφίας ἢ τὸ λεγόμενον πολυάνδρον κακὸν ὡς ἀγαθὸν μεταδιώκουσα ἢ πολυγαμίας ἐρῶσα ἢ πρὸς μυρία σπειρομένη<sup>1</sup> ἢ ὑπὸ μυρίων σωμάτων ὁμοῦ καὶ πραγμάτων ἐμπαιζομένη καὶ

154 περιωβριζομένη κείθι οὐκ ἔστι. ταῦτα ὁ διαπεμψάμενος ἀκούσας, φθόνον ἠλλοτριωκῶς ἀφ’ αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν φύσιν ἴλεως γέγηθεν οὐ μετρίως

[569] | καὶ φησι· μὴ γὰρ οὐ δι’ εὐχῆς ἐστὶ μοι τὴν διάνοιαν ἀστείαν τε καὶ ἀστὴν ὡς ἀληθῶς εἶναι, κοσμιότητι καὶ σωφροσύνῃ καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαισι διαπρέπουσαν ἀρεταῖσι, ἐνὶ προσέχουσιν ἀνδρὶ καὶ τὴν ἐνὸς οἰκουρίαν ἀγαπῶσαν καὶ μοναρχίᾳ χαίρουσαν. εἰ δὴ τοιαύτη τίς ἐστιν, ἐχέτω τὰ δεδομένα, καὶ τὴν παιδείαν καὶ τὸν εἰρμὸν λόγου πρὸς βίον καὶ βίου πρὸς λόγον καὶ τὸ ἀναγκαιότατον, βεβαιότητα

155 καὶ πίστιν. ἀλλὰ μὴ ποτε γελασθῶμεν ἀνάξια

<sup>1</sup> A difficult phrase which Mangey regarded as spurious: perhaps read μυρίων, “she becomes the seed-plot of thousands.”

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 153-155

sought there and " did not find her " ; for that which is morally excellent is hard or even impossible to find in a life of turmoil. And if he make careful inquiries whether there be in all the region of that which is morally excellent a soul that has played the harlot, he will be told definitely that there neither is nor was aforesaid, for that there is not there any licentious one, or a wanton, or a street-walker, or one prostituting for gain the flower of her youth, or making bright what is outside by baths and cleansings while she is foul within, or in default of natural beauty painting her face as pictures are coloured, or what is called the " many-husband " pest, following after evil as though it were good, or a lover of polygamy, or dispersing herself upon a thousand different objects material and immaterial alike, or mocked and outraged by that multitude. He who had sent the messenger, on hearing this, being one who had put envy far from him and was of a gracious disposition, rejoices greatly and says : " Is it not my heart-felt prayer that my understanding should be a true and high-born lady,<sup>a</sup> eminent for chastity and modesty and all other virtues, devoted to one husband and keeping watch with delight over the home of one, and exulting in a sole ruler ? If in truth she is such an one, let her keep the things which have been given her, both discipline and the correspondence of word with life and of life with word, and the most vital of all, steadfastness and fidelity. But let us never be laughed to scorn in the belief that we <sup>a</sup> The allegory seems to get a little confused at this point. Properly the mind is the purchaser of the lady Virtue or Piety.

PHILO

- κεχαρίσθαι δόξαντες, καίτοι γ' ὑπολαβόντες ἐπιτηδειότατα τῇ ψυχῇ δεδωρῆσθαι. ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἐγὼ μὲν, ὅπερ εἰκὸς ἦν ἐργάσασθαι τὸν βουλόμενον τρόπου βάσανον καὶ δοκιμασίαν λαβεῖν, πεποίηκα, δέλεαρ καθεὶς καὶ διαπεμψάμενος, ὁ δὲ ἐπεδείξατο
- 156 τὴν ἑαυτοῦ φύσιν οὐκ εὐάλωτον. ἄδηλον δὲ ἐμοὶ τὸ διὰ τί (τίς)<sup>1</sup> οὐκ εὐάλωτος· μυρίους γὰρ εἶδον τῶν ἄγαν φαύλων τὰ αὐτὰ δρῶντας ἔσθ' ὅτε τοῖς λίαν ἀγαθοῖς, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀπὸ διανοίας τῆς αὐτῆς, ἐπειδὴ τοῖς μὲν ἀλήθεια, τοῖς δὲ ὑπόκρισις ἀσκεῖται· χαλεπὴ δ' ἡ διάγνωσις ἀμφοῖν· πολλάκις γὰρ ὑπὸ τοῦ δοκεῖν παρενημερήθη τὸ εἶναι.
- 157 XXVIII. Καὶ τὸν χίμαρον τὸν περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ φιλάρετος ζητεῖ μὲν, οὐχ εὐρίσκει δέ· ἤδη γὰρ, ὡς δηλοῖ τὸ λόγιον, ἐνεπέπρηστο. τί δ' αἰνίττεται, σκεπτέον· τὸ μὲν μηδὲν ἁμαρτεῖν ἴδιον θεοῦ, τὸ δὲ μετανοεῖν σοφοῦ· παγγχάλεπον δὲ καὶ δυσεύ-
- 158 ρετον τοῦτό γε. φησὶν οὖν ὁ χρησμός, ὅτι “ ζητῶν ἐξεζήτησε Μωυσῆς ” ἐν τῷ θνητῷ βίῳ τὸν περὶ ἁμαρτημάτων μετανοίας λόγον. ἐσπούδαζε γὰρ ἀνευρεῖν ἀπαμπισχομένην τὸ ἀδικεῖν ψυχὴν καὶ ἄνευ αἰσχύνης γυμνὴν προϊούσαν ἁμαρτημάτων. ἀλλ' ὅμως οὐχ εὔρε, τῆς φλογός, λέγω δὲ τῆς

<sup>1</sup> τίς is my insertion: Wend. prints δῆλον for the ms. ἄδηλον, but this does not agree with the sequel. The test was necessary, because experience shews that without such a test we may easily be deceived. It would be possible to read τίς indefinite instead of τίς interrogative; but the double interrogative (what makes who?) is idiomatic Greek. Cf. De Som. ii. 296.

“ Or “of little value.” Philo interprets the lxx “Let her have them (i.e. the pledges), but let us never be laughed to scorn” as meaning that to suppose that the material gift of the kid should be taken in exchange for the spiritual, thought our gifts unmerited; <sup>a</sup> we did indeed suppose that they were presents perfectly adapted to the soul. But while I, on my part, did what one who wished to test and try a character would naturally do, when I offered a bait, and sent a messenger, that character on its part made it evident that it was by its nature no easy prey. But I could not tell what it is <sup>156</sup> which makes one an easy prey and another not; for I have seen great numbers of the exceedingly wicked sometimes acting exactly like the very good, but not for the same reason, since one set is putting truth into practice, the other set hypocrisy: and it is hard to distinguish these two; for many a time being is outdone by seeming."

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 155-158

XXVIII. Again, the goat of the sin-offering is <sup>157</sup> sought for by the lover of virtue, but he does not find it; for, as the passage of Holy Writ shews, it had already been burnt (Lev. x. 16). We must consider what he means by this figure. To do no sin is peculiar to God; to repent, to the wise man; and this latter is a very difficult thing, and hard to find. So the oracle says that "Moses diligently sought" <sup>158</sup> in this mortal life the secret of repentance for sins; for he was intent on discovering a soul divesting itself of unrighteousness, and going forth without shame, naked of misdeeds. But nevertheless he did not find one, for the flame, in other words the irrational im-

would expose the offerer to the charge that he thought the latter of little value (or perhaps unduly depreciated the soul to which the offer is made). It is not so. The offer is the test which every aspiring soul must put to itself.

It might perhaps be suggested that the scorn is Tamar's, and the gift scorned the kid, and this is supported by the description of her in § 149. But it is difficult to fit this in with the rest of the sentence.

PHILO

- ὀξύκνητοτάτης ὀρμῆς ἀλόγου, καταδραμούσης καὶ 159 ὅλην ψυχὴν ἐπινημηθείσης. νικᾶται γὰρ τὰ μὲν ἐλάττω πρὸς τῶν πλειόνων, τὰ δὲ βραδύτερα πρὸς τῶν ὠκυδρομωτέρων, τὰ δὲ μέλλοντα πρὸς τῶν παρόντων· ἐσταλμένον δὲ καὶ βραδὺ καὶ μέλλον ἢ μετάνοια, πολὺ δὲ καὶ ταχὺ καὶ συνεχὲς ἐν τῷ θνητῷ βίῳ τὸ ἀδικεῖν. εἰκότως οὖν ἐν τροπῇ τις γενόμενός φησι μὴ δύνασθαι “ τοῦ περὶ ἁμαρτίας ἐμφαγεῖν ”· μὴ γὰρ ἐπιτρέπειν τὸ συνειδὸς αὐτῷ μετανοίᾳ τραφῆναι· διὸ λέγεται· “ ἤκουσε Μωυσῆς, 160 καὶ ἤρεσεν αὐτῷ. ” τὰ γὰρ πρὸς γένεσιν τῶν πρὸς θεὸν μακρὰν ἀπέζευκται· τῇ μὲν γὰρ τὰ φανερὰ μόνα, τῷ δὲ καὶ τὰ ἀφανῆ γνώριμα. παραπαίει δ’, ὅς ἂν τοῦ ἀληθοῦς καταψευδόμενος ἔτ’ ἀδικῶν μετανενοηκέναι φάσκη· ὁμοιον ὡς εἰ καὶ ὁ νοσῶν [570] τὸν | ὑγιαίνοντα καθυποκρίνοιτο· μᾶλλον γάρ, ὡς ἔοικε, νοσήσει μηδὲν τῶν εἰς ὑγίειαν προσφόρων ἐπιτηδεύειν ἀξιῶν.
- 161 XXIX. Ἐζήτει ποτὲ προαχθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ φιλο-μαθοῦς καὶ τὰς αἰτίας, αἷς τὰναγκαιότατα τῶν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ πραγμάτων ἐπιτελεῖται· θεώμενος γὰρ ὅσα ἐν γενέσει φθειρόμενα καὶ γεννώμενα, ἀπολλύμενά τε αὐτὰ καὶ διαμέμοντα, τέθηπε καὶ κατα-πέπληκται καὶ ἐκβοᾷ φάσκων· “ τί, ὅτι ὁ βᾶτος

---

<sup>a</sup> The main point of the story of Lev. x. 16-20, some of the details of which seem to be difficult, is that the goat should have been eaten by the priests instead of being burnt. Aaron pleaded in defence “there have befallen me such things as these,” i.e. the death of his sons Nadab and Abihu. “In spite of the sacrifice offered on behalf of Aaron and his house, two of his sons have perished; with such a

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 158-161

pulse exceeding swift in its movements, had overrun and devoured the whole soul. For the fewer are over- 159 powered by the more numerous, and the slower by the more fleet, and things that tarry by things that are present ; and repentance is a restricted and slow and tarrying thing, whereas wrongdoing is copious and swift and constantly present in this mortal life. Naturally, then, one who has come into a state of lapse from virtue says that he is " unable to eat of the sin-offering," since his inward feeling does not permit him to be fed by repentance, wherefore it is said " Moses heard it, and it pleased him " (Lev. x. 19 f.). For our 160 relation to other created beings is a very different thing from our relation to God ; for to creation only things manifest are known, but to God hidden things also. The man who, lying against the truth, maintains while still doing wrong that he has repented, is a madman. It is just as if the sick man were to act the part of the healthy man : he will clearly get worse through declining to have recourse to any means conducive to health.<sup>a</sup>

XXIX. Again, on one occasion the prophet, led on 161
by his love of acquiring knowledge, was seeking after the causes by which the most essential occurrences in the universe are brought about ; for observing all created things wasting away and coming to the birth, perishing and yet remaining, he is smitten with amazement and cries out saying, " Why is it that the bush token of the divine displeasure resting upon him could he, immediately afterwards, feel himself entitled to eat the sacrifice?" (Driver). Philo interprets the goat as Repentance, which is consumed by the fire of unreasoning appetite, and therefore " not found " ; and to eat of it and thus to assume a repentance which is not sincere will make the sinner's condition worse.

PHILO

- 162 καίεται καὶ οὐ κατακαίεται<sup>1</sup>. τὸν γὰρ ἄβατον [οὐ]<sup>1</sup> πολυπραγμονεῖ χῶρον, θείων ἐνδιαίτημα φύσεων, ἀλλ' ἤδη μέλλων ἀνήνυτον καὶ ἀτελῆ πόνον διαθλεῖν ἐπικουφίζεται ἐλέω καὶ προμηθείᾳ τοῦ πάντων σωτήρος θεοῦ, ὃς ἔχρησεν ἐκ τῶν ἀδύτων. “ μὴ ἐγγίσης ᾧδε,” ἴσον τῷ μὴ πρόσιθι τοιαύτη διασκέψει· περιεργίας γὰρ καὶ φιλοπραγμοσύνης μεί-ζονος ἢ κατὰ ἀνθρωπίνην δύναμιν τὸ ἔργον· ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν γεγονότα θαύμαζε, τὰς δὲ αἰτίας, δι' αἷς ἢ 163 γέγονεν ἢ φθείρεται, μὴ πολυπραγμόνει. “ ὁ γὰρ τόπος ἐν ᾧ σὺ ἔστηκας ” φησί “ γῆ ἁγία ἐστίν.” ποῖος τόπος; ἢ δῆλον ὅτι ὁ αἰτιολογικός, ὃν μόνον ταῖς θείαις ἀνῆψε φύσεις, ἀνθρώπων οὐδένα νομίσας ἰκανὸν εἶναι αἰτιολογίας ἐφάψασθαι; 164 ὁ δ' ἄρα διὰ πόθον ἐπιστήμης ὑπερ-κύψας ἅπαντα τὸν κόσμον ζητεῖ περὶ τοῦ κοσμο-ποιοῦ, τίς ἐστὶν ὁ δυσόρατος οὗτος καὶ δυστόπαστος, σῶμα ἢ ἀσώματος ἢ ὑπεράνω τι τούτων ἢ φύσις ἀπλή, οἷα μονάς, ἢ σύγκριμα ἢ τί τῶν ὄντων.
 καὶ τοῦθ' ὄρων ὡς ἔστι δυσθήρατον καὶ δυσπερινόητον, εὔχεται παρ' αὐτοῦ μαθεῖν τοῦ θεοῦ, τίς ἐστὶν ὁ θεός· οὐ γὰρ ἤλπισε δυνήσεσθαι γινῶναι 165 παρ' ἐτέρου τινὸς τῶν μετ' αὐτόν. ἀλλ' ὅμως ἴσχυσε<sup>2</sup> μηδὲν περὶ τῆς τοῦ ὄντος ἐρευνᾶν οὐσίας·

<sup>1</sup> [οὐ]: so Mangey: Wend., who retains it, may have thought that the βάτος represented the laws of causation in the visible world while the ἄβατος χῶρος was the supernatural sphere; but this is impossible in view of τὰς δὲ αἰτίας . . . μὴ πολυπραγμόνει below. Wend. probably also did not realize that βάτος was supposed by Greek philologists to be derived from ἄβατος. It would however be possible to retain οὐ if a question-mark is placed after φύσεων (“are not his thoughts busy?”).

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 161-165

is burning and not being consumed ? ” (Exod. iii. 2 f.), for his thoughts are busy over the untrodden place, 162 familiar only to Divine natures. But when now on the point of engaging in an endless and futile labour, he is relieved of it by the kindness and providence of God the Saviour of all men, who from out of the hallowed spot warned him “ Draw not nigh hither ” (ibid. 5), as much as to say “ Enter not on such an inquiry ”; for the task argues a busy, restless curiosity too great for human ability : marvel at all that has come into being, but as for the reasons for which they have either come into being or are decaying, cease to busy thyself with them. For “ the place on which 163 thou standest is holy ground,” it says (ibid. 5). What kind of place or topic is meant ? Evidently that of causation, a subject which He has assigned to Divine natures only, deeming no human being capable of dealing with the study of causation.

But the prophet owing to desire of knowledge lifts 164 his eyes above the whole universe and becomes a seeker regarding its Creator, asking of what sort this Being is so difficult to see, so difficult to conjecture. Is He a body or incorporeal, or something exalted above these ? Is He a single Nature, a Monad as it were ? Or a composite Being ? What among all that exists ? And seeing that this is a problem hard to pursue, hard to take in by thought, he prays that he may learn from God Himself what God is : for he had no hope of being able to ascertain this from another, from one of those that are inferior to Him. Nevertheless he did not succeed in finding anything 165 by search respecting the essence of Him that is. For

---

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἤκουσε.

PHILO

“ τὰ γὰρ ὀπίσω μου ” φησὶν “ ὄψει, τὸ δὲ πρόσωπον οὐ μὴ ἴδῃς.” αὐταρκες γάρ ἐστι σοφῶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα καὶ ἐπόμενα καὶ ὅσα μετὰ τὸν θεὸν γινῶναι, τὴν δ’ ἡγεμονικὴν οὐσίαν ὁ βουλόμενος καταθεάσασθαι τῷ περιαιυγεί τῶν ἀκτίνων πρὶν ἰδεῖν πηρὸς ἔσται.

- 166 XXX. Τοσαῦτα καὶ περὶ τοῦ τρίτου διειλεγμένοι κεφαλαίου μέτιμεν ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον καὶ τε-
 [571] λευταῖον | τῶν προταθέντων, καθ’ ὃ μὴ γενομένης ζητήσεως φιλεῖ προαπαντᾶν εὗρεσις. ἐν τούτῳ τάττεται πᾶς αὐτομαθῆς καὶ αὐτοδίδακτος σοφός· οὐ γὰρ σκέψῃσι καὶ μελέταις καὶ πόνοις ἐβελτιώθη, γενόμενος δ’ εὐθύς εὐτρεπισμένην εἶρε σοφίαν ἄνωθεν ὀμβρηθεῖσαν ἀπ’ οὐρανοῦ, ἧς ἀκράτου σπάσας εἰστιάθη καὶ διετέλεσε μεθύων τὴν μετ’
 167 ὀρθότητος λόγου νήφουσαν μέθην. οὗτός ἐστιν ὃν Ἰσαὰκ ὠνόμασαν οἱ χρησμοί, ὃν οὐχ ἑτέρῳ μὲν χρόνῳ συνέλαβεν, ἑτέρῳ δὲ ἔτεκεν ἢ ψυχὴ· “ συλλαβοῦσα ” γάρ φησιν “ ἔτεκεν ” ὡς ἂν ἀχρόνως. οὐ γὰρ ἄνθρωπος ἦν ὁ γεννώμενος, ἀλλὰ νόημα καθαρῶτατον, φύσει μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπιτηδεύσει καλόν· οὐ χάριν καὶ ἢ τίκτουσα αὐτὸ λέγεται “ τὰ γυναικεῖα ἐκλιπεῖν,” τὰ συνήθη καὶ εὐλογα καὶ ἀνθρώ-168 πινα. καινὸν γὰρ καὶ κρεῖττον λόγου καὶ θεῖον ὄντως τὸ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, οὐκ ἀνθρωπίναις ἐπινοίαις, ἀλλ’ ἐνθέῳ μανίᾳ συνιστάμενον. ἢ ἀγνοεῖς ὅτι οὐ δέονται πρὸς τὸν τόκον μαιῶν Ἑβραῖαι, “ τίκτουσι ” δ’, ὡς φησι Μωυσῆς, “ πρὶν εἰσελθεῖν

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 165-168

he is told "What is behind Me thou shalt see, but My face thou shalt by no means see" (Exod. xxxiii. 23). For it amply suffices the wise man to come to a knowledge of all that follows on after God and in His wake, but the man that wishes to set his gaze upon the Supreme Essence, before he sees Him will be blinded by the rays that beam forth all around Him.

XXX. Having said thus much about the third <sup>166</sup> head also, we will go on to the fourth and last of those proposed for consideration, in which there has been no "seeking," and yet "finding" meets us unbidden. Under this head is ranged every wise man who learns directly from no teacher but himself; for he does not by searchings and practisings and toilings gain improvement, but as soon as he comes into existence he finds wisdom placed ready to his hand, shed from heaven above, and of this he drinks undiluted draughts, and sits feasting, and ceases not to be drunken with the sober drunkenness which right reason brings. This is he whom Holy Writ <sup>167</sup> calls "Isaac," whom the soul did not conceive at one time and give birth to at another, for it says "she conceived and gave birth" (Gen. xxi. 2) as though timelessly. For he that was thus born was not a man, but a most pure thought, beautiful not by practice but by nature. And for this reason she that gave birth to it is said "to have forsaken the ways of women" (Gen. xviii. 11), those human ways of custom and mere reasoning. For the nature of <sup>168</sup> the self-taught is new and higher than our reasoning, and in very deed Divine, arising by no human will or purpose but by a God-inspired ecstasy. Do you not know that Hebrew mothers need no midwives for their delivery, but as Moses says "before the midτὰς μαίας,” λέγω δὲ μεθόδους, τέχνας, ἐπιστήμας, φύσει μόνῃ χρώμεναι συνεργῶ; παγκάλους δὲ καὶ προσφυστάτους ὄρους ἀποδίδωσι τοῦ αὐτομαθοῦς, ἕνα μὲν τοιοῦτον, τὸ ταχὺ εὕρισκό-169 μενον, ἕτερον δὲ “ὁ παρέδωκεν ὁ θεός.” τὸ μὲν οὖν διδασκόμενον μακροῦ χρόνου δείται, τὸ δὲ φύσει ταχύ τε καὶ τρόπον τινα ἄχρονόν ἐστι· κάκεινο μὲν ἄνθρωπον, τοῦτο δὲ θεὸν ὑφηγητὴν ἔχει. τὸν μὲν δὴ πρότερον ὄρον κατέταξεν ἐν πεύσει· “τί τοῦτο ὁ ταχὺ εὔρες, ὦ τέκνον,” τὸν δὲ ἕτερον ἐν ἀποκρίσει φάσκων· “ὁ παρέδωκε 170 κύριος ὁ θεός.” XXXI. ἔστι δὲ καὶ τρίτος ὄρος τοῦ αὐτομαθοῦς, τὸ ἀναβαῖνον αὐτόματον. λέγεται γὰρ ἐν τοῖς προτρεπτικοῖς· “οὐ σπερεῖτε, οὐδὲ μὴ ἀμήσητε τὰ αὐτόματα ἀναβαίνοντα αὐτῆς”· τέχνης γὰρ οὐδεμιᾶς χρεῖα τὰ φύσει, τοῦ θεοῦ σπείροντος αὐτὰ καὶ τῇ γεωργικῇ τέχνῃ τελεσφοροῦντος ὡς ἂν αὐτόματα τὰ οὐκ αὐτόματα, πλὴν παρόσον ἐπινοίας ἀνθρωπίνης οὐκ ἔδεξθη 171 τὸ παράπαν. οὐ προτρέπει δὲ μᾶλλον ἢ γνώμην ἀποφαίνεται· παραινῶν μὲν γὰρ εἶπεν ἄν· μὴ σπείρητε, μὴ ἀμήσητε, ἀποφαινόμενος δέ· “οὐ σπερεῖτε, οὐδὲ μὴ ἀμήσητε τὰ αὐτόματα”· οἷς γὰρ ἀπαυτοματίζουσιν ἐκ φύσεως ἐπιτυγχάνομεν, τούτων οὔτε τὰς ἀρχὰς οὔτε τὰ τέλη παρ’ ἑαυτοὺς

PHILO

 [572] | ὡς ἂν αἰτίους<sup>1</sup> εὕρισκομεν. ἀρχὴ μὲν οὖν ὁ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀναιτίους: Mangey ἀναιτίων.

---

<sup>a</sup> Since in the other six places where Philo uses the phrase the quotation comes from Deuteronomy, it is perhaps more probable that here also he thinks he is quoting that book.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 168-171

wives" (Exod. i. 19), that is before systems, arts, sciences, come in, they give birth with the co-operation of nature alone? Admirable and most suitable are the marks which the Lawgiver sets forth to define the direct learner: one, "that which is quickly found," another, "that which God delivered." While that which is taught needs a long 169 time, that which comes by nature is rapid, and, we may say, timeless; and, while the one has man as teacher, the other has God. The former mark he sets down in a question: "What is this which thou didst find quickly, Child?" the other in a reply, in the words "that which God the Lord delivered" (Gen. xxvii. 20).

XXXI. There is besides 170 a third mark of the direct learner, namely that which comes up of itself. For it is said in the Exhortations<sup>a</sup>: "Ye shall not sow, nor shall ye reap its growths that come up of themselves" (Lev. xxv. 11): for natural growths require no artificial treatment, since God sows them and by His art of husbandry brings to perfection, as though they were self-grown, plants which are not self-grown, save only so far as they had no need whatever of human attention. His 171 words are not those of exhortation, but of statement<sup>b</sup>: for, in commanding, he would have said "do not sow," "do not reap"; instead he says in the form of a statement, "Ye shall not sow, nor assuredly shall ye reap that which is self-grown." For when we observe such growths as spring up spontaneously by nature, we find that we are not responsible either for their beginning or their end. Now the seed is <sup>b</sup> Or, more fully, "statement of what he thinks (will happen)." For this argument from the indicative form of the words cf. De Ebr. 138.

PHILO

- 172 σπόρος, τελευτή δὲ ὁ ἄμητος<sup>1</sup> ἄμεινον δ' ἐκείνο ἐκδέξασθαι· πᾶσα ἀρχὴ καὶ πᾶν τέλος αὐτόματόν ἐστιν, ἴσον τῷ φύσεως, οὐχ ἡμέτερον ἔργον· οἷον ἀρχὴ τίς τοῦ μαθάνειν; ἢ δῆλον ὅτι ἢ ἐν τῷ διδασκομένῳ φύσις εὐπαράδεκτος οὐσα πρὸς τὰ κατὰ μέρος θεωρήματα; τίς δὲ τοῦ τελειοῦσθαι; πάλιν, εἰ δεῖ μηδὲν ὑποστειλάμενον εἰπεῖν, ἢ φύσις. προκοπᾶς μὲν γὰρ ἐμποιῆσαι καὶ ὁ διδάσκων ἱκανός, τὴν δ' ἐπ' ἄκρον τελειότητα ὁ θεὸς μόνος,
- 173 ἢ ἀρίστη φύσις. ὁ τούτοις ἐντρεφόμενος τοῖς δόγμασι τὴν αἰδίον εἰρήνην ἄγει, πόνων ἀφειμένος ἀτρύτων. ἀδιαφορεῖ δ' ἐβδομάδος εἰρήνη κατὰ τὸν νομοθέτην· ἐν γὰρ αὐτῇ τὸ δοκεῖν
- 174 ἐνεργεῖν ἀποτιθεμένη γένεσις ἀναπαύεται. προσηκόντως οὖν λέγεται· “καὶ ἔσται τὰ σάββατα τῆς γῆς ὑμῖν βρώματα,” δι' ὑπονοιῶν· τρόφιμον γὰρ καὶ ἀπολαυστόν μόνον ἢ ἐν θεῷ ἀνάπαυσις, τὸ μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν περιποιούσα, τὴν ἀπόλεμον εἰρήνην. ἢ μὲν γὰρ κατὰ πόλεις ἀνακέκρται ἐμφυλίῳ πολέμῳ, ἢ δὲ ψυχῆς ἀμιγῆς διαφορᾶς ἀπάσης
- 175 ἐστίν. ἐναργέστατα δέ μοι δοκεῖ τὴν ἄνευ ζητήσεως εὔρεσιν παριστάνειν διὰ τούτων· “ὅταν εἰσαγάγῃ σε κύριος ὁ θεὸς σου εἰς τὴν γῆν ἣν ὤμοσε τοῖς πατράσι σου δοῦναί σοι, πόλεις

<sup>1</sup> Wendland puts a full stop after αὐτόματα, a colon after ἐνρίσκομεν, and a full stop after ἄμητος. The last at any rate seems to me to obscure the connexion of thought. See note <sup>a</sup> below.

<sup>a</sup> The connexion of thought seems to be as follows: to say that we shall not sow or reap (in the sense of bringing to the harvest) self-grown plants is a truism. Sowing must mean “beginning” and reaping “ending” and the text is the beginning and the reaping the end; and the 172 text is better understood in this way: every beginning and every end is "automatic," in the sense that it is not our doing but that of nature.<sup>a</sup> For instance, what is the beginning of the act of learning? Evidently it is the nature residing in the pupil with its receptivity towards the several subjects of study.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 172-175

What again is the beginning of the completion of learning? Undoubtedly it is nature. It is within the power of the teacher to lead us from one stage of progress to another; God only, Nature at its best, can produce in us the full completion.

The man that is nurtured on these doctrines enjoys 173
the peace that never ends, released from unabating toils. Peace and Seven are identical according to the Legislator: for on the seventh day<sup>b</sup> creation puts away its seeming activity and takes rest. So, taken 174 in a symbolic sense, the words "And the sabbath of the land shall be food for you" (Lev. xxv. 6) are to the point; for nothing is nourishing and enjoyable food, save rest in God, securing as it does for us the greatest boon, the peace which is unbroken by war. For the peace which is made by one city with another is mixed with and marred by intestine war; but the peace of the soul has no admixture of discord whatever.

But it is by the following that the 175 Lawgiver seems to me most clearly to supply an example of finding without seeking: "When the Lord thy God shall have led thee into the land which He swore unto thy fathers to give thee, cities great intended to teach us that all our actions begin and end from God.

<sup>b</sup> Or "the seventh (anything)." See note on De Mut. 260.
Philo clearly has the sabbatical year in mind as well as the sabbath itself.

PHILO

- μεγάλας καὶ καλάς, ἃς οὐκ ᾤκοδόμησας, οἰκίας πλήρεις πάντων ἀγαθῶν, ἃς οὐκ ἐνέπλησας, λάκκους λελατομημένους, οὓς οὐκ ἐξελατόμησας, ἀμπελῶνας καὶ ἐλαιῶνας, οὓς οὐ κατεφύτευσας.”
- 176 ὄρᾳς τὴν ἀφθονίαν τῶν κεχυμένων μεγάλων καὶ ἐτοιμῶν πρὸς κτῆσιν καὶ ἀπόλαυσιν ἀγαθῶν; εἰκάζονται δὲ πόλεσι μὲν αἱ γενικαὶ ἀρεταί, διότι ἐπὶ πλείστον εὐρύνονται, οἰκίαις δ' αἱ ἐν εἴδει—στέλλονται γὰρ εἰς βραχύτερον αὐται κύκλον,— λάκκοις δὲ αἱ εὐφυεῖς ψυχαί, αἱ εὐπαράδεκτοι σοφίας ὡς ἐκεῖνοι ὕδατος, ἀμπελῶσι δὲ καὶ ἐλαιῶσιν αἱ προκοπαὶ καὶ αὐξήσεις καὶ καρπῶν γενέσεις· καρπὸς δ' ἐπιστήμης ὁ θεωρητικὸς βίος, ἄκρατον εὐφροσύνην περιποιῶν ὡς ἀπ' οἴνου καὶ νοητὸν φέγγος ὡς ἀπὸ φλογός, ἧς ἔλαιον τροφή.
- 177 XXXII. Ταῦτα καὶ περὶ εὐρέσεως εἰπόντες μέτ-ιμεν ἐξῆς ἐπὶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα τῆς ἐφόδου. “εὐρεν” οὖν φησιν “αὐτὴν ἄγγελος κυρίου ἐπὶ τῆς πηγῆς τοῦ ὕδατος.” λέγεται δὲ πολλαχῶς πηγῆ, ἓνα μὲν τρόπον ὁ ἡμέτερος νοῦς, ἕτερον δὲ ἡ λογικῆ ἕξις καὶ παιδεία, τρίτον δ' ἡ φαύλη διάθεσις, τέταρτον ἡ σπουδαία καὶ ἐναντία ταύτης, πέμπτον
- 178 αὐτὸς ὁ τῶν ὄλων | ποιητῆς καὶ πατῆρ. τὰς δὲ [573] τούτων πίστεις οἱ ἀναγραφέντες δηλοῦσι χρησιμοίτινες οὖν εἰσιν, ἐπισκεπτέον. ἄδεται τις ἐν ἀρχῇ τῆς νομοθεσίας μετὰ τὴν κοσμοποιίαν εὐθὺς τοιοῦδε· “πηγὴ δὲ ἀνέβαινε ἐκ τῆς γῆς καὶ
- 179 ἐπότιζε πᾶν τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γῆς.” οἱ μὲν οὖν ἀλληγορίας καὶ φύσεως τῆς κρύπτεσθαι φιλοῦσης

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Quod Deus 94 ff.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 585.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 175-179

and fair, which thou buildedst not, houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not, cisterns cut out, which thou cuttedst not, vineyards and olive-yards, which thou plantedst not " (Deut. vi. 10 f.). Seest 176 thou the lavish abundance of the good things showered upon them, great and ready for possession and enjoyment? The generic virtues are likened to cities, because they have the greatest expanse; the special virtues to houses, for these are restricted to a narrower compass; souls endowed with good native ability are likened to cisterns, being ready to receive wisdom as these do water; vineyards and olive-yards represent progress and growth and yield of fruits; and the fruit of knowledge is the life of contemplation, winning for us unmixed gladness as from wine, and intellectual light as from a flame which oil feeds.<sup>a</sup>

XXXII. In what preceded we have spoken about 177 finding, having previously dealt with flight. We will now pass on in turn to the points which follow next in our plan of treatment. We read, then, "An angel of the Lord found her at the water-spring" (Gen. xvi. 7). "Spring" is a word used in many senses. In the first place, our mind is so called; secondly, the reasoning habit<sup>b</sup> and education; thirdly, the bad disposition; fourthly, its opposite, the good disposition; fifthly, the Maker and Father of the Universe Himself. The proofs of this statement are 178 supplied by the Oracles of Scripture: let us see what they are. There is one such declaration in the beginning of the Book of the Law, immediately after the record of the Creation of the World, running as follows: "A spring went up out of the earth and watered all the face of the earth" (Gen. ii. 6). Those who are 179 unversed in allegory and the nature-truth which

PHILO

- ἀμύητοι τὴν εἰρημένην εἰκάζουσι πηγὴν τῷ Αἰγυπτίῳ ποταμῷ, ὃς κατὰ πᾶν ἔτος ἀναχεόμενος λιμνάζει τὴν πεδιάδα, μονονοῦκ ἀντίμιμον οὐρανοῦ
- 180 δύναμιν ἐπιδείκνυσθαι δοκῶν. ὁ γὰρ χειμῶνος ταῖς ἄλλαις χώραις οὐρανόσ, τοῦτ' Αἰγύπτῳ θέρους ἀκμάζοντος ὁ Νεῖλός ἐστιν· ὁ μὲν γὰρ ἄνωθεν ἐπὶ γῆν τὸν ὑετὸν ἀποστέλλει, ὁ δὲ κάτωθεν ἄνω, τὸ παραδοξότατον, ὕων ἄρδει τὰς ἀρούρας. ὅθεν ὀρηθεῖς καὶ Μωυσῆς ἄθεον ἀνέγραψε τὸν Αἰγύπτιον τρόπον γῆν οὐρανοῦ προκρίνοντα καὶ τῶν ὀλυμπίων τὰ χερσαῖα καὶ ψυχῆς τὸ σῶμα.
- 181 ἀλλὰ μὴν περὶ τούτων καὶ αὐθὶς ποτε ἐνέσται λέγειν, ὅταν ἐπιτρέπωσιν οἱ καιροί· νυνὶ δὲ—στοχαστέον γὰρ τοῦ μὴ μακρηγορεῖν—ἐπανιτέον ἐπὶ τὴν δι' ὑπονοιῶν ἀπόδοσιν καὶ λεκτέον τὸ “ πηγὴν ἀναβαίνειν καὶ ποτίζειν πᾶν τὸ πρό-
- 182 σωπον τῆς γῆς ” τοιοῦτον εἶναι· τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν ἡμῶν εἰκὸς πηγῇ δυνάμεις πολλὰς οἶα διὰ γῆς φλεβῶν ἀνομβροῦν, τὰς δυνάμεις ταύτας ἄχρι τῶν αἰσθήσεων [ὀργάνων],<sup>1</sup> ὀφθαλμῶν, ὤτων, ῥινῶν, τῶν ἄλλων, ἀποστέλλει· αἱ δ' εἰσὶ παντὸς ζώου περὶ κεφαλὴν καὶ πρόσωπον. ποτίζεται οὖν ὡσπερ ἀπὸ πηγῆς τοῦ κατὰ ψυχὴν ἡγεμονικοῦ τὸ σῶματος ἡγεμονικὸν πρόσωπον, τὸ μὲν ὄρατικὸν πνεῦμα τείνοντος εἰς ὄμματα, τὸ δὲ ἀκουστικὸν εἰς οὖς, εἰς δὲ μυκτῆρας τὸ ὀσφρήσεως, τὸ δ' αὖ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τῶν αἰσθήσεως ὀργάνων: I retain Wendland's text with grave doubt. He bases his correction on the feminine ai. But I see no great difficulty in referring this to the “faculties” which if they spring from the mind exhibit themselves in the face. The phrase αἰσθήσεως ὄργανα as applied to the eyes, etc., is quite common, e.g. De Som. i. 55, and indeed is more correct than αἰσθήσεις.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 179-182

loves to conceal its meaning compare the spring mentioned with the River of Egypt, which rises in flood yearly and turns the plain into a lake, seeming to exhibit a power well-nigh rivalling the sky. For 180 what the sky is in winter to other countries, this the Nile is to Egypt in the height of summer : the one sends the rain from above upon the earth, the other, strange to say, rains up from below and waters the fields. This afforded Moses ground<sup>a</sup> for branding the Egyptian character as atheistical in its preference for earth above heaven, for the things that live on the ground above those that dwell on high, and the body above the soul.

However, it will 181 be possible to speak of this hereafter, when opportunity permits. At present the need for aiming at brevity compels me to take up the interpretation of the passage allegorically, and to say that "a spring going up and watering all the face of the earth" has the meaning I am about to give. Our dominant 182 faculty resembles a spring : and from it like the spring water through the veins of the earth well up many powers which it sends forth till they reach the senses, eyes, ears, nostrils, and so on. Every animal has those in its head and face. Thus the dominant faculty in the soul waters, as from a spring, the face, which is the dominant part of the body, extending to the eyes the spirit<sup>b</sup> of vision, that of hearing to the ears, to the nostrils that of smelling, <sup>a</sup> Literally "starting from which," i.e. this is the original cause of the facts which led Moses to brand, etc. Cf. De Mos. ii. 193 ff., where the blasphemy of the son of an Egyptian father (Lev. xxiv. 10-15) is ascribed to the atheism of Egypt and this to their deification of a mere river.

<sup>b</sup> Or "current."

PHILO

γεύσεως εἰς στόμα καὶ τὸ ἀφῆς εἰς σύμπασαν τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν.

- 183 XXXIII. Εἰσὶ δὲ καὶ τῆς παιδείας πολύτροποι πηγαί, αἷς ὀρθοὶ καὶ τροφιμώτατοι λόγοι, καθάπερ στελέχη φοινίκων, παρανέβλαστον. “ἦλθον” γάρ φησιν “εἰς Αἰλίμ, καὶ ἐν Αἰλίμ ἦσαν δώδεκα πηγαὶ ὑδάτων καὶ ἑβδομήκοντα στελέχη φοινίκων· παρενέβαλον δὲ ἐκεῖ παρὰ τὰ ὕδατα.” Αἰλίμ πυλῶνες ἐρμηνεύονται, εἰσόδου τῆς πρὸς ἀρετὴν σύμβολον· ὥσπερ γὰρ οἰκίας ἀρχαὶ πυλῶνες, καὶ ἀρετῆς τὰ ἐγκύκλια προπαιδεύματα.
- 184 τέλειος δ’ ἀριθμὸς ὁ δώδεκα, μάρτυς δ’ ὁ ζωδιακὸς ἐν οὐρανῷ κύκλος, τοσοῦτοις κατηστερισμένος φωσφόροις ἄστροις· μάρτυς καὶ ἡ ἡλίου περίοδος· μῆσὶ γὰρ δώδεκα τὸν ἑαυτοῦ περατοῦ κύκλον, ἰσαριθμοὺς τε τοῖς ἐνιαυτοῦ μῆσὶ τὰς ἡμέρας καὶ
- 185 νυκτὸς ὥρας ἄγουσιν ἄνθρωποι. Μωυσῆς δ’ οὐκ ἐν ὀλίγοις ὑμνεῖ τὸν ἀριθμὸν, δώδεκα φυλάς τοῦ ἔθνους ἀναγράφων, ἄρτους δώδεκα τῆς προθέσεως νομοθετῶν, λίθους, ἐν οἷς αἱ γλυφαί, δώδεκα τῇ ἱερᾷ ἐσθῆτι τοῦ ποδήρου ἐνδύματος ἐπὶ τῷ λογίῳ
- 186 συνυφαίνειν | κελεύων. ὑμνεῖ μέντοι
- [574] καὶ τὴν δεκάδι πολυπλασιαζομένην ἑβδομάδα, νυνὶ μὲν ἑβδομήκοντα φοίνικας παρὰ ταῖς πηγαῖς εἶναι λέγων, ἐν ἑτέροις δὲ πρεσβυτέρους μόνους ἑβδομήκοντα, οἷς τὸ θεῖον ἐπενεμήθη καὶ προφητικὸν πνεῦμα, καὶ πάλιν ἱερεῖα μόσχων ἑβδομήκοντα ἐν διαιρέσεσι καὶ τάξεσιν ἑναρμονίους ἑορτῇ τῶν σκηνῶν προσαγομένων· βουθυτοῦνται γὰρ οὐκ ἀθρόοι, ἀλλ’ ἐν ἡμέραις ἑπτὰ, τῆς ἀρχῆς ἀπὸ τρισκαίδεκα ταύρων γενομένης· οὕτως γὰρ κατὰ

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 182-186

that of tasting to the mouth, and that of touch to the whole surface.

XXXIII. There are also a variety of springs of 183 education, by the side of which there grow up, like stems of palm-trees, upright forms of reason rich in nourishing food. For we read that "they came to Elim, and in Elim there were twelve springs of water, and seventy stems of palm-trees; and they encamped there by the waters" (Exod. xv. 27).
"Elim" means "gateways," a figure of the entrance to virtue; for just as gateways are the beginnings of a house, so are the preliminary exercises of the schools the beginning of virtue. And 184 twelve is a perfect number. The zodiac circle in the sky is a witness to this, being adorned with that number of luminous constellations: a further instance is the sun's circuit, for it completes its round in twelve months, and men keep the hours of day and night equal in number to the months of the year.

And Moses celebrates this number in several places, 185 telling us of twelve tribes in the nation, directing twelve loaves to be set forth on the Table, bidding them weave twelve inscribed stones on the "oracle" in the holy vestment of the high priest's full-length robe (Ex. xxviii. 17 ff.).

He also pro- 186
claims the ten-fold seven, telling in this passage of seventy palm-trees by the springs, and in another of the Divine Spirit of prophecy bestowed on only seventy elders (Num. xi. 16), and again of seventy calves offered as victims at the Feast of Tabernacles arranged in divisions following a regular series: for they are not all sacrificed at once, but on different days, beginning with thirteen bull-calves (Num. xxix. 13 ff.); for in this way, the number being

PHILO

- τὴν ἐνὸς ὑφαίρεσιν αἰεὶ μέχρι τῆς ἐβδόμης ἔμελλεν ὁ τῶν ἐβδομήκοντα συντεθεῖς ἀριθμὸς ἐκπληροῦσθαι.
- 187 παραγενόμενοι δὲ εἰς τοὺς θυρώνας ἀρετῆς, τὰ προπαιδεύματα, καὶ θεασάμενοι πηγὰς καὶ παρ' αὐταῖς ἔρηγ φοινίκων στρατοπεδεύειν οὐ παρὰ τοῖς φυτοῖς ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοῖς ὕδασι λέγονται. διὰ τί; ὅτι φοινίκι μὲν καὶ ταινίαις οἱ παντελοῦς ἀρετῆς ἐπιφερόμενοι τὰ ἄθλα κοσμοῦνται, οἱ δὲ ἔτι (ἐγ)χορευόντες τοῖς προπαιδεύμασιν ἄτε μαθήσεως διψῶντες παρὰ ταῖς δυναμέναις ἄρδειν καὶ ποτίζειν τὰς ψυχὰς αὐτῶν ἐπιστήμασι ἰδρύνονται.
- 188 XXXIV. Τοιαῦται μὲν εἰσιν αἱ παιδείας τῆς μέσης πηγαί, τὴν δ' ἀφροσύνης ἐπισκεψώμεθα, περὶ ἧς λελάληκεν ὁ νομοθέτης ὧδε· “ὅς ἂν κοιμηθῆ μετὰ γυναικὸς ἀποκαθημένης, τὴν πηγὴν αὐτῆς ἀπεκάλυψε, καὶ αὕτη ἀπεκάλυψε τὴν ῥύσιν τοῦ αἵματος αὐτῆς· ἐξολοθρευθήτωσαν ἀμφοτέροι”· γυναιῖκα τὴν αἴσθησιν καλεῖ, νοῦν<sup>1</sup> ἄνδρα αὐτῆς
- 189 ὑποτιθέμενος. ἀποκάθεται δὲ αἴσθησις, ὅπερ ἐστὶν ἀπωτάτω καθέζεται, ὅταν νοῦν ἀπολιποῦσα, τὸν γνήσιον ἄνδρα, ἐφιδρύνεται, τοῖς δελεάζουσι καὶ φθείρουσιν αἰσθητοῖς καὶ ἐρωτικῶς ἐκάστοις ἐμπλέκηται· τότε οὖν εἰ πρὸς ὕπνον τράποιτο ὁ νοῦς, ἐγρηγορέναι δέον, “τὴν πηγὴν” τῆς αἰσθήσεως “ἀπεκάλυψεν” αὐτὸν—αὐτὸς γὰρ ἦν, ὡσπερ ἔφην, ἡ αἰσθήσεως πηγὴ,—τοῦτο δὲ ἐστὶν ἄστεγον καὶ ἀτείχιστον καὶ εὐεπιβούλευτον κατεσκευάσεν
- 190 ἑαυτόν. οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ κακείνη “ἀπεκάλυψε τὴν ῥύσιν τοῦ αἵματος αὐτῆς”· ῥέουσα γὰρ πᾶσα αἴσθησις πρὸς τὸ ἐκτὸς αἰσθητὸν ἐπικαλύπτεται μὲν καὶ στέλλεται διακρατουμένη λογισμῶ, κατα-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὖν.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 186-190

diminished by one every day up to the seventh, the aggregate of seventy would be made up.

When they have arrived at the vestibules of virtue, 187 the subjects of preliminary instruction, and have beheld springs and palms growing by them, they are said to encamp, not by the trees but by the waters. Why is this? Because palm and fillets are the adornment of those who carry off the prizes of consummate virtue, but those whose sphere is still that of the preliminary studies, athirst as they are for learning, settle down beside the springs of knowledge which are able to water their souls and give them drink.

XXXIV. Such are the springs of the lower educa- 188 tion. Let us now consider the spring of folly, respecting which the Lawgiver has spoken in these terms: "Whosoever shall have slept with a woman in her separation hath unclosed her spring, and she hath unclosed the flow of her blood; let them both be put to death" (Lev. xx. 18): he gives to sense-perception the name woman, suggesting Mind as her husband. Sense-perception is "in separation," 189 which is "sitting a long way off," when, having forsaken Mind, her lawful husband, she plants herself on the objects of sense that ensnare and corrupt, and passionately embraces them one after another. At such a time, then, if Mind go to sleep, when he ought to be awake, "he has unclosed the spring" of sense-perception, himself to wit—for, as I have already said, he himself is the spring of sense-perception—that is, he has exposed himself, without covering or wall of defence, to the plots of his enemies. More- 190 over she too "unclosed the flow of her blood"; for every sense, in its flow towards the external object of sense, is covered over and drawn in when con-

PHILO

- λείπεται δὲ ἔρημος χηρεύσασα ἡγεμόνος ὀρθοῦ<sup>1</sup>.
 κακὸν δὲ βαρύντατον ὡς πόλει τὸ ἀτείχιστον, καὶ 191 ψυχῇ τὸ ἀφύλακτον. πότε ὄν ἀφύλακτος γίνεται; ἢ ὅταν ἄστεγος μὲν ὄρασις κεχυμένη πρὸς τὰ ὄρατά, ἄστεγος δὲ ἀκοή φωναῖς ἀπάσαις ἐπαντλουμένη, ἄστεγοι δὲ ὄσμαι καὶ αἱ συγγενεῖς δυνάμεις καταλειφθῶσι,<sup>2</sup> πρὸς ὃ τι ἂν οἱ κατατρέχοντες βούλωνται διαθεῖναι παθεῖν ἐτοιμότητα, ἄστεγος δὲ καὶ ὁ προφορικὸς λόγος, ὃς μυρία τῶν ἀπορρήτων, ἅτε [575] μηδενὸς τὴν | φορὰν ἀνωθοῦντος, ἀκαιρῶς ἐξ-ελάλησε; ῥυεῖς<sup>3</sup> γοῦν ἀκωλύτως μεγάλας βίων ὑπο-θέσεις ὀρθὰς οἶα ἐν γαλήνῃ πλεούσας περιέτρεψεν.
 192 οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ μέγας κατακλισμός, ἐν ᾧ “ ἀνεώχθησαν μὲν οἱ καταρράκται τοῦ οὐρανοῦ,” λέγω δὲ τοῦ νοῦ, “ ἀπεκαλύφθησαν δὲ αἱ πηγαὶ τῆς ἀβύσσου,” τουτέστι τῆς αἰσθήσεως. μόνως γὰρ οὕτως ἡ ψυχὴ κατακλύζεται, ἄνωθεν μὲν ὥσπερ ἀπ’ οὐρανοῦ τοῦ νοῦ καταρραγέντων ἀδικημάτων, κάτωθεν δὲ ὥσπερ ἀπὸ γῆς τῆς αἰσθήσεως ἀνομι-193 βρησάντων παθῶν. οὗ χάριν ἀπαγορεύει Μωυσῆς “ ἀσχημοσύνην πατρὸς καὶ μητρὸς ἀποκαλύπτειν,” εἰδὼς σαφῶς, ἡλίκον ἐστὶ κακὸν τὰ ἀμαρτήματα τοῦ νοῦ καὶ τῆς αἰσθήσεως μὴ ἐπέχειν καὶ ἐπι-κρύπτειν, ἀλλ’ ὥσπερ κατορθώματα προφέρειν εἰς μέσον.
 194 XXXV. Αἰδ’ εἰσὶν αἱ τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων πηγαί, τὴν δὲ φρονήσεως ἐρευνητέον. εἰς ταύτην ἢ ὑπο-μονὴν κάτεισι, Ῥεβέκκα, καὶ τὸ ψυχῆς ὄλον πληρῶ-

<sup>1</sup> Has λόγου fallen out? ὀρθοῦ ἡγεμόνος seems strange.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. καταλείψωσι (-ουσι or -ουσαι).

<sup>3</sup> Possibly we should read ῥυεῖσι. See App. p. 585.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 190-194

trolled by reason, but is left destitute when widowed of an upright ruler, and as it is the most grievous evil for a city to be without walls, so is it for a soul to be without a protector. When, then, is it without a protector? Is it not when sight, spread abroad amid objects of sight, is left uncovered; uncovered too the hearing, flooded by every kind of sound; uncovered the powers of smell and others of like kin, full ready for any experience to which marauding foes may wish to subject them; uncovered again the faculty of speech, giving ill-timed utterance to a thousand things that should have been kept quiet, since there is no one to force back the current? In its unhindered flow it has wrecked great life-projects, which were like ships in fair weather sailing on even keel.

This is the great deluge in which "the cataracts of heaven," that is of the mind, "were opened," "and the fountains of the abyss," that is of sense-perception, "were unclosed" (Gen. vii. 11).<sup>a</sup> For only in this way is a deluge brought upon the soul, when as though from heaven, that is the mind, wrongdoings burst upon it as in a cataract; and from sense-perception below, as it were from the earth, passions come welling up. That is why Moses prohibits the "disclosing of the shame of father and mother" (Lev. xviii. 7), well knowing how great an evil it is not to keep back and conceal the sins of the mind and of sense-perception, but to make them public as though they were achievements of righteousness.

XXXV. Such are the springs of sinful deeds: let us investigate that of sound sense. To this Patience, called Rebecca, goes down, and, when she has filled <sup>a</sup> See De Conf. 23 and note.

PHILO

- σασα ἀγγεῖον ἀναβαίνει, τὴν κάθοδον ἀνοδον εἰπόντος τοῦ νομοθέτου φυσικώτατα· πρὸς γὰρ ὕψος ἐξαιρείται τὸ ἀρετῆς, ἣτις ἂν ἀπ' ἀλαζονείας 195 τῆς ὑπεραύχου διανοῆται κατέρχεσθαι. λέγει γάρ· “καταβᾶσα δὲ ἐπὶ τὴν πηγὴν ἐπλησε τὴν ὑδρίαν, καὶ ἀνέβη.” ἥδ' ἐστὶν ἡ θεία σοφία, ἐξ ἧς αἱ τε κατὰ μέρος ἐπιστῆμαι ποτίζονται καὶ ὅσαι ψυχαὶ φιλοθεάμονες ἔρωτι τοῦ ἀρίστου κατέσχηνται.
- 196 ταύτῃ ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος τῇ πηγῇ προσφυστάτα ὀνόματα τίθεται, “κρίσιν” αὐτὴν καὶ “ἀγίαν” προσαγορεύων. “ἀναστρέψαντες” γὰρ φησὶν “ἦλθον ἐπὶ τὴν πηγὴν τῆς κρίσεως, αὕτη ἐστὶ Κάδης”· καλεῖται δὲ Κάδης ἀγία. μονοноῦ βοᾷ καὶ κέκραγεν, ὅτι ἡ τοῦ θεοῦ σοφία ἀγία τέ ἐστιν οὐδὲν ἐπιφερομένη γήινον καὶ κρίσις τῶν ὅλων, ἣ πᾶσαι αἱ ἐναντιότητες διαζεύγνυνται.
- 197 XXXVI. Λεκτέον δ' ἤδη περὶ τῆς ἀνωτάτω καὶ ἀρίστης πηγῆς, ἣν ὁ πατὴρ τῶν ὅλων διὰ προφη-τικῶν ἐθέσπισε στομάτων. εἶπε γάρ που· “ἐμὲ ἐγκατέλιπον πηγὴν ζωῆς, καὶ ὤρυξαν ἑαυτοῖς λάκκους συντετριμμένους, οἱ οὐ δυνήσονται συσχεῖν 198 ὕδωρ.” οὐκοῦν ὁ θεὸς ἐστὶν ἡ πρεσβυτάτη (πηγὴ), καὶ μήποτ' εἰκότως· τὸν γὰρ σύμπαντα τοῦτον κόσμον ὤμβρησε. καταπέπληγμαι δ' ἀκούων, ὅτι ζωῆς ἐστὶν ἡδε ἡ πηγὴ· μόνος γὰρ ὁ θεὸς ψυχῆς καὶ ζωῆς καὶ διαφερόντως λογικῆς ψυχῆς καὶ τῆς μετὰ φρονήσεως ζωῆς αἴτιος. ἡ μὲν γὰρ ὕλη νεκρόν, ὁ δὲ θεὸς πλέον τι ἢ ζωὴ, πηγὴ τοῦ ζῆν, 199 ὡς αὐτὸς εἶπεν, ἀένναος. οἱ δ' ἀσεβεῖς

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Post. 136.

<sup>c</sup> Or “sifting.”

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 194-199

the whole vessel of the soul, goes up ; for the law-giver speaks of the descent as an ascent with perfect truth to the nature of things, for a soul that resolves to come down from over-weening imposture is exalted thereby to virtue's height.<sup>a</sup> For it says: " And having 195 gone down to the spring she filled the water-pot, and came up " (Gen. xxiv. 16). This spring is the Divine Wisdom, from which both the several fields of knowledge are watered, and all contemplation-loving souls which are possessed by a love of that which is best. To this spring the sacred message applies most 196 appropriate names, calling it " judgement " <sup>b</sup> and " holy." For it says : " They returned and came to the Spring of Judgement ; this is Kadesh " (Gen. xiv. 7) ; and " Kadesh " means " holy." One might think that it cries aloud that the wisdom of God is both holy, containing no earthy ingredient, and a sifting of all the universe, whereby all opposites are separated from each other.<sup>c</sup>

XXXVI. And now we have to speak of the supreme 197 and most excellent Spring, which the All-Father declared by the mouth of prophets. For He said in a certain place : " Me they forsook, a spring of Life, and dug for themselves broken cisterns, which shall fail to hold water " (Jer. ii. 13). God, therefore, is the 198 chiefest spring, and well may He be so called, for this whole universe is a rain that fell from Him. But I bow in awe when I hear that this spring is one of Life: for God alone is the Cause of soul and life, and pre-eminently of the rational soul, and of the Life that is united with wisdom. For matter is a dead thing, but God is something more than Life, an ever-flowing Spring of living, as He Himself says. But 199 <sup>a</sup> Cf. Quis rerum 133 f. and 207 f.

PHILO

ἀποδράντες, ἄγευστοι τοῦ τῆς ἀθανασίας ποτοῦ διατελέσαντες, ὠρυξαν, οἱ φρενοβλαβεῖς, ἑαυτοῖς
 ἀλλ' οὐ θεῶ τὸ πρῶτον, τὰς ἰδίας πράξεις τῶν |
 [576] οὐρανίων καὶ ὀλυμπίων προκρίναντες καὶ τὰ ἐκ 200 φροντίδος τῶν αὐτομάτων καὶ ἐτοιμῶν. ἔπειτα ὀρύττουσιν οὐχ ὡς Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Ἰσαάκ, οἱ σοφοί, φρέατα, βαθείας ἐπιστήμας ποτίμους λόγους ἀναδιδούσας, ἀλλὰ λάκκους, ἴδιον οὐδὲν ἐξ ἑαυτῶν ἔχοντας τρόφιμον καλόν, τῆς δ' ἕξωθεν χρήζοντας ἐπιρροῆς, ἣ γένοιτ' ἂν ἐκ διδασκαλίας ἐπαντλούντων αἰετῶν ὑψηλῶν ἀκοαῖς τῶν μανθανόντων ἀθρόα τὰ ἐπιστήμης δόγματα καὶ θεωρήματα, καὶ φρενὶ κατασχεῖν καὶ μνήμη τὰ παραδοθέντα ταμι-201 εὔεσθαι.<sup>1</sup> νυνὶ δ' εἰσὶν "οἱ λάκκοι συντετριμμένοι," τουτέστι πᾶσαι τῆς ἀναγωγῆς ψυχῆς αἱ δεξαμεναὶ τεθραυσμέναι καὶ διαρρέουσαι, μὴ δυνάμεναι συ-σχεῖν καὶ φυλάξαι τὴν τῶν οἴων τε ὠφελεῖν ἐπιρροήν.

202 XXXVII. "Ἄ μὲν οὖν περὶ πηγῶν καιρὸς ἦν εἰπεῖν λέλεκται. πάνυ δ' ἐξήτασμένως τὴν Ἄγαρ εἰσάγουσιν οἱ χρησιμοὶ εὐρισκομένην μὲν ἐπὶ τῆς πηγῆς, οὐκ ἀρυτομένην δ' ἀπ' αὐτῆς. οὐπω γάρ ἔστιν ἰκανὴ ψυχὴ προκόπτουσα τῷ σοφίας ἀκράτῳ ποτῷ χρῆσθαι, πλησίον δ' οὐ κεκῶλνται ποιεῖσθαι 203 τὰς διατριβάς. ἔστι δὲ καὶ λεωφόρος πᾶσα ἣ κατὰ παιδείαν ὁδὸς ἐχρωτάτη καὶ εὐ-ερκεστάτη. διὸ φησὶν "ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ Σούρ" αὐτὴν εὐρεθῆναι, τείχος δὲ ἧ εὐθυσμὸς ἐρμηνεύεται Σούρ.

<sup>1</sup> Something is wrong with this sentence. The translation follows Cohn's suggestion to insert ὡς after θεωρήματα (Mangey κελυόντων, Wend. παραινούτων with much the same effect). None of these seems to me satisfactory. See App. p. 585.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 199-203

the impious flee from Him, persist in leaving untasted the water of immortality, and dig in their madness for themselves but not for God, putting their own works above the celestial gifts of heaven, and the results of forethought above those which come spontaneously and ready for their use. That is their first 200 folly. In the next place they dig, not as did the wise, Abraham and Isaac, wells (Gen. xxi. 30, xxvi. 18), deep sources of knowledge from which draughts of reason are drawn, but cisterns, having no excellent thing of their own to afford nourishment, but needing the inflow from without, that must come from teaching, as the instructors keep on pumping in unbroken stream into the ears of their pupils the principles and conclusions which constitute knowledge, that they may both grasp what is imparted to them with their intelligence and treasure it in their memory. As it is 201 the "cisterns" are "broken," that is to say, all the receptacles of the ill-conditioned soul are crushed and leaking, unable to hold in and keep the inflow of what might do them good.

XXXVII. On the subject of springs all that the 202 occasion required has now been said. But it is with a most carefully considered meaning that Hagar is represented by the sacred oracles as found by the spring but not drawing water from it (Gen. xvi. 7). For a soul, while making gradual progress, is not yet capable of availing itself of Wisdom's untempered draught, but such a soul is not prevented from staying hard by her. Now the road of discipline 203 is all a highway, thoroughly safe and well guarded. Wherefore it says that she was found in the way to Shur<sup>a</sup> (ibid.), and "Shur" means "wall" or "straighten-

<sup>a</sup> Or "the way (called) Shur."

- ἐνλαλῶν οὖν ὁ ἔλεγχος τῇ ψυχῇ φησιν αὐτῇ· “πόθεν ἔρχη, καὶ ποῦ πορεύη;” τοῦτο δ’ οὐκ ἐνδοιάζων καὶ οὐ πυνθανόμενος μᾶλλον ἢ δυσωπῶν καὶ ὀνειδίζων προφέρεται· θέμις γὰρ οὐδὲν ἀγνοεῖν 204 τῶν καθ’ ἡμᾶς ἀγγέλῳ. σημεῖον δέ· καὶ τὰ κατὰ γαστρός, ἅπερ ἄδηλα γενέσει, σαφῶς οἶδεν ἐν οἷς φησιν· “ἰδοὺ σὺ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχεις, καὶ τέξῃ παιδίον, καὶ καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰσμαήλ.” τὸ γὰρ γνῶναι, ὅτι τὸ κυφορούμενον ἄρρεν ἐστίν, οὐκ ἀνθρωπίνης δυνάμεως, ἀλλ’ οὐδὲ τὸ τὴν προαίρεσιν ἢ χρήσεται τοῦ βίου ὁ μήπω γεγεννημένος, ὅτι 205 ἀγροῖκος, ἀλλ’ οὐ πολιτικὴ καὶ ἡμερος.<sup>1</sup> τὸ “πόθεν οὖν ἔρχη;” πρὸς ἐπίπληξιν<sup>2</sup> λέγεται τῆς ἀποδιδρασκούσης ψυχῆς τὴν ἀμείνω καὶ κυρίαν γνώμην, ἧς θεραπείς οὐ λεγομένη μᾶλλον ἢ ἔργοις ὑπάρχουσα μέγα κλέος ἔμελλεν [ἐξ]οῖσθαι.
 “ποῖ δὲ καὶ πορεύη;” τὰ ἄδηλα μετατρέχεις, τὰ 206 ὁμολογούμενα ἀπορρίψασα. καλὸν οὖν αὐτὴν ἐπαινεῖσαι χαίρουσαν ἐπὶ νουθεσίᾳ<sup>3</sup>. δείγματα δὲ τοῦ χαίρειν ἐξενήνοχε τό τε μὴ κατηγορῆσαι τῆς δεσποίνης καὶ τὸ τὴν αἰτίαν ἀναθεῖναι ἑαυτῇ τοῦ δρασμοῦ καὶ τὸ μὴ ἀποκρίνασθαι πρὸς τὸ δεύ-τερον πύσμα τὸ “ποῦ πορεύη;” ἄδηλον γάρ, περὶ [577] δὲ τῶν ἀδῆλων ἐπέχειν | ἀσφαλές τε καὶ ἀναγκαῖον.
 207 XXXVIII. ἀποδεξάμενος οὖν τῆς πειθαρχίας αὐτὴν ὁ ἔλεγχος “ἀποστραφηθὶ πρὸς τὴν κυρίαν σου” φησί· λυσιτελές γὰρ τῇ μανθανούσῃ ἢ τῆς διδασκούσης ἐπιστασία καὶ τῇ ἀτελεῖ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγροικον . . . πολιτικὸν . . . ἡμερον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπιπλήξεως.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. νουθεσίαν.

<sup>a</sup> It is difficult to give any sense to οὖν. Perhaps read γοῦν (transitional).

ing." The inward monitor, then, speaking within the soul, says to it, "Whence comest thou, and whither art thou going?" (ibid. 8). In thus addressing her he does not express doubt or inquiry; rather he is reproaching and putting her to shame; for we may not think that an angel is ignorant of anything affecting us. Here is a proof of it: even the secrets of the 204 womb, which are hidden from created beings, the angel knows with certainty, as his words shew: "Lo, thou art with child, and shalt give birth to a boy, and shalt call his name Ishmael" (ibid. 11). For it is not in the power of man to know that the embryo is a male, nor to know the principle that is to govern the life of one who is not yet born, that it will be the way of the rude country-side, not the refined one of civic life. So the words "Whence comest thou?" 205 are spoken to rebuke the soul that is running away from the better judgement, "the mistress," a mistress whom to serve as handmaiden could not but win her high renown, if the service be one of deeds rather than of name. And the words "Whither goest thou?" mean "Thou hast cast away acknowledged gains, and art running after uncertainties."

We may well praise her for receiving reproof with 206 gladness.<sup>a</sup> Of her gladness she has given plain evidence by not accusing her mistress, and by laying the blame of her flight upon herself, and by making no answer to the second question "Whither art thou going?" for it was uncertain, and regarding uncertainties suspension of judgement is not only safe but requisite.

XXXVIII. Her monitor, then, 207 pleased with her for her compliance, bids her "Go back to thy mistress"; for the teacher's authority is an advantage to the learner, and bond-service

PHILO

- ἢ παρὰ φρονήσει δουλεία. ὅταν δ' ὑποστρέψῃς,
 "ταπεινώθητι ὑπὸ τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῆς" καλὴν ταπεινώσειν φρονήματος ἀλόγου καθαίρεισιν περι-208 ἔχουσαν. οὕτως γὰρ πρᾶυτόκοις ὠδίσι ἀρρενα γενεὰν ἀποκνήσεις, ὄνομα Ἰσμαήλ, ἀκοαῖς θείαις σωφρονισθεῖσα· ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ Ἰσμαήλ ἀκοή θεοῦ. ἀκοή δ' ὀράσεως τὰ δευτερεῖα φέρεται, ὄρασιν δὲ ὁ γνήσιος υἱὸς καὶ πρωτόγονος Ἰσραὴλ κεκλήρωται· μεταληφθεὶς γάρ ἐστιν ὀρῶν θεόν.
 ἀκούειν μὲν γὰρ καὶ ψευδῶν ὡς ἀληθῶν ἔνεστιν, ὅτι ἀπατηλὸν ἀκοή, ἀψευδὲς δ' ὄρασις, ἣ τὰ ὄντα ὄντως κατανοεῖται.
- 209 Τὸν δὲ γεννηθέντα τρόπον χαρακτηρίζει διὰ τε τοῦ λέγειν ἀγροῖκον ἔσεσθαι, ὡς ἂν ἀγροϊκόσοφον, μήπω τῆς τιθασοῦ<sup>1</sup> καὶ πολιτικῆς ὄντως μοίρας ἠξιωμένον—αὕτη δὲ ἐστὶν ἀρετή, δι' ἧς πέφυκεν ἡμεροῦσθαι τὸ ἦθος,— καὶ διὰ τοῦ φάσκεν· "αἱ χεῖρες αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ πάντας καὶ αἱ χεῖρες πάντων ἐπ' αὐτόν"· σοφιστοῦ γὰρ βούλημα τοῦτο τὸ λίαν σκεπτικὸν ἐπιμορφάζοντος καὶ λόγοις 210 χαίροντος ἐριστικοῖς. οὗτος καὶ πάντας βάλλει τοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν μαθημάτων, ἰδίᾳ τε ἐκάστῳ καὶ κοινῇ πᾶσιν ἐναντιούμενος, καὶ βάλλεται πρὸς ἀπάντων, εἰκότως ἀμυνομένων ὡς ὑπὲρ οἰκείων ἐκγόνων ὧν ἔτεκεν αὐτῶν ἢ ψυχὴ δογμάτων.
- 211 ἀλλὰ καὶ τρίτον προσυπογράφει χαρα-κτῆρα φάσκων· "κατὰ πρόσωπον πάντων τῶν ἀδελφῶν κατοικήσει," μονονοῦκ ἄντικρυς ἐπιδεικνύμενος τὴν ἀντιπρόσωπον διαμάχην καὶ ἀντίστασιν αἰώνιον.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. θείας ἢ θιάσσον.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 207-211

under Good Sense a gain to her that is imperfect. "And when thou hast returned humble thyself under her hands" (ibid. 9), with a noble humiliation which carries with it the overthrow of irrational high-mindedness. For so doing thou shalt give birth with 208 easy travail to a male offspring, Ishmael by name (ibid. 11), since thou shalt have been chastened by hearkening to words of God; for "Ishmael" means "hearkening to God." Hearing takes the second place, yielding the first to sight, and sight is the portion of Israel, the son free-born and first-born; for "seeing God" is the translation of "Israel." It is possible to hear the false and take it for true, because hearing is deceptive, but sight, by which we discern what really is, is devoid of falseness.

The character thus given birth to is described first 209 by the statement that it will be rude, of rude "mother wit" as it were, not yet admitted to the privilege of the refined and truly civilized lot, virtue, that is, the natural refiner and tamer of character; next by the words "his hands shall be against all men, and all men's hands against him" (ibid. 12); for this is just the Sophist's way, with his pretence of excessive open-mindedness, and his love of arguing for arguing's sake. This character aims its shafts at 210 all representatives of the sciences, opposing each individually and all in common, and is the target of them all since they naturally shew fight, as in defence of offspring of their own, that is of the doctrines to which their soul has given birth. And he 211 adds a third characteristic in the words "he shall dwell face to face with all his brethren" (ibid.), words which are almost a distinct picture of combat face to face and perpetual opposition.

PHILO

Ἡ κυφοροῦσα οὖν τὸν σοφιστὴν λόγον ψυχὴ φησι τῷ λαλοῦντι πρὸς αὐτὴν ἐλέγχω· “ σὺ θεὸς ὁ ἐπιδὼν με,” ἴσον τῷ σὺ ποιητῆς εἰ τῶν ἐμῶν βουλευμάτων καὶ ἐκγόνων,<sup>1</sup> καὶ μήποτ’ εἰκότως·

212 ἐλευθέρων μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἀστῶν ὡς ἀληθῶς ψυχῶν ὁ ἐλεύθερος καὶ ἐλευθεροποιὸς δημιουργός, δούλων δὲ δούλοι· ἄγγελοι δ’ οἰκέται θεοῦ, νομιζόμενοι πρὸς τῶν ἔτ’ ἐν πόνοις καὶ δουλείαις ὑπαρχόντων θεοί.

213 τὸ φρέαρ φρέαρ οὐ ἐνώπιον εἶδον.” ἀλλ’ οὐκ ἔμελλες, ὦ ψυχὴ προκόπτουσα καὶ τῇ τῶν ἐγκυκλίων ἐπιστήμη προπαιδευμάτων ἐμβαθύνουσα, καθάπερ διὰ κατόπτρου τῆς παιδείας τὸν αἴτιον τῆς ἐπιστήμης ἰδεῖν; οἰκειότατος δὲ καὶ ὁ τοῦ τοιοῦτου φρέατος τόπος “ ἐν μέσῳ Κάδης καὶ Βαράδ ”· ἐρμηνεύεται δὲ Βαράδ μὲν ἐν κακοῖς, Κάδης δὲ ἀγία· μεθόριος γὰρ ἀγίων καὶ βεβήλων ὁ ἐν προκοπαῖς, ἀποδιδράσκων μὲν τὰ φαῦλα, μήπω δ’ ἱκανὸς ὢν τελείοις συμβιοῦν ἀγαθοῖς.

<sup>1</sup> The combination is somewhat strange, and Mangey suggested ἔργων for ἐκγόνων. I should conjecture as an alternative κνημάτων for βουλευμάτων.

<sup>a</sup> The connexion of thought is obscure. Perhaps: the angel has decreed what the offspring of the Hagar or slave-soul will be. He is therefore its maker, and as making is the attribute of God, she naturally gives that name to God's subordinate minister.

ON FLIGHT AND FINDING, 211-213

The soul, then, which is pregnant with the sophist-principle says to the monitor who is talking to her : "Thou art God that didst look upon me," which is equivalent to saying "Thou art the Maker of my wishes and offspring"; and well may she say this, 212 for of free and really high-born souls He who is free and sets free is the Creator, while slaves are makers of slaves : and angels are God's household-servants, and are deemed gods by those whose existence is still one of toil and bondage.<sup>a</sup> "For this reason," it says, "she called the well 'Well where I saw Him before me'"<sup>b</sup> (ibid. 14). Nay, how couldst 213 thou fail, thou soul, who in thy progress art dipping deep into the school-lore knowledge, to see reflected in thy training as in a mirror the Author of that knowledge?

Most appropriate too is the situation of such a well "between Kadesh and Bered" (ibid. 14) : "Bered" means "in evils," and Kadesh "holy," for he that is in gradual progress is on the borderland between the holy and the profane, fleeing from bad things, but not yet competent to share the life of perfect goodness.

<sup>b</sup> E.V. Beer-lahai-roi, explained in the margin as "the well of the living one who seeth me." Whatever the exact meaning of the LXX was, the next sentence shows that Philo interpreted it as in the translation (ἐνώπιον probably taken as an adjective with αὐτόν understood).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES
(DE MUTATIONE NOMINUM)

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION

THIS treatise is an exposition of various points arising in Gen. xvii. 1-5 and 15-22.

1. Abraham became ninety-nine years old, and the Lord was seen by Abraham<sup>a</sup> and said to him, "I am thy God: be well pleasing before Me and become blameless.

2. And I will set my covenant between Me and between thee. . . ."

3. And Abraham fell upon his face and God spake to him, saying:

4. "And I, behold my covenant is with thee. . . ."

5. And thy name shall no longer be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham. . . ."

15. And God said to Abraham, "Sarai thy wife, her name shall not be called Sarai. Sarah shall be her name.

16. And I will bless her, and give thee a child from her, and I will bless her, and she shall be for nations, and kings of nations shall be from her.<sup>b</sup>"

17. And Abraham fell on his face and laughed,

<sup>a</sup> Or "Abram," as the LXX has and the course of the story requires. But the mss. quote the text with Ἀβραάμ.

<sup>b</sup> So Philo (as also the Hebrew and E.V.). LXX "I will bless him and he shall be . . . from him."

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

and he spake in his mind, saying, "Shall a son be born to one of a hundred years, and shall Sarah being ninety years bear a son?"

18. And Abraham said to God, "Let this Ishmael live before thee!"

19. And God said to Abraham, "Yes, behold Sarah thy wife shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name Isaac. . . .

20. But as for Ishmael, behold I have heard thee, and behold I have blessed him, I will increase him, I will multiply him; he shall beget twelve nations.

21. But my covenant I will establish to Isaac, whom Sarah shall bear to thee at this season in the other year."

"Abraham was ninety-nine years old, and the Lord appeared to him and said, 'I am thy God.'" After a passing remark on the significance of ninety-nine as indicating the approach to the sacred hundred (1-2) we go on to "appeared" or "was seen." Now God cannot be seen by the eye, but only by the mind (3-6), and indeed God in His essence cannot be apprehended by mind, any more than mind can apprehend itself. And so Moses was told that he could only see what was behind God, not His face (7-10). It follows that no proper name can be given to the God Who is, and when in Exodus He calls Himself the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob it must be regarded as a κατάχρησις or licence of language (11-14). We must infer then that what appeared to Abraham was not God the Existent but His sovereign potency which in Scripture is called the Lord (15-17), and yet this sovereign potency also says "I am thy God." Is not God the God of all men? we may ask. No, He is Lord to the bad, God to the earnest striver, God and Lord to the perfect (18-19). Thus He is spoken of as God to Moses, but Lord to Pharaoh and Lord God to Israel (19-23). But not only is God the good man's God, but also the good man is God's man, and we must remember that only by living up to the latter relation can we reach the former (24-26). Now while the Existent is absolute His potencies are relative. Kings, benefactors and makers must rule, benefit and make something (27-28). When God is called man's God, it implies that God has made him, but God did not make the bad at all, and those between good and bad only through His subordinates, as the "Let us make" in Genesis shews (29-31). Therefore to have God for maker in the full sense is the highest honour. Who then are those who can claim this? Philo at first seems to limit the claim to the detached and ascetic kind who have risen entirely above all that is bodily (32-33). But such, he acknowledges, are rare: a thought which he supports with the phrase, "Enoch was not found," and indeed philosophers have laid down rightly or wrongly that the wise man and wisdom do not actually exist (34-38). We must admit therefore the possibility of a more social form of goodness which can claim God for its maker, and this is indicated in the next words, "Be well pleasing before Me," which have a different meaning from "Be well pleasing to Me," for he who serves men is not only well pleasing to God but well pleasing before God (39-42). This double duty to man and God is symbolized by the two robes of the high priest and other duplicates, and the very fact that God existed before creation and only created out of His beneficence shews that we must combine supreme reverence for Him with due regard for the human nature which He has made (43-46).

PHILO

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

The next words, "And become blameless," may indicate that an abstinence from sin is a lower stage than the positive virtue which the Stoics called κατόρθωμα. But Philo does not lay stress on this, for he feels that to man subject so constantly to temptation, such abstinence is the most that can be asked (47-51), and indeed it is to the blameless that God promises to set His covenant "between Me and thee," that is, to let nothing but His grace stand between the two (51-53).

When Abraham heard the promise he fell upon his face, where "fell" indicates the acknowledgement that God stands but humanity cannot stand, and "face" means sense, speech and mind, all of which lie prostrate unless God give the power to stand (54-56). Then comes the reassurance, "And I, behold my covenant is with thee," words which to Philo's mind suggest that God is Himself the covenant, and thus some more essentially divine gift is implied than those which God covenants to give to men in general. This special gift is then explained as the bestowal of a new name, and this brings Philo to the subject which occupies the next sixty sections and has somewhat unduly supplied the traditional name of the treatise (57-59).

That the divine blessing should take the form of adding an alpha to the name Abram and subsequently of a rho to that of his wife has, Philo tells us, attracted the jeers of the profane, and he mentions the miserable end of one such scoffer (60-62).

PHILO

As a matter of fact he agrees with the criticism if taken literally, and only differs in the inference he draws. That God should add letters to names, and that this should be held a divine benefaction, is absurd (63-64), but this only points to the conclusion that a change of name stands for a change of nature. Philo repeats the explanation given several times elsewhere that Abram which means "uplifted father" stands for the Chaldean, the astrologer, while Abraham is the "elect father of sound," where father means mind, the father of sound or speech, and the whole therefore stands for the elect or wise mind. The change then is really a moral change from the study of God's works to the study of God Himself, in fact from astrology to piety, and the text may be taken as a divine instruction that studies of the former kind are of no real value (66-67). So too the change of Sarai's name to Sarah, that is from "my sovereignty" to "sovereign," indicates the superiority of generic wisdom to wisdom as shown in the individual (77-80).

From these two cases which belong to the subject of the treatise Philo proceeds to deal with others outside it. Jacob the supplanter or wrestler is naturally renamed as Israel who sees God, because the divine vision is the guerdon which awaits the athlete soul (81-82). But it is a curious fact that while Abraham after the renaming is never called Abram, the names of Jacob and Israel are constantly interchanged in the subsequent narrative. To explain this Philo goes back to the familiar antithesis of Abraham as virtue acquired by teaching and Jacob as virtue acquired by practice. Abraham the scholar who has God Himself as teacher advances to knowledge continuously. The Practiser who has only his own will to urge him has many periods of weariness when he returns to his old nature, and this is supported by the observation that Abraham gets the new name from God, Jacob from the angel (83-87). Again, Isaac has no other name, and this is appropriate to the Self-taught, who by instinct is perfect from the first, and has not, like Abraham, to learn, or Jacob, to practise (88). In Joseph we have a change of another kind. His original name means addition, and describes the superfluities which the conventional mind desires, but Pharaoh renames him Psonthophanech or "mouth which judges in answer," and thus brings out the fact that the man of wealth and prosperity is supposed by the world to be able to pronounce with wisdom on all sorts of questions (89-91). In a somewhat similar way the child who is called by his father Benjamin, "the son of days," or "sunlight," and thus represents the vainglory which seems so brilliant to the world, is recognized by the mother, that is the soul, which dies in giving birth to him, as Benoni, or the son of sorrows (92-96). And here the mention of Joseph and his mother seems to lead Philo into an irrelevant interpolation of the analogy between Reuben and Simeon on the one hand and Ephraim and Manasseh on the other. Ephraim and Manasseh shall be to me, said Jacob, as Reuben and Simeon, which Philo interprets as shewing the similarity of the gifted nature, Reuben, to memory, Ephraim, and again of Simeon, the learner, to Manasseh, recollection (97-102).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

We now return to further examples of double names. In Exodus ii. Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, appears in one place to be called Raguel.

PHILO

Jethro the "superfluous" as in other places is taken as the type of the worldling, and there follows a curiously perverted<sup>a</sup> allusion to the meeting with Moses described in Exodus xviii. in which Jethro is made to advise Moses to leave the teaching of the divine ordinances for that of human convention and unequal justice (103-104). Raguel on the other hand is the "shepherding of God," and indicates the better side of the Jethro nature, when it accepts the authority of the good shepherd, Moses. An elaborate justification of this idea follows. Jethro or Raguel is called the priest of Midian, and while Midian which means "from judgement" sometimes stands for the outcasts excluded by judgement, as it does in the story of the Midianite seduction of Israel and the vindication by Phineas (105-109), it may also stand for the rightly judging nature which is akin to the prophetic. When then we read of the seven daughters who were succoured at the well by Moses, we recognize the seven bodily faculties which after the vain attempt of the enemy to seduce them from their proper office return to their father, the mind. That father is rightly called Raguel, not Jethro, and the welcome which this father proposes in the narrative to extend to Moses indicates the same higher nature (110-120).

The next illustration is the change of Joshua's name from Hoshea, the latter, "he is saved," signifying a particular individual or concrete embodiment of a state, the former "salvation of the Lord," and thus a state or condition, which is permanent, while the individual perishes. Philo brings this into comparison with the statement about Caleb, that there was another spirit in him, inferring that though there is no change of name the man himself was wholly changed (121-125). Finally we have the example of the different titles given to Moses himself. First, the name Moses, the "receiving" or "handling," fitly given to him who receives the power of legislation; secondly, the man of God, given to him as blessing the people, and finally god to Pharaoh, this godship being especially shown in his willingness to intercede for the sinner (125-129).

<sup>a</sup> See note a on § 104.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

Here we leave the change of names and return to the exposition of the text. But the mention of Sarah's change of name in §§ 77-80 seems to have drawn Philo away from the discussion of the intervening verses 6-14 to those which describe her blessedness. Verse 16 runs, "I will give to thee a son from her" (130). The words "I will give" surely imply that the gift is the giver's own to give, and thus they assert that the Isaac, whose name means "laughter," is the spiritual Isaac, inward laughter or joy, of which God is the true parent (131). This thought of the divine parentage is illustrated by the phrase, "The Lord opened Leah's womb," and by the story of Tamar and Judah, which Philo allegorizes, though in a shorter form, as he does in De Fuga, and it is actually asserted by Sarah when she says "The Lord has made laughter (that is Isaac) for me" (132-137). But she also adds, "whoever shall hear (i.e. understand it) will rejoice with me," thus suggesting that this truth is one which the pagan mind may easily misunderstand, and therefore must be reserved for the ears of the wise, and Philo accordingly presses into his service the words of Hosea, "Thy fruit is from me, the wise will understand," bringing out the double truth that all is from God and that the wise alone understand this (138-140).

PHILO

The words "from her," ἐξ αὐτῆς, have been by some interpreted as "outside her," i.e. by divine agency, and also as the single word ἐξ αὐτῆς "immediately," but Philo himself seems to adopt the natural view that, Sarah being assumed to be Virtue or Wisdom, the phrase asserts that none but virtue can be the mother of the good (141-142). And if indeed she has been called barren it is because Virtue is barren of Evil, even as Hannah or Grace was also barren and yet was the mother of the Mystic Seven (143-144). As for "child" the singular brings out that the idea of the good is single in contrast with the many particulars, while the word itself (τέκνον) coming from τίκτω declares the reality of Virtue's motherhood (145-147). "I will bless her and she shall be for nations" tells us that in the manifold classes or nations of things in general Virtue is the one source of well-being (148-150), and in "kings of nations shall be from her" we can trace the Stoic doctrine that the sage alone is king (151-153).

Abraham hearing this falls and laughs. Philo as always refuses to entertain the idea that Abraham and Sarah's laughter is one of incredulity. His falling is, as before, an acknowledgement of unworthiness; the laughter is humble joy (154-156). At this point he raises the question that as Isaac, laughter or joy, is not yet born, how could Abraham laugh? (157). This strange idea, however, gives him an opportunity for a fine disquisition on anticipation. He describes how young animals and young plants show a joyous promise of their future maturity, how the dawning of day smiles in expectation of the sunrise, how hope gives joy before the fact, just as fear gives grief, and the senses anticipate the feast before it is realized, and so man could laugh while laughter is yet unborn (158-165). Again, the joyous laughter of both Abraham and Sarah teaches us that joy is only for the good. If the wicked seem to smile it has no reality (166-169), and thus the so-called joy of Egypt at the coming of Jacob and his sons was either assumed or at the most a hope that they might seduce them as they had seduced Joseph (170-171); and this supposition leads him to discuss in detail the seeming-kindly promises made to Jacob by Pharaoh, and pronounce them to be nothing more than the temptations of the bodily element which the mind of the wise rejects (172-174).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

Philo now has to deal with the words so difficult on his premises, "He said in his heart, shall this happen to one of a hundred years old, and shall Sarah being ninety years old bear a son?" His first explanation stresses the words "in his heart"; they imply that the doubt, so inconsistent with Abraham's faith, was momentary with all the rapidity of thought, and died without reaching the lips (175-180). And if it is argued that it was unworthy of him to doubt even for a moment this is asking too much. The faith of weak mortals cannot be expected to be as the unswerving faith of God (181-187). But Philo would seem himself to incline to a "more courageous" explanation that the words are really a prayer: "Oh, that this perfect birth may take place under the perfect numbers of ninety and a hundred" (188). There follow several examples of a hundred as a special number, though as for ninety he cannot say anything more than that it is the difference between the sacred ten and the more sacred hundred (189-192). This explanation demands that "said in his heart (or mind)" signifies "sincerely," for sincerity is the mark of the virtuous, whereas the wicked do not speak in or according to their minds. Thus when Shechem, the emblem of foolish labour, is said to have spoken "according to the mind" of Dinah, the emblem of justice, we may understand that he spoke contrary to his own mind (193-195). Thus Shechem stands for the insincere who prate of virtue and deceive the multitude, but are ultimately unmasked by the champions of truth, represented by Simeon and Levi in the story of Shechem's punishment (196-200).

PHILO

Jacob's next words are "Let this Ishmael live before thee," each part of which has to be examined (200-201). First, since Ishmael=hearing God, this seems to distinguish the right hearing from the hearing which hears only to misuse, as did Balaam's (202-205). This is illustrated by other cases, where Philo supposes that the "this" serves to distinguish outwardly similar but different examples (206-209). Again, "live" points to the true life of the soul, and amounts to a prayer of the same nature as Jacob's prayer that Reuben or natural goodness should live and not die (209-216), and when he adds "before God" he prays that this God-hearing may have the inestimable blessing of realizing the divine omnipotence (216-217). But we must not suppose that the prayer for Ishmael shows despair of the birth of Isaac. It is rather the cry of the soul which feels its inadequacy to sustain God's highest gifts (218-219). But this consciousness of our inadequacy must not prevent us from dedicating thankfully such gifts as each of us possesses. If we cannot reach the highest that is no reason why we should not cherish the little we can do (220-227), and we have illustrations of this in Abraham's plea for Sodom if only a little goodness could be found in it, and Esau's hope that Isaac might have some blessing yet to give, even if the best was given to Jacob (228-230). Thus the best prayer of the soul is that God should give us what befits our weakness, for "shall not the hand of the Lord suffice" to benefit low as well as high? (231-232).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

It is primarily to carry on this thought that Philo here introduces the subject of the three different kinds of sin-offering and purification according to the capacity of the offerer, the sheep, the two birds and the fine flour (233-235). But this soon passes into the very different suggestion that the three are atonements for sins of thought, word and deed, otherwise expressed as mind, mouth and hand. He then goes on to shew that while sins of thought are more venial than sins of speech and these than sins of deeds (and this is recognized in the code of punishments), the first-named are really the most difficult to avoid, for thoughts cannot be controlled as language can (235-244). The appropriateness of the three offerings is explained by saying that the sheep the most useful of animals is suited to our noblest part, the mind, the birds to the winged nature of words, and the fine flour as worked by the hand to deeds which the hand commits (245-251).

To resume the exposition of the text, the divine reply to this prayer for Ishmael is, "Yes, Sarah shall bear thee a son," where the "yes" (vai) marks the divine assent or nod (νεύω). Thus God answers the one request by two gifts (252-255). The greater gift is the self-taught Isaac nature of which, rare as it is in its highest form, we have a foretaste in the fact that our powers of sense and mental processes are acquired without teaching (256-257). Why wonder, then, that the unlaboured virtue symbolized by Isaac should be given direct from heaven, like the manna and the automatic harvest of the sabbatical year? (258-260). Further, this child is free from womanish passion and will be rightly named "laughter," the natural outcry of the glad (261-262). The next words, "I have blessed Ishmael, but my covenant I will stablish with Isaac," shews that, while God gives the stronger the higher wisdom of the self-taught, he also gives the weaker the lower wisdom of the schools.

PHILO

The next words are, "whom Sarah shall bear at this season and in the other year." By season (καιρός) we may understand God Himself, the season or opportunity, which forsakes the wicked but dwells in the good, and by the "other year" is meant eternity, the life of the world of thought which was also meant when Isaac "in that year found the hundredfold crop" (264-269). Finally the words "He completed talking with him and God went up from Abraham" indicate that when we have learnt our lesson we must be left to meditate on and practise it, a truth which every good teacher knows (270).

The ms. authority for this treatise seems to be unusually weak. Wendland found only two mss. of any antiquity (A and B), both of them according to him of the same (and inferior) family. Mangey also used two late mss. in the libraries of New College, Oxford, and Trinity, Cambridge. I have collated the latter of these, but without any results to speak of. Perhaps this lack of ms. support may serve me as some apology for having introduced so many conjectural emendations of my own into the text.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΩΝ ΜΕΤΟΝΟΜΑΖΟΜΕΝΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΩΝ
ΕΝΕΚΑ ΜΕΤΟΝΟΜΑΖΟΝΤΑΙ

[578]

1 I. | “ Ἐγένετο Ἀβραὰμ ἐτῶν ἐνενήκοντα ἐννέα, καὶ ὤφθη κύριος τῷ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ· ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεὸς σου.” ὁ ἐννέα πρὸς τοῖς ἐνενήκοντα ἀριθμὸς ἑκατοντάδος γείτων ἐστίν, ἧ τὸ αὐτομαθὲς ἐπέλαμψε γένος, Ἰσαάκ, εὐπαθειῶν 2 ἀρίστη, χαρά· τῷ γὰρ ἑκατονταετεί γίνεται. ἔστι δὲ καὶ Λευιτικῆς φυλῆς ἱερεῦσιν ἀπαρχὴ διδομένη· δεκάτας γὰρ λαβόντες, ἀπὸ τούτων ὡς ἂν ἀπ’ οικείων καρπῶν ἑτέρας ἀπάρχονται ἑκατοστὸν<sup>1</sup> λόγον περιεχούσας. προκοπῆς μὲν γὰρ δεκάς, ἑκατοντὰς δὲ τελειότητος σύμβολον. σπεύδει δὲ ὁ μέσος αἰεὶ πρὸς ἀκρότητα, φύσεως εὐμοιρία χρώμενος· ᾧ φησιν ὀφθῆναι τὸν τῶν ὄλων κύριον.
3 ἀλλὰ μὴ νομίσης τοῖς σώματος ὀφθαλ-μοῖς γίνεσθαι τὴν προσβολήν—οἱ μὲν γὰρ τὰ αἰσθητὰ μόνα ὀρῶσι, τὰ δ’ αἰσθητὰ σύγκριτα, φθορᾶς ἀνάμεσα, τὸ δὲ θεῖον ἀσύγκριτον, ἄφθαρτον—ἀλλὰ τὸ δεχόμενον τὴν θεῖαν φαντασίαν τὸ 4 τῆς ψυχῆς ἐστὶν ὄμμα. καὶ γὰρ ἄλλως ὅσα μὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἑκατὸν.

<sup>a</sup> Here used in the strict Stoic sense of reasonable forms of πάθος. See note on Quod Det. 120. So also in De Mig. 157, De Cong. 36, and below, §§ 131, 188.

ABOUT THOSE WHOSE NAMES ARE CHANGED AND WHY THEY HAVE THEIR NAMES CHANGED

I. "Abraham became ninety-nine years old and the Lord was seen by Abraham and said to him, 'I am thy God'" (Gen. xvii. 1). Nine plus ninety is next neighbour to a hundred, the number irradiated by the self-taught nature Isaac who is joy, the best of the good emotions.<sup>a</sup> For Isaac is born to Abraham when a hundred years old. A hundred also represents the first-fruits given to the priests by the Tribe of Levi. For when the Levites receive the tenths they offer from them, just as though they were their own produce, other tenths in which we find the hundred (Num. xviii. 26). For ten is a symbol of progress and a hundred of perfection. Now he who is in the intermediate stage is always pressing forward to the summit, employing the gifts with which nature has blessed him, and it is by such a one that Moses tells us that the Lord of all was seen. Yet do not suppose that the vision was presented to the eyes of the body. They see only the objects of sense and those are composite, brimful of corruptibility, while the divine is uncompounded and incorruptible. It is the eye of the soul which receives the presentation of the divine vision. Moreover what the eyes

PHILO

- [579] οἱ<sup>1</sup> σώματος ὀφθαλμοὶ | θεωροῦσι, συνεργῶ φωτὶ χρώμενοι καταλαμβάνουσιν, ὃ διαφέρει τοῦ θ' ὀρωμένου καὶ τοῦ ὀρώντος· ὅσα δὲ ἢ ψυχῇ, αὐτὴ δι' ἑαυτῆς ἄνευ τινὸς ἄλλου συμπράξεως· αὐτὰ 5 γὰρ ἑαυτοῖς ἐστὶ φέγγος τὰ νοούμενα. τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ τὰς ἐπιστήμας διδασκόμεθα· ὃ γὰρ νοῦς τὸ ἄκλειστον καὶ ἀκοίμητον προσβαλὼν ὄμμα τοῖς δόγμασι καὶ τοῖς θεωρήμασιν εἶδεν αὐτὰ οὐ νόθῳ φωτὶ, γνησίῳ δὲ ὅπερ ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ ἐξέλαμψεν.
 6 ὅταν οὖν ἀκούσης ὀφθέντα θεὸν ἀνθρώπῳ, τοῦτο γίνεσθαι νόει χωρὶς φωτὸς αἰσθητοῦ· νοήσει γὰρ τὸ νοητὸν εἰκὸς μόνον καταλαμβάνεσθαι. πηγὴ δὲ τῆς καθαρωτάτης αὐγῆς θεὸς ἐστίν· ὥσθ' ὅταν ἐπιφαίνεται ψυχῇ, τὰς ἀσκίους καὶ περιφανεστάτας ἀκτῖνας ἀνίσχει.
- 7 II. Μὴ μέντοι νομίσης τὸ ὄν, ὃ ἐστὶ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄν, ὑπ' ἀνθρώπου τινὸς καταλαμβάνεσθαι. ὄργανον<sup>2</sup> γὰρ οὐδὲν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἔχομεν, ᾧ δυνασόμεθα ἐκεῖνο φαντασιωθῆναι, οὔτ' αἰσθησιν—αἰσθητὸν γὰρ οὐκ ἔστιν—οὔτε νοῦν.<sup>3</sup> Μωυσῆς οὖν ὁ τῆς ἀειδοῦς φύσεως θεατῆς [καὶ θεόπτης]<sup>4</sup>—εἰς γὰρ τὸν γνώφον φασὶν αὐτὸν οἱ θεῖοι χρησμοὶ εἰσελθεῖν, τὴν ἀόρατον καὶ ἀσώματον οὐσίαν αἰνιττόμενοι—πάντα διὰ πάντων ἐρευνήσας ἐζήτει τὸν τριπόθητον 8 καὶ μόνον ἀγαθὸν τηλαυγῶς ἰδεῖν. ἐπεὶ δ' οὐδὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μόνοι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὄραν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ισχύον, which Mangey translates by "facultatem."
 But a better antithesis to αἰσθησις seems to be required.
 Perhaps <νοῦ> ισχύον.

<sup>4</sup> That θεόπτης is unknown elsewhere, except in quite late writers, is hardly sufficient reason for expunging it, as Wendland following Cohn does. Philo might easily coin it.
 But it cannot be taken with τῆς ἀειδοῦς φύσεως, and seems

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 4-7

of the body behold they apprehend through the cooperation of light, and light is something different from either the seer or the thing seen, whereas what the soul beholds it beholds by its own agency without the assistance of any other. For the conceptions of the mind are a light to themselves. Our learning 5 of the sciences follows the same rule. The mind applies its eye which never closes or sleeps to the principles and conclusions set before it and sees them by no borrowed but a genuine light which shines forth from itself. And so when you hear that God 6 was seen by man, you must think that this takes place without the light which the senses know, for what belongs to mind can be apprehended only by the mental powers. And God is the fountain of the purest radiance, and so when He reveals Himself to a soul the rays He puts forth are free from all shadow and of intense brightness.

II. Do not however suppose that the Existent 7 which truly exists is apprehended by any man ; for we have in us no organ by which we can envisage it, neither in sense, for it is not perceptible by sense, nor yet in mind. So Moses the explorer of nature which lies beyond our vision, Moses who, as the divine oracles tell us, entered into the darkness<sup>a</sup> (Ex. xx. 21), by which figure they indicate existence invisible and incorporeal, searched everywhere and into everything in his desire to see clearly and plainly Him, the object of our much yearning, Who alone is good.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 586.

---

pointless if taken by itself. Wend. himself conjectured θεοπρόπος. I should prefer ἐπόπτης, a well-known term in the mysteries and differing enough from θεάτης to give it some point.

PHILO

εὔρισκεν, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐμφερῆ τινα ἰδέαν τῷ ἐλπίζομένῳ, τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν ἄλλων διδασκαλίαν ἀπογνοὺς ἐπ' αὐτὸ καταφεύγει τὸ ζητούμενον καὶ δεῖται λέγων· “ ἐμφάνισόν μοι σεαυτόν, γνωστῶς ἴδω σε”· καὶ ὁμως ἀμοιρεῖ τῆς προθέσεως, ἀνταρκεστάτης δωρεᾶς τῷ θνητῶν ἀρίστῳ γένει νομισθείσης τῆς <τῶν> μετὰ τὸ ὄν σωμάτων τε ὁμοῦ 9 καὶ πραγμάτων ἐπιστήμης. λέγεται γάρ· “ ὄψει τὰ ὀπίσω μου, τὸ δὲ πρόσωπόν μου οὐκ ὀφθήσεταιί σοι,” ὡς τῶν ὅσα μετὰ τὸ ὄν σωμάτων τε ὁμοῦ καὶ πραγμάτων εἰς κατάληψιν ἐρχομένων, εἰ καὶ μὴ πάντα ἤδη καταλαμβάνεται, μόνου δ' ἐκείνου 10 μὴ πεφυκότος ὀραῖσθαι. καὶ τί θαυμαστόν, εἰ τὸ ὄν ἀνθρώποις ἀκατάληπτον, ὅποτε καὶ ὁ ἐν ἐκάστῳ νοῦς ἄγνωστος ἡμῖν; τίς γὰρ ψυχῆς οὐσίαν εἶδεν; ἥς ἢ ἀδηλότης μυρίας ἔριδας σοφισταῖς ἐγέννησεν ἐναντίας εἰσηγουμένοις γνώμας ἢ καὶ ὄλοις γένεσιν 11 ἀντιστατούσας. ἦν οὖν ἀκόλουθον τὸ μηδ' ὄνομα κύριον ἐπιφημισθῆναι δύνασθαι τῷ ὄντι πρὸς ἀλήθειαν. οὐχ ὀραῖς ὅτι φιλοπευστοῦντι [580] τῷ | προφήτῃ, τί τοῖς περὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ ζητοῦσιν ἀποκριτέον, φησὶν ὅτι “ ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ ὢν,” 12 ἴσον τῷ εἶναι πέφυκα, οὐ λέγεσθαι; τοῦ δὲ μὴ παντάπασιν ἀμοιρῆσαι τὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων γένος προσρήσεως τοῦ ἀρίστου, δίδωσι καταχρηῆσθαι ὡς

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 8-12

And when there was no sign of finding aught, not 8 even any semblance of what he hoped for, in despair of learning from others, he took refuge with the Object of his search Himself and prayed in these words : “ Reveal Thyself to me that I may see Thee with knowledge ” (Ex. xxxiii. 13). And yet he fails to gain his object. To know what lies below the Existent, things material and immaterial alike, is a most ample gift even for the best sort among mortals, as God judges, for we read, “ Thou shalt see what is behind 9 Me, but My face thou shalt not see ” (ibid. 23). It means that all below the Existent, things material and immaterial alike, are available to apprehension even if they are not all actually apprehended as yet, but He alone by His very nature cannot be seen.
And why should we wonder that the Existent cannot 10 be apprehended by men when even the mind in each of us is unknown to us ? For who knows the essential nature of the soul, that mystery which has bred numberless contentions among the sophists who pro-pound opinions contrary to each other or even totally and generically opposed ? It is a logical 11 consequence that no personal name even can be properly assigned to the truly Existent. Note that when the prophet desires to know what he must answer to those who ask about His name He says “ I am He that is ” (Ex. iii. 14), which is equivalent to “ My nature is to be, not to be spoken.” Yet that 12 the human race should not totally lack a title to give to the supreme goodness He allows them to use by licence of language, as though it were His proper

PHILO

- ἂν ὀνόματι κυρίῳ τῷ<sup>1</sup> “ κύριος ὁ θεὸς ” τῶν τριῶν φύσεων, διδασκαλίας, τελειότητος, ἀσκήσεως, ὧν σύμβολα Ἀβραάμ, Ἰσαάκ, Ἰακώβ ἀναγράφεται. “ τοῦτο γάρ μου ” φησὶν “ ὄνομα αἰώνιον ” ὡς ἂν ἐν τῷ καθ’ ἡμᾶς αἰῶνι ἐξεταζόμενον, οὐκ ἐν τῷ πρὸ αἰῶνος, “ καὶ μνημόσυνον,” οὐ τὸ πέρα μνήμης καὶ νοήσεως ἰστάμενον, καὶ 13 πάλιν “ γενεαῖς,” οὐ φύσεσιν ἀγενήτοις. καταχρήσεως γὰρ ὀνόματος θείου δεῖ τοῖς εἰς τὴν θνητὴν γένεσιν ἐλθοῦσιν, ἵν’, εἰ καὶ μὴ πράγματι, ὀνόματι γοῦν προσερχόμενοι ἀρίστῳ κατ’ αὐτὸ κοσμῶνται.
 δηλοῖ δὲ καὶ λόγιον ἐκ προσώπου θεσπισθὲν τοῦ τῶν ὄλων ἡγεμόνος περὶ τοῦ μηδενὶ δεδηλωσθαι ὄνομά τι<sup>2</sup> αὐτοῦ κύριον. “ ὥφθην ” φησὶ “ πρὸς Ἀβραάμ καὶ Ἰσαάκ καὶ Ἰακώβ θεὸς ὧν αὐτῶν, καὶ τὸ ὄνομά μου κύριον οὐκ ἐδήλωσα αὐτοῖς.” τοῦ γὰρ ὑπερβατοῦ μετατεθέντος ἐξῆς ἂν τοιοῦτος εἶη λόγος· “ ὄνομά μου τὸ κύριον οὐκ ἐδήλωσα αὐτοῖς,” ἀλλὰ τὸ ἐν καταχρήσει διὰ τὰς εἰρημένας 14 αἰτίας. οὕτω μέντοι τὸ ὄν ἀρρητόν ἐστιν, ὥστ’ οὐδὲ αἱ ὑπηρετούμεναι<sup>3</sup> δυνάμεις κύριον ὄνομα ἡμῖν λέγουσι· μετὰ γοῦν τὴν πάλην, ἣν ὑπὲρ κτήσεως

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὡς ἐν ὀνόματι τῷ κυρίῳ: Wend. prints following the text as quoted in the Parallela of Joh. Damasc. (D) ὡς ἂν ὁ ὧν ὀνόματι τοιούτῳ. At the same time for ὡς ἂν ὁ ὧν he conjectures ὁ ἀκατονόμαστος ὧν. I do not indeed see how the text of Joh. Dam. can be construed as it stands, and have followed in the main the ms. text, substituting with J. D. ἂν for ἐν and correcting τῷ κυρίῳ το κυρίῳ τῷ, a correction perhaps supported by J. D. τοιούτῳ.

<sup>2</sup> So Mangey: mss. ὀνόματι: Wend. τὸ ὄνομα (from Joh. Dam.). See App. p. 586.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps, as Wendland conjectures, ὑπηρετοῦσαι. Any use of the middle seems to be later than Philo.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 12-14

name,<sup>a</sup> the title of Lord God of the three natural orders, teaching, perfection, practice,<sup>b</sup> which are symbolized in the records as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. For this He says is "My age-long name," belonging as it were to the age of human existence, not to that when age as yet was not, "a memorial" too, not set, that is, beyond memory or apprehension, and again "to generations" (ibid. 15), not to beings that were never generated. For those who are born into 13 mortality must needs have some substitute for the divine name, so that they may approach if not the fact at least the name of supreme excellence and be brought into relation with it. And this is shown by the oracle proclaimed as from the mouth of the Ruler of all in which He says that no proper name of Him has been revealed to any. "I was seen," He says, "of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, being their God, and My name of 'Lord' I did not reveal to them" (Ex. vi. 3). For when the transposition<sup>c</sup> is reset in the proper order it will run thus, "My proper name I did not reveal to thee," but, He implies, only the substitute, and that for reasons already mentioned. So 14 impossible to name indeed is the Existent that not even the Potencies who serve Him tell us a proper name. Thus after the wrestling-bout in which the Man <sup>a</sup> Philo seems to mix in this passage two somewhat different uses of the grammatical term κύριον ὄνομα: (1) a noun used in its literal or strict sense, opposed to metaphorical or loose usage (ἐν καταχρήσει, see note on De Cher. 121); (2) a proper or personal name.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 586.

<sup>c</sup> Philo seems to mean that while το ὄνομά μου κύριον will naturally mean "my name κύριος," the text should (or perhaps may also) be regarded as an "hyperbaton" or "unusual order" of ὄνομά μου τὸ κύριον, "my proper name" For the technical use of the term see App. pp. 586 f.

PHILO

ἀρετῆς ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἐπάλαισε, φησὶ τῷ ἀοράτῳ ἐπιστάτῃ· “ἀνάγγελόν μοι τὸ ὄνομά σου,” ὁ δὲ εἶπεν· “ἵνα τί τοῦτο ἐρωτᾷς τὸ ὄνομά μου;” καὶ οὐ μηνύει τὸ ἴδιον καὶ κύριον. ἀπόχρη γὰρ σοι, φησὶν, ὠφελεῖσθαι κατὰ τὰς ἐμὰς εὐφημίας, τὰ δὲ γενητῶν σύμβολα, ὀνόματα, μὴ ζήτηε παρά

15 φύσεσιν ἀφθάρτοις· III. μηδ’<sup>1</sup> οὖν διαπόρει, εἰ τὸ τῶν ὄντων πρεσβύτατον ἄρρητον, ὅποτε καὶ ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ κυρίῳ ὀνόματι οὐ ῥητὸς ἡμῖν· καὶ μὴν

[581] εἰ ἄρρητον, καὶ | ἀπερινόητον καὶ ἀκατάληπτον· ὥστε τὸ “ὥφθη κύριος τῷ Ἀβραάμ” λέγεσθαι ὑπονοητέον οὐχ ὡς ἐπιλάμπωντος καὶ ἐπιφαινομένου τοῦ παντὸς αἰτίου—τίς γὰρ ἀνθρώπειος νοῦς τὸ μέγεθος τῆς φαντασίας ἱκανὸς ἐστὶ χωρῆσαι;—ἀλλ’ ὡς μιᾶς τῶν περὶ αὐτὸ δυνάμεων, τῆς βασιλικῆς, προφαινομένης· ἡ γὰρ

16 κύριος πρόσρησις ἀρχῆς καὶ βασιλείας ἐστί. νοῦς δὲ ἡμῶν ἡνίκα ἐχαλδαίζε μετεωρολεσχῶν, τῷ κόσμῳ τὰς δραστηρίους ἦν περιέπων<sup>2</sup> δυνάμεις ὡς αἰτίας· γενόμενος δὲ μετανάστης ἀπὸ τοῦ Χαλδαϊκοῦ δόγματος ἔγνω ἡνιοχούμενον καὶ κυβερνώμενον αὐτὸν ὑπὸ ἡγεμόνος, οὗ τῆς ἀρχῆς φαν

17 τασίαν ἔλαβε. διὸ λέγεται “ὥφθη” οὐ τὸ ὄν, ἀλλὰ κύριος· οἶον ἐφάνη ὁ βασιλεύς, ἐξ ἀρχῆς μὲν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μήτ’.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. περιμπέπων. I have left the text as Wend. prints it, but it is not satisfactory: περιέπειν is rather “to honour,” and if it is read we should expect τοῦ κόσμου, or as Mangey τὰ κόσμου governed by μετεωρολεσχῶν. Perhaps περιάπτων. cf. De Ebr. 73. But the periphrasis with ἦν is in itself somewhat strange.

<sup>a</sup> I understand ἀοράτῳ, for which Mangey would substitute ἀρρήτῳ, to refer to the wrestling of the story taking

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 14-17

of Practice engaged in his quest of virtue, he says to the unseen master,<sup>a</sup> "Announce to me Thy name," and he said "Why dost thou ask this my name?" (Gen. xxxii. 29), and he refuses to tell his personal and proper name. "It is enough for thee," he means, "to profit through my benediction, but as for names, those symbols which indicate created beings, look not for them in the case of imperishable natures." III. Think it not then a hard saying that the Highest 15 of all things should be unnamable when His Word has no name of its own which we can speak. And indeed if He is unnamable He is also inconceivable and incomprehensible. And so the words "The Lord was seen of Abraham" (Gen. xvii. 1) must not be understood in the sense that the Cause of all shone upon him and appeared to him, for what human mind could contain the vastness of that vision? Rather we must think of it as the manifestation of one of the Potencies which attend him, the Potency of kingship, for the title Lord betokens sovereignty and kingship. While our mind pursued 16 the airy speculations of the Chaldeans it ascribed to the world powers of action which it regarded as causes. But when it migrated from the Chaldean creed it recognized that the world had for its charioteer and pilot a Ruler Whose sovereignty was presented to it in vision. And therefore the words are "The 17 Lord (not "The Existent") was seen of him," as though it would say, The king has been manifested, king indeed from the first, but hitherto unrecognized place at night and stopping at dawn. Wendland suspected ἐπιστάτη and proposed παλαιστῆ, but Philo conceives of the angel rather as a master of the contest (ἀγωνοθέτης) training his pupil by wrestling with him; cf. De Som. i. 129.

PHILO

- ὢν, οὐπω δὲ τῇ ψυχῇ γνωριζόμενος, ἦ καὶ ὄψιμαθῆς μὲν, οὐ μὴν εἰσάπαν ἀμαθῆς διετέλεσεν, ἀλλ' ἐφантаσιώθη τὴν ἐν τοῖς οὖσιν ἀρχὴν καὶ 18 ἡγεμονίαν. φανείς δ' ὁ ἄρχων ἔτι μᾶλλον εὐεργετῆ τὸν ἀκροατὴν καὶ θεατὴν φάσκων· “ ἐγὼ εἰμι θεὸς σός.” τίνος γάρ, εἶπομι' (ἄν), οὐ θεὸς ὑπάρχεις τῶνδε ὅσα εἰς γένεσιν ἦλθεν; ἀλλὰ διδάξει με ὁ ὑποφήτης αὐτοῦ λόγος, ὅτι οὐ περὶ τοῦ κόσμου νῦν λέγει, οὐδ' δημιουργὸς πάντως ἐστὶ καὶ θεός, ἀλλὰ περὶ ἀνθρωπίνων ψυχῶν, ἃς οὐ τῆς 19 αὐτῆς ἐπιμελείας ἠξίωκε. δικαιοὶ γὰρ τῶν μὲν φαύλων λέγεσθαι κύριος καὶ δεσπότης, τῶν δ' ἐν προκοπαῖς καὶ βελτιώσεσι θεός, τῶν δ' ἀρίστων καὶ τελειοτάτων ἀμφότερον, κύριος ὁμοῦ καὶ θεός.
 αὐτίκα γέ τοι ἔσχατον ὄρον ἀσεβείας ἰδρυσάμενος τὸν Φαραῶν [κύριον καὶ] θεὸν τούτου οὐδέποτε προσεῖπεν ἑαυτόν, ἀλλὰ τὸν σοφὸν Μωυσῆν—λέγει γάρ· “ ἰδοὺ δίδωμί σε θεὸν Φαραῶν ”— κύριον δὲ ὠνόμασε πολλαχοῦ τῶν ὑπ' αὐτοῦ 20 χρησθέντων· ἄδεται δὲ τὰ τοιαῦτα· “ τάδε λέγει κύριος,” καὶ ἐν ἀρχῇ· “ ἐλάλησε κύριος πρὸς Μωυσῆν λέγων· ἐγὼ κύριος, λάλησον Φαραῶν βασιλεῖ Αἰγύπτου, ὅσα ἐγὼ λαλῶ πρὸς σέ,” καὶ 21 Μωυσῆς πρὸς αὐτόν· “ ὅταν ἐξέλθω τὴν πόλιν, ἐκπετάσω τὰς χεῖρας πρὸς κύριον, καὶ αἱ φωναὶ παύσονται, καὶ ἡ χάλαζα καὶ ὁ ὑετὸς οὐκ ἔσται· ἵνα γνῶς, ὅτι κυρίου ἡ γῆ,” οἰονεὶ πᾶσα ἡ σωματικὴ καὶ γεώδης σύστασις, “ καὶ σύ,” ὁ ἀγαλματοφοροῦ-

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. at the beginning of the speech to which the earlier quotation, “Behold I give thee etc.,” belongs. But as

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 17-21

by the soul, which so long unschooled has not remained in ignorance for ever but has received the vision of the Sovereignty which rules over all that is.

But the Sovereign when manifested 18 confers a still higher gift on him who sees and hears him. He says to him, "I am thy God." Which indeed amongst all this multitude of created things does not have Thee for its god? I might ask. But His interpreting word will shew me that He does not here speak of the world of which doubtless He is Creator and God, but of human souls which do not in His eyes deserve to be cared for all alike. His will 19 is to be called the Lord and Master of the bad, the God of those who are on the way to betterment, but of the best and most perfect both at once God and Lord. For instance, when He has set Pharaoh before us as the crowning example of impiety He never calls Himself his God but gives that name to wise Moses, "Behold I give thee as god to Pharaoh" (Ex. vii. 1). But He often names Himself as Lord in the oracles which He gives. We find such utterances as these, "These things saith the Lord" 20 (Ex. vii. 17), and at the beginning of His speech <sup>a</sup> "The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 'I am the Lord, speak unto Pharaoh, the king of Egypt, all that I speak unto thee'" (Ex. vi. 29). And Moses says to Pharaoh, "When I go forth from the city I 21 will spread out my hands to the Lord, and the sounds shall cease and the hail and the rain shall not be, that thou mayest know that to the Lord belongs the earth" (that is all the bodily earth-compounded frame), "and thou" (that is the mind which the body another quotation has intervened, this is rather forced. I should like to read ἐν ἀρχῇ, καί, i.e. "as an opening phrase."

PHILO

- μενος νοῦς, “καὶ οἱ θεράποντές σου,” οἱ κατὰ μέρος δορυφοροῦντες λογισμοί. “ἐπίσταμαι γάρ, ὅτι οὐδέπω πεφόβησθε τὸν κύριον,” ἴσον τῷ οὐ τὸν λεγόμενον ἄλλως, ἀλλὰ τὸν ὄντως ὄντα
- 22 [582] δεσπότην. κύριος γὰρ γενητὸς πρὸς | ἀλήθειαν οὐδεὶς, κἂν ἀπὸ περάτων ἐπὶ πέρατα εὐρύνας τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ἀνάψηται· μόνος δ’ ὁ ἀγένητος ἀψευδῶς ἡγεμῶν, οὗ τὴν ἀρχὴν ὁ δεδιὼς καὶ καταπεπληγμένος ἄθλον ὠφελιμώτατον αἶρεται<sup>1</sup> νουθεσίας, τὸν δὲ ὀλίγωρον ἐκδέχεται πάντως οἰκτρὸς ὄλεθρος.
- 23 οὐκοῦν κύριος ἀφρόνων ἐπιδέδεικται τὸν ἄρχοντος ἐπανατεινόμενος οἰκεῖον φόβον, θεὸς δὲ βελτιουμένων γράφεται, καθὼς καὶ νῦν· “ἐγὼ εἰμι θεὸς σός,” “ἐγὼ (ὁ) θεὸς σου, αὐξάνου καὶ πληθύνου,” τελείων δὲ ἀμφοτέρων, κύριος ὁμοῦ καὶ θεός, ὡς ἐν δέκα λόγοις· “ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεός σου” καὶ ἐτέρωθι· “κύριος ὁ θεὸς τῶν πατέρων
- 24 ὑμῶν.<sup>2</sup>” δικαιοῖ γὰρ τὸν μὲν φαῦλον ὡς ὑπὸ κυρίου δεσπόζεσθαι, ἢ εὐλαβούμενος καὶ στένων ἐπικρεμάμενος ἔχη τὸν δεσποτικὸν φόβον, τὸν δὲ προκόπτοντα ὡς ὑπὸ θεοῦ εὐεργετεῖσθαι, ὅπως ταῖς εὐποιαῖς τελειότητος ἐφίκηται, τὸν δὲ τέλειον καὶ ἡγεμονεύεσθαι ὡς ὑπὸ κυρίου καὶ εὐεργετεῖσθαι ὡς ὑπὸ θεοῦ· διαμένει γὰρ οὕτως<sup>3</sup> εἰσάπαν ἄτρεπτος, ἐκείνως<sup>3</sup> δὲ πάντως ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος θεοῦ.
- 25 δηλοῦται δὲ τοῦτο μάλισθ’ ὡς ἐπὶ Μωυσέως· “αὕτη” γάρ φησιν “ἡ εὐλογία ἦν εὐλόγησε Μωυσης, ἄνθρωπος θεοῦ.” ὡ παγκάλῃς καὶ ἱεροπρεποῦς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. αἰρείται.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἡμῶν.

<sup>3</sup> οὕτως and ἐκείνως are my corrections of the οὗτος and ἐκεῖνος of the MSS. and editors. It seems clear to me that carries with it) "and thy servants" (that is the several thoughts which form its guard), "for I know that ye have not yet feared the Lord" (Ex. ix. 29), meaning that Lord who is not merely so-called but is Lord in very truth. For none that is created is truly a lord, though he be invested with a rule that spreads from pole to pole. Only the Uncreated is truly ruler, and he who lives in fear and awe under that Ruler's government receives a prize of truest value in His reproofs, while he who despises them has before him nothing but to perish miserably.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 21-25

So then He is shown to be the Lord of the foolish in that He holds over them the terrors that are proper to the sovereign. Of those who are on the way to betterment He is called in scripture God, as in this present passage, "I am thy God," or "I am thy God, increase and multiply" (Gen. xxxv. 11). Of the perfect He is both Lord and God as in the Decalogue "I am thy Lord God" (Ex. xx. 2), and elsewhere "The Lord God of your fathers" (Deut. iv. 1), for it is His will that the wicked man should be under His sway as his Lord, and thus with awe and groaning feel the fear of the Master hanging over him; that the man of progress should be benefited by Him as God and thus through those kindnesses reach perfection; that the perfect should be guided by Him as Lord and benefited by Him as God. For through the one he remains free from lapses, through the other he is most surely God's man.

This is best shown in Moses' case. "This is the blessing," we read, "which Moses gave, the man of God" (Deut. xxxiii. 1). To what a glorious, what a the sentence explains ἡγεμονεύεσθαι and εὐεργετεῖσθαι of the preceding clause and refers to the τελείος only.

---

PHILO

- ἀντιδόσεως ἀξιωθείς, θείας προνοίας ἀντιδοῦναι 26 ἑαυτόν. ἀλλὰ μὴ νομίσης τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἀνθρωπὸν τε (θεοῦ) γίνεσθαι καὶ ἀνθρώπου θεόν· ἀνθρωπον μὲν γάρ θεοῦ, ὡς κτῆμα· ἀνθρώπου δὲ θεόν, ὡς αὔχημα καὶ ὠφέλημα.<sup>1</sup> εἰ δὴ βούλει διανοίας κλῆρον τὸν θεὸν ἔχειν, αὐτὸς πρότερον γενοῦ κλῆρος ἀξιόχρεως αὐτοῦ· γενήσῃ δέ, ἂν τοὺς χειροποιήτους καὶ ἔκουσίους ἅπαντας μώμους<sup>2</sup> ἐκφύγῃς.
- 27 IV. Ἄλλὰ γὰρ οὐδ' ἐκεῖνο προσῆκεν ἀγνοεῖν, ὅτι τὸ "ἐγὼ εἰμι θεὸς σὸς" λέγεται καταχρηστικῶς, οὐ κυρίως. τὸ γὰρ ὄν, ἧ ὄν ἐστίν, οὐχὶ τῶν πρὸς τι· αὐτὸ γὰρ ἑαυτοῦ πλήρες καὶ αὐτὸ ἑαυτῷ ἱκανόν, καὶ πρὸ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως καὶ μετὰ 28 τὴν γένεσιν τοῦ παντός ἐν ὁμοίῳ. ἀτρεπτον γὰρ καὶ ἀμετάβλητον, χρῆζον ἑτέρου τὸ παράπαν οὐδενός, ὥστε αὐτοῦ μὲν εἶναι τὰ πάντα, μηδενός δὲ κυρίως αὐτό. τῶν δὲ δυνάμεων, ἃς ἔτεινεν εἰς γένεσιν ἐπ' εὐεργεσία τοῦ συσταθέντος, ἐνίας συμβέβηκε λέγεσθαι ὡσανεὶ πρὸς τι, τὴν βασιλικήν,

<sup>1</sup> The mss. and editors have this sentence as follows: ἀλλὰ μὴ νομίσης τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ἀνθρωπὸν τε γίνεσθαι καὶ ἀνθρωπον θεοῦ· ἀνθρωπον μὲν γάρ, θεοῦ ὡς κτῆμα· ἀνθρωπον δὲ θεοῦ, ὡς αὔχημα καὶ ὠφέλημα. The changes I have introduced, though involving little textual alteration, viz. the insertion of θεοῦ in one place, and the change of ἀνθρωπον θεοῦ twice over to ἀνθρώπου θεόν, make a vital change in the thought. As the text stands in the mss. there is little point in the antithesis between being a man simply and being God's man, and the next sentence does not carry on the antithesis, but indicates one between man being God's and God being man's. Moreover αὔχημα and ὠφέλημα should be genitives in apposition with θεοῦ. The thought in the corrected text is as follows: The phrase "I am thy God" makes God to be man's. "Moses the man of God" makes holy exchange is he promoted that in return for God's protecting care he should give himself to God. But do not suppose that God becomes man's in the same way that man becomes God's, for a man is God's as His possession, God is man's to be his glory and assistance. If thou wouldst have God as thy heart's portion, first become thyself a portion worthy for Him to take, and that thou shalt become if thou escape such faults as are thine own handiwork and come of free will.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 25-28

IV. We should remember this also that the words "I am thy God" are used by licence of language and not in their proper sense, for the Existent considered as existent is not relative. He is full of Himself and is sufficient for Himself. It was so before the creation of the world, and is equally so after the creation of all that is. He cannot change nor alter and needs nothing else at all, so that all things are His but He Himself in the proper sense belongs to none. But the Potencies which He has projected into creation to benefit what He has framed are in some cases spoken of as in a sense relative,<sup>a</sup> such as man to be God's. But the two relations are different. Man is God's because he is God's possession. God is man's only in the sense that he can glory in Him and gain help from Him. He then continues "if we wish to establish this latter relation we must first establish in the right way the former and thus become not merely God's possession, which we are in any case, but a possession worthy of Him."

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 587.

---

<sup>2</sup> My correction for ms. and editions' νόμους. I can see no sense in this. For μώμους cf. Leg. All. iii. 141 διὰ τὸ μηδένα ἔχειν μήθ' ἐκούσιον μήτ' ἀκούσιον μῶμον. For χειροποιήτους cf. its application to shipwrecks or famine caused needlessly by human ignorance or malice (Spec. Leg. iv. 154 and iii. 203).

PHILO

τὴν εὐεργετικὴν βασιλεὺς γὰρ τινος καὶ εὐεργέτης 29 τινός, ἐτέρου πάντως βασιλευμένου καὶ εὐεργε-[583] τουμένου. τούτων συγγενής ἐστὶ καὶ ἡ ποιητικὴ δύναμις, ἢ καλουμένη θεός· διὰ γὰρ ταύτης τῆς δυνάμεως ἔθηκε τὰ πάντα ὁ γεννήσας καὶ τεχνιτεύσας πατήρ, ὥστε τὸ “ ἐγὼ εἰμι θεὸς σός ” ἴσον 30 ἐστὶ τῷ ἐγὼ εἰμι ποιητῆς καὶ δημιουργός. μεγίστη δὲ δωρεὰ τὸ αὐτοῦ λαχεῖν ἀρχιτέκτονος, οὗ καὶ σύμπασι ὁ κόσμος ἔλαχε. φαύλου μὲν γὰρ ψυχῆν οὐ διέπλασεν—ἐχθρὸν γὰρ θεῷ κακία,—τὴν δὲ μέσσην οὐ δι’ ἑαυτοῦ μόνου κατὰ τὸν ἱερώτατον Μωυσῆν, ἐπειδὴ κηροῦ τρόπον ἔμελλεν αὕτη 31 δέξασθαι καλοῦ τε καὶ αἰσχροῦ διαφορὰν. διόπερ λέγεται· “ ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον κατ’ εἰκόνα ἡμετέραν,” ἴν’, εἰ μὲν δέξεται φαῦλον τύπον, ἐτέρων φαίνεται δημιουργήματα, εἰ δὲ καλόν, τοῦ τῶν καλῶν καὶ ἀγαθῶν μόνων τεχνίτου. πάντως οὖν σπου-दाῖος ἐκεῖνός ἐστιν, ὧ φησιν· “ ἐγὼ εἰμι θεὸς σός,” ποιητοῦ μόνου λαχῶν ἄνευ συμπράξεως ἐτέρων.
 32 ἅμα μέντοι καὶ τὸ πολλαχοῦ κατασκευαζόμενον αὐτῷ δόγμα συνάγει διδάσκων, ὅτι μόνων ἀγαθῶν καὶ σοφῶν δημιουργός ἐστιν. οὗτος δὲ πᾶσι ὁ θίασος<sup>1</sup> τὴν <τῶν> ἐκτὸς ἀφθονοῦ<sup>2</sup> κτήσιν ἑαυτὸν ἐκὼν ἀφήρηται, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν σαρκὶ φίλων 33 ὠλιγώρηκεν. εὐέκται μὲν γὰρ καὶ σφριγῶντες

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read <τοι>οὗτος δὲ πᾶσι ὁ θίασος <δς>. See App. p. 587.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐκ τοῦ ἀφθόνου.

<sup>a</sup> θεός being derived from τίθημι; see note on De Conf. 137.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Op. 72 ff., De Conf. 168 ff., De Fug. 68 ff.

<sup>c</sup> Or “indeed here with other lessons” (ἅμα), i.e. those of §§ 18 and 28.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 28-33

the kingly and the beneficial, for a king is a king of someone and a benefactor the benefactor of someone, while the subject of the kingship and the recipient of the benefit is necessarily something different. Akin to these two is the creative Potency 29 called God, because through this the Father who is its begetter and contriver made <sup>a</sup> the universe, so that "I am thy God" is equivalent to "I am the Maker and Artificer." And the greatest gift we can have 30 is to have Him for our Architect, Who was also the Architect of the whole world, for He did not form the soul of the bad, since wickedness is at enmity with Him, and in framing the soul which is in the intermediate stage He was not the sole agent according to the holiest of men, Moses, since such a soul would surely admit like wax the different qualities of noble and base. And therefore we read, 31 "Let us make man after our image" (Gen. i. 26), so that according as the wax received the bad or the noble impress it should appear to be the handiwork of others or of Him Who is the framer of the noble and the good alone.<sup>b</sup> Surely then he is a man of virtue to whom God says "I am thy God," for he has God alone for his maker without the co-operation of others. At the same time <sup>c</sup> Moses teaches us here 32 by implication the doctrine which he so often <sup>d</sup> lays down that God is the maker of the wise and good only. And all that company <sup>e</sup> have voluntarily stripped themselves of the external goods which are so abundantly supplied to us, and further have despised what is dear to the flesh. Fine, lusty and athletic 33

<sup>a</sup> In the other texts where God says "We" (see De Conf. 16) and Gen. xlviii. 15, 16 (ibid. 181).

<sup>e</sup> See App. p. 587.

PHILO

ἀθληταὶ τὸ δούλον ἐπιτετειχικότες ψυχῇ τὸ σῶμα, ὡχροὶ δὲ καὶ διερρηγικότες καὶ κατεσκελετευμένοι τρόπον τινὰ οἱ ἀπὸ παιδείας, ταῖς ψυχικαῖς δυνάμεσι καὶ τοὺς σωματικούς τόνους προσκεκληρωκότες καί, εἰ δεῖ τᾶληθές εἰπεῖν, εἰς ἓν εἶδος τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ἀναλυθέντες καὶ ἀσώματοι διάνοιαι γεγο-34 νότες. φθείρεται οὖν εἰκότως τὸ γεῶδες καὶ καταλύεται,<sup>1</sup> ὅταν ὄλος δι' ὄλων ὁ νοὺς εὐαρεστεῖν προέλῃται θεῷ. σπάνιον δὲ καὶ τὸ γένος καὶ μόλις εὕρισκόμενον, πλὴν οὐκ ἀδύνατον γενέσθαι. δηλοῖ δὲ τὸ χρησθέν ἐπὶ τοῦ Ἐνώχ λόγιον τόδε· “εὐηρέστησε δὲ Ἐνώχ τῷ θεῷ, καὶ 35 οὐχ εὕρισκετο.” ποῦ γὰρ (ἂν) σκεψάμενός τις εὔροι τᾶγαθὸν τοῦτο; ποῖα πελάγη διαβαλῶν; (πρὸς) τίνας νήσους, τίνας ἠπειρούς ἐλθῶν; παρὰ 36 βαρβάρους ἢ παρ’ Ἑλλησιν; ἢ οὐχὶ καὶ μέχρι νῦν τῶν φιλοσοφία τετελεσμένων εἰσὶ τινες, οἱ λέγουσιν ἀνύπαρκτον εἶναι σοφίαν, ἐπειδὴ καὶ τὸν σοφόν; μηδένα γὰρ ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς ἀνθρώπων γενέσεως ἄχρι τοῦ παρόντος βίου κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἀνυπαίτιον νομισθῆναι· καὶ γὰρ ἀδύνατον εἶναι θνητῷ σώματι 37 ἐνδεδεμένον εἰσάπαν εὐδαιμονῆσαι. ταῦτα δ’ εἰ [584] μὲν ὀρθῶς | λέγεται, σκεψόμεθα ἐν καιρῷ· νυνὶ δ’ ἀκολουθήσαντες τῷ λογίῳ φήσομεν, ὅτι ἔστι μὲν ὑπαρκτὸν πρᾶγμα σοφία, ἔστι δὲ καὶ ὁ ἔραστής αὐτῆς, σοφός, ὑπάρχων δὲ ὅμως ἡμᾶς τοὺς φαύ-λους διαλέληθεν· ἀγαθὸν γὰρ οὐκ ἐθέλει κακῷ 38 συνέρχεσθαι. διὰ τοῦτο λέγεται· “οὐχ εὕρισκετο” ὁ εὐαρεστήσας τρόπος τῷ θεῷ, ὡς ἂν δήπου ὑπ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κατακλύζεται.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 33-38

are those who use the body as a menace to the soul. Pale, wasted and withered, so to speak, are the children of discipline. They have made over the bodily muscles to serve the powers of the soul and in fact are resolved into a single form, that of soul, and become unbodied minds. Naturally then the earthly 34 element is destroyed and dissolved when the mind in all its powers has a fixed purpose to be well pleasing to God.

But that kind is rare and hardly to be found, though that such should be is not impossible. This is shown by the oracle vouchsafed about Enoch. " Enoch was well pleasing to God and was not found " <sup>a</sup> (Gen. v. 24), for where 35 could one search and find this good thing, what seas should he cross, what islands, what continents should he visit? Shall he look for it among the Greeks or the barbarians? Indeed are there not still among 36 the disciples of philosophy some who say that a wise man is non-existent <sup>b</sup> and therefore wisdom also? None, they say, from the beginning of man's creation up to the life of to-day has been held to be completely free from fault, for absolute happiness is impossible to one who is imprisoned in the mortal body. Whether 37 these statements are true we will inquire at the proper occasion. At present we will accept the text and say that wisdom is indeed something which exists, and so too is the lover of wisdom, the sage, but, though he exists, we who are evil fail to see him, for good cannot keep company with bad. Therefore 38 we are told that " he was not found," this type of character which was well pleasing to God, meaning

<sup>a</sup> E.V. " Enoch walked with God ; and he was not ; for God took him " (LXX μετέθηκε). For " found " see App. p. 587.

<sup>b</sup> See App. pp. 587 f.

PHILO

- αρκτὸς μὲν ὢν, ἀποκρυπτόμενος δὲ καὶ τὴν εἰς ταῦτὸ σύνοδον ἡμῶν ἀποδιδράσκων, ἐπειδὴ καὶ μετατεθῆναι λέγεται, τὸ δ' ἐστὶ μεταναστῆναι καὶ μετοικίαν στείλασθαι τὴν ἀπὸ θνητοῦ βίου πρὸς τὸν ἀθάνατον.
- 39 V. Οὗτοι μὲν δὴ τὴν ἔνθεον μανίαν μανέντες ἐξηγγιώθησαν, ἕτεροι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ τῆς τιθασοῦ καὶ ἡμέρου σοφίας ἑταῖροι. τούτοις καὶ εὐσέβεια διαφερόντως ἀσκεῖται καὶ τὰ ἀνθρώπεια οὐχ ὑπεροράται. μάρτυρες δ' οἱ χρησμοί, ἐν οἷς λέγεται τῷ Ἀβραάμ ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ θεοῦ· “εὐαρέσκει ἐνώπιον ἐμοῦ,” τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ μὴ ἐμοὶ μόνῳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἐμοῖς ἔργοις παρ' ἐμοὶ κριτῆ, ὡς ἐφόρῳ
- 40 καὶ ἐπισκόπῳ. τιμῶν γὰρ γονεῖς ἢ πένητας ἐλεῶν ἢ φίλους εὐεργετῶν ἢ πατρίδος ὑπερασπίζων ἢ τῶν κοινῶν πρὸς ἅπαντας ἀνθρώπους δικαίων ἐπι-μελούμενος εὐαρεστήσεις μὲν πάντως τοῖς χρω-μένοις, θεοῦ δ' ἐνώπιον εὐαρεστήσεις· ἀκοιμήτῳ γὰρ ὀφθαλμῷ βλέπει πάντα καὶ τὰ σπουδαῖα χάριτι ἐξαιρέτῳ πρὸς ἑαυτὸν καλεῖ καὶ ἀποδέχεται.
- 41 τοιγάρτοι καὶ ὁ ἀσκητῆς εὐχόμενος ταῦτὸν ἀποδηλώσει φάσκων· “ὁ θεός, ᾧ εὐηρέστησαν οἱ πατέρες μου” καὶ προστίθῃσιν “ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ,” χάριν τοῦ γνῶναι τὴν πραγματικὴν διαφορὰν τοῦ “θεῷ” εὐαρεστεῖν πρὸς τὸ “ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ”· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἀμφότερα περιέχει,<sup>1</sup> τὸ δὲ θάτερον μόνον.
- 42 οὕτω καὶ Μωυσῆς ἐν τοῖς προτρεπτικοῖς παραινεί λέγων· “τὸ εὐάρεστον ποιήσεις ἐνώπιον κυρίου τοῦ θεοῦ σου,” οἷον τοιαῦτα πρᾶττε, ἃ γενήσεται ἐπάξια τοῦ φανῆναι θεῷ καὶ ἄπερ ἰδὼν ἀποδέξεται·

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παρέχει.

<sup>a</sup> As E.V. in Hebrews xi. 5.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. Quis Rerum 127.

<sup>c</sup> See note on De Fug. 170.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 38-42

doubtless that though actually existing he was hidden from us and shunned our company. And to confirm this we read that he was "translated" <sup>a</sup> (ibid.), that is, changed his abode and journeyed as an emigrant from the mortal life to the immortal.

V. These are men inspired with heaven-sent madness, men who have gone out into the wild. But there are others who have followed a tame and gentle wisdom,<sup>b</sup> and such are both eminent in the practice of piety and do not despise human things. This is attested by the oracle in which it is said to Abraham, with God as speaker, "Be well pleasing before Me" (Gen. xvii. 1), that is, "be well pleasing not to Me only but to My works, while I as judge watch and survey thee." For if you honour parents or show 40 mercy to the poor or do kindness to your friends or defend your country or observe with care your duties to all men in general, you will surely be well pleasing to all with whom you have to do, but also well pleasing before God. For He with an eye that never sleeps beholds all things, and what is good He summons to Himself and approves with special favour. And therefore the Practiser in his prayer will show 41 us the same truth. "The God," he says, "to whom my fathers were well pleasing," and adds "before Him" (Gen. xlvi. 15) to show us the difference in fact between being pleasing "to Him" and "before Him." The latter embraces both kinds of well pleasing, the former is confined to one only. And 42 so Moses in his Exhortations<sup>c</sup> charges them in these words: "Thou shalt do what is well pleasing before the Lord thy God" (Deut. xii. 28), meaning do such things as shall be worthy to appear before God, and when seen to be approved by Him, and such ταῦτα δὲ καὶ εἰς τοὺς ὁμοίους<sup>1</sup> εἴωθε χωρεῖν.

PHILO

 43 ἐντεῦθεν ὀρμηθεῖς τὴν τε σκηνην δυσὶ περιβόλων ὀρίοις συνύφαινε, μέσον ἀμφοῖν κάλυμμα θείσ, ὅπως διακρίνηται τῶν εἴσω τὰ ἔξω, καὶ τὴν νομοφυλακίδα ἱερὰν κιβωτὸν ἔνδοθεν καὶ ἔξωθεν ἐχρύσωσε, καὶ τῷ μεγάλῳ ἱερεῖ διττὰς ἀνέδωκε στολάς, τὴν μὲν λιγὴν ἔνδον, τὴν δὲ ποικίλην ἔξω 44 μετὰ τοῦ ποδήρους. ταῦτα γὰρ καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα σύμβολα ψυχῆς ἐστὶ καὶ τοῖς εἴσω πρὸς θεὸν ἀγνευούσης καὶ [ἐν] τοῖς ἔξω πρὸς τὸν αἰσθητὸν κόσμον καὶ βίον καθαρευούσης. εὐστόχως οὖν ἐκεῖνο πρὸς τὸν παλαιστὴν νικηφόρον ἐλέχθη μέλ-λοντα τοῖς νικητηρίοις ἀναδειῖσθαι στεφάνοις. τὸ [585] γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῷ | κήρυγμα τοιοῦτόν ἐστι. “ἰσχυσας
 45 μετὰ θεοῦ καὶ μετὰ ἀνθρώπων δυνατός.” τὸ γὰρ καθ' ἑκατέραν τάξιν εὐδοκιμῆσαι, καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸ ἀγένητον καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸ γεγόμενον, οὐ μικρὰς ἐστὶ διανοίας, ἀλλ', εἰ δεῖ τάληθές εἰπεῖν, κόσμου καὶ θεοῦ μεθορίου· συνόλως τε προσήκει τὸν ἀστείον ὀπαδὸν εἶναι θεοῦ· μέλει γὰρ τῷ πάντων ἡγεμόνι 46 καὶ πατρὶ τοῦ γενομένου. τίς γὰρ οὐκ οἶδεν, ὅτι καὶ πρὸ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως ἱκανὸς ἦν αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ ὁ θεὸς καὶ μετὰ τὴν τοῦ κόσμου γένεσιν ὁ αὐτὸς ἔμενεν, οὐ μεταβαλὼν; διὰ τί οὖν ἐποίει τὰ μὴ ὄντα; ἢ ὅτι ἀγαθὸς καὶ φιλόδωρος ἦν; εἴτ' οὐχ εἰσόμεθα οἱ δοῦλοι τῷ δεσπότῃ, θαυμάζοντες

<sup>1</sup> The text is questioned by Mangey and Wendland and Cohn, who proposed different emendations, in the first two cases bearing little likeness to the original. Cohn suggested ἐκτὸς ὁμοίως. I see no reason to dispute the text. The use of οἱ ὅμοιοι for “our neighbours” in antithesis to God is exactly paralleled in Quis Rerum 172 τῶν πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοίους ἀδικημάτων,

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 42-46

deeds as these commonly extend to our fellow-men.

It was this thought which prompted 43 Moses when he wove the tabernacle, dividing its precincts into two, and set a curtain between the parts to distinguish the inner from the outer (Ex. xxvi.
33); when too he gilded the sacred ark which holds the laws both within and without (Ex. xxv. 10), and gave the high priest two robes, the linen robe to be worn within, the many-coloured one with the long skirt to be worn outside (Ex. xxviii. 4, Lev. vi. 10).
These and the like are symbols of a soul which in 44 inward things is undefiled towards God and in outward things is pure towards the world of our senses and human life. And so those were fitting words which were said to the victorious wrestler when he was about to be crowned with garlands of triumph.
For "Thou hast been strong with God and mighty with men" (Gen. xxxii. 28) were the words which proclaimed his victory. To win honour in both spheres, in 45 our duty both towards the uncreated and the created, requires no petty mind, but one which stands in very truth midway between the world and God.
And in sum the man of worth should follow in the steps of God, for the Ruler and Father of all cares for His creatures. We all know that before the 46 creation of the world God was sufficient unto Himself and that after the creation He remained the same, unchanged. Why then did He make the things which were not? Why, save because He was good<sup>a</sup> and bountiful? Shall not then we His slaves

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 588.

---

where no question is raised by the objectors to this passage.
For χωρεῖν εἰς cf. § 150.

PHILO

- μὲν τὸν αἴτιον ὑπερφυῶς, τῆς δὲ καθ' αὐτοὺς φύσεως μὴ ὑπερορῶντες;
- 47 VI. Εἰπὼν δὲ “εὐαρέστει ἐνώπιον ἐμοῦ” προσεπιλέγει· “καὶ γίνου ἄμεμπτος,” ἀκολουθία καὶ εἰρμῶ χρώμενος. μᾶλλον μὲν οὖν ἐγχείρει τοῖς καλοῖς, ἵνα εὐαρεσθῆς· εἰ δὲ μή, τῶν γε ἀμαρτημάτων ἀπέχου, ἵνα μὴ τυγχάνῃς μέμφεως. ὁ μὲν γὰρ κατορθῶν ἐπαινετός, ὁ δὲ μὴ ἀδικῶν οὐ
- 48 ψεκτός. καὶ τὸ μὲν πρεσβυτικὸν<sup>1</sup> ἀθλον κατορθοῦσι πρόκειται, τὸ εὐαρεστον, τὸ δεύτερον δὲ μὴ ἀμαρτάνουσι, τὸ ἄμεμπτον. τάχα δὲ καὶ γενέσει τῇ θνητῇ τὸ μὴ διαμαρτάνειν ἴσον καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ γρά-φεται τῷ κατορθοῦντι. “τίς γάρ,” ὡς ὁ Ἰώβ
- 49 ἦ ζωῆ;” ἄπειρα μὲν ἐστὶ τὰ καταρρυπαίνοντα τὴν ψυχὴν, ἅπερ ἐκνίψασθαι καὶ ἀπολούσασθαι παντελῶς οὐκ ἔνεστιν. ἀπολείπονται γὰρ ἐξ ἀνάγκης παντὶ θνητῷ συγγενεῖς κήρες, ἅς λωφῆσαι μὲν εἰκός, ἀναιρεθῆναι δ' εἰσάπαν ἀδύνατον.
- 50 δίκαιον οὖν ἢ φρόνιμον ἢ σώφρονα ἢ συνόλως ἀγαθὸν τέλειον ἐν πεφυρμένῳ βίῳ ζητεῖ τις; στέργε, κἂν μὴ ἀδικον ἢ μὴ ἄφρονα ἢ μὴ ἀκόλαστον ἢ μὴ δειλὸν ἢ μὴ παντελῶς φαῦλον εὕρησ.<sup>2</sup> ἀγαπητὸν γὰρ αἰ τῶν κακιῶν ἀνατροπαί, τῶν δ' ἀρετῶν ἢ ἐντελής κτήσις ἀδύνατος ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ
- 51 καθ' ἡμᾶς. εὐλόγως οὖν ἔφη· “γίνου ἄμεμπτος,”

<sup>1</sup> So mss., but the adjective seems to be only known in the sense of “senile” or “antiquated.” Probably, as Wend. suggests, read πρεσβύτατον.

<sup>2</sup> mss. εὐρήσεις. Or perhaps κἂν <εἰ> . . . εὐρήσεις (W.H.D.R.). The καὶ in any case however seems otiose, and ἐὰν . . . εὕρης would be more natural.

<sup>a</sup> For the general thought of this passage with the same

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 46-51

follow our Master with profoundest awe and reverence for Him Who is the Cause, yet not forgetting the calls of our common humanity? <sup>a</sup>

VI. After saying "Be well pleasing before Me" <sup>47</sup> He adds further "and become blameless." This is in close sequence to the preceding. "Best it is," He means, "to set your hand to excellence and thus be well pleasing, but failing this at least abstain from sins and thus escape blame." For positively righteous conduct <sup>b</sup> brings praise to the doer, but abstention from iniquity saves him from censure. The highest prize of "well pleasing" may be won <sup>48</sup> by positive well-doing, the second, freedom from blame, by avoidance of sin. And yet perhaps for the creature of mortal kind the former is declared by Scripture to coincide with the latter. For who, as Job says, is pure from defilement, even if his life be but for one day? (Job xiv. 4). Infinite indeed are <sup>49</sup> the defilements that soil the soul, which it is impossible to wash and scour away altogether. For there still remain evils which are bound up with the life of every mortal, which may well be abated but cannot be wholly destroyed. Should we then seek to <sup>50</sup> find in the medley of life one who is perfectly just or wise or temperate or good in general? Be satisfied, if you do but find one who is not unjust, is not foolish, is not licentious, is not cowardly, is not altogether evil. We may be content with the overthrow of vices, and the complete acquisition of virtues is impossible for man, as we know him. With good reason then did He say, "Become blame- <sup>51</sup> illustration from the two robes and the words of Gen. xxxii. <sup>28</sup> cf. the fuller exposition in De Ebr. 80-87.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 588.

[586] μέγα πλεονέκτημα πρὸς εὐδαίμονα | βίον ὑπολαβὼν εἶναι τὸ ἀναμάρτητον καὶ ἀνυπαίτιον.

τῷ δὲ ἡρημένῳ ζῆν τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον καὶ κληρον κατὰ διαθήκας ἀπολείψειν ὁμολογεῖ τὸν ἀρμόζοντα δοῦναι μὲν θεῷ, λαβεῖν δὲ σοφῷ. φησὶ γάρ· 52 “ θήσω τὴν διαθήκην μου ἀνὰ μέσον ἐμοῦ καὶ ἀνὰ μέσον σοῦ.” διαθήκαι δὲ ἐπ’ ὠφελεία γράφονται τῶν δωρεᾶς ἀξίων, ὥστε σύμβολον εἶναι διαθήκην χάριτος, ἣν μέσῃν ἔθηκεν ὁ θεὸς ἑαυτοῦ τε ὀρέ-53 γοντος καὶ ἀνθρώπου λαμβάνοντος. ὑπερβολὴ δὲ εὐεργεσίας τοῦτό ἐστι, μὴ εἶναι θεοῦ καὶ ψυχῆς μέσον, ὅτι μὴ τὴν παρθένον χάριτα. τὸν δὲ περι διαθηκῶν σύμπαντα λόγον ἐν δυσὶν ἀναγέγραφα συντάξεις καὶ ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ παλινωδεῖν ἐκῶν ὑπερβαίνω καὶ ἅμα μὴ βουλόμενος ἀπαρτᾶν τὸ συμφυῆς τῆς πραγματείας.

54 VII. Λέγεται δ’ ἐξῆς· “ ἔπescen Ἀβραὰμ ἐπὶ πρόσωπον.” ἄρ’ οὐκ ἔμελλεν ὑποσχέσει θείαις γνώναί τε ἑαυτὸν καὶ τὴν τοῦ θνητοῦ γένους οὐδένειαν καὶ πεσεῖν παρὰ τὸν ἐστῶτα εἰς ἔνδειξιν τῆς ὑπολήψεως, ἣν περὶ ἑαυτοῦ τε ἔσχε καὶ θεοῦ, ὅτι ὁ μὲν κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ ἐστῶς κινεῖ τὴν σύμπασαν στάσιν, οὐ διὰ τῶν σκελῶν—οὐ γὰρ ἀνθρωπόμορφος, —ἀλλὰ τὴν ἄτρεπτον καὶ ἀμετάβλητον ἐμφαί-55 νουσαν,<sup>1</sup> ὁ δ’ οὐδέποτε ἐν ταυτῷ βεβαίως ἰδρυμένος

<sup>1</sup> κινεῖ . . . ἐμφαίνουσιν. Following Wend. I have left this part of the sentence as the mss. have it. But it is clearly corrupt, and Markland, Cohn and Wend. have suggested various emendations. The translation is based on a suggestion of my own that for στάσιν we should read τάσιν (self-extension). Cf. De Sac. 68 ἔστηκα . . . οὐ μεταβατικῶς κινούμενος . . . ἀλλὰ τονικῆ χρώμενος τῇ κινήσει, also De Post 30.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 51-55

less," for He holds that freedom from sin and guilt is a great furtherance towards a happy life.

And to him who has elected to live in this fashion He promises to leave a covenanted portion such as is fitting for God to give and man to receive, for He says "I will set my covenant between Me and 52 between thee" (Gen. xvii. 2). Now covenants are drawn up for the benefit of those who are worthy of the gift, and thus a covenant is a symbol of the grace which God has set between Himself Who proffers it and man who receives. And this is the 53 crowning benefaction, that there is nothing between God and the soul save the virgin grace. But I have dealt with the whole subject of covenants in two treatises, and I willingly pass it over to avoid repetition, and also because I do not wish to interrupt the continuity of the discussion.

VII. The next words are "Abraham fell on his 54 face." Ah, what else should he do, when he heard the divine promises, but know himself and the nothingness of our mortal race, and fall at the feet of Him Who stands, to show what conception he held of himself and God? He knew that God stands with place unchanged, yet moves the universal frame of creation, His own motion being the motion of self-extension (not the movement of the legs, for He is not of human form), but a motion whereby He shows His unalterable, unchanging nature. He 55 knew that he himself is never firmly set in a stable

---

I regard this however as very conjectural. If it were adopted, the rest of the passage might run somewhat as follows: κινεί τὴν σύμπασαν <φύσιν or γένεσιν or σύστασιν κατὰ> τάσιν . . . ἀλλὰ <τὸ> ἀτρεπτον καὶ ἀμετάβλητον ἐμφαίνουσαν. (Markland in place of the insertion of τό suggested ἐμφαίνων οὐσίαν.)

PHILO

ἄλλοτε ἀλλοίας δέχεται μεταβολὰς καὶ ὑποσκελιζόμενος, ὁ δυστυχῆς,—ὄλισθος γὰρ σύμπας ὁ βίος 56 ἔστιν αὐτῷ—μέγα πτώμα πίπτει; ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἄκων ἀμαθῆς, ὁ δ' ἐκὼν εὐάγωγος· οὐδ' χάριν καὶ ἐπὶ πρόσωπον πεσεῖν λέγεται, ἐπὶ τὰς αἰσθήσεις, ἐπὶ τὸν λόγον, ἐπὶ τὸν νοῦν, μονοῦ βοῶν καὶ κεκραγῶς, ὅτι πέπτωκε μὲν αἰσθησις ἐξ αὐτῆς ἀδυνατοῦσα αἰσθάνεσθαι, εἰ μὴ προμηθεΐα τοῦ σωτῆρος ἀνεγερθεῖη πρὸς τὴν τῶν ὑποκειμένων σωμάτων ἀντίληψιν, πέπτωκε δὲ καὶ ὁ λόγος ἐρμηνεύσαι τι τῶν ὄντων ἀδυνατῶν, εἰ μὴ διανοίξας τὸ στόμα καὶ τὴν γλῶτταν ἀρθρώσας ὁ τὸ φω-νητήριον ὄργανον κατεσκευακῶς καὶ ἄρμοσάμενος πλήξειε τοὺς φθόγγους μουσικῶς, πέπτωκε δὲ καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς νοῦς τὰς καταλήψεις ἀφηρημένος, εἰ μὴ πάλιν αὐτὸν ἐγείρας ὁ ζωοπλάστης ἰδρύσαιτο καὶ ἐνομματώσας ὀξυδερκέσι κόραις ἀγάγοι πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἀσωμάτων θέαν πραγμάτων.

57 VIII. | Ἀγάμενος οὖν τὸν αὐτὸν ἀποδιδρά-[587] σκοντα τρόπον καὶ ἐκούσιον πτώμα πίπτοντα διὰ τὴν ὁμολογίαν ἣν ὠμολόγησε περὶ τοῦ ὄντος, ὅτι πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἔστως ἐν ἣν ἄρα, τῶν μετ' αὐτὸ τροπὰς καὶ μεταβολὰς παντοίας<sup>1</sup> ἐνδεχομένων, ἐνηχεῖ τε καὶ λόγου μεταδίδωσι φάσκων· “ καγῶ, 58 ἴδου ἡ διαθήκη μου μετὰ σοῦ.” τοῦτο δὲ τοιοῦτον ὑποβάλλει νοῦν· εἶδη μὲν διαθήκης ἐστὶ πάμπολλα χάριτας καὶ δωρεὰς τοῖς ἀξίοις ἀπονέμοντα, τὸ δ' ἀνώτατον γένος διαθηκῶν αὐτὸς ἐγὼ εἶμι. δείξας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. παντοίων.

<sup>a</sup> Literally “he both speaks with emphasis (or “instructs”) and gives him a share of the speech.” See App. p. 588.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 55-58

position, that he is ever subject to various changes, and that throughout his life, which is one long slipping, he trips and falls, woe to him ! and how great is that fall. Sometimes it is through involuntary 56 ignorance, sometimes through voluntary yielding to temptation, and so we read also that it was on his face that he fell. By face is meant his senses and his mind and his speech, and the gesture is little less than a loud insistent utterance. Fallen is sense, it cries, unable of itself to perceive, were it not by a dispensation of God's saving providence set on its feet to the perception of material substances : fallen is speech, because it were unable to express in language anything that is, did not He Who framed and adjusted to harmony the instrument of the voice beat out the music of its notes, opening the mouth and giving strength to the nerves of the tongue : fallen too is the royal mind, robbed of its powers of apprehension, did not the Framer of all that lives raise it up and establish it, and planting in it far-piercing eyes, lead it to the sight of the immaterial world.

VIII. The frame of mind which shrank from Him 57 and fell spontaneously won God's high approval by thus acknowledging of the Existent that it is He alone Who stands and that all below Him are subject to change and mutation of every kind. He addresses him with an insistence which is also a call to partnership.<sup>a</sup> "And I," He says, "—see, My covenant is with thee" (Gen. xvii. 4). The meaning suggested is to 58 this purport—there are very many kinds of covenant, assuring bounties and gifts to the worthy, but the highest form of covenant is "I myself." He shews and

PHILO

γὰρ ἑαυτόν, ὡς ἐνήν δειχθῆναι τὸν ἄδεικτον, διὰ τοῦ φάναι “καὶ γὰρ” ἐπιλέγει· “ἰδοὺ ἡ διαθήκη μου”· ἡ πασῶν χαρίτων ἀρχὴ τε καὶ πηγὴ αὐτός

59 εἶμι ἐγώ. τοῖς μὲν γὰρ δι’ ἐτέρων τὰς εὐεργεσίας εἴωθε προτείνειν ὁ θεός, γῆς, ὕδατος, ἀέρος, ἡλίου, σελήνης, οὐρανοῦ, δυνάμεων ἄλλων ἀσωμάτων, τοῖς δὲ δι’ ἑαυτοῦ μόνου, κλήρον ἀποφίνας τῶν λαμβανόντων ἑαυτόν, οὓς εὐθέως καὶ προσρήσεως

60 ἐτέρας ἡξίωσε. λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “οὐ κληθήσεται τὸ ὄνομά σου Ἀβράμ, ἀλλ’ ἔσται τὸ ὄνομά σου Ἀβραάμ.” ἔνιοι μὲν οὖν τῶν φιλαπεχθημόνων καὶ μώμους αἰεὶ τοῖς ἀμώμοις προσάπτειν ἐθελόντων οὐ σώμασι μᾶλλον ἢ πράγμασι καὶ πόλεμον ἀκήρυκτον πολεμοῦντων τοῖς ἱεροῖς πάνθ’ ὅσα μὴ τὸ εὐπρεπὲς ἐν λόγῳ διασφύζειν δοκεῖ σύμβολα φύσεως τῆς αἰεὶ κρύπτεσθαι φιλούσης ὑπάρχοντα μετ’ (οὐκ)<sup>1</sup> ἀκριβοῦς ἐρεύνης φανύσαντες ἐπὶ διαβολῇ προφέρουσι, διαφερόντως δὲ τὰς τῶν

61 ὀνομάτων μεταθέσεις. καὶ πρῶην ἤκουσα χλευάζοντος καὶ κατακερτομοῦντος ἀνδρὸς ἀθέου καὶ ἀσεβοῦς, ὃς ἐτόλμα λέγειν· μεγάλαί δὲ<sup>2</sup> καὶ ὑπερβάλλουσαι δωρεαί, ἃς φησι Μωυσῆς τὸν ἡγεμόνα τῶν ὄλων ὀρέγειν· στοιχείου (γὰρ) προσθήκη, τοῦ ἐνὸς ἄλφα, [στοιχείῳ περιττεύει]<sup>3</sup> καὶ πάλιν ἐτέρα προσθέσει τοῦ ῥῶ θαυμαστὴν ἡλικὴν ἔδοξεν εὐεργεσίαν παρεσχῆσθαι * * * τὴν Ἀβραὰμ γυναικα Σάραν Σάρραν ὠνόμασε δις τὸ ῥῶ παρα-

<sup>1</sup> This or Wend.’s other suggestion of δίχα is needed to correspond with φιλούσης κρύπτεσθαι, which would be pointless with the ms. reading μετ’ ἀκριβοῦς (“hunting everywhere for examples”).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δὲ.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 58-61

points to Himself, as far as He can be shewn Who is above all shewing, by the words "And I," and adds, "behold my covenant," the beginning and the fountain of all bounties is "I myself." For to some God 59 is wont to extend His benefactions by other means, earth, water, air, sun, moon, heaven, and other agencies not material, but to others by Himself alone, making Himself the portion of those who receive Him. On these He presently bestows as their due 60 a different name. "Thy name shall not be called Abram ('Αβράμ)," we read, "but Abraham ('Αβραάμ)" (Gen. xvii. 5).

Some of the quarrelsome and captious type of people who wish to attach blame where it is not due, not so much to material things as to actions and ideas,<sup>a</sup> and wage war to the death against what is holy, when they find anything which seems to them to fall short in propriety if taken literally, while really it is a symbol of the nature-truth which loves concealment, make no careful search for that truth, but disparage it and hold it up to obloquy. And this they do especially with the changes of names.

Not long ago I heard the scoffing and railing of a 61 godless and impious fellow who dared to speak thus: "Vast and extraordinary indeed are the gifts which Moses says come from the hand of the Ruler of all. What a boon He is supposed to have provided by adding a single letter, an alpha, and again by another addition of a rho, for He (turned Abram ('Αβράμ) into Abraham ('Αβραάμ) by doubling the alpha, and) Abraham's wife Sarai (Σάρα) into Sarah (Σάρρα) by

<sup>a</sup> See note on Quis Rerum 242.

<sup>3</sup> See App. pp. 588 f.

PHILO

λαβών.<sup>1</sup> καὶ ὅσα ὁμοιότροπα συνείρων ἀπνευστὶ καὶ 62 ἐπισαρκάζων ἅμα διεξήει. τῆς μὲν οὖν φρενοβλαβείας οὐκ εἰς μακρὰν ἔδωκε τὴν ἀρμόζουσαν δίκην· ἀπὸ γὰρ μικρᾶς καὶ τῆς τυχούσης προφάσεως ἐπ' ἀγχόνην ἤξεν, ἢ ὁ μιαρὸς καὶ δυσκάθατος μηδὲ καθαρῶ θανάτῳ τελευτήσῃ.

IX. Δικαίως δ' ἂν ἡμεῖς ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ καὶ ἕτερον τοῖς αὐτοῖς ἀλῶναι τὰς ὑπονοίας ἐκκόψαιμεν, φυσιολογούντες καὶ ἀποδεικνύντες τὰ λεγόμενα 63 ταῦτα πάσης ἐπάξια σπουδῆς. οὐ (γὰρ) γράμματα ἄφωνα ἢ φωνήεντα ἢ συνόλως ῥήματα καὶ ὀνόματα [588] χαρίζεται ὁ θεός, | ὅποτε καὶ γεννήσας φυτὰ τε αὐ καὶ ζῶα ἐκάλεσεν ὡς πρὸς ἡγεμόνα τὸν ἄνθρωπον, ὄν<sup>2</sup> ἐκ πάντων δι' ἐπιστήμην ἐχώρισεν, ἢ ἐκάστοις τὰ οἰκεία ὀνόματα θῆται. “πᾶν” γάρ φησιν “ὁ ἂν ἐκάλεσεν ὁ Ἀδάμ, τοῦτο ὄνομα τοῦ κληθέντος 64 ἦν.” εἴθ' ὅπου οὐδὲ τὰς ὀλοκλήρους θέσεις τῶν ὀνομάτων ὁ θεὸς ἡξίωσεν ἐπιφημίσειν, ἐπιτρέψας ἀνδρὶ σοφῶ, τῷ γένους ἀνθρώπων ἀρχηγέτῃ, τὸ ἔργον, ὑπονοεῖν ἄξιον, ὅτι μέρη τῶν ὀνομάτων ἢ συλλαβὰς ἢ γράμματα, οὐ φωνήεντα μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄφωνα, αὐτὸς προσετίθει καὶ μεθῆρμοζε, καὶ ταῦτ' ἐπὶ προφάσει δωρεᾶς καὶ ὑπερβαλλούσης 65 εὐεργεσίας; οὐκ ἔστιν εἰπεῖν. ἀλλὰ τὰ τοιαῦτα χαρακτῆρες δυνάμεων εἰσι, βραχεῖς μεγάλων, αἰσθητοὶ νοητῶν, φανεροὶ ἀδήλων· αἱ δὲ δυνάμεις ἐν δόγμασιν ἀρίστοις, ἐν ἀψευδέσι καὶ καθαραῖς

<sup>1</sup> I leave this sentence as Wendland prints it, with the ms. τὸ ἐνὸς corrected to τοῦ, προσθεῖς to προσθέσει and τὴν ῥῶ to τὸ ῥῶ, and in the translation have followed what he supplies for the supposed lacuna after παρεσχῆσθαι. For other possibilities see App. pp. 588 f.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ὁς (Mangey ὁς καὶ πάντων δι' ἐπιστήμης ἐχώρησε).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 61-65

doubling the rho." And in a sneering way he ran over the list of such cases without a moment's pause. Well, it was not long before he paid the penalty 62 which his wicked folly called for. For a slight and trivial cause he hastened to hang himself, and thus even a clean death was denied to the unclean miscreant.

IX. It is only right that to prevent any other falling a victim to the same errors we should eradicate misgivings of this sort <sup>a</sup> by resorting to the truths of nature and shewing that what we thus read is worthy of our most earnest consideration. Letters, 63 whether vowels or consonants and the parts of speech in general, are not the gifts of God's grace, seeing that when He created the plants and animals He summoned them to man as their ruler, set apart by Him from them all in virtue of his knowledge, that he might give each kind their distinguishing names. "Everything," he says, "which Adam called them, that was their name" (Gen. ii. 19). If God did not 64 think fit to assign names even in their completed form, but committed the task to a man of wisdom, the founder of the human race, is it proper to suppose that parts of names or syllables or single letters, not merely vocal vowels but mute consonants, were added and altered by Himself, and a gift and pre-eminent benefaction alleged to be conferred thereby? It is quite impossible. Such changes of name are signs <sup>b</sup> of 65 moral values, the signs small, sensible, obvious, the values great, intelligible, hidden. And these values are found in noble verities, in unerring and pure notions, <sup>a</sup> This use of ὑπονομίας is strange, though Wend.'s suggestion of τὰς <τοιαύτας> ὑπ. or Mangey's τὰς <κακὰς> ὑπ. would make it more natural. See App. p. 589.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 589.

PHILO

- ὑπολήψεσιν, ἐν ψυχῆς βελτιώσεσιν<sup>1</sup> ἐξετάζονται.
 τὸν δὲ ἔλεγχον λαμβάνειν εὐμαρὲς τὴν ἀρχὴν ποιησαμένοις ἀπὸ τοῦ νυνὶ μετονομασθέντος.
- 66 Ἀβραὰμ γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται μετέωρος πατήρ, Ἀβραὰμ δὲ πατήρ ἐκλεκτὸς ἡχοῦς. ἥ δὲ διαφέρει ταυτ' ἀλλήλων, εἰσόμεθα σαφέστερον, ἐπειδὴν τὸ δηλού-
- 67 μενον ὑφ'<sup>2</sup> ἑκατέρου πρότερον ἀναγνώμεν. μετέωρον τοίνυν ἀλληγοῦροντές φαμεν τὸν ἀπὸ γῆς ἑαυτὸν εἰς ὕψος ἀΐροντα καὶ ἐπισκοποῦντα τὰ μετάρσια, μετεωροπόλον τε καὶ μετεωρολογικόν, ἐρευνῶντα τί ἡλίου μέγεθος, τίνες αὐτοῦ φοραί, πῶς τὰς ἔτησίους ὥρας διανέμει προσίων καὶ ἐξαναχωρῶν πάλιν ἰσοταχέσι ταῖς ἀνακυκλήσεσι, καὶ σελήνης περὶ φωτισμῶν, σχηματισμῶν, μειώσεως, αὐξήσεως, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων κινήσεως, ἀπλανοῦς
- 68 τε καὶ πεπλανημένης. ἥ γὰρ τούτων ἐξέτασις οὐκ ἀφυοῦς καὶ ἀγόνου ψυχῆς ἐστίν, ἀλλ' ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα εὐφυοῦς καὶ δυναμένης ὀλόκληρα καὶ τέλεια γεννᾶν ἔγγονα. διὸ καὶ τὸν μετεωρολογικόν “πατέρα” εἶπεν, ὅτι οὐκ ἄγονος σοφίας.
- 69 X. τὰ μὲν οὖν τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ σύμβολα οὕτως ἀκριβοῦται, τὰ δὲ τοῦ Ἀβραάμ, ὡς ὑποδείξομεν· ἦν δὲ τρία, πατήρ καὶ ἐκλεκτὸς καὶ ἡχοῦς. φαμέν δὴ τὴν μὲν ἡχὴν τὸν προφορικὸν εἶναι λόγον—τοῦ γὰρ ζώου ἡχείον ὄργανόν ἐστι τὸ φωνητήριον,—τούτου δὲ πατέρα τὸν νοῦν—ἀπὸ γὰρ διανοίας ὥσπερ ἀπὸ [589] πηγῆς φέρεται τὸ τοῦ λόγου νᾶμα,— | ἐκλεκτὸν δὲ τὸν τοῦ σοφοῦ· ὃ τι γὰρ ἄριστον, ἐν τούτῳ.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ψυχαῖς βελτίοσιν.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀφ'.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 65-69

and in soul-betterments. The proof of this is easy, starting from the change of name here before us, for Abram is interpreted as "uplifted 66 father," Abraham as "elect father of sound."<sup>a</sup> How the two differ we shall understand more clearly if we first discover the meaning of each. Resorting then to 67 allegory we say that "uplifted" is one who rising from earth to the heights surveys the supraterrrestrial, conversing with and studying the phenomena of the upper world, investigating the size of the sun and its courses, how it regulates the seasons of the year by its revolutions as it advances and retreats at the same rate of speed; one who considers also the different illuminations of the moon, its phases, its waning and waxing, and the movement of the other stars both in the fixed and the planetary order. To inquire into such 68 matters bespeaks a soul not devoid of natural gifts or unproductive, but highly gifted and capable of engendering offspring perfect and without blemish; and therefore he called the student of the upper world "father" because he is not unproductive of 69 wisdom.

X. Such is our definition of the 69 meanings conveyed under the symbol of the name Abram; those conveyed by "Abraham" are such as I proceed to describe. They are three in number—"father," "elect" and "of sound." We say that sound stands for the uttered word, for in living creatures the instrument of sound is the vocal power. Its father is the mind, since the stream of speech issues from the understanding as its fount. The elect mind is the mind of the wise, since it contains what <sup>a</sup> The interpretation of Abram and Abraham has already been given in De Cher. 4 f. and De Gig. 62 f. That of Sarai and Sarah in De Cher. 5 f.

PHILO

- 70 κατὰ μὲν οὖν τοὺς προτέρους χαρακτῆρας ὁ φιλομαθῆς καὶ μετεωρολέσχης ἐσκιαγραφείτο, κατὰ δὲ τοὺς ἀρτίως ὑποτυπωθέντας ὁ φιλόσοφος, μᾶλλον δ' ὁ σοφὸς ἐδηλοῦτο. μηκέτ' οὖν ὀνομάτων ἀλ-λαγὴν ὑπολάβης χαρίζεσθαι τὸ θεῖον, ἀλλὰ διὰ 71 συμβόλων ἡθῶν ἐπανόρθωσιν. τὸν γὰρ πραγματευόμενον τὰ περὶ φύσεως οὐρανοῦ πρότερον, ὃν μαθηματικὸν ἔνιοι προσαγορεύουσιν, ἐπὶ τὴν μετουσίαν καλέσας ἀρετῆς σοφὸν καὶ ἀπέδειξε καὶ ὠνόμασεν, ἐπιφημίσας τὸν μεταχαραχθέντα τρόπον, ὡς μὲν Ἑβραῖοι εἶποιεν· ἂν, Ἀβραάμ, ὡς δ' ἂν 72 Ἕλληνες, πατέρα ἐκλεκτὸν ἡχοῦς. τίνος γάρ, φησὶν, ἔνεκα χορείας καὶ περιόδους ἀστέρων ἐρευνηᾶς καὶ τοσοῦτον ἀπὸ γῆς ἄνω πρὸς αἰθέρα πεπήδηκας; ἀρ' ἵνα αὐτὸ μόνον τὰ ἐκεῖ περιεργάσῃ; καὶ τίς ἐκ τῆς τοσαύτης περιεργίας γένοιτ' ἂν ὠφέλεια;
 τίς καθαίρεισις ἡδονῆς; τίς ἐπιθυμίας ἀνατροπή;
 τίς λύπης ἢ φόβου κατάλυσις; ποία παθῶν, ἃ 73 κλονεῖ καὶ συγχεῖ τὴν ψυχὴν, ἐκτομή; καθάπερ γὰρ δένδρων οὐδὲν ὄφελος, εἰ μὴ καρπῶν οἰστικά γένοιτο, τὸν αὐτὸν δὴ<sup>1</sup> τρόπον οὐδὲ φυσιολογίας, εἰ μὴ μέλλοι κτήσιν ἀρετῆς ἐνεγκεῖν· ὁ γὰρ καρπὸς 74 αὐτῆς οὗτός ἐστι. διὸ καὶ τῶν πάλαι τινὲς ἀγρῶ τὸν κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν ἀπεικάσαντες λόγον φυτοῖς μὲν ἐξωμοίωσαν τὸ φυσικὸν μέρος, αἵμασιαῖς δὲ καὶ περιβόλοις τὸ λογικόν, καρπῶ δὲ τὸ ἠθικόν, ὑπολαβόντες<sup>2</sup> καὶ τὰ ἐν κύκλῳ τείχῃ φυλακῆς ἔνεκα τοῦ καρποῦ κατεσκευάσθαι πρὸς τῶν ἐχόντων καὶ τὰ φυτὰ δεδημιουργῆσθαι γενέσεως καρποῦ χάριν.
 75 οὕτως οὖν ἔφασαν καὶ ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ δεῖν τὴν τε φυσικὴν καὶ λογικὴν πραγματείαν ἐπὶ τὴν ἠθικὴν ἀναφέρεσθαι, ἥ βελτιοῦται τὸ ἦθος κτήσεως ὁμοῦ

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 70-75

is best. So then the first set of signs delineated the 70 lover of learning, the meteorologist, while those just sketched reveal the wisdom-lover or rather the wise. Cease then to suppose that the Deity's gift was a change of name, instead of a betterment of character symbolized thereby. Him who was erstwhile busied 71 in the study of the nature of heaven—the astrologer as some call him—He summoned to a partnership in virtue and both made him and named him wise, giving to the spiritual outlook thus recast the title of Abraham, as the Hebrews would call it, and in our language, Elect Father of Sound. For what purpose, 72 He asks, do you investigate the rhythmic movements and revolutions of the stars? Why this great leap from earth up to the realm of ether? Is it just to busy yourself in idle labour with what is there? And what good can result from all that idle busying? How will it serve to subdue the urge of pleasure, to overthrow the power of lust, to suppress fear or grief? What surgery has it for passions which agitate and confound the soul? Just as there is no use for 73 trees, if they are not capable of bearing fruit, so too also with nature-study, if it is not going to bring the acquisition of virtue. For virtue is its fruit, and 74 therefore some of the ancients, comparing the study of philosophy to a field, likened the physical part to plants, the logical to the walls and fences, and the ethical to the fruit.<sup>a</sup> They considered that the walls 75 round the field are built by the owners to guard the fruit and the trees grown to produce it, and that in the same way in philosophy physical and logical research should be brought to bear on ethics by which

<sup>a</sup> See De Agr. 14 and Leg. All. i. 57, and notes.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δὲ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀπολαμβάντες.

PHILO

76 καὶ χρήσεως ἀρετῆς ἐφιέμενον. τοιαῦτα ἐδιδάχθημεν περὶ τοῦ λόγῳ μὲν μετονομασθέντος, ἔργῳ δὲ μεταβαλόντος ἀπὸ φυσιολογίας πρὸς τὴν ἠθικὴν φιλοσοφίαν καὶ μεταναστάντος ἀπὸ τῆς περὶ τὸν κόσμον θεωρίας πρὸς τὴν τοῦ πεποηκότος ἐπιστήμην, ἐξ ἧς εὐσέβειαν, κτημάτων τὸ κάλλιστον, ἐκτήσατο.

77 XI. Τὰ δὲ περὶ τῆς γυναικὸς αὐτοῦ Σάρας νῦν ἐροῦμεν· καὶ γὰρ αὕτη μετονομάζεται εἰς Σάρραν κατὰ τὴν τοῦ ἐνὸς στοιχείου πρόσθεσιν τοῦ ῥῶ. τὰ μὲν οὖν ὀνόματα ταῦτα, τὰ δὲ τυγχάνοντα μηνυτέον·
 [590] ἐρμηνεύεται Σάρα μὲν | ἀρχή μου, Σάρρα δὲ
 78 ἄρχουσα. τὸ μὲν οὖν πρότερον εἰδικῆς σύμβολον ἀρετῆς ἐστι, τὸ δ' ὕστερον γενικῆς. ὅσω δὲ γένος εἶδους διαφέρει κατὰ τὸ ἔλαττον, τοσοῦτῳ τὸ δεύτερον ὄνομα τοῦ προτέρου· τὸ μὲν γὰρ εἶδος καὶ βραχὺ καὶ φθαρτόν, τὸ δὲ γένος πολὺ τε αὐ
 79 καὶ ἄφθαρτον. βούλεται δὲ ὁ θεὸς ἀντὶ μικρῶν καὶ φθαρτῶν μεγάλα καὶ ἀθάνατα χαρίζεσθαι, καὶ ἐμπρεπὲς αὐτῷ τὸ ἔργον. ἡ μὲν <γὰρ> ἐν τῷ σπουδαίῳ φρόνησις αὐτοῦ μόνου ἐστὶν ἀρχή, καὶ οὐκ ἂν ἁμάρτοι ὁ ἔχων, εἰ λέγοι· ἀρχή μου ἐστὶν ἢ ἐν ἐμοὶ φρόνησις· ἡ δὲ ταύτην τυπώσασα, ἡ γενικὴ φρόνησις, οὐκέτι τοῦ δεινός ἐστὶν ἀρχή, 80 ἀλλ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀρχή. τοιγαροῦν ἐκείνη μὲν ἢ ἐν εἶδει τῷ ἔχοντι συμφθαρῆσεται, ἢ δὲ σφραγίδος τρόπον αὐτὴν τυπώσασα παντὸς ἀπηλλαγμένη θνητοῦ διατελέσει πρὸς αἰῶνα ἄφθαρτος. οὕτω καὶ τῶν τεχνῶν αἰ μὲν ἐν εἶδει συναπόλλυνται τοῖς κτησαμένοις, γεωμέτραις, γραμματικοῖς, μουσικοῖς· αἰ δὲ γενικαὶ μένουσιν ἀνώλεθροι. προσ-

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 75-80

the character is bettered and yearns to acquire and also to make use of virtue. This is how we have 76 learned to regard the story of Abraham. Literally his name was changed, actually he changed over from nature-study to ethical philosophy and abandoned the study of the world to find a new home in the knowledge of its Maker, and from this he gained piety, the most splendid of possessions.

XI. We will now deal with the case of Sarah his 77 wife. Her name Sarai (Σάρα) is changed to Sarah (Σάρρα) by the addition of one letter, rho. These are the names, now for the facts<sup>a</sup> indicated by them. Sarai means my sovereignty, Sarah sovereign. The 78 former is a symbol of specific virtue, the latter of generic, and in the same measure as the genus is greater than the species is the second name greater than the former. The species is small and perishable, the genus is large and imperishable. And the gifts 79 which God wills to bestow are great and immortal in exchange for small and perishable, and to give such is a work well suited to Him. Wisdom in the good man is a sovereignty vested in himself alone, and its possessor will not err if he says "The wisdom in me is my sovereignty." But in the wisdom which is its archetype, the generic wisdom, we cease to have the sovereignty of the particular individual, but sovereignty its very self. And therefore that specific 80 wisdom will perish with its possessor, while the other which like a seal gave it its shape, being free from all mortal element, will continue for ever imperishable. So too with the arts: the specific arts perish with their owners, the geometricians, the grammarians, the musicians: the generic arts remain imperishable.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 589.

PHILO

υπογράφει δὲ ἀναδιδάσκων ἐν ταυτῷ, ὅτι καὶ πᾶσα ἀρετὴ βασιλὶς ἐστὶ καὶ ἄρχουσα καὶ ἡγεμονεύουσα τῶν κατὰ τὸν βίον πραγμάτων.

- 81 XII. Ἴακῶβ καὶ τὸν Ἰακῶβ μετονομάζεσθαι συμβέβηκεν εἰς τὸν Ἰσραήλ, οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ. διὰ τί; ὅτι ὁ μὲν Ἰακῶβ πτερνιστής, ὁ δὲ Ἰσραήλ ὄρων τὸν θεὸν καλεῖται. πτερνιστοῦ μὲν οὖν ἔργον ἀσκοῦντος ἀρετὴν τὰς βάσεις τοῦ πάθους, αἷς ἐφίδρυσται, καὶ εἴ τι ὄχυρόν καὶ ἰδρυμένον ἐν αὐταῖς κινεῖν καὶ σαλεύειν καὶ ἀνατρέπειν—ταῦτα δὲ οὐ δίχα ἀγωνίας ἀκονιτὶ<sup>1</sup> φιλεῖ γίνεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἐπειδάν τις τοὺς φρονήσεως ἄθλους διαθλῶν γυμνάζηται τε τὰ τῆς ψυχῆς γυμνάσματα καὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἀντιπάλους καὶ τραχηλίζοντας αὐτὴν λογισμοὺς παλαίη,—τοῦ δὲ τὸν θεὸν ὄρωντος τὸ μὴ ἐκ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀγῶνος ἀστεφάνωτον ἐξελθεῖν, ἀλλὰ
- 82 τὰ ἐπὶ τῇ νίκῃ βραβεῖα ἄρασθαι. τίς δ' ἂν εὐανθέστερος καὶ ἐπιτηδειότερος πλέκοιτο νικηφόρῳ ψυχῇ στέφανος ἢ δι' οὗ τὸν ὄντα δυνήσεται θεωρεῖν ὀξυδερκῶς; καλόν γε ἀσκητικῇ ψυχῇ πρόκειται τὸ ἄθλον, ἐνομματωθῆναι πρὸς τὴν τοῦ μόνου θεᾶς ἀξίου τηλαυγῆ κατανόησιν.
- 83 XIII. Ἄξιον δὲ ἀπορηῆσαι, διὰ τί ὁ μὲν Ἀβραάμ, ἀφ' οὗ μετωνομάσθη, τῆς αὐτῆς προσρήσεως ἀξιούται μηκέτι καλούμενος ὀνόματι τῷ προτέρῳ, ὁ δὲ Ἰακῶβ προσρηθεὶς Ἰσραήλ οὐδὲν ἤττον αὐθις
- [591] πάλιν Ἰακῶβ ἐπὶ πλεόν ὀνομάζεται. | λεκτέον οὖν ὅτι καὶ ταῦτα χαρακτῆρές εἰσιν, οἷς ἡ διδακτικὴ
- 84 τῆς ἀσκητικῆς ἀρετῆς διαφέρει. ὁ μὲν γὰρ διδασκαλία βελτιωθεὶς, εὐμοίρου λαχῶν φύσεως, ἡ περιποιεῖ τὸ ἄληστον αὐτῷ διὰ συνεργοῦ μνήμης, <sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπονητὶ.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 80-84

Incidentally another lesson suggested at the same time is that every virtue is a queen and a sovereign and a ruler of the course of human life.

XII. We shall also find that the change of Jacob's 81 name to Israel is much to the purpose. Why so? Because Jacob is the supplanter, and Israel he who sees God. It is the task of a supplanter in the practice of virtue to disturb and shake and upset the supports on which passion rests, and all the firmness and stability which they have. That is a work which cannot commonly be done without hard effort and the stains of the arena, but only when one maintains the contests of wisdom to the end, and drilled in the gymnastics of the soul wrestles with the thoughts which oppose and hold it fast in their grip. The task of him who sees God is not to leave the sacred arena uncrowned, but carry off the prizes of victory. And 82 what garland more fitting for its purpose or of richer flowers could be woven for the victorious soul than the power which will enable him to behold the Existent with clear vision? Surely that is a glorious guerdon to offer to the athlete-soul, that it should be endowed with eyes to apprehend in bright light Him Who alone is worthy of our contemplation.

XIII. It is worth inquiring why Abraham, after 83 the change of name, is not called by his old name, but always receives the same title as his right, whereas Jacob, after he is addressed as Israel, is in spite of this called Jacob many and many a time. We must reply that these are signs differing according as virtue acquired by teaching differs from virtue acquired by practice. He who is improved through 84 teaching, being endowed with a happy nature, which with the co-operation of memory assures his retentive-

PHILO

μονῆ<sup>1</sup> χρήται, ὧν ἔμαθεν ἀπρίξ ἐπειλημμένος καὶ βεβαίως περιεχόμενος· ὁ δ' ἀσκητῆς ἐπειδὴν γυμνάσηται συντόνως, διαπνεῖ πάλιν καὶ ὑπανίεται, συλλεγόμενος καὶ ἀνακτώμενος τὴν ἐκ τοῦ πονεῖν τεθρυμμένην<sup>2</sup> δύναμιν, καθάπερ καὶ οἱ τὰ σώματα ἀλειφόμενοι· καὶ γὰρ οὗτοι περὶ τὴν ἄσκησιν καμώντες, ὡς μὴ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς αὐτοῖς ἀπορραγεῖεν αἱ δυνάμεις διὰ τὸ σφοδρὸν καὶ σύντονον τῆς 85 ἀθλήσεως, ἔλαιον ἐπιχέουσιν. εἶθ' ὁ μὲν διδαχθεὶς ἀθανάτω χρώμενος ὑποβολεῖ τὴν ὠφέ-λειαν ἔναυλον καὶ ἀθάνατον ἴσχει, μὴ τρεπόμενος· ὁ δ' ἀσκητῆς καὶ τὸ ἐκούσιον ἔχων αὐτὸ μόνον καὶ τοῦτο γυμνάζων καὶ συγκροτῶν, ἵνα τὸ οἰκεῖον πάθος τῷ γενητῷ καταβάλλῃ,<sup>3</sup> κἂν τελειωθῆ, καμῶν 86 πρὸς τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἐπάνεισι γένος. τλητικώτερος μὲν γὰρ οὗτος, εὐτυχέστερος δ' ἐκεῖνος· ὁ μὲν γὰρ χρήται διδασκάλῳ ἐτέρῳ, ὁ δ' ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ ζητεῖ τε καὶ σκέπτεται καὶ πολυπραγμονεῖ, μετὰ σπουδῆς ἐρευνῶν τὰ φύσεως, ἀδιαστάτῳ χρώμενος καὶ 87 συνεχεῖ πόνω. διὰ τοῦτο τὸν μὲν Ἀβραάμ, ἐπειδὴ μένειν ἔμελλεν ἐν ὁμοίῳ, μετωνόμασεν ὁ ἄτρεπτος θεός, ἵν' ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐστῶτος καὶ κατὰ τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ὡσαύτως ἔχοντος τὸ μέλλον στήσεσθαι παγίως ἰδρυθῆ, τὸν δὲ Ἰακώβ ἄγγελος ὑπηρέτης τοῦ θεοῦ, λόγος, ἵν' ὁμολογηθῆ μηδὲν εἶναι τῶν μετὰ τὸ ὄν ἀκλινούς καὶ ἀρρεπούς αἴτιον βεβαιότητος, ἀλλ' ἀρμονίας τῆς ὡς ἐν ὀργάνῳ μουσικῷ περιεχούσης

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μόνη.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τεθρυμμένην.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. μεταβάλλη.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 84-87

ness, gets a tight grip and a firm armhold of what he has learned and thus remains constant. The Practiser on the other hand, after strenuous exercise, takes a breathing-space and a relaxation while he collects and recovers the force which has been enfeebled by his labours. In this he resembles the athletes who anoint their bodies. When they are weary with exercise they pour oil upon their limbs to prevent their forces being utterly shattered by the intensity and severity of the contest.

Again, the Man of Teaching has to aid him the voice 85 of his monitor ringing in his ears, deathless as that monitor himself, and thus never swerves : the Man of Practice has only his own will which he exercises and drills to aid him to overthrow the passion natural to created being, and, even if he reaches the consummation, yet through weariness he returns to his old kind. He is more patient of toil, the other more blessed by 86 fortune. This last has another for his teacher, while the toiler, self-helped only, is busied in searching and inquiring and zealously exploring the secrets of nature, engaged in labour ceaseless and unremitting. Therefore did Abraham in token of the even tenor 87 of his future life receive his new name from God, the unchangeable, that the stability of his future might be set on a firm foundation by Him Who stands and is ever the same in nature and condition. But Jacob was re-named by an angel, God's minister, the Word, in acknowledgement that what is below the Existent cannot produce permanence unswerving and unwavering, but only such harmony as is found in a musical instrument wherein the tones now stretched to a ἐπιτάσεις καὶ ἀνέσεις φθόγγων πρὸς τὴν τοῦ μέλους ἔντεχνον κρᾶσιν.

PHILO

- 88 XIV. Ἄλλα τριῶν ὄντων τοῦ γένους ἀρχηγῶν, οἱ μὲν ἄκροι μετωνομάσθησαν, Ἀβραάμ τε καὶ Ἰακώβ, ὁ δὲ μέσος Ἰσαὰκ τῆς αὐτῆς ἔλαχεν εἰς αἰὲ προσρήσεως. διὰ τί; ὅτι ἡ μὲν διδακτικῆ<sup>1</sup> ἀρετὴ καὶ ἀσκητικὴ δέχονται τὰ πρὸς βελτίωσιν — ἐφίεται γὰρ δὴ ὁ μὲν διδασκόμενος ἐπιστήμης ὧν ἀγνοεῖ, ὁ δὲ ἀσκήσει χρώμενος στεφάνων καὶ τῶν προκειμένων ἀθλῶν φιλοπόνῳ καὶ φιλοθεάμονι ψυχῇ, — τὸ δ' αὐτοδίδακτον καὶ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, ἅτε φύσει μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπιτηδεύσει συνιστάμενον, ἐξ [592] ἀρχῆς ἴσον καὶ τέλειον καὶ ἄρτιον ἠνέχθη, | μηδενὸς ἐνδέοντος τῶν εἰς πλήρωσιν ἀριθμοῦ.

- 89 Ἄλλ' οὐχ ὁ τῶν τοῦ σώματος ἐπιτηδείων προστάτης Ἰωσήφ· ἀλλάττει γὰρ τοῦνομα, Ψονθομφανήχ ὑπὸ τοῦ τῆς χώρας βασιλέως ἐπικληθείς. ὃν δὲ λόγον ἔχει καὶ ταῦτα, μηνυτέον. Ἰωσήφ ἐρμηνεύεται πρόσθεμα· προσθήκη δ' ἐστὶ τῶν φύσει τὰ θέσει, χρυσός, ἄργυρος, κτήματα, πρόσοδοι, οἰκετῶν θεραπείαι, κειμηλίων καὶ ἐπίπλων καὶ τῆς ἄλλης περιουσίας ἄφθονοι ὕλαι, τῶν ἡδονῆς 90 ποιητικῶν ἀμύχανοι τὸ πλήθος παρασκευαί. ὧν τὸν ποριστὴν καὶ ἐπιμελητὴν Ἰωσήφ ὀνόματι εὐθυβόλῳ καλεῖσθαι συμβέβηκε πρόσθεμα, ἐπεὶ τῶν ἕξωθεν ἐπεισοδιαζομένων καὶ προστιθεμένων τοῖς κατὰ φύσιν προστασίαν ἀνῆπται. μαρτυροῦσι <sup>1</sup> mss. διδακτῆ, which might be retained, cf. § 263.

---

<sup>a</sup> Literally “as in a musical instrument containing heightenings and lowerings of notes to the artistic blending of melody.”

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 87-90

high pitch, now relaxed to a low, are blended into melody by the artist's skill.<sup>a</sup>

XIV. Again, while the race has three founders it 88 is the first and last of these, Abraham and Jacob, whose names were changed, while the middle founder, Isaac, has the same name throughout. Why is this? Because both the scholar's form of virtue and the practiser's are open to improving influences, since the former desires to know what he is ignorant of, the latter desires crowns of victory and the prizes offered to a soul which rejoices to toil and seek the vision of the truth. On the other hand the kind which has no teacher or pupil but itself, being made what it is by nature rather than by diligence, goes on its way from the first equal and perfect like an even number<sup>b</sup> with no other needed as complement.

Not so with the controller of bodily necessities, 89 Joseph. For he changes his name and receives the title of Psonthomphanech<sup>c</sup> (Gen. xli. 45) from the king of the country. The meaning of this also needs explanation. Joseph is by interpretation "addition," and conventional goods are an adjunct of natural goods. The former are such as gold, silver, chattels, revenues, services of menials, abundant stocks of heirlooms and furniture and all other luxuries, and the instruments of pleasure ready to hand in numberless forms. The provider and superintendent of these, 90 Joseph, is found to have the appropriate name of "Addition," since he is invested with the direction of the imported adventitious wealth which is an addition to the natural. This is attested by the

<sup>b</sup> ἀπτερον here combines its ordinary sense of "perfect" or "complete" with its technical use for an "even" number.

<sup>c</sup> Hebrew and E.V. Zaphenath-paneah.

PHILO

- δ' οἱ χρησιμοὶ δηλοῦντες ὅτι τὰς τροφὰς τῆς σωματικῆς χώρας ἀπάσης, Αἰγύπτου, θησαυρισά-91 μενος ἐσιτάρχει. XV. τοιοῦτος μὲν τις ὁ Ἰωσήφ ἐκ τῶν γνωρισμάτων γνωρίζεται· ὁ δὲ Ψονθομφανήχ ποιός ἐστι, θεασώμεθα. ἐρμηνεύεται οὖν ἐν ἀποκρίσει στόμα κρίνον. οἶεται γὰρ πᾶς ἄφρων τὸν πολυχρήματον καὶ περιρρεόμενον ταῖς ἐκτὸς οὐσίαις εὐθύς εἶναι καὶ εὐλόγιστον, ἱκανὸν μὲν πρὸς ἃ ἂν πύθηται τις ἀποκρίνασθαι, ἱκανὸν δὲ καὶ δι' ἑαυτοῦ γνώμας εἰσηγήσασθαι συμ-φερούσας, καὶ συνόλως τὸ φρόνιμον ἐν τῷ τυχηρῷ τίθεται, δέον ἔμπαλιν τὸ τυχηρὸν ἐν τῷ φρονίμῳ· ἄξιον γὰρ τὸ ἄστατον ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐστῶτος ἠνιοχεῖσθαι.
 92 καὶ μὴν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν ὁμο-γάστριον ὁ μὲν πατὴρ Βενιαμίν, ἡ δὲ μήτηρ υἱὸν ὀδύνης προσαγορεύει, φυσικώτατα· μεταληφθεὶς γὰρ ὁ Βενιαμίν ἐστὶν υἱὸς ἡμερῶν, ἡμέρα δὲ τῷ ἀφ' ἡλίου αἰσθητῷ φωτὶ καταλάμπεται, τούτῳ δὲ 93 τὴν κενὴν δόξαν ἐξομοιοῦμεν. ἔχει γάρ τινα λαμπρότητα αἰσθητὴν ἐν τοῖς παρὰ τῶν πολλῶν καὶ ἀγελαίων ἐπαίνοις, ἐν τοῖς γραφομένοις ψηφί-σμασιν, ἐν ταῖς ἀνδριάντων καὶ εἰκόνων ἀναθέσεσιν, ἐν πορφύραις καὶ στεφάνοις χρυσοῖς, ἐν ἄρμασι καὶ τεθρίποισι καὶ παραπομπαῖς ὄχλων. ὁ τούτων οὖν ζηλωτῆς εἰκότως υἱὸς ἡμερῶν, αἰσθητοῦ [593] φέγγους καὶ τῆς περὶ τὴν | κενὴν δόξαν λαμ-
 94 πρότητος, ὠνομάσθη. τοῦτο ὁ πρεσβύτερος λόγος καὶ πατὴρ ὄντως εὐθυβόλον καὶ κύριον ὄνομα αὐτῷ τίθεται, ἡ δὲ παθοῦσα ψυχὴ τὸ ᾧ πέπονθεν ἀρμότ-τον· ὀδύνης γὰρ υἱὸν καλεῖ. διὰ τί; ὅτι οἱ ἐν

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 90-94

oracles which state that he stored up the food and managed the provisioning of the whole land (ibid. 48) of the body. XV. Such a character the 91 tokens given lead us to find in Joseph. Let us consider the nature of Psonthomphanech. His name means "mouth which judges in answer." For every fool thinks that the man of wealth who lives surrounded by a sea of outward kinds of substance must of necessity be able to reason aright, be capable of answering questions put to him and capable of originating judgements of value. And in general the fool holds wisdom to be subordinate to chance, instead of chance to wisdom, as he should do, since the unstable ought to be guided on its course by the stable. And also his uterine brother 92 is addressed by his father as Benjamin and by his mother as Son of sorrow, and that is true to facts. For Benjamin by interpretation is Son of days, and the day is illumined by the sunlight visible to our senses, to which we liken vainglory. Such glory has 93 a certain brilliance to the outward sense, in the laudations bestowed by the vulgar multitude, in the decrees which are enacted, in the dedications of statues and images, in purple robes and golden crowns, in chariots and four-horse cars and crowded processions. He who affects these things was with good reason named the Son of days, that is of the visible light and of the brilliance of vainglory. This name 94 which exactly expresses the fact is given him by his father the head of the house, the reason. But the soul gives him the one that agrees with the experience by which she herself has learned. She calls him a son of sorrow. Why? Because those

PHILO

- ταῖς κεναῖς φερόμενοι<sup>1</sup> δόξαις ὑπολαμβάνονται μὲν 95 εὐδαιμονεῖν, πρὸς ἀλήθειαν δὲ κακοδαιμονοῦσι. τὰ γὰρ ἀντιπνέοντα πολλά, βασκανία, φθόνοι, συνεχεῖς ἔριδες, φιλονεικίαι ἀκατάλλακτοι μέχρι θανάτου, δυσμένειαι παισὶ παίδων κατὰ διαδοχὰς παρα-96 διδόμεναι, κλῆρος οὐ κτητός. ἀναγκαίως οὖν ὁ θεοφράδμων ἐν αὐταῖς ὠδίσιν ἀποθνήσκουσαν, ἣ τίκτει κενοδοξίαν, παρέστησεν. “ἀπέθανε” γάρ φησι “Ῥαχὴλ δυστοκήσασα,” ἐπειδὴ τῷ ὄντι ψυχῆς ἔστι θάνατος δόξης αἰσθητῆς καὶ κενῆς σπορά τε καὶ γέννησις.
- 97 XVI. Τί δ’; οἱ τοῦ Ἰωσήφ παῖδες, Ἐφραΐμ τε καὶ Μανασσῆς, οὐ πάνυ φυσικῶς ἐξωμοιοῦντο δυσὶ τοῖς πρεσβυτάτοις υἱοῖς τοῦ Ἰακώβ, Ῥουβὴν τε καὶ Συμεών; λέγει γάρ. “οἱ δύο υἱοί σου, οἱ γενόμενοι ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ πρὸ τοῦ με ἔλθειν εἰς Αἴγυπτον, ἐμοί εἰσιν. Ἐφραΐμ καὶ Μανασσῆς ὡς Ῥουβὴν καὶ Συμεών ἔσονται μοι.” τίνα οὖν τρόπον οἱ δύο τοῖς δυσὶν ἐφαρμόζονται, θεασώμεθα.
- 98 Ῥουβὴν μὲν σύμβολον εὐφυΐας ἐστίν—ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ ὄρων υἱός—ἐπειδὴ πᾶς ὁ εὐθιξία καὶ εὐφυΐα χρώμενος ὁρατικός,—Ἐφραΐμ δέ, ὡς πολλάκις εἶπομεν ἐν ἑτέροις, μνήμη—μεταληφθεὶς γὰρ ἐστὶ καρποφορία, καρπὸς δὲ ψυχῆς ἄριστος ἢ μνήμη—συγγενὲς δὲ οὐδὲν ἕτερον οὕτως [τῷ]
- 99 ἑτέρῳ, ὡς εὐφυεῖ<sup>2</sup> τὸ μεμνήσθαι. πάλιν ὁ Συμεών

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, as Mangey, φερόμενοι, cf. De Ebr. 57 τίς . . .
 τῶν ἔτι φυρομένων ἐν κεναῖς δόξαις;

<sup>2</sup> Or perhaps <τῷ> εὐφυεῖ.

---

<sup>a</sup> As noted in the Introduction, §§ 97-102 are obviously irrelevant, as none of the four persons discussed have any

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 94-99

who are swept along by the current of empty opinion are thought to be happy, but are in reality most unhappy, for many are the counterblasts, envy, 95 jealousies, continuous quarrelling, rancorous enmities unreconciled till death, feuds handed down successively to children's children, an inheritance which cannot be possessed. And so God's interpreter 96 could not but represent the mother of vainglory as dying in the very pangs of childbirth. Rachel died, we read, in hard labour (Gen. xxxv. 16, 19), for the conception and birth of vainglory, the creature of sense, is in reality the death of the soul.

XVI. Again, when the sons of Joseph, Ephraim 97 and Manasseh, were likened to the two elder sons of Jacob, Reuben and Simeon, have we not something perfectly true to nature? <sup>a</sup> Jacob says, "Thy two sons who were born in Egypt before I came to Egypt are mine. Ephraim and Manasseh shall be as Reuben and Simeon to me" (Gen. xlviii. 5). Let us observe how the two pairs tally with each other. Reuben, whose name is by interpretation "Seeing 98 son," is the symbol of natural excellence, because the man who enjoys facility of apprehension and natural excellence is endowed with sight. Ephraim, as we have often said elsewhere, <sup>b</sup> is the symbol of memory. For he is by interpretation "Fruit-bearing," and memory is the best fruit of the soul. And no two things can be so close akin as memory and natural excellence. Again, Simeon is another 99 change of name. The only link is that they show how different names symbolize contrasting qualities. Possibly the thought is partly induced by the proximity of the two sons of Rachel, cf. the digression in Quis Rer. 252-266.

<sup>b</sup> See Leg. All. iii. 91 f., De Sobr. 27 f., De Mig. 205 f., De Cong. 40 f.

PHILO

- ὄνομα μαθήσεως καὶ διδασκαλίας ἐστίν—εἰσακοή γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται,—μανθάνοντος δ' ἴδιον ἀκούειν τε καὶ προσέχειν τοῖς λεγομένοις, ὁ δὲ Μανασσῆς ἀναμνήσεως σύμβολον· καλεῖται γὰρ ἐκ λήθης.
- 100 τῷ δ' ἐκ λήθης ἔξω προϊόντι συμβαίνει κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ἀναμνησθεσθαι· μαθήσεως δὲ ἀνάμνησις οἰκείον. πολλάκις γὰρ τοῦ μανθάνοντος ἀπορρεῖ τὰ θεωρήματα μὴ δυναμένου δι' ἀσθένειαν κρατεῖν καὶ πάλιν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπαναπλεῖ. τὸ μὲν οὖν τῆς ἀπορροῆς πάθος ὀνομάζεται λήθη, τὸ δὲ
- 101 τῆς παλιρροίας ἀνάμνησις. ἄρ' οὐ προσφυῶς εὐφυῖα μὲν [ἧ] μνήμη, μαθήσει δὲ ἀνάμνησις ἐφαρμόζεται; καὶ μὴν ὃν λόγον ἔχει Συμεὼν πρὸς Ῥουβήν, τὸ δ' ἐστὶ μάθησις πρὸς φύσιν, τοῦτον ἔχει λόγον Μανασσῆς πρὸς Ἐφραῖμ, τὸ δ' ἐστὶ
- 102 πρὸς μνήμην ἀνάμνησις. ὡς γὰρ τὸ εὐφυές ἄμεινον τοῦ μανθάνοντος — τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἔοικεν ὀράσει, τὸ
- [594] δὲ ἀκοῇ· ἀκοῇ δὲ ὀράσεως | τὰ δευτέρα φέρεται,— οὕτω τὸ μνημονικὸν τοῦ ἀναμνησκομένου παν-ταχοῦ κρεῖττον, ὅτι τὸ μὲν λήθη κέκραται, τὸ δὲ ἀμιγές καὶ ἄκρατον ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἄχρι τέλους διαμένει.
- 103 XVII. Καὶ μὴν τὸν γε τοῦ ἀρχιπροφήτου πεν-θερὸν τοτὲ μὲν Ἰσθὸρ τοτὲ δὲ Ῥαγουήλ οἱ χρησιμοὶ καλοῦσιν· Ἰσθὸρ μὲν, ὅταν τῦφος εὐήμερῃ· μεταληφθεὶς γὰρ ἐστὶ περισσός, περιττὸν δὲ ἀψευδεῖ βίῳ τῦφος, γέλωτα μὲν τὰ ἴσα καὶ ἀναγκαῖα τῷ βίῳ τιθέμενος, τὰ δὲ πλεονεξίας ἄνισα σεμνύνων.
- 104 οὗτος καὶ ἀνθρώπεια θείων καὶ ἔθνη νόμων καὶ βέβηλα ἱερῶν καὶ θνητὰ ἀθανάτων καὶ συνόλως τὸ δοκεῖν τοῦ εἶναι προτιμῶ. καὶ ἐπιτολμήσας αὐτο-

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 99-104

name for learning and teaching, since Simeon is by interpretation "hearing," and it is the peculiar mark of the learner that he hears and attends to what is said, while Manasseh is the symbol of recollection, for his name is "From forgetfulness." The advance 100 from forgetfulness necessarily involves recollection, and recollection is akin to learning. For what he has acquired often floats away from the learner's mind, because in his weakness he is unable to retain it, and then emerges and starts again. When it flows away we say he is in a state of forgetfulness, and when it returns we call it a state of recollection. Surely then memory closely corresponds to natural 101 excellence and recollection to learning. And the same relation which Simeon or learning bears to Reuben or nature is borne by Manasseh or recollection to Ephraim or memory. For just as natural 102 excellence which resembles sight is better than learning which resembles hearing, the inferior of sight, so memory is in every way the superior of recollection, since while that is mixed with forgetfulness memory remains from first to last free from mixture or contamination.

XVII. Again, the chief prophet's father-in-law is 103 sometimes called in the oracles Jethro and sometimes Raguel. He is Jethro when vanity is flourishing, for Jethro is by interpretation "superfluous," and vanity is to the verities of life a superfluity deriding as it does equalities and the mere necessities of life and glorifying surplusage and inequality.<sup>a</sup> Jethro values 104 the human above the divine, custom above laws, profane above sacred, mortal above immortal, and in general seeming above being. And he ventures

<sup>a</sup> Or "the inequalities produced by covetousness."

PHILO

κέλευστος εἰς τὴν τοῦ συμβούλου παρέρχεται τάξιν, ὑφηγούμενος τῷ σοφῷ μὴ<sup>1</sup> ἀναδιδάσκειν ἅ μόνα μανθάνειν ἄξιον, “ τὰ προστάγματα τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τὸν νόμον,” ἀλλὰ τὰ πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἀνθρώπων συμβόλαια, τῆς ἀκοινωνήτου σχεδὸν αἷτια κοινω- νίας. καὶ ὁ μέγας πάντα πειθαρχεῖ, νομίσας ἀρ- μόττον εἶναι μικροῖς μὲν τὰ μικρά, μεγάλοις δὲ 105 τὰ μεγάλα δίκαια τίθεσθαι. μεταβαλὼν δὲ πολ- λάκις ὁ δοκησισοφος οὗτος καὶ μεταβὰς ἀπὸ τῶν θρεμμάτων, ἃ δὴ τυφλὸς ἔλαχεν ἠνιοχεῖν, ἀναζη- τήσας τὴν θείαν ἀγέλην μέρος οὐ μεμπτὸν αὐτῆς γίνεται, θαυμάσας τῆς φύσεως τὸν ἀγελάρχην καὶ τῆς ἐπιστασίας ἀγάμενος, ἧ<sup>2</sup> χρῆται πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἑαυτοῦ θρεμμάτων<sup>2</sup> ἐπιμέλειαν· ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ
 106 ‘Ραγουήλ ποιμασία θεοῦ. XVIII. τὸ μὲν κεφάλαιον εἴρηται, τὰς δὲ πίστεις ὑφηγησεται. πρῶτον μὲν θεραπευτὴν αὐτὸν κρίσεως καὶ δίκης

<sup>1</sup> Wendland [μὴ] ἀναδιδάσκειν . . . <μὴ> τὰ πρὸς ἀλλήλους. So also Mangey, more doubtfully. See note <sup>a</sup> below.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. σχημάτων.

---

<sup>a</sup> The suggestion of Mangey and Wendland to explain away this extraordinary perversion of the story of Jethro's visit to Moses by transferring the negatives seems to me quite untenable. If it brings the passage into better agreement with the LXX, it does so at the cost of making nonsense of the whole, by representing something which is to Jethro's credit as being to his discredit. Moreover, the text as it stands substantially agrees with the account of the interview given more shortly in De Ebr. 37. Philo apparently gets his interpretation by stopping short at v. 17 of Ex. xviii. and ignoring the rest. Moses has said that he teaches the people “the ordinances of God and the law,” and Jethro replies οὐκ ὀρθῶς ποιεῖς. The sequel goes on to shew that Jethro means that Moses should employ subordinates for 194

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 104-106

to come self-bidden and take the position of an adviser and suggests to the sage that he should not teach the only thing worth learning, the ordinances of God and the law, but the contracts which men make with each other, which as a rule produce dealings where the partners have no real partnership.<sup>a</sup> And the great ones <sup>b</sup> of the earth accept all he says, and think that it is right to give great justice to the great and little justice to the little.<sup>c</sup> Yet often this 105 wiseacre changes round and leaves the flock which had him in his blindness for their leader: he seeks the herd of God and becomes therein a member without reproach, so much does he admire the nature of its herdsman and reverence the skill in governing which he shews in the charge of his flock. For the meaning of Raguel (Ex. ii. 18) is "the shepherding of God." XVIII. I have stated the sum 106 of the matter, Moses will shew us the proofs. In the first place he describes him as one who honours minor matters, and the last part of § 104 seems to be a vague reproduction of this, but completely twisted, whether through perversity or lapse of memory, so as to describe a policy of injustice called in De Ebr. "playing the demagogue, and laying down laws contrary to the laws of nature."

<sup>b</sup> Prima facie no doubt we should take ὁ μέγας as meaning Moses, particularly as Moses in the story does accept Jethro's suggestion. But in view of the impossibility of Philo ascribing to Moses the acceptance of such advice, I take it generically, and this fits in with the evidently intended antithesis to μεγάλοις μεγάλα.

<sup>c</sup> The Greek might mean "assigns important administrations of justice, etc.," but here again the overwhelming argument of the necessity of discrediting Jethro demands the translation given. Philo is perhaps thinking of Deut. i. 17, and xxiv. 13-16, where the thought suggested in the translation appears.

PHILO

- εἰσηγεῖται· ἡ γὰρ προσηγορία τῆς Μαδιὰμ μετα-ληφθεῖσα ἐκ κρίσεως ὀνομάζεται. διττὸν δὲ τοῦτο.
δηλοῖ γὰρ τὸ μὲν ἔκκρισιν καὶ ἀπόκρισιν, ἡ καὶ τοῖς ἀγωνισταῖς κατὰ τοὺς ἱεροὺς ἀγῶνας λεγο-μένους εἴωθε συμβαίνειν· μυρίοι γὰρ ἀνεπιτήδευοι φανέντες ἤδη πρὸς τῶν ἀθλοθετῶν ἐξεκρίθησαν.
107 οὔτοι [τε] τελεταῖς ἀνιέροις ταῖς Βεελφεγῶρ τελε-σθέντες καὶ τὰ τοῦ σώματος στόμα<sup>1</sup> πάντα εὐ-[595] ρύναντες πρὸς τὴν | τῶν ἔξωθεν ἐπιχειομένων ρευμάτων ὑποδοχὴν—ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ Βεελφεγῶρ ἀνωτέρω στόμα δέρματος—κατέκλυσαν τὸν ἡγε-μόνα νοῦν καὶ ἀφείσαν<sup>2</sup> εἰς βυθὸν ἔσχατον, ὡς μηδ’ ἀνανήξασθαι μηδὲ μικρὸν ὅσον δυνηθῆναι ἀνασχεῖν· 108 καὶ τοῦτο ἔπαθεν, ἕως ὃ εἰρηνικὸς καὶ ἱερεὺς τοῦ θεοῦ τρανός, Φινεές, ὑπέρμαχος αὐτοκέλευστος ἦλθε, φύσει μισοπόνηρος ὢν καὶ ζήλῳ τῶν καλῶν κατεσχημένος· ᾧ σειρομάστην λαβόντι, τὸ δ’ ἐστὶν ἡκονημένον καὶ ὄξυν λόγον, μαστεύειν καὶ ἀναζητεῖν ἕκαστα ἰκανόν, ἐξεγένετο μὴ φενακισθῆναι, ῥώμη δὲ καρτερᾶ χρησαμένῳ κατακεντηῆσαι διὰ τῆς μήτρας τὸ πάθος, ἵνα μηδὲν ἔτι κακὸν θεήλατον 109 τίκτη. πρὸς τούτους καὶ ὁ μέγιστος ἐνίσταται τῷ ὀρατικῷ γένει πόλεμος, ἐν ᾧ τῶν διαγωνισαμένων

<sup>1</sup> mss. στόματα.

<sup>2</sup> So Wend. for mss. ἐπήεσαν: better perhaps as Mangey ἐπίεσαν.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. ἐκ κρίσεως may be taken as a single word ἐκκρίσεως, or as “belonging to judgement,” though in ἐκ λήθης (§ 100) the ἐκ is supposed to indicate the opposite of the noun.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 589.

<sup>c</sup> Or “mouth above skin” (or “leather,” cf. δερμάτων ἄγκον Βεελφεγῶρ, De Conf. 55). I take the application to be that δέρμα indicates the body, and, if the form given in the judgement and justice. For the word Midian when translated appears as "from judgement or sifting." This has a twofold significance.<sup>a</sup> It means in one sense sifting out and sifting off, which we often see in the case of those who enter for the so-called sacred games.<sup>b</sup> For thousands of these who have been judged to be unfit have been known to be sifted out by the stewards. Midianites, in this sense, initiated 107 in the unholy rites of Baal Peor (Num. xxv. 3), and widening all the orifices of the body to receive the streams which pour in from outside (for the meaning of Baal Peor is "mouth of skin above"<sup>c</sup>), flood the ruling mind and sink it to the lowest depths, so that it cannot float up to the top or rise ever so little. And this was its condition until the Man of Peace, 108 an evident<sup>d</sup> priest of God, Phinehas (ibid. 12, 13), came a self-bidden champion. He is a hater of evil by nature and possessed by zeal for the good. And when he took the lance,<sup>e</sup> that is the sharp-edged word, able to probe and explore each thing, power was granted him, that duped by none and armed with mighty strength he should pierce passion through the womb, that it should henceforth bring to birth no plague of God's sending (ibid. 7, 8). It is against 109 these Midianites that the nation of vision sets on foot the greatest of wars in which none of their translation is right, ἀνωτέρω suggests that in this case the body has usurped the superiority which belongs to the mind.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 106-109

<sup>a</sup> A strange use of τρανός. No satisfactory emendation is suggested. Wend.'s τρανός <λόγος> is fairly satisfactory in itself, but the λόγον which follows is an objection.

<sup>e</sup> For σειρομάστιν and other points in this sentence see the parallels, Leg. All. iii. 242, De Post. 183, De Ebr. 73, and notes thereon.

PHILO

- “ διεφώνησεν οὐδείς,” ἀλλ’ ἄτρωτος καὶ σῶος ἐπανήλθε, τοῖς νικητηρίοις ἀναδούμενος στεφάνοις.
- 110 XIX. ἐν μὲν δὴ τοῦτο ἐκ τῆς Μαδιὰμ ἐδηλοῦτο· ἕτερον δὲ τὸ κριτικὸν<sup>1</sup> καὶ δικαστικὸν εἶδος, ὃ καὶ κατ’ ἐπιγαμίαν οἰκειοῦται γένει τῷ προφητικῷ. “ τῷ ἱερεῖ,” φησὶν οὖν, τῆς κρίσεως καὶ τῆς δίκης “ εἰσὶν ἑπτὰ θυγατέρες,” συμβολικῶς αἱ τοῦ ἀλόγου δυνάμεις, γονή τε καὶ φωνή καὶ
- 111 πατρός. διὰ γὰρ τῶν ἑπτὰ δυνάμεων τούτων αἱ προβάσεις καὶ παρανξήσεις τοῦ πατρὸς νοῦ ταῖς ἐγγινομέναις καταλήψεσι συνίστανται. “ παραγενόμεναι ” δ’ ἐπὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα ἐκάστη, χρώματα μὲν καὶ σχήματα ὄρασις, φωνὰς δὲ ἀκοή, ἀτμούς δὲ ὄσφρησις, χυλοὺς δὲ γεῦσις καὶ αἱ ἄλλαι πρὸς τὰ ἀρμόττοντα ἑαυταῖς, “ ἀντλοῦσι ” τρόπον τινὰ τὰ ἐκτὸς αἰσθητά, “ ἕως ἂν πληρώσωσι τὰς τῆς ψυχῆς δεξαμενάς, ἐξ ὧν ποτίζουσι<sup>2</sup> τὰ πρόβατα τοῦ πατρὸς,” τὴν καθαρωτάτην λέγω τοῦ λογισμοῦ ποιήμην, ἀσφάλειαν καὶ κόσμον περιφέρουσιν ἐν ταύ-
- 112 τῷ. “ παραγενόμενοι ” δ’ οἱ φθόνου καὶ βασκανίας ἑταῖροι, πονηρᾶς ἀγέλης ἡγεμόνες, ἐλαύνουσιν αὐτὰς τῆς κατὰ φύσιν χρήσεως. αἱ μὲν γὰρ τὰ ἐκτὸς ἄγουσιν εἴσω πρὸς οἶα δικαστὴν καὶ βασιλέα τὸν νοῦν, ἢν’ ἄρχοντι χρώμεναι τῷ βελτίστῳ κατορ-
- 113 θῶσιν· οἱ δ’ ἀντικάθηνται διώκοντες καὶ τὰναντία παραγγέλλοντες, ἕξω<sup>3</sup> τὸν νοῦν ἐπισπᾶσθαι καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κρεῖττον.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πίνουσι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐξόν.

<sup>a</sup> See notes on De Conf. 56 and De Ebr. 114. Here there is no allusion to the original meaning of the word, and the derived sense of “is lost” may be given in the translation.

<sup>b</sup> προβάσεις evidently alludes to the idea that πρόβατον is combatants was "lost"<sup>a</sup> (Num. xxxi. 49), but returned safe and unwounded, crowned with the garlands of victory.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 109-113

XIX. The above is one of the 110 types indicated by the word Midian; another is the judicial, justice-dispensing type which by marriage is akin to the prophetic sort. "The priest" of judgment and justice, he says, "had seven daughters" (Ex. ii. 16). The daughters stand as a symbol for 111 the seven faculties of the unreasoning element, namely reproductive power, speech, and the five senses. "Daughters," it adds, "who kept the sheep of their father," for through these seven faculties come the advances<sup>b</sup> and growths which repeated apprehension produces in the father, the mind. Each of these faculties "arrives at" its own, sight at colours and forms, hearing at sounds, smell at scents, taste at flavours, and the others at the objects appropriate to each in particular. Each "draws up," so to speak, external objects of sense until they "fill the troughs" of the soul "from which they water the sheep of the father," and by these I mean the purest of flocks, the flock of reasoning which brings with it at once protection and adornment.<sup>c</sup> But then "arrive" the comrades of envy and malice, 112 the shepherds of an evil herd, and drive them from the uses prescribed by nature (ibid. 17). For whereas the daughters take outside objects inside to the mind, which is as it were their judge and king, hoping thus under the best of rulers to perform their duty aright, the others beset and pursue them and give the 113 opposite orders, namely that they should entice the derived from προβαίνω, cf. De Sac. 112 προκοπήs δὲ πρόβατον, ὡς καὶ αὐτὸ δηλοῖ τοῦνομα, σύμβολον.

<sup>c</sup> This is explained later in § 246.

PHILO

- ἀγωγήμα παραδιδόναι τὰ φαινόμενα, μέχρις “ ἀνα-[596] στὰς ” | ὁ τέως ἡρεμεῖν τρόπος δοκῶν φιλάρετος καὶ ἐπιθειάσας, ὄνομα Μωυσῆς, ὑπερασπίσει καὶ “ ῥύσεται αὐτὰς ” τῶν κατεχόντων, ποτίμοις λόγοις
- 114 θρέψας τὴν τοῦ πατρὸς ποιμήνην. ἐκφυγοῦσαι δὲ τὴν ἐπίθεσιν τῶν διανοίας μὲν ἐχθρῶν, τὰ δὲ περίπτα ὡσπερ ἐν τραγωδίᾳ μόνα ἐξηλωκότων οὐκέτι πρὸς Ἰοθόρ, ἀλλὰ πρὸς Ῥαγουήλ ἀφ-ικνοῦνται. καταλελοίπασι μὲν γὰρ τὴν πρὸς τῦφον συγγένειαν, ὑκείωνται δὲ ἀγωγῇ νομίμῳ, μοῖρα τῆς ἱερᾶς ἀγέλης ἀξιῶσασαι γενέσθαι, ἧς ὁ θεῖος ἀφηγεῖται λόγος, ὡς δηλοῖ τοῦνομα· ποιμασία γάρ
- 115 ἔστι θεοῦ. XX. ποιμήνης δ’ ἐπιμελουμένου τῆς ἰδίας, ἐξ ἑτοίμου ἀγαθὰ πάρεστιν ἀθρόα τοῖς πειθαροῦσι καὶ μὴ ἀφηγιάζουσι τῶν θρεμμάτων. ἄδεται δὲ καὶ ἐν ὕμνοις ἄσμα τοιοῦτον· “ κύριος ποιμαίνει
- 116 με, καὶ οὐδὲν με ὑστερήσει.” πεύσεται<sup>1</sup> οὖν εἰκότως ὁ ποιμένι (καὶ) βασιλεῖ χρώμενος τῷ θείῳ λόγῳ νοῦς τῶν ἐπτὰ θυγατέρων αὐτοῦ· διὰ τί συντεῖναι μετὰ πολλοῦ τάχους τήμερον ἀφίχθε; πρότερον γὰρ ὅτ’ ἐνετυγχάνετε τοῖς αἰσθητοῖς,

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πειστέον.

---

<sup>a</sup> The thought is obscure. Cohn and Wend. proposed ἀγωγήμον παραδιδόναι τοῖς φαινόμενοις (or πρὸς τὰ φαινόμενα). If the text is kept, I suggest that the thought may be that while the mind holds its proper seat, it makes the right use of αἰσθητά, but if it is enticed out into the body-loving region, αἰσθητά are used by it as slaves or prisoners. This would be brought out more clearly if we made the easy correction καὶ ἐκεῖ παραδιδόναι. But Mangey’s emendation of ποιμαίνε-200

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 113-116

mind outside and there deliver over phenomena into its hand.<sup>a</sup> And in this way they will persist until the mind which loves virtue and is inspired by God, called Moses, shall "arise" from his former seeming quietude, protect and "save" the maidens from their subjugators, and nourish the flock of the father with words and thoughts, sweet as water to drink. And 114 when the maidens have escaped the onset of those who are the mind's enemies and have no aspiration but for the superfluities of life as though life were mere play-acting,<sup>b</sup> they return not now to Jethro but to Raguel. For they have discarded their kinship with vanity, and become affiliated to the guidance and rule of law,<sup>c</sup> resolved to become a part of the holy herd which is led by God's Word as its name shews, for Raguel means "the shepherding of God." XX. And since God cares for His own flock He has 115 ready at hand a multitude of gifts for those of His charges who obey Him and do not rebel. In the Psalms there is a hymn of this kind, "The Lord is my shepherd, and nothing shall be lacking to me" (Ps. xxiii. (xxii.) 1). So then we shall not be surprised 116 to find the mind which has the Divine Word for its shepherd and king asking of its seven daughters, "Why have ye returned with such speed and so eagerly to-day?" (Ex. ii. 18). For at other times when you visited the objects of sense you spent a μενα for φαινόμενα would greatly simplify the imagery and deserves all consideration. See App. pp. 589 f.

<sup>b</sup> If this is right περιπτα is used in a somewhat different sense from § 199 for "appendages"; cf. Aristot. Nic. Eth. x. 8. 12 οὐδὲν δὴ προσδεῖται τῆς ἡδονῆς ὁ βίος αὐτῶν, ὡσπερ περιπτοῦ τυφός. For τραγωδία cf. De Post. 165 οἱ τραγωδῖαν τὸν βίον . . . νομίζοντες. But the words may refer to the masks of actors, and if so would be more in line with §§ 198, 199.

<sup>c</sup> See App. p. 590.

PHILO

- μακρὸν χρόνον ἔξω διατρίβουσαι μόλις ἐπανήειτε δελεαζόμεναι πρὸς αὐτῶν· νυνὶ δ' οὐκ οἶδ' ὅ τι παθοῦσαι συντόμως<sup>1</sup> παρὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς ἐπανήκετε.
- 117 φήσουσιν οὖν, ὅτι οὐκ αὐταὶ γεγόνασιν αἷταιι τοῦ τὸν δίαυλον ἐπὶ τὰ αἰσθητὰ καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἀπνευστὶ καὶ μετὰ πολλῆς ρύμης δραμεῖν, ἀλλ' ὁ ῥυσάμενος αὐτὰς ἄνθρωπος ἀπὸ τῶν τῆς ἀγρίας ἀγέλης ποιμένων. Αἰγύπτιον δὲ καλοῦσι Μιωσσην, τὸν οὐ μόνον Ἑβραῖον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ καθαρωτάτου γένους ὄντα Ἑβραίων, ὃ ἱερᾶται μόνον, οὐ δυνά-
- 118 μенаι τὴν ἑαυτῶν φύσιν ὑπερβῆναι. μεθόριοι γὰρ αἱ αἰσθήσεις οὖσαι [τῶν] νοητῶν τε καὶ αἰσθητῶν ἀγαπητὸν ἐὰν ἑκατέρων ἐφίωνται, ἀλλὰ μὴ ὑπὸ μόνων τῶν αἰσθητῶν ἄγωνται· τὸ δ' οἶεσθαι ὅτι μόνοις ποτὲ τοῖς κατὰ διάνοιαν ἐπανέξουσιν εὐθήεια πολλή. οὐ χάριν ἀμφότερα τιθέασι, διὰ μὲν τοῦ “ ἄνθρωπος ” τὰ μόνω λόγῳ θεωρητὰ μηνύουσαι, διὰ δὲ τοῦ “ Αἰγύπτιος ” παριστᾶσαι τὰ αἰσθητά.
- 119 ταῦτ' ἀκούσας καὶ πάλιν πεύσεται· “ ποῦ ἔστιν ” ὁ ἄνθρωπος; ἐν τίνι μέρει τῶν καθ' ὑμᾶς οἰκεῖ<sup>2</sup> τὸ λογικὸν εἶδος; “ ἵνα τί αὐτὸν ” ῥαδίως οὕτω “ καταλελοίπατε, ” ἀλλ' οὐχ ἅπαξ ἐντυχοῦσαι περι-ἔσχετε κτῆμα κάλλιστον καὶ λυσιτελέστατον ἑαυταῖς;
- 120 ἀλλ' εἰ μὴ πρότερον, νῦν “ αὐτὸν καλέσατε, ὅπως ἂν φάγη ” καὶ τραφῆ ταῖς ὑμετέραις βελτιώσεσι καὶ πρὸς αὐτὸν οἰκειώσεσι. τάχα γὰρ καὶ οἰκήσει [597] | παρ' ἡμῖν καὶ τὸ πτηνὸν καὶ [τὸ] θεοφόρητον καὶ προφητικὸν γένος, ὄνομα Σεπφώραν, ἄξεται.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. συντόμως.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οἰκεῖον (Mangey οἰκεῖ οὖν).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 116-120

long time out there and almost refused to return, so greatly were you enticed by them. But now something or other has induced you to come back with this unwonted eagerness. So they will reply that 117 this hasty breathless racing out to the world of sense and back again is not due to themselves but to the man who rescued them from the shepherds of the savage herd, and they call Moses an Egyptian (ibid. 19), Moses who was not only a Hebrew, but of that purest Hebrew blood which alone is consecrated. They cannot, that is, rise above their own nature. For the senses are on the border-line between the 118 intelligible realm and the sensible, and all that we can hope is that they should desire both realms and not be led by the latter only. To suppose that they will ever give their affections to the things of mind only would be the height of folly, and therefore they give both titles. By the word "man" they point out the world which reason alone discerns,<sup>a</sup> by "Egyptian" they represent the world of sense. On 119 hearing this the father will ask again, where is the man? (ibid. 20). In what part of your surroundings does the element of the reason dwell? Why have you left him so easily, and why when you once fell in with him did you not take to your arms that treasure, so beautiful above all, so profitable to yourselves? But if you have not as yet, at least now "invite him 120 that he may eat" (ibid. 20) and feed on your advance to higher stages of goodness and a closer affinity to him. Perhaps he will even dwell among you and wed the winged, inspired and prophetic nature called Zipporah (ibid. 21).

<sup>a</sup> For "Man" standing for the true man, the mind, cf. De Agr. 9, Quis Rerum 231, De Fug. 71, and elsewhere.

PHILO

- 121 XXI. Ταῦτα καὶ περὶ τούτων. ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν Ὠσηὲ μετονομάζει Μωυσῆς εἰς τὸν Ἰησοῦν, τὸν ποιὸν εἰς ἕξιν μεταχαράττων. Ὠσηὲ μὲν γὰρ ἐρμηνεύεται <σώζεται><sup>1</sup> ποιὸς οὗτος, Ἰησοῦς δὲ
- 122 σωτηρία κυρίου, ἕξως ὄνομα τῆς ἀρίστης. ἕξεις γὰρ τῶν κατ' αὐτὰς ποιῶν ἀμείνους, ὡς μουσικὴ μουσικοῦ καὶ ἰατρικὴ ἰατροῦ καὶ παντὸς τεχνίτου τέχνη πᾶσα,<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀιδιότητι καὶ δυνάμει καὶ τῇ περὶ τὰ θεωρήματα ἀπταιίστῳ ἀκρότητι. ἡ μὲν γὰρ ἕξις ἀίδιον, ἐνεργοῦν, τέλειον, ὁ δὲ ποιὸς θνητόν, πάσχον, ἀτελές· κρείττον δὲ θνητοῦ μὲν τὸ ἄφθαρτον, πάσχοντος δὲ τὸ δρῶν αἴτιον, τὸ δὲ τέλειον
- 123 ἀτελοῦς. οὕτω μετεχαράχθη καὶ τὸ τοῦ λεχθέντος νόμισμα πρὸς ἰδέαν βελτίονα. ὁ δὲ Χάλεβ καὶ αὐτὸς ὄλος ἀλλάττεται. “ ἐγένετο ” γὰρ φησι “ πνεῦμα ἕτερον ἐν αὐτῷ,” ὡσανεὶ τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ μεταβαλόντος πρὸς ἄκραν τελειότητα. καὶ γὰρ ἐρμηνευθεὶς ἐστι Χάλεβ πᾶσα καρδιά·
- 124 τοῦτο δὲ σύμβολον τοῦ μὴ ἐκ μέρους ἐπαμφοτερίζουσαν καὶ ἀντιρρέπουσαν, ἀλλ' ὅλην δι' ὅλου τὴν ψυχὴν μεταβεβλήσθαι πρὸς τὸ δόκιμον, κἂν εἴ τι

<sup>1</sup> <σώζεται>: my insertion, which I hope will meet with general acceptance. That Philo should have supposed that “Hoshea” meant “this person of a particular kind” seems to me absurd (for Siegfried’s defence of it see App. p. 590). Philo’s meaning, as I understand it, is that the finite verb necessarily implies a subject and therefore stands to the abstract noun as the ποιὸς does to the ποιότης or ἕξις. It will be seen that the juxtaposition of two -εται’s might easily lead to the omission of one. For the interpretation of a name by a finite verb cf. below, § 189.

<sup>2</sup> So Mangey (approved by Wend.): mss. ποιά, which cannot mean “of any kind,” and if we take it as “some particular kind” does not balance well with παντός.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 121-124

XXI. So much for this. But Moses also changes 121 the name of Hoshea to Joshua (Num. xiii. 17), thus transforming the individual who embodies a state into the state itself.<sup>a</sup> For Hoshea by interpretation is "he," that is a particular individual, "is saved." But Joshua is "safety of the Lord," a name for the best possible state. For states are better than the 122 individuals who embody them, as music is better than the musician and medicine than the physician, and every art than every artist, better both in everlastingness and in power and in unerring mastery over its subject matter. The state is everlasting, active, perfect; the individual is mortal, acted on, imperfect; and the imperishable is higher and greater than the mortal, the acting cause than that on which it acts, and the perfect than the imperfect. Thus in the 123 above also we see the coin which represents the man re-minted in a better form. But in Caleb we have a total change of the man himself. For we read "there was another spirit in him" (Num. xiv. 24), as though the ruling mind in him was changed to supreme perfection. For Caleb is by interpretation "all heart," and this is a figurative way of shewing 124 that his was no partial change of a soul wavering and oscillating, but a change to proved excellence of the whole and entire soul which dislodged anything that <sup>a</sup> ποιός (a person of a particular kind) is regularly used in antithesis to other ποιοί or ἀποιοί; but it may also be used in antithesis to ποιότης, cf. ποιόν τι ἀλλ' οὐ ποιότητα, Theaetetus 182 A. In this case the ποιός is the concrete of the abstract ποιότης. Philo has used it in exactly the same way in Leg. All. i. 67, 79, and also in Leg. All. ii. 18, where ὁ κατὰ τὰς ἀρετὰς ποιός is φρόνιμος or σώφρων, etc., corresponding to φρόνησις, σωφροσύνη, etc.

PHILO

μη̄ πάνυ ἐπαινετὸν εἶη,<sup>1</sup> λόγοις τοῖς περὶ μετανοίας ἐξοικίσασαν· οὕτω γὰρ ἐκνυψαμένη τὰ καταρρυπαίνοντα καὶ τοῖς φρονήσεως λουτροῖς χρησαμένη καὶ καθαρσίῳ<sup>2</sup> ἔμελλε φαιδρύνεσθαι.

- 125 XXII. Τὸν δὲ ἀρχιπροφήτην συμβέβηκεν εἶναι πολυώνυμον. ὁπότε μὲν γὰρ τοὺς χρησιμωδομένους χρησμοὺς ἐρμηνεύων ὑφηγεῖται, προσαγορεύεται Μωυσῆς· ὁπότε δ' εὐχόμενος εὐλογεῖ τὸν λεών, ἄνθρωπος θεοῦ· ἤνικα δὲ Αἴγυπτος τὰς ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀσεβηθέντων δίκας ἐκτίνει, τοῦ βασιλεύοντος
- 126 τῆς χώρας Φαραῶ θεός. διὰ τί δέ; ὅτι τὸ μὲν νόμους μεταγράφειν ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ τῶν ἐντευξομένων ψηλαφῶντός ἐστι καὶ διὰ χειρὸς ἔχοντος αἰεὶ τὰ θεῖα καὶ ἀνακεκλημένου ὑπὸ τοῦ θεσπιωδοῦ νομοθέτου καὶ εἰληφότος παρ' αὐτοῦ μεγάλην δωρεάν, ἐρμηνείαν καὶ προφητείαν νόμων ἱερῶν· μεταληφθεὶς γὰρ Μωυσῆς καλεῖται λῆμμα, δύναται δὲ
- 127 καὶ ψηλάφημα διὰ τὰς εἰρημένας αἰτίας. τὸ δέ γε εὐχεσθαι καὶ εὐλογεῖν οὐκ ἔστι τοῦ τυχόντος, ἀλλ' ἀνθρώπου τὴν πρὸς γένεσιν μη̄ ἑωρακότος συγγένειαν, προσκεκληρωκότος δὲ ἑαυτὸν τῷ πάν-
- 128 των ἡγεμόνι καὶ πατρί· ἀγαπητὸν γάρ, εἴ τω ἐξεγένετο εὐλογιστῖα χρῆσθαι, τὸ δέ γε καὶ<sup>3</sup> ἑτέροις περιποιεῖν τὸ ἀγαθόν, τοῦτο μείζονος καὶ τελειο-
- [598] τέρας ψυχῆς καὶ ὡς ἀληθῶς θειαζούσης | ἦν

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἦ.

<sup>2</sup> mss. καθαρσίω.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps τὸ δέ γε <τόδε> καὶ.

<sup>a</sup> Or "a thing received," the natural meaning of the word, i.e. Moses is named after the gift which he has received.

<sup>b</sup> The meaning is obscure. Perhaps the fact that Moses "handled" the laws shews that his name of "receiving" must also be understood to include the kindred meaning of

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 124-128

was not entirely laudable by thoughts of repentance ; for when it thus washed away its defilements, and made use of the lustrations and purifications of wisdom, it could not but be clean and fair.

XXII. The chief of the prophets proves to have 125 many names. When he interprets and teaches the oracles vouchsafed to him he is called Moses ; when he prays and blesses the people, he is a Man of God (Deut. xxxiii. 1) ; and when Egypt is paying the penalties for its impious deeds he is the god (Ex. vii. 1) of Pharaoh, the king of the country. Why 126 these three ? Because to enact fresh laws for the benefit of those to whom they would apply is the task of one whose hands are ever in touch with divine things, one who is called up (Ex. xxiv. 1) by the Lawgiver who speaks in oracles, one who has received from Him a great gift, the power of language to express prophet-like the holy laws. For Moses, if translated, is a "receiving" <sup>a</sup> and it also means a handling, as shewn above. <sup>b</sup> Secondly, to pray and bless 127 is not for any chance person but for a man who has had no eyes <sup>c</sup> for his kinship to created being and has given himself to be the portion of Him who is ruler and father of all. For one must be content if it be 128 granted to him to follow right reasoning himself, but to procure the good gift for others is what only a greater, more perfect, truly God-inspired soul can "handling." The derivation here given applies only to the last part of the name. The common ancient derivation that "Mo" represented the Egyptian μῶν, "water," is given by Philo, De Mos. i. 17. In Leg. All. iii. 231 ψηλάφημα was used for "groping" (in darkness).

<sup>c</sup> Clearly an allusion to the blessing of Levi (Deut. xxxiii. 9), "who said to his father and mother 'I have not seen thee' (οὐχ ἑώρακα)." Cf. De Fug. 89 and elsewhere. Mangey and Wend. needlessly suspect the word.

PHILO

- ἐπάγγελμα, ἧς ὁ τυχὼν εἰκότως θεοῦ<sup>1</sup> κεκληθήσεται. θεὸς δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς οὗτος ἄτε σοφὸς ὢν καὶ διὰ τοῦτ' ἄρχων παντὸς ἄφρονος, κἂν εἰ τοῖς βασιλείοις σκήπτροις ἐκεῖνος ἐφιδρούιτο μεγαλαυχῶν. καὶ
- 129 διὰ τοῦτο οὐχ ἤκιστα<sup>2</sup>. βούλεται γὰρ ὁ τῶν ὄλων ἡγεμῶν, κἂν ἀφόρητα ἀδικοῦντές τινες μέλλωσι κολάζεσθαι, παραιτητὰς ἔχειν τοὺς ἐντευξομένους ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν, οἳ τὴν τοῦ πατρὸς ἴλω δύναμιν ἀπομιμούμενοι μετριώτερον καὶ φιλανθρωπότερον χρῆσονται ταῖς τιμωρίαις· θεοῦ δὲ τὸ εὐεργετεῖν ἴδιον.
- 130 XXIII. Ἀποχρώντως οὖν περὶ τῆς τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀλλαγῆς τε καὶ μεταθέσεως εἰρηκότες ἐπὶ τὰ ἐξῆς τῆς ἐφόδου τρεψόμεθα κεφάλαια. εἶπετο δ' εὐθύς ἡ γένεσις Ἰσαὰκ· καλέσας γὰρ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ Σάρραν ἀντὶ Σάρας φησὶ τῷ Ἀβραάμ· “δῶσω σοι (ἐξ αὐτῆς) τέκνον.” ἐν μέρει δ'
- 131 ἕκαστον ἀκριβωτέον. ὁ τοίνυν κυρίως διδοὺς ὁτιοῦν ἴδιόν τι πάντως ἑαυτοῦ δίδωσιν· εἰ δὲ τοῦτ' ἀψευδές ἐστι, γένοιτ' ἂν Ἰσαὰκ οὐχ ὁ ἄνθρωπος, ἀλλ' ὁ συνώνυμος τῆς ἀρίστης τῶν εὐπαθειῶν, χαρᾶς, γέλως ὁ ἐνδιάθετος, υἱὸς θεοῦ<sup>3</sup> τοῦ διδόντος

<sup>1</sup> mss. θεός, which Wend. prints, though noting that ἄνθρωπος θεοῦ seems the right reading. But θεοῦ by itself is a simpler and, I think, quite sufficient correction.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. puts no stop at μεγαλαυχῶν, apparently treating it as “boasting on account of this (what?) in particular.” Mangey gives a full stop after μεγαλαυχῶν, but inserts <εὔχεται> after ἤκιστα. I suggest that θεός ἐστι is to be understood; see note <sup>b</sup> on opposite page. τοῦτο looks forward, as e.g. De Op. 72, 100, De Som. i. 118.

<sup>3</sup> Wend. and Mangey both punctuate γέλως, ὁ ἐνδιάθετος υἱὸς θεοῦ (which Drummond translates “the ideal son of God”). But can ἐνδιάθετος mean this? I understand it in its usual sense of opposition to προφορικός, cf. De Mig.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 128-131

promise, and the possessor of such a soul will with good reason be called God's man.<sup>a</sup> Thirdly, this same person is a god, because he is wise and therefore the ruler of every fool, even though that fool boast ever so loudly in the support of his royal sceptre. And he is a god for this reason in particular. It is the will 129 of the ruler of all that though there be some doomed to punishment for their intolerable misdeeds, they should have mediators to make intercession for them, who imitating the merciful power of the Father will dispense punishment with more moderation and in a kindlier spirit. Beneficence is the peculiar prerogative of a god.<sup>b</sup>

XXIII. We have now dealt sufficiently with the 130 change and substitution of names and will proceed to the next points in our inquiry. What followed at once was the promise of the birth of Isaac. For after calling his mother Sarah instead of Sarai He says to Abraham, "I will give thee a child from her" (Gen. xvii. 16). Each part of this must be severally examined. First, then, the giver of anything in the 131 proper sense of the word must necessarily give something which belongs to himself, and if this is so Isaac must be not the man Isaac but the Isaac whose name is that of the best of the good emotions, joy, the Isaac who is the laughter of the heart, a son of God, <sup>a</sup> Philo, as often, connects εὐλογιστία with εὐλογία. See note on De Sobr. 18.

<sup>b</sup> The thought is: Moses' "godship" to Pharaoh was particularly shewn in his not punishing him summarily, but allowing him so many chances of repenting, and in interceding with God for him, e.g. Ex. ix. 29.

---

157 τοῦ ἐνδιαθέτου καὶ σπουδαίου γέλωτος, and so below § 154 τὸν ψυχῆς γέλωτα.

PHILO

- αὐτὸν μείλιγμα καὶ εὐθυμίαν εἰρητικωτάταις ψυχαῖς.
- 132 ἄτοπον μὲν γὰρ ἕτερον ἄνδρα εἶναι, ἐξ ἑτέρου δὲ νόθα καὶ μοιχίδια παιδοποιεῖσθαι· καὶ μὴν τὸν γε θεὸν ἄνδρα τῆς φιλαρέτου διανοίας Μωυσῆς ἀναγράφει δι' ὧν φησιν· “ ἰδὼν κύριος, ὅτι μισεῖται Λεῖα, ἤνοιξε τὴν μήτραν αὐτῆς.” ἔλεον γὰρ καὶ οἶκτον λαβὼν τῆς ὑπὸ τοῦ θνητοῦ γένους μισουμένης ἀρετῆς καὶ ψυχῆς τῆς φιλαρέτου στείροϊ μὲν * * * τὴν φιλόκαλον φύσιν, ἀνοίγνυσι δὲ τῆς εὐπαιδίας πηγὴν εὐτοκίαν αὐτῇ χαριζόμενος.<sup>1</sup>
- 134 ἡ δὲ Θάμαρ ἐγκύμων τε γενομένη θείων σπερμάτων καὶ τὸν μὲν σπείραντα οὐκ ἰδοῦσα—λέγεται γὰρ τότε “ ἐγκαλύψασθαι τὸ πρόσωπον,” ὡς Μωυσῆς, ἠνίκα ἀπεστράφη εὐλαβούμενος τὸν θεὸν ἰδεῖν,—τὰ δὲ σύμβολα καὶ τὰ μαρτύρια διαθρήσασα καὶ παρ' αὐτῇ δικάσασα, ὅτι θνητὸς ταῦτ' οὐ δίδωσιν, ἀνέκραγεν· “ οὐτινος ταῦτ' ἐστίν,
- 135 ἐξ ἐκείνου ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχω.” τίνος ὁ δακτύλιος, ἡ πίστις, ἡ τῶν ὄλων σφραγίς, ἡ ἀρχέτυπος ἰδέα, ἡ τὰ πάντ' ἀνειδέα ὄντα καὶ ἄποια σημειωθέντα ἐτυπώθη; τίνος δὲ καὶ (ὁ) ὀρμίσκος, ὁ κόσμος, ἡ εἰμαρμένη,<sup>2</sup> ἀκολουθία καὶ ἀναλογία τῶν συμπάντων εἰρμὸν ἔχουσα ἀδιάλυτον; τίνος δὲ καὶ ἡ ράβδος, τὸ ἐρηρυσμένον, τὸ ἀκράδαντον, τὸ ἄτρεπτον, ἡ νοθεσία, ὁ σωφρονισμὸς, ἡ παιδεία, τὸ

<sup>1</sup> An alternative to supposing a lacuna may be obtained by emending φιλόκαλον to φιλόκακον (or better ἀφιλόκαλον, W.H.D.R.), and referring αὐτῇ to εὐπαιδίας.

<sup>2</sup> So Mangey suggests: Wend. prints ἡ [ὁ κόσμος] εἰμαρμένη; mss. ἡ ὁ κόσμος εἰμαρμένη. I see no reason to exclude ὁ κόσμος, which naturally suggests “order” as well as “world.” Wend. also puts a question at παιδεία, as if σκῆπτρον began an explanation of another of Judah's gifts. Clearly

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 131-135

who gives him as a means to soothe and cheer truly peaceful souls. It were a monstrous thing that one 132 should be a husband, and another the parent, parent therefore of bastards born in adultery, and yet Moses writes of God as the husband of the virtue-loving mind when he says, "The Lord seeing that Leah was hated opened her womb" (Gen. xxix. 31), for moved by pity and compassion for the virtue 133 hated by our mortal race and for the soul that loves virtue hesends barrenness (on the favourite and gives honour) to the nature which loves excellence and opens the fountain of happy parentage by granting her welfare in childbirth. And Tamar 134 too; she bore within her womb the divine seed, but had not seen the sower.<sup>a</sup> For we are told that at that hour she veiled her face (Gen. xxxviii. 15), just as Moses when he turned aside fearing to look upon God (Ex. iii. 6). But she closely scanned the symbols and tokens, and judging in her heart that these were the gifts of no mortal she cried aloud, "To whomsoever these belong, he it is by whom I am with child" (Gen. xxxviii. 25). Whose is the ring, 135 the pledge of faith, the seal of the universe, the archetypal idea by which all things without form or quality before were stamped and shaped? Whose is the cord, that is, the world-order, the chain of destiny,<sup>b</sup> the correspondence and sequence of all things, with their ever-unbroken chain? Whose is the staff, that is the firmly planted, the unshaken, the unbending; the admonition, the chastening, the

<sup>a</sup> For §§ 134-136 cf. De Fug. 149 ff.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 590.

---

this is not so. The staff suggests (1) immovableness, (2) discipline, (3) royalty. I suggest <ῆ> ἀκολουθία.

PHILO

- 136 σκῆπτρον, ἡ βασιλεία, τίνος; ἀρ' οὐχὶ μόνου
 [599] θεοῦ; τοιγαροῦν ὁ ἐξομολογητικὸς | τρόπος, Ἰούδας, ἡσθεὶς αὐτῆς τῷ κατεχομένῳ καὶ θεο-φορήτῳ παρρησιάζεται λέγων· “δεδικαίωται, ἥς ἔνεκα αἰτίας ἐγὼ οὐδενὶ θνητῷ αὐτὴν ἔδωκα,” ἀσεβὲς ἡγούμενος μαίνειν βεβήλοις τὰ θεῖα.
- 137 XXIV. μηνύει δὲ καὶ ἡ τρόπον μητρὸς ἀποκνήσασα φρόνησις τὸ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, ὅτι θεὸς αὐτὸ ἔσπειρε· τεχθέντος γὰρ ἐπισεμνύεται φάσκουσα· “γέλωτά μοι ἐποίησεν ὁ κύριος,” ἴσον τῷ τὸν Ἰσαὰκ διέπλασεν, ἐδημιούργησεν, ἐγέν-138 νησεν, ἐπειδὴ γέλωτι ὁ αὐτὸς ἦν. ἀλλ' οὐ παντός ἔστιν ἀκοῦσαι τὸ ἄκουσμα τοῦτο, πολλοῦ τοῦ δεισιδαιμονίας ῥυέντος παρ' ἡμῖν κακοῦ καὶ τὰς ἀνάνδρους καὶ ἀγενεῖς ψυχὰς ἐπικλύσαντος. διὸ προστίθησιν· “ὅς γὰρ ἂν ἀκούσῃ, συγχαρεῖταιί μοι,” ὡς ὀλίγων ὄντων, οἷς τὰ ὦτα ἀναπέπταται καὶ ἀνωρθίασται πρὸς τὴν τῶν ἱερῶν τούτων λόγων ὑποδοχὴν, οἱ διδάσκουσιν, ὡς ἄρα μόνου θεοῦ σπείρειν καὶ γεννᾶν τὰ καλὰ ἔργον ἴδιον· πρὸς οὓς οἱ 139 ἄλλοι πάντες κεκώφηνται. στόματι δ' οἰδᾶ ποτε προφητικῶ θεσπισθέντα διάπυρον τοιόνδε χρῆσμον· “ἐξ ἐμοῦ ὁ καρπὸς σου εὗρηται. τίς σοφὸς καὶ συνήσει ταῦτα; συνετὸς καὶ γνώσεται αὐτά;” τὸν δ' ὑπηχοῦντα καὶ κρούοντα ἀόρατον ἀοράτως τὸ φωνῆς ὄργανον ἐνενόουν καὶ ἐθαύμαζον ἅμα 140 καταπληττόμενος καὶ τὸ εἰρημένον. εἰ γάρ τι ἀγαθὸν ἐν τοῖς οὐσί * * *<sup>1</sup> μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ ὁ σύμπας οὐρανός τε καὶ κόσμος, εἰ δεῖ τἀληθὲς εἰπεῖν, θεοῦ

<sup>1</sup> I see no clear reason for supposing a lacuna here.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 135-140

discipline ; the sceptre, the kingship ! whose are they ? Are they not God's alone ? And therefore the temper which makes confession of thankfulness, that is Judah, pleased at the divine inspiration which masters her, says with all boldness, " She is justified since I gave her to no mortal " (ibid. 26), for he holds it impiety to defile the divine with things profane.

XXIV. So, too, the wisdom which as in motherhood brought forth the nature of the self-taught declares that God had begotten it. For when the child is born she says with pride, " The Lord has made laughter for me " (Gen. xxi. 6). That is the same as saying " He formed, He wrought, He begot, Isaac," since Isaac and laughter are the same. But this saying is not for all to hear, so strongly does the evil tide of superstition flow in our minds and drown unmanly and degenerate souls.<sup>a</sup> And therefore she adds " Whoever shall hear will rejoice with me " (ibid.) as though there were few whose ears are opened and pricked up to receive these holy words, which teach us that to sow and beget the excellent is the peculiar task of God alone. To this lesson all but those few are deaf. I remember too an oracle given by a prophet's mouth in words of fire which runs thus: " From Me thy fruit has been found. Who is wise and he shall understand them, who is understanding and he shall know them ? " (Hos. xiv. 9, 10).<sup>b</sup> Under the prophet's words I recognized the voice of the invisible master whose invisible hand plays on the instrument of human speech, and I was lost in admiration at the saying also. For all that is good in the range of existing things or rather the whole heaven and universe is in very truth God's fruit, the

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 590.

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Plant. 138.

PHILO

καρπός ἐστιν, ὕφ' οἷα δένδρου συνεχόμενος τῆς αἰδίου καὶ ἀειθαλοῦς φύσεως. συνετῶν δ' ἐστὶ καὶ σοφῶν ἀνδρῶν τὰ τοιαῦτα γινώσκειν καὶ ὁμολογεῖν, οὐκ ἀσήμων.

- 141 XXV. Τί μὲν οὖν ἐστὶ τὸ “ δώσω σοι ” λέλεκται, τὸ δ' “ ἐξ αὐτῆς ” μνηυτέον. οἱ μὲν οὖν τὸ ἔξω γινόμενον αὐτῆς ἐδέξαντο νομίζοντες ἄριστον κεκρίσθαι παρὰ ὀρθῶ λόγῳ τὸ μηδὲν ἀποφαίνειν τὴν ψυχὴν ἴδιον αὐτῆς καλόν, ἀλλὰ προσγινόμενον ἔξωθεν κατὰ τὴν μεγαλόνοιαν τοῦ
- 142 χάριτας ὀμβροῦντος θεοῦ. οἱ δὲ τὸ παραυτικά (κατὰ)<sup>1</sup> τάχος ἴσον γὰρ εἶναι τὸ ἔξ αὐτῆς τῷ παραχρήμα, εὐθύς, ἀνυπερθέτως, ἄνευ μελλήσεως. τοῦτον δὲ τὸν τρόπον αἱ θεῖαι φιλοῦσι συμβαίνειν δωρεαὶ φθάνουσαι καὶ τὰ χρόνων διαστήματα. τρίτοι δὲ εἰσὶν οἱ τὴν ἀρετὴν μητέρα τοῦ γενητοῦ εἶναι λέγοντες ἀγαθοῦ, λαμβάνουσαν τὰς γονὰς παρὰ μηδενὸς θνητοῦ.
- 143 πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ζητοῦντας, εἰ στείρα τίκτει—Σάρραν γὰρ εἰσάγοντες πάλαι στείραν οἱ χρησιμοὶ νῦν ὅτι γενήσεται μήτηρ ὁμολογοῦσι,—λεκτέον ἐκείνο, ὅτι
- [600] γυνὴ μὲν στείρα τίκτειν οὐ πέφυκεν, ὥσπερ | οὐδὲ τυφλὸς βλέπειν οὐδὲ κωφὸς ἀκούειν, ψυχὴ δ' ἢ πρὸς τὰ φαῦλα ἐστερωμένη καὶ παθῶν ἀμετρίας καὶ κακιῶν ἄγονος μόνη σχεδὸν εὐτοκία χρῆται, τὰ ἀξίεραστα τίκτουσα, τὸν ἀριθμὸν ἑπτὰ κατὰ τὸ ἀδόμενον ἄσμα ὑπὸ τῆς χάριτος, “ Ἀννης, ἣ φησιν· “ στείρα ἔτεκεν ἑπτὰ, ἣ δὲ πολλὴ ἐν τέκνοις 144 ἠσθένησε.” καλεῖ δὲ πολλὴν μὲν τὴν ἐκ μιγᾶδων

<sup>1</sup> My insertion. That κατὰ would be easily lost between -κα and τα- is obvious. The adverb τάχος appears to be poetical.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 140-144

inseparable growth, as it were, of the tree of His eternal and never-fading nature. And to know and confess such things is for the wise and understanding, not for men of no account.

XXV. So much for the phrase "I will give to thee." We must now explain "from her." Some understand by it that which comes into being outside her, thinking that in the judgement of right reason the best decision is that the soul should declare that nothing good belongs to herself, but all is an addition from outside, through the high benevolence of God Who showers His gifts of grace.

Others take it as "immediate," "with speed." They say that  $\xi\xi$   $\alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\varsigma$  is equivalent to "straightway," "at once," "without postponement," "without delay," and this is the way in which the gifts of God are wont to be given, outrunning even the moments of time.

There is a third class who say that virtue is the mother of any good that has come into being, receiving the seeds of that being from nothing that is mortal.

Again, some ask whether the barren can bear children, since the oracles earlier describe Sarah as barren and now admit that she will become a mother. Our answer to this must be that it is not in the nature of a barren woman to bear, any more than of the blind to see or of the deaf to hear. But as for the soul which is sterilized to wickedness and unfruitful of the endless host of passions and vices, scarce any prosper in childbirth as she. For she bears offspring worthy of love, even the number seven according to the hymn of Hannah, that is, grace, who says "The barren hath borne seven, but she that is much in children hath languished" (1 Sam. ii. 5).

PHILO

- καὶ συγκλύδων λογισμῶν συμπεφορημένην διάνοιαν, ἣ διὰ τὸ πλήθος τῶν περὶ αὐτὴν ὄχλων καὶ θορύβων ἀνήκεστα κακὰ τίκτει, στείραν δὲ τὴν μὴ παραδεχομένην θνητὸν ὡς γόνιμον σπόρον, ἀλλὰ τὰς τῶν φαύλων ὀμιλίας καὶ συνουσίας ἀμβλίσ-κουσάν<sup>1</sup> τε καὶ διαφθείρουσαν, περιεχομένην δὲ τῆς ἐβδόμης καὶ τοῦ κατ' αὐτὴν εἰρηνικωτάτου· τούτου γὰρ ἐγκύμων τε εἶναι βούλεται καὶ μήτηρ λέγεσθαι.
- 145 XXVI. Τοιοῦτον ἦν καὶ τὸ “ ἐξ αὐτῆς ”· τὸ δὲ τρίτον, ὃ δὴ “ τέκνον ” ἐλέγετο, νῦν διασκεψώμεθα.
 πρῶτον μὲν τοίνυν ἄξιον θαυμάσαι τὸ μὴ πολλὰ τέκνα φάναι δώσειν, ἐν δὲ χαριεῖσθαι μόνον. διὰ τί δέ; ὅτι τὸ καλὸν οὐκ ἐν πλήθει μᾶλλον ἢ
- 146 δυνάμει πέφυκεν ἐξετάζεσθαι. μουσικὰ μὲν γάρ, εἰ τύχοι, καὶ γραμματικὰ καὶ γεωμετρικὰ καὶ δίκαια καὶ φρόνιμα καὶ ἀνδρεία καὶ σώφρονα πάμ-πολλά ἐστιν· αὐτὸ δὲ τοῦτο (τὸ) μουσικὸν καὶ γραμματικὸν καὶ γεωμετρικόν, ἔτι δὲ δίκαιον καὶ σώφρον φρόνιμόν τε καὶ ἀνδρεῖον ἐν αὐτὸ μόνον τὸ ἀνωτάτω, μηδὲν ιδέας ἀρχετύπου διαφέρον, ἀφ' οὗ τὰ πολλὰ καὶ ἀμύθητα ἐκεῖνα διεπλάσθη.
- 147 ταῦτα μὲν περὶ τοῦ ἐν φάναι δώσειν· νυνὶ δὲ τέκνον εἶρηκεν οὐκ ἀμελῶς οὐδ' ἀπερισκέπτως, ἀλλ' ἐνεκα τοῦ παραστήσαι, ὅτι οὐκ ὀθνεῖον οὐδ' ὑποβολιμαῖον οὐδ' αὖ θετὸν ἢ νόθον, ἀλλὰ γνήσιον καὶ ἀστείον [ὅτι οὐκ ὀθνεῖον] ὄντως ἀστῆς ψυχῆς

<sup>1</sup> My correction for ms. ἀναλίσκουσαν, for which Wend. suggests ἀποδιδράσκουσαν and Mangey ἀναλυσκάζουσαν. Cf. its use in Theaetetus 149 D, which Philo may have in mind. See App. pp. 590 f.

<sup>a</sup> For this use of ἐβδόμη for ἐβδομάς see note on § 260.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 591.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 144-147

She applies the word "much" to the mind which is a medley of mixed and confused thoughts, which, because of the multitude of riots and turmoils that surround it, brings forth evils past all remedy. But the word "barren" she applies to the mind which refuses to accept any mortal sowing as fruitful, the mind which makes away with and brings to abortion all the intimacies and the matings of the wicked, but holds fast to the "seventh"<sup>a</sup> and the supreme peace which it gives. This peace she would fain bear in her womb and be called its mother.

XXVI. Such is the meaning of "from her." Let 145 us now examine the third part of the phrase used, namely "child." First then we may well wonder why He does not say He will give many children, but will grant one only. Why? Because excellence cannot be estimated by number but rather by value. For, to take examples at random, there are ever so 146 many musical, grammatical and geometrical things, and just and prudent and courageous and temperate things, but music and grammar and geometry in the abstract and again justice and temperance and prudence and courage in the abstract are each of them one thing, the original, the same as the archetypal idea, and from this origin the many and indeed infinite particulars<sup>b</sup> have been formed. So much for 147 His saying that He will give one, but the word actually used in this passage, "bairn," is used not without care or consideration. He wishes to shew that the child is not alien or supposititious, nor again adopted or bastard, but the truly genuine and free-natured<sup>c</sup>

<sup>c</sup> For this play upon ἀστῆς and ἀστειῶν (for which Mangey needlessly wished to substitute ἀστῶν) cf. De Mig. 99 ἀσται τε καὶ ἀστεῖαι γυναῖκες and note on De Conf. 106.

PHILO

ἔγγονον. παρὰ γὰρ τὸν τόκον τὸ τέκνον εἴρηται πρὸς ἔμφασιν οἰκειότητος, ἧ φυσικῶς ἀρμόζεται τέκνα γονεῦσιν.

- 148 XXVII. “ Εὐλογήσω ” δέ φησιν “ αὐτήν, καὶ ἔσται εἰς ἔθνη,” δηλῶν ὅτι<sup>1</sup> οὐ μόνον ἡ γενικὴ ἀρετὴ ὡς ἂν εἰς ἔθνη τὰ προσεχέστατα<sup>2</sup> εἶδη τέμνεται καὶ τὰ ὑπὸ τοῖς εἵδεσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅτι [601] συμβέβηκεν ὡς ζώων οὕτω καὶ πραγμάτων | εἶναι τρόπον τινὰ ἔθνη, οἷς μέγα ὄφελος ἀρετὴν προσ-
- 149 εἶναι. τὰ γὰρ ἔρημα καὶ χῆρα φρονήσεως πάντα ἐπιζήμια, καθάπερ οἷς οὐκ ἐπιλάμπει ἥλιος ἐξ ἀνάγκης ζοφερά. ἀρετῇ μὲν γὰρ γεωπόνος ἄμεινον φυτῶν ἐπιμελεῖται, ἀρετῇ δὲ καὶ ἡνίοχος ἄρμα ἐν ἵπποδρομίαις ἄπταιστον ἐλαύνει, ἀρετῇ δὲ καὶ κυβερνήτης [οἰακονόμος] οἰακονομεῖ κατὰ πλοῦν τὸ σκάφος. ἀρετὴ καὶ οἰκίας καὶ πόλιν καὶ χώραν βέλτιον οἰκεῖσθαι παρεσκεύασεν, οικονομικούς, πολιτικούς, κοινωνικούς ἄνδρας δημιουργοῦσα.
- 150 ἀρετῇ καὶ νόμους ἀρίστους εἰσηγήσατο καὶ τὰ εἰρήνης κατεβάλετο πανταχοῦ σπέρματα· ἐπεὶ καὶ ὑπὸ τῆς ἐναντίας ἕξεως πέφυκε γίνεσθαι τάναντία, πόλεμος, ἀνομία, κακοπολιτεῖαι, συγχύσεις, δύσπλοιοι, περιτροπαί, ἧ ἐν ταῖς ἐπιστήμαις ἀργαλεωτάτη νόσος, πανουργία, ἀφ’ ἧς ἀντὶ τεχνῶν κακοτεχνίαι προσερρήθησαν. ἀναγκαίως οὖν εἰς ἔθνη χωρήσει ἡ ἀρετὴ, ζώων ὁμοῦ καὶ πραγμάτων μεγάλα καὶ ἀθρόα συστήματα, ἐπὶ τῇ τῶν δεχομένων ὠφελείᾳ.
- 151 XXVIII. Λέγεται δὲ ἐξῆς, ὅτι “ καὶ βασιλεῖς ἔθνῶν ἐξ αὐτῆς ἔσονται.” οὗς γὰρ κυοφορεῖ καὶ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δηλονότι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πρὸς ἔσχατα τὰ.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 147-151

offspring of a free-born soul. For "bairn" derived from "bearing" is used to bring out the affinity which is the natural tie between parents and children.

XXVII. "I will bless her," He continues, "and 148 she shall be for nations." He shews hereby that not only is generic virtue divided into its proximate species and their subdivisions, as into nations, but also that actions and ideas have nations in a sense, just as living creatures have, and that to these nations the addition of virtue is most beneficial. For every- 149 thing that lacks or has lost prudence is a source of mischief, just as all must be in darkness on which the sun does not shine. By virtue the husbandman takes better care of his plants; by virtue the charioteer guides his chariot in the horse-race without a fall; by virtue the helmsman steers his vessel safe through the voyage. Virtue again produces better conditions in households, city and country, by producing men who are good household managers, statesmanlike and neighbourly. Virtue, too, introduces the best laws, 150 and sows everywhere seeds of peace. And in proof of this we see that where the opposite condition prevails the natural result is the opposite of these blessings, namely war, lawlessness, misgovernment, confusion, disasters at sea, revolutions, and in the realm of the sciences that most painful disease knavery, which causes them to be called perversions of art,<sup>a</sup> rather than arts. Virtue then will necessarily extend to nations, that is, large and comprehensive combinations both of living creatures and of actions and ideas, and will thus benefit those who receive her.

XXVIII. Next we read "And kings of nations 151 shall be from her," for those whom she conceives and <sup>a</sup> See App. p. 591.

PHILO

- ἀποτίκτει, πάντες εἰσὶν ἡγεμόνες, οὐ κλήρω, πράγματι ἀβεβαίω, καὶ χειροτονία ἐμμίσθων τὰ πολλὰ ἀνθρώπων πρὸς ὀλίγον χρόνον αἰρεθέντες, ἀλλ' 152 ὑπὸ φύσεως εἰς αἰὲ κατασταθέντες αὐτῆς. οὗτος δ' οὐκ ἐμὸς μῦθος, ἀλλὰ χρησμῶν τῶν ἱερωτάτων ἐστίν, ἐν οἷς εἰσάγονταί τινες λέγοντες τῷ Ἀβραάμ· “ βασιλεὺς παρὰ θεοῦ εἶ σὺ ἐν ἡμῖν,” οὐ τὰς ὕλας ἐξετάσαντες,—τίνες γὰρ ἦσαν ἀνδρὶ μετανάστη καὶ μηδὲ πόλιν οἰκοῦντι, πολλὴν δὲ καὶ ἐρήμην καὶ ἄβατον ἀλωμένω γῆν;—ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ βασιλικὴν ἔξιν κατανοήσαντες, ὥστ' ἀνομολογήσαι 153 κατὰ Μωυσῆν μόνον τὸν σοφὸν βασιλέα. καὶ γὰρ ὄντως ὁ μὲν φρόνιμος ἡγεμὼν ἀφρόνων ἐστὶν εἰδὼς ἅ χρῆ ποιεῖν τε καὶ ἅ μὴ, ὁ δὲ σώφρων ἀκολάστων τὰ περι τὰς αἰρέσεις καὶ φυγὰς ἠκριβωκῶς οὐκ ἀμελῶς, δειλῶν δὲ ὁ ἀνδρείος ἅ δει ὑπομένειν καὶ ἅ μὴ σαφῶς ἐκμαθῶν, ἀδίκων δὲ ὁ δίκαιος ἰσότητος ἐν τοῖς ἀπονεμητέοις ἀρρεποῦς στοχαζόμενος, ὁ δ' ὅσιος ἀνοσίων [ἐν] ἀρίσταις ὑπολήψεσι ταῖς περι θεοῦ κατεσχημένος.
- 154 XXIX. Ταύταις εἰκὸς ἦν ταῖς ὑποσχέσεσι τὸν νοῦν ἐκφυσηθέντα μετέωρον ἀρθῆναι. ὁ δὲ πρὸς | [602] ἔλεγχον ἡμῶν, οἱ καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς μικροτάτοις εἰώθαμεν ὑψαυχενεῖν, πίπτει καὶ εὐθύς γελᾷ τὸν ψυχῆς γέλωτα, σκυθρωπάζων μὲν τῷ προσώπῳ, μειδιῶν δὲ τῇ διανοίᾳ, πολλῆς καὶ ἀκράτου χαρᾶς εἰσοικισα- 155 μένης. ἀμφοτέρα δὲ κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον συμβαίνει τῷ μείζονα ἐλπίδος ἀγαθὰ κληρονομοῦντι σοφῶ, γελᾶν τε καὶ πίπτειν· τὸ μὲν εἰς πίστιν τοῦ μὴ μεγαλαυχεῖν διὰ κατάγνωσιν τῆς θνητῆς οὐδε-

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 151-155

bears are all rulers, chosen not for a short time by the uncertainty of lot or by the votes of men for the most part hirelings, but rulers appointed for ever by Nature herself. And this is no invention of mine, 152 but a statement made by the most holy oracles, wherein certain people appear as saying to Abraham "Thou art a King from God among us" (Gen. xxiii. 6). They did not consider his material resources, for what such were there in an emigrant, who was not even the inhabitant of a city but a wanderer over a wide and desolate and trackless land? Rather they perceived the kingship in his mind, and thus Moses confesses that the Sage alone is king.<sup>a</sup> For in truth the prudent man is ruler of 153 the imprudent, for he knows what he should and should not do, and the temperate of the intemperate, for he has studied carefully how to choose and how to avoid: the brave man of the coward because he has learned with certainty what he should and should not endure: the just of the unjust, because he aims at unbiased equality in what he has to award:<sup>a</sup> the holy of the unholy because high and true conceptions of God prevail with him.

XXIX. These promises might well have puffed up 154 the mind to soar into the heights. But to convict us, so often proud-necked at the smallest cause, he falls down and straightway laughs (Gen. xvii. 17) with the laughter of the soul, mournfulness in his face, but smiles in his mind, where joy vast and unalloyed has made its lodging. For the sage who receives an 155 inheritance of good beyond his hope these two things are simultaneous—to fall and to laugh. He falls as a pledge that the proved nothingness of mortality

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 591.

PHILO

- νείας, τὸ δ' εἰς εὐσεβείας βεβαίωσιν διὰ τὸ μόνον<sup>1</sup>
 χαρίτων καὶ ἀγαθῶν νομίζειν τὸν θεὸν αἴτιον.
- 156 πιπτέτω μὲν δὴ καὶ σκυθρωπαζέτω γένεσις, φυσικῶς—ἀνίδρυτός τε γὰρ καὶ ἐπίλυπος<sup>2</sup> ἐξ ἑαυτῆς ἐστίν,—ἀνιστάσθω δὲ ὑπὸ θεοῦ καὶ γελάτω· τὸ γὰρ ἔρεισμα αὐτῆς καὶ ἡ χαρὰ μόνος οὗτός ἐστιν.
- 157 Εἰκότως δ' ἂν ἀπορήσειέ τις, πῶς ἐνδέχεται γελᾶν τινα, μήπω γέλωτος εἰς τὴν καθ' ἡμᾶς γένεσιν ἐλθόντος· ὁ γὰρ Ἰσαάκ ἐστὶ γέλως, ὃς κατὰ τὴν παροῦσαν σκέψιν οὕτω γεγένηται.
 ὥσπερ γὰρ οὔτε βλέπειν χωρὶς ὀφθαλμῶν οὔτ' ἀκούειν χωρὶς ὠτῶν οὔτε δίχα μυκτῆρων ὀσφραίνεσθαι οὐδ' αὖ ταῖς ἄλλαις αἰσθήσεσιν ἄνευ τῶν κατ' αὐτὰς ὀργάνων χρῆσθαι οὔτε καταλαμβάνειν δίχα λογισμοῦ, οὕτως οὐδὲ γελᾶν εἰκὸς ἦν, εἰ μὴ
- 158 γέλως ἐδεδημιούργητο. τί οὖν χρὴ λέγειν; πολλὰ ἢ φύσις τῶν μελλόντων γίνεσθαι διὰ τινων συμ-βόλων προμηνύει. ἢ τὸν νεοττὸν οὐχ ὄρας, ὃς, πρὶν ἀέρι ἐπινήχεσθαι, πτερύσσεσθαι καὶ τοὺς ταρσοὺς διασειεῖν φιλεῖ, τὴν ἐλπίδα τοῦ πέτεσθαι
- 159 δυνήσεσθαι προευαγγελιζόμενος; ἀμνὸν δ' ἢ χίμαρον ἢ βοῦν ἔτι νεογνὸν οὐκ εἶδες, μήπω τῶν κεράτων ἐκπεφυκότων, ὅποτε διερεθίζει τις, ἀντι-βεβηκότα καὶ τοῖς μέρεσιν ἐκείνοις ὀρμῶντα πρὸς ἄμυναν, ἐξ ὧν ἡ φύσις τὰ ἀμυντήρια ὄπλα ἀνα-
- 160 δίδωσιν; ἔν γε μὴν ταῖς θηριομαχίαις οὐκ εὐθὺς οἱ ταῦροι τοὺς ἀντιτεταγμένους ἀναπείρουσιν, ἀλλ' εὖ μάλα διαβάντες καὶ μετρίως τὸν αὐχένα χαλά-σαντες καὶ θάτερον ἐκκλίναντες καὶ ταυρωπὸν ὄντως ἀποβλεψάμενοι τηρικαῦτα ἐπίασιν, ἔργου ἐξόμενοι. τὸ δὲ γινόμενον ὄρουσιν<sup>3</sup> ἐκάλεσαν, οἷς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τοῦ μόνων (τοῦ perhaps rightly).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 155-160

keeps him from vaunting : he laughs to shew that the thought that God alone is the cause of good and gracious gifts makes strong his piety. Let created 156 being fall with mourning in its face ; it is only what nature demands, so feeble in footing is it, so sad of heart in itself. Then let it be raised up by God and laugh, for God alone is its support and its joy.

One might reasonably question how it is possible 157 for anyone to laugh, when laughter had not yet come into being among us. For Isaac is laughter, which according to the view before us is not yet born. For as we cannot see without eyes nor hear without ears, nor smell without nostrils nor use the othersenses without the corresponding organs, nor apprehend without the power of thought, so the act of laughing would be against all probability if laughter had not yet been created. What shall we say then ? Nature 158 often provides signs which shew us beforehand future happenings. Do you not often see how the fledgling, before it actually oars its way in the air, likes to flutter or shake its wings, thus giving a welcome promise of ability to fly hereafter ? Or how the lamb or the he- 159 goat or the youngling ox, if one provoke it, fronts its opponent and starts to defend itself with those parts from which spring the weapons of defence which Nature provides ? Again, in the arena the bulls do 160 not at once gore their antagonists, but set their legs well apart, bend their necks slightly, and turn them either way with a truly bull-like glare, and only then do they attack and shew a mind to set to in earnest. This kind of thing, one impulse, that is, precluding

---

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἐπίλυτος.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐρυσιν.

PHILO

- ὀνοματοποιεῖν ἔθος, ὄρμην τινα πρὸ ὄρμῆς ὑπ-161 ἀρχουσαν. XXX. ὅμοιον δὴ τι<sup>1</sup> καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ τὰ πολλὰ πάσχει· ἐπιζομένου γὰρ τὰγαθοῦ προγήθει, ὡς τρόπον τινα χαίρειν πρὸ χαρᾶς καὶ εὐφραίνεσθαι πρὸ εὐφροσύνης. εἰκάσαι δ' ἄν τις αὐτὸ καὶ τῷ περὶ τὰ φυτὰ συμβαίνοντι· καὶ γὰρ ταῦτα,<sup>2</sup> ὅποτε μέλλοι καρποφορεῖν, προβλαστάνει καὶ προανθεῖ |
 [603] καὶ χλοηφορεῖ. τὴν ἡμερίδα ἄμπελον ἴδε, ὡς ὑπὸ 162 φύσεως τεθαυματούργηται, κληματίσιν, ἔλιξι, μω-χεύμασι, πετάλοις, οἰνάροις, ἃ φωνὴν (μονον)οὐκ ἀφιέντα μηνύει τὴν ἐπὶ τῷ μέλλοντι καρπῷ τοῦ δένδρου χαρὰν. καὶ ἡ ἡμέρα μέντοι προγελαῖ πρὸς βαθὴν ὄρθρον μέλλοντος ἀνίσχαι ἡλίου· αὐγὴ γὰρ αὐγῆς<sup>3</sup> ἄγγελος καὶ φῶς φωτὸς ἀμυδρότερον τηλ-163 αυγεστέρου προεξέρχεται. ἦκοντι μὲν οὖν ἤδη τῷ ἀγαθῷ συνομαρτεῖ χαρὰ, προσδοκωμένῳ δὲ ἐλπίς· ἀφικομένῳ μὲν (γὰρ) χαίρομεν, μέλλοντος<sup>4</sup> δὲ ἐλπίζομεν, καθάπερ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἐναντίων ἔχειν συμβέβηκεν· ἡ μὲν γὰρ παρουσία τοῦ κακοῦ λύπην, ἡ δὲ προσδοκία φόβον ἐγέννησεν. φόβος δὲ ἄρα ἦν οὐδὲν ἢ λύπη πρὸ λύπης, ὡσπερ ἐλπίς χαρὰ πρὸ χαρᾶς· ὁ γάρ, οἶμαι, πρὸς λύπην φόβος, 164 τοῦτο πρὸς χαρὰν ἐλπίς. σημεῖα δὲ τοῦ λεγομένου καὶ αἰσθήσεις ἐναργῆ περιφέρουσι· γεύσεως γὰρ ὄσφρησις προκαθημένη τὰ πρὸς ἐδωδὴν καὶ πόσιν σχεδὸν ἅπαντα προδικάζει· ἀφ' οὗ καὶ προγευστρίδα αὐτὴν ἐκάλεσαν εἰς τὴν ἐνάργειαν<sup>5</sup> ἀπιδόντες εὐθυβόλως ἔνιοι. πέφυκε δὲ καὶ ἡ ἐλπίς ὡσανεὶ τοῦ μέλλοντος ἀγαθοῦ προγεύεσθαι καὶ δια-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δῆτα.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. αὐτὰ.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. αὐτῆς.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. μέλλοντι, which perhaps retain, reading with Mangey <ἐπ>ελπίζουεν.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 160-164

another, is called orouisis,<sup>a</sup> or "springing," by those who practise word-coining. XXX. Much the same 161 often befalls the soul. When good is hoped for, it rejoices in anticipation, and thus may be said to feel joy before joy, gladness before gladness. We may find in this a likeness to what happens in the vegetable world. They too, when they are going to bear fruit, put forth shoots, flowers and leaves in anticipation. Observe the cultivated vine, what a wonderful piece 162 of nature's handiwork it is, with its twigs, tendrils, suckers, petals, leaves, which seem almost to break out into speech and proclaim their joy at the coming fruit of the tree. And the day laughs in forecast while the dawning is still young because the sunrise is coming. For beam heralds beam and the dimmer light leads the way for the clearer. And so the good 163 when it has come is accompanied by joy, and when it is expected, by hope. For we rejoice at its arrival and hope when it is coming. Similarly with their opposites. The presence of evil produces grief, and its expectation fear. And so fear is grief before grief, just as hope is joy before joy. For fear, I think, bears the same relation to grief as hope does to joy. The senses, too, carry with them clear signs of what 164 is here stated. Smell presides over taste and passes judgement in advance on practically all that serves for food or drink. And therefore some looking to the obvious fact have given to smell the apposite name of fore-taster. And so it is natural for hope to taste beforehand as it were the coming good and to recom-

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 591.

---

<sup>5</sup> MSS. ἐνέργειαν. The change seems to me very doubtful: ἐνέργεια is frequently used in connexion with the sense organs, e.g. De Abr. 154, 158.

PHILO

- συνιστάνειν αὐτὸ ψυχῇ τῇ βεβαίως κτησομένη.
 165 κὰν ταῖς ὁδοιπορίαις μέντοι πεινήσας τις καὶ διψήσας, πηγὰς ἐξαίφνης ἰδὼν ἢ δένδρα παντοῖα ἡμέροις βρίθοντα καρποῖς, μήπω φαγὼν ἢ πῶν, ἀλλὰ μηδ' ἀρυσάμενος<sup>1</sup> ἢ δρεψάμενος ἐλπίδι τῆς ἀπολαύσεως προπληροῦται. εἴτ' οἰόμεθα ταῖς μὲν τοῦ σώματος τροφαῖς καὶ πρὸ τῆς χρήσεως ἐστιᾶ-σθαι δύνασθαι, τὰς δὲ τῆς διανοίας οὐχ ἰκανὰς εἶναι καὶ ὁπότε μέλλοιεν ἐστιᾶν προευφραίνειν; 166 XXXI. Ἐγέλασεν οὖν εἰκότως μήπω δοκοῦντος ἐν τῷ θνητῷ γένει σπαρῆναι τοῦ γέλωτος· καὶ οὐ μόνον αὐτός, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ γυνὴ γελᾷ. λέγεται γὰρ αὐθις· “ ἐγέλασε δὲ Σάρρα ἐν ἑαυτῇ λέγουσα· οὐπω μὲν μοι γέγονεν ἕως τοῦ νῦν ” ἄνευ μελέτης ἀπαυτοματιζόν ἀγαθόν· ὁ δ' ὑποσχόμενος “ κύριός μου καὶ πρεσβύτερος ” πάσης γενέσεώς ἐστιν, ᾧ 167 πιστεύειν ἀναγκαῖον. ἅμα μέντοι καὶ ἀναδιδάσκει, ὅτι ἡ τ' ἀρετὴ χαρτόν ἐστι φύσει καὶ ὁ ἔχων αὐτὴν αἰεὶ γέγηθε, καὶ τοῦναντίον ὅτι ἡ τε κακία λυπηρόν καὶ ὁ ἔχων ὀδυνηρότατος. ἔτι νῦν θαυμάζομεν τῶν φιλοσόφων τοὺς λέγοντας τὴν ἀρετὴν εὐπάθειαν<sup>2</sup> 168 εἶναι; ἰδοὺ γὰρ Μωυσῆς χορηγὸς ἀνεύρηται τοῦ σοφοῦ τούτου δόγματος, χαίροντα καὶ γελῶντα παραγαγὼν τὸν ἀστείον· ἀλλαχόθι δὲ οὐκ αὐτὸν μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοὺς εἰς ταῦτόν ἀφικνουμένους αὐτῷ. “ ἰδὼν γὰρ σε ” φησὶ “ χαρήσεται ἐν [604] αὐτῷ,” | ὡς τῆς τοῦ σπουδαίου προσόψεως αὐτὸ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἰδρυσάμενος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀπάθειαν.

<sup>a</sup> This perversion of the laughter of Abraham and Sarah has some excuse in the case of the latter in the obscurity of the LXX in which the E.V. “ After I am waxed old shall I have pleasure, my lord being old also?” appears as here quoted. So also in Leg. All. iii. 217 f.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 164-168

mend it to the soul which will have it for its solid possession. Again the hungry or thirsty traveller, if 165 he suddenly sees in his journeying springs of water or trees of every kind laden with refreshing fruits, finds a preliminary satisfaction in the hope of future enjoyment, before he eats or drinks and even before he draws the water or plucks the fruit. And if we can find a feast in what feeds the body before we actually eat, can we possibly suppose that what feeds the mind is unable to give us a foretaste of gladness when the feast it provides is still to come ?

XXXI. Well then might he laugh even though 166 laughter seems to have been as yet unborn in our mortal race, and not only did he himself laugh but his wife also. For again we find Sarah laughed, saying in herself, "Not yet has this befallen me till now," this unstudied, self-sprung good. Yet He that promised, she says, is "my Lord" (Gen. xviii. 12) and "older" than all creation, and I needs must believe Him.<sup>a</sup> At 167 the same time Moses teaches us this lesson that virtue is by its very nature a thing for joy,<sup>b</sup> and that he who possesses it ever rejoices, while vice on the contrary is grievous and its possessor most unhappy. After this need we extol those philosophers who declare that virtue is a state of happy feeling<sup>c</sup> ? For, 168 see, we find in Moses the primary authority for this wise doctrine, since he pictures the good man as rejoicing and laughing, and elsewhere not the good man only but those also who come into company with him. "Seeing thee," he says, "he will rejoice at it" (Ex. iv. 14).<sup>d</sup> He suggests that the mere sight

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 591.

<sup>c</sup> Or "well-being." See App. p. 591.

<sup>d</sup> See note on De Mig. 79.

PHILO

- μόνον ἰκανῆς οὔσης ἀναπληρῶσαι τὴν διάνοιαν εὐφροσύνης, ἀποφορτισαμένην τὸ ἀπεχθέστατον 169 ψυχῆς κακῶν, λύπην. φαύλω δ' οὐδενὶ χαίρειν ἐφέεται, καθάπερ καὶ ἐν προφητικαῖς ἄδεται ῥήσεσι· “χαίρειν οὐκ ἔστι τοῖς ἀσεβέσιν, εἶπεν ὁ θεός.” λόγος γὰρ ὄντως καὶ χρησμός ἐστι θεῖος, σκυθρωπὸν καὶ ἐπίλυπον καὶ μεστὸν βαρυδαιμο-νίας εἶναι τὸν παντὸς μοχθηροῦ βίον, κἂν προσ-170 ποιῆται τῷ προσώπῳ μειδιᾶν. οὐ γὰρ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους χαίρειν ἂν εἴποιμι πρὸς ἀλήθειαν, ἡνίκα τοὺς ἀδελφούς Ἰωσήφ ἤκοντας ἤκουσαν, ἀλλ' ἐπιμορφάζειν<sup>1</sup> καθυποκρινομένους τὸ δοκεῖν.
 οὐδενὶ γὰρ ἐπιστὰς ἔλεγχος ἀφρόνων δι' ἡδονῆς ἐστιν, ὡσπερ οὐδ' ἰατρὸς ἀκρατεῖ νοσοῦντι. πόνος μὲν γὰρ τοῖς συμφέρουσι, ῥαστώνη δὲ τοῖς βλαβεροῖς ἔπεται· πόνου δὲ ῥαστώνην προκρίναντες εἰκότως τοῖς τὰ συμφέροντα εἰσηγουμένοις ἀπεχθά-171 νονται. ἐπειδὴν οὖν ἀκούσης ὅτι “ἐχάρη Φαραῶν καὶ ἡ θεραπεία αὐτοῦ” διὰ τὴν τῶν ἀδελφῶν Ἰωσήφ ἄφιξιν, μὴ νόμιζε πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἡδεσθαι, εἰ μὴ κατ' ἐκείνο ἴσως, ὅτι προσδοκῶσιν αὐτὸν <νοῦν><sup>2</sup> μεταβαλεῖν ἀπὸ τῶν ψυχῆς ἀγαθῶν, οἷς συνετράφη, πρὸς τὰς τοῦ σώματος ἀνηνύτους ἐπι-θυμίας, τὸ ἀρχαῖον καὶ προγονικὸν ἀρετῆς συγ-172 γενοῦς νόμισμα παρακόψαντα. XXXII. τοιαῦτα δ' ἐλπίσας ὁ φιλήδονος νοῦς αὐτάρκες οὐχ ὑπο-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὑπομορφάζειν.

<sup>2</sup> αὐτὸν <νοῦν>: my correction for αὐτόν in MSS. and all editions. As the text stands, αὐτόν can only refer to Joseph and this is hardly sense. How could the arrival of the brethren, always representing the good, cause Joseph already more or less corrupted by Egypt to change for the worse? The sequel clearly shows that it is the brethren and Jacob?

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 168-172

of the worthy is enough to make the mind cast off the soul's most hateful burden, grief, and to fill it with joy. And to none of the wicked is rejoicing 169 permitted, as indeed the orations of the prophets proclaim: "Rejoicing is not for the impious, said God" (Is. xlvi. 22). It is indeed a divine saying and oracle that the life of every worthless man is one of gloom and sorrow and full of misery, even though he affect to wear a smiling face. I would 170 not say that the Egyptians really rejoiced when they heard that Joseph's brethren had come. Rather they assumed in hypocrisy the appearance of joy. For no fool when confronted by conviction is pleased with it, any more than the dissolute man on his sick-bed with the physician. For the profitable is followed by toil, the noxious by ease. And fools because they prefer ease to toil are naturally at enmity with those who would advise them to their profit. And so when 171 you hear that "Pharaoh rejoiced and his servants" (Gen. xlv. 16) at the coming of the brothers of Joseph, do not suppose that they were really pleased, except perhaps at one thought: they expected once more to lead away the mind to desert its foster-brethren the goods of the soul for the numberless lusts of the body, and to debase its old ancestral coinage, the coinage of virtue its birth-fellow. XXXII. With such 172 hopes the pleasure-loving mind is not content merely in particular whom they hope to corrupt. But συνεγράφη and παρακόψαντα forbid us to correct to αὐτοῦς. The suggestion of αὐ is not necessary to the sense, but it enriches it, as well as diminishing the departure from the mss. Egypt hopes to do with the new arrivals what it has already done with Joseph. This is supported by § 173, where the ills which will be inflicted on them are those which Joseph has already suffered.

---

PHILO

λαμβάνει τοὺς νεωτέρους καὶ ἄρτι πρὸς τὰ σω-φροσύνης γυμνάσια φοιτῶντας ἐπιθυμιῶν δελέασιν ἀγκιστρεύσασθαι, ἀλλὰ δεινὸν ἐνόμισεν εἶναι, εἰ μὴ καὶ τὸν πρεσβύτερον ὑπάξεται λόγον, οὐδ' τὰ λυτ-173 τῶντα πάθη παρήβηκε. λέγει γὰρ αὐτὸς τὰς ζημίας ὡς ὠφελείας προτείνων· “ παραλαβόντες τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὰ ὑπάρχοντα ὑμῶν ἦκετε πρὸς μέ ” ἐπ’ Αἰγύπτου<sup>1</sup> καὶ τοῦ φοβεροῦ τούτου βασιλέως, ὃς καὶ τὰ πατρῶα ἡμῶν καὶ τὰ ὄντως ὑπάρχοντα ἀγαθὰ ἔξω προεληλυθότα τοῦ σώματος— φύσει γὰρ ἐστὶν ἐλεύθερα— ἀντισπᾶ βιαζόμενος δεσμοτηριῶ πάνυ πικρῶ παραδοῦναι, καταστήσας εἰρκοφύλακα, ὡς φησι τὸ λόγιον, Πεντεφρῆ τὸν σπάδοντα καὶ ἀρχιμάγειρον σπάνει κεχρημένον τῶν καλῶν καὶ τὰ γεννητικὰ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐκτετμημένον, ἔτι δὲ σπείρει καὶ φυτεύει τι τῶν κατὰ παιδείαν ἀδυνατοῦντα, μαγείρου τρόπον κτείνοντα τὰ ζῶντα καὶ κατὰ μέρη καὶ κατὰ μέλη κόπτοντα καὶ διαιροῦντα καὶ ἐν ἀψύχοις καὶ νεκροῖς καλωδούμενον οὐ σώμασι μᾶλλον ἢ πράγμασι καὶ ταῖς περιέργοις παρ-αρτύσειν ἀνεγείροντα καὶ ἀνερεθίζοντα τὰς τῶν ἀνηνύτων παθῶν ὀρμάς, ὥς εἰκὸς ἦν τιθασεύοντα 174 πρᾶναι. ὁ δὲ καὶ “ δώσω ” φησὶν “ ὑμῖν πάντων
 [605] τῶν ἀγαθῶν Αἰγύπτου, καὶ | φάγεσθε τὸν μυελὸν
 (τῆς) γῆς.” ἀλλ’ ἐροῦμεν αὐτῶ· σώματος ἀγαθὸν οὐ προσιέμεθα οἱ τὰ ψυχῆς ἰδόντες· ἱκανὸς γὰρ ὁ

<sup>1</sup> Wend. suggests ἐπ’ <ἀγαθὰ>, and adds “ certe corruptela latet.” I doubt whether there is anything very unusual in this use of ἐπί with the genitive.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. at present only the brethren representing virtue at its earliest stages have come to Egypt. Egypt hopes also to win over the more perfected virtue of Jacob.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 172-174

to angle with the baits of every lust for the younger sort, the novices in the training-schools of temperance, but revolts from the idea that it should be unable to subjugate the older thinking, in which the frenzy of passion has passed its prime.<sup>a</sup> He makes other offers, offers which mean loss though he speaks of them as profit. "Take your father and your wealth," he says, "and come to me" (ibid. 18) into Egypt, come, that is, to this King of terror, who when our paternal and our truly real wealth had in virtue of its natural liberty left the body behind in its advance, draws it back and throws it with violence into a prison of exceeding bitterness; and over this prison he sets for keeper, as the oracular text tells us, Potiphar (Gen. xxxix. 1) the eunuch and chief cook<sup>b</sup>: eunuch, because he has scant store of excellence and has lost by mutilation the soul's organs of generation, unable further to sow and beget anything that tends to discipline; cook, because in cook-like fashion he slaughters living beings, chops and divides them, piece by piece, limb by limb, and moves in a chaos of lifeless carcasses, immaterial rather than material;<sup>c</sup> and with his elaborately seasoned dishes arouses and excites the appetites of fruitless passions, appetites which should rather be tamed and calmed. And also,<sup>174</sup> says the Pleasure-lover, "I will give you of all the good things of Egypt, and ye shall eat the marrow of the land" (Gen. xlv. 18). But we will answer him, "We do not accept the body's good, for we have seen the things of the soul. For so deeply has our strong

<sup>b</sup> So LXX. E.V. "an officer of Pharaoh's, the captain of the guard"; cf. Leg. All. iii. 236.

<sup>c</sup> See note on Quis Rerum 242.

PHILO

- τριπόθητος ἐκείνων ἡμερος ἐντακεῖς πάντων ὅσα τῇ σαρκὶ φίλα λήθην ἐργάσασθαι.
- 175 XXXIII. Τοιαύτη μὲν τις ἢ ψευδώνυμος χαρὰ τῶν ἀφρόνων, ἣ δὲ ἀληθῆς πρότερον εἴρηται, μόνοις ἀστείοις ἐφαρμόζουσα. “ πεσῶν οὖν ἐγέλασεν,” οὐκ ἀπὸ θεοῦ πεσῶν, ἀλλ’ ἀφ’ ἑαυτοῦ· ἔσθη μὲν γὰρ περὶ τὸν ἄτρεπτον, ἔπεσε δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς ἰδίας οἰήσεως.
- 176 διὸ καὶ τοῦ μὲν δοκησισόφου καταβληθέντος φρονήματος, ἀνεγερθέντος δὲ τοῦ φιλοθέου καὶ περὶ τὸν ἀκλινῆ μόνον ἰδρυθέντος, γελάσας εὐθύς “ εἶπε τῇ διανοίᾳ· εἰ τῷ ἑκατονταετεί γενήσεται, καὶ ἡ Σάρρα ἐνενήκοντα ἐτῶν οὔσα τέξεται;”
- 177 μὴ (μὲν)τοι νομίσης, ὦ γενναῖε, τὸ “ εἰπεῖν ” οὐχὶ τῷ στόματι, ἀλλὰ “ τῇ διανοίᾳ ” προσκεῖσθαι παρέργως, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάνυ ἐξητασμένως. διὰ τί; ὅτι ἔοικε διὰ τοῦ φάσκειν “ εἰ τῷ ἑκατονταετεί γενήσεται ” περὶ τῆς Ἰσαὰκ ἐνδοιάσαι γενέσεως, ἐφ’ ἣ πρότερον ἐλέγετο πιστεῦσαι, ὡς ἐδήλου τὸ χρησθὲν πρὸ μικροῦ τόδε· “ οὐ κληρονομήσει σε οὗτος, ἀλλ’ ὃς ἐξελεύσεται ἐκ σου ”· εἶπ’ εὐθύς εἶπεν· “ ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην.”
- 178 ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ἀκόλουθον οὐκ ἦν ἐνδοιάσαι τῷ πιστευκότητι, πεποίηκε τὸν ἐνδοιασμὸν οὐ πολυχρόνιον, μηκυνόμενον μέχρι γλώττης καὶ στόματος, ἀλλ’ αὐτοῦ περὶ τὴν ὀξύκνητον διάνοιαν ἰστάμενον. “ τῇ γὰρ διανοίᾳ ” φησὶν “ εἶπεν,” ἦν τῶν εἰς ποδώκειαν ἐπαινουμένων οὐδὲν ἂν ἰσχύσαι παρα-

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 174-178

yearning for these sunk into us that it can make us forget all that is dear to the flesh."

XXXIII. Such indeed is the joy falsely so-called 175 of the fool. The true joy has been described above, the joy which befits the virtuous alone. "And so Abraham fell and laughed" (Gen. xvii. 17). He fell not from God but from himself, for in clinging to the immovable Being he stood, but fell from his own conceit. And so when the spirit which is wise in its 176 own conceits had been thrown to the ground and the spirit of love to God raised up and firmly planted round Him who alone never bends, he laughed at once and said in his mind, "Shall this happen to one of a hundred years old, and shall Sarah being ninety years old bear a son?" But do not think, 177 good reader, that when "he said" is followed by
"in his mind" instead of "with his mouth," the addition has little meaning. No, it is made with very careful purpose. Why so? Because in saying "Shall this happen to one of a hundred years," he seems to doubt the birth of Isaac in which in an earlier place he was said to believe, as was shown by the oracular words delivered a little time before.
Those ran, "He shall not be thine heir, but one who shall come from thee," and then immediately followed the words, "And Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness" (Gen. xv.
4, 6). So then, since doubt was not consistent with 178 his past belief, Moses has represented the doubt not as long-lived, or prolonged to reach the mouth and tongue, but staying where it was with the swiftly moving mind. For, says the text, "He said in his mind," which none of the creatures whose swiftness of foot we admire can outrun, and indeed no form

PHILO

- δραμεῖν, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰς πτηγὰς φύσεις ἀπάσας 179 ἔφθακεν. ἀφ' οὗ μοι δοκεῖ καὶ τῶν παρ' Ἑλληνισποιητῶν ὁ δοκιμώτατος "ὡς εἰ πτερόν ἢ νόημα" φάναι, δηλῶν τὸ τῆς ὀξύτητος τάχος, κατ' ἐπίτασιν ὕστερον τοῦ πτεροῦ τὸ νόημα θείσ. ἐπὶ πολλὰ γὰρ ἢ διάνοια ἐν ταύτῳ πράγματα ὁμοῦ καὶ σώματα στείχει μετὰ ἀλέκτου φορᾶς, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ γῆς καὶ θαλάττης αὐτίκα πέρατα φθάνει συναιρούσα καὶ τέμνουσα τὰ ἀπειρομεγέθη διαστήματα<sup>1</sup>. κατὰ δέ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον τοσοῦτον ἀπὸ γῆς ἀναπηδᾷ, ὡς δι' ἄερος εἰς αἰθέρα ἀνέρχεται καὶ μόλις περὶ τὴν 180 ἐσχάτην τῶν ἀπλανῶν ἀψίδα ἴστασθαι. τὸ γὰρ ἔνθερμον καὶ διάπυρον ἡρεμεῖν αὐτὴν οὐκ ἔα· διὸ πολλὰ ὑπερβάλλουσα καὶ τοῦ παντὸς αἰσθητοῦ τούτου ὄρου ἔξω φέρεται πρὸς τὸν ἐκ τῶν ιδεῶν παγέντα συγγενικῶς. γέγονεν οὖν περὶ τὸν ἀστείον
 ἢ τροπὴ βραχεῖα, ἄτομος, ἀμερῆς, οὐκ αἰσθητή, | [606] νοητὴ δὲ μόνον, τρόπον τινὰ ἄχρονος.
- 181 XXXIV. ἀλλ' ἴσως ἂν τις εἴποι· τί οὖν γε, ὅτι πεπιστευκῶς ἴχνος ἢ σκιὰν ἢ αὐραν<sup>2</sup> ἀπιστίας δέχεται τὸ παράπαν; οὗτος δὲ οὐδὲν ἕτερόν μοι βούλεσθαι δοκεῖ ἢ τὸν γενόμενον ἀποφαίνειν ἀ-γένητον καὶ τὸν θνητὸν ἀθάνατον καὶ τὸν φθαρτὸν ἀφθαρτον καὶ τὸν ἄνθρωπον, εἰ θέμις εἰπεῖν, θεόν.
- 182 τὴν γὰρ πίστιν, ἧς ἔλαχεν ἄνθρωπος, οὕτω βέβαιόν φησι δεῖν εἶναι, ὡς μηδὲν διαφέρειν τῆς περὶ τὸ ὄν, τῆς ἀρτίου καὶ περὶ πάντα πλήρους. λέγει

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπειρα μεγέθη διὰ στόματος.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὠραν.

of bird nature has such speed. This is, I think, the 179 reason why the poet most highly esteemed among the Greeks says, "like a bird's wing or a thought."<sup>a</sup>
 He is showing the swiftness of the mind's intensity, and to bring this out more strongly he puts thought after the bird's wing. For the mind moves at the same moment to many things material and immaterial with indescribable rapidity and reaches at once the boundaries of land and sea, covering and dividing<sup>b</sup> distances of infinite magnitude. At the same time it leaps so high from the earth that it passes through the lower to the upper air and scarcely comes to a stop even when it reaches the furthestmost sphere of the fixed stars. For its fiery fervent nature forbids 180 it to rest and its onward journey carries it across wide spaces outside the limits of all this world of sense to the world framed from the ideas to which it feels itself akin. So then in the case of the virtuous man the swerving was short, instantaneous and infinitesimal, not belonging to sense but only to mind, and so to speak timeless.

XXXIV. But 181
 perhaps it may be said, why did he, when once he had believed, admit any trace or shadow or breath of unbelief whatsoever? It seems to me that this question amounts to a wish to make out the created to be uncreated, the mortal immortal, the perishable imperishable, and if it is not blasphemy to say it, man to be God. Such a person asserts that the faith 182 which man possesses should be so strong as to differ not at all from the faith which belongs to the Existent, a faith sound and complete in every way. For Moses

<sup>a</sup> Odyssey vii. 36, cf. the saying of Thales (Diog. Laert. i. 35) τάχιστον νοῦς· διὰ παντὸς γὰρ τρέχει.

<sup>b</sup> The sense of the word is not clear. Wend. suggests συντέμνουσα "cutting down," "making a short cut of."

PHILO

- γὰρ Μωυσῆς ἐν ᾧδῃ τῇ μείζονι· “θεὸς πιστός, 183 καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἀδικία ἐν αὐτῷ.” πολλὴ δὲ ἄγνοια νομίζειν, τὰς θεοῦ ἀρετὰς τὰς ἀρρεπεῖς καὶ παγωτάτας χωρῆσαι ψυχὴν ἀνθρώπου δύνασθαι· ἀγα-πητὸν γὰρ εἰκόνας αὐτῶν κτήσασθαι δυνηθῆναι, πολλοῖς καὶ μεγάλοις ἀριθμοῖς τῶν ἀρχετύπων 184 ἐλαττουμένας· καὶ μήποτ’ εἰκότως· ἀκράτους μὲν γὰρ ἀναγκαῖον εἶναι τὰς θεοῦ ἀρετάς, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ὁ θεὸς οὐ σύγκριμα, φύσις ὧν ἀπλή, κεκραμένας δὲ τὰς τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἐπειδὴ καὶ ἡμεῖς γεγόναμεν κράματα, θείου καὶ θνητοῦ συγκερασθέντων καὶ κατὰ τοὺς τῆς τελείας μουσικῆς λόγους ἀρμοσθέν-των· τὸ δ’ ἐκ πλείονων συνεστῶς φυσικὰς πρὸς 185 ἕκαστον τῶν μερῶν ἀνθολκὰς ἔχει. εὐδαίμων δ’ ὅτω ἐξεγένετο τὸν πλείω τοῦ βίου χρόνον πρὸς τὴν ἀμείνω καὶ θειοτέραν μοῖραν ταλαντεύειν· ἅπαντα γὰρ τὸν αἰῶνα ἀμήχανον, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὸ ἀντίπαλον θνητὸν ἄχθος ἔστιν ὅτε ἀντέρρευσε καὶ ἐφεδρεῦ-σαν ἐκαιροφυλάκησε τὰς ἀκαιρίας τοῦ λογισμοῦ, 186 ὡς ἀντιβιάσασθαι. XXXV. “πεπίστευκεν οὖν Ἀβραὰμ τῷ θεῷ,” ἀλλ’ ὡς ἄνθρωπος πεπίστευκεν, ἵνα τὸ ἴδιον τοῦ θνητοῦ γνῶς καὶ μάθης οὐκ ἄλλως αὐτῷ γενέσθαι, εἰ μὴ ἐκ φύσεως, τὴν τροπὴν. ἀλλ’ εἰ βραχεῖα καὶ ἀκαρῆς γέγονεν, ἄξιον εὐχαριστεῖν· πολλοὶ γὰρ ἕτεροι τῇ ρύμη καὶ φορᾷ κατα-187 κλυσθέντες καὶ τῇ βίᾳ εἰσάπαν ἠφανίσθησαν. οὐκ ἔστι γάρ, ὧ γενναῖε, κατὰ τὸν ἱερώτατον Μωυσῆν ἀρτίπους ἢ ἐν θνητῷ σώματι ἀρετῇ, ἀλλὰ παρα-πλῆσιόν τι πάσχουσα νάρκη, μικρὸν ὅσον ὑπο-

---

<sup>a</sup> The common title for Deut. xxxii. in contrast to the song of Ex. xv.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 182-187

says in the Greater Song,<sup>a</sup> " God is faithful and there is no injustice in Him " (Deut. xxxii. 4), and it argues 183 great ignorance to think that the soul of man can contain the unwavering, absolutely steadfast excellences of God. Enough for man is the power to possess the images of these, images in the scale of number and magnitude far below the archetypes. And surely this is to be expected, for the excellences 184 of God must needs be unmixed since God is not compounded but a single nature, whereas man's excellences are mixed, since we, too, are mixtures, with human and divine blended in us and formed into a harmony in the proportions of perfect music, and a compound of more than one ingredient is subject to natural counter-forces drawing it to each of these ingredients. Happy is he to whom it is 185 granted to incline towards the better and more god-like part through most of his life. For it is impossible that it should be so with him throughout the whole length of life, since sometimes the opposing load of mortality throws its weight into the scales, and biding its time waits to find its chance in the mischances of reason and so prove too strong for him. XXXV. " Abraham then has believed God," but only 186 as a man, so that you may recognize the weakness, the distinctive mark of the mortal, and learn that, if he swerves, his swerving arises only according to nature. But if that swerving is short and momentary, thanks are due, for many others have been overwhelmed by the rushing of the tide and died a violent death in the waters. For, good friend, if you believe 187 the holy Moses, virtue is not sound-footed in our mortal and bodily nature, but limps ever so little and is subject to a sort of stiffness, for we are told that

PHILO

- χωλαίνουσα. “ἐνάρκησε” γάρ φησι “τὸ πλάτος τοῦ μηροῦ, ᾧ καὶ ἐπέσκαζεν.”
- 188 “Ἴσως δ’ ἂν τῶν εὐθαρσεστέρων εἴποι τις παρελθῶν, ὅτι οὐδὲ ἀπιστοῦντός ἐστιν ἡ προφορά, ἀλλ’ εὐχομένου, ἢν’, εἰ μέλλοι τῶν εὐπαθειῶν ἡ ἀρίστη γεννᾶσθαι, χαρά, μὴ ἑτέροις ἀριθμοῖς μᾶλλον ἢ [607] τοῖς ἐνενηκοντα καὶ ἑκατὸν<sup>1</sup> τεχθῆ, ἵνα τὸ | τέλειον
- 189 ἀγαθὶ τελείοις ἀριθμοῖς εἰς γένεσιν ἔλθῃ. τέλειοι δ’ οἱ λεχθέντες ἀριθμοί, καὶ μάλιστα κατὰ τὰς ἱερωτάτας ἀναγραφάς. ἴδωμεν δ’ αὐτῶν ἑκάτερον<sup>2</sup>. Σὴμ εὐθέως μὲν, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ δικαίου Νῶε, πρόγονος δὲ τοῦ ὀρατικοῦ γένους, “ἑκατὸν ἑτῶν εἶναι λέγεται, ἥνικα ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἀρφαξάτ,” ὃς ἐρμηνεύεται συνετάραξε τάλαιπωρίαν· καλὸν γε ἔγγονον ψυχῆς κλονεῖν καὶ συγχεῖν καὶ διαφθείρειν τὴν τάλαιπυρον καὶ γέμουσαν κακῶν ἀδικίαν.
- 190 ἀλλὰ καὶ “Ἀβραὰμ ἄρουραν φυτεῖ” χρώμενος<sup>3</sup> ἑκατοστῶ λόγῳ πρὸς ἀναμέτρησιν τοῦ χωρίου, καὶ Ἰσαὰκ “ἑκατοστεύουσαν εὐρίσκει κριθήν.” καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν τῆς ἱεράς σκηνῆς Μωυσῆς κατασκευάζει πήχεσιν ἑκατόν, τὸ πρὸς ἀνατολὰς καὶ
- 191 δύσεις ἐκμετρούμενος διάστημα. ἔστι δὲ καὶ ἀπαρχῆς ἀπαρχὴ ὁ ἑκατοστὸς λόγος, ὃν Λευῖται τοῖς ἱερωμένοις ἀπάρχονται· λαβοῦσι γὰρ αὐτοῖς τὰς δεκάτας παρὰ τοῦ ἔθνους διείρηται καθάπερ ἀπὸ κτημάτων οἰκείων τοῖς ἱερεῦσι διδόναι ὡς

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τοῖς ἐνενηκονταέταις οὔσι: Mangey proposed ἑκατονταέταις. I should suggest τοῖς ἐνενηκονταέταις <καὶ ἑκατονταέταις> οὔσι. The latter word occurs in the narrative of Gen. xvii. 17, though, as apparently elsewhere, in the third declension. Perhaps here -εσι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἑκάτερα.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. χώματος.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 187-191

“the width of the thigh was stiffened, and he halted on it” (Gen. xxxii. 25, 31).

But perhaps some more courageous spirits might 188 come forward and say that the utterance does not even indicate any disbelief, but a prayer, that if joy, the best of good emotions, is to be born, its birth should be confined to the numbers ninety and a hundred, that so the perfect good may enter on its existence under perfect numbers. The numbers here 189 named are perfect numbers, particularly according to the sacred writings. Let us consider each of them separately. To begin with Shem, the son of the just Noah, the ancestor of the nation of vision; he is said to have been a hundred years old when he begat Arphaxad (Gen. xi. 10), the meaning of whose name is “he disturbed affliction.” And surely it is excellent that the soul’s offspring should harass and confound and destroy injustice, afflicted and full of evils as it is. Abraham too “plants 190 an acre”<sup>a</sup> and adopts the hundred in measuring out the plot (Gen. xxi. 33), and Isaac “finds barley a hundredfold” (Gen. xxvi. 12); and Moses in building the court of the tabernacle takes a hundred cubits in measuring out the distance from east to west (Ex. xxvii. 9). And a hundred too appears 191 in the firstfruit of firstfruit which the Levites offer to the consecrated priest (Num. xviii. 28), for when they receive the tenths from the nation, they are bidden to treat them as their own possessions and to give to the priest what may be called a holy tenth ἐκατὸν ἀφέλης δεκάτην ἱεράν ἀπαρχὴν τῷ τῆς ψυχῆς φέροντι καὶ αὔξοντι καὶ πληροῦντι καρποὺς θεῷ, ἕτερον ἀριθμὸν <τέλειον> τὸν ἐνεήκοντα ἀπολείψεις. πῶς γὰρ οὐ τέλειος, μεθόριος ὢν πρώτης καὶ δεκάτης <δεκάδος>,<sup>2</sup> καθ' ὃν διακρίνεται τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἀγίων<sup>3</sup> τρόπον καταπετάσματος τοῦ μέσου, ᾧ τὰ ὁμογενῆ διαστελλεται κατὰ τὰς ἐν τοῖς εἶδεσι τομάς.

<sup>a</sup> i.e. Philo interprets ἀρουραν in the technical sense of a piece of land of 100 square cubits, cf. ἡ δὲ ἀρουρα ἑκατὸν πηχέων ἐστὶ Αἰγυπτίων πάντη, Herodotus ii. 168, cf. De Plant. 75.

192 δεκάτην <δεκάτων><sup>1</sup> λόγων ἱεράν. πολλὰ δ' ἂν τις καὶ ἄλλα σκοπῶν εὔροι πρὸς ἔπαινον τοῦ λεχθέντος ἀριθμοῦ τοῖς νόμοις ἐμφερόμενα, πρὸς δὲ τὸ παρὸν διεξαρκεῖ τὰ εἰρημένα. ἀλλ' εἰάν τῶν

193 XXXVI. Ὁ μὲν οὖν ἀστεῖος ἐλάλει τῇ διανοίᾳ τὰ ἀστεῖα ὄντως, ὁ δὲ φαῦλος ἐρμηνεύει ἔστιν ὅτε παγκάλως τὰ καλά, πράττει δὲ αἰσχροῦς τὰ αἰσχιστα, καθάπερ καὶ Συχέμ ὁ ἔγγονος ἀνοίας. Ἐμῶρ γὰρ ἔστι πατρός, ὃς μεταληφθεὶς ὄνος καλεῖται, αὐτὸς δὲ ἐρμηνευθεὶς ἔστιν ὦμος, πόνου σύμβολον. ἄθλιος δὲ καὶ ταλαιπωρίας μεστὸς πόνος, ὃν ἄνοια γεννᾷ, ὥσπερ ὠφέλιμος, ᾧ συγγενῆς

<sup>1</sup> <δεκάτων>: my insertion. Wendland proposes ἐτέρας δεκάτας <ἐκάτοστον> λόγον περιέχουσας οἱ δεκάτην ὡς ἀπαρχὴν ἱεράν: Mangey δεκάτην ἐκατόστῳ λόγῳ ἱεράν. I do not know why they preferred these wide departures from the mss. to the obvious correction which is printed above. The periphrasis with λόγος for the ordinal is quite common, as their conjectures indeed admit, and I do not think the plural is any objection.

<sup>2</sup> <δεκάδος>: again my insertion. Wend. <δευτέρας>, in which I can see no meaning. Ninety is certainly the borderland between ten and a hundred, which is here called the tenth ten to bring out the analogy with the veil which separates the ἅγια.

<sup>3</sup> I suggest τὰ ἅγια <τῶν ἀγίων> τῶν ἀγίων (the holy place from the holy of holies), cf. Leg. All. ii. 55. This will bring of tenths. And by observation we might discover 192 contained in the laws many other examples in praise of the number here mentioned, but the above is quite sufficient for the present.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 192-193

But if you separate from the hundred a tenth as the sacred first offering to God who brings the fruits of the soul to their beginning,<sup>a</sup> their increase and their fulfilment, you will leave behind another perfect number, ninety, for it must needs be perfect, placed as it is in a debatable land between the first and the tenth ten, and thus serve to separate sanctities from sanctities like the veil in the midst of the tabernacle (Ex. xxvi. 33), by which things of the same genus are distinguished through division into their respective species.

XXXVI. The virtuous man then spoke truly virtuous words and "with his mind."<sup>b</sup> But the wicked man sometimes gives admirable expression to noble thoughts, but his actions are most vile and their method equally so. Such a one is Shechem, the son of folly, for his father is Hamor whose name is translated by "ass," while his own is interpreted as "shoulder," the symbol of toil. The toil which is fathered by unintelligence is miserable and full of affliction, just as that which has intelligence for its <sup>a</sup> For this use of φέρω see note on Quis Rerum 36. So also in § 256 below. In § 225 the use is somewhat different, as there φέρειν precedes τίκτειν.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ αὐτοῦ must under this second interpretation be understood not, as in the first interpretation, as indicating a passing thought, but as "sincerely." Though Philo does not state this expressly, it is implied by the antithesis with κατὰ τὴν διάνοιαν τῆς παρθένου below.

out more clearly the correspondence with the first and the tenth ten. Perhaps also insert διὰ after τρόπον, in which case the form of the sentence will be the same as τούτων (eight words) τὸν τρόπον De Conf. 69.

PHILO

- 194 ἀγχίνουα. φασὶ γοῦν οἱ χρησμοὶ ὅτι “ ἐλάλησε κατὰ τὴν διάνοιαν τῆς παρθένου ” ταπεινώσας αὐτὴν πρότερον ὁ Συχέμ. ἄρ’ οὐκ<sup>1</sup> ἐξητασμένως ἐλέχθη τὸ “ ἐλάλησε κατὰ τὴν διάνοιαν τῆς παρθένου,” μονονοῦκ εἰς δῆλωσιν τοῦ τάναντία οἷς [608] κρίσις, ἢ | πάρεδρος θεοῦ δίκη, ἢ ἀειπάρθενος· ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ ἐκάτερον Δεῖνα, κρίσις ἢ δίκη.
- 195 ταύτην οἱ ἐπιχειροῦντες ἄφρονες διαφθείρειν διὰ τῶν καθ’ ἐκάστην ἡμέραν βουλευμάτων καὶ ἐπι-τηδευμάτων εὐπρεπεία λόγου διαδιδράσκουσι τὸν ἔλεγχον. χρή γοῦν<sup>2</sup> αὐτοὺς ἢ ἀκόλουθα τοῖς λε-γομένοις πράττειν ἢ ἀδικοῦντας ἡσυχάζειν· ἡμισυ γάρ, φασί, κακοῦ ἡσυχία· καθὰ καὶ Μωυσῆς ἐπιτιμῶν τῷ πρεσβείων μὲν ἀξιώσαντι γένεσιν, δευ-τερείων δὲ τὸν ἄφθαρτον θεόν φησιν· “ ἡμαρτες, 196 ἡσύχασον.” τὸ γὰρ ἐκτραγωδεῖν καὶ ἐπικομπάζειν τὰ κακὰ διπλοῦν ἀμάρτημα. σχεδὸν δ’ οἱ πολλοὶ πεπόνθασι τοῦτο· λέγουσι μὲν γὰρ αἰεὶ τῇ παρθένῳ ἀρετῇ τὰ φίλα καὶ δίκαια,<sup>3</sup> καιρὸν δ’ οὐδένα παριᾶσιν, ἐν ᾧ δυνηθέντες αὐτὴν οὐχ ὕβριουσι καὶ κακώσουσι. ποία γὰρ πόλις οὐκ ἔστι μεστὴ τῶν 197 τῆν ἀειπάρθενον ὑμνούντων ἀρετῆν; οἱ τὰ ὦτα τῶν παρατυγχανόντων ἀποκναίουσι διεξιόντες τὰ τοιαῦτα· ἢ φρόνησις ἀναγκαῖον, ἢ ἀφροσύνη βλα-βερὸν· αἰρετὸν ἢ σωφροσύνη, ἐχθρὸν ἢ ἀκολασία· ὑπομονῆς ἄξιον ἢ ἀνδρεία, φυγῆς ἢ δειλία· συμφέρον ἢ δικαιοσύνη, ἀσύμφορον ἢ ἀδικία· τὸ ὅσιον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. οὐν.

<sup>2</sup> Wend. suggests ἐχρῆν (rather χρῆν) οὐν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. δίκη.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 194-197

congener is profitable. Thus the oracles say that 194 Shechem spake "according to the mind of the virgin" after first humiliating her (Gen. xxxiv. 2, 3). Are not these words "according to the mind of the virgin" added with exact thought so as almost to shew that his actions were the opposite of his words? For Dinah is incorruptible judgement, the justice which is the assessor of God, the ever virgin, for the word "Dinah" by interpretation is either judgement or justice. The fools who attempt to seduce her by 195 their plottings and their practices repeated day by day seek by means of specious talking to escape from conviction. Now they should either make their actions conform to their words or if they persist in iniquity keep still. For by keeping still men say evil is halved. And so Moses by rebuking him who adjudges the chief honours to creation and only the second to the imperishable God says, "Thou hast sinned, be still" (Gen. iv. 7).<sup>a</sup> For to rant and boast 196 of evil doings is a double sin. But what regularly happens with the multitude is this: they are ever addressing words of friendship and fairness to the maiden Virtue, but they let no occasion slip without using it to outrage and maltreat her if they can. What city is not crowded with those who hymn virtue the ever virgin? They tear to pieces the ears of all 197 they meet with such disquisitions as these, prudence is necessary, imprudence is harmful, temperance deserves our choice, intemperance our hatred; courage is worthy of perseverance<sup>b</sup> therein, cowardice of avoidance; justice is profitable, injustice unprofitable; holiness is honourable, unholiness disgraceful;

<sup>a</sup> For Philo's use of this text see note on De Sobr. 50.

<sup>b</sup> See App. pp. 591 f.

PHILO

καλόν, τὸ ἀνόσιον αἰσχρόν· τὸ θεοσεβὲς ἐπαινετόν, τὸ ἀσεβὲς ψεκτόν· [τὸ] οἰκειότατον ἀνθρώπου φύσει τὸ εὖ καὶ βουλευέσθαι<sup>1</sup> καὶ πράττειν καὶ λέγειν, 198 ἀλλοτριώτατον τὸ κακῶς τούτων ἕκαστον. ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα ἀεὶ συνείροντες τὰ δικαστήρια καὶ βουλευτήρια καὶ τὰ θέατρα καὶ πάντα σύλλογον καὶ θίασον ἀνθρώπων<sup>2</sup> ἀπατῶσιν, ὥσπερ οἱ προσω-πέια καλὰ αἰσχίσταις ὄψεσι περιτιθέντες προνοία 199 τοῦ μὴ ὑπὸ τῶν ὀρώντων ἐλέγχεσθαι. ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ὄφελος· ἀφίξονται γάρ τινες εὖ μάλα ἐρρωμένοι καὶ τῷ περὶ ἀρετὴν ζήλω κατεσχημένοι καὶ τὰ περικαλύμματα καὶ περιάπτα ταῦτα, ὅσα λόγῳ κακοτεχνούντες<sup>3</sup> συνύφηναν, ἀπαμφιάσαντες καὶ γυμνὴν αὐτὴν ἐφ' αὐτῆς τὴν ψυχὴν ἀνγάσαντες εἴσονται καὶ τὰ ἐν μυχοῖς ἀποκείμενα τῆς φύσεως ἀπόρρητα· εἰτ' ἔξω προαγαγόντες τὴν αἰσχύνην<sup>4</sup> καὶ τὰ ὀνειδῆ πάντα αὐτῆς ἐν ἡλίῳ καθαρῷ πᾶσιν ἐπιδείξονται, οἷα τις οὔσα, ὡς αἰσχρὰ καὶ καταγέλαστος, οἷαν ἐκ τῶν περιάπτων, ὡς νόθην ἐπ-200 ἐμόρφαζεν εὐμορφίαν. οἱ δὲ πρὸς ἄμυναν εὐτρεπεῖς τῶν οὕτως βεβήλων καὶ ἀκαθάρτων τρόπων δύο μέν εἰσιν ἀριθμῶ, Συμεῶν καὶ Λευί, γνώμη δὲ εἰς.
διὸ καὶ ἐν ταῖς εὐλογίαις ὁ μὲν πατὴρ αὐτοὺς ἐν τάξει ἑνὸς κατηρίθμει, διὰ τὸ σύμφωνον τῆς ὁμονοίας καὶ τῆς πρὸς ἑν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ μέρος ὀρμῆς,<sup>5</sup> ὁ δὲ Μωσῆς οὐδὲ δυνάδος ἔτι μέμνηται, ἀλλ' ὄλον
[609] τὸν | Συμεῶν εἰς τὸν Λευὶ ἐνεχάραξε<sup>6</sup> δύο οὐσίας

<sup>1</sup> MSS. βούλεσθαι.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἄνθρωποι.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. κατατεχνούντες.

<sup>4</sup> So MSS.: Wend. prints τὰ αἰσχη. I do not see any sufficient reason for the change.

<sup>5</sup> I have put a comma after ὀρμῆς, instead of a full stop as piety is praiseworthy, impiety blameworthy ; right purposing, speaking and acting is most conformable to man's nature, wrong purposing, speaking and acting most alien to the same. With a perpetual string<sup>198</sup> of this or suchlike talk they deceive the law-courts, the theatres, the council-chambers and every gathering and group of men, like people who set handsome masks on the ugliest of faces to prevent the ugliness being detected by the eyes of others. But it is<sup>199</sup> all useless. The vindicators will come strong and doughty, inspired with zeal for virtue. They will strip off all this complication of wraps and bandages which the perverted art of the talkers has put together, and beholding the soul naked in her very self they will know the secrets hidden from sight in the recesses of her nature ; and then exposing to every eye in clear sunlight her shame and all her disgraces they will point the contrast between her real character, so hideous, so despicable, and the spurious comeliness which disguised in her wrappings she counterfeited. And the champions who stand ready<sup>200</sup> to repel such profane and impure ways of thinking are two in number, Simeon and Levi, but they are one in will. That is why in the blessings, while their father ranked them under a single head (Gen. xlix. 5), because their minds are in concord and harmony and their purpose set in one and the same direction, Moses ceases even to mention the pair, but compresses the whole of Simeon into Levi (Deut. xxxiii.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 197-200

---

Mangey and Wend. The "blessings" refer to the two blessings of Jacob and Moses.

<sup>6</sup> Is this word, often used by Philo of impressing a stamp, appropriate to this case where Simeon is wholly absorbed? I suggest ἐνέναξε. The compound is not noted in the lexicon, but νάσσω exactly expresses the idea. Or ἐνέπλασε (W.H.D.R.).

PHILO

κερασάμενος, ἀφ' ὧν ἓνα εἰργάσατο οἶον ἰδέα μιᾷ τυπωθέντα, τὸ ἀκούειν τῷ πράττειν ἐνώσας.

- 201 XXXVII. Ἐπειδὴ τοίνυν ἔγνω τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν,<sup>1</sup> λαλήσας<sup>2</sup> τὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας μεστὰ κατὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ διάνοιαν, ὁ σπουδαῖος ἔπαθεν ἀμφότερα, καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸν θεὸν πίστιν καὶ τὴν πρὸς τὸ γενητὸν ἀπιστίαν. εἰκότως οὖν φησι δεόμενος· “ Ἰσμαὴλ οὗτος ζήτω ἐνώπιόν σου,” οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τῶν ἐμφερομένων ἕκαστον τῶν ὀνομάτων τιθεῖς, τὸ “ οὗτος,” τὸ “ ζήτω,” τὸ “ ἐνώπιόν σου.” ταῖς γὰρ ἐν τοῖς πράγμασιν ὁμωνυμίαις ἠπατήθησαν
- 202 οὐκ ὀλίγοι. τί δ' ἐστὶν ὃ λέγω, σκεπτέον· ἐρμηνευθεῖς Ἰσμαὴλ ἐστὶν ἀκοή θεοῦ, τῶν δὲ θείων δογμάτων οἱ μὲν ἀκούουσιν ἐπ' ὠφελείᾳ, οἱ δ' ἐπὶ βλάβῃ αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἐτέρων. ἢ τὸν οἰωνοσκοπὸν Βαλαὰμ οὐχ ὄρας; οὗτος εἰσάγεται “ ἀκούων λόγια θεοῦ ἐπιστάμενός τε ἐπιστήμην
- 203 παρὰ ὑψίστου.” ἀλλὰ τί ἐκ τῆς τοιαύτης ἀκροάσεως, τί δ' ἐκ τῆς τοιαύτης ἐπιστήμης ὦνατο, γνώμη μὲν ἐπιχειρήσας τὸ ψυχῆς ἄριστον ὄμμα λυμήνασθαι, ὃ δὴ μόνον τὸν θεὸν ὄραν πεπαίδευται, μὴ δυνηθεῖς δὲ διὰ τὸ σωτήρος κράτος ἀήττητον; τοιγαροῦν ὁ μὲν κατακεντούμενος ὑπὸ φρενοβλαβείας τῆς ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τραύματα πολλὰ δεξάμενος ἐν μέσοις τραυματίαις ἀπώλετο, διότι σοφιστεία μαντικῇ τὴν θεοφόρητον προφητείαν
- 204 παρεχάραξε.<sup>3</sup> δεόντως οὖν εὔχεται ὁ ἀστείος, ἵν' οὗτος μόνος Ἰσμαὴλ ὑγιαίνῃ, διὰ τοὺς μὴ γνη-

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἀπαγγελίαν.

<sup>2</sup> mss. and all editions λαλοῦσαν. I have made this correction, feeling that, though ἔγνω λαλοῦσαν is a more natural construction, it is impossible that the divine message should be spoken of as full of εὐλάβεια or even of αἰδώς. I under-

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 200-204

8), and thus blending the two natures he makes them one, bearing the stamp of a single form, and unites hearing with action.

XXXVII. So when he understood the promise and 201 spoke "according to his mind" these words, so full of reverence and pious awe, the man of worth was moved by a twofold feeling, faith towards God, distrust of the creature. It is natural then that he should pray in these words, "Let this Ishmael live before thee" (Gen. xvii. 18), and each of the phrases here included, namely, "this," "live," "before Thee," are applied by him appropriately. I say appropriately because many are deceived by the application of the same terms to denote different things. What I mean by this should be considered. 202 Ishmael by interpretation is "hearing God," but the divine truths are heard by some to their profit, by some to the harm of themselves and others.

Observe that dealer in augury, Balaam. He is described as "hearing the oracles of God and knowing knowledge from the Most High" (Num. xxiv. 16), but what did he profit from such hearing 203 or such knowledge, he who attempted to bring ruin on the soul's best eye which alone has been trained to see God? But yet what he willed he could not, so strong was the Saviour's invincible might. Therefore, stabbed by his own madness, he received many wounds and perished "in the midst of the wounded" (Num. xxxi. 8) because with his soothsayer's mock wisdom he defaced the stamp of heaven-sent prophecy. Rightly then it is "this Ishmael" for whose 204 health alone the man of virtue prays, because of stand λαλήσας . . . διάνοιαν to repeat εἶπε τῇ διανοίᾳ αὐτοῦ as interpreted in §§ 193 ff. <sup>3</sup> MSS. προε(ν)χάραξε.

---

PHILO

σίως ἀκούοντας τῶν ἱερῶν ὑφηγήσεων· οἷς ἀπέιπε Μωυσῆς ἀντικρυς εἰς ἐκκλησίαν φοιτᾶν τοῦ παν-205 ηγεμόνος. τεθλασμένοι γὰρ τὰ γεννητικὰ τῆς δια-νοίας ἢ καὶ τελείως ἀποκοπέντες οἱ τὸν ἴδιον νοῦν καὶ τὴν αἴσθησιν ἀποσεμνύνοντες ὡς μόνον τῶν κατ' ἀνθρώπους αἴτια πραγμάτων ἢ οἱ πολυθείας ἔρασταὶ καὶ τὸν πολύθεον ἐκτετιμηκότες θίασον, οἱ ἐκ πόρνης γεγονότες, τὸν ἕνα ἄνδρα καὶ πατέρα φιλαρέτου ψυχῆς θεὸν οὐκ εἰδότες, ἄρ' οὐκ εἰκότως 206 ἐλαύνονται τε καὶ φυγαδεύονται; παραπλήσιόν μοι δοκοῦσι ποιεῖν καὶ οἱ κατηγοροῦντες τοῦ υἱοῦ<sup>1</sup> γονεῖς ἐπ' οἰνοφλυγία· λέγουσι γάρ· “ὁ υἱὸς ἡμῶν οὗτος ἀπειθεῖ,” διὰ τῆς προσθήκης τῆς “οὗτος” μνηνύοντες, ὅτι εἰσὶν ἕτεροι παῖδες καρτερικοὶ καὶ σώφρονες, τοῖς ἐπιτάγμασι τοῦ ὀρθοῦ λόγου καὶ παιδείας πειθαρχοῦντες· οὗτοι γὰρ ψυχῆς ἀψεудέστατοι γονεῖς, ὑφ' ὧν κατηγορηθῆναι μὲν [610] | αἰσχιστον, ἐπαινεθῆναι δ' εὐκλεέστατον.
 207 τὸ (δέ) “οὗτός ἐστιν Ἄαρὼν καὶ Μωυσῆς, οἷς εἶπεν ὁ θεὸς ἐξαγαγεῖν τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰσραὴλ ἐξ Αἰγύπτου” καὶ τὸ “οὗτοὶ εἰνὶν οἱ διαλεγόμενοι Φαραὼ βασιλεῖ,” ταῦτα μὴ νομίζωμεν εἰρησθαι 208 παρεργως ἢ τὰς δείξεις μὴ πλέον τι τῶν ὀνομάτων παρεμφαίνειν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ Μωυσῆς μὲν ἐστὶ νοῦς ὁ καθαρῶτατος, Ἄαρὼν δὲ λόγος αὐτοῦ, πεπαί-δευται δὲ καὶ ὁ νοῦς θεοπρεπῶς<sup>2</sup> ἐφάπτεσθαι καὶ ὁ λόγος ὁσίως ἐρμηνεύειν τὰ ὅσια, μιμητάζοντες δὴ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τούτου for τοῦ υἱοῦ.

<sup>2</sup> Should we read θεοπροπῶς <θεοπροπῶν> as the balance of the sentence perhaps suggests?

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Mig. 69.

<sup>b</sup> For the full development of this theme see De Ebr. 13-94.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 204-208

those others who do not hear with honest mind the holy instructions, whom Moses absolutely forbade to resort to the assembly of the Ruler of all. Such as in their pride extol their own mind and senses as the sole causes of all that happens amongst men—these are they who have spiritually lost the organs 205 of generation by crushing or complete mutilation; such again as love the creed which holds that gods are many and pays all honour to that fellowship of deities—these are the children of the harlot who knows not the one husband and father of the virtue-loving soul,—are not all such with good reason expelled and banished? (Deut. xxiii. 1, 2).<sup>a</sup>

The parents too who accuse their son of wine-bibbing 206 seem to make a like use of the pronoun. They say "This son of ours is disobedient" (Deut. xxi. 20), and thus by the addition of "this" they shew that they have other sons, strong-willed and self-controlling, who obey the injunctions of right reason and instruction. For these two are the soul's parents who can never lie, and to be accused by them is the greatest disgrace, as their praise is the highest glory.<sup>b</sup>

To take another instance, "It is this Moses and 207 Aaron whom God bade lead the sons of Israel from Egypt" (Ex. vi. 26), or "These are they who talked with Pharaoh the king" (ibid. 27). In neither of these cases must we suppose that the words are used carelessly and that the demonstrative pronouns served no other purpose than to indicate<sup>c</sup> the names. For since Moses is mind at its purest, and Aaron is 208 its word, and each have been trained to holy things, the mind to grasp them as a God should and the word to express them worthily, the professors of <sup>a</sup> See App. p. 592.

PHILO

οἱ σοφισταὶ καὶ παρακόπτοντες τὸ δόκιμον νόμισμα τοῦτό φασι<sup>1</sup> καὶ νοεῖν ὀρθῶς περὶ τοῦ ἀρίστου καὶ λέγειν ἐπαιετῶς. ὅπως οὖν μὴ ἀπατώμεθα παραθέσει τῶν κεκιβδηλευμένων πρὸς τὰ δόκιμα δι' ὁμοιότητος τοῦ χαρακτῆρος, βάσανον ἔδωκεν, ἣ 209 διακριθῆσεται. τίς οὖν ἢ βάσανος; τὸ ἐξαγαγεῖν ἐκ τῆς σωματικῆς χώρας τὸν ὀρατικὸν καὶ φιλοθεάμονα νοῦν καὶ φιλόσοφον. ὁ μὲν γὰρ τοῦτο δυνηθεὶς Μωυσῆς ἐστὶν οὗτος, ὁ δὲ ἀδυνατήσας, ὁ λεγόμενος μόνον, μυρίας δὲ σεμνότητας ὀνομάτων ἐπαμπισχόμενος, γελᾶται.

Ζῆν δὲ εὐχεται τῷ Ἰσμαήλ, οὐ τῆς μετὰ σώματος ζωῆς ἐπιστροφόμενος, ἀλλ' ἵνα τὸ θεῖον ἄκουσμα ἐπὶ ψυχῇ διαιωνίζον ἐγείρη τε αὐτὸν καὶ ζωπυρῆ.
 210 XXXVIII. καὶ ὁ μὲν ἀκρόασιν λόγων καὶ μάθησιν δογμάτων ἱερῶν εὐχεται ζῆν, ὡς ἐλέχθη, ὁ δ' ἀσκητῆς Ἰακώβ εὐφυῖαν λέγει γάρ· “ζήτω Ῥουβὴν καὶ μὴ ἀποθανέτω”. ἀρά γε ἀθανασίαν καὶ ἀφθαρσίαν εὐχόμενος, ἀνθρώπῳ πρᾶγμα ἀ-211 δύνατον; οὐ δήπου. τί οὖν ἔσθ' ὃ βούλεται παραστήσαι, λεκτέον. πάντα τὰ ἀκούσματα καὶ μαθήματα ἐποικοδομεῖται καθάπερ θεμελίῳ προκαταβεβλημένῳ φύσει παιδείας δεκτικῆ, φύσεως δὲ μὴ προϋπαρχούσης ἀνωφελῆ πάντα. δρυὸς γὰρ ἢ λίθου κωφῆς οὐδὲν ἂν δόξαιεν οἱ ἀφυεῖς διαφέρειν· ἔγκολλον γὰρ ἂν οὐδὲν αὐτοῖς ἀρμόζοιτο, πάντα δ' ὡς ἀπὸ στερροῦ τινος ἀποπάλλεται καὶ ἀποπηδᾷ.
 212 τὰς δὲ τῶν εὐφυῶν ψυχὰς ἔστιν ἰδεῖν κηροῦ τρόπον

<sup>1</sup> I should suggest φαίνονται as making better sense.

<sup>a</sup> Ascribed by inadvertence to the Blessing of Jacob, instead of to that of Moses.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 208-212

false wisdom mimic and debase this authentic coin, and say that what they think of the most excellent is just, and what they say of it worthy of praise (Ex. vii. 11). And so that when the spurious is set beside the authentic we may not be deceived by the likeness of the stamp he has given us a touchstone by which they may be distinguished. What is this <sup>209</sup> touchstone? It is that he brought out of the land of the body the mind which could see and which loved wisdom and the vision. For he who could do this is "This Moses," and he who could not, who had but the name and clothed himself with a multitude of grand-sounding titles, is made a laughing-stock.

When he prays that Ishmael may live, he is not concerned with the life of the body, but prays that what he hears from God may abide for ever with the soul and stir him into living flame; XXXVIII. and <sup>210</sup> while Abraham prays, as we have said, that the grace of hearkening to holy words and learning holy truths may live, Jacob, the Man of Practice, prays for the life of natural goodness, for he says "Let Reuben live and not die" (Deut. xxxiii. 6).<sup>a</sup> Is he here praying that he should never know death and corruption, a gift impossible for a man? Surely not. Let us say then what he wishes to shew us. <sup>211</sup> All that is heard or learned is a superstructure, built on the foundation of a nature receptive of instruction, for if nature be not there to begin with all else is useless. For those who are ungifted by nature would seem to differ not at all from an oak or mute stone, for nothing can adhere or fit into them, but all is shaken off and rebounds as from a solid substance. But in the souls of the naturally <sup>212</sup>

PHILO

λελειασμένου μήτε<sup>1</sup> ἄγαν στερεοῦ μήτε<sup>1</sup> ἄγαν ἀπαλοῦ κεκερασμένας μετρίως, παραδεχομένας τὰ ἀκούσματα καὶ θεάματα ῥαδίως πάντα καὶ ἐναποματτο-μένας ἄκρως αὐτὰς τὰ εἶδη, μνήμης ἐναργεῖς τινὰς
 213 εἰκόνας. ἦν γοῦν ἀναγκαῖον εὐξασθαι τῷ | λογικῷ [611] γένει τὸ εὐφυὲς ἄνοσον καὶ ἀθάνατον παρεῖναι. τοῦ μὲν γὰρ κατ' ἀρετὴν βίου, ὃς ἐστὶν ἀψευδεστάτη ζωὴ, μετέχουσιν ὀλίγοι, οὐχὶ τῶν ἀγελαίων φημί—τούτων γὰρ οὐδεὶς τῆς ἀληθοῦς ζωῆς κεκοινῶνηκεν,—ἀλλ' εἴ τισιν ἐξεγένετο τὰς τῶν ἀνθρώπων φυγεῖν σπουδὰς καὶ θεῷ μόνῳ ζῆσαι.
 214 παρὸ καὶ λίαν τεθαύμακεν ὁ ἀσκη-τικὸς καὶ ἀνδρεῖος, εἴ τις ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ βίου ποταμῷ φορούμενος ὑπ'<sup>2</sup> οὐδεμιᾶς ῥύμης κατασύρεται, δύναιτο δὲ καὶ πλούτῳ πολλῷ ῥέοντι ἀντισχεῖν καὶ ἡδονῆς ἀμέτρου φορὰν (ἀν)ῶσαι καὶ λαίλαπι 215 κενῆς δόξης μὴ ἀναρπασθῆναι. λέγει γοῦν οὐχ ὁ Ἰακώβ τῷ Ἰωσήφ μᾶλλον ἢ ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος παντὶ τῷ τὸ μὲν σῶμα εὐεκτοῦντι, ἐν ἀφθόνοις δὲ ταῖς εἰς περιουσίαν ὕλαις ἐξεταζομένῳ καὶ πρὸς μηδεμιᾶς ἀλισκομένῳ. “ ἔτι γὰρ σὺ ζῆς ”; θαυμαστὸν ἐκφωνήσας λόγον καὶ τὸν ἡμέτερον βίον ὑπερδεδραμηκότα,<sup>3</sup> οἱ μικρᾶς πρὸς εὐτυχίαν αὔρας λαβόμενοι, πάντα κάλων ἀνασεύσαντες, λαμπρὰ φυσῶμεν καὶ πνεύσαντες μέγα καὶ σύντονον πλησίστιοι πρὸς τὰς ἀπολαύσεις τῶν παθῶν φερόμεθα καὶ οὐ πρότερον στέλλομεν τὰς ἀνειμένας καὶ κεχαλασ-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. μετὰ . . . μετὰ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀπ'.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀποδεδραμηκότα.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 212-215

good we see a duly-tempered mixture like smooth wax, neither too solid nor too soft ; a mixture which easily receives all that is seen and heard and itself reproduces perfectly the forms impressed upon it in lifelike copies preserved by memory.<sup>a</sup> Thus he was 213 bound to pray that the nation of reason should possess natural goodness free from disease and death. For the life of virtue, which is LIFE in its truest form, is shared by few, and these few are not found among the vulgar herd, none of whom has part or lot in true life, but are only those to whom it is granted to escape the aims which engross humanity and to live to God alone. And therefore the Man 214 of Practice and Courage wondered exceedingly that one who was borne along in the midstream of human life is not swept down by any rush of the swirling waters, but can breast the strong current of riches and stem the tide of pleasure's ceaseless urge and keep his feet against the hurricane of vainglory. And so Jacob says to Joseph, though indeed it is 215 rather the holy Word speaking to every man who in addition to bodily welfare is placed amidst abundance of the gear which makes for luxury, yet is proof against it all, " For thou still livest " (Gen. xlv. 30). A marvellous utterance, which has travelled beyond the range of the common life which we lead, we who if we but catch a puff of the air of prosperity loosen every reef and let the breeze blow fresh and clear, and then with our strong steady wind to swell our canvas speed on to the enjoyments of the passions, and never do we draw in the loose and slack licence <sup>a</sup> Cf. Quis Rerum 181 where the simile is definitely referred to Plato (Theaetetus 191 c).

PHILO

- μένας ἀκρατῶς ἐπιθυμίας, ἕως ἂν ἐξοκείλαντες ὅλω τῷ ψυχῆς ναυαγήσωμεν σκάφει.
- 216 XXXIX. Παγκάλως οὖν τοῦτον τὸν Ἰσμαῆλ εὐχομέθα<sup>1</sup> ζῆν. προστίθησιν οὖν “ἐνώπιον τοῦ θεοῦ ζήτω,<sup>2</sup>” τέλος τῆς εὐδαιμονίας τιθέμενος ἐπισκόπου καὶ ἐφόρου τοῦ τῶν ὄντων ἀρίστου τὴν
- 217 διάνοιαν ἀξιωθῆναι. εἰ γὰρ παιδαγωγοῦ μὲν παρόντος οὐκ ἂν ἀμάρτοι ὁ ἀγόμενος, ὑφηγητῆς δὲ ἐγγὺς ὢν ὠφελεῖ τὸν μανθάνοντα, πρεσβυτέρου δὲ παρατυγχάνοντος αἰδοῖ καὶ σωφροσύνη κοσμεῖται νέος, πατὴρ δὲ ἢ μήτηρ υἱὸν μέλλοντα ἀδικεῖν ἐκώλυσαν ἐφ’ ἡσυχίας αὐτὸ μόνον ὀφθέντες, ἡλίκαις τισὶν ὑπερβολαῖς ἀγαθῶν χρήσεσθαι νομίζομεν τὸν ὑπολαμβάνοντ’ αἰεὶ ὑπὸ θεοῦ θεωρεῖσθαι; τὸ γὰρ τοῦ παρόντος αἰεὶ εἰ περιβλέπεται<sup>3</sup> ἀξίωμα δεδιῶς καὶ τρέμων ἀνὰ κράτος τὸ ἀδικεῖν ἀποδράσεται.
- 218 Τὸν δὲ Ἰσμαῆλ ὅταν εὐχῆται ζῆν, οὐκ ἀπέγνωκε τὴν γένεσιν Ἰσαάκ, ὡς καὶ πρότερον εἶπον, ἀλλὰ πεπίστευκε μὲν τῷ θεῷ * * *<sup>4</sup> οὐδὲ γὰρ ἂ δοῦναι θεῷ, ταῦτα καὶ ἀνθρώπῳ λαβεῖν δυνατόν, ἐπειδὴ τῷ μὲν πλείστα καὶ μέγιστα χαρίσασθαι ῥᾶδιον, ἡμῖν δ’ οὐκ εὐμαρὲς τὰς προτεινομένας δέξασθαι
- 219 δωρεάς. ἀγαπητὸν γάρ, εἰ τῶν ἐκ πόνου καὶ

<sup>1</sup> So mss.: Wendland εὔχεται. I do not think the change is necessary; see note a on opposite page.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ζῆ.

<sup>3</sup> παρόντος αἰεὶ εἰ περιβλέπεται] this (or perhaps παρόντος εἰ) is my suggestion for ms. παρόντος καὶ περιβλέπεται. Wend. proposes αἰεὶ περιβλεπόμενος, Mangey καὶ προσβλέποντος.

<sup>4</sup> The lacuna might be filled by ἀπιστεῖ δὲ τῷ γεννητῷ, cf. § 201 (rather this than § 178 as Wend.).

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 215-219

of our lusts until we strike the rocks and wreck the whole bark of the soul.

XXXIX. We<sup>a</sup> do well indeed then when we pray 216 that this Ishmael may live. And so he adds "before God," holding that in this lies the crown of happiness—that the mind should be privileged to live under the survey and watchful care of the Supreme Excellence. For when the tutor is present his charge<sup>b</sup> 217 will not go amiss; the teacher at the learner's side brings profit to him; the company of his senior gives to the youth the grace of modesty and self-control; the mere sight of father or mother can silently prevent the son from some intended wrongdoing. Imagine then the vastness of the blessings which we must suppose will be his who believes that the eye of God is ever upon him, for if he reverences the dignity of Him who is ever present, he will in fear and trembling fly from wrongdoing with all his might.

But when he prays that Ishmael may live he does 218 not despair of the birth of Isaac, as I have said before, but while he has trusted in God (he recognizes the weakness of humanity), for the gifts which God can give are not all such as man in his turn can receive, since for Him it is easy to bestow gifts, ever so many, ever so great, but for us it is no light matter to receive the proffered boons. For it is enough for 219

<sup>a</sup> The objection of Cohn and Wendland to the first person ignores the fact that Philo constantly regards the stories and sayings of the Pentateuch as representing the spiritual experiences of every generation. It is "the holy word speaking to everyone," as just above in § 215. Compare νοῦς ἡμῶν in § 16. Good examples appear in De Som. i. 143 and 226, ii. 170. Cohn's εὐχόμεθα does not fit in well with Philo's use of παγκάλως (see note on De Mig. 101). There would be no objection to εὐξόμεθα, but the change seems unnecessary.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 592.

PHILO

- μελέτης συντρόφων καὶ συνηθεστέρων ἀγαθῶν ἐπι-
 [612] λάχοιμεν, | τῶν δ' ἄνευ τέχνης ἢ συνόλως ἀνθρωπίνης ἐπινοίας ἀπαυτοματιζόντων καὶ ἐξ ἑτοίμου γινομένων οὐδ' ἐλπίς ἐφικέσθαι· ταῦτα γὰρ ἄτε θεῖα ὄντα θειοτέραις καὶ ἀκηράτοις φύσει ἀπηλλαγμέναις θνητοῦ σώματος εὐρίσκειν ἀναγκαῖον.
- 220 ἐδίδαξε<sup>1</sup> δὲ Μωυσῆς κατὰ δύναμιν τῶν χειρῶν τὰς εὐχαρίστους ὁμολογίας ποιείσθαι, τὸν ἀγχίνουν ἀνάθημα ἀνατιθέντα τὸ συνετὸν καὶ τὸ φρόνιμον, τὸν λόγιον τὰς ἐν λόγῳ πάσας ἀρετὰς ἀνιερόντα διὰ τε ᾧδῆς καὶ τῶν καταλογάδην τοῦ ὄντος ἐγκωμίων, καὶ κατ' εἶδος τὸν φυσικὸν φυσιολογίαν, τὸν ἠθικὸν πᾶσαν τὴν ἠθικὴν φιλοσοφίαν, τὸν τεχνικὸν καὶ ἐπιστήμονα τὰ θεωρήματα τῶν τεχνῶν
- 221 καὶ ἐπιστημῶν. οὕτως εὐπλοῖαν μὲν ναύτης καὶ κυβερνήτης, εὐφορίαν δὲ καρπῶν γεωπόνος, εὐ-τοκίαν δὲ ζώων ἀγελάρχης, ὑγείαν δὲ καμνόντων ἰατρός, ὁ δ' αὖ στρατείας ἡγεμῶν τοῦ πολέμου κράτος καὶ ὁ πολιτικὸς ἢ βασιλικὸς τὴν νόμιμον προστασίαν καὶ ἡγεμονίαν ἀναθήσει, καὶ συνελόντα φράσαι πάντων ὅσα ἢ ψυχῆς ἢ σώματος ἢ τῶν ἐκτὸς ἀγαθὰ ἔστιν ὁ μὴ φίλαυτος αἴτιον ἀποφανεῖ
- 222 τὸν ἀψευδῶς μόνον αἴτιον θεόν. μηδεὶς οὖν τῶν ἀφανεστέρων καὶ ταπεινοτέρων εἶναι δοκούντων ἐλπίδος ἀπογνώσει τῆς ἀμείνονος ἀποκνησάτω ἱκέτης εὐχάριστος γενέσθαι θεοῦ, ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ μηδὲν ἔτι προσδοκᾷ τῶν μειζόνων, ὑπὲρ τούτων ὧν ἔλαχεν ἤδη κατὰ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ δύναμιν εὐχαριστεῖτω.
- 223 μυρίων δ' ἔλαχε, γενέσεως, ζωῆς, τροφῆς, ψυχῆς, αἰσθήσεως, φαντασίας, ὀρμῆς, λογισμοῦ. λογισμὸς δὲ βραχὺ μὲν ὄνομα, τελειότατον δὲ καὶ θειότατον

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἔδειξε.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 219-223

us to obtain the good fruits of toil and effort, those more familiar gifts which grow up with us, but such as spring up independently without art or any form of human devising, which come ready-made to the recipient, we cannot even hope to attain. These are gifts of God, and therefore to discover them is the inevitable destiny of natures closer to God and undefiled and released from the mortal body. Yet 220 Moses taught us to make our acknowledgements of thanks according to the power of our hands (Num. vi. 21), the man of sagacity dedicating his good sense and prudence, the master of words consecrating all the excellences of speech in praises to the Existent in poem or prose, and from others offerings after their kind, natural philosophy, ethical philosophy, the lore of the arts and sciences from the several students of the same. In this way the sailor 221 will dedicate success of voyage, the husbandman fruitfulness of crops, the herdsman the teeming increase of his livestock, the physician the health of his patients, or again the general his victory in war, the statesman or crowned head his lawful pre-eminence or sovereignty, and in short he who is not self-centred will avow as the cause of all goods of the soul or body or outside the body Him who in very truth is the one sole Cause of aught. Let none 222 then of the lowly or obscure in repute shrink through despair of the higher hope from thankful supplication to God, but even if he no longer expects any greater boon, give thanks according to his power for the gifts which he has already received. Vast is the number 223 of such gifts, birth, life, nurture, soul, sense-perception, mental picturing, impulse, reasoning. Now "reasoning" as a name is but a little word, but as

PHILO

ἔργον, τῆς τοῦ παντὸς ψυχῆς ἀπόσπασμα ἢ, ὅπερ 224 ὀσιώτερον εἰπεῖν τοῖς κατὰ Μωυσῆν φιλοσοφοῦσιν, εἰκόνοσ θείας ἐκμαγεῖον ἐμφερές. XL. ἐπαινεῖν ἄξιον καὶ τῶν κατασκόπων τοὺς ἐπιχειρήσαντας μὲν αὐτόπρεμνον τὸ ἀρετῆς ὄλον ἀνασπάσαι καὶ βαστάσαι στέλεχος, ἐπεὶ δ' οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν, κλη-ματίδα γοῦν καὶ ἕνα βότρυν λαβόντας, δεῖγμα καὶ μέρος τῆς συμπάσης, ὃ φέρειν αὐτὸ μόνον ἴσχυον.
 225 εὐκτὸν μὲν ἀθρόω τῷ πλήθει τῶν ἀρετῶν ἐγ-χορεύειν· εἰ δὲ τοῦτο μεῖζον ἢ κατὰ ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν, ἀγαπῶμεν, εἴ τω ἐξεγένετο μιᾷ τινι τῶν [613] κατὰ μέρος | ἐντυχεῖν, σωφροσύνη ἢ ἀνδρεία ἢ δικαιοσύνη ἢ φιλανθρωπία. φερέτω γὰρ ἐν<sup>1</sup> τι ἀγαθὸν ἢ ψυχὴ καὶ τικτέτω, μὴ πάντων ἀφορος 226 καὶ στείρα γινέσθω. σὺ δὲ τοιαῦτα ἐπιτάγματα ἐπιτάξεις υἱεὶ τῷ σεαυτοῦ; εἰ μὴ τοῖς οἰκέταις ἡμέρωσ χρηῖ, μηδὲ τοῖς ὁμοτίμοις κοινωνικῶσ· εἰ μὴ κοσμίωσ γυναικί, μηδὲ γονεῦσι τιμητικῶσ· εἰ μητρὸς ὀλιγωρεῖσ καὶ πατρός, ἀσέβει καὶ εἰσ τὸ θεῖον. εἰ χαίρεισ ἠδονῆ, μη(δὲ)· φιλα-ργυρίας ἀποστῆσ. ἐφίεσαι πολυχρηματίας; καὶ 227 κενοδοξεί. τί γάρ; οὐ μετριάξειν ἐν ἐνίοις ἀξιοῖσ, εἰ μὴ ἐν πᾶσι δύνασαι; οὐκ ἂν οὖν εἴποι ὁ υἱός· τί λέγεις, ὦ πάτερ; ἢ τέλειον ἀγαθὸν ἢ τέλειον κακὸν βούλει σοι τὸν υἱὸν γενέσθαι καὶ οὐκ

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἐνός.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 223-227

a fact it is something most perfect and most divine, a piece torn off from the soul of the universe, or, as it might be put more reverently <sup>a</sup> following the philosophy of Moses, a faithful impress of the divine image. XL. Well may we commend those members 224 of the scouting party who tried to pluck up by the roots the trunk of virtue and carry it away, and when they could not, took at least a branch and a single cluster, which was all they could carry (Num. xiii. 24), as a specimen and part of the whole. We should 225 indeed pray that our course may lie amid the collected body of the many virtues. But if this be too great for human nature, let us be content whenever it be granted to consort with one of the specific virtues, with temperance, or courage, or justice or humanity. Let the soul carry in its womb and bring to the birth one good thing at least and not be unfruitful and barren of them all. Would 226 you lay upon your own son such injunctions as these? If you do not treat your servants kindly, neither must you have neighbourly dealings with your equals. If you do not behave well to your wife, you must not honour your parents either. If you despise your father and mother, you must also shew impiety towards God. If you delight in pleasure, you must not refrain from covetousness. Do you covet great riches? Then also give way to vain conceit. What, 227 I would ask, do you mean that it is wrong to use self-control in some things if you cannot do so in all? The son would surely reply, What do you mean, father? Would you have your son become either completely bad or completely good, and will you not phrase ἡ τοῦ παντὸς ψυχῆ, cf. De Mig. 179 and note on Leg. All. i. 91.

PHILO

- ἀγαπήσεις, εἰ πρὸ τῶν ἄκρων τὰ μέσα ἔλοιτο;
 228 οὐ διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ὁ Ἀβραὰμ ἐπὶ τῆς Σοδομιτῶν ἀπωλείας ἀρξάμενος ἀπὸ πεντηκοντάδος εἰς δεκάδα<sup>1</sup> τελευτᾶ, ποτνιῶμενος καὶ ἰκε-τεύων, ἴν', εἰ μὴ εὐρίσκοιτο ἐν γενέσει ἢ παντελῆς εἰς ἐλευθερίαν ἀφεις, ἧς σύμβολον ὁ πεντηκοστός λόγος ἱερός, ἡ μέση παιδεία παραληφθῆ δεκάδι 229 ψυχῆς μελλούσης ἀπόλυσιν; τῶν ἀναγῶγων οἱ πεπαιδευμένοι καὶ τῶν ἀλύρων καὶ ἀμούσων οἱ (ἐγ)κεχορευκότες τῇ ἐγκυκλίῳ μουσικῇ πλείους ἀφορμὰς ἔχουσι πρὸς τὸ αὐξεσθαι,<sup>2</sup> σχεδὸν ἐκ παίδων τοῖς περὶ καρτερίας<sup>3</sup> καὶ ἐγκρατείας καὶ ἀρετῆς πάσης λόγοις ἐπαντληθέντες. διὸ εἰ καὶ μὴ παντελῶς ἐξερρύψαντο καὶ ἀπελούσαντο τὸ ἀδικεῖν φαιδρυνόμενοι δέ,<sup>4</sup> ἀλλὰ μετρίως γοῦν καὶ 230 μέσως ἐρρύψαντο. τὸ παραπλήσιον ὁ Ἡσαῦ λέγειν ἔοικε τῷ πατρί· “ μὴ εὐλογία σοι μία ἐστὶ, πάτερ; εὐλόγησον καὶ μέ, πάτερ.” ἄλλαι γὰρ ἄλλοις ἀποκεκρίσθωσαν, τελείοις μὲν τέλειαι, μέσαι δὲ ἀτελέσιν, ὡς ἔχει καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν σωματῶν· ὑγιαινόντων γὰρ καὶ νοσοῦντων ἕτερα μὲν γυμνάσματα, ἕτεραι δὲ τροφαί, καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα περὶ δίαιταν, οὐ τὰ αὐτά, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν τὰ πρόσφορα, ἵνα μηδ' ὄλως νοσήσωσι, τοῖς δὲ τὰ οἰκεία, ὅπως πρὸς 231 τὸ ὑγιεινότερον μεταβάλωσι. πολλῶν οὖν ἀγαθῶν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. πεντάδα.<sup>2</sup> MSS. εὐξεσθαι.<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἀρετῆς.

<sup>4</sup> Clearly corrupt: Mangey proposed δῆ, Wendland τελείως. The simplest correction would be οἶδε, if this can stand so at the end of a clause. (It does so stand in De Conf. 87, but in the sense of “the following.”)

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 227-231

be satisfied if he chooses the midway course in preference to the extremes? It was 228 such a feeling that made Abraham, in the case of the destruction of Sodom, begin with fifty and end with ten (Gen. xviii. 24 f.) when he besought and supplicated that if the means of complete release to liberty (Lev. xxv. 10), which is symbolized by fifty, be not forthcoming in created beings, the lower training, which is numerically reckoned as ten, may be accepted to respite the soul which stands on the verge of condemnation.<sup>a</sup> The trained have the 229 advantage over the untrained, and those who are familiar with the culture of the schools over minds untuned to the muse; they start with better opportunities for growth, because as a rule from boyhood they have been bathed in a stream of ideas which deal with endurance and self-control and every virtue. And therefore if these have not entirely scoured and washed away their iniquity in the cleansing process, they are in a moderate and half-way degree purged.

Esau's words to his 230 father seem to have a like meaning: "Hast thou one blessing, my father? bless me also, O my father" (Gen. xxvii. 38). For different blessings should be set apart for different persons: perfect blessings for the perfect, half-way for the imperfect, just as we find with men's bodies: for the healthy and the sick require different exercises and different diet, and in all other matters which affect their way of living the same treatment is impossible. The healthy need what agrees with them to prevent their falling sick at all, and the sick need what fits their condition to bring them round to better health. Since then the 231

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Sac. 122.

PHILO

- ὑπαρχόντων ἐν τῇ φύσει τὸ δοκοῦν ἐφαρμόττειν μοι τοῦτο χάρισαι, κὰν μικρότατον ἦ, στοχασάμενος ἐκείνου μόνου, εἰ δυνήσομαι τὸ δοθὲν φέρειν εὐμαρῶς, ἀλλὰ καὶ μὴ πρὸς τοῦτο ἀπειπῶν ὁ 232 δυστυχῆς ὀκλάσω. τί δ' οἴομεθα ἐμφαίνεσθαι διὰ τοῦ· “ μὴ χεὶρ κυρίου οὐκ ἐξαρκέσει”; ἄρ' οὐχὶ τὸ πάντῃ τὰς τοῦ ὄντος φθάνειν δυνάμεις ἐπ' εὐεργεσία μὴ μόνον τῶν ἐνδόξων ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν [614] ἀφανεστέρων εἶναι | δοκούντων; οἷς τὰ ἀρμόττουτα χαρίζεται πρὸς τὰ τῆς ἐκάστου ψυχῆς σταθμήματα καὶ μέτρα σταθμώμενος καὶ διαμετρῶν ἰσότητι παρ' ἑαυτῷ τὸ ἀνάλογον ἐκάστοις.
- 233 XLI. Καταπλήττει με οὐχ ἥκιστα καὶ ὁ τεθεὶς νόμος ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐκδυομένοις τὰ ἁμαρτήματα καὶ μεταγινώσκειν δοκοῦσι. κελεύει γὰρ τὸ μὲν πρῶ-τον ἱερεῖον προσάγειν θῆλυ πρόβατον ἄμωμον.
 “ ἐὰν δὲ ” φησί “ μὴ ἰσχύῃ ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ τὸ ἱκανὸν εἰς πρόβατον, οἷσει περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας ἧς ἤμαρτε δύο τρυγόνας ἢ δύο νεοσσούς περιστερῶν, 234 ἓνα περὶ ἁμαρτίας καὶ ἓνα εἰς ὀλοκαύτωμα. ἐὰν δὲ μὴ εὐρίσκη ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ ζεύγος τρυγόνων ἢ δύο νεοσσούς περιστερῶν, οἷσει τὸ δῶρον τὸ δέκατον οἶφι σεμίδαλιν. οὐκ ἐπιχεεῖ<sup>1</sup> ἐπ' αὐτὸ ἔλαιον οὐδ' ἐπιθήσει ἐπ' αὐτὸ λίβανον, ὅτι περὶ ἁμαρτίας ἐστί.
 καὶ οἷσει αὐτὸ πρὸς τὸν ἱερέα, καὶ δραξάμενος ὁ ἱερεὺς ἀπ' αὐτοῦ πλήρη τὴν δράκα τὸ μνημόσυνον 235 ἐπιθήσει ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον.” οὐκοῦν τρισὶ μετανοίας τρόποις ἰλάσκεται τοῖς εἰρημένοις, κτήνεσιν ἢ πτηνοῖς ἢ λευκοπύροις, πρὸς τὴν τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> So LXX: MSS. ἐπιχρίσει.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 231-235

goods which nature has to bestow are many, grant me, O Lord, that which befits me in Thy sight, though it be but the smallest, looking to one thing only, that the gift be such as I can bear with ease, not one that slight as it is will bring me, poor weakling, fainting to the ground. And what do we suppose is 232 meant by the words, "Shall not the hand of the Lord suffice?" (Num. xi. 23). Surely this, that the powers of the Existent reach everywhere to benefit not only the highly placed but also those of lowlier reputation. And on these He bestows what befits them, according to the soul-measurements and appraisements of each, measuring and appraising in Himself<sup>a</sup> by the rule of equality the due proportion to each.

XLI. I am profoundly struck by the law enacted 233 for those who put off their sins and appear to be repentant. It bids them bring first as the victim a ewe without blemish, but "if his hand," it continues, "have not strength for a sheep, he shall bring for the sin which he has committed two turtledoves or two young pigeons, one for sin and one for a burnt offering. But if his hand does not find a pair of turtledoves 234 or two young pigeons, he shall bring for his gift fine flour the tenth of an ephah. He shall not pour upon it oil, nor put upon it frankincense, because it is a sin offering, and shall bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take from it a complete handful and lay the memorial upon the altar" (Lev. v. 7 ff.). Moses, then, employs for propitiation 235 the three methods of repentance here mentioned, beasts or birds or wheaten flour, adapted doubtless

<sup>a</sup> Or (reading ισότητι <τῆ> παρ' ἐαυτῶ) "the equality inherent in Himself."

PHILO

- καθαιρομένον καὶ μετανοούντος δήπου δύναμιν· οὔτε γὰρ μικρὰ μεγάλων οὔτε μεγάλα μικρῶν δεῖται καθαρσιῶν, τῶν δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἀνάλογον ἴσων
- 236 καὶ ὁμοίων. τί δήποτ' οὖν διὰ τριῶν ἢ κάθαρσις, ἄξιον ἐρευνησαι. σχεδὸν τοίνυν καὶ τὰ ἁμαρτήματα καὶ τὰ κατορθώματα συμβέβηκεν ἐν τρισὶν ἐξετάζεσθαι, διανοία, λόγοις, πράξειςιν. οὗ χάριν κὰν τοῖς προτρεπτικοῖς Μωυσῆς διδάσκων, ὅτι ἢ ἀγαθοῦ<sup>1</sup> κτήσις οὐτ' ἀδύνατός ἐστιν οὔτε
- 237 δυσθήρατος, φησίν· οὐκ εἰς οὐρανὸν ἀναπτῆναι δεῖ οὐδ' ἄχρι περάτων γῆς καὶ θαλάττης ἔλθειν ἐπὶ τὴν σύλληψιν αὐτοῦ· ἀλλ' ἐστὶν “ἐγγύς, καὶ σφόδρα ἐγγύς” —εἶτα μόνον οὐκ ὀφθαλμοφανῶς δεικνύς<sup>2</sup>— “πᾶν ἔργον” φησί “τῷ στόματί σου καὶ τῇ καρδίᾳ καὶ ταῖς χερσί,” συμβολικῶς ἐν λόγοις, ἐν βουλαῖς, ἐν ἔργοις· ἐκ γὰρ εὐβουλίας καὶ εὐλογίας καὶ εὐπραξίας τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην εὐδαιμονίαν συνίστασθαι, ὥσπερ καὶ τὴν κακοδαιμονίαν ἐκ τῶν
- 238 ἐναντιῶν. ἐν γὰρ τοῖς αὐτοῖς τό τε κατορθοῦν καὶ ἁμαρτάνειν χωρίους ἐστί, καρδία, στόματι, χερί· καὶ γὰρ βουλευόνται τινες εὐγνωμονέστατα καὶ
- [615] λέγουσιν ἄριστα καὶ πράττουσι | τὰ πρακτέα. τριῶν δὲ ὄντων κουφότατόν ἐστι τὸ βουλευέσθαι ἢ μὴ χρή, βαρύτερον δὲ τὸ χειρουργεῖν τὰ ἄδικα,
- 239 μέσον δὲ τὸ λέγειν ἢ μὴ δεῖ. συμβαίνει δὲ τὸ κουφότατον δυσσποτριπτότατον εἶναι· χαλεπὸν γὰρ ψυχῆς τροπὴν εἰς ἡρεμίαν ἀγαγεῖν, καὶ θᾶπτον ἂν τις χειμάρρου φορὰν ἐπίσχοι ἢ ψυχῆς τροπὴν ρέουσιν ἀκατασχέτως· ἀμύθητα γὰρ ἐνθύμια ἄλλα

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀγαθῆ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δεικνύσι. The correction is mine and I have also

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 235-239

to the capacity of the penitent who is purified, for small things do not need great, nor great things small purifications, but such as are like and equal on the principle of proportion. Why then there 236 should be three ways of repentance is worth inquiry. Practically cases both of sinning and of achieving righteousness fall into three classes, thoughts and words and deeds. And therefore in his Exhortations Moses, when he is shewing that the acquisition of the good is neither impossible nor hard to pursue, says, "You need not fly up to heaven nor go to the ends 237 of earth and sea to lay hold of it, but near and very near (and with the next words he shews the nearness as it were almost visible to the eye) is every work to thy mouth and heart and hands" (Deut. xxx. 12 ff.). In these three words he figures words, thoughts and intentions, deeds. For good thinking and intending, good speaking and good doing make up, he means, human happiness just as their opposites make up 238 unhappiness, since achievement of righteousness and sinning are found in all these three places, heart, mouth and hand. For indeed some think and intend with excellent judgement and speak what is best and do what they should do. Of the three wrong thinking and intending is the least serious, and actually carrying out injustice is the most serious, while saying what we should not stands midway between the two. Yet in practice the least serious proves to 239 be the most difficult to rid ourselves from, for it is a hard matter to bring to a standstill the soul's changing movements. Their irresistible stream is such that we could sooner stem the rush of a torrent, for thoughts removed the full stop at ἐγγύς. The quotation, though free, goes on continuously.

---

PHILO

- ἐπ' ἄλλοις τρικυμίας τρόπον ἐπιτρέχει, φοροῦντα καὶ κυκῶντα καὶ πᾶσαν αὐτὴν βιαίως ἀνατρέποντα.
- 240 τὸ μὲν οὖν ἄριστον τῆς καθάρσεως καὶ τελεώτατον τοῦτ' ἐστί, μηδ' ἐνθυμείσθαι τι τῶν ἀτόπων, ἀλλ' εἰρήνη καὶ εὐνομία, ὣν ἡγεμών ἐστι δικαιοσύνη, πολιτεύσασθαι· τὸ δὲ δεύτερον, λόγοις μὴ διαμαρτάνειν ψευδόμενον ἢ ψευδορκοῦντα ἢ ἀπατῶντα ἢ σοφιζόμενον ἢ συκοφαντοῦντα ἢ συνόλως στόμα καὶ γλῶτταν ἐπ' ὀλέθρῳ τινῶν ἀνιέντα,<sup>1</sup> οἷς χαλινὸν ἦν ἄμεινον περιθεῖναι καὶ
- 241 δεσμὸν ἄρρηκτον. XLII. διὰ τί δὲ τὸ λέγειν τοῦ νοεῖν τὰ μὴ προσήκοντα βαρύτερον ἀμάρτημα, ῥᾶον ἰδεῖν. ἐνθυμεῖται μὲν τις οὐ παρ' ἑαυτὸν ἔστιν ὅτε, ἀλλ' ἀβουλῶν· ὣν γὰρ οὐ θέλει λαμβάνειν ἐννοίας ἀναγκάζεται, τῶν δ' ἀκουσίων
- 242 οὐδὲν ὑπαίτιον. λέγει δέ τις ἐκῶν, ὥστε, εἰ μὴ εὐφημον προΐεται φωνήν, ἀδικεῖ κακοδαιμονῶν, ὃ μὴδ' ἐκ τύχης ἐθέλων τι τῶν ἐπιεικεστέρων φθέγγασθαι· ᾧ λυσιτελὲς τὴν ἀσφαλεστάτην ἡσυχίαν δεξιούσθαι· κάπειτα μὴ ἡσυχάζων τις δύναται
- 243 δῆπου βουλευθεῖς σιωπᾶν. τὸ δὲ καὶ τοῦ λέγειν βαρύτερον ἀμάρτημα ἢ ἄδικος πράξις ἐστι· “λόγος γὰρ ἔργου” φασὶ “σκιά,” σκιάς δὲ βλαπτούσης πῶς οὐ τὸ ἔργον βλαβερώτερον; διὰ τοῦτο καὶ Μωυσῆς τὴν μὲν γνώμην ἐγκλημάτων καὶ ἐπιτιμιῶν ἀπήλλαξεν, ἀκουσίοις τὰ πολλὰ μεταβολαῖς χρωμένην καὶ τροπαῖς καὶ πάσχουσαν μᾶλλον ὑπὸ τῶν ἐπισφοιτώντων νοημάτων ἕξωθεν

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀνέντα.

<sup>a</sup> Or “silence.” See App. p. 592.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 592.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 239-243

after thoughts in countless numbers pour on like a huge breaker and drive and whirl and upset its whole being with their violence. This then is 240 the best and most perfect form of purification, never even to admit any heinous thoughts, but to live with our fellow-citizens in peace and law observance, that order of which justice is the guiding influence. And the second best is to abstain from sinfulness of word, either by lying or perjury or subtlety or calumny, and in general from aiming at the ruin of others by giving a free rein to the mouth and tongue which it were better to bridle and bind with chains of adamant.

XLII. It is easy to see why 241 wrong-speaking is a graver matter than wrong-thinking. A man's thoughts are sometimes not due to himself, but come without his will. He is compelled to admit ideas on subjects which he has no wish to consider, and where there is no will no blame is due. But speaking is voluntary, so that if a man 242 gives utterance to language which offends, he is wronging others, unhappy in this, that even when there is an opportunity of speaking something of a kinder nature he is not willing to use it. Such a person would do best to court complete freedom from disturbance,<sup>a</sup> and if he has not this freedom he can surely if he wills it keep silence. But 243

the unjust action is a more grievous sin than any speaking, for the word is the shadow of the act,<sup>b</sup> men say, and if the shadow be harmful, the act must be more harmful. And therefore Moses exempts mere intention from accusation and penalty. He knew that it was largely subject to involuntary changes and swervings, and rather the passive victim of the thoughts which flock into it than an active agent.

PHILO

ἡ δρῶσαν· τὰ δ' ὅσα ἂν ἐξέλθῃ διὰ τοῦ στόματος, ταῦτ' εἰς ἀπόλογον καὶ εὐθύνας ἄγει, ὡς ἂν δὴ τοῦ 244 λέγειν ἐφ' ἡμῖν ὑπάρχοντος. ἀλλ' αἱ μὲν λόγων εὐθυναὶ μετριώτεραι, αἱ δ' ὑπαιτίων<sup>1</sup> ἔργων ἀργαλεώτεραι. μεγάλας γὰρ τάττει τιμωρίας ἐπὶ τοῖς μεγάλα ἀδικούσι καὶ ἔργῳ ἐπεξιοῦσιν ἃ γνώμη μὲν ἀγνώμονι ἐβουλεύσαντο, προπετεία δὲ γλώττης
 245 ἐξέλαλησαν. XLIII. τὰ δὲ καθάρσια | τῶν τριῶν, [616] διανοίας, λόγου, πράξεως, εἴρηκεν [οὖν] πρόβατον καὶ ζεύγος τρυγόνων ἢ περιστερῶν καὶ σεμιδάλεως ἱεροῦ μέτρου δέκατον, ἀξιῶν προβάτῳ μὲν διάνοιαν καθαίρεσθαι, λόγον δὲ τοῖς πτηνοῖς, σεμιδάλει δὲ
 246 πρᾶξιν. διὰ τί; ὅτι, καθάπερ ἐν ἡμῖν ἄριστον ὁ νοῦς, καὶ ἐν ζώων ἀλόγων γένει τὸ πρόβατον ἅτε ἡμερώτατον ὑπάρχον καὶ καρπὸν ἐτήσιον ἀνατέλλον ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ πρὸς ὠφέλειαν<sup>2</sup> ὁμοῦ καὶ κόσμον ἀνθρώπων· ἐσθῆς γὰρ τὰς ἀπὸ κρυμοῦ καὶ θάλπους ἀνείργει βλάβας καὶ τὰ ἀπόρρητα τῆς φύσεως ἐπισκιάζουσα πρὸς εὐκοσμίας τοῖς χρωμένους ἐστί.
 247 σύμβολον οὖν ἔστω τῆς τοῦ ἀρίστου καθάρσεως, διανοίας, τὸ ζώων ἄριστον, τὸ πρόβατον, λόγου δὲ τὰ πτηνά· κοῦφόν τε γὰρ ὁ λόγος καὶ πτηνὸν φύσει, βέλους θάπτον φερόμενος καὶ πάντῃ διάττων. τὸ γὰρ ἅπαξ λεχθὲν ἀναδραμεῖν μὲν οὐκ ἔστιν, ἔξω δὲ φερόμενον, τάχει πολλῶ τρέχον, πλήττει τὰ ὦτα καὶ διὰ πάσης ἀκοῆς 248 ἐρχόμενον εὐθὺς ἤχεϊ. δίδυμος δὲ ὁ λόγος, ὁ μὲν ἀληθῆς, ὁ δὲ ψευδής· οὗ μοι δοκεῖ χάριν ζεύγει τρυγόνων ἢ περιστερῶν ἐξομοιωθῆναι.

<sup>1</sup> mss. ὑπαίτιαι.

<sup>2</sup> Or ἀσφάλειαν as Mangey; cf. § 111, also ἀσφάλειαν καὶ εὐκοσμῖαν Quis Rerum 125.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 243-248

But all that issues through the mouth he requires to make its defence and stand its trial on the principle that our speech is in our own power. But in these 244 trials words are judged more leniently, culpable actions more severely, for he appoints great penalties for the authors of great misdeeds, those who carry into actual execution what their ill-intended intentions have planned or their reckless tongues have uttered. XLIII. For the purgation of these three, thought, 245 speech and action, he has named the sheep, the pair of doves or pigeons and the tenth of an ephah, the sacred measure, of fine flour, holding that thought should be purged with the sheep, speech with the birds, action with the fine flour. Why? Because just as 246 the mind is the best element in us, so the sheep takes the same place among the unreasoning animals considered as a whole, in virtue of its superior gentleness and the annual produce which it raises by itself, to benefit men and adorn them at the same time. For raiment averts mischief from frost and heat, and by veiling what nature would have hidden promotes decency in the wearers. Let us take then 247 the best animal, the sheep, as representing in a figure the purging of our best part, the mind, and similarly the birds as representing speech. For speech is light and winged by nature, moving swifter than an arrow, and flashing its way in every direction. For the word once spoken cannot return, but when carried outside races at a high speed, strikes the ears, and passing right through the whole region of hearing straightway turns into sound. Also 248 speech is twofold, partly true and partly false, and thence I think its comparison to a pair of doves or

PHILO

- τῶν δὲ πτηνῶν τὸ μὲν περὶ ἁμαρτίας φησὶ δεῖν εἶναι, τὸ δὲ ὀλοκαύτωμα θύειν, ἐπειδὴ τὸν μὲν ἀληθῆ λόγον ὄλον δι' ὄλου συμβέβηκεν εἶναι ἱερόν <τε καὶ> τέλειον, τὸν δὲ ψευδῆ διημαρτησθαί τε
- 249 καὶ ἐπανορθώσεως δεῖσθαι. πράξεως δέ, ὡς ἔφην, σύμβολον ἢ σεμίδαλις· καὶ γὰρ ταύτην συμβέβηκεν οὐκ ἄνευ τέχνης καὶ ἐπινοίας καθαίρεσθαι, ἀλλὰ χερσὶ σιτοπόνων, ἐπιτήδευμα τὸ πρᾶγμα πεποηκότων, διακρίνεται. διὸ καὶ φησι· “δραξάμενος ὁ ἱερεὺς πλήρη τὴν δράκα τὸ μνημόσυνον αὐτῆς<sup>1</sup> ἀνοίσει,” διὰ τῆς δρακὸς τὸ
- 250 ἐγχείρημα καὶ τὴν πρᾶξιν ἐμφαίνων. ἄγαν δ’ ἐξήτασμένως ἐπὶ μὲν τοῦ κτήνους εἶπεν· “ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ἰσχύῃ ἢ χεὶρ τὸ ἱκανὸν εἰς πρόβατον,” ἐπὶ δὲ τῶν πτηνῶν· “ἐὰν δὲ μὴ εὐρίσκη.” διὰ τί; ὅτι μεγάλης μὲν ἰσχύος καὶ ὑπερβαλλούσης δυνάμεώς ἐστι καταλῦσαι τὰς τῆς διανοίας τροπάς, οὐ μεγάλης
- 251 δὲ ῥώμης τὰ λόγων ἐπισχεῖν ἁμαρτήματα. πάντων γὰρ ἀλεξίκακον τῶν διὰ φωνῆς ἁμαρτανομένων, ὡς καὶ πρότερον εἶπον, ἡσυχία, ἢ παντί τω ῥάδιον χρῆσθαι· πολλοὶ δὲ διὰ τὸ λάλον καὶ ἀμετροεπὲς οὐχ εὐρίσκουσι πέρας ἐπιθεῖναι τῷ λόγῳ.
- 252 XLIV. Ταύταις καὶ ταῖς παραπλησίαις τομαῖς καὶ διαστολαῖς τῶν πραγμάτων ἐντραφεῖς καὶ ἐνασκηθεῖς ὁ ἀστείος ἄρ’ οὐκ εἰκότως εὐχεσθαι ἂν δόξαι τὸν Ἰσμαῆλ ζῆν, εἰ μὴ δύναται κνοφορῆσαι
- 253 πω | τὸν Ἰσαάκ; τί οὖν ὁ χρηστὸς θεός; ἐν
 [617] αἰτησαμένῳ δύο δίδωσι καὶ τὸ ἔλαττον εὐξαμένῳ

<sup>1</sup> So LXX: MSS. αὐτῶν.

<sup>a</sup> κνοφορῆσαι rather strangely used for γεννᾶν. Has ἀρετὴ fallen out?

pigeons. Moses directs that one bird should serve as a sin offering, and that the other should be offered by fire in its entirety, because it is a condition of true speech that it is entirely holy and perfect while false speech is the product of sin and needs reformation.

The fine flour is, as I have said, the symbol 249 of action, for it is a condition of flour that it is not brought into a pure state without art and contrivance but is sifted by the hands of corn-grinders, who have made a practice of this process. It accords with this when he says: "The priest shall take a complete handful and offer its memorial"—by the handful bringing out the thought of handiwork and action. And he makes a very careful contrast in 250 speaking of the beasts and the birds. Of the first he says "If his hand be not strong enough for the sheep," and of the second "If his hand do not find." Why is this? Because it needs great strength and a very high degree of power to suppress the changing movements of the mind, but it needs no great might to restrain trespasses of speech. For against tres- 251 passes committed with the voice there is a remedy as I have said before in quietude, of which everyone can easily avail himself, though many through their loquacity and measureless chattering do not find any limit to put upon their words.

XLIV. These and similar ways of analysing and 252 distinguishing things become familiar to the man of virtue through breeding and practice, and does it not therefore seem natural that he should pray that Ishmael may live, if he cannot as yet be the parent<sup>a</sup> of Isaac? What then does God in His kindness do? 253 Abraham had asked for one thing, God gives him two.

PHILO

χαρίζεται τὸ μείζον. “ εἶπε ” γάρ φησι “ τῷ Ἀβραάμ· ναί, ἰδοὺ Σάρρα ἡ γυνή σου τέξεται σοι υἱόν ”· εὐθυβόλος γε ἡ συμβολικὴ ἀπόκρισις ἡ ναί. τί γὰρ ἐμπρεπέστερον ἢ τὰγαθὰ ἐπινεύειν θεῶ<sup>1</sup> καὶ 254 ταχέως ὁμολογεῖν; ἀλλ’ οἷς ἐπινεύει τὸ θεῖον, ἅπας ἄφρων ἀνανένευκε. τὴν γοῦν Λείαν μισουμένην εἰσάγουσιν οἱ χρησμοί· διὸ καὶ τοιαύτης ἔτυχε προσρήσεως· ἐρμηνευθεῖσα γὰρ ἔστιν ἀνανευομένη καὶ κοπιῶσα διὰ τὸ πάντας ἡμᾶς ἀρετὴν ἀποστρέφεισθαι καὶ κοπῶδη νομίζειν ἐπιτάγματα
 255 οὐχ ἡδέα πολλάκις ἐπιτάττουσαν. ἀλλὰ τοσαύτης ἀποδοχῆς ἠξίωται παρὰ τοῦ πανηγεμόνος,<sup>2</sup> ὥστε τὴν μήτραν ὑπ’ αὐτοῦ διοιχθεῖσαν σπορὰν θείας<sup>3</sup> γονῆς παραδέξασθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν καλῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων καὶ πράξεων γένεσιν. μάθε οὖν, ὦ ψυχῆ, ὅτι καὶ “ Σάρρα, ” ἡ ἀρετὴ, “ τέξεται σοι υἱόν, ” οὐ μόνον Ἄγαρ, ἡ μέση παιδεία· ἐκείνης μὲν γὰρ τὸ ἔγγονον διδακτόν, ταύτης δὲ
 256 πάντως αὐτομαθές ἐστι. μὴ θαυμάσης <δ’>, εἰ πάντα φέρων σπουδαῖα ὁ θεὸς ἤνεγκε καὶ τοῦτο τὸ γένος, σπάνιον μὲν ἐπὶ γῆς, πάμπολυ δ’ ἐν οὐρανῷ. μάθοις δ’ ἂν ἀπὸ τῶν ἄλλων, ἐξ ὧν συνέστηκεν ἄνθρωπος. ἀρά γε οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ διδαχθέντες ὀρώσι; τί δ’; οἱ μυκτῆρες ὀσφραίνονται μαθήσει; ἄπτονται δ’ αἱ χεῖρες ἢ οἱ πόδες προΐασι 257 κατ’ ἐπιτάγματα ἢ παραινέσεις ὑψηγητῶν; αἱ δ’ ὁρμαὶ καὶ φαντασίαι—πρῶται δ’ εἰσὶν αὗται κινήσεις καὶ σχέσεις<sup>4</sup> ψυχῆς—διδασκαλίᾳ συνέστησαν;

<sup>1</sup> MSS. θεοῦ ἢ θεὸν.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. θείου.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τῶν ἡγεμόνων.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. πελίσσεις.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 253-257

He had prayed for the less, God grants him the greater. He said to him, we read, "Yes, Sarah thy wife shall bear a son" (Gen. xvii. 19). How significant is that answer "Yes," fraught as it is with inner meaning. For what can be more befitting to God than to grant and promise His blessings in a moment and with a sign of assent? Yet those who receive a 254 sign of assent from God are refused assent by every fool. Thus the oracles represent Leah as hated and for this reason she received such a name.<sup>a</sup> For by interpretation it means "rejected and weary," because we all turn away from virtue and think her wearisome, so little to our taste are the commands she often lays upon us. But from the Ruler of all she was awarded 255 such acceptance that her womb which He opened received the seed of divine impregnation (Gen. xxix. 31), whence should come the birth of noble practices and deeds. Learn then, soul of man, that Sarah also, that is virtue, shall bear thee a son, as well as Hagar, the lower instruction. For Hagar's offspring is the creature of teaching, but Sarah's learns from none other at all than itself. And wonder 256 not that God, who brings about all good things, has brought into being this kind also, and though there be few such upon earth, in Heaven vast is their number. You may learn this truth from the other elements, out of which man is constituted. Have the eyes been taught to see, do the nostrils learn to smell, do the hands touch or the feet advance in obedience to the orders or exhortations of instructors? As for 257 our impulses and mental pictures, which are the primal conditions of the soul, according as it is in motion or at rest, are they made what they are by <sup>a</sup> See note on De Cher. 41.

PHILO

παρὰ δὲ σοφιστὴν φοιτήσας ὁ νοῦς ἡμῶν νοεῖν καὶ καταλαμβάνειν ἔμαθε; πάντα ταῦτ' ἀφειμένα<sup>1</sup> διδασκαλίας ἀπαυτοματιζούση φύσει χρῆται πρὸς 258 τὰς οἰκείας ἐνεργείας. τί οὖν ἔτι θαυμάζεις, εἰ καὶ ἀρετὴν ἀπονον καὶ ἀταλαίπωρον ὁ θεὸς ὀμβρήσει μηδεμιᾶς δεομένην ἐπιστασίας, ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὀλόκληρον καὶ παντελεῆ; εἰ (δὲ) καὶ μαρτυρίαν βούλει λαβεῖν, Μωυσέως ἀξιοπιστοτέραν εὐρήσεις;
 ὅς φησι τοῖς μὲν ἄλλοις ἀνθρώποις ἀπὸ γῆς εἶναι τὰς τροφάς, μόνῳ δὲ ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ τῷ ὄρατικῷ.
 259 ταῖς μὲν οὖν ἀπὸ γῆς καὶ ἀνθρώποι γεωπόνου συν-εργοῦσι, τὰς δ' ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ νίφει χωρὶς συμπράξεως ἐτέρων ὁ μόνος αὐτουργὸς θεός. καὶ μὴν λέγεται. "ἴδου ὕψω ὑμῖν ἄρτους ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ." τίνα οὖν ἀπ' (οὐρανοῦ) τροφήν<sup>2</sup> ἐνδίκως ὕεσθαι
 260 λέγει, ὅτι μὴ τὴν οὐράνιον | σοφίαν; ἦν ἀνωθεν [618] ἐπιπέμπει ταῖς ἡμερον ἀρετῆς ἐχούσαις ψυχαῖς ὁ φρονήσεως εὐθηϊαν καὶ εὐετηρίαν χέων<sup>3</sup> καὶ τὰ ὅλα ἄρδων καὶ μάλιστα ἐν ἱερᾷ ἐβδόμη, ἣν σάββατον καλεῖ. τότε γὰρ τὴν τῶν αὐτομάτων ἀγαθῶν φορὰν ἔσεσθαί φησιν, οὐκ<sup>1</sup> ἐξ ὅλης τέχνης ἀνατελλόντων,<sup>4</sup> ἀλλ' αὐτογενεῖ καὶ αὐτοτελεῖ φύσει βλαστανόντων καὶ τοὺς οἰκείους φερόντων καρπούς.

<sup>1</sup> mss. ἐφειμένα.

<sup>2</sup> mss. ἀποτροφήν.

<sup>3</sup> So Mangey: mss. and Wend. ἔχων.

<sup>4</sup> I should be inclined to correct to οὐδ' and perhaps to ἀνατελούντων, in which case the phrase, which Mangey and Wend. would emend by substituting respectively ὑλικῆς (?) and ἀνθρωπίνης for ὅλης, would not, I think, present any difficulty. Another possibility would be ἐκ πολλῆς.

---

<sup>a</sup> Wendland gives the reference for this as Ex. xvi. 23 ff. But this can hardly be right, as no manna fell on the 274

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 257-260

teaching? Does our mind attend the school of the professor of wisdom and there learn to think and to apprehend? All these exempt from teaching make use of self-worked independent nature for their respective activities. Why then need you still wonder 258 that God showers virtue without toil or trouble, needing no controlling hand but perfect and complete from the very first? And if you would have further testimony of this can you find any more trustworthy than Moses, who says that while other men receive their food from earth, the nation of vision alone has it from heaven? The earthly food is produced with 259 the co-operation of husbandmen, but the heavenly is sent like the snow by God the solely self-acting, with none to share his work. And indeed it says "Behold I rain upon you bread from heaven" (Ex. xvi. 4). Of what food can he rightly say that it is rained from heaven, save of heavenly wisdom which is sent from 260 above on souls which yearn for virtue by Him who sheds the gift of prudence in rich abundance, whose grace waters the universe, and chiefly so in the holy seventh (year) which he calls the Sabbath?<sup>a</sup> For then he says there will be a plentiful supply of good things spontaneous and self-grown, which even all the art in the world could never raise, but springing up and bearing their proper fruit through self-originated, self-consummated nature.

Sabbath. The reference is clearly to the Sabbatical year of Lev. xxv. 4, 5, definitely called "Sabbath," on which he has dwelt in De Fug. 170 ff. ἡ ἐβδόμη seems to be used for ἐβδομάς in De Decal. 159 and De Spec. Leg. ii. 40, as well as in § 144 above. Presumably nó noun but ἡμέρα can be understood, but by frequent use it has come to be a noun, which Philo can extend to cover any sacred period, day, month, or year.

PHILO

- 261 XLV. Τέξεται οὖν σοι ἡ ἀρετὴ υἱὸν γενναῖον ἄρρενα, παντὸς ἀπηλλαγμένον θήλεος πάθους, καὶ καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ υἱοῦ τὸ πάθος, ὅπερ ἂν ἐπ' αὐτῷ πάθης, πείσῃ δὲ πάντως χαράν· ὥστε καὶ τὸ
- 262 σύμβολον αὐτῆς ὄνομα θήσεις, γέλωτα. καθάπερ λύπη καὶ φόβος ἰδίας ἀναφθέγγεις ἔχουσιν, ἃς ἂν τὸ βιασάμενον καὶ κρατήσαν ὄνομα(το)ποίησιν πάθος, οὕτως εὐβουλία καὶ εὐφροσύνη φυσικαῖς ἐκφωνήσεσιν ἀναγκάζουσι χρῆσθαι, ὧν οὐκ ἂν εὖροι τις κυριωτέρας καὶ εὐθυβολωτέρας κλήσεις, κἂν τυγχάνῃ
- 263 περὶ τὰς κλήσεις σοφός. διό φησιν· “εὐλόγηκα αὐτόν, αὐξήσω αὐτόν, πληθυνῶ, δώδεκα ἔθνη γεννήσει,” τὸν κύκλον καὶ τὸν χορὸν ἅπαντα τῶν σοφιστικῶν προπαιδευμάτων. “τὴν δὲ διαθήκην μου στήσω πρὸς Ἰσαάκ,” ἢ ἑκατέρας ἀρετῆς τὸ ἀνθρώπων μεταποιῆται γένος, διδακτῆς τε καὶ αὐτομαθοῦς, τὸ μὲν ἀσθενέστερον διδασκομένης, ἐτοιμῆς δὲ τὸ ἐρρωμένον.
- 264 XLVI. “Εἰς δὲ τὸν καιρὸν τοῦτον τέξεται σοι,” φησὶν, ἡ σοφία χαράν. ποῖον, ὧ θαυμασιώτατε, δεικνύεις καιρὸν; ἢ τὸν ὑπὸ γενέσεως ἀδεικτον μόνον; ὁ γὰρ ἀληθὴς αὐτὸς (ἂν) εἴη καιρὸς, ἀνατολὴ τῶν ὄλων, ἢ εὐπραξία καὶ εὐκαιρία γῆς, οὐρανοῦ, τῶν μεταξύ φύσεων, ζώων
- 265 ὁμοῦ καὶ φυτῶν ἀπάντων. ὅθεν καὶ Μωυσεῖς ἐθάρρησεν εἰπεῖν τοῖς ἀποδεδρακόσι καὶ μὴ θέλουσι τὸν ὑπὲρ ἀρετῆς ἄρασθαι πόλεμον πρὸς τοὺς ἀντιτεταγμένους· “ἀφέστηκεν ὁ καιρὸς ἀπ' αὐτῶν, ὁ δὲ κύριος ἐν ἡμῖν.” μόνον γὰρ οὐκ ἄντικρυς ὁμο-

---

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Post. 122, where however the καιρός is the false god who deserts his votaries.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 261-265

XLV. Virtue then shall bear thee a true-born, 261 male child, one free from all womanish feelings, and thou shalt call his name by the feeling which he raises in thee, which feeling is most surely joy. And therefore thou shalt give him a name significant of joy, even laughter. Just as fear and grief have their own 262 special ejaculations, which the overpowering force of emotion coins, so moods of happy planning or of gladness compel us to break out into natural utterances, as aptly and exactly expressing our meaning as any which an adept in the study of names could devise. Therefore he says: "I have blessed him, I 263 will increase and multiply him: he shall beget twelve nations (that is, the whole round and train of the early branches of the professional schools), but my covenant will I establish with Isaac" (Gen. xvii. 20 f.).
Thus both forms of virtue, one where the teacher is another, one where teacher and learner are the same, will be open to human kind. And where man is weak he will claim the former, where he is strong the latter which comes ready to his hands.

XLVI. "But at this season," he continues, "she shall 264 bear to thee," that is, wisdom shall bear joy. What is the season you set before us, Master? Wonder of wonders! Is it not the season which is as no other, which no created being can set forth? For the true season, the dayspring of the universe, when all is well and seasonable with earth and heaven, and the intermediate natures, both living creatures and plants, can be no other than Himself. And therefore Moses 265 feared not to say to the fugitives from danger who shrank from waging the war for virtue against their antagonists, "The season hath departed from them, but the Lord is among you" (Num. xiv. 9).<sup>a</sup> Here he

PHILO

λογεῖ τὸν θεὸν καιρόν, ὃς παντὸς μὲν ἀσεβοῦς μακρὰν ἀφέστηκεν, ἀρετώσαις δ' ἐμπεριπατεῖ 266 ψυχαῖς. " περιπατήσω " γὰρ φησιν " ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ ἔσομαι ὑμῶν θεός." οἱ δὲ τὰς ὥρας τοῦ ἔτους καιροὺς εἶναι λέγοντες οὐ κυρίως καταχρῶνται τοῖς [619] ὀνόμασιν, ἅτε μὴ πάνυ | τὰς φύσεις τῶν πραγμάτων ἠκριβωκότες, ἀλλὰ πολλοῦ τοῦ εἰκῆ μετέχοντες.

267 XLVII. Ἐπιτείνων δὲ τὸ κάλλος τοῦ γεννωμένου φησὶν αὐτὸ " ἐν τῷ ἐνιαυτῷ τῷ ἑτέρῳ " γεννηθήσεσθαι, ἐνιαυτὸν ἕτερον οὐ <τὸ> τοῦ χρόνου μηνῶν διάστημα, ὃ ταῖς σεληνιακαῖς ἢ ἡλιακαῖς ἀναμετρεῖται περιόδοις, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἔκτοπον καὶ ξένον καὶ καινὸν ὄντως, ἕτερον τῶν ὀρωμένων καὶ αἰσθητῶν, ἐν ἀσωμάτοις καὶ νοητοῖς ἐξεταζόμενον, ὅπερ τὸ χρόνου παράδειγμα καὶ ἀρχέτυπον εἶληκεν, αἰῶνα. αἰὼν δὲ ἀναγράφεται τοῦ νοητοῦ 268 βίος κόσμου, ὡς αἰσθητοῦ χρόνος. ἐν ᾧ ἐνιαυτῷ καὶ " τὴν ἑκατοστεύουσαν εὕρισκει κριθὴν " ὃ τὰς θεοῦ χάριτας ἐπὶ γενέσει πλειόνων σπειρας ἀγαθῶν, ἢ ὡς πλείστοι τῶν ἐπαξίων τυχεῖν μεταλάβωσιν.
269 ἀλλὰ γὰρ τῷ σπείραντι καὶ θερίζειν ἔθος· ὃ δ' ἔσπειρε μὲν ἐπιδεικνύμενος τὴν ἐχθρὰν φθόνου καὶ κακίας ἀρετὴν, εὐρεῖν δέ, ἀλλ' οὐ θερίσαι λέγεται· ὃ γὰρ στάχυν ἀδρότερον τῶν εὐεργεσιῶν καὶ πλήρη πεποιηκῶς ἕτερος ἦν, ὃς<sup>1</sup> εὐτρεπισάμενος καὶ ἐτοιμασάμενος ἐλπίδας μείζους καὶ πλείους δωρεὰς προὔθηκε τοῖς ζητοῦσιν εἰς εὐρεσιν.

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὁ.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 265-269

acknowledges with hardly any disguise that God is the Season which departs far away from all the impious, but walks in rich and fertile souls. "For I will walk among you," he says, "and will be your God" (Lev. xxvi. 12). But they who say that season means the changes of the year strain the terms from their proper meaning, for they have not carefully studied the real natures of things but are deeply tainted with looseness of thought.

XLVII. He goes on to say—thereby heightening the glory of the child to be—that he will be born "in the other year" (Gen. xvii. 21). And by other year he does not mean an interval of time which is measured by the revolutions of sun and moon, but something truly mysterious, strange and new, other than the realm of sight and sense, having its place in the realm of the incorporeal and intelligible, and to it belongs the model and archetype of time, eternity or aeon.<sup>a</sup> The word aeon signifies the life of the world of thought, as time is the life of the perceptible. In this same year, too, is "the hundredfold crop of barley found" (Gen. xxvi. 12) by him who sows the gifts of God to produce an increase of blessings, and thereby increases to the uttermost the number of those who shall deservedly partake of it. But note that the sower generally reaps. Yet he, though he sowed, and thereby displayed the virtue which hates envy and vice, is not said to reap but to find. For He who ripened the ear of His benefits and filled it with corn was Another, even He who prepares and matures higher hopes and more abundant bounties and puts them forth to be found by those who seek.

<sup>a</sup> From Timaeus 37 D, as also in Quis Rerum 165, Quod Deus 32, where see note.

PHILO

270 XLVIII. Τὸ δὲ “ συνετέλεσε λαλῶν πρὸς αὐτὸν ” ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ τὸν ἀκροατὴν αὐτὸν<sup>1</sup> ἐτελείωσε κενὸν ὄντα σοφίας πρότερον καὶ ἀθανάτων λόγων ἐπλήρωσεν. ἐπεὶ δὲ τέλειος ὁ μαθητῆς ἐγένετο, “ ἀνέβη ” <φησὶ> “ κύριος ἀπὸ Ἀβραάμ ” δηλῶν, οὐχ ὅτι διεζεύχθη—φύσει γὰρ θεοῦ ὁπαδὸς ὁ σοφός,—ἀλλὰ τὸ ἐκούσιον τοῦ μαθητοῦ βουλόμενος παραστήσαι, ἵν', ὅπερ<sup>2</sup> ἔμαθε, μηκέτι ἐφ-εστῶτος τοῦ διδάσκοντος χωρὶς ἀνάγκης αὐτὸς ἐπιδεικνύμενος, ἐθειουργῶ καὶ αὐτοκελεύστῳ προθυμία χρώμενος, ἐνεργῆ δι' ἑαυτοῦ. δίδωσι γὰρ ὁ διδάσκαλος τῷ μαθόντι τόπον πρὸς τὴν ἄνευ ὑποβολῆς ἐκούσιον μελέτην, ἀλήστου μνήμης ἐγχαράττων βεβαιοτάτον εἶδος.

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps αὐτοῦ.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὡσπερ.

ON THE CHANGE OF NAMES, 270

XLVIII. The words "he completed talking to 270 him" (Gen. xvii. 22) are equivalent to "He perfected the hearer himself," who before was devoid of wisdom, and filled him with thoughts that cannot die. And when the learner had become perfect, "the Lord went up from Abraham," says Moses (ibid.). He does not mean that Abraham was parted from Him, for by his very nature the sage is God's attendant, but he wished to shew the independence of the learner. His purpose is that when the superintendence of the master is withdrawn, and no compulsion is applied, the pupil may make an exhibition of his own powers, and shewing a diligence which is voluntary and self-imposed may work out by his own efforts what he has learnt. For it is the way of a teacher to give his pupil opportunity of independent practice without suggestions from himself, and thus set upon him the stamp of indelible memory in its surest form.

ON DREAMS, THAT THEY ARE GOD-SENT (QUOD A DEO MITTANTUR SOMNIA OR MORE BRIEFLY
DE SOMNIIS)

ANALYTICAL INTRODUCTION TO BOOK I

THIS treatise, as we learn from its opening section is really the second of those which deal with dreams. The first, which is lost, treated of dreams in which the dreamer's own thoughts had no part. This second treatise is concerned with dreams in which the mind is inspired and can thus foresee the future. The two examples of this kind are taken from the history of Jacob. The first is the familiar story of the heavenly ladder at Bethel, and this with introductions and digression occupies §§ 2-188. The second is the dream of Genesis xxxi. in which he sees the different markings of his flock and is bidden to return to his native land. This takes up the rest of the treatise. The first of these dreams is quoted in § 3, the second in § 189.

Philo, after noting the difference of subject between this treatise and the preceding and quoting the substance of the vision (1-3), finds it necessary to discuss the verses which lead up to it. "And Jacob went out from the well of the oath and journeyed to Haran, and he met with a place. For the sun was set, and he took one of the stones of the place and set it at his head and slept in that place" (4-5). The first question is, What is the well? A well is knowledge, which like the well water is hidden and can only be gained by toil (6-8). But from this particular well Isaac did not find water, and this means that full knowledge is beyond us. The more we learn the more we find remains to be learnt (8-11).

PHILO

But why the "well of the oath"? Because this impossibility of obtaining full knowledge is a truth which everyone can safely affirm without fear of perjury (12-13). But we observe that while Isaac digs four wells it is only the fourth which receives this name (14). So too in the universe and in the man we find three things which can be known in a sense and a fourth which cannot. The world has four constituents—earth, air, water, heaven. We can give some account of the first three, but on the fourth all sorts of theories are held. And here he takes the occasion to mention various views as to the nature of the sun, moon, and stars, nearly all of which can be illustrated from earlier writers (15-24). So, too, with man. Here the four are body, senses, speech and mind, and our partial knowledge of the first three, compared with our complete ignorance of the fourth, is treated in the same way (25-32). The thought may be illustrated from the phrase in Leviticus that "the fourth year is holy and for praise," for heaven with its music of the spheres and the human mind alike have been created to praise their maker (33-38). This meditation concludes with a censure of those who suppose that the story of the four wells can be taken in its literal sense (39-40).

Haran, as explained already elsewhere,<sup>a</sup> signifies the land of the senses, and it is only right and natural that the soul should sometimes leave the well of boundless knowledge, the world of mind, and take Haran for its refuge, but not for its lasting home (41-45). That is only for the Laban soul, which is contrasted with Jacob as Terah is with Abraham. For while Abraham came out of Haran, Terah died there (45-48). This leads Philo to further thoughts on the subject of Terah. His name means "observer of scent," and the second part of the name suggests the thought of those who like the hound scent the distant virtue but do not win it, a condition inferior to the best, yet not without value (48-51). The other part of the name, "observer," reminds us that Terah dwelt in Chaldea before he came to Haran, i.e. that his observation concerned itself with the vanities of astrology, whereas his migration to Haran shews the conversion of the soul to the Socratic principle of "Know Thyself" (52-58). But Terah goes no further, and it is only Abraham who leaves Haran for the highest quest of all (59-60).

<sup>a</sup> De Mig. 176 ff.

ON DREAMS, I.

And now what is the place which he "lights upon" or "meets"? "Place" apart from the ordinary sense may indicate either the Logos which God fills and in which He stands, or God Himself (61-64). After a short discussion of the text in the story of Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac, "he came to the place . . . and saw the place from afar," in which he finds an inconsistency requiring explanation (64-67), he lays down with confidence that in the Jacob story the place is the Logos (68-71).

"The sun was set." Here the sun is God Himself, whose setting in the mind leaves room for the inferior influence of "words" <sup>a</sup> to take the lead, and some illustration of the symbolism in which the sun or at least light stands for God is given (72-76). But we must note, however, in passing that elsewhere the sun is a figure for other things. Sometimes it stands for the mind (77-78), even for such inferior light as that of the senses, and he reminds us that the sunlight hides the glory of the stars as sense hides the light of true knowledge (79-84). Again it stands sometimes for the Logos (85-86). Yet on the whole the thought of the sun representing God holds the field, and two illustrations of this follow. In the first of these the phrase "expose" (or "hang") the malefactor "before the sun" is understood to mean that the confession of sin to the all-seeing God is the necessary preliminary to repentance and forgiveness (87-91). The second leads to one of those curious diatribes in which Philo tries to shew that a simple and indeed humane ordinance of the law cannot be accepted literally.<sup>a</sup> The text is that in which the creditor, who has taken the debtor's cloak as security, is bidden to return it at sunset (92). Various objections to a literal interpretation are raised. Is it worthy of God to legislate on such a trivial matter? (93-94). Why should not the creditor keep the cloak, and what is it a security for? (95-98). Why should it not be restored in the daytime also (99), and even the wording of the ordinance is declared to be absurd if taken literally (99-101). We are therefore driven to the allegorical interpretation that the garment stands for speech or reason, and that those who deprive themselves or others of reason must restore it before the divine sun sets in their hearts (102-114). So then, applying this interpretation to the story, we see the Practiser sometimes illumined by the sun-like rays of God Himself, sometimes left to the less brilliant light of the Logos and finding in that a sufficient blessing <sup>a</sup> Cf. De Agr. 148 ff.

<sup>a</sup> See note on § 72.

PHILO

ON DREAMS, I.

(115-117). Before closing this part of the discussion Philo notes that some, while agreeing that the place is the Logos, take the sun to mean mind and sense together, and construe the setting of these as meaning the humble acknowledgement of the inability of human faculties to attain real truth (118-119).

“ He took of the stones of the place and slept.” Before we consider the allegorical meaning of this we may note how the story in its literal sense inculcates the duty of simple living, and Philo takes the occasion to deliver one of his frequent commonplaces against luxury (120-126). Allegorically, however, the stones of the place are Logoi, here definitely regarded as spiritual beings, and one stone, apparently the divine Logos itself, serves him for the pillow of his mind, the head of his soul (127-128). From this thought he passes for a moment to compare the story of the same Logos as the instructor and rewarder of Jacob in the wrestling story of Genesis xxxii., and the lesson to be learnt from the incident of his numbed or shrinking thigh. This concludes the commentary on the incidents which lead up to the dream of the ladder (129-132).

We now pass on to the interpretation of the vision itself. The ladder from one point of view symbolizes the air, the habitation of unbodied souls, some of whom descend into human bodies and become engrossed in earthly things, while others rise above all such. And again, there are higher spiritual beings, the angels, who act as intermediaries between God and man (133-145). But in another sense, the ladder is the soul on which the divine words move up and down—up to draw it upwards, down to help it in its abasement (146-149). Or again, the ladder may show the life of the Practiser, with its perpetual advancing and back-sliding (150-152), or, once more, the oscillations of fortune as we see them in ordinary life (153-156).

PHILO

“The Lord ‘stood firmly,’ or was established, on the ladder.” These words naturally suggest to Philo his favourite “thought” of the divine “standing” which alone establishes all things (157-159), and he goes on to consider the phrase: “I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac.” Why “the Lord God” in one case and “God” in the other? Philo, as usual, assuming that Lord represents the sovereign and God the creative and beneficent potency, argues that the Abraham-nature which learns through teaching needs both these, while the Isaac-nature of the self-taught needs only the latter (160-163); and this thought gives him an occasion to extol such allegorical interpretations and to call upon devout souls to seek for them (164-165). Another point in the phrase is that Abraham is called Jacob’s father, while Isaac is not. Again the same principle of the three types, teaching, nature, practice, will help us. While Jacob is still Jacob the supplanter and embodies practice, he is more akin to Abraham. When he becomes Israel who sees God, he will have Isaac for his father (166-172). Other phrases in the divine speech are commented on shortly with devout reflections, of which the most characteristically Philonic are those on the words, “In thee shall all tribes of the earth be blessed,” and “I will turn thee back to this land.” From the first he draws the lesson that the “tribes” in the individual, the senses, are blessed by the virtuous mind within, while the tribes in the wider sense are inevitably influenced for good by the lover of wisdom. On the second he points out that it may refer to the immortality of the soul, which, released from the body, returns to the heaven from which it came.

ON DREAMS, I.

He now turns to Jacob's waking words and feelings. A difficult and fantastic explanation is given, of which the main points are (1) that his fear is caused by realizing that God is not in any place, (2) that in the words, "This is none other than the House of God," "this" is the visible world of sense which is also the gate of heaven, because it is only through our experience of it that we get our knowledge of the world of mind (182-188).

If Philo's treatment of the ladder dream may seem in parts a feeble perversion of one of the most familiar and beautiful stories in Genesis, his treatment of the dream which follows brings out his gift for extracting striking ideas from the most unpromising material. After quoting the passage Gen. xxxi. 11-13 in full (189), he begins by pointing out that a vision may be granted to men by the ministers of God, as well as by God Himself (190), and that God speaks in different terms, according as He speaks as a sovereign or a teacher or a friend. That Jacob is a friend appears from His addressing him by name, as Moses and Abraham are addressed (191-196). Passing on to the substance of the dream, the rams and he-goats who mount the sheep and goats are two logoi, here no longer spiritual beings but thoughts or ways of thinking which impregnate tender souls inspiring either repentance or a desire for positive well-doing (197-200). These logoi are described as pure white, speckled or varied, ashy-spotted or sprinkled. At the first of these he glances at present only for a moment, and passes on to a consideration of "variegation" as it is shewn in the pageant of the universe and in the world of learning, where the student gathers from each branch of knowledge its various parts and weaves them into a gaily coloured piece of work such as Bezaleel the "variegator" made (201-207). As for the ashy-spotted, while recognizing that literally this means marked with ash-coloured spots, he turns it for the purpose of his allegory into sprinkled with ashes and water, the ritual of purification, thus signifying the abasement of the humble soul (208-210). He notes how all three are symbolized in the high priest, who must first purify himself with ashes and water, who wears both the varied breastplate and the white linen robe, which represents a higher type of detachment from human aims and deceptions (213-218). In contrast with this is the Joseph soul, with its coat of varied colours, which of the three types has only variegation, and even that in a lower sense (219-224). Let us avoid variegation of this kind, and thus frustrate Laban whose wiles are shewn in the next verse of the text, "I have seen all that Laban does to thee," and that he will be frustrated is shewn by the continuation, "I am the God Who appeared to thee in God's place" (224-227). These last words carry Philo away on to the distinction between "the God" and "God" or "a God," the conclusion of which seems to be that, just as in condescension to human weakness God allows Himself to be spoken of in anthropomorphic terms, so He reveals Himself in the form of angels or "gods" (232-236).<sup>a</sup>

PHILO

The next words are: "Where thou anointedst Me a pillar." Philo for the moment ignores "anointedst," <sup>a</sup> See note on § 230.

ON DREAMS, I.

and fastens on the word "pillar," taking it in the sense of a monumental slab. Such a slab is erected or made to stand, is inscribed and is dedicated; and he enlarges on these three ideas, particularly on dedication. The dedication must be to God, and those who dedicate a pillar to themselves are blasphemously affirming the stability of human things, and will, like Lot's wife, become themselves lifeless "pillars" of salt (244-248). He now deals with the word "anointedst": since ἀλείφειν means also train for the arena, and the ἀλείπτῆς is a trainer, he easily gets the thought that to anoint the pillar is spiritually to train in the soul the doctrine which the pillar represents, namely the stability of God. Such a training will also dedicate the soul (249-251), and so also the words "Thou didst vow a vow" is a dedication of the maker of the vow (252-254). The treatise concludes with an exhortation to the soul to learn all these lessons from the Practiser's story, and thus, as is promised in the last words of the text, return to the land of its nativity (255-end).

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΘΕΟΠΕΜΠΤΟΥΣ ΕΙΝΑΙ
ΤΟΥΣ ΟΝΕΙΡΟΥΣ

A

[620] I. | Ἡ μὲν πρὸ ταύτης γραφῆ περιεῖχε τῶν θεο-
<sup>1</sup>πέμπτων ὀνείρων τοὺς κατὰ τὸ πρῶτον εἶδος ταπτο-μένους, ἐφ' οὗ τὸ θεῖον ἐλέγομεν κατὰ τὴν ἰδίαν ἐπιβολὴν τὰς ἐν τοῖς ὕπνοις ἐπιπέμπειν φαντασίας.
ἐν ταύτῃ δ', ὡς ἂν οἶόν τε ἦ, δηλώσομεν τοὺς <sup>2</sup>ἐφαρμόττοντας τῷ δευτέρῳ. δεύτερον δ' εἶδος, ἐν ᾧ ὁ ἡμέτερος νοῦς τῷ τῶν ὄλων συγκινούμενος ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ κατέχεσθαι τε καὶ θεοφορεῖσθαι δοκεῖ, ὡς ἰκανὸς εἶναι προλαμβάνειν καὶ προγινώσκειν τι τῶν μελλόντων. ὄναρ δ' ἐστὶ πρῶτον οἰκίον εἶδει τῷ σημαινομένῳ τὸ φανὲν ἐπὶ τῆς <sup>3</sup>οὐρανοῦ κλίμακος τόδε· “ καὶ ἐνυπνιάσθη· καὶ ἰδοὺ κλίμαξ ἐστηριγμένη ἐν τῇ γῆ, ἧς ἡ κεφαλὴ ἀφικνεῖτο εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, καὶ οἱ ἄγγελοι τοῦ θεοῦ ἀνέβαινον καὶ κατέβαινον ἐπ' αὐτῆς· ὁ δὲ κύριος ἐπιστήρικτο ἐπ' αὐτῆς· καὶ εἶπεν· ἐγὼ εἰμι<sup>1</sup> ὁ θεὸς
'Αβραάμ τοῦ πατρός σου καὶ ὁ θεὸς Ἰσαάκ· μὴ φοβοῦ· ἡ γῆ, ἐφ' ἧς σὺ καθεύδεις, σοὶ δώσω αὐτήν καὶ τῷ σπέρματί σου, καὶ ἔσται τὸ σπέρμα σου ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς γῆς, καὶ πλατυνθήσεται<sup>2</sup> ἐπὶ

<sup>1</sup> So MSS., and also LXX. But perhaps ἐγὼ κύριος as in §§ 159, 166, and 173. See the argument based on this in § 160.

ON DREAMS

BOOK I

I. The treatise before this one embraced that first 1 class of heaven-sent dreams, in which, as we said, the Deity of His own motion sends to us the visions which are presented to us in sleep. In the present treatise we shall, to the best of our ability, bring before our readers dreams which find their right place under our second head. The second kind of dreams is that in 2 which our own mind, moving out of itself together with the Mind of the Universe, seems to be possessed and God-inspired, and so capable of receiving some foretaste and foreknowledge of things to come.<sup>a</sup>

The first dream belonging to the class thus indicated is that which appeared to the dreamer on the stairway of Heaven: "And he dreamed, and 3 behold a stairway set up on the earth, of which the top reached to heaven, and the angels of God were ascending and descending upon it. And the Lord stood firmly on it; and He said, 'I am the God of Abraham thy father and the God of Isaac; fear not; the land whereon thou sleepest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the sand of the earth, and shall spread abroad

<sup>a</sup> For this classification of dreams see App. pp. 593 f.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. πληθυνθησέ(ον)ται. But πλατ. as LXX in § 175.

PHILO

θάλασσαν καὶ λίβα καὶ βορρᾶν καὶ ἀνατολάς· καὶ ἐνευλογηθήσονται ἐν σοὶ πάσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ (ἐν) τῷ σπέρματί σου· καὶ ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ μετὰ σοῦ, διαφυλάσσω σε ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ πάση, ἣ ἄν πορευθῆς· καὶ ἀποστρέψω σε εἰς τὴν γῆν ταύτην, ὅτι οὐ μὴ σε ἐγκαταλίπω, ἕως τοῦ ποιῆσαί με

[621] <sup>4</sup> πάντα ὅσα ἐλάλησά σοι.” | προκατασκευὴ δ’ ἐστὶ τῆς φαντασίας ἀναγκαία, ἣν ἀκριβώσαντες εὐμαρῶς ἴσως δυνησόμεθα καὶ τὰ δηλούμενα ὑπὸ τῆς φαντασίας καταλαβεῖν. τίς οὖν ἢ προκατασκευή; “καὶ ἐξῆλθε” φησὶν “Ἰακώβ ἀπὸ τοῦ φρέατος τοῦ ὄρκου καὶ ἐπορεύθη εἰς Χαρρᾶν, καὶ ἀπήντησε τόπῳ· ἔδν γὰρ ὁ ἥλιος· καὶ ἔλαβεν ἀπὸ τῶν λίθων τοῦ τόπου καὶ ἔθηκε πρὸς κεφαλῆς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐκοιμήθη ἐν τῷ τόπῳ ἐκείνῳ”· κάπειτ’ εὐθύς ἐστι τὸ ὄναρ.

5 οὐκοῦν ἄξιον ἐν ἀρχῇ ταυτὶ τρία διαπορηῆσαι· ἐν μὲν τί τὸ τοῦ ὄρκου φρέαρ καὶ διὰ τί οὕτως ἄνομάσθη, δεύτερον δὲ τίς ἢ Χαρρᾶν καὶ διὰ τί ἀπὸ τοῦ λεχθέντος φρέατος ἐξελλθὼν εἰς Χαρρᾶν ἔρχεται εὐθύς, τρίτον τίς ὁ τόπος καὶ διὰ τί, ὅταν γένηται κατ’ αὐτόν, ὁ μὲν ἥλιος δύεται, αὐτὸς δὲ κοιμάται.

6· Π. Σκοπῶμεν οὖν αὐτίκα τὸ πρῶτον. ἐμοὶ τοίνυν δοκεῖ σύμβολον εἶναι τὸ φρέαρ ἐπιστήμης· οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἐπιπόλαιος αὐτῆς ἢ φύσις, ἀλλὰ πάνυ βαθεῖα· οὐδ’ ἐν φανερώ πρόκειται, ἀλλ’ ἐν ἀφανείῳ κρύπτεσθαι φιλεῖ· οὐδὲ ῥαδίως, ἀλλὰ μετὰ πολλῶν πόνων καὶ μόλις ἀνευρίσκεται. καὶ ταυτ’

---

<sup>a</sup> Or “the next thing is that he comes to Haran.” Of course in the narrative Jacob does not come at once to Haran, nor is the scene of the vision in Haran. But, since both Well and Haran are to Philo conditions of soul, the

ON DREAMS, I. 3-6

to the west and the south and the north and the east ; and in thee shall be blessed all the tribes of the earth, and in thy seed. And, behold, I am with thee, guarding thee in every way by which thou goest, and will bring thee back into this land, for I will by no means forsake thee, until I have done all things whatsoever I have spoken unto thee ' ' (Gen. xxviii. 12-15).

The vision is introduced 4 by a prefatory passage necessary for its understanding, and if we study this in detail we shall perhaps be able easily to grasp the meaning of the vision. What then is this prefatory passage ? It runs thus : " And Jacob went out from the Well of the Oath, and made his journey to Haran ; and he met with a place ; for the sun set ; and he took one from the stones of the place, and put it under his head, and he slept in that place " (ibid. 10 f.) ; and then at once follows the dream.

It is worth while, then, at the 5 outset to investigate these three points, firstly, what " the Well of the Oath " is and why it was so called ; secondly, what " Haran " is, and why it is that on coming out from the Well aforesaid he comes at once " to Haran ; thirdly, what " the place " is, and why, when he reaches it, the sun sets, and he himself goes to sleep.

II. Let us consider the first to begin with. To me, 6 then, the Well seems to be a symbol of knowledge ; for the nature of knowledge is to be very deep, not superficial ; it does not display itself openly, but loves to hide itself in secrecy ; it is discovered not easily but with difficulty and with much labour. And all statement that he journeys from one to the other with no mention of any intervening place (for the τόπος of the vision is no place in the ordinary sense) implies that the second soul state is the immediate successor to the first.

PHILO

οὐ μόνον ἐπὶ τῶν μεγάλα καὶ ἀμύθητα ὅσα θεωρή-7 ματα ἔχουσῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν εὐτελεστάτων θεωρεῖται. ἦν γοῦν ἂν ἐθέλης ἑλοῦ τῶν τεχνῶν, μή μοι τὴν ἀρίστην, ἀλλὰ τὴν πασῶν ἀφανεστάτην, ἦν ἐλεύθερος μὲν ἴσως οὐδεὶς ἐν πόλει τραφεῖς ἐκῶν ἐπιτηδεύσειεν ἂν, ἐν ἀγρῶ δὲ μόλις ἄκων οἰκέτης δυσκόλῳ καὶ δυστρόπῳ παλαίων δεσπότη 8 βιαζομένῳ πολλὰ δρᾶν τῶν ἀβουλήτων. εὐρεθή-σεται γὰρ οὐχ ἀπλοῦν, ἀλλὰ ποικίλον τὸ πρᾶγμα, οὐ θατέρα ληπτόν,<sup>1</sup> δυσεύρετον, δυσπεριγένητον, ἐχθρὸν μὲν ὄκνῳ καὶ ἀμελείᾳ καὶ ῥαθυμίᾳ, σπουδῆς δὲ καὶ φιλοτιμίας ἰδρώτων τε καὶ φροντίδων μεστόν.
 οὗ χάριν οὐδ' ὕδωρ ἐν τῷ φρέατι τούτῳ φασὶν οἱ ὀρύττοντες εὐρεῖν, ἐπειδὴ τὰ τέλη τῶν ἐπιστημῶν οὐ δυσεύρετα μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ 9 ἀνεύρετα παντελῶς εἶναι συμβέβηκε. γραμματι-κώτερος δὲ διὰ τοῦτο καὶ γεωμετρικώτερος ἕτερος ἐτέρου γίνεται τῷ τὰς ἐπιτάσεις καὶ παραυξήσεις ἀμήχανον εἶναι ὄροις περιγραφῆναι· πλείω γὰρ αἰε τῶν εἰς μάθησιν ἠκόντων τὰ ἀπολειπόμενα ἐκδέχεται καὶ ἐφεδρεύει, ὡς καὶ τὸν ἄπτεσθαι περάτων ἐπιστήμης ὑπολαμβανόμενον ἡμιτελῆ παρ' ἐτέρῳ κριτῇ νομίζεσθαι, παρὰ δὲ ἀληθείᾳ δικαζούσῃ καὶ 10 ἄρτι ἄρχεσθαι δοκεῖν. “ βραχὺς μὲν γὰρ ὁ βίος,” ἔφη τις, “ ἢ δὲ τέχνη μακρά,” ἦς ἄριστα κατα-

<sup>1</sup> mss. θήρα (some θηρατοῦ) ληπτόν (some μεμπτόν). The correction to θατέρα is mine. See note to De Mig. 220, where grounds are given for retaining against Wend. the τῇ ἐτέρᾳ of the mss., and for reading οὐ θατέρα in De Sac. 37, in accordance with the Papyrus. This proverbial phrase quoted in Plato, Soph. 226 A seems for some reason to have eluded both scribes and editors.

ON DREAMS, I. 6-10

this may be seen not only in branches of knowledge which contain a whole multitude of important problems, but in the simplest<sup>a</sup> studies as well. Just 7 choose any art you please, not the best of them I beg of you, but the most ignoble of them all, which perhaps no free man whatever brought up in a city would voluntarily practise, and even in the country a servant who has to grapple with a harsh and ill-conditioned master, who forces him to many a distasteful task, would only undertake reluctantly. For it will be found to be not a simple but a subtle 8 matter, one "which needs both hands to take it," hard to discover and hard to master, a foe to hesitation and negligence and indifference, demanding abundance of zest and enthusiasm, of hard toil and anxious thought.

This is why the diggers of this well say that they found no water in it (Gen. xxvi. 32), inasmuch as the ends pursued in the different branches of knowledge prove to be not only hard to reach, but absolutely beyond finding. That is why 9 one man is a better scholar or geometrician than another, because no limit can be set to the extensions and enlargements of his subject in all directions. For what still remains is always waiting to engage us in fuller force than what we have already learned; so that the man who is supposed to have reached the very end of knowledge, is considered in the judgement of another to have come half way; while if Truth give her verdict, he is pronounced to be just beginning. For "life is short," said one, "and art 10 is long"<sup>b</sup>; and he best apprehends its greatness

<sup>a</sup> Or "meanest" = ἀφανεστάτην below.

<sup>b</sup> The well-known opening aphorism of Hippocrates, though there ἡ τέχνη is the art (of medicine).

PHILO

- λαμβάνει τὸ μέγεθος ὁ ἀψευδῶς ἐμβαθύνων αὐτῇ
 [622] καὶ ὡσπερ φρέαρ | αὐτὴν ὀρύττων. διὸ καὶ τελευτώντά τινα πολὺν ἤδη καὶ ὑπέργηρων λόγος ἔχει δακρύνειν, οὐ δι' ἀνανδρίαν φόβῳ θανάτου, ἀλλὰ διὰ παιδείας ἕμερον ὡς νῦν πρῶτον εἰς αὐτὴν 11 εἰσιόντα, ὅτε πανύστατ' ἔξεισιν. ἀνθεὶ γὰρ ἡ ψυχὴ πρὸς ἐπιστήμην, ὁπότε αἱ τοῦ σώματος ἀκμαί χρόνου μήκει μαραίνονται. πρὶν οὖν ἠβῆσαι καὶ ἐννεάσαι τῇ τῶν πραγμάτων ἀκριβεστέρα καταλήψει, χαλεπὸν ὑποσκελισθῆναι. τὸ δὲ πάθος τοῦτο κοινὸν ἀπάντων ἐστὶ τῶν φιλομαθῶν, οἷς νέα ἐπὶ παλαιοῖς ἀνίσχει καὶ ἀναλάμπει θεωρήματα, πολλὰ μὲν καὶ τῆς ψυχῆς, ὁπότε μὴ στείρα καὶ ἄγονος εἶη, τικτούσης, πολλὰ δὲ καὶ τῆς φύσεως ἀτεκμάρτως ἐκ ταυτομάτου προφανούσης τοῖς διάνοιαν ὀξυδορκουσι.
- Τὸ μὲν οὖν ἐπιστήμης φρέαρ ὄρον καὶ τελευτὴν 12 οὐκ ἔχον τοιοῦτον<sup>1</sup> ἀπεδείχθη. διὰ τί δὲ ὄρκος<sup>2</sup> ὠνομάσθη, λεκτέον· τὰ ἐνδοιαζόμενα τῶν πραγμάτων ὄρκῳ διακρίνεται καὶ τὰ ἀβέβαια βεβαιοῦται καὶ τὰ ἄπιστα λαμβάνει πίστιν· ἐξ ὧν ἐκεῖνο συνἀγεται, ὅτι περὶ οὐδενὸς ἂν τις οὕτως βεβαιώσαιοτο, ὡς περὶ τοῦ τὸ σοφίας γένος ἀπερίγραφον καὶ 13 ἀτελεύτητον εἶναι. καλὸν μὲν οὖν καὶ ἀνωμότῳ διεξιόντι περὶ τούτων συνεπιγράφεσθαι· ὁ δὲ μὴ λίαν εἰς συναίνεσιν<sup>3</sup> εὐχερῆς ἐνωμότῳ γενομένῳ συναινείτω. μηδεὶς δὲ ὀμνύναι τὸν τοιοῦτον ὄρκον

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps τοιοῦτον <θν>.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ὄρκου.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. σύνεσιν.

<sup>a</sup> The plural ὧν is due to the threefold form of the statement in the preceding clause, but the logic of what follows

ON DREAMS, I. 10-13

who honestly sounds its depths, and digs it like a well.

So there is a story that a grey-haired man of great age shed tears when dying, not in any cowardly fear of death, but by reason of his yearning for education, and the thought that he is now first entering upon it, when he takes his final leave of it. For the soul is just blossoming into knowledge, 11 when the body's bloom is withering away through the passing of years. So it is a hard fate to be tripped up by the heels before one has attained the prime of youthful strength to apprehend things more accurately. This experience is common to all who love to learn, who see new results of thought and study rise like a shining light in addition to the old. Many of these does the soul, if it be not cursed with barrenness, bring forth ; many does Nature of herself shew to those whose understanding is sharp-sighted, without giving any sign beforehand of their coming.

So then the well of knowledge, the well without limit or ending, has been shewn to be such as I have described. Why it was named " Oath " I must now 12 tell you. Matters that are in doubt are decided by an oath, insecure things made secure, assurance given to that which lacked it. From this we conclude that there is nothing which can be asserted with <sup>a</sup> greater certainty than that wisdom is essentially without end or limit. While then it is well to agree with one who 13 discourses on these truths even if he takes no oath, let anyone who is not very prone to assent do so when the speaker is on his oath. And no one need shrink from taking such an oath, for he may rest assured that is not clear. Presumably the thought is that since the oath creates certainty, the name of oath given to the well gives absolute certainty that the well is such as we have found it to be.

PHILO

ἀναδυέσθω σαφῶς εἰδῶς, ὅτι ἐν εὐόρκων γραφήσεται στήλαις.

- 14 III. Ἄλις μὲν δὴ τούτων. ἐπόμενον δ' ἂν εἴη σκέψασθαι, διὰ τί τεττάρων ὀρυττομένων φρεάτων ὑπὸ τῶν ἀμφὶ τὸν Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Ἰσαὰκ τὸ τέταρτον 15 καὶ τελευταῖον “ ὄρκος ” προσερρήθη. μήποτ' οὖν δι' ὑπονοιῶν ἐκείνο βούλεται παραστήσαι, ὅτι κἂν τῷ παντὶ τεττάρων ὄντων, ἐξ ὧν συνέστηκεν ὁδε ὁ κόσμος, καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς ἰσαρίθμων, ἐξ ὧν διαπλασθέντες εἰς ἀνθρωπόμορφον εἶδος ἐτυπώθημεν, τὰ μὲν [οὖν] τρία πέφυκεν ἀμηγέπη κατα-λαμβάνεσθαι, τὸ δὲ τέταρτον ἀκατάληπτον πᾶσι 16 τοῖς κριταῖς ἐστίν. ἐν μὲν οὖν τῷ κόσμῳ γῆν καὶ ὔδωρ καὶ ἀέρα καὶ οὐρανὸν τέτταρα τὰ πάντα εἶναι συμβέβηκεν· ὧν τὰ μὲν ἄλλα κἂν δυσευρέτου, ἀλλ' οὐκ εἰσάπαν ἀνευρέτου μοίρας ἤξιώται.
- 17 καὶ γὰρ γῆν, ὅτι ἐστὶ σῶμα βαρὺ καὶ ἀδιάλυτον καὶ στερέμνιον καὶ τεμνόμενον εἰς ὄρη καὶ πεδιάδας χώρας καὶ ποταμοῖς καὶ θαλάττῃ διαιρούμενον, ὡς τὰ μὲν νησιάζειν, τὰ δὲ ἠπειροῦσθαι, καὶ ὅτι τὸ μὲν αὐτῆς λεπτόγεων, τὸ δὲ βαθύγειον, καὶ τὸ μὲν τραχὺ καὶ στρυφνὸν καὶ λιθῶδες καὶ εἰσάπαν ἄγονον, τὸ δὲ λείον καὶ μαλακὸν καὶ γονιμώτατον, |
18 καὶ μυρία πρὸς τούτοις ἕτερα καταλαμβάνομεν· [623] καὶ πάλιν ὔδωρ ὅτι πολλά τε τῶν εἰρημένων ἔχει κοινὰ πρὸς γῆν καὶ ἐξαιρέτα ἕτερα· τὸ μὲν γὰρ αὐτοῦ γλυκύ, τὸ δ' ἀλμυρόν, τὸ δ' ἄλλαις διακεκριμένον ἰδέαις· καὶ τὸ μὲν πότιμον, τὸ δ' οὐ πότιμον—καὶ ἐκάτερον οὐ πᾶσιν, ἀλλ' οἷς θάτερον, οὐ τὸ ἕτερον, καὶ οἷς μὴ θάτερον, πάντως

° For the general sense of §§ 12, 13 cf. De Plant. 82.

ON DREAMS, I. 13-18

his name will appear on the register of those who have sworn truly.<sup>a</sup>

III. Enough on these points. The next thing to 14 inquire is why, when four wells are dug by Abraham and Isaac and those about them (Gen. xxi. 25, xxvi. 19-23), the fourth and last received as its name "Oath." Probably Moses wishes to shew us alle- 15 gorically that while both the constituents of which the universe is composed, and those from which we ourselves were moulded and so fashioned into human shape, are four in number, three of them are such as can in one way or another be apprehended, but the fourth is universally held to be beyond our powers of apprehension. In the world, then, we find the 16 constituents that make up the whole to be four, earth, water, air, heaven. To three of these properties have been allotted, the discovery of which may be difficult, but is not wholly impossible.

For, as 17 regards earth, we perceive that it is a body, heavy, indissoluble, firm, cut up into mountain-ranges and level plains, divided by rivers and sea, so that parts of it are islands, part continents; that some of it has a light thin soil, some of it a deep soil; some of it rough, stiff, stony, and altogether barren, some level and soft and very fertile. These and a thousand other points we apprehend.

As to water 18 again, we perceive that it has several of the properties just enumerated in common with land, and others peculiar to itself; for some of it is sweet, some brackish, other parts marked by other differences; some water is fit to drink, other water unfit. We know too it has not either of these properties alike for all; one kind of water is drinkable by some but not by others, and what is undrinkable by some is

PHILO

- τὸ ἕτερον,—καὶ τὸ μὲν φύσει ψυχρόν, τὸ δὲ φύσει 19 θερμόν—εἰσὶ γὰρ μυρίαὶ πολλαχόθι πηγαὶ ζέον ὕδωρ ἐκδιδοῦσαι, οὐ κατὰ γῆν μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ κατὰ θάλατταν· ἤδη γοῦν ἐφάνησαν φλέβες ἀνομβροῦσαι ζέον ὕδωρ ἐν μέσοις πελάγεσιν, ἃς ἡ τοσαύτη τῶν ἐν κύκλῳ πελαγῶν ἀνάχυσις ἐξ αἰῶνος ἐπικλύζουσα οὐκ ἴσχυσε σβέσαι, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐπὶ 20 ποσὸν ἀνεῖναι— καὶ πάλιν ὅτι ὁ ἀῆρ ἔχει φύσιν εἴκουσαν ἀντιπερισταμένοις<sup>1</sup> τοῖς σώμασιν, ὄργανον ὦν ζωῆς, ἀναπνοῆς, ὀράσεως, ἀκοῆς, τῶν ἄλλων αἰσθήσεων, πυκνότητος καὶ μανότητος κινήσεις τε καὶ ἡρεμίας ἐνδεχόμενος, τροπὰς καὶ μεταβολὰς παντοίας τρεπόμενός τε καὶ μεταβάλλων, χειμῶνας καὶ θέρη γεννῶν καὶ τὰς μετοπωρινὰς καὶ ἐαρινὰς ὥρας, ἐξ ὧν ὁ ἐνιαυτοῦ κύκλος πέφυκε περατοῦσθαι.
 21 IV. Τούτων μὲν δὴ πάντων αἰσθανόμεθα, ὁ δ' οὐρανὸς ἀκατάληπτον ἔχει τὴν φύσιν, οὐδὲν ἑαυτοῦ σαφὲς γνώρισμα πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἀποστείλας. τί γὰρ ἂν εἴποιμεν; ὅτι πεπηγώς ἐστι κρύσταλλος, ὡς ἠξιώσαντινες; ἢ ὅτι πῦρ τὸ καθαρώτατον; ἢ ὅτι πέμπτον κυκλοφορικὸν σῶμα, μηδενὸς τῶν τεττάρων στοιχείων μετέχον; τί δ'; ἢ ἀπλανῆς καὶ ἐξωτάτω σφαῖρα πρὸς τὸ ἄνω βάθος ἔχει ἢ αὐτὸ μόνον ἐστὶν ἐπιφάνεια βάθους ἐρήμη, τοῖς 22 ἐπιπέδοις σχήμασιν ἔοικυῖα; τί δ'; οἱ ἀστέρες πότερον γῆς εἰσὶν ὄγκοι πυρὸς πλήρεις—ἄγκεα γὰρ

<sup>1</sup> Wend. with most mss. ἀντιπεριστάμενος.

ON DREAMS, I. 18-22

quite drinkable by others ; and that some is by nature cold, some by nature hot : for there are a 19 thousand springs, in many places giving forth boiling water, and that not only on land, but in the sea. Yes, there have before now appeared veins emitting boiling water in mid ocean, which all the force of the surrounding seas pouring over them from time immemorial has been powerless to quench or even in any measure to check. Again we perceive that the 20 air has a nature which gives way to the pressure of the objects around it ; that it is the instrument of life, of breathing, of sight, hearing and the other senses ; that it admits of density and rarity, of motion and stillness, that it undergoes all kinds of change ; that it is the source of winter and summer, and of the autumn and spring seasons, that is, of the constituent parts that fix the limits of the year's cycle.

IV. All these we perceive ; but heaven has sent 21 to us no sure indication of its nature, but keeps it beyond our comprehension.<sup>a</sup> For what can we say ? That it is a fixed mass of crystal, as some have thought ? Or that it is absolutely pure fire ? Or that it is a fifth substance, circular in movement, with no part in the four elements ? Again, we ask, has the fixed and outmost sphere upward-reaching depth, or is it nothing but a superficies, without depth, resembling plane geometrical figures ? Again : are 22 the stars lumps of earth full of fire ? Some people

<sup>a</sup> For these theories about the heavenly bodies see App. p. 594.

PHILO

- καὶ νάπας καὶ μύδρους<sup>1</sup> διαπύρους εἶπον αὐτοὺς εἶναι τινες, αὐτοὶ δεσμωτηρίου καὶ μύλωνος, ἐν οἷς τὰ τοιαῦτά ἐστιν ἐπὶ τιμωρίᾳ τῶν ἀσεβῶν, ὄντες ἐπάξιοι—ἢ συνεχῆς καί, ὡς εἶπέ τις, πυκνὴ ἄρμονία, πηλήματα ἀδιάλυτα αἰθέρος; ἔμφυχοι δὲ καὶ νοεροὶ ἢ νοῦ καὶ ψυχῆς ἀμέτοχοι; προαιρετικὰς δὲ ἢ κατηναγκασμένας αὐτὸ μόνον κινήσεις
- 23 ἔχοντες; τί δέ; σελήνη πότερον γνήσιον ἢ νόθον ἐπιφέρεται φέγγος ἡλιακαῖς ἐπιλαμπόμενον ἀκτίσιν
- [624] ἢ καθ' αὐτὸ μὲν ἰδίᾳ τούτων οὐδέτερον, | τὸ δ' ἐξ ἀμφοῖν ὡς ἂν ἐξ οἰκείου καὶ ἀλλοτρίου πυρὸς κρᾶμα; πάντα γὰρ ταῦτα καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα τοῦ ἀρίστου τε καὶ τετάρτου τῶν ἐν κόσμῳ σώματος ὄντα, οὐρανοῦ, ἄδηλα καὶ ἀκατάληπτα, στοχασμοῖς καὶ εἰκασίαις, οὐ παγίῳ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθείας, ἐφορμούντα· ὥστε κἂν ὁμόσαι τινὰ θαρρήσαντα, ὅτι θνητὸς οὐδεὶς πώποτε ἰσχύσει τούτων ἐναργῶς καταλαβεῖν οὐδέν. ὄρκος διὰ τούτ' ὠνομάσθη τὸ τέταρτον καὶ ξηρὸν φρέαρ, ἢ τοῦ τετάρτου τῶν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ζήτησις ἀτελεύτητος καὶ πάντῃ δυσεύρετος,<sup>2</sup> οὐρανοῦ.
- 25 V. Ἰδωμεν δέ, ὅν τρόπον καὶ τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς τέταρτον διαφερόντως καὶ κατ' ἐξάαιρετον λόγον ἀκατάληπτον εἶναι πέφυκεν. οὐκοῦν τέτταρα τὰ ἀνωτάτω τῶν περὶ ἡμᾶς ἐστι, σῶμα, αἴσθησις, λόγος, νοῦς· τούτων μὲν δὴ τὰ τρία οὐ κατὰ πάσας

<sup>1</sup> Several mss. δρυμοὺς, which at first sight may seem to fit ἀγκα καὶ νάπας better, but see note below and App. p. 594.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. δυσόρατος.

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Aet. 47, where the theory that the stars are μύδροι is ascribed to ἐνιοὶ τῶν οἰα περὶ δεσμωτηρίου φλυαρούντων

ON DREAMS, I. 22-25

have declared them to be dells and glades and masses of fiery metal, for which they themselves deserve a prison and mill-house, in which such instruments are kept to punish impiety.<sup>a</sup> Or are the stars an unbroken, and, as one has said, "close" harmony, indissoluble compresses of ether? Are they living and intelligent, or devoid of intelligence and conscious life? Are their motions determined by choice or simply by necessity? Does the moon contribute a 23 light of its own or a borrowed light caused by the rays of the sun shining on it? Or is it neither the one nor the other by itself absolutely, but the combined result of both, a mixture such as we might expect from a fire partly its own, partly borrowed? Yes, all these and suchlike points pertaining to heaven, that fourth and best cosmic substance, are obscure and beyond our apprehension, based on guess-work and conjecture, not on the solid reasoning of truth; so much so that one may confidently take 24 one's oath that the day will never come when any mortal shall be competent to arrive at a clear solution of any of these problems. This is why the fourth and waterless well was named "Oath," being the endless and altogether baffling quest of the fourth cosmic region, heaven.

V. Let us see in what way that which occupies the 25 fourth place in ourselves too is of such a nature as to be eminently and peculiarly incomprehensible. The factors in us of highest significance are four, body, sense-perception, speech, mind. Three of these are τοῦ σύμπαντος οὐρανοῦ. Whether such a form of torture was actually used in prisons in Philo's time I do not know. There is probably some allusion to the story that Anaxagoras was prosecuted for declaring the sun to be α μύδρος διάπυρος, Diog. Laert. ii. 12.

PHILO

- ἄδηλα τὰς ἰδέας ἐστίν, ἀλλ' ἔχει τινὰ δείγματα ἐν 26 ἑαυτοῖς τοῦ καταλαμβάνεσθαι. τί δ' ἔσθ' ὃ φημι; ὅτι τὸ σῶμα καὶ τριχῆ διαστατὸν καὶ ἐξαχῆ κινητόν, ἴσμεν, διαστάσεις μὲν τρεῖς ἔχον, μῆκος, βάθος, πλάτος, κινήσεις δὲ τὰς διπλασίας ἕξ, τὴν ἄνω, τὴν κάτω, τὴν ἐπὶ δεξιᾷ, τὴν ἐπὶ εὐώνυμα, τὴν πρόσω, τὴν εἰς τὸ κατόπιν· ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅτι ψυχῆς ἐστὶν ἀγγεῖον, οὐκ ἀγνοοῦμεν· ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅτι ἡβᾶ, φθίνει, γηράσκει, τελευτᾶ, διαλύεται, σαφῶς 27 ἴσμεν. καὶ πρὸς αἰσθησιν μέντοι γε οὐ παντάπασι ἀμβλεῖς καὶ πηροὶ γεγόναμεν, ἀλλ' ἔχομεν εἰπεῖν, ὅτι καὶ πενταχῆ σχίζεται καὶ ὄργανα ἐκάστης ἐστὶν ὑπὸ φύσεως δημιουργηθέντα οἰκεία, ὀράσεως μὲν ὀφθαλμοί, ἀκοῆς δὲ ὠτα, ῥῖνες δὲ ὀσφρήσεως καὶ τῶν ἄλλων τὰ οἷς ἐναρμόζεται, καὶ ὅτι ἄγγελοι διανοίας εἰσὶ διαγγέλλουσαι χρώ-ματα, σχήματα, φωνάς, ἀτμῶν καὶ χυλῶν ιδιότητας, συνόλως σώματα καὶ ὅσαι ποιότητες ἐν τούτοις, καὶ ὅτι δορυφόροι ψυχῆς εἰσιν, ὅσα ἂν ἴδωσιν ἢ ἀκούσωσι δηλοῦσαι κἂν εἴ τι βλαβερόν ἐξωθεν ἐπίοι προορώμεναί τε καὶ φυλαττόμεναι, ὡς μὴ λάθρα παρεισρενὲν αἴτιον ζημίας ἀνηκέστου τῆ 28 δεσποίνῃ γένηται. καὶ φωνὴ δ' οὐκ εἰσάπαν ἀποδιδράσκει τὴν ἡμετέραν κρίσιν, ἀλλ' ἴσμεν ὅτι ἡ μὲν ὀξεῖα, ἡ δὲ βαρεῖα, καὶ ἡ μὲν ἐμμελής καὶ ἐναρμόνιος, ἡ δὲ ἀπωδὸς καὶ λίαν ἀνάρμοστος, καὶ πάλιν ἡ μὲν μείζων, ἡ δὲ ἐλάττων· διαφέρουσι καὶ ἄλλοις μυρίοις, γένεσι, χρώμασι, διαστήμασι, συνημμέναις στάσεσι<sup>1</sup> καὶ διεξευγμέναις,

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. τάσεσι, which Mangey and Wend. adopt. See App. p. 595.

ON DREAMS, I. 25-28

not obscure in all their aspects, but contain in themselves some indications by which they can be understood. What do I mean? We know that the body 26 is threefold in dimensions and sixfold in movements, having three dimensions, length, depth, breadth, and twice as many, namely six, movements, upward, downward, to the right, to the left, forward, backward. Nor are we ignorant that it is a vessel for the soul, and we are perfectly aware that it comes to maturity, wears out, grows old, dies, is dissolved.

With respect to sense-perception, also, 27 we are not wholly dim-sighted, and blind, but we are able to say that it is divided into five parts, and that each part has its special organs fashioned by Nature, eyes for seeing, ears for hearing, nostrils for smelling, and for the others the organs in which they find their fit place,<sup>a</sup> and that they are understanding's messengers, bringing to it reports of colours, forms, sounds, distinct scents and savours, in a word, of material substances and their qualities, and that they are bodyguards of the soul, making known all that they have seen or heard. And should any hurtful thing approach from without, they are aware of it beforehand, and on their guard against it, lest it should stealthily make its way in and cause incurable damage to their mistress.

Sound, too, does not 28 entirely elude our discernment. We know that one sound is shrill, another deep, one tuneful and melodious, another discordant and most unmusical, and again, one louder and another softer. They differ also in countless other respects, in genera, tone colours, intervals, conjunct or disjunct systems, and har-

<sup>a</sup> i.e. the mouth, and for touch "the whole structure of the body," De Mig. 188.

PHILO

- ταῖς διὰ τεττάρων, ταῖς διὰ πέντε, ταῖς διὰ πασδων 29 συμφωνίαις. καὶ μὲν δὴ καὶ τῆς ἐνάρθρου φωνῆς, ἣν μόνος ἐκ πάντων ζῶων ἔλαχεν ἄνθρωπος, ἔστιν ἃ γνωρίζομεν· οἶον ὅτι ἀπὸ διανοίας ἀναπέμπεται, ὅτι ἐν τῷ στόματι ἀρθροῦται, ὅτι ἡ γλῶσσα πλήττουσα<sup>1</sup> τῇ τῆς φωνῆς τάσει τὸ ἔναρθρον ἐνσφραγίζεται καὶ λόγον, ἀλλ' [625] οὐ ψιλὴν | αὐτὸ μόνον φωνὴν ἀργὴν καὶ ἀδιατύ-πωτον ἤχον ἀπεργάζεται, ὅτι κήρυκος ἡ ἔρμηνέως ἔχει τάξιν πρὸς τὸν ὑποβάλλοντα νοῦν.
- 30 VI. Ἐὰρ οὖν καὶ τὸ τέταρτον τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν αὐτοῖς, ὃ ἡγεμὼν νοῦς, καταληπτὸς ἔστιν; οὐ δῆπου. τί γὰρ αὐτὸν οἰόμεθα κατὰ τὴν οὐσίαν εἶναι; πνεῦμα ἢ αἷμα ἢ σῶμα συνόλως—ἀλλ' οὐ σῶμα, ἀσώματον δὲ λεκτέον—ἢ πέρας ἢ εἶδος ἢ ἀριθμὸν ἢ ἐνδελέχειαν<sup>2</sup>
- 31 ἢ ἀρμονίαν ἢ τί τῶν ὄντων; γεννώμενον<sup>3</sup> δ' εὐθύς ἢ<sup>4</sup> ἔξωθεν εἰσκρίνεται ἢ ὑπὸ τοῦ περιέχοντος ἀέρος ἢ ἔνθερμος ἐν ἡμῖν φύσις οἷα σίδηρος ἐν χαλκῆως πεπυρωμένος ὑδατι ψυχρῷ πρὸς τὸ κραταιότατον στομοῦται; διότι καὶ παρὰ τὴν ψῦξιν ὠνομάσθαι ψυχῇ δοκεῖ. τί δέ; τελευτώντων σβέννυται καὶ 32 συμφθεῖρεται τοῖς σώμασιν ἢ πλείστον ἐπιβιοῖ χρόνον ἢ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἀφθαρτόν ἐστι; ποῦ δ' ἐμπεφώλευκεν ὁ νοῦς αὐτῷ<sup>5</sup>; ἄρα οἶκον κεκλή-ρωται; οἱ μὲν γὰρ τὴν ἀκρόπολιν ἐν ἡμῖν ἀν-

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read πλάττουσα. Cf. Quod Deus 84 τυπούται ὡσπερ ὑπὸ δημιουργοῦ τινος γλώττης.

<sup>2</sup> Perhaps ἐντελέχειαν. See App. p. 596.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps read γεννωμένων, cf. τελευτώντων below.

<sup>4</sup> Perhaps ἢ.

<sup>5</sup> αὐτῷ is difficult. To refer it to σῶμα understood from σώμασι as in the translation is possible, but strange. Mangey αὐτός. Perhaps αὐτῶν as one ms., partitive gen. after ποῦ. Or it may be an insertion from αὐτῷ below. (So G. H. W.)

monies of the fourth, the fifth, the octave.<sup>a</sup>

In articulatesound, moreover, an advantage possessed 29 by man alone of all living creatures, there are particulars of which we are aware ; as, for example, that it is sent up from the understanding, that it is in the mouth that it acquires articulation, that it is the beat or stroke of the tongue that imparts articulation and speech to the tension of the voice, but does not produce simply just an idle sound and unshapen noise, since it holds to the suggesting mind the office of its herald and interpreter.

VI. Is, then, the fourth element in ourselves, the 30 dominant mind, capable of being comprehended ?<sup>b</sup> By no means. For what do we suppose it to be essentially ? Breath or blood or body in general ?
Nay, we must pronounce it no body but incorporeal.
Do we regard it as boundary-line, or form, or number, or continuity, or harmony, or what amongst all that exists ? At our birth is it at once introduced into us 31 from without ? Or does the air which envelops it impart intense hardness to the warm nature within us, such as the red-hot iron receives when plunged at the smithy into cold water ? The name of " soul " would seem to have been given to it owing to the " cooling " which it thus undergoes. Again : when we die, is it quenched and does it share the decay of our bodies, or live on for a considerable time, or is it wholly imperishable ? And where in the body 32 has the mind made its lair ? Has it had a dwelling assigned to it ? Some have regarded the head, our body's citadel, as its hallowed shrine, since it is about <sup>a</sup> For these terms cf. De Cong. 76 and other reff. there given. For "genera" and "systems" see App. p. 595.

<sup>b</sup> For illustration of these theories about the mind see App. pp. 596 f.

PHILO

- ἰέρωσαν αὐτῷ κεφαλὴν, περὶ ἣν καὶ αἱ αἰσθήσεις λοχῶσιν, εἰκὸς εἶναι νομίσαντες ἐγγὺς οἶα μεγάλου βασιλέως ἐφεδρεύειν τοὺς δορυφόρους· οἱ δ' ὑπὸ καρδίας αὐτὸν ἀγαλματοφορεῖσθαι διανοηθέντες 33 γνωσιμαχοῦσιν. αἰεὶ δὴ τὸ τέταρτον ἀκατάληπτον, οὐρανὸς μὲν ἐν κόσμῳ παρὰ τὴν ἀέρος καὶ γῆς καὶ ὕδατος φύσιν, νοῦς δὲ ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ παρὰ σῶμα καὶ αἰσθησιν καὶ τὸν ἐρμηγέα λόγον.
 μήποτε μέντοι καὶ τὸ τέταρτον ἔτος “ ἅγιον καὶ αἰνετὸν ” ταύτης ἕνεκα τῆς αἰτίας ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς 34 ἀναγραφαῖς δηλοῦται· τὸ γὰρ ἐν τοῖς γεγονόσιν ἅγιον οὐρανὸς μὲν ἐστὶν ἐν κόσμῳ, καθ' ὃν αἱ ἄφθαρτοι καὶ μακραίωνες φύσεις περιπολοῦσιν, ἐν ἀνθρώπῳ δὲ νοῦς, ἀπόσπασμα θεῖον ὢν, καὶ μάλιστα κατὰ Μωυσέα λέγοντα· “ ἐνεφύσησεν εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ πνοὴν ζωῆς, καὶ ἐγένετο ὁ 35 ἄνθρωπος εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν.” καὶ ἑκάτερον δὲ αἰνετὸν οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ μοι δοκεῖ προσειρηθῆσαι· τὰ γὰρ δυνάμενα τοὺς ἐπαίνους καὶ ὕμνους καὶ εὐδαιμονισμοὺς ἐκτραγωδεῖν τοῦ γεννήσαντος πα-τρὸς ταῦτ' ἐστίν, οὐρανὸς τε καὶ νοῦς. ἄνθρωπος μὲν γὰρ ἐξαιρέτου παρὰ τὰ ἄλλα ζῶα γέρως ἔλαχε, θεραπεύειν τὸ ὄν, ὁ δὲ οὐρανὸς αἰεὶ μελωδεῖ, κατὰ τὰς κινήσεις τῶν ἐν ἑαυτῷ τὴν πάμμουσον ἀρμονίαν 36 ἀποτελῶν· ἥς εἰ συνέβαινε τὴν ἡχὴν εἰς τὰς ἡμετέρας φθάνειν ἀκοάς, ἔρωτες ἂν ἀκάθεκτοι καὶ λελυττηκότες ἡμεροὶ καὶ ἄπαστοι καὶ μανιώδεις |
 [626] ἐγίνοντο οἰστροὶ, ὡς καὶ τῶν ἀναγκαίων ἀπέχεσθαι

<sup>a</sup> i.e. for giving praise, as the sequel shews that Philo understood the word rather than “praiseworthy.” So also in his treatment of the same passage in De Plant. 117 ff., where, however, he quotes the text more correctly, “in the fourth year all its fruit shall be ἅγιος καὶ αἰνετός.”

ON DREAMS, I. 32-36

the head that the senses have their station, and it seems natural to them that they should be posted there, like bodyguards to some mighty monarch. Others contend pertinaciously for their conviction that the heart is the shrine in which it is carried. So 33 in every case it is the fourth of the series that is beyond comprehension. In the universe it is the heaven in contrast with the nature of air and earth and water ; in man it is mind over against the body, and sense-preception, and the speech which gives expression to thought. It may well be that it is for this reason that the fourth year is designated in the sacred documents " holy and for praise <sup>a</sup> " (Lev. xix. 24) ; for among created things, that which 34 is holy is, in the universe, the heavens, in which natures imperishable and enduring through long ages have their orbits ; in man it is mind, a fragment of the Deity, as the words of Moses in particular bear witness, " He breathed into his face a breath of life, and man became a living soul " (Gen. ii. 7). And 35 each of these appears to me to be correctly spoken of as " for praise." For it is in the heaven and in the mind that capacity resides to set forth in solemn strains hymns of praise and blessing in honour of the Father who is the author of our being. For man is the recipient of a privilege which gives him distinction beyond other living creatures, that, namely, of worshipping Him that is ; while the heaven is ever melodious, producing, as the heavenly bodies go 36 through their movements, the full and perfect harmony. If the sound of it ever reached our ears, there would be produced irrepressible yearnings, frantic longings, wild ceaseless passionate desires, compelling to abstain even from necessary food, for no longer

PHILO

- τρεφομένους μηκέθ' ὡς θνητοὶ σιτίοις καὶ ποτοῖς διὰ φάρυγγος, ἀλλ' ὡς οἱ μέλλοντες ἀπαθανατίζεσθαι δι' ὧτων μουσικῆς τελείας ἐνθέοις ὡδαῖς· ὧν ἀκροατὴν Μωυσῆν ἀσώματον γενόμενον λόγος ἔχει τεσσαράκοντα ἡμέρας καὶ τὰς ἴσας νύκτας μήτε ἄρτου μήτε ὕδατος ψαῦσαι τὸ παράπαν.
- 37 VII. ὁ τοίνυν οὐρανός, τὸ μουσικῆς ἀρχέτυπον ὄργανον, ἄκρως ἠρμόσθαι δοκεῖ δι' οὐδὲν ἕτερον ἢ ἵνα οἱ ἐπὶ τιμῇ τοῦ τῶν ὄλων πατρὸς ἀδόμοι ὕμνοι μουσικῶς ἐπιψάλλωνται. καὶ τὴν ἀρετὴν μέντοι Λεῖαν ἀκούομεν ἐπὶ τῆς τοῦ τετάρ-του γενέσεως υἱοῦ μηκέτι τίκτειν δυναμένην, ἀλλ' ἐπέχουσαν ἢ ἐπεχομένην τὰς γονάς· εὔρισκε γάρ, οἶμαι, πᾶσαν τὴν γένεσιν ἐξ αὐτῆς ξηράν τε καὶ στεῖραν, ἠνίκα Ἰούδαν, τὴν ἐξομολόγησιν, τὸν
- 38 τέλειον καρπὸν, ἠνθησε. διαφέρει δ' οὐδὲν τὸ λέγειν “ἴστασθαι τίκτουςαν” τοῦ μὴ εὐρίσκειν ἐν τῷ τετάρτῳ φρέατι τοὺς παῖδας Ἰσαὰκ ὕδωρ, ἐπειδήπερ ἐξ ἑκατέρου τῶν συμβόλων ἐμφαίνεται τὸ πάντα διψῆν θεοῦ, παρ' ὃν αἱ γενέσεις καὶ
- 39 τροφαὶ τοῖς γεγονόσιν ἄρδονται. μικροπολῖται μὲν οὖν τινες ἴσως ὑπολήφονται περὶ φρεάτων διορυχῆς τὸν τοσοῦτον εἶναι λόγον τῷ νομοθέτῃ, οἱ δὲ δὴ μείζονι ἐγγραφέντες πατρίδι, τῷδε τῷ κόσμῳ, τελειοτέρων φρονημάτων ὄντες,<sup>1</sup> εἴσονται σαφῶς, ὅτι περὶ τεττάρων ἐστίν, οὐ φρεάτων, ἀλλὰ τῶν τοῦ παντὸς μερῶν ἢ ζήτησις τοῖς ὀρατικοῖς καὶ φιλοθεάμοσι, γῆς, ὕδατος,

<sup>1</sup> This genitive of quality is doubtful Greek. Wend. suggests ἐπιλαχόντες.

ON DREAMS, I. 36-39

should we take in nourishment from meat and drink through the throat after the fashion of mortals, but, as beings awaiting immortality, from inspired strains of perfect melody coming to us through our ears. To such strains it is said that Moses was listening, when, having laid aside his body, for forty days and as many nights he touched neither bread nor water at all (Ex. xxiv. 18). VII. It seems, then, that the 37 heaven, the original archetype of all musical instruments, was tuned with consummate skill for no other purpose than that the hymns sung in honour of the Universal Father may have a musical accompaniment.

And further we hear of Leah or Virtue being no longer capable of bearing children after the birth of her fourth son. She stayed, or rather was stayed, from childbirth, for she found, I imagine, all giving birth on her part dried up and unproductive, when she had put forth the bloom of "Judah," or Confession of thankfulness, which is the perfect fruit. To say that she "stood still from bearing" (Gen. 38 xxix. 35) differs not at all from saying that the servants of Isaac found no water in the fourth well (Gen. xxvi. 32), since what is brought out by each of the figures is that all things are athirst for God, through Whom the birth of things, and their food when born, is watered into fruitfulness.

It may be 39 that men of narrow citizenship will suppose that the lawgiver delivers this very full discourse about digging wells, but those who are on the roll of a greater country, even this whole world, men of higher thought and feeling, will be quite sure that the four things propounded as a subject of inquiry to the open-eyed lovers of contemplation are not four wells, but the four parts of this universe, land, water, air, heavens.

PHILO

- 40 ἀέρος, οὐρανοῦ. ὧν ἕκαστον ἐπινοίαις εἰς ἄκρον πεποιημέναις<sup>1</sup> διεξεληθόντες ἐν μὲν τοῖς τρισὶν εὐρόν τινα καταληπτά—διὸ καὶ τρία ὀνόματα ἐπεφήμισαν τοῖς εὐρεθείσιν, ἀδικίαν, ἔχθραν, εὐρυχωρίαν,—ἐν δὲ τῷ τετάρτῳ τὸ παράπαν οὐδέν, οὐρανῶ, καθάπερ ὀλίγῳ πρότερον ἐδηλώσαμεν· τὸ γὰρ τέταρτον φρέαρ ἄνυδρον καὶ ξηρὸν εὐρίσκεται καὶ ὄρκος διὰ τὴν εἰρημένην αἰτίαν προσαγορεύεται.
- 41 VIII. Τὰ δὲ ἐπόμενα ζητήσωμεν ἐρευνῶντες, τίς ἢ Χαρρὰν καὶ διὰ τί ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ φρέατος ἐξεληθὼν εἰς αὐτὴν ἔρχεται. ἔστι τοίνυν, ὡς ἔμοιγε φαίνεται, Χαρρὰν μητρόπολις τις αἰσθήσεων. ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ τοτὲ μὲν ὀρυκτῆ, τοτὲ δὲ τρῶγλαι, δι' ἀμφοτέρων τῶν ὀνομάτων ἑνὸς δηλουμένου
- 42 πράγματος. τὸ γὰρ σῶμα ἡμῶν εἰς τὰ τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὄργανα τρόπον τινα ἐξορώρκεται, καὶ γέγονεν ἕκαστον τῶν ὀργάνων ἐκάστης ὀπῆ τις [627] αἰσθήσεως, ἐν ἣ πέφυκε φωλεύειν. | ὅταν οὖν τις ἀπὸ τοῦ φρέατος, ὃ καλεῖται ὄρκος, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ λιμένος ἐξαναχθῆ, παραγίνεται εὐθύς εἰς Χαρρὰν ἀναγκαίως· τὸν γὰρ ἀποδημίαν στελλόμενον ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀορίστου<sup>2</sup> καὶ ἀπειρομεγέθους ἐπιστήμης χωρίου κατ' ἀναγκαῖον αἰσθήσεις ἄνευ ξεναγῶν ὑποδέχον-
- 43 ται. κινεῖται γὰρ ἡμῶν ἢ ψυχὴ πολλάκις μὲν ἐφ' ἑαυτῆς, ὅλον τὸν σωματικὸν ὄγκον ἐκδύσα καὶ τὸν τῶν αἰσθήσεων ὄχλον ἀποδρᾶσα, πολλάκις δὲ καὶ ταῦτα ἐπαμμισχομένη. τὴν μὲν οὖν γυμνὴν κίνησιν

<sup>1</sup> So mss. and Wend. : Mangey πεπονημέναις.

<sup>2</sup> So Mangey : mss. and Wend. ἀρίστου.

---

<sup>a</sup> That Philo takes the trouble to record these three names suggests that he attaches some allegorical meaning to them. Possibly remembering that in the narrative the

ON DREAMS, I. 40-43

On each of these they bring to bear powers of 40 thought of finest perfection, and find in three of them certain things within their comprehension, and to these discoveries of theirs they give three names, "injustice," "enmity," "spaciousness"<sup>a</sup> (Gen. xxvi. 20 ff.). In the fourth, the heavens, as we pointed out not long ago, they find nothing whatever comprehensible. For the fourth well is found to be dry and waterless, and is entitled "oath" for the reason which has been mentioned.

VIII. Let us now examine the following context, 41 and inquire what Haran is and why one who goes away from the well comes to it (Gen. xxviii. 10). Haran is, then, as it seems to me, a sort of mother-city of the senses. For it is rendered sometimes "dug," sometimes "holes," one thing being signified by both words. For our body has after a fashion 42 been dug out to make places for the organs of the senses, and each of the organs has been constituted a kind of "dug-out" of each sense, which nature provides for its lair. Whenever, therefore, a man has put out from the well which is called "Oath," as it were from a port, of necessity he forthwith arrives<sup>b</sup> at Haran. For the man who sets forth on a journey from the place of knowledge, boundless and illimitable in its vastness, needs no escorting guides, but is without fail received by the senses. For our 43 soul moves often by itself, stripping itself of the entire encumbrance of the body and escaping from the noisy pack of the senses, and often again when clad in these wrappings. What is apprehensible first two record the quarrels over the wells, he means that land and sea are the scene of human strife. The name of "spaciousness" fits air quite well.

<sup>b</sup> See on § 5 above.

PHILO

αὐτῆς τὰ νοήσει μόνη καταληπτὰ ἔλαχε, τὴν δὲ 44 μετὰ σώματος τὰ αἰσθητά. εἴ τις οὖν ὁμιλεῖν εἰσάπαν ἀδυνατεῖ διανοία μόνη, δευτέραν καταφυγὴν αἰσθησιν εὐρίσκεται, καὶ ὅστις ἂν σφαλῆ τῶν νοητῶν, αὐτίκα πρὸς τὰ αἰσθητά κατασύρεται· δεύτερος γὰρ αἰεὶ πλοῦς ὁ πρὸς αἰσθησιν τοῖς μὴ δυνηθεῖσι πρὸς τὸν ἡγεμόνα νοῦν εὐπλοῆσαι.
 45 καλὸν δὲ καὶ τούτῳ γενομένους μὴ καταγηράσαι καὶ διαιωνίσαι, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐν ξένη διατρίβοντας παροίκων τρόπον αἰεὶ μετανάστασιν ζητεῖν καὶ ἐπάνοδον εἰς τὴν πατρίαν γῆν. Λάβαν μὲν γὰρ οὐκ εἶδος, οὐ γένος, οὐκ ἰδέαν, οὐκ ἐννόημα, οὐκ ἄλλο τῶν νοήσει μόνη καταλαμβανομένων οὐδὲν ἀπλῶς εἰδώς, ἡρτημένος δὲ τῶν ἐμφανῶν, ἅπερ εἰς ὄψεις καὶ ἀκοὰς καὶ τὰς συγ-γενεῖς δυνάμεις ἔρχεται, πατρίδος ἡξίωται Χαρράν, ἣν ὡς ξένην ὁ φιλάρετος Ἰακώβ πρὸς ὀλίγον οἰκεῖ 46 χρόνον, τῆς οἴκαδε ἐπανόδου διαμεμνημένος. φησὶ γοῦν ἢ μήτηρ, ἢ ὑπομονή, Ῥεβέκκα πρὸς αὐτόν· “ἀναστὰς ἀπόδραθι πρὸς Λάβαν τὸν ἀδελφόν μου εἰς Χαρράν, καὶ οἴκησον μετ' αὐτοῦ ἡμέρας τινάς.” ἄρα οὖν κατανοεῖς, ὅτι οὐχ ὑπομένει ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἐν τῇ χώρα τῶν αἰσθήσεων καταβιῶναι, ἀλλ' ἡμέρας ὀλίγας καὶ βραχύν τινα χρόνον διὰ τὰς τοῦ συνδέτου σώματος ἀνάγκας,<sup>1</sup> ὁ δὲ μακρὸς αἰὼν αὐτῷ καὶ βίος ἐν τῇ νοητῇ πόλει ταμιεύεται;

<sup>1</sup> Wend. suggests the addition of παροικεῖ, but βιῶναι can easily be understood out of καταβιῶναι.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 597.

ON DREAMS, I. 43-46

by intellect only is the lot of its unclad movement, while to that accompanied by the body fall the objects of sense-perception. If therefore a man is absolutely incapable of holding intercourse with the understanding by itself, he wins in sense-perception a second-best refuge, and a man who has been balked of the things of the intellect is forthwith swept down to those of sense-perception. For those who have failed to make a good voyage under the sails of the sovereign mind can always fall back upon the oars of sense-perception.<sup>a</sup>

But it is an excellent course even when you have fallen into this plight not to grow old and live your life in it, but feeling that you are spending your days in a foreign country as sojourners to be ever seeking for removal and return to the land of your fathers. For it is Laban, a man without knowledge of species or genus or archetypal form, or conception or of any whatever of the objects of solely intellectual apprehension, but dependent wholly on things patent and palpable, which are cognizable by seeing and hearing and the powers akin to them,—he it is that has been deemed worthy of having Haran for his country, in which Jacob the lover of virtue dwells as in a foreign land for a little while, with his mind ever set on the return to his home. We recognize this in the words spoken to him by Rebecca, or Patience, his mother: “Be up and off,” she says, “to Haran to my brother Laban, and dwell with him for some days” (Gen. xxvii. 43 f.). Do you mark, then, that the Practiser does not brook to spend a lifetime in the territory of the senses, but a few days and a short time in compliance with the necessities of the body to which he is tied, but that it is in the city discerned by the intellect that a life-long

PHILO

- 47 IX. παρό μοι δοκεῖ καὶ ὁ πάππος αὐτοῦ τῆς ἐπιστήμης, Ἀβραὰμ ὄνομα, μὴ πολὺν χρόνον ὑπομεῖναι τῇ Χαρρὰν ἐνδιατρίψαι. λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “Ἀβραὰμ ἦν ἐτῶν ἑβδομήκοντα πέντε, ὅτε ἐξῆλθεν ἐκ Χαρρὰν,” καίτοι τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ Θάρρα, ὃς ἐρμηνεύεται κατασκοπὴ ὄσμης, μέχρι τελευτῆς
- 48 ἐν αὐτῇ βιώσαντος. ῥητῶς γοῦν ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς
 [628] ἀναγραφαῖς | δηλοῦται, ὅτι “ἀπέθανε Θάρρα ἐν Χαρρὰν”· κατάσκοπος γὰρ ἦν ἀρετῆς, οὐ πολίτης, καὶ ὄσμαῖς ἀλλ’ οὐ τροφῶν ἀπολαύσεσιν ἐχρήτο, μήπω ἱκανὸς ὦν ἐμπίπλασθαι φρονήσεως, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ γεύεσθαι, τοῦτο δ’ αὐτὸ μόνον ὀσφραίνεσθαι.
- 49 καθάπερ γὰρ τοὺς θηρατικούς τῶν σκυλάκων λόγος ἔχει καὶ τὰ πορρωτάτω τῶν θηρίων πτώματα ῥινηλατοῦντας ἀνευρίσκειν ἠκονημένους ὑπὸ φύσεως διαφερόντως τὴν περὶ τὰς ὄσμας αἴσθησιν, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον τὴν ἀπὸ δικαιοσύνης καὶ τῆς ἄλλης ἀρετῆς ἀναδιδομένην ἠδέϊαν αὔραν ὁ παιδείας ἐραστῆς ἰχνηλατεῖ καὶ ποθεῖ μὲν ἐκείναις ἐντυχεῖν, ἐξ ὧν ἀναδίδονται τὸ θαυμασιώτατον γάνωμα τοῦτο, μὴ δυνάμενος δ’ ἐν κύκλῳ κενὴν περιάγει τὴν κεφαλὴν, ὀσφραϊνόμενος αὐτὸ μόνον καλοκάγαθίας [καὶ]<sup>1</sup> σιτίων ἱερωτάτης κνίσσης· οὐ γὰρ ἀρνεῖται
- 50 λίχνος ἐπιστήμης καὶ φρονήσεως εἶναι. μακάριοι μὲν οὖν οἷς ἐξεγένετο τῶν σοφίας φίλτρων ἀπόνασθαι καὶ τῶν θεωρημάτων καὶ δογμάτων αὐτῆς ἐστιαθῆναι καὶ ἐνευφρανθεῖσιν<sup>2</sup> ἔτι διψῆν, ἄπληστον

<sup>1</sup> [καὶ]: so Wend. suggests (or as an alternative ἀρετῶν for σιτίων), though he retains καὶ in the text.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. ἀνευφρανθεῖσιν.

<sup>a</sup> See notes on Quod Deus 92 and De Sac. 43; see further, App. pp. 597 f.

enduring is in store for him ? IX. Owing 47 to this, as it seems to me, the grandfather also of his knowledge,<sup>a</sup> called Abraham, did not brook a prolonged stay in Haran. For we read " Abraham was seventy-five years old when he went forth from Haran " (Gen. xii. 4), although his father lived there until his death. His father's name was " Terah," which means " scent-exploring." Thus it is expressed in plain 48 words in the sacred records that " Terah died in Haran " (Gen. xi. 32) : for he was there as a spy or explorer of virtue, not as a holder of its franchise, and he had recourse to scents, not to enjoyment of nourishing foods, not being capable as yet of being filled with sound sense, nay, not even of tasting it, but simply and solely of smelling it. For just as we are told that 49 hounds used in the chase have by nature the sense of smell especially keen, so that by following the scent they can track out and find the dead bodies of wild animals at the greatest distance, in the same way does the man who is enamoured of discipline follow the path of the sweet effluvium given forth by justice and other virtues. Fain would he reach them, so wondrously delicious is the fragrance they give forth, but since he cannot, he turns his baffled<sup>b</sup> head this way and that, and snuffs, for he can do no more, at the exhalation of nobility, the holiest of meats<sup>c</sup> : for he does not deny that he is greedy of knowledge and sound sense. Blessed indeed are those to whom it is granted 50 to have joy of the love-charms of wisdom, and to banquet on the truths she has discovered, and after revelling in these delights still to be athirst, bringing

<sup>b</sup> Or " unfed," i.e. the mouth is empty.

<sup>c</sup> Or ιερωτάτης may agree with κνίσσης " the holiest exhalation of the viands of nobility."

PHILO

- καὶ ἀκόρεστον ἐπιφερομένοις ἡμερον ἐπιστήμης.
- 51 δεύτερα δ' οἴσονται, οἷς ἀπολαῦσαι μὲν οὐκ ἔξεγένετο τῆς ἱερᾶς τραπέζης, κνισσοῦν δὲ τὰς ἑαυτῶν ψυχάς· αὔραις γὰρ ἀρετῆς οὗτοι ζωπυρηθήσονται, καθάπερ τῶν καμνόντων οἱ παρειμένοι διὰ τὸ μὴ δύνασθαι τροφῇ χρῆσθαι τὰς εἰς ἀνάληψιν προσφέρονται ὀσμάς, ἃς ἰατρῶν παῖδες λιποθυμίας ἄκη
- 52 σωτήρια προευτρεπίζονται. X. κατα-λιπῶν μέντοι τὴν Χαλδαίαν γῆν εἰς Χαρρὰν λέγεται μετανίστασθαι Θάρρα, τὸν τε υἱὸν Ἀβραὰμ καὶ τοὺς ὁμογνίους<sup>1</sup> τῆς οἰκίας ἐπαγόμενος, οὐχ ἴν' ὡς παρὰ συγγραφέως ἱστορικοῦ μάθωμεν, ὅτι μετανάσται τινὲς ἐγένοντο, τὴν μὲν πατρῶαν γῆν καταλιπόντες, τὴν δὲ ξένην ὡς πατρίδα οἰκήσαντες, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ τοῦ μάθημα βιωφελέστατον καὶ ἀρμόττον
- 53 ἀνθρώπῳ μὴ ἀμεληθῆναι. τί δὲ τοῦτό ἐστι; Χαλδαῖοι μὲν ἀστρονομοῦσιν, οἱ δὲ τῆς Χαρρὰν πολῖται περὶ τὸν τῶν αἰσθήσεων τόπον πραγ-ματεύονται. φησὶν οὖν ὁ ἱερὸς λόγος τῷ κατασκόπῳ τῶν τῆς φύσεως πραγμάτων· τί περὶ ἡλίου ζητεῖς, εἰ ποδιαῖός ἐστιν, εἰ τῆς γῆς μείζων ἀπάσης, εἰ πολλαπλάσιος αὐτῆς; τί δὲ περὶ φωτισμῶν σελήνης, εἰ νόθον ἔχει φέγγος, εἰ γνησίῳ μόνῳ χρῆται; τί δὲ περὶ τῆς τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων φύσεως ἢ περιφορᾶς ἢ συμπαθείας πρὸς τε ἀλλήλους καὶ
- 54 τὰπίγεια; τί δὲ βαίνων ἐπὶ γῆς ὑπὲρ νεφέλας πηδᾶς; τί δ' ἄπτεσθαι τῶν ἐν αἰθέρι φῆς δύνασθαι

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ὁμογνώμονας.

<sup>a</sup> Or "topic." The word probably carries both senses.

<sup>b</sup> See App. p. 598.

ON DREAMS, I. 50-54

a craving for knowledge which knows no fullness nor satiety. But those will carry off the second prize, to 51 whom it was given not indeed to win enjoyment of the holy table but to fill their souls with the steam of its viands: for these will be quickened and enkindled with breaths of virtue, even as invalids, who are enfeebled because they cannot take nourishment, inhale the reviving preparations which the schools of physicians make up and have ready as effective remedies for faintness.

X. The informa- 52
tion that Terah left the land of Chaldaea and migrated to Haran, taking with him his son Abraham and his kindred, is given us not with the object that we may learn as from a writer of history, that certain people became emigrants, leaving the land of their ancestors, and making a foreign land their home and country, but that a lesson well suited to man and of great service to human life may not be neglected. What 53 is this lesson? The Chaldaeans are astronomers, while the citizens of Haran busy themselves with the place<sup>a</sup> of the senses. Accordingly Holy Writ addresses to the explorer of the facts of nature certain questions—"Why do you carry on investigations about the sun, as to whether it is a foot indiameter,<sup>b</sup> whether it is larger than the whole earth, whether it is many times its size<sup>b</sup>? And about the illuminations of the moon, whether it has a borrowed light, or whether it employs one entirely its own? And why do you search into the nature of the other heavenly bodies, or into their revolutions or the ways in which they affect each other and affect earthly things? And 54 why, treading as you do on earth, do you leap over the clouds? And why do you say that you are able to lay hold of what is in the upper air, when προσερριζωμένος χέρσω; τί δὲ περὶ τῶν ἀτεκμάρ-των τεκμαίρεσθαι τολμᾶς; τί δὲ πολυπραγμονεῖς ἂ μὴ σε δεῖ, τὰ μετέωρα; τί δὲ τὴν ἐν τοῖς μαθήμασιν εὐρεσιλογίαν ἄχρῖς οὐρανοῦ τείνεις; τί [629] δ' ἀστρονομεῖς μετεωρολεσχῶν; | μὴ τὰ ὑπὲρ σέ καὶ ἄνω, ὧ οὗτος, ἀλλὰ τὰ ἐγγὺς σαυτοῦ κατα-νόησον, μᾶλλον δὲ σαυτὸν ἀκολακεύτως ἐρευνήσον.

PHILO

55 πῶς οὖν ἐρευνήσεις; ἴθι νοερῶς εἰς Χαρρὰν τὴν ὀρυκτὴν, τὰς τρώγλας καὶ ὀπάς τοῦ σώματος, καὶ ἐπίσκεψαι ὀφθαλμούς, ὄτα, ῥίνας, τὰ ἄλλα ὅσα καὶ αἰσθήσεως ὄργανα, καὶ φιλο-σόφησον ἀναγκαιοτάτην καὶ πρεπωδεστάτην φιλο-σοφίαν ἀνθρώπων, ζητῶν, τί ὄρασις, τί ἀκοή, τί γεῦσις, τί ὄσφρησις, τί ἀφή, τί καὶ συνόλως αἰσθησις· κἄπειτα τί τὸ ὄραν καὶ πῶς ὄρας, τί τὸ ἀκούειν καὶ πῶς ἀκούεις, τί τὸ ὀσφραίνεσθαι ἢ γεύεσθαι ἢ ἄπτεσθαι καὶ πῶς ἕκαστον αὐτῶν 56 εἴωθε γίνεσθαι. πρὶν δὲ τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον καλῶς ἐπεσκεφέθαι, τὸν τοῦ παντός ἐξετάζειν οὐχ ὑπερβολὴ μανίας; καὶ οὕτω σοι μείζον ἐπίταγμα ἐπι-τάττω, τὴν σαυτοῦ ψυχὴν ἰδεῖν καὶ τὸν νοῦν, ἐφ' ὧ μέγα φρονεῖς· καταλαβεῖν γὰρ αὐτὸν οὐποτε 57 δυνήσῃ. ἀνάβαινε νῦν εἰς οὐρανὸν καὶ καταλαζονεῦου περὶ τῶν ἐκεῖ, μήπω δεδυνημένος γινῶναι κατὰ τὸ ποιητικὸν γράμμα ὅττι τοι ἐν μεγάροισι κακόν τ' ἀγαθόν τε τέτυκται,

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 598.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. while the Haran-life is primarily the exploration of the senses, it does include the exploration of mind (Terah or Socrates) as opposed to the practising (Abraham), which will lead to the highest spiritual knowledge. It is, however, a later stage, and this is signified by οὕτω. So also in De Mig., particularly § 185.

ON DREAMS, I. 54-57

you are rooted to the ground? Why do you venture to determine the indeterminate? And why are you so busy with what you ought to leave alone, the things above? And why do you extend even to the heavens your learned ingenuity? Why do you take up astronomy and pay such full and minute attention to the higher regions? Mark, my friend, not what is above and beyond your reach but what is close to yourself,<sup>a</sup> or rather make yourself the object of your impartial scrutiny. What form, then, will 55 your scrutiny take? Go in spirit to Haran, 'excavated' land, the openings and cavities of the body, and hold an inspection of eyes, ears, nostrils, and the other organs of sense, and engage in a course of philosophy most vital and most fitting to a human being. Try to find out what sight is, what hearing is, what taste, smell, touch are: in a word what sense-perception is. Next, ask what it is to see and how you see, what it is to hear and how you hear, what it is to smell or taste or handle, and how each function is habitually performed. But before you have made 56 a thorough investigation into your own tenement, is it not an excess of madness to examine that of the universe? And there is a weightier charge which I do not as yet lay upon you,<sup>b</sup> namely to see your own soul and the mind of which you think so proudly: I say 'see,' for to comprehend it you will never be able. Go to! Mount to heaven and brag of what 57 you see there, you who have not yet attained to the knowledge of that of which the poet speaks in the line

All that existeth of good and of ill in the halls of thy homestead."<sup>c</sup>

<sup>c</sup> Od. iv. 392. See App. p. 598.

PHILO

καταγαγών δ' ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ τὸν κατάσκοπον καὶ ἀντισπάσας ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκεῖ ζητήσεως γνώθι<sup>1</sup> σαυτὸν, εἶτα καὶ τοῦτ' ἐπιμελῶς ἐκπόνησον, ἵνα τῆς ἀν-58 θρωπίνης εὐδαιμονίας ἐπιλάβῃς. τὸν τρόπον τοῦ-τον Θάρρα μὲν Ἑβραῖοι, Σωκράτην δὲ Ἑλληνες ὀνομάζουσι· καὶ γὰρ ἐκείνον ἐγγηράσαι φασὶν τῇ περὶ τοῦ γνώθι σαυτὸν ἀκριβεστάτῃ σκέψει, μηδὲν ἔξω τῶν καθ' ἑαυτὸν φιλοσοφοῦντα. ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἄνθρωπος ἦν, Θάρρα δ' αὐτὸς ὁ λόγος ὁ περὶ τοῦ γνώναί τινα ἑαυτὸν προκείμενος οἶα δένδρον εὐ-ερνέστατον, ἵν' ἔχοιεν εὐμαρῶς οἱ φιλάρετοι τὸν περὶ ἡθοποιίαν δρεπόμενοι καρπὸν σωτηρίου καὶ ἡδίστης 59 ἐμπίπλασθαι τροφῆς. τοιοῦτοι μὲν ἡμῖν οἱ φρονήσεως κατάσκοποι, τῶν δὲ ἀθλητῶν καὶ ἀγωνιστῶν αὐτῆς αἱ φύσεις τελειότεραι· δικαιοῦσι γὰρ οὗτοι τὸν περὶ τῶν αἰσθήσεων σύμπαντα λόγον ἀκριβῶς καταμαθόντες ἐπὶ τι μείζον ἕτερον χωρεῖν θεώρημα, καταλιπόντες τὰς αἰσθήσεως ὁπὰς, αἱ 60 Χαρρὰν ὀνομάζονται. τούτων ἐστὶν ὁ ἐπιδόσεις καὶ βελτιώσεις πρὸς ἐπιστήμης ἄκρας ἀνάληψιν ἐσχηκῶς Ἀβραάμ· ὅτε γὰρ μάλιστα ἔγνω, τότε μάλιστα ἀπέγνω ἑαυτὸν, ἵνα τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ὄντος εἰς ἀκριβῆ γνώσιν ἔλθῃ. καὶ πέφυκεν οὕτως ἔχειν· ὁ λίαν καταλαβὼν ἑαυτὸν λίαν ἀπέγνωκε τὴν

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read <τὸ> γνώθι.

<sup>a</sup> Or as Mangey, "drawing away the explorer . . . know thyself." For further discussion of the whole passage see App. pp. 598 f.

But bring the explorer down from heaven and away from these researches draw the "Know thyself,"<sup>a</sup> and then lavish the same careful toil on this too, in order that you may enjoy the happiness proper to man. This character Hebrews call "Terah,"<sup>58</sup> Greeks "Socrates." For they say that "Know thyself" was likewise the theme of life-long pondering to Socrates, and that his philosophy was concerned exclusively with his own self. Socrates, however, was a human being, while Terah was self-knowledge itself, a way of thinking set before us as a tree of great luxuriance, to the end that lovers of virtue might find it easy, as they pluck the fruit of moral knowledge, to take their fill of nourishment saving and most sweet.

Such do we find <sup>59</sup> those to be whose part it is to explore good sense : but more perfect than theirs is the nature with which those are endowed who train themselves to engage in the contest for it. These, when they have thoroughly learned in all its details the whole study of the sense-perceptions, claim it as their prerogative to advance to some other greater object of contemplation, leaving behind them those lurking-places of sense-perception, to which the name of Haran is given. Among these <sup>60</sup> is Abraham who gained much progress and improvement towards the acquisition of the highest knowledge : for when most he knew himself, then most did he despair <sup>b</sup> of himself, in order that he might attain to an exact knowledge of Him Who in reality is. And this is nature's law : he who has thoroughly comprehended himself, thoroughly despairs of him-

<sup>b</sup> The play on  $\xi\gamma\nu\omega$  )(  $\acute{\alpha}\pi\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\nu\omega$  is unavoidably lost in the English.

PHILO

[630] ἐν πᾶσι τοῦ | γενητοῦ σαφῶς προλαβὼν οὐδένεϊαν, ὁ δ' ἀπογνοὺς ἑαυτὸν γινώσκει τὸν ὄντα.

61 XI. Τίς μὲν οὖν ἐστὶν ἡ Χαρρὰν καὶ διὰ τί ὁ ἀπολείπων τὸ τοῦ ὄρκου φρέαρ εἰς αὐτὴν ἔρχεται, δεδήλωται. σκεπτέον δὲ τὸ τρίτον καὶ ἀκόλουθον, τίς ὁ τόπος, ᾧ ὑπαντᾷ· λέγεται γάρ, ὅτι “ἀπ-62 ἦντησε τόπῳ.” τριχῶς δὲ ἐπινοεῖται τόπος, ἅπαξ μὲν χώρα ὑπὸ σώματος πεπληρωμένη, κατὰ δεύ-τερον δὲ τρόπον ὁ θεῖος λόγος, ὃν ἐκπεπλήρωκεν ὄλον δι’ ὄλων ἀσωμάτοις δυνάμεσιν αὐτὸς ὁ θεός.
“εἶδον” γάρ φησι “τὸν τόπον οὐ εἰστήκει ὁ θεὸς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ,” ἐν ᾧ μόνῳ καὶ ἱεουργεῖν ἐφήκεν ἀλλαχόθι κωλύσας· διείρηται γὰρ ἀναβαίνειν εἰς τὸν τόπον, ὃν ἂν ἐκλέξηται κύριος ὁ θεός, κακεῖ θύειν τὰ ὀλοκαυτώματα καὶ τὰ σωτήρια καὶ τὰς ἄλλας ἀμώμους θυσίας ἀνάγειν.

63 κατὰ δὲ τρίτον σημαινόμενον αὐτὸς ὁ θεὸς καλεῖται τόπος τῷ περιέχειν μὲν τὰ ὅλα, περιέχεσθαι δὲ πρὸς μηδενὸς ἀπλῶς, καὶ τῷ καταφυγῆν τῶν συμπάντων αὐτὸν εἶναι, καὶ ἐπειδήπερ αὐτὸς ἐστὶ χώρα ἑαυτοῦ, κευρωτικῶς ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἐμφερόμενος 64 μόνῳ ἑαυτῷ. ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν οὐκ εἶμι τόπος, ἀλλ’ ἐν τόπῳ, καὶ ἕκαστον τῶν ὄντων ὁμοίως· τὸ γὰρ περιεχόμενον διαφέρει τοῦ περιέχοντος, τὸ δὲ θεῖον ὑπ’ οὐδενὸς περιεχόμενον ἀναγκαίως ἐστὶν αὐτὸ τόπος ἑαυτοῦ. μαρτυρεῖ δέ μοι λόγιον τὸ χρησθὲν ἐπὶ Ἀβραὰμ τότε· “ἦλθεν εἰς τὸν

---

* Cf. De Conf. 96 and note.

ON DREAMS, I. 60-64

self, having as a step to this ascertained the nothingness in all respects of created being. And the man who has despaired of himself is beginning to know Him that is.

XI. What Haran is and why the man who leaves 61 the Well of the Oath comes to it, has been made evident. We must consider the point which naturally comes next, our third point, namely what the place is which he lights upon or meets, for we read "he met a place" (Gen. xxviii. 11). Now "place" has a 62 threefold meaning, firstly that of a space filled by a material form, secondly that of the Divine Word, which God Himself has completely filled throughout with incorporeal potencies; for "they saw," says Moses, "the place where the God of Israel stood" (Ex. xxiv. 10).<sup>a</sup> Only in this place did he permit them to sacrifice, forbidding them to do so elsewhere: for they were expressly bidden to go up "to the place which the Lord God shall choose" (Deut. xii. 5), and there to sacrifice "the whole burnt offerings and the peace offerings" (Ex. xx. 24) and to offer the other pure sacrifices.

There is a third 63 signification, in keeping with which God Himself is called a place, by reason of His containing things, and being contained by nothing whatever, and being a place for all to flee into, and because He is Himself the space which holds Him; for He is that which He Himself has occupied, and naught encloses Him but Himself. I, mark you, am not a place, but in a place; 64 and each thing likewise that exists; for that which is contained is different from that which contains it, and the Deity, being contained by nothing, is of necessity Itself Its own place.

Witness is borne to what I am saying by this oracle delivered in Abraham's

PHILO

τόπον ὃν εἶπεν αὐτῷ ὁ θεός· καὶ ἀναβλέψας τοῖς 65 ὀφθαλμοῖς εἶδε τὸν τόπον μακρόθεν.” ὁ ἔλθων εἰς τὸν τόπον, εἶπέ μοι, μακρόθεν αὐτὸν εἶδεν; ἀλλὰ μήποτε δυεῖν πραγμάτων ἐστὶν ὁμωνυμία διαφερόντων, ὧν τὸ μὲν ἕτερον θεῖός ἐστι λόγος, τὸ 66 δὲ ἕτερον ὁ πρὸ τοῦ λόγου θεός. ὁ δὴ ξεναγηθεὶς ὑπὸ σοφίας εἰς τὸν πρότερον ἀφικνεῖται τόπον, εὐράμενος τῆς ἀρεσκείας κεφαλὴν καὶ τέλος τὸν θεῖον λόγον, ἐν ᾧ γενόμενος οὐ φθάνει πρὸς τὸν κατὰ τὸ εἶναι θεὸν ἐλθεῖν, ἀλλ’ αὐτὸν ὄρα μακρόθεν· μᾶλλον δὲ οὐδὲ πόρρωθεν αὐτὸν ἐκείνον θεωρεῖν ἰκανός ἐστιν, ἀλλὰ τὸ μακρὰν τὸν θεὸν εἶναι πάσης γενέσεως αὐτὸ μόνον ὄρα καὶ τὸ πορρωτάτω τὴν κατάληψιν αὐτοῦ πάσης ἀνθρωπίνης διανοίας δι-67 ωκίσθαι. μήποτε μέντοι γε οὐδὲ τόπον νῦν ἀλλη-γορῶν ἐπὶ τοῦ αἰτίου παρείληφεν, ἀλλ’ ἔστι τὸ δηλούμενον τοιοῦτον· “ἦλθεν εἰς τὸν τόπον, καὶ ἀναβλέψας τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς εἶδεν” αὐτὸν τὸν τόπον, εἰς ὃν ἦλθε, μακρὰν ὄντα τοῦ ἀκατονομάστου καὶ 68 ἀρρήτου καὶ κατὰ πάσας ἰδέας ἀκαταλήπτου θεοῦ.
 [631] XII. | Τούτων προδιωρισμένων, ὅταν εἰς Χαρράν, τὴν αἴσθησιν, ἔλθῃ ὁ ἀσκητής, “ὑπαντᾷ τόπῳ,” οὔτε τῷ ἐκπεπληρωμένῳ ὑπὸ σώματος θνητοῦ—μετέχουσι γὰρ αὐτοῦ πάντες οἱ γηγενεῖς ἐκπεπληρωκότες χώραν καὶ τόπον τινὰ κατὰ τὰναγκαῖον ἐπἔχοντες—οὔτε τῷ τρίτῳ καὶ ἀρίστῳ, οὐ μὲν ἔννοιαν λαβεῖν ἦν ἂν ἐπὶ τοῦ φρέατος ποιούμενον τὰς δια-

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Post. 17 f.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. the second τόπος as well as the first may indicate the Logos, if μακρόθεν be taken as meaning “afar” rather than “from afar.”

ON DREAMS, I. 64-68

case : “ He came to the place of which God had told him : and lifting up his eyes he saw the place from afar ” (Gen. xxii. 3 f.).<sup>a</sup> Tell me, pray, did he who 65 had come to the place see it from afar ? Nay, it would seem that one and the same word is used of two different things : one of these is a divine Word, the other God Who was before the Word. One who has 66 come from abroad under Wisdom’s guidance arrives at the former place, thus attaining in the divine word the sum and consummation of service. But when he has his place in the divine Word he does not actually reach Him Who is in very essence God, but sees Him from afar : or rather, not even from a distance is he capable of contemplating Him ; all he sees is the bare fact that God is far away from all Creation, and that the apprehension of Him is removed to a very great distance from all human power of thought. Nay, it may be that neither in this part of the text <sup>b</sup> 67 does the lawgiver use “ place ” as a figurative description of the First Cause, but that what is signified is something like this : “ he came to the place and looked up and saw with his eyes ” the place itself to which he had come, that it was a long way off from God for Whom no name nor utterance nor conception of any sort is adequate.

XII. Having laid down these preliminary defini- 68 tions, we resume our story. When the Practiser comes to Haran, or Sense-perception, he “ meets a place.” This “ place ” is not that filled by a mortal body, for of that all earth-born men have their share, for they have filled a space and occupy of necessity some place. Nor is it that best one, the third named above, of which it would hardly have been possible for him to form a conception by dwelling at the well

PHILO

τριβάς, ὃ προσηγορεύετο ὄρκος, ᾧ τὸ αὐτομαθὲς γένος, Ἰσαάκ, ἐνδιδαιτᾶται μηδέποτε τῆς πρὸς θεὸν πίστεως καὶ ἀφανοῦς ὑπολήψεως ἀφιστάμενον, ἀλλὰ τῷ μέσῳ λόγῳ θείῳ, τὰ ἄριστα ὑφηγουμένῳ καὶ 69 ὅσα πρόσφορα τοῖς καιροῖς ἀναδιδάσκοντι. οὐ γὰρ ἀξιῶν<sup>1</sup> ὁ θεὸς εἰς αἴσθησιν ἔρχεσθαι τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ λόγους ἐπικουρίας ἕνεκα τῶν φιλαρέτων ἀποστέλλει· οἱ δ' ἰατροῦνσι καὶ ἐκνοσηλεύουσι τὰ ψυχῆς ἀρρω-στήματα, παραινέσεις ἱεράς ὡσπερ νόμους ἀκινήτους τιθέντες καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ τούτων γυμνάσια καλοῦντες καὶ τρόπον ἀλειπτῶν ἰσχὺν καὶ δύναμιν καὶ ῥώμην 70 ἀνανταγώνιστον ἐμφύοντες. δεόντως οὖν εἰς αἴ-σθησιν ἐλθὼν οὐκέτι θεῷ, λόγῳ δ' ὑπαντᾷ θεοῦ, καθὰ καὶ ὁ πάππος αὐτοῦ τῆς σοφίας Ἀβραάμ. λέγεται γάρ· “ ἀπῆλθε κύριος, ὡς ἐπαύσατο λαλῶν τῷ Ἀβραάμ, καὶ Ἀβραάμ ἀπέστρεψεν εἰς τὸν τόπον αὐτοῦ”· δι' οὗ συνάγεται τὸ λόγοις τοιούτοις ἐντυγχάνειν ἱεροῖς, ὧν ὁ πρὸ τῶν ὄλων θεὸς ἀπἤλλακται, μηκέτι τὰς ἀφ' αὐτοῦ τείνων φαντασίας, ἀλλὰ τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν μεθ' αὐτὸν δυνάμεων.
 71 ὑπερφυέστατα δ' ἔχει τὸ μὴ φάναι ἐλθεῖν εἰς τὸν τόπον, ἀλλ' ἀπαντῆσαι τόπῳ· ἐκούσιον μὲν γὰρ τὸ ἔρχεσθαι, τὸ δ' ἀπαντᾶν πολλάκις ἀκούσιον, ἢ ἐξαπιναιῶς ὁ θεῖος λόγος ἐπιφαινόμενος ἀπροσ-δόκητον χαρὰν ἐλπίδος μείζονα ἐρήμη ψυχῇ συνοδοι-

<sup>1</sup> MSS. ἀπαξιῶν.

<sup>a</sup> The thought is not very clear. Perhaps “even if he had remained in that higher region, which is the permanent home of the Isaac-soul, he could scarcely (or perhaps “only with difficulty”) have reached the apprehension of the divine, which even Isaac saw only dimly.”

ON DREAMS, I. 68-71

called "Oath," where Isaac has his abode, the self-taught nature that never desists from faith toward God and dim conception of Him.<sup>a</sup> No: the "place" on which he "lights" is the place in the middle sense, the Word of God, shewing, as it does, the way to the things that are best, teaching, as it does, such lessons as the varying occasions require. For 69 God, not deeming it meet that sense should perceive Him, sends forth His Words to succour the lovers of virtue, and they act as physicians of the soul and completely heal its infirmities, giving holy exhortations with all the force of irreversible enactments, and calling to the exercise and practice of these and like trainers implanting strength and power and vigour that no adversary can withstand. Meet and right then is it that Jacob, having come 70 to Sense-perception, meets not now God but a word of God, even as did Abraham, the grandfather of his wisdom.<sup>b</sup> For we are told that "the Lord departed, when He ceased speaking to Abraham, and Abraham returned to his place" (Gen. xviii. 33). By "returning to his place" is implied the meeting with sacred Words of a kind from which the God Who is prior to all things has withdrawn, ceasing to extend visions that proceed from Himself, but only those that proceed from the potencies inferior to Him.

There is an extraordinary fitness in saying not that 71 he came to the place, but that he met with a place; for coming is a matter of choice, but there is often no exercise of choice in meeting. Thus should the divine Word, by manifesting Itself suddenly and offering Itself as a fellow-traveller to a lonely soul, hold out to it an unlooked-for joy—which is greater <sup>b</sup> See § 47 above.

PHILO

πορεῖν μέλλων προτείνει. καὶ γὰρ Μωυσῆς “ ἐξάγει τὸν λαὸν εἰς τὴν συνάντησιν τοῦ θεοῦ,” σαφῶς εἰδῶς ἐρχόμενον αὐτὸν ἀοράτως πρὸς τὰς ποθοῦσας ψυχὰς ἐντυχεῖν αὐτῷ.

72 XIII. Τὴν δ’ αἰτίαν ἐπιφέρει, δι’ ἣν τόπω ὑπήνητησεν. “ ἔδυσ” γὰρ φησιν “ ὁ ἥλιος,” οὐχ ὁ φαινόμενος οὗτος, ἀλλὰ τὸ τοῦ ἀοράτου καὶ μεγίστου θεοῦ περιφεγγέστατον καὶ περιανγέστατον φῶς. τοῦθ’ ὅταν μὲν ἐπιλάμψη διανοία, τὰ δεύτερα λόγων δύεται φέγγη, πολὺ δὲ μᾶλλον οἱ αἰσθητοὶ τόποι πάντες ἐπισκιάζονται. ὅταν δ’ ἐτέρωσε χωρήσῃ.

73 πάντ’ εὐθύς ἀνίσχει καὶ ἀνατέλλει. μὴ θαυμάσης δέ, εἰ ὁ ἥλιος κατὰ τοὺς τῆς ἀλληγορίας κανόνας ἐξομοιοῦται τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ἡγεμόνι τῶν συμπάντων· θεῷ γὰρ ὅμοιον πρὸς ἀλήθειαν μὲν οὐδέν, ἃ δὲ δόξῃ νενόμισται, δύο μόνα ἐστίν, ἀοράτον τε καὶ ὄρατόν,

74 [632] ψυχὴ μὲν ἀοράτον, ὄρατόν δὲ ἥλιος. τὴν | μὲν οὖν ψυχῆς ἐμφέρειαν δεδήλωκεν ἐν ἐτέροις εἰπών· “ ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρωπον, κατ’ εἰκόνα θεοῦ ἐποίησεν αὐτόν,” καὶ ἐν τῷ κατὰ ἀνδροφόνων τεθέντι νόμῳ πάλιν· “ ὁ ἐκχέων αἷμα ἀνθρώπου ἀντὶ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ ἐκχυθήσεται, ὅτι ἐν εἰκόνι θεοῦ ἐποίησα τὸν ἄνθρωπον,” τὴν δὲ ἡλίου διὰ

75 συμβόλων μεμήνηκε. ῥάδιον δὲ καὶ ἄλλως ἐξ ἐπιλογισμοῦ τοῦτο κατιδεῖν, ἐπειδὴ

<sup>a</sup> Or simply “greater than it hoped for.” But see the contrast between χαρά and ἐλπίς in De Mut. 163 f.

<sup>b</sup> Note how Philo, having already reduced λόγος from the Divine Logos to God’s λόγοι, here reduces it still further to “words” in general.

<sup>c</sup> Philo here seems to abandon his regular interpretation

ON DREAMS, I. 71-75

than hope.<sup>a</sup> For Moses too, when he "leads out the people to meet God" (Ex. xix. 17), knows full well that He comes all unseen to the souls that yearn to come into His presence.

XIII. The lawgiver further states the reason why 72
Jacob "met" a place: "for the sun was set," it says (Gen. xxviii. 11), not this sun which shews itself to our eyes, but the light of the supreme and invisible God most brilliant and most radiant. When this shines upon the understanding, it causes those lesser luminaries of words <sup>b</sup> to set, and in a far higher degree casts into shade all the places of sense-perception; but when it has gone elsewhere, all these at once have their dawn and rising. And marvel not if the 73 sun, in accordance with the rules of allegory, is likened to the Father and Ruler of the universe: for although in reality nothing is like God, there have been accounted so in human opinion two things only, one invisible, one visible, the soul invisible, the sun visible. The soul's likeness to God the lawgiver has 74 shewn elsewhere, by saying "God made man, after the image of God made He him" (Gen. i. 27),<sup>c</sup> and again, in the law enacted against murderers, "he that sheddeth man's blood, in requital for his blood shall there blood be shed, because in the image of God made I man" (Gen. ix. 6); while the sun's likeness to God he has indicated by figures.

In other ways also it is easy to discern this by a 75 process of reasoning.<sup>d</sup> In the first place: God is of κατ' εικόνα θεοῦ as "made in the likeness of the image," i.e. of the Logos. (See e.g. Leg. All. iii. 96.)

<sup>d</sup> This "reasoning," in which, though the term "sun" is not applied to God, it may be inferred from the context, goes on to the end of § 76. The "figurative" use of the word in this sense is given in §§ 87 ff.

PHILO

- πρῶτον μὲν ὁ θεὸς φῶς ἐστὶ—“ κύριος γὰρ φωτισμός μου καὶ σωτήρ μου ” ἐν ὕμνοις ᾄδεται—καὶ οὐ μόνον φῶς, ἀλλὰ καὶ παντὸς ἐτέρου φωτὸς ἀρχέτυπον, μᾶλλον δὲ παντὸς ἀρχετύπου πρεσβύτερον καὶ ἀνώτερον, λόγον ἔχον παραδείγματος <παραδείγματος>.<sup>1</sup> τὸ μὲν γὰρ παράδειγμα ὁ πληρέστατος ἦν αὐτοῦ λόγος, φῶς—“ εἶπε ” γὰρ φησὶν “ ὁ θεός· γενέσθω φῶς,”— αὐτὸς δὲ οὐδενὶ
- 76 τῶν γεγονότων ὅμοιος. ἔπειθ' ὡς ἥλιος ἡμέραν καὶ νύκτα διακρίνει, οὕτως φησὶ Μωυσῆς τὸν θεὸν φῶς καὶ σκότος διατειχίσαι· “ διεχώρισε γὰρ ὁ θεὸς ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ φωτὸς καὶ ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ σκοτούς ”· ἄλλως τε ὡς ἥλιος ἀνατείλας τὰ κεκρυμμένα τῶν σωμάτων ἐπιδείκνυται, οὕτως καὶ ὁ θεὸς τὰ πάντα γεννήσας οὐ μόνον εἰς τοῦμφανές ἤγαγεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἅ πρότερον οὐκ ἦν, ἐποίησεν, οὐ δημιουργὸς μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ κτίστης αὐτὸς ὢν.
- 77 XIV. Λέγεται δὲ πολλαχῶς κατὰ τὸν ἱερὸν λόγον ἐν ὑπονοίαις ἥλιος, ἅπαξ μὲν ὁ ἀνθρώπινος νοῦς, ὃν οἰκοδομοῦσιν ὡς πόλιν καὶ κατασκευάζουσι οἱ γένεσιν πρὸ τοῦ ἀγενήτου θεραπεύειν ἀναγκαζόμενοι, ἐφ' ὧν εἴρηται ὅτι “ ὠκοδόμησαν πόλεις ὀχυρὰς τῷ Φαραώ, τήν τε Πειθῶ,” τὸν λόγον ᾧ τὸ πείθειν ἀνάκειται, “ καὶ Ῥαμεσσή,” <sup>1</sup> <παραδείγματος>. This is my own insertion. The text, as it stands in the mss.—(1) God is above all archetypes; (2) He is the “ model,” i.e. archetype; (3) the Logos is the archetype and in this is contrasted with God—seems incoherent. For παράδειγμα παραδείγματος cf. Leg. All. iii. 96 ὡςπερ γὰρ ὁ θεὸς παράδειγμα τῆς εἰκόνος . . . οὕτως ἡ εἰκὼν ἄλλων γίνεται παράδειγμα, and De Op. 25 εἰκὼν εἰκόνος.

ON DREAMS, I. 75-77

light, for there is a verse in one of the psalms, " the Lord is my illumination and my Saviour " (Ps. xxvii. [xxvi.] 1). And He is not only light, but the archetype of every other light, nay, prior to and high above every archetype, holding the position of the model of a model. For the model or pattern was the Word which contained all His fullness—light, in fact<sup>a</sup>; for, as the lawgiver tells us, " God said, ' let light come into being ' " (Gen. i. 3), whereas He Himself resembles none of the things which have come into being.

Secondly : as the sun makes day 76 and night distinct, so Moses says that God kept apart light and darkness ; for " God," he tells us, " separated between the light and between the darkness " (Gen. i. 4). And above all, as the sun when it rises makes visible objects which had been hidden, so God when He gave birth to all things, not only brought them into sight, but also made things which before were not, not just handling material as an artificer, but being Himself its creator.

XIV. In the course of sacred revelation " Sun " is 77 used in several figurative senses. To begin with, it is used of the human mind, which is erected and set up as a city by those who under compulsion serve creation in preference to the uncreated One. Of them we read that " they built strong cities for Pharaoh, namely Peitho," speech, to which persuading is dedicated, " and Raamses," sense-perception, by <sup>a</sup> The word φῶς here puzzled Mangey, who suggested its omission, which would make the quotation pointless. I think the text may stand. The Logos is light, for if God said " let there be light," this was a λόγος in the sense of a saying. Cf. note on De Fug. 95. The straining would be lessened if we suppose that the next three words of the quotation, καὶ ἐγένετο φῶς, have fallen out.

PHILO

τὴν αἴσθησιν, ὑφ' ἧς ὥσπερ ὑπὸ σέων ἡ ψυχὴ διεσθίεται—ἐρμηνεύεται γὰρ σεισμὸς σητός,— “καὶ τὴν Ὠν,” τὸν νοῦν, ἣν Ἡλίου πόλιν ὠνόμασεν, ἐπειδὴ καθάπερ ἥλιος τοῦ παντὸς ἡμῶν ὄγκου τὴν ἡγεμονίαν ἀνῆπται καὶ τὰς αὐτοῦ δυνάμεις ὥσπερ 78 ἀκτῖνας εἰς ὄλον τείνει. τὸν δὲ ἱερέα καὶ θερα-πευτὴν τοῦ νοῦ πενθερὸν ἐπιγράφεται πᾶς ὁ τὴν τοῦ σώματος πολιτείαν ἀναψάμενος, ὄνομα Ἰωσήφ.
 “ἔδωκε” γὰρ φησὶν “αὐτῷ τὴν Ἀσενέθ θυγατέρα 79 Πετεφρῆ ἱερέως Ἡλίου πόλεως.” | [633] δεῦτερον δὲ ἥλιον καλεῖ συμβολικῶς τὴν αἴσθησιν, ἐπειδὴ τὰ αἰσθητὰ πάντα δείκνυσι διανοίᾳ. περὶ ἧς λελάληκεν ὧδε· “ἀνέτειλεν ὁ ἥλιος αὐτῷ, ἡνίκα παρῆλθε τὸ εἶδος τοῦ θεοῦ”. τῷ γὰρ ὄντι ταῖς ἱερωτάταις ἰδέαις καὶ ὡς ἂν εἰκόσιν ἀσωμάτοις ὅταν μηκέτι δυνώμεθα συνδιατρίβειν, ἀλλ' ἐτέρωσε τρεπόμενοι μεταχωρήσωμεν, ἀλλῷ φωτὶ τῷ κατὰ αἴσθησιν χρώμεθα σκότους πρὸς τὸν ὑγιῆ λόγον 80 οὐδὲν ἀπλῶς διαφέροντι· ὅπερ ἀνατείλαν ὄρασιν μὲν καὶ ἀκοήν, ἔτι δὲ γεῦσιν καὶ ὄσφρησιν καὶ ἀφῆν ὥσπερ κοιμωμένας ἀνήγειρε, φρόνησιν δὲ<sup>1</sup> καὶ δικαιοσύνην ἐπιστήμην τε καὶ σοφίαν ἐγρη-81 γορυίας εἰς ὕπνον ἔτρεψεν. οὐ χάριν ἀγνεύειν οὐδένα πρὸ ἐσπέρας φησὶν ὁ ἱερός λόγος δύνασθαι, τῆς διανοίας ὑπὸ τῶν κατ' αἴσθησιν κινήσεων ἔτι παρευημερουμένης. ἄφυκτον δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἱερεῦσι νόμον ἐν ταύτῳ καὶ γνώμην ἀποφαινόμενος

<sup>1</sup> MSS. τε.

<sup>a</sup> Because the Senses are Mind's daughters, vide § 88.

<sup>b</sup> Or “statement.” See below on § 101. The future indicative instead of the imperative indicates a spiritual fact, viz.

ON DREAMS, I. 77-81

which the soul is eaten through as though by moths : the name means "moth-shock" ;—"and On," the mind, which Moses called Sun-city (Ex. i. 11), since the mind, like a sun, has assumed the leadership of our entire frame and bulk, and makes its forces reach, like the sun's rays, to every part of it. And everyone 78 who has accepted the citizenship of the body, and the name of such is Joseph, chooses for his father-in-law the priest and devotee of Mind.<sup>a</sup> For Moses says that Pharaoh "gave him Asenath, daughter of Potiphora, priest of Heliopolis" (Gen. xli. 45).

Secondly, Moses uses "sun" figuratively for sense- 79 perception, inasmuch as it shews all objects of sense to the understanding. It is of sense-perception that Moses has spoken on this wise : "the sun arose upon him when he passed by the appearance of God" (Gen. xxxii. 31) ; for in truth, when we are no longer able to remain in company with holiest forms, which are as it were incorporeal images, but turn in a different direction and go elsewhere, we are led by another light, even that which answers to sense-perception, a light, as compared with sound reason, differing no whit from darkness. When this sun has 80 risen it wakes up sight and hearing, yea taste and smell and touch, from their seeming sleep, but sound sense and justice and knowledge and wisdom, which it finds awake, it plunges in sleep. This is why the 81 sacred word says that no one can be clean until the even (Lev. xi. passim), the understanding being till then at the mercy of the movements of sense-perception.

For the priests too he lays down an inexorable law, in the form of a prediction,<sup>b</sup> in the that whoever is not cleansed cannot really partake of holy things.

PHILO

τίθησιν, ἐπειδὴν λέγει· “ Οὐκ ἔδεται ἀπὸ τῶν ἀγίων, ἐὰν μὴ λούσῃται τὸ σῶμα ὕδατι καὶ δύῃ 82 ὁ ἥλιος καὶ γένηται καθαρὸς.” δηλοῖ γὰρ σαφέστατα διὰ τούτων, ὅτι εὐαγῆς εἰσάπαν οὐδεὶς ἐστίν, ὡς ταῖς ἀγίαις καὶ ἱεροπρεπέσι χρῆσθαι τελεταῖς, ᾧ τὰς αἰσθητὰς τοῦ θνητοῦ βίου λαμπρότητας ἔτι τετιμῆσθαι συμβέβηκεν. εἰ δέ τις αὐτὰς οὐκ ἀποδέχεται, κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον τῷ φρονήσεως ἐπι-λάμπεται φέγγει, δι’ οὗ δυνήσεται τὰς τῶν κενῶν 83 δοξῶν ἐκνίπτεσθαι καὶ ἀπολούεσθαι κηλίδας. ἢ τὸν ἥλιον αὐτὸν οὐχ ὁρᾷς, ὅτι τὰναντία καὶ ἀνα-τέλλων καὶ δυσόμενος ἐργάζεται; ἐπειδὴν γὰρ ἀνίσχη, τὰ μὲν κατὰ γῆν ἅπαντα περιλάμπεται, τὰ δὲ κατ’ οὐρανὸν ἀποκρύπτεται· δύντος δ’ ἔμπαλιν οἱ μὲν ἀστέρες προφαίνονται, τὰ δὲ περί-84 γεια συσκιάζεται. τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν, ὅταν μὲν τὸ τῶν αἰσθήσεων φέγγος ὡς ἥλιος ἀνατείλῃ, τὰς ὀλυμπίους καὶ οὐρανίους ὡς ἀληθῶς ἐπιστήμας κρύπτεσθαι συμβέβηκεν· ὅταν δὲ πρὸς δυσμᾶς γένηται, τὰς ἀστεροειδεστάτας καὶ θειο-τάτας ἀναφαίνεσθαι ἀρετῶν αὐγὰς, ὅτε καὶ καθαρὸς ὁ νοῦς ὑπὸ μηδενὸς κρυπτόμενος αἰσθητοῦ γίνεται.

85 XV. κατὰ δὲ τὸ τρίτον σημαινόμενον ἥλιον καλεῖ τὸν θεῖον λόγον, τὸ τοῦ κατ’ οὐρανὸν περιπολοῦντος, ὡς πρότερον ἐλέχθη, παράδειγμα, ἐφ’ οὗ λέγεται· “ ὁ ἥλιος ἐξῆλθεν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, καὶ Λῶτ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς Σηγῶρ, καὶ κύριος ἔβρεξεν 86 ἐπὶ Σόδομα καὶ Γόμορρα θεῖον καὶ πῦρ.” ὁ γὰρ τοῦ θεοῦ λόγος, ὅταν ἐπὶ τὸ γεῶδες ἡμῶν σύστημα

ON DREAMS, I. 81-86

words : “ He will not eat of the holy things unless he have washed his body with water, and the sun be set, and he have become clean ” (Lev. xxii. 6 f.). For he 82 makes it perfectly evident by this declaration that no one is absolutely free from pollution, so as to celebrate the holy and reverend mysteries, by whom the splendours of this mortal life, objects as they are of sense-perception, are still held in honour. But if a man disdains them, the consequence is that he is shone upon by the light of sound sense, and by means of it he will be able completely to purge and wash out of himself the defilements of vain opinions. Or look 83 at the sun itself. Do you not see that the effect of its rising is the reverse of that of its setting ? When it has risen, all things on earth are lit up, while those in the heavens are obscured : on the contrary, when it has set the stars appear, and earthly objects are hidden. It is precisely the same with us. When the 84 light of our senses has risen like a sun, the various forms of knowledge, so truly heavenly and celestial, disappear from sight : when it reaches its setting, radiances most divine and most star-like sent forth from virtues come into view : and it is then that the mind also becomes pure because it is darkened by no object of sense.

XV. The third meaning 85 in which he employs the title sun is that of the divine Word, the pattern, as has been already mentioned, of the sun which makes its circuit in the sky. It is of the divine Word that it is said, “ The sun went forth upon the earth, and Lot entered into Zoar, and the Lord rained on Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire ” (Gen. xix. 23 f.). For the Word of God, when 86 it arrives at our earthy composition, in the case of

PHILO

- ἀφίκηται, τοῖς μὲν ἀρετῆς συγγενέσι καὶ πρὸς αὐτὴν ἀποκλίνουσιν ἀρήγει καὶ βοηθεῖ, ὡς καταφυγὴν καὶ σωτηρίαν αὐτοῖς πορίζειν παντελῆ, τοῖς δὲ ἀντιπάλοις ὄλεθρον καὶ φθορὰν ἀνίατον ἐπι-
- 87 πέμπει. λέγεται δὲ κατὰ τέταρτον σημαίνοντον ἥλιος μὲν αὐτὸς ὁ τῶν ὄλων ἡγεμών, ὡς εἶπον ἦδη, δι' οὗ τὰ ἀνίατα τῶν ἀμαρτημάτων
- [634] ἀνακαλύπτεται συσκιάζεσθαι δοκοῦντα· | πάντα γὰρ ὡς δυνατά, οὕτως καὶ γνώριμα θεῷ.
- 88 παρὸ καὶ τοὺς καταλυθέντας τῶν τόνων τῶν ψυχικῶν, ἀκολάστως καὶ λαγνίστερον ὀμιλοῦντας ταῖς νοῦ θυγατράσιν, αἰσθήσεσιν, ὡς χαμαιτύπαις καὶ
- 89 πόρναις, ἐνδειχθησομένους πρὸς ἥλιον ἄγει. φησὶ γάρ· “καὶ κατέλυσεν ὁ λαὸς ἐν Σαττὶν”—ἄκανθαι δ' ἐρμηνεύεται, παθῶν κεντούντων καὶ τιτρωσκόντων ψυχὴν σύμβολον,—“καὶ ἐβεβηλώθη” φησὶν “ἐκπορνεῦσαι εἰς τὰς θυγατέρας Μωάβ”—αἱ δὲ εἰσιν αἱ αἰσθήσεις, κεκλημέναι νοῦ θυγατέρες· Μωάβ γὰρ ἐκ πατρὸς ἐρμηνεύεται,—καὶ προστίθησι· “λάβε πάντας τοὺς ἀρχηγοὺς τοῦ λαοῦ καὶ παραδειγματίσον τῷ κυρίῳ ἀπέναντι τοῦ ἡλίου, καὶ ἀποστραφήσεται ὀργὴ κυρίου ἀπὸ Ἰσραήλ.”
- 90 οὐ γὰρ μόνον τὰ κεκρυμμένα τῶν ἀδικημάτων ἐμφανῆ γενέσθαι βουλόμενος ταῖς ἡλιακαῖς περιέλαμψεν ἀκτίσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ συμβόλων ἥλιον τὸν πατέρα τῶν ὄλων ἐκάλεσεν, ᾧ πάντα προὔπτα καὶ ὅσα ἐν μυχοῖς τῆς διανοίας ἀοράτως ἐπιτελεῖται· γενομένων δ' ἐμφανῶν ἰλεῷ φησιν ἔσεσθαι τὸν

---

* An allusion to the interpretation of Lot's name as ἀπόκλισις “sometimes from what is good, sometimes from what is bad,” De Mig. 148. There is a similar allusion below, § 246, but there to the wrong kind of ἀπόκ.

ON DREAMS, I. 86-90

those who are akin to virtue and turn away <sup>a</sup> to her, gives help and succour, thus affording them a refuge and perfect safety, but sends upon her adversaries irreparable ruin.

In a fourth sense, as I 87 have already said, the title of "Sun" is applied to the Ruler of the Universe Himself, through Whose agency irremediable sins, when apparently concealed, are disclosed. For to God all things are known, even as all things are possible.

In accordance 88

with this we see Him bringing to the sun to be laid bare those energies of the soul that have been unstrung by lewd and licentious intercourse with Mind's daughters, the senses, as though they were common strumpets. For he says "and the people abode in 89

Shittim"—the meaning of this name is "thorns," a symbol of passions pricking and wounding the soul—"and was defiled to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab"—these are the senses, entitled daughters of Mind; for the translation of "Moab" is "from a father." The lawgiver adds the command given him: "Take all the chiefs of the people and set them up publicly <sup>b</sup> unto the Lord before the sun, and the anger of the Lord shall be turned away from Israel" (Num. xxv. 1, 4). It was not only that, in 90 his desire that the hidden deeds of unrighteousness should be made manifest, he caused the rays of the sun to shine about them. More than this, he gave the figurative title of "Sun" to the universal Father, to Whose sight all things are open, even those which are perpetrated invisibly in the recesses of the understanding. He says that when they have been made manifest, the One gracious Being will be found <sup>b</sup> E.V. "hang them up," which the LXX may have meant. Philo, however, interprets it by ἐμφανή γενέσθαι.

PHILO

- 91 μόνον ἔλεω. διὰ τί; ὅτι, ἐὰν ὑπολαβοῦσα διάνοια λήσασθαι τὸ θεῖον ἀδικοῦσα, ὡς μὴ πάντα καθορᾶν δυνάμενον, κρύφα καὶ ἐν μυχοῖς διαμαρτάνη καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα εἴτ' ἐξ αὐτῆς εἴτε καὶ ὑφηγησαμένου τινὸς ἐννοήσῃ, ὅτι ἀμήχανον ἄδηλον εἶναί τι τῷ θεῷ, καὶ ἑαυτὴν καὶ τὰς ἑαυτῆς πράξεις ἀπάσας ἀναπτύξῃ καὶ εἰς μέσον προενεγκοῦσα καθάπερ εἰς ἡλιακὸν φῶς ἐπιδειξήται τῷ τῶν ὄλων ἐπισκόπῳ φήσασα μετανοεῖν ἐφ' οἷς πρότερον ἀγνώμονι γνώμη χρωμένη κακῶς ἐδόξαζε—μηδὲν γὰρ ἄδηλον, γνώριμα δὲ καὶ δῆλα πάντα, οὐ τὰ πραχθέντα μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἐλπιζόμενα κατὰ πολλὴν περιουσίαν ὑπάρχειν αὐτῷ,—κεκάθαρται καὶ ὠφέληται καὶ τὸν ἐφεστῶτα κολαστὴν ἔλεγχον ἡμέρων κεν ὄργῃ δικαίᾳ χρώμενον, εἰ τὸ μετανοεῖν ἀδελφὸν νεώτερον ὄν τοῦ μηδ' ὅλως ἀμαρτεῖν ἀποδέχεται.<sup>1</sup>
- 92 XVI. Φαίνεται μέντοι καὶ ἐτέρωθι κατὰ σύμβολον ἐπὶ τοῦ αἰτίου τὸν ἥλιον παραλαμβάνων, ὡς ἐν τῷ γραφέντι νόμῳ περὶ τῶν ἐπ' ἐνεχούροις δανειζόντων· λέγε τὸν νόμον· “ἐὰν ἐνεχύρασμα ἐνεχυράσῃς τὸ ἱμάτιον τοῦ πλησίον, πρὸ δυσμῶν ἡλίου ἀποδώσεις αὐτῷ· ἔστι γὰρ τοῦτο περιβόλαιον αὐτῷ μόνον, τοῦτο τὸ ἱμάτιον ἀσχημοσύνης αὐτοῦ· ἐν τίνι κοιμηθήσεται; ἐὰν οὖν καταβολήσῃ πρὸς μέ, εἰσακούσομαι αὐτοῦ· ἐλεήμων
- 93 γάρ εἰμι.” ἄρ' οὐκ ἄξιον τοὺς οἰομένους τὴν τοσαύτην σπουδὴν εἶναι τῷ νομοθέτῃ περὶ ἀμπεχόνης, εἰ καὶ μὴ ὀνειδίξειν, ἀλλὰ τοί γε ὑπομιμνή-

<sup>1</sup> Wend. was inclined to insert μη either before δικαία or ἀποδέχεται. I think the text may well stand. The εἰ (or possibly εἰ γέ) clause serves to repeat in a short summary the long series of ἐάν clauses which precede.

ON DREAMS, I. 91-93

gracious. Why so? Because, if the understanding, 91 imagining that its wrongdoing will escape the notice of God as though He were not able to see all things, sin secretly in deep recesses; if subsequently, whether of itself or by the leading of another, it come to realize that it is impossible that anything should be otherwise than clear to God; if it unfold itself and all its doings, and bringing them out into the open expose them as it were in the sunlight to Him Whose eye is upon all things; if it say that it repents of the evil opinions which it formerly held in reliance upon an ill-judging judgement; if it acknowledge that nothing is withdrawn from His sight, but that all things are ever known and manifest to Him, not only those which have been done already, but the far greater body of those which are but contemplated in the future;—then has it gained cleansing and benefit and has appeased the just wrath of the convicting wielder of the lash who was standing over it. So is it with the soul if it embraces repentance, younger brother of complete guiltlessness.

XVI. There are other cases in which the lawgiver 92 evidently takes the sun figuratively as applying to the First Cause, as in the Law enacted with reference to those who lend money on security. Read the Law: “If thou take thy neighbour’s garment to pledge thou shalt restore it to him before the setting of the sun; for this is his only covering, it is the garment of his shame.
Wherein shall he sleep? If then he cry unto Me, I will hear him, for I am compassionate” (Ex. xxii. 26 f.).
Do not those who suppose that the lawgiver feels 93
all this concern about a cloak deserve, if not reproach,

PHILO

σκειν φάσκοντας· τί λέγετε, ὦ γενναῖοι; ὁ τῶν ὄλων κτίστης καὶ ἡγεμὼν ἐλεήμονα ἑαυτὸν ἐφ' οὕτως εὐτελοῦς πράγματος, ἱματίου μὴ ἀποδοθέντος

94 [635] χρεώστη | πρὸς δανειστοῦ, καλεῖ; τὸ μέγεθος καθάπαξ τῆς ἀρετῆς τοῦ πάντα μεγάλου θεοῦ μὴ συνεωρακότων τοιαῦτ' ἐστὶν ὑπολαμβάνειν καὶ τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην μικρολογίαν τῇ ἀγενήτῳ καὶ ἀφθάρτῳ καὶ πλήρει μακαριότητος καὶ εὐδαιμονίας φύσει

95 παρὰ θέμιν καὶ δίκην προσνεμόντων. τί γὰρ ἄτοπον ποιοῦσιν οἱ τὰ ῥύσια κατέχοντες δανεισταὶ παρ' αὐτοῖς, ἄχρισ ἂν τὰ ἴδια ἀναπράξωνται; πένητες οἱ χρεῶσται, φήσει τις ἴσως, καὶ ἄξιον ἐλεεῖν αὐτούς. εἴτ' οὐκ ἄμεινον ἦν γράφαι νόμον, δι' οὗ τούτους<sup>1</sup> ἐρανοῦσι μᾶλλον ἢ χρεώστας ἀποφανοῦσιν ἢ ἐπ' ἐνεχύροις τοῦ δανεῖζειν κωλύσαι<sup>2</sup>; ὁ δὲ ἐφείς οὐκ ἂν εἰκότως ἐπὶ τοῖς ἅ ἔλαβον πρὸ καιροῦ μὴ προιεμένοις δυσχεραῖνοι ὡς ἀσεβοῦσι.

96 πενίας δ' εἰς αὐτά τις ἐλθὼν, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, τὰ πέρατα καὶ ράκιον ἐν ἀμπεχόμενος δανειστὰς καινοὺς ἐπάγεται τὸν ἀπὸ τῶν ὀρώντων παρεῖς ἔλεον, ὃς τοῖς κεκρημένοις ταῖς τοιαύταις κακοπραγίαις κατ' οἰκίαν καὶ παρ' ἱεροῖς καὶ ἐν ἀγορᾷ

97 καὶ πανταχοῦ προκέχυται; νυνὶ δὲ καὶ ὁ μόνον εἶχε προκάλυμμα αἰδοῦς, ὦ τὰ τῆς φύσεως ἀπόρητα συνεσκίαζε, τοῦτο φέρων προὔτεινε· ῥύσιον ὑπὲρ τίνος, εἰπέ μοι; ἢ ὑπὲρ ἐτέρας ἀμείνονος ἐσθῆτος; τροφῆς μὲν γὰρ ἀναγκαίας ἄπορος

<sup>1</sup> So mss.: Mangey and earlier editions τούτοις. The accusative seems only found here and once in Antiphon. See L. & S. 1927.

<sup>2</sup> So Mangey with one ms.: Wend. with the rest κωλύσοισι, which is ungrammatical. He suggests τὸ δανεῖζειν κωλύει

ON DREAMS, I. 93-97

at least a reminder, in such terms as, "What are you saying, good sirs? Does the Creator and Ruler of the universe speak of Himself as compassionate in regard to so trifling a matter, a garment not returned to a debtor by a lender of money? To entertain such ideas is a mark of men who have utterly failed to see the greatness of the excellence of the infinitely great God, and against every principle human or divine attribute human pettiness to the Being Who is unoriginate and incorruptible and full of all blessedness<sup>95</sup> and happiness. What is there outrageous in money-lenders keeping the securities in their own hands, until they have got back their own? Someone will say perhaps that the debtors are poor men, and deserve pity. In that case would it not be better to make a law for contributing to the needs of such people instead of making them debtors, or for prohibiting lending upon security? But the legislator who has permitted this cannot reasonably be indignant with those who do not give up before the time what they have received, and treat them as devoid of<sup>96</sup> piety. And does a man who has reached practically the extreme limit of poverty, and is clothed with a single rag, endeavour to attract fresh money-lenders, while he lets pass unheeded the compassion, which goes forth abundantly from all beholders, indoors, at temples, in the market-place, everywhere, to those<sup>97</sup> who experience such misfortunes? But in this case he is supposed to bring and offer the sole covering of his shame, with which he veiled nature's secret parts. And security for what? tell me that. Is it for a better garment to take its place? For no one is at Μωυσῆς, which I do not understand. I suggest κωλυθήσονται, or preferably κωλύσονται.

---

PHILO

οὐδείς, ἄχρισ ἂν πηγαὶ μὲν ἀναβλύζωσι, ποταμοὶ δὲ χεῖμαρροι πλημμυρῶσι,<sup>1</sup> γῆ δὲ τοὺς ἔτησίους 98 ἀναδιδῶ<sup>2</sup> καρπούς. οὕτω δὲ ἢ βαθύπλουτός τις ἢ λίαν ὠμὸς ὁ δανειστής, ὡς ἢ τετράδραχμον τάχα δὲ καὶ ἔλαττον <μῆ><sup>3</sup> ἐθέλειν τῷ συμβαλεῖν ἢ οὕτω πενιχρῶ δανείζειν ἀλλὰ μὴ χαρίζεσθαι ἢ ὁ μόνον ἦν ἱμάτιον ἐκείνῳ λαμβάνειν ἐνέχυρον, ὅπερ ἑτέρῳ ὀνόματι λωποδυτεῖν εἰκότως ἂν λέγοιτο; καὶ γὰρ λωποδύταις ἔθος ἀπαμπίσχουσι τὰς μὲν ἐσθῆτας ἀφαιρεῖσθαι, γυμνοὺς δὲ τοὺς ἔχοντας ἀποφαίνειν.
 99 διὰ τί δὲ νυκτὸς μὲν καὶ τοῦ μὴ ἀνείμονά τινα κοιμηθῆναι προϋνόησεν, ἡμέρας δὲ καὶ τοῦ μὴ ἐργηγορότα γυμνὸν ἀσχημονεῖν οὐκέθ' ὁμοίως ἐφρόντισεν; ἢ οὐ νυκτὶ μὲν καὶ σκότῳ κρύπτεται πάντα, ὡς ἦττον ἢ μηδ' ὄλως αἰδεῖσθαι, ἡμέρα δὲ καὶ φωτὶ ἀνακαλύπτεται, ὡς τότε μᾶλλον 100 ἐρυθριαῶν ἀναγκάζεσθαι; διὰ τί δ' οὐ διδόναι τὸ ἱμάτιον, ἀλλ' ἀποδιδόναι προσέταξεν; ἀπόδοσις γὰρ ἐπ' ἄλλοτρίοις γίνεται, τὰ δ' ἐνέχυρα τῶν δεδανεικῶτων μᾶλλον ἢ τῶν δεδανεισμένων ἐστίν. ἐκείνο δὲ οὐκ ἐννοεῖς, ὅτι λαβόντι τῷ χρεώσῃ πρόσκοιτον τὸ ἱμάτιον οὐ προσέταξε μεθ' ἡμέραν περιελεῖν ἀναστάντι καὶ κομίσει τῷ 101 δανειστῇ; καὶ μὴν τῷ γε τῆς ἐρμηνείας ἰδιοτρόπῳ καὶ ὁ βραδύτατος ἕτερόν τι τοῦ ῥητοῦ
 [636] κατανοεῖν ἂν | προαχθείη· μᾶλλον γὰρ ἀφορισμῶ

<sup>1</sup> So Wend: the mss. have either ποταμῶν, χεῖμαρροι δὲ πλημ. (in one case ποταμῶν, χεῖμαρροι δὲ ποταμῶν πλημ.) or ποταμοὶ δὲ πλημ. I suggest as an alternative to Wend.'s πότιμοι, χεῖμαρροι δὲ πλημ. <sup>2</sup> mss. ἀναδίδωσι.

<sup>3</sup> <μῆ>: so Mangey: Wend. rejects the insertion, presumably taking the meaning to be "content himself with throwing a farthing to him."

ON DREAMS, I. 97-101

a loss for the bare necessities of food, so long as springs gush forth, and rivers run down in winter, and earth yields her fruits in their season. And is the creditor 98 either so swallowed up in riches or so exceedingly cruel as to be unwilling to afford a tetradrachm (or less it may be) to anybody, or make a loan rather than a free gift to one so poor, or to take as security the man's only garment, an act which might well be given another name and called coat-snatching? For that is the coat-snatcher's way; when they remove people's apparel they carry it off, and leave the owners naked.

And why did he take 99 thought for night and that no one should sleep without clothing,<sup>a</sup> but shewed no such care for the day and that a man should not be indecent in his waking hours? Or is it not the case that by night and darkness all things are hidden, so that nakedness causes less shame or none at all, whereas by the light of day all things are uncovered, so that then one is more obliged to blush?

And why did he 100 enjoin not the giving but the returning of the garment? For we return what belongs to another, whereas the securities belong to the lenders rather than to the borrowers. And do you not notice that he has given no direction to the debtor, after taking the garment to use as a blanket, when day has come to get up and remove it and carry it to the money-lender?

And indeed the peculiarities of the wording might 101 well lead even the slowest-witted reader to perceive the presence of something other than the literal meaning of the passage: for the ordinance bears the

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 599.

PHILO

ἢ παραινέσει ἔοικε τὸ διάταγμα. παραινῶν μὲν γὰρ εἶπεν ἄν τις· τὸ ἐνεχυρασθὲν ἱμάτιον, ἐὰν τοῦτ' ἦ μόνον τῷ χρεώσῃ, πρὸ ἐσπέρας ἀπόδος, ἵν' ἔχη νύκτωρ ἀμπέχεσθαι, ἀφοριζόμενος δὲ οὕτως, ὡς νῦν ἔχει· “(ἀποδώσεις αὐτῷ)<sup>1</sup>· ἔστι γὰρ τοῦτο περιβόλαιον αὐτῷ μόνον, τοῦτο τὸ ἱμάτιον ἀσχημοσύνης αὐτοῦ· ἐν τίνι κοιμηθήσεται;”

- 102 XVII. Ταῦτα μὲν δὴ καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα πρὸς τοὺς τῆς ῥητῆς πραγματείας σοφιστὰς καὶ λίαν τὰς ὀφρῦς ἀνεσπακότας εἰρήσθω, λέγωμεν δὲ ἡμεῖς ἐπόμενοι τοῖς ἀλληγορίας νόμοις τὰ πρόποντα περὶ τούτων. φαμὲν τοίνυν λόγου σύμβολον ἱμάτιον εἶναι. τὰς τε γὰρ ἀπὸ κρυμοῦ καὶ θάλπους εἰωθυίας τῷ σώματι κατασκήπτειν βλάβας ἐσθῆς ἀπωθεῖται καὶ ἐπισκιάζει τὰ τῆς φύσεως ἀπόρρητα καὶ ἔστιν
- 103 ἀρμόττων σώματι κόσμος ἢ ἀμπεχόνῃ. κατὰ τὸ παραπλήσιον μέντοι καὶ ἀνθρώπῳ λόγος δώρημα κάλλιστον ἐδόθη παρὰ θεοῦ, πρῶτον μὲν κατὰ τῶν νεωτεριζόντων εἰς αὐτὸν ὄπλον ἀμυντήριον—ὡς γὰρ τῶν ἄλλων ἕκαστον ζώων ἢ φύσις οἰκείους ἔρκεσιν ὠχύρωσε, δι' ὧν τοὺς ἐπιχειροῦντας ἀδικεῖν ἀποκρούσεται, καὶ ἀνθρώπῳ μέγιστον ἔρυμα καὶ φρουρὰν ἀκαθαίρετον λόγον δέδωκεν, οὐ κραταιῶς οἷα πανοπλίας ἐνειλημμένος οἰκείον καὶ προσφύεστατον ἔξει δορυφόρον· τούτῳ δὲ προαγωνιστῇ χρώμενος δυνήσεται τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> The insertion, which seems necessary to the sense (see App. p. 600), is approved by Wend., though not incorporated in the text.

<sup>a</sup> Or “explanatory statement.” See App. pp. 599 f.

<sup>b</sup> This, or “rational speech and thought,” seems the best translation here to cover the alternations between thought and speech throughout this interpretation. Speech seems to marks of an explanatory statement rather than of an exhortation. A man giving an exhortation would have said, "If the garment given as security be the only one the borrower has, return it before evening, that he may have it to wrap round him at night." But if he makes a statement<sup>a</sup> he would put as it stands: "thou shalt give it back to him, for this is the only wrapper he has, this is the garment without which he is not decent; what is he to sleep in?" (Ex. xxii. 27).

ON DREAMS, I. 101-103

XVII. Let what has been said and other considerations of the same kind suffice for the self-satisfied pedantic professors of literalism, and let us in accordance with the rules of allegory make such remarks on this passage as are appropriate. Well, then, we say that a garment is a figure for rational speech.<sup>b</sup> For clothing keeps off the mischiefs that are wont to befall the body from frost and heat; it conceals nature's secret parts; and the raiment is a fitting adornment to the person. In like manner, rational 102 speech was bestowed on man by God as the best of gifts. First of all, it is a weapon of defence against those who threaten him with violence. For as nature has fortified other living creatures each with appropriate means of guarding themselves whereby they may beat off those who attempt to do them an injury, so has she given to man a most strong redoubt and impregnable fort in rational speech. Grasping this with all his might as a soldier does his weapons, he will have a body-guard meeting his every need. Having this to fight before him, he will be able to ward off the hurts which his enemies would fain be the dominant idea in §§ 103 and 104, thought or reason in most of the rest.

PHILO

- 104 φερομένας ἀπωθείσθαι ζημίας, δεύτερον δὲ καὶ αἰσχύνῃς καὶ ὀνειδῶν ἀναγκαιότατον περίβλημα—δεινὸς γὰρ συγκρῦψαι καὶ συσκιᾶσαι τὰς ἀμαρτίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων λόγος—τρίτον δὲ πρὸς ὄλου τοῦ βίου κόσμον· ὁ γὰρ βελτιῶν ἕκαστον καὶ πάντα
- 105 ἄγων ἐπὶ τὸ κρεῖττον οὗτός ἐστιν. ἄλλὰ γὰρ εἰσι λῶβαί τινες καὶ κῆρες ἀνθρώπων, οἳ καὶ τὸν λόγον ἐνεχυράζουσιν ἀφαιρούμενοι<sup>1</sup> τοὺς ἔχοντας καί, συναυξῆσαι δέον, ὄλον ὑποτέμνονται, καθάπερ οἱ τὰ τῶν πολεμίων δηοῦντες χωρία καὶ τὸν τε σῖτον καὶ τὸν ἄλλον καρπὸν φθείρειν ἐπιχειροῦντες, ὃς ἀφειθεὶς μεγάλη τοῖς χρησαμένοις ἂν ὄνησις ἦν.
- 106 πόλεμος οὖν ἐστὶν ἐνίοις ἄσπονδος καὶ ἀκήρυκτος πρὸς τὴν λογικὴν φύσιν, οἷτινες τὰς βλάστας αὐτῆς ἀποκείρουσιν ἐν χρωῖ καὶ τὰς πρώτας ἐπιφύσεις ἐκθλίβουσιν, ἄγονον καὶ στείραν, ὡς ἔπος εἶπεῖν,
- 107 καλῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων ἀπεργαζόμενοι. ὀρμῶσαν γὰρ ἔστιν ὅτε πρὸς παιδείαν ἀκατασχέτω ρύμη καὶ πληχθεῖσαν ἔρωτι τῶν φιλοσοφίας θεωρημάτων ὑπὸ βασκανίας καὶ φθόνου δείσαντες, μὴ μεγάλα πνεύσασα καὶ ἐπὶ μήκιστον ἀρθεῖσα τὰς γλισχρολογίας αὐτῶν καὶ πιθανὰς κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας εὐρέσεις ἐπικλύση χειμάρρου τρόπον, ἐτέρωσε ταῖς ἑαυτῶν κακοτεχνίαις τὴν φορὰν ἔτρεψαν, εἰς
- [637] βαναύσους καὶ | ἀνελευθέρους τέχνας μετοχτευσάμενοι· πολλάκις δὲ καὶ ἀμβλώσαντες καὶ ἐπιφράξαντες ἄργον τὸ μεγαλοφυὲς κατέλιπον, ὥσπερ βαθύγειον καὶ εὐδαίμονα γῆν ὀρφανῶν παιδῶν ἐπι-

<sup>1</sup> Some mss. αἰ and ἀφαιρούμεναι. See note <sup>a</sup> below.

<sup>a</sup> If οἱ and ἀφαιρούμενοι are read, the enemies of λόγος are presumably persons who exercise an evil influence on others. If αἰ and ἀφαιρούμεναι, they are evil forces within us. The inflict upon him. In the second place, rational speech 104 is a most necessary covering for matters of shame and reproach ; it has great ability to conceal and hide up men's sins. Thirdly, it serves as an adornment of the whole life : for this it is that makes each one of us better and leads every man to something higher.

ON DREAMS, I. 104-107

But there are some men who—mischievous pests that they are<sup>a</sup>—actually hold rational speech in pawn, and rob its possessors of it, and, when they ought to foster its growth, cut it utterly down, like those who ravage the fields of their enemies and endeavour to destroy both the wheat and the other crops, which if left alone would have been a great boon to the consumers. What I mean is that there 106 are some who wage an unrelenting war against the rational nature, men who cut down to the ground its first shoots, and squeeze the life out of its earliest growths, so rendering it to all intents and purposes barren and unproductive of noble doings. For there 107 are times when, seeing it bent with irresistible impulse on education and smitten with a passionate love of the truths which philosophy has discovered, they conceive a jealous and malicious fear lest, grandly inspired and highly exalted, it should sweep like a torrent over their hair-splittings and plausible inventions for the overthrow of truth, and by their perversions of art<sup>b</sup> change the direction of its current, providing a channel leading to low and illiberal arts and sciences. Not infrequently they sterilize and block it up, and leave its natural greatness fallow and unfruitful, like bad guardians of orphans who let a rich former is suggested by §§ 106 and 107. At the end of the meditation, however, we seem to pass into the other thought. See note on § 112.

<sup>b</sup> See note on De Mut. 150.

PHILO

- τροποι κακοὶ χέρσον, καὶ οὐκ ἠδέσθησαν οἱ πάντων ἀνηλεέστατοι τὸ μόνον ἱμάτιον ἀνθρώπου περι-συλῶντες, λόγον· “ ἔστι ” γάρ φησι “ τοῦτο περι-108 βόλαιον αὐτῷ μόνον.” τί πλὴν ὁ λόγος; ὥσπερ γὰρ ἵππου τὸ χρεμετίζειν ἴδιον καὶ τὸ ὑλακτεῖν κυνὸς καὶ βοὸς τὸ μυκᾶσθαι καὶ τὸ ὠρύεσθαι λέοντος, οὕτω καὶ ἀνθρώπου τὸ λέγειν καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ λόγος. τοῦτον γὰρ ἔρυμα, περίβλημα, πανοπλίαν, τεῖχος τὸ ζῶον τὸ θεοφιλέστατον, ὁ ἄν-θρωπος, ἐκ πάντων ἴδιον κεκάρπωται.
- 109 XVIII. διὸ καὶ ἐπιφέρει· “ τοῦτο τὸ ἱμάτιον αὐτὸ μόνον ἀσχημοσύνης αὐτοῦ.” τίς ἄλλος<sup>1</sup> γὰρ οὕτως τὰ ὀνειδῆ καὶ τὰ αἴσχη τοῦ βίου συσκιάζει καὶ συγκρύπτει, ὡς λόγος; ἀμαθία μὲν γὰρ ἀλόγου φύσεως συγγενὲς αἴσχος, παιδεία δὲ ἀδελφὸν λόγου, 110 κόσμος οἰκεῖος. “ ἐν τίνι οὖν κοιμηθήσεται,” τουτέστιν ἡρεμήσει καὶ διαναπαύσεται ἄνθρωπος, πλὴν ἐν λόγῳ; λόγος γὰρ τὸ βαρυποτμότατον ἡμῶν γένος ἐπικουφίζει. ὥσπερ οὖν τοὺς λύπαις ἢ φόβοις ἢ τισιν ἄλλοις κακοῖς πιεσθέντας εὐμένεια καὶ συνήθεια<sup>2</sup> καὶ δεξιότης φίλων πολλάκις ἐθερά-πευσεν, οὕτως οὐ πολλάκις ἀλλ’ αἰεὶ τὸ βαρύτατον ἄχθος, ὅπερ ἐπιτιθέασιν ἡμῖν αἶ τε τοῦ συνδέτου σώματος ἀνάγκαι καὶ αἱ τῶν ἕξωθεν κατα-σκηπτόντων ἀπροόρατοι συντυχίαι, μόνος ὁ ἀλεξι-111 κακος λόγος ἀπωθεῖται. φίλος γὰρ καὶ γνώριμος καὶ συνήθης καὶ ἐταῖρος ἡμῖν ἔστιν, ἐνδεδεμένος, μᾶλλον δὲ ἡρμοσμένος καὶ ἠνωμένος κόλλη τινὶ φύσεως ἀλύτῳ καὶ ἀοράτῳ. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ προλέγει τὰ συνοίσοντα καὶ συμβάντος τινὸς ἀβουλήτου

<sup>1</sup> MSS. καλῶς.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. συνέχεια.

ON DREAMS, I. 107-111

and fertile farm become a wilderness. In fact, void of pity beyond all men, they are not ashamed to strip a man of his only garment, reason; for it says "this is all he has to put round him" (Ex. xxii. 27). What is this 108 save reason? For as neighing is peculiar to a horse, and barking to a dog, and lowing to a cow, and roaring to a lion, so is speech and reason itself to man. For with this has man, the dearest to God of all living creatures, been dowered as specially his own, to be his stronghold, protection, armour, wall. XVIII. This 109 is why he adds "this garment is the only cover of his unseemliness" (Ex. xxii. 27). For who is there that in so fair a fashion removes from sight what might cause shame or entail reproach in man's life, as does reason? For ignorance, the kin of the irrational nature, is a matter of shame, while culture, near akin to reason, is his proper adornment: "In 110 what, then, shall he sleep?" or, in other words, wherein shall a man find calmness and complete repose, save in reason? For reason brings relief to those of us whose fate is the most grievous. Even, then, as the kindness and companionship and courtesy of friends has many a time healed and comforted those who were oppressed by sorrows or fears or some other ills, so not often but always is it mischief-averting reason that alone dislodges the overwhelming burden laid upon us by the distresses incident to our yokefellow the body, or by the unforeseen disasters that swoop down on us from without. For reason is our friend, 111 familiar, associate, comrade, bound up with us, or rather cemented and united with us by an invisible and indissoluble natural glue. That is why it both foretells what will be expedient, and, when something undesirable has occurred, is at hand with unsolicited

PHILO

- πάρεστιν αὐτοκέλευστος βοηθήσων, οὐ τὴν ἑτέραν φέρων μόνον ὠφέλειαν, ἣν ὁ μὴ δρῶν σύμβουλος
- 112 ἢ ὁ συναγωνιστῆς ἡσυχος, ἀλλ' ἀμφοτέρας. οὐ γὰρ ἡμίεργον ἐπιτετήδευκε δύναμιν, ἀλλὰ πᾶσι τοῖς μέρεσιν ὀλόκληρον· ὅς γε, καὶ σφαλῆ πείρας ἐν οἷς διανοεῖται ἢ ἔργῳ ἐπεξέρχεται [ἢ] ἐπὶ τὸ τρίτον ἀφικνεῖται βοήθημα, παρηγορίαν. φάρμακον γὰρ ὡς τραυμάτων, καὶ ψυχῆς παθῶν ὁ λόγος ἐστὶ σωτήριον, ὃν “ πρὸ δυσμῶν ἡλίου ” φησὶ δεῖν ὁ νομοθέτης ἀποδοῦναι, τουτέστι πρὶν τὰς τοῦ μεγίστου καὶ ἐπιφανεστάτου θεοῦ καταδύναμι περιλαμπεστάτας αὐγὰς, ἃς δι' ἔλεον τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν εἰς νοῦν τὸν ἀνθρώπινον οὐρανόθεν ἀποστέλλει.
- 113 παραμένοντος γὰρ ἐν ψυχῇ τοῦ θεοειδεστάτου καὶ ἀσωμάτου φωτὸς ἀποδώσομεν τὸν ἐνεχυρασθέντα λόγον, ὡς ἱμάτιον, ἃν ἐγγένηται τῷ λαβόντι τὸ ἴδιον ἀνθρώπου κτῆμα τὴν τε αἰσχύνην τοῦ βίου περιστέλλαι καὶ τῆς θείας ἀπόνασθαι δωρεᾶς καὶ μετ' ἡρεμίας ἀναπαύσασθαι παρουσία τοιούτου
- [638] συμβούλου | καὶ προασπιστοῦ τάξιν ἣν ἐτάχθη
- 114 μηδέποτε λείποντος. ἕως οὖν ἔτι σοι τὸ ἱερὸν φέγγος ὁ θεὸς ἀκτινοβολεῖ, σπούδασον ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τὸ ρύσιον ἀποδοῦναι τῷ κυρίῳ· δύντος γάρ, ὡς πᾶσα Αἴγυπτος, ψηλαφητὸν ἕξεις σκότος τὸν αἰῶνα καὶ πληχθεὶς ἀορασία καὶ ἀγνοία, ὧν ἐδόκεις ἐπικρατεῖν πάντων ἀφαιρεθήσῃ, πρὸς τοῦ βλέποντος

<sup>a</sup> From this point to the end of this discussion the taker of λόγος seems to be the man's evil self who must restore it to the owner or true self before it is too late. He perhaps means to imply that if he does so, the sufficient though inferior light of λόγος may serve him, as it did the Practiser, in place of the true divine illumination. If he does not, he will be plunged into utter darkness.

ON DREAMS, I. 111-114

aid, bringing not only one or other of the two kinds of help, that of the adviser who does not act, or that of the fellow-combatant who does not speak, but both of these. For the power which reason exercises does 112 not work by half measures, but is thoroughgoing on every side, and if it fails in its plans or in its execution of them, it has recourse to the third mode of help-giving, namely consolation.<sup>a</sup> For as there are healing applications for wounds, so are the disorders of the soul healed by reason, of which the lawgiver says that it must be restored "before the setting of the sun" (Ex. xxii. 26), which means before the going down of those all-illuminating rays of the God who is greatest and most present to help, who by reason of His compassion for our race sends them forth from heaven into the mind of man. For while there is 113 abiding in the soul that most God-like and incorporeal light, we shall restore the reason which had been given in pledge, as a garment is given, in order that he, who has received back the possession which is man's peculiar prerogative, may have opportunity to cover over all that is a shame to human life, to get the full benefit of the divine gift, and to enjoy calm repose through the presence of a counsellor and defender so true, so sure never to abandon the post in which he has been stationed. While, then, God 114 still pours upon you the rays of His sacred light, hasten while it is day to restore to its owner the pledge you have seized. For when that light has set, you, like "all Egypt" (Ex. x. 21), will experience for ever a darkness that may be felt, and smitten with sightlessness and ignorance will be deprived of the possessions of all of which you deemed yourself master, and be perforce enslaved by Israel, the

PHILO

Ἰσραήλ, ὃν ἐρρυσίαζες ἀδούλωτον ὄντα φύσει, δουλούμενος ἀνάγκη.

- 115 XIX. Τοῦτον δὴ τὸν δόλιχον ἀπεμηκύναμεν οὐκ ἄλλου του χάριν ἢ τοῦ διδάξαι, ὅτι ἡ ἀσκητικὴ διάνοια κινήσειν ἀνωμάλοις πρὸς τε εὐφορίαν καὶ τούναντίον χρωμένη καὶ τρόπον τινα ἀνιούσα καὶ κατιούσα συνεχῶς, ὅταν μὲν εὐφορῇ καὶ πρὸς τὸ ὕψος αἴρηται, ταῖς ἀρχετύποις καὶ ἀσωμάτοις ἀκτίσι τῆς λογικῆς πηγῆς τοῦ τελεσφόρου θεοῦ περιλάμπεται, ὅταν δὲ καταβαίνει καὶ ἀφορῇ, ταῖς ἐκείνων εἰκόσιν, ἀθανάτοις λόγοις, οὓς καλεῖν ἔθος
- 116 ἀγγέλους. διὸ καὶ νῦν φησιν· “ἀπήντησε τόπῳ· ἔδου γὰρ ὁ ἥλιος.” ὅταν γὰρ τὴν ψυχὴν ἀπολίπωσιν αἱ τοῦ θεοῦ αὐγαί, δι’ ὧν σαφέσταται αἱ τῶν πραγμάτων γίνονται καταλήψεις, ἀνατέλλει τὸ δεύτερον καὶ ἀσθενέστερον λόγων, οὐκέτι πραγμάτων, φέγγος, καθάπερ καὶ ἐν τῷδε τῷ κόσμῳ· σελήνη γὰρ τὰ δευτερεῖα ἡλίου φερομένη καταδύντος ἐκείνου φῶς ἀμυδρότερον ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν ἀποστέλλει.
- 117 καὶ τὸ ὑπαντᾶν μέντοι τόπῳ ἢ λόγῳ τοῖς μὴ δυναμένοις τὸν πρὸ τόπου καὶ λόγου θεὸν ἰδεῖν ἀνταρκεστάτη δωρεά, διότι τὴν ψυχὴν ἀφώτιστον εἰσάπαν οὐκ ἔσχον, ἀλλ’ ἐπειδὴ τὸ ἄκρατον ἐκείνο φέγγος ἀπ’ αὐτῶν ἔδου, τὸ κεκραμένον ἐκαρπώσαντο. “τοῖς γὰρ υἱοῖς Ἰσραὴλ φῶς ἦν ἐν πᾶσιν οἷς κατεγίνοντο,” φησὶν ἐν Ἐξαγωγῇ, ὡς νύκτα καὶ σκότος αἰεὶ πεφυγαδεῦσθαι, μεθ’ ὧν οἱ τὰ ψυχῆς ὄμματα πρὸ τῶν σώματος πεπηρωμένοι

---

<sup>a</sup> i.e. §§ 87-114, which have supported the argument that the sun which set was God Himself and thus lead up to the thought that the Practiser must sometimes pass from the greater to the lesser illumination.

ON DREAMS, I. 114-117

Seeing One, whom, though by nature immune from bondage, you seized as your chattel.

XIX. This long course<sup>a</sup> we have run to no other end 115 than to shew how it fares with the Practiser's mind. Its movements are uneven, sometimes towards fruitfulness, sometimes to the reverse ; it is continually, as it were, ascending and descending. In the time of fruitfulness and uplifting, there shine upon it the archetypal and incorporeal rays of the fountain of reason, God the consummator, but when it sinks low and fails to yield, its light is the images of these rays, immortal "words" which it is customary to call angels.<sup>b</sup> That is why, in this passage, he says "he 116 met a place ; for the sun was set" (Gen. xxviii. 11). For when the soul is forsaken by the rays of God, by means of which apprehensions of things are gained in greatest distinctness, there rises the secondary feebler light, not as before of facts but of words,<sup>c</sup> just as is the case in this material world ; for the moon, ranking second to the sun when that has set, sends forth upon the earth a dimmer light. And further, to meet a 117 "place" or "word" is an all-sufficient gift to those who are unable to see God Who is prior to "place" and "word," inasmuch as they did not find their soul entirely bereft of illumination, but when that glorious undiluted light sank out of their sky, they obtained that which has been diluted. For we read in Exodus (x. 23), "For the children of Israel there was light in all their dwellings," so that night and darkness are for ever banished, with which they live whose blindness is not of the body, but of the soul, who know not <sup>b</sup> i.e. they are so called in Scripture.

<sup>c</sup> λόγοι and λόγος, which in these sections passes so bewilderingly through its many shades of meaning, seems here to be reduced to its lowest value.

PHILO

- 118 ζῶσιν, ἀρετῆς ἀγὰς οὐκ εἰδότες. ἔνιοι δὲ ἥλιον μὲν ὑποτοπήσαντες εἰρήσθαι νυνὶ συμ-βολικῶς αἰσθησὶν τε καὶ νοῦν, τὰ νενομισμένα καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς εἶναι κριτήρια, τόπον δὲ τὸν θεῖον λόγον, οὕτως ἐξεδέξαντο· ἀπήντησεν ὁ ἀσκη-τῆς λόγῳ θείῳ δύντος τοῦ θνητοῦ καὶ ἀνθρωπίνου
- 119 φέγγους. ἄχρι μὲν γὰρ ὁ νοῦς τὰ νοητὰ καὶ τὰ αἰσθητὰ αἰσθησις οἶεται παγίως καταλαμβάνειν καὶ ἄνω περιπολεῖν,<sup>1</sup> μακρὰν ὁ θεῖος λόγος ἀφέστηκεν· ἐπειδὴ δ' ἐκάτερον ἀσθένειαν ὁμολογήσῃ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τρόπον τινὰ καταδύσει χρυσάμενον ἀποκρυφθῆ, προῦπαντᾶ δεξιούμενος εὐθύς ὁ ἔφεδρος
- [639] ἀσκητικῆς ψυχῆς ὀρθὸς λόγος ἑαυτὴν | μὲν ἀπογινωσκούσης, τὸν δὲ ἐπιφοιτῶντα ἔξωθεν ἀφανῶς ἀναμενούσης.
- 120 XX. Φησὶ τοίνυν ἐξῆς ὅτι “ ἔλαβεν ἀπὸ τῶν λίθων τοῦ τόπου καὶ ἔθηκε πρὸς κεφαλῆς αὐτοῦ; καὶ ἐκοιμήθη ἐν τῷ τόπῳ ἐκεῖνῳ.” θαυμάσαι ἂν τις οὐ μόνον τὴν ἐν ὑπονοίαις πραγματείαν καὶ φυσιολογίαν αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὴν ῥητὴν πρὸς πόνου
- 121 καὶ καρτερίας μελέτην ὑφήγησιν. οὐ γὰρ ἀξιοῖ τὸν ἀρετῆς ἐπιμελούμενον ἀβροδιαίτῳ βίῳ χρῆσθαι καὶ τρυφᾶν ζηλοῦντα τὰς τῶν λεγομένων μὲν εὐδαι-μόνων πρὸς ἀλήθειαν δὲ κακοδαιμονίας γεμόντων σπουδὰς τε καὶ φιλοτιμίας, οἷς πᾶς ὁ βίος ὕπνος καὶ ἐνύπνιον ἐστὶ κατὰ τὸν ἱερώτατον νομοθέτην.
- 122 οὗτοι μεθ' ἡμέραν, ὅταν τὰ ἐν δικαστηρίοις καὶ βουλευτηρίοις καὶ θεάτροις καὶ πανταχοῦ πρὸς τοὺς

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps περιπολεῖ. See note a below.

<sup>a</sup> Or “their path is above the horizon.” I should prefer to read περιπολεῖ. The infinitive dependent on οἶεται equates the “position above the horizon” with apprehension. But

ON DREAMS, I. 118-122

virtue's rays. Some, supposing that in 118 this passage "sun" is a figurative expression for sense and mind, our own accepted standards of judgement, and "place" for the divine word, have understood the passage in this way: "the Practiser met a divine word when the mortal and human light had gone down." For so long as mind and sense- 119 perception imagine that they get a firm grasp, mind of the objects of mind and sense of the objects of sense, and thus move aloft in the sky,<sup>a</sup> the divine Word is far away. But when each of them acknowledges its weakness, and going through a kind of setting passes out of sight, right reason is forward to meet and greet at once the practising soul, whose willing champion he is when it despairs of itself and waits for him who invisibly comes from without to its succour.

XX. We read next that "he took one of the stones 120 of the place and set it under his head, and slept in that place" (Gen. xxviii. 11). Our admiration is extorted not only by the lawgiver's allegorical and philosophical teaching, but by the way in which the literal narrative inculcates the practice of toil and endurance. For he does not deem it worthy of one 121 whose heart is set upon virtue to fare sumptuously and live a life of luxury affecting the tastes and ambitions of people who are called fortunate but are in reality laden with ill-fortune, whose whole life in the eyes of the most holy lawgiver is a sleep and a dream. In the daytime these people, when they 122 have got through their outrages upon other men in law-courts, and council-chambers, and theatres, and it is really the thought that it apprehends which constitutes that position, just as the renunciation of the thought constitutes the setting.

PHILO

- ἄλλους ἀδικήματα διεξέλθωσιν, οἵκαδε ἀφικνοῦνται τὸν ἑαυτῶν οἶκον, οἱ δυστυχεῖς, καταστρέψοντες, οὐ τὸν τῶν οἰκοδομημάτων, ἀλλὰ τὸν συμφυᾶ τῆς ψυχῆς οἶκον, τὸ σῶμα, τροφὰς ἀμέτρους καὶ ἐπαλλήλους εἰσφέροντες καὶ πολὺν ἄκρατον ἄρδοντες, ἕως (ἂν) βύθιος μὲν ὁ λογισμὸς οἴχηται, τὰ δ' ὑπὸ γαστέρα πλησμονῆς ἔκγονα πάθη διαναστάντα, λύττη χρώμενα ἀκαθέκτω, προσπεσόντα καὶ ἐμπλακέντα τοῖς ἐπιτυχοῦσι, τὸν πολὺν οἶστρον ἀπερυγόντα λωφήσῃ. 123 νύκτωρ δέ, ὅποτε καιρὸς εἶη πρὸς κοῦτον τραπέσθαι, πολυτελεῖς κλίνας καὶ εὐανθεστάτας στρωμνὰς εὐτρεπισάμενοι μαλακῶς σφόδρα κατακλίνονται, τὴν γυναικῶν ἐκμιμούμενοι τρυφήν, αἷς ἢ φύσις ἐπέτρεψεν ἀνειμένη χρῆσθαι διαίτη, παρὸ καὶ τὸ σῶμα τοῦ μαλθακωτέρου κόμματος ὁ 124 τεχνίτης καὶ ποιητῆς αὐταῖς εἰργάζετο. τοιοῦτος οὐδεὶς γνῶριμος τοῦ ἱεροῦ λόγου, ἀλλ' οἱ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄνδρες, σωφροσύνης καὶ κοσμιότητος καὶ αἰδοῦς ἐρασταί, ἐγκράτειαν, ὀλιγοδείαν, καρτερίαν ὥσπερ κρηπίδας τινας ὄλου τοῦ βίου καταβεβλημένοι, ψυχῆς ἀσφαλεῖς ὑποδρόμους, οἷς ἀκινδύνως καὶ βεβαίως ἐνορμιεῖται, χρημάτων καὶ ἡδονῆς καὶ δόξης κρείττους, σιτίων καὶ ποτῶν καὶ αὐτὸ μόνον<sup>1</sup> τῶν ἀναγκαίων, ἐφ' ὅσον μὴ νεωτερίζειν ἄρχεται λιμός, ὑπερόπται, πείναν δέχεσθαι καὶ δίψαν θάλπος τε καὶ κρύος καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα δυσκαρτέρητα ὑπὲρ ἀρετῆς κτήσεως ἐτοιμότητοι, ζηλωταί

<sup>1</sup> αὐτὸ μόνον does not make sense. Wend. proposes πλὴν for καί, but this hardly agrees with ἐφ' ὅσον . . . λιμός. Perhaps αὐτῶν, so translation (or αὐτῶν μὲν οὖν, omitting the preceding καί as some mss. do).

ON DREAMS, I. 122-124

everywhere, come home, poor wretches, to ruin their own abode, not that which consists of buildings, but the abode which is bound up by nature with the soul, I mean the body. Into it they convey an unlimited supply of eatables one after another, and steep it in quantities of strong drink, until the reasoning faculty is drowned, and the sensual<sup>a</sup> passions born of excess are aroused and raging with a fury that brooks no check, after falling upon and entangling themselves with all whom they meet, have disgorged their great frenzy and have abated. At night, when it is time to retire to bed, they recline exceedingly delicately on costly couches and gaily-coloured bedding with which they have provided themselves, aping the luxury of women to whom nature allows an easier mode of life, agreeable to the body of softer stamp<sup>b</sup> which the Creator Artificer has wrought for them. None such is a disciple of the holy Word, but only those who are really men, enamoured of moderation, propriety, and self-respect : men who have laid down as the foundation, so to speak, of their whole life self-control, abstemiousness, endurance, which are safe roadsteads of the soul, in which it can lie firmly moored and out of danger ; men superior to the temptations of money, pleasure, popularity, regardless of meat and drink and of the actual necessities of life, so long as lack of food does not begin to threaten their health ; men perfectly ready for the sake of acquiring virtue to submit to hunger and thirst and heat and cold and all else that is hard to put up with ; men keen to get

<sup>a</sup> Or "sexual," though that is usually with Philo τὰ μετὰ γαστέρα, but cf. ὑπογαστρίων De Som. ii. 147. Otherwise "born in the depths of the belly."

<sup>b</sup> A common phrase, cf. ἔοικε δ' εἶναι τοῦ πονηροῦ κόμματος Aristoph. Plut. 862.

PHILO

- τῶν εὐποριστοτάτων, ὡς μηδ' ἐπ' εὐτελεῖ χλαίνη ποτὲ δυσωπηθῆναι, τοῦναντίον δὲ τὰς πολυτελεῖς ὄνειδος καὶ μεγάλην τοῦ βίου ζημίαν νομίσαι.
- 125 τούτοις πολυτελής μὲν ἐστι κλίνη μαλακὸν<sup>1</sup> ἔδαφος, στρωμνὴ δὲ θάμνοι, πόαι, βοτάναι, φύλλων πολλή χύσις, τὰ δὲ πρὸς κεφαλῆς λίθοι τινὲς ἢ βραχεῖς
- [640] γεώλοφοι τοῦ ἰσοπέδου | μικρὸν ἀνέχοντες. τὸν βίον τοῦτον οἱ μὲν τρυφῶντες σκληροδίαιτον καλοῦσιν, οἱ δὲ πρὸς καλοκάγαθίαν ζῶντες ἤδιστον ὀνομάζουσιν· ἀνδράσι γὰρ οὐ λεγομένοις ἀλλ' οὖσιν
- 126 ὄντως ἐφαρμόζει. οὐχ ὄρῳ, ὅτι καὶ νῦν βασιλικαῖς ὕλαις καὶ παρασκευαῖς περιουσιάζοντα τὸν ἀθλητὴν τῶν καλῶν ἐπιτηδευμάτων εἰσάγει χαμευνοῦντα καὶ λίθῳ προσκεφαλαίῳ χρώμενον καὶ μικρὸν ὕστερον ἐν ταῖς εὐχαῖς ἄρτον καὶ ἱμάτιον, τὸν φύσεως πλοῦτον, αἰτούμενον, ἐπειδὴ τὸν ἐν ταῖς κεναῖς δόξαις ἐχλεύαζεν ἀεὶ καὶ τοὺς θαυμαστικῶς ἔχοντας αὐτοῦ κατεκερτόμει; οὗτός ἐστι παράδειγμα ἀρχέτυπον ἀσκητικῆς ψυχῆς, ἐκτεθλυσμένῳ καὶ ἀνδρογύνῳ παντὶ πολέμιος.
- 127 XXI. Ὁ μὲν οὖν (τοῦ) φιλοπόνου καὶ φιλαρέτου πρόχειρος ἔπαινος εἴρηται, τὸ<sup>2</sup> δὲ κατὰ σύμβολον μνηνόμενον ἐρευνητέον. εἰδέναι δὲ νῦν προσήκει, ὅτι ὁ θεῖος τόπος καὶ ἡ ἱερὰ χώρα πλήρης ἀσωμάτων ἐστὶ λόγων· ψυχαὶ δ' εἰσὶν ἀθάνατοι οἱ λόγοι
- 128 οὗτοι. τούτων δὴ τῶν λόγων ἓνα λαβῶν, ἀριστίνδην ἐπιλεγόμενος τὸν ἀνωτάτω καὶ ὡσανεὶ

<sup>1</sup> Mangey ὀμαλόν. But there is no reason why the hardy should not select soft ground. Cf. De Som. ii. 56.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. τὸν.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 600.

ON DREAMS, I. 124-128

things most easily procured, who are never ashamed of an inexpensive cloak, but on the contrary regard those which cost much as matter for reproach and a great waste of their living. To these men a soft bit 125 of ground is a costly couch ; bushes, grass, shrubs, a heap of leaves, their bedding ; their pillow some stones or mounds rising a little above the general level. Such a mode of life as this the luxurious call hard faring, but those who live for what is good and noble describe it as most pleasant ; for it is suited to those who are not merely called but really are men.

Do you not see how, in the passage 126 before us, the lawgiver represents the athlete of noble pursuits, in enjoyment of a princely abundance of materials <sup>a</sup> for comfort, as sleeping on the ground, and using a stone as his pillow, and a little later in his prayers asking for nature's wealth, bread and raiment (Gen. xxviii. 20) ? For he <sup>b</sup> ever held up to ridicule the wealth which depends on the vain opinions of men, and scoffed at those who regarded it with reverence. In him we have the original pattern of the practiser's soul, one at war with every man that is effeminate and emasculated.

XXI. So much, then, for the praise of the lover of 127 toil and virtue in the literal sense of the passage. We have still to explore its symbolic teaching. In doing so it is of importance to know that the divine " place " and the holy land is full of incorporeal " words " ; and these words are immortal souls. Of these words 128 he takes one, choosing as the best the topmost one, <sup>b</sup> Is " he " Moses or Jacob ? The οὗτος in the next sentence points to the latter. In neither case is it clear what exactly Philo is referring to. If it is Jacob, he may perhaps consider his dealings with Laban as justifying the statement.

PHILO

- σώματος ἡνωμένου κεφαλὴν<sup>1</sup> πλησίον ἰδρύεται διανοίας τῆς ἑαυτοῦ· καὶ γὰρ αὕτη τρόπον τινὰ τῆς ψυχῆς ἐστὶ κεφαλὴ. ποιεῖ δὲ τοῦτο πρόφασιν μὲν ὡς κοιμησόμενος, τὸ δ' ἄληθές ὡς ἀναπαυσόμενος ἐπὶ λόγῳ θείῳ καὶ σύμπαντα ἑαυτοῦ τὸν 129 βίον κουφότατον ἄχθος ἐπαναθήσων ἐκείνῳ. ὁ δὲ ἄσμενος ἐπακούει καὶ δέχεται τὸν ἀθλητὴν ὡς φοιτητὴν ἐσόμενον τὸ πρῶτον, εἶθ' ὅταν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐπιτηδειότητα τῆς φύσεως ἀποδέξῃται, χειρο-δετεῖ<sup>2</sup> τρόπον ἀλείπτου καὶ πρὸς τὰ γυμνάσια καλεῖ, καὶ διερειδόμενος παλαίειν ἀναγκάζει, μέχρις ἂν ἀνανταγώνιστον αὐτῷ ῥώμην ἐγκατασκευάσῃ, τὰ ὦτα θείαις ἐπιπνοίαις<sup>3</sup> μεταβαλὼν εἰς ὄμματα καὶ καλέσας αὐτὸν<sup>4</sup> μεταχαραχθέντα καινὸν τύπον 130 Ἰσραήλ, ὀρῶντα. τότε καὶ τὸν νικη-τήριον ἐπιτίθησιν αὐτῷ στέφανον. ὁ δὲ στέφανος ἔκτοπον ἔχει καὶ ξένον καὶ ἴσως οὐκ εὐφημον ὄνομα· καλεῖται γὰρ ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀγωνοθέτου νάρκα.
 λέγεται γὰρ ὅτι “ἐνάρκησε τὸ πλάτος,” βραβείων καὶ κηρυγμάτων καὶ τῶν ἐν τιμαῖς ἀπάντων θαν-131 μασιώτατον ἀριστεῖον· εἰ γὰρ ἡ δυνάμειος ἀκαθαιρέτου ψυχὴ μεταλαβοῦσα καὶ τελειωθείσα ἐν ἄθλοις ἀρετῶν καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ὄρον αὐτὸν ἀφικομένη τοῦ καλοῦ μὴ πρὸς ὕψος ὑπὸ μεγαλαυχίας ἀρθεῖη

<sup>1</sup> MSS. κεφαλῆς. All editors from Turnebus have accepted the correction, but I should prefer to retain κεφαλῆς and omit καὶ. The mind, not the stone-logos, is to the whole ψυχὴ what the head is to the whole body.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. χειροδοτεῖ, an impossible word. The correction χειροδετεῖ, due originally to Wyttenbach, introduces a word not known elsewhere, but a very natural formation. Mangey's συγκροτεῖ, though favourably regarded by Wend., seems arbitrary.

ON DREAMS, I. 128-131

occupying the place which the head does in the whole<sup>a</sup> body, and sets it up close to his understanding (Gen. xxviii. 11) ; for the understanding is, we may say, the soul's head. He does so professedly<sup>b</sup> to sleep upon it, but in reality to repose on the divine word, and lay his whole life, lightest of burdens, thereon. The 129 divine word readily listens to and accepts the athlete to be first of all a pupil, then when he has been satisfied of his fitness of nature, he fastens on the gloves as a trainer does and summons him to the exercises, then closes with him and forces him to wrestle until he has developed in him an irresistible strength, and by the breath of divine inspiration he changes ears into eyes, and gives him when remodelled in a new form the name of Israel—He who sees.

It is then too that he confers on him the 130 crown of victory. Now the crown has a strange and outlandish and perhaps ill-sounding name ; for the name given it by the president of the contest is " numbness " ; for we read that " the broad part grew numb " (Gen. xxxii. 25), a guerdon the most wondrous of all awards ever announced in honour of a victor. For if the soul which had been made partaker 131 of indomitable power, and has attained perfection in contests for the winning of virtues, and has reached the very limit of the good and beautiful, instead of being lifted up in arrogance and stepping high in

<sup>a</sup> Or " the body regarded as a unity." For the Stoic use of the word see notes on De Mig. 180 and Quod Det. 49.

<sup>b</sup> Or according to the surface meaning.

---

<sup>3</sup> MSS. ἐπιβολαίς.

<sup>4</sup> The majority of mss. have τὸν, which seems to me to give a clearer construction. Or has κατὰ fallen out between μεταχαραχθέντα and καινὸν ?

- μηδ' ἀκροβατοῦσα ἐπικομπάζοι, ὡς ἀρτίοις ποσὶ [641] μακρὰ βαίνειν δυναμένη, ναρκήσειε δὲ καὶ | σταλείη τὸ εὐρυνθὲν<sup>1</sup> οἷήσει πλάτος, εἶθ' ἔκουσίως ὑποσκελίσασα ἑαυτὴν χωλεύοι, τῶν ἀσωμάτων ὅπως ὑστερίζοι φύσεων, ἤττασθαι δοκοῦσα νικηφορήσει.
 132 τὸ γὰρ πρεσβείων ἐξίστασθαι γνώμη μᾶλλον <ἦ> ἀνάγκη τοῖς ἀμείνοσιν λυσιτελέστατον<sup>2</sup> νενόμισται, ἐπεὶ καὶ τὰ δευτερεῖα τῶν ἐν τῷδε τῷ ἀγῶνι τιθεμένων ἄθλων τὰ πρῶτα τῶν ἐν ἑτέροις ἀξιώματος μεγέθει πλείστον ὅσον ὑπερβάλλει.
 133 XXII. Τὸ μὲν δὴ προοίμιον τῆς θεοπέμπτου φαντασίας ᾧδ' ἔχει, τρέπεσθαι δ' ἐπ' αὐτὴν καιρὸς ἦδη καὶ τῶν ἐμφερομένων ἀκριβοῦν ἕκαστον.
 "ἐνυπνιάσθη" φησί "καὶ ἰδοὺ κλίμαξ ἐστηριγμένη ἐν τῇ γῆ,<sup>3</sup> ἧς ἡ κεφαλὴ ἀφικνεῖτο εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, καὶ οἱ ἄγγελοι τοῦ θεοῦ ἀνέβαινον καὶ κατέβαινον ἐπ' αὐτῆς· ὁ δὲ κύριος ἐπεστήρικτο ἐπ' 134 αὐτῆς." κλίμαξ τοίνυν ἐν μὲν τῷ κόσμῳ συμ-βολικῶς λέγεται ὁ ἀήρ, οὗ βάσις μὲν ἐστὶ γῆ, κορυφὴ δ' οὐρανός· ἀπὸ γὰρ τῆς σεληνιακῆς σφαίρας, ἣν ἐσχάτην μὲν τῶν κατ' οὐρανὸν κύκλων, πρώτην δὲ τῶν<sup>4</sup> πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἀναγράφουσιν οἱ φροντισταὶ τῶν μετεώρων, ἄχρι γῆς ἐσχάτης ὁ ἀήρ πάντη 135 ταθεῖς ἔφθακεν. οὗτος δ' ἐστὶ ψυχῶν ἀσωμάτων οἶκος, ἐπειδὴ πάντα τῷ ποιητῇ τὰ τοῦ κόσμου μέρη καλὸν ἔδοξεν εἶναι ζῶων ἀναπληρῶσαι. διὰ τοῦτο γῆ μὲν τὰ χερσαῖα ἐγκατεσκευάζε, θαλάτταις δὲ καὶ ποταμοῖς τὰ ἔνυδρα, οὐρανῷ δὲ τοὺς ἀστέρας
 —καὶ γὰρ ἕκαστος τούτων οὐ μόνον ζῶων, ἀλλὰ

<sup>1</sup> Perhaps read εὐρυνθὲν <ἀν> (G.H.W.).

<sup>2</sup> MSS. οἷς εὐτελέστατον: Mangey ὡς ἐντελέστατον, with at least equal probability. Or ἐντελέστατον alone?

vaunting mood, conscious of power to take long strides on sound feet, should turn numb and shrink in the broad limb enlarged by conceit, and then after thus voluntarily disabling itself go with limping gait, that so it might fall behind the incorporeal beings—though seemingly worsted it will be the victor. For 132 to give up prizes to one's betters of free choice and not under compulsion is accounted highly profitable, since even the second prizes offered in this contest immeasurably transcend in greatness of honour the first prizes in all other contests.

XXII. Such, then, is the prelude of the God-sent 133 vision, and it is now time to turn to the vision itself, and to examine in detail its several points. "He dreamed," it runs, "and behold a stairway set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and the angels of God were ascending and descending on it; and the Lord stood firmly upon it" (Gen. xxviii. 12). "Stairway" when applied to the universe is a 134 figurative name for the air; whose foot is earth and its head heaven. For the air extends in all directions to the ends of the earth from the sphere of the moon which is described by meteorologists as last of the heavenly zones, and first of those which are related to us.<sup>a</sup> The air is the abode of incorporeal souls, since 135 it seemed good to their Maker to fill all parts of the universe with living beings. He set land-animals on the earth, aquatic creatures in the seas and rivers, and in heaven the stars, each of which is said to be not a living creature only but mind of the purest kind

<sup>a</sup> For the following sections cf. De Gig. 7 ff. For τῶν πρὸς ἡμᾶς (κύκλων) see App. p. 600.

<sup>3</sup> MSS. εἰς τὴν γῆν.

<sup>4</sup> MSS. τοῖς or τῆς. See App. p. 600.

PHILO

- καὶ νοῦς ὅλος δι' ὅλων ὁ καθαρώτατος εἶναι λέγεται·
 —ὥστε καὶ ἐν τῷ λοιπῷ τμήματι τοῦ παντός, ἀέρι, ζῶα γέγονεν. εἰ δὲ μὴ αἰσθήσει καταληπτά, 136 τί τοῦτο; καὶ ψυχὴ γὰρ ἀόρατον. καὶ μὴν εἰκός γε ἀέρα γῆς μᾶλλον καὶ ὕδατος ζωοτροφεῖν, διότι καὶ τὰ ἐν ἐκείνοις οὗτος ἐψύχωσεν· ἐποίει γὰρ αὐτὸν ὁ τεχνίτης ἀκινήτων μὲν σωμάτων ἕξιν, κινουμένων δὲ ἀφαντάστως φύσιν, ἥδη δὲ ὄρμη 137 καὶ φαντασίᾳ χρῆσθαι δυναμένων ψυχῆν. οὐκ ἄτοπον οὖν, δι' οὗ τὰ ἄλλα ἐψυχώθη, ψυχῶν ἀμοιρεῖν; διὸ μηδεὶς τὴν ἀρίστην φύσιν ζῶων τοῦ ἀρίστου τῶν περιγείων, ἀέρος, ἀφαιρείσθω· οὐ γὰρ μόνος ἐκ πάντων ἔρημος οὗτος, ἀλλ' οἷα πόλις εὐανδρεῖ πολίτας ἀφθάρτους καὶ ἀθανάτους ψυχὰς 138 ἔχων ἰσαριθμούς ἄστροις. τούτων τῶν ψυχῶν αἱ μὲν κατίαςιν ἐνδεθησόμεναι σώμασι θνητοῖς, ὅσαι προσγειότατοι καὶ φιλοσώματοι, αἱ δ' ἀνέρχονται, διακριθεῖσαι πάλιν κατὰ τοὺς ὑπὸ φύσεως ὀρισθέντας ἀριθμούς καὶ χρόνους.
- 139 τούτων αἱ μὲν τὰ σύντροφα καὶ συνήθη τοῦ |
 [642] θνητοῦ βίου ποθοῦσαι παλινδρομοῦσιν αὐθις, αἱ δὲ πολλὴν φλ.α.ριαν αὐτοῦ καταγνοῦσαι δεσμοπήριον μὲν καὶ τύμβον ἐκάλεσαν τὸ σῶμα, φυγοῦσαι δ' ὥσπερ ἐξ εἰρκτῆς ἢ μνήματος ἄνω κούφοις πτεροῖς πρὸς αἰθέρα ἐξαρθεῖσαι μετεωροπολοῦσι τὸν αἰῶνα.

<sup>a</sup> Or better "some are descending . . . others ascending." The latter are not, as the next sentence shews, the higher souls described in § 140, who never come to earth, but those who have come down and return at the fixed period. For this last point cf. De Plant. 14: "some enter into mortal through and through ; and therefore in air also, the remaining section of the universe, living creatures exist. If they are not to be apprehended by sense, what of that? The soul too is a thing invisible. 136 Indeed it is more to be expected that air should be the nurse of living creatures than that land and water should, seeing that it is air that has given vitality to the creatures of land and water, for the Great Artificer made air the principle of coherence in motionless bodies, the principle of growth in bodies which move but receive no sense-impressions, while in bodies that are susceptible of impulse and sense-impression He made it the principle of life. Is it not then incon- 137 sistent that the element through which other things obtained vitality should be empty of living souls? Accordingly let no one take away nature at its best, as it is in living creatures, from the best of earth's elements, air : for so far is air from being alone of all things untenanted, that like a city it has a goodly population, its citizens being imperishable and immortal souls equal in number to the stars.

ON DREAMS, I. 135-140

Of these souls some, such as have earthward tendencies 138 and material tastes, descend<sup>a</sup> to be fast bound in mortal bodies, while others ascend,<sup>a</sup> being selected for return according to the numbers and periods determined by nature. Of these last 139

some, longing for the familiar and accustomed ways of mortal life, again retrace their steps, while others pronouncing that life great foolery call the body a prison and a tomb, and escaping as though from a dungeon or a grave, are lifted up on light wings to the upper air and range the heights for ever. Others 140 bodies and quit them again," κατά τινας ὀρισμένas περιόδους. See further App. p. 600.

PHILO

- 140 ἄλλαι δ' εἰσὶ καθαρώταται καὶ ἄρισται, μειζόνων φρονημάτων καὶ θειοτέρων ἐπιλαχοῦσαι, μηδενὸς μὲν τῶν περιγείων ποτὲ ὀρεχθεῖσαι τὸ παράπαν, ὕπαρχοι δὲ τοῦ πανηγεμόνος, ὥσπερ μεγάλου βασιλέως ἀκοαὶ καὶ ὄψεις, ἐφορῶσαι πάντα καὶ
- 141 ἀκούουσαι. ταύτας δαίμονας μὲν οἱ ἄλλοι φιλόσοφοι, ὁ δὲ ἱερός λόγος ἀγγέλους εἶωθε καλεῖν προσφυστέρῳ χρώμενος ὀνόματι· καὶ γὰρ τὰς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπικελεύσεις τοῖς ἐγγόνοις καὶ τὰς
- 142 τῶν ἐγγόνων χρείας τῷ πατρὶ διαγγέλλουσι. παρὸ καὶ ἀνερχομένους αὐτοὺς καὶ κατιόντας εἰσήγαγεν, οὐκ ἐπειδὴ τῶν μηνυσόντων ὁ πάντῃ<sup>1</sup> ἐφθακῶς θεὸς δεῖται, ἀλλ' ὅτι τοῖς ἐπικήροις ἡμῖν συνέφερε μεσίταις καὶ διαιτηταῖς λόγοις χρῆσθαι διὰ τὸ τεθηνέαι καὶ πεφρικέαι τὸν παμπρύτανιν καὶ τὸ
- 143 μέγιστον ἀρχῆς αὐτοῦ κράτος. οὐ λαβόντες ἔννοιαν ἐδεήθημέν ποτέ τις τῶν μεσιτῶν λέγοντες· “ἀλήσων σὺ ἡμῖν, καὶ μὴ λαλείτω πρὸς ἡμᾶς ὁ θεός, μὴ ποτε ἀποθάνωμεν.” οὐ γὰρ ὅτι κολάσεις, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὑπερβαλλούσας καὶ ἀκράτους εὐεργεσίας χωρῆσαι δυνάμεθα, ἅς ἂν αὐτὸς προτείνῃ δι' ἑαυτοῦ μὴ χρώμενος ὑπηρέταις ἄλλοις.
- 144 παγκάλως δὲ ἐστηριγμένον ἐν τῇ γῆ διὰ συμβόλου κλίμακος φαντασιοῦται τὸν αἴρα· τὰς γὰρ ἀναδιδόμενας ἐκ γῆς ἀναθυμιάσεις λεπτυνομένας ἐξαεροῦσθαι συμβέβηκεν, ὥστε βάσιν μὲν καὶ ρίζαν
- 145 αἴρος εἶναι γῆν, κεφαλὴν δὲ οὐρανόν. λέγεται γοῦν, ὅτι σελήνη πύλημα μὲν ἄκρατον αἰθέρος οὐκ ἔστιν, <sup>1</sup> MSS. πάντα.

<sup>a</sup> Wend. compares Xen. Cyrop. viii. 2. 10 τοὺς βασιλεῖωσ καλουμένους ὀφθαλμοὺσ καὶ τὰ βασιλεῖωσ ᾶτα.

ON DREAMS, I. 140-145

there are of perfect purity and excellence, gifted with a higher and diviner temper, that have never felt any craving after the things of earth, but are viceroys of the Ruler of the universe, ears and eyes, so to speak, of the great king,<sup>a</sup> beholding and hearing all things. These are called "demons" by the other philo- 141 sophers, but the sacred record is wont to call them "angels" or messengers, employing an apter title, for they both convey the biddings of the Father to His children and report the children's need to their Father.<sup>b</sup> In accordance with this they are represented 142 by the lawgiver as ascending and descending: not that God, who is already present in all directions, needs informants, but that it was a boon to us in our sad case to avail ourselves of the services of "words" acting on our behalf as mediators, so great is our awe and shuddering dread of the universal Monarch and the exceeding might of His sovereignty. It was our 143 attainment of a conception of this that once made us address to one of those mediators the entreaty: "Speak thou to us, and let not God speak to us, lest haply we die" (Ex. xx. 19). For should He, without employing ministers, hold out to us with His own hand, I do not say chastisements, but even benefits unmixed and exceeding great, we are incapable of receiving them. It is a fine thought that 144 the dreamer sees the air symbolized by a stairway as firmly set on the earth; for the exhalations given forth out of the earth are rarefied and so turned into air, so that earth is air's foot and root and heaven its head. Do they not tell us that the moon is not an unmixed 145 mass of ether, as each of the other heavenly bodies

<sup>b</sup> Cf. De Gig. 16, and quotation from Plat. Symposium there given.

PHILO

ὡς ἕκαστος τῶν ἄλλων ἀστέρων, κράμα δὲ ἕκ τε αἰθερώδους οὐσίας καὶ ἀερώδους· καὶ τό γε ἐμφαινόμενον αὐτῇ μέλαν, ὃ καλοῦσί τινες πρόσωπον, οὐδὲν ἄλλο εἶναι ἢ τὸν ἀναμεμιγμένον ἀέρα, ὃς κατὰ φύσιν μέλας ὢν ἄχρις οὐρανοῦ τείνεται.

- 146 XXIII. Ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐν κόσμῳ λεγομένη συμβολικῶς κλίμαξ τοιαύτη ἐστί, τὴν δ' ἐν ἀνθρώποις σκοποῦντες εὐρήσομεν τὴν ψυχὴν, ἧς βάσις μὲν τὸ ὠσανεὶ γεῶδές ἐστιν, αἴσθησις, κεφαλὴ δ' ὡς ἂν
- 147 τὸ οὐράνιον, ὃ καθαρῶτατος νοῦς. ἄνω δὲ καὶ
 [643] κάτω διὰ πάσης | αὐτῆς οἱ τοῦ θεοῦ λόγοι χωροῦσιν ἀδιαστάτως, ὅποτε μὲν ἀνέρχονται, συνανασπῶντες αὐτὴν καὶ τοῦ θνητοῦ διαζευγνύντες καὶ τὴν θεάν ὦν' ἄξιον ὄραν μόνων ἐπιδεικνύμενοι, ὅποτε δὲ κατέρχονται, οὐ καταβάλλοντες—οὔτε γὰρ θεὸς οὔτε λόγος θεῖος ζημίας αἴτιος,—ἀλλὰ συγκαταβαίνοντες διὰ φιλανθρωπίαν καὶ ἔλεον τοῦ γένους ἡμῶν, ἐπικουρίας ἕνεκα καὶ συμμαχίας, ἵνα καὶ τὴν ἔτι ὡσπερ ἐν ποταμῷ, τῷ σώματι, φορου-
 148 μένην ψυχὴν σωτήριον πνέοντες ἀναζωῶσι. ταῖς μὲν δὴ τῶν ἄκρως κεκαθαρμένων διανοίαις ἀψοφητὶ μόνος ἀοράτως ὁ τῶν ὅλων ἡγεμὼν ἐμπεριπατεῖ—καὶ γὰρ ἐστὶ χρησθὲν τῷ σοφῷ θεοπρόπιον, ἐν ᾧ λέγεται· “ περιπατήσω ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ ἔσομαι ὑμῶν θεός,”—ταῖς δὲ τῶν ἔτι ἀπολουομένων, μήπω δὲ κατὰ τὸ παντελὲς ἐκνυφισμένων τὴν ῥυπῶσαν καὶ κεκληιδωμένην (ἐν) σώμασι βαρέσει ζωὴν ἄγγελοι, λόγοι θεῖοι, φαιδρύνοντες αὐτὰς τοῖς καλοκάγαθίας
 149 δόγμασιν.<sup>1</sup> ὅσα δὲ ἐξοικίζεταί κακῶν<sup>2</sup> οἰκητόρων

<sup>1</sup> MSS. δμμασιν: Mangey ῥύμμασιν, cf. Plat. Rep. 429 E, 430 A.

<sup>2</sup> MSS. κατὰ τῶν οἰ κακὰ κάκ (ἐκ) τῶν: Mangey κακὰ κακῶν.

ON DREAMS, I. 145-149

is, but a blend of ethereal and aerial substance ; and that the black which appears in it, which some call a face, is nothing else than the commingled air which is naturally black and extends all the way to heaven<sup>a</sup>?

XXIII. Such then is that which in the universe 146 is figuratively called stairway. If we consider that which is so called in human beings we shall find it to be soul. Its foot is sense-perception, which is as it were the earthly element in it, and its head, the mind which is wholly unalloyed, the heavenly element, as it may be called. Up and down throughout its whole 147 extent are moving incessantly the " words " of God, drawing it up with them when they ascend and disconnecting it with what is mortal, and exhibiting to it the spectacle of the only objects worthy of our gaze ; and when they descend not casting it down, for neither does God nor does a divine Word cause harm, but condescending out of love for man and compassion for our race, to be helpers and comrades, that with the healing of their breath they may quicken into new life the soul which is still borne along in the body as in a river.<sup>b</sup> In the understandings of those who have 148 been purified to the utmost the Ruler of the universe walks noiselessly, alone, invisibly, for verily there is an oracle once vouchsafed to the Sage, in which it is said : " I will walk in you, and will be your God " (Lev. xxvi. 12) : but in the understandings of those who are still undergoing cleansing and have not yet fully washed their life defiled and stained by the body's weight there walk angels, divine words, making them bright and clean with the doctrines of all that is good and beautiful. It is quite manifest 149

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 600.

<sup>b</sup> From Timæus 43 A. Cf. De Gig. 13.

PHILO

στίφη, ἵνα εἰς ὁ ἀγαθὸς εἰσοικίσηται, δῆλόν ἐστι. σπουδαῖζε οὖν, ὦ ψυχὴ, θεοῦ οἶκος γενέσθαι, ἱερὸν ἄγιον, (ἐν)διαίτημα κάλλιστον· ἴσως γάρ, ἴσως ὃν ὁ κόσμος ἅπας, καὶ σὺ οἰκοδεσπότην σχήσεις ἐπιμελούμενον τῆς ἰδίας οἰκίας, ὡς εὐερκεστάτη καὶ ἀπήμων εἰσαεὶ διαφυλάττοιτο.<sup>1</sup>

- 150 Ἴσως δὲ καὶ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ βίον ὁ ἀσκητῆς φαντασιούται κλίμακι ἐοικότα· φύσει γὰρ ἀνώμαλον πρᾶγμα ἄσκησις, τοτὲ μὲν προΐουσα εἰς ὕψος, τοτὲ δ' ὑποστρέφουσα πρὸς τούναντίον, καὶ τοτὲ μὲν καθάπερ ναῦς εὐπλοία τῇ τοῦ βίου, τοτὲ δὲ δυσπλοία χρωμένη. ἑτερήμερος γάρ, ὡς ἔφη τις, τῶν ἀσκητῶν ὁ βίος, ἄλλοτε μὲν ζῶν καὶ ἐργη-
- 151 γορώς, ἄλλοτε δὲ τέθνεὺς ἢ κοιμώμενος. καὶ τάχα οὐκ ἀπὸ σκοποῦ τοῦτο λέγεται· σοφοὶ μὲν γὰρ τὸν ὀλύμπιον καὶ οὐράνιον χῶρον ἔλαχον οἰκεῖν, ἄνω φοιτᾶν αἰεὶ μεμαθηκότες, κακοὶ δὲ τοὺς ἐν Ἄιδου μυχοῦς, ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἄχρι τέλους ἀποθνήσκουν ἐπιτετηδευκότες καὶ εἰς γῆρας ἐκ σπαργάνων φθορᾶς
- 152 ἐθάδες ὄντες. οἱ δ' ἀσκηταὶ—μεθόριοι γὰρ τῶν ἄκρων εἰσὶν—ἄνω καὶ κάτω πολλάκις ὡς ἐπὶ κλίμακος βαδίζουσιν, ἢ ὑπὸ τῆς κρείττονος μοίρας ἀνελκόμενοι ἢ ὑπὸ τῆς χείρονος ἀντισπώμενοι, μέχρις ἂν ὁ τῆς ἀμίλλης καὶ διαμάχης ταύτης βραβευτῆς θεὸς ἀναδῶ τὰ βραβεῖα τάξει τῇ βελτίονι, τὴν ἐναντίαν εἰσάπαν καθελών.

<sup>1</sup> In the mss. the words διαίτημα . . . διαφυλάττοιτο appear in § 155 after αἰεὶ γίνονται and are replaced by ἰσχυροὶ . . . παραπαιόντων, which Wend. has transferred to that section. (Apparently though Mangey prints these adjectives in the fem. sing., the uncorrected mss. have them in the masc. plur., which in itself shews their impossibility here.)

ON DREAMS, I. 149-152

what troupes of evil tenants are ejected, in order that One, the good one, may enter and occupy. Be zealous therefore, O soul, to become a house of God, a holy temple, a most beauteous abiding-place ; for perchance, perchance the Master of the whole world's household shall be thine too and keep thee under His care as His special house, to preserve thee evermore strongly guarded and unharmed.

It may be too that the Practiser has his own life 150 presented to him in his vision as resembling a stairway ; for practising is by nature an uneven business, at one moment going onward to a height, at another returning in the opposite direction, and at one time like a ship making life's voyage with fair winds, at another with ill winds. For the life of practisers is, as one has said, a life " of alternate days,"<sup>a</sup> sometimes alive and wakeful, sometimes dead or asleep. And 151 this suggestion is not perhaps wide of the mark. For while it is the portion of the wise to dwell in the heavenly region of Olympus, since they have ever learned to make the heights their resort, and the depths of Hades are the abode allotted to the bad, who from first to last have made dying their occupation, and from the cradle to old age are accustomed to corruption, the practisers—midway between those 152 extremes—are often stepping up and down as upon a stairway, either being drawn upwards by the better portion or dragged in the opposite direction by the worse, until God, the umpire of this strife and conflict, bestows the prizes on the better order, and brings its opposite to perdition.

<sup>a</sup> Od. xi. 303 (of Castor and Pollux) ἄλλοτε μὲν ζῶονσ' ἑτερήμεροι, ἄλλοτε δ' αὐτε τεθνᾶσι, cf. De Decal. 56.

PHILO

- 153 XXIV. Ἐμφαίνεται δ' ἔτι καὶ τοιοῦτον εἶδωλον,<sup>1</sup> ὅπερ οὐκ ἄξιον ἡσυχασθῆναι. τὰ ἀνθρώπων πράγματα κλίμακι πέφυκεν ἐξομοιοῦσθαι διὰ τὴν ἀνώ-
 154 μαλον | αὐτῶν φορὰν. ἡ μία γάρ, ὡς ἔφη τις, [644] ἡμέρα τὸν μὲν καθεῖλεν ὑψόθεν, τὸν δὲ ἦρεν ἄνω, μηδενὸς ἐν ὁμοίῳ πεφυκός τος μένειν τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν, 155 ἀλλὰ παντοίας μεταβαλλόντων τροπᾶς. ἢ οὐκ ἄρχοντες μὲν ἐξ ἰδιωτῶν, ἰδιῶται δ' ἐξ ἀρχόντων, πένητες δ' ἐκ πλουσίων καὶ ἐκ πενήτων πολυχρήματοι καὶ ἔνδοξοι μὲν ἐξ ἡμελημένων, ἐπιφανέστατοι δὲ ἐξ ἀδόξων αἰεὶ γίνονται καὶ ἰσχυροὶ μὲν ἐξ ἀσθενῶν, ἐκ δὲ ἀδυνάτων δυνατοὶ καὶ συνετοὶ μὲν ἐξ ἀφραιόντων, εὐλογιστότατοι δὲ ἐκ παρα-156 παιόντων· καὶ ὁδὸς τις ἧδ' ἐστὶν ἄνω καὶ κάτω τῶν ἀνθρωπείων πραγμάτων, ἀστάτοις καὶ ἀν-ἰδρῦτοις χρωμένη συντυχίαις, ὧν τὸ ἀνώμαλον οὐκ ἀδήλοισ ἀλλὰ σαφέσι τεκμηρίοις ὁ ἀψευδέστατος ἐλέγχει χρόνος.
- 157 XXV. Ἐμήνυε δὲ τὸ ὄναρ ἐστηριγμένον ἐπὶ τῆς κλίμακος τὸν ἀρχάγγελον, κύριον· ὑπεράνω γὰρ ὡς ἄρματος ἠνίοχον ἢ ὡς νεὼς κυβερνήτην ὑποληπτέον ἵστασθαι τὸ ὄν ἐπὶ σωμαίων, ἐπὶ ψυχῶν, ἐπὶ πραγμάτων, ἐπὶ λόγων, ἐπὶ ἀγγέλων, ἐπὶ γῆς, ἐπ' αἴρος, ἐπ' οὐρανοῦ, ἐπ' αἰσθητῶν δυνάμεων, ἐπ' ἀοράτων φύσεων, ὅσαπερ θεατὰ καὶ ἀθέατα· τὸν γὰρ κόσμον ἅπαντα ἐξάψας ἑαυτοῦ καὶ ἀν-158 αρτήσας τὴν τοσαύτην ἠνιοχεῖ φύσιν. μηδεὶς δ' ἀκούων, ὅτι ἐπεστήρικτο, νομισάτω τι συνεργεῖν θεῷ πρὸς τὸ παγίως στήναι, ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνο λογισάσθω, ὅτι τὸ δηλούμενον ἴσον ἐστὶ τῷ στήριγμα καὶ ἔρεισμα καὶ ὀχυρότης καὶ βεβαιότης ἀπάντων ἐστὶν

<sup>1</sup> See App. pp. 600 f.

ON DREAMS, I. 153-158

XXIV. I must not fail to mention another idea 153 which is present in the vision. The affairs of men are naturally likened to a ladder owing to their uneven course. For one day, as the poet says,<sup>a</sup> brings one 154 man down from on high, and lifts another up, and nothing relating to man is of a nature to remain as it is, but all such things are liable to changes of every kind. Are not private citizens continually becoming 155 officials, and officials private citizens, rich men becoming poor men and poor men men of ample means, nobodies becoming celebrated, obscure people becoming distinguished, weak men strong, insignificant men powerful, foolish men men of understanding, witless men sound reasoners? Such is the road on 156 which human affairs go up and down, a road liable to shifting and unstable happenings, their uneven tenor manifestly laid bare by time's unerring test.

XXV. The dream shewed the Ruler of the angels 157 set fast upon the stairway, even the Lord: for high up like a charioteer high over his chariot or a helmsman high over his ship must we conceive of Him that is standing over bodies, over souls, over doings, over words, over angels, over earth, over air, over sky, over powers descried by our senses, over invisible beings, yea all things seen and unseen: for having made the whole universe to depend on and cling to Himself, He is the Charioteer of all that vast creation. Let 158 nobody, when he hears of His being set fast, think that anything co-operates with God to help Him to stand firmly. Let him account the truth signified by it to be equivalent to the statement that the sure God is the support and stay, the firmness and stability of <sup>a</sup> From Euripides, Ino. See Nauck, Frag. trag. 420. Cf. De Mos. i. 31.

PHILO

ὁ ἀσφαλὴς θεός, ἐνσφραγιζόμενος οἷς ἂν ἐθέλη τὸ ἀσάλευτον· ἐπερείδοντος<sup>1</sup> γὰρ καὶ συστηρίζοντος αὐτοῦ μένει τὰ συσταθέντα ἀνώλεθρα κραταιῶς.

159 ὁ τοίνυν ἐπιβεβηκῶς τῇ οὐρανοῦ κλίμακι λέγει τῷ φαντασιουμένῳ τὸ ὄναρ· “ ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεὸς Ἰβραὰμ τοῦ πατρός σου καὶ ὁ θεὸς Ἰσαάκ· μὴ φοβοῦ.” ὁ χρησμὸς οὗτος τὸ ἔρυμα<sup>2</sup> τῆς ἀσκητικῆς ψυχῆς καὶ βεβαιότατον ἔρεισμα ἦν, ὃς αὐτὴν ἀνεδίδασκειν, ὅτι ὁ τῶν ὄλων κύριος καὶ θεὸς ἀμφοτέρωθεν ταῦτα τοῦ γένους ἐστὶν αὐτῷ, πατέρων καὶ πάππων ἐπιγραφεῖς καὶ ἐπικληθεῖς ἐκάτερον, ἵνα τὸν αὐτὸν ὃ τε κόσμος ἅπας καὶ ὁ φιλάρετος ἔχη κλῆρον· ἐπεὶ καὶ λέλεκται· “ κύριος

160 αὐτὸς κλῆρος αὐτῷ.” XXVI. μὴ νομίσης δὲ παρέργως τοῦ μὲν Ἰβραὰμ νυνὶ λέγεσθαι κύριον καὶ θεόν, τοῦ δὲ Ἰσαάκ θεὸν αὐτὸ

[645] μόνον. ὁ μὲν γὰρ | αὐτηκόου καὶ αὐτοδιδάκτου καὶ αὐτομαθοῦς φύσει περιγινόμενης σύμβολον ἐπιστήμης ἐστίν, ὁ δὲ Ἰβραὰμ διδασκομένης· καὶ τῷ μὲν αὐτόχθονι καὶ αὐθιγενεῖ συμβέβηκεν εἶναι,

161 τῷ δὲ μετανάστη καὶ ἐπηλύτῳ. τὴν γὰρ χαλδαῖζουσαν ἀλλογενῆ καὶ ἀλλόφυλον γλώτταν τῶν περὶ ἀστρονομίαν μετεωρολεσχῶν ἀπολιπῶν ἐπὶ τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν λογικῶ ζῶν παρεγένετο, τὴν τοῦ

<sup>1</sup> Mangey ὑπερείδοντος, as also in § 241. See App. p. 601.

<sup>2</sup> mss. τέρμα or δραμα. Wend. prints the former but conjectures ἔρυμα. (Perhaps τὸ τ' ἔρυμα.) Another possibility is ἔρμα: Mangey καὶ δραμα.

<sup>a</sup> The figure is clearly legal. The κλῆρος under Attic law went by lineal descent, and if registered as held by a man's father and grandfather necessarily passed on to him. God therefore becomes both God and Lord to Jacob (ἐκάτερον all things, imparting as with the impress of a seal to whom He will the power of remaining unshaken. For it is because He establishes and holds it together that the system of created things remains strongly and mightily free from destruction. He, then, 159 that stands upon the stairway of heaven says to him who beholds the dream-vision, "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father and the God of Isaac: fear not" (Gen. xxviii. 13). This oracle was the fort and most firm buttress of the practising soul. It clearly taught him that He Who is Lord and God of the universe is both Lord and God of his family, registered under both titles as held by father and grandfather, to the end that the world at large and the lover of virtue may have the same inheritance: for it has been said, "the Lord Himself is his inheritance" <sup>a</sup> (Deut. x. 9).

XXVI. Do not think that it 160 is without special point that in this passage the divine relationship to Abraham is expressed by the words "Lord and God," that to Isaac by the word "God" only. For Isaac is a figure of knowledge gained by nature, knowledge which listens to and learns from no other teacher but itself, while Abraham is a figure of knowledge gained by instruction; and Isaac is a dweller on his native soil, while Abraham is an emigrant and a stranger in the land. For, abandon- 161 ing the foreign alien tongue of Chaldaea, the tongue of sky-prating astrology, he betook him to the language that befits a living creature endowed with reason, even the worship of the First Cause of all things.

referring to this double aspect, not to "father and grandfather"). Philo here ignores the point made in the next section, that God is not called "the Lord" of Isaac. The plural πατέρων καὶ πάππων is perhaps used because the truth applies to all φιλάρετοι.

PHILO

- 162 πάντων αἰτίου θεραπείαν. οὗτος μὲν δὴ ὁ τρόπος δεῖν δυνάμεων τῶν ἐπιμελησομένων ἐστὶ χρεῖος, ἡγεμονίας καὶ εὐεργεσίας, ἵνα τῷ μὲν κράτει τοῦ ἡγεμόνος ὑπακούη τῶν νομοθετουμένων, τῷ δὲ χαριστικῷ μεγάλα ὠφελῆται, ὁ δ' ἕτερος τῆς κατὰ τὸ χαρίζεσθαι μόνης· οὐ γὰρ ὑπὸ νοθετούσης ἀρχῆς ἐβελτιώθη, φύσει περιπεποιημένος τὸ καλόν, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὰς ὀμβρηθείσας ἄνωθεν δωρεὰς ἀγαθὸς
- 163 καὶ τέλειος ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐγένετο. χαριστικῆς μὲν οὖν δυνάμεως θεός, βασιλικῆς δὲ κύριος ὄνομα. τί οὖν ἂν τις εἴποι πρεσβύτερον ἀγαθὸν ἢ τὸ τυχεῖν ἀκράτου καὶ ἀμιγοῦς εὐεργεσίας, τί δὲ νεώτερον ἢ τὸ κεκραμένης ἔκ τε ἡγεμονίας καὶ δωρεᾶς; ὁ μοι δοκεῖ συνιδῶν ὁ ἀσκητῆς εὐξασθαι θαυμασιωτάτην εὐχὴν, ἵνα αὐτῷ γένηται κύριος εἰς θεόν· ἐβούλετο γὰρ μηκέτι ὡς ἄρχοντα εὐλαβεῖσθαι, ἀλλ'
- 164 ὡς εὐεργέτην ἀγαπητικῶς τιμᾶν. ἀρ' οὐχὶ τούτοις καὶ τοῖς παραπλησίοις εἰκὸς ἦν καὶ τοὺς τυφλοὺς διάνοιαν ὀξυδορκήσειν, πρὸς τῶν ἱερωτάτων ἐνομματουμένους λογίων, ὡς φυσιогνωμονεῖν καὶ μὴ μόνον τοῖς ῥητοῖς ἐφορμεῖν; ἀλλὰ κἂν ἡμεῖς καμμύσαντες τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα μὴ σπουδάζωμεν ἢ μὴ δυνώμεθα ἀναβλέπειν, αὐτός, ὦ ἱεροφάντα, ὑπήχει καὶ ἐπιστάτει καὶ ἐγχερίων μὴ ποτε ἀπείης, ἕως ἐπὶ τὸ κεκρυμμένον ἱερῶν λόγων

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 601.

<sup>b</sup> i.e. with eye-salve, cf. Rev. iii. 18.

ON DREAMS, I. 162-164

This character stands in need of two tending powers, 162 governance and kindness, in order that by the authority of the ruler it may be led to give heed to his ordinances, and by his graciousness be greatly benefited. The other character needs the power of kindness only, for, having obtained by nature goodness and beauty of character, he was not one who had been improved by the admonishments of a governor, but as the result of the gifts showered upon him from above he shewed himself good and perfect from the outset. Now the name denoting the kind and gracious 163 power is "God," and that denoting the kingly ruling power is "Lord." What good thing, then, would a man say was of the first rank, but the meeting with unmixed untempered kindness? And to what would he assign the second place, save to kindness which was a blend of governing and giving? It seems to me that it was by discerning this that the Practiser was led to pray a prayer worthy of the utmost admiration, that the Lord would become to him God (Gen. xxviii.
21): for he wished no longer to be in dread of Him as ruler, but lovingly to honour Him as bestower of kindness. Might it not have been ex- 164 pected, I ask, that these and like lessons would cause even those who were blind in their understanding to grow keen-sighted, receiving from the most sacred oracles the gift of eyesight, enabling them to judge of the real nature of things, and not merely rely on the literal sense? But even if we do close the eye of our soul and either will not take the trouble or have not the power to regain our sight, do thou thyself, O Sacred Guide, be our prompter <sup>a</sup> and preside over our steps and never tire of anointing <sup>b</sup> our eyes, until conducting us to the hidden light of hallowed

PHILO

- φέγγος ἡμᾶς μυσταγωγῶν ἐπιδείξης τὰ κατὰ-165 κλειστα καὶ ἀτελέστοις ἀόρατα κάλλη. σοὶ μὲν δὴ ταῦτα ποιεῖν ἐμπρεπές· ψυχαὶ δ' ὅσαι θείων ἐρώτων ἐγεύσασθε, καθάπερ ἐκ βαθέος ὕπνου διαναστᾶσαι καὶ τὴν ἀχλὺν ἀποσκεδάσασαι πρὸς τὴν περίβλεπτον θεάν ἐπείχθητε μεθέμεναι τὸν βραδὺν καὶ μελλητὴν ὄκνον, ἵν' ὅσα θεάματα καὶ ἀκούσματα τῆς ὑμετέρας ἔνεκα ὠφελείας ὁ ἀγυνο-θέτης εὐτρέπισε κατανοήσητε.
- 166 XXVII. Μυρία μὲν οὖν ἐστὶν αἰοίδιμα τῶν πρὸς ἐπίδειξιν, ἐν δ' οὖν καὶ τὸ λεχθὲν πρὸ μικροῦ· τὸν μὲν γὰρ γένει πάππον τοῦ ἀσκητοῦ πατέρα εἶπε [646] τὸ λόγιον, τῷ δ' ὡς | ἀληθῶς πατρὶ τὸ τοῦ γεννή-σαντος οὐκ ἐπεφήμισεν ὄνομα. λέγει γάρ· “ ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεὸς Ἀβραὰμ τοῦ πατρός σου ”—καίτοι πάππος οὗτος ἦν—καὶ πάλιν “ ὁ θεὸς Ἰσαὰκ, ”
- 167 εἶτ' οὐ προστίθησι “ τοῦ πατρός σου. ” οὐκουν ἄξιον τὴν τούτων αἰτίαν ἐρευνῆσαι; πάνυ γε.
 τίς οὖν ἐστι, μὴ παρέργως σκοπήσωμεν. τὴν ἀρετὴν ἢ φύσει ἢ ἀσκήσει ἢ μαθήσει περιγίνεσθαί φησι, διὸ καὶ τρεῖς τοὺς γενάρχας τοῦ ἔθνους σοφοὺς πάντας ἀνέγραφεν, ἀπὸ μὲν τῆς αὐτῆς οὐχ ὀρμηθέντας ἰδέας, πρὸς δὲ τὸ αὐτὸ τέλος ἐπειχ-168 θέντας. ὁ μὲν γὰρ πρεσβύτατος αὐτῶν Ἀβραὰμ ἡγεμόνι ὁδοῦ τῆς πρὸς τὸ καλὸν ἀγούσης ἐχρήσατο διδασκαλία, ὡς ἐν ἑτέροις, ὡς ἂν οἶόν τε ἦ, δείζομεν, ὁ δὲ μέσος Ἰσαὰκ αὐτηκόω καὶ αὐτομαθεῖ τῇ φύσει, ὁ δὲ τρίτος Ἰακώβ ἀσκητικαῖς μελέταις,
- 169 καθ' ἃς οἱ ἑναθλοὶ καὶ ἑναγώνιοι πόνοι. τριῶν οὖν

<sup>a</sup> Cf. De Cong. 35 f.

words thou display to us the fast-locked lovelinesses invisible to the uninitiate. Thee it beseems to do 165 this ; but all ye souls which have tasted divine loves, rising up as it were out of a deep sleep and dispelling the mist, hasten towards the sight to which all eyes are drawn ; put away the heavy-footed lingering of hesitation, that you may take in all that the Master of the contests has prepared in your behoof, for you to see and hear.

XXVII. The notable examples which may be used 166 to shew these are countless. The text just quoted is one of them. For the oracle spoke of the man, who in kin was the Practiser's grandfather, as his father ; but did not, when mentioning his actual father, give him the title of parent. The words are : " I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father "—and yet he was his grandfather—and again, " the God of Isaac " (Gen. xxviii. 13), without the addition of " thy father." Now, is it not worth while to investigate the 167 cause of this ? Assuredly it is. So let us carefully inquire what it is. The lawgiver says that virtue is gained either by nature or by practice or by learning, and has accordingly recorded the patriarchs of the nation as three in number, all wise men.<sup>a</sup> They had not at the start the same form of character, but they were all bent on reaching the same goal. Abraham, 168 the earliest of them, had teaching as his guide on the way that leads to the good and beautiful, as we shall shew to the best of our ability in another treatise. Isaac who comes between him and Jacob had as his guide a nature which listens to and learns from itself alone. Jacob, the third of them, relied on exercises and practisings preparatory for the strenuous toil of the arena. There being, then, three 169

PHILO

- τρόπων ὑπαρχόντων, ἐξ ὧν σοφία περιγίνεται, τοὺς ἄκρους μάλιστα συμβέβηκεν ἠνώσθαι· τὸ γὰρ ἀσκήσει ἔγγονον τοῦ μαθήσει, τὸ δὲ φύσει συγγενές μὲν—ὑποβέβληται γὰρ ὡς ρίζα πᾶσιν,—ἀναντα-
- 170 γωνίστου δὲ καὶ ἐτοίμου γέρωσ ἔλαχεν. ὥστε εἰκότως Ἀβραὰμ ὁ βελτιωθείς διδασκαλία πατῆρ Ἰακώβ λέγεται, τοῦ μελέτη συγκροτηθέντος, οὐκ ἄνθρωπος ἀνθρώπου μᾶλλον ἢ δύναμις ἀκουστικῆ πρὸς μάθησιν ἐτοιμοτάτη δυνάμεως ἀσκητικῆς καὶ
- 171 ἐπιτηδείου πρὸς ἄθλησιν. εἰάν μέντοι ὁ ἀσκητῆς οὗτος εὐτόνως δράμη πρὸς τὸ τέλος καὶ τηλαυγῶσ ἴδῃ ἃ πρότερον ἀμυδρῶσ ὠνειροπόλει, μετατυπωθεὶς τῷ κρείττονι χαρακτῆρι καὶ προσ-αγορευθεὶς Ἰσραήλ, ὁ θεὸν ὄρων, ἀντὶ τοῦ περνήζοντος Ἰακώβ πατέρα οὐκέτι τὸν μαθόντα Ἀβραάμ, ἀλλὰ τὸν φύσει γεννηθέντα ἀστείον Ἰσαὰκ ἐπι-
- 172 γράφεται. ταῦτα δὲ οὐκ ἐμός ἐστι μῦθος, ἀλλὰ χρησμὸς ἐν ταῖς ἱεραῖς ἀναγεγραμμένος στήλαις. “ἀπάρας” γάρ φησιν “Ἰσραήλ αὐτὸς καὶ πάντα τὰ αὐτοῦ ἦλθεν ἐπὶ τὸ φρέαρ τοῦ ὄρκου, καὶ ἔθυσσε θυσίαν τῷ θεῷ τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ Ἰσαὰκ.” ἄρ’ ἦδη κατανοεῖς, ὅτι οὐ περὶ φθαρτῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ’, ὡς ἐλέχθη, περὶ φύσεως πραγμάτων ἐστὶν ὁ παρῶν λόγος; ἰδοὺ γὰρ τὸ αὐτὸ ὑποκείμενον τοτὲ μὲν Ἰακώβ ὀνομάζεται πατρὸς Ἀβραάμ, τοτὲ δὲ

ON DREAMS, I. 169-172

methods by which virtue accrues, it is the first and third that are most intimately connected ; for what comes by practice is the offspring and product of that which comes by learning ; whereas that which comes by nature is, to be sure, of kin with them, being like a root at the bottom of all three, but the prerogative allotted to it is one which none contests and which needs no effort. Thus it is quite natural to say that 170 Abraham, who owed his improvement to teaching, was father of Jacob, who was shaped and drilled by exercises, meaning not so much that the man Abraham was father of the man Jacob, as that the faculty of hearing which is a most ready instrument for learning begets and produces the faculty of exercise and practice so serviceable in contest. If, 171 however, our practiser exert himself and run to the end of the course, and come to see clearly what he formerly saw dimly as in a dream, and receives the impress of a nobler character and the name of " Israel," " he that seeth God," in place of " Jacob," " the supplanter," he no longer claims as his father Abraham, the man who learned, but Isaac the man who was born good by nature. This is not a story 172 invented by me, but an oracle inscribed upon the sacred tables. For we read that " Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to the well of the oath, and offered a sacrifice to the God of his father Isaac " (Gen. xlv. 1). Do you by this time perceive that the discourse before us is not about mortal men, but, as already stated, about the facts of nature? For you observe that the same subject is at one time named Jacob, with Abraham as his

PHILO

- Ἰσραὴλ πατὸς Ἰσαὰκ καλεῖται διὰ τὴν ἠκριβω-μένην αἰτίαν.
- 173 XXVIII. Εἰπὼν τοίνυν “ ἐγὼ κύριος ὁ θεὸς Ἀβραὰμ τοῦ πατρός σου καὶ ὁ θεὸς Ἰσαὰκ ” ἐπιφέρει· “ μὴ φοβοῦ, ” κατὰ τὸ ἀκόλουθον· πῶς γὰρ ἔτι φοβηθησόμεθα, τὸ φόβου καὶ παντὸς πάθους λυτήριον σὲ τὸν ὑπερασπιστὴν ὄπλον [647] ἔχοντες; ὃς καὶ | τοὺς ἀρχετύπους τῆς παιδείας ἡμῶν τύπους ἀδηλουμένους ἐμόρφωσας, ἵν’ ἐμ-φανεῖς ὦσιν, Ἀβραὰμ μὲν διδάξας, Ἰσαὰκ δὲ γεννήσας· τοῦ μὲν γὰρ ὑφηγητῆς, τοῦ δὲ πατὴρ ὑπέμεινας ὀνομασθῆναι, τῷ μὲν τὴν γνωρίμου
- 174 τάξιν, τῷ δὲ τὴν υἱοῦ παρασχών. διὰ τοῦτο καὶ τὴν γῆν, λέγω δὲ τὴν παμφορωτάτην καὶ εὐκαρποτάτην ἀρετὴν, ἐφ’ ἧς καθεύδει ὁ ἀσκητῆς ἀναπαυόμενος τῷ τὸν μὲν αἰσθήσεως κοιμᾶσθαι βίον, τὸν δὲ ψυχῆς ἐγρηγορέναι, δώσειν ὁμολογεῖς, ἀποδεξάμενος αὐτοῦ τὴν εἰρηνικὴν ἀνάπαυσιν, ἣν οὐκ ἄνευ πολέμου καὶ τῶν ἐν πολέμῳ ταλαιπωριῶν εἴλετο, οὐχ ὄπλα βαστάζων καὶ ἀνθρώπους ἀναιρῶν, ἄπαγε, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀντίπαλον ἀρετῆς παθῶν καὶ
- 175 κακιῶν στίφος καθαιρῶν. τὸ δὲ σοφίας γένος ἄμμω γῆς ἐξομοιοῦται διὰ τε πληθὺν ἀπερίγραφον, καὶ διότι τὰς μὲν τῆς θαλάττης ἐπιδρομὰς ἢ ὑποταίνιος ἄμμος ἀνακρούεται, τὰς δὲ τῶν ἀμαρ-τημάτων καὶ ἀδικημάτων ὁ παιδείας λόγος. οὗτος δὲ κατὰ τὰς θείας ὑποσχέσεις ἄχρι τῶν περάτων τοῦ παντὸς εὐρύνεται καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα ἀποφαίνει τῶν τοῦ κόσμου κληρονόμον μερῶν, φθάνοντα πάντῃ, πρὸς τὰ ἐῷα, πρὸς τὰ ἐσπέρια, τὰ κατὰ μεσημβρίαν, τὰ προσάρκτια· λέγεται γάρ, ὅτι

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Leg. All. iii. 219.

father, and at another is styled Israel with Isaac as his father, the reason for this being that which has been set forth in detail.

XXVIII. So, after saying " I am the Lord God of 173 Abraham thy father and the God of Isaac," he adds " fear not " (Gen. xxviii. 13). The words come naturally after the others ; for how shall we any longer be afraid, when we have Thee our Defender, a weapon that brings deliverance from fear and every passion ? Moreover, it was Thou that didst bring out of obscurity into distinctness the original patterns of our education, Abraham whose teacher, and Isaac whose parent<sup>a</sup> Thou wast : for Thou didst condescend to be named instructor of the one and father of the other, giving one the position of pupil, the other that of son. It is because Thou art this that Thou dost 174 promise that Thou wilt give him the land also, virtue I mean abounding in all manner of fruits, whereon the Practiser slumbers, asleep to the life of sense, but awake to that of the soul and therefore at rest. Thou graciously approvest his peaceful repose, which he won not without war and war's hardships, a war in which he bore no arms and destroyed no men (away with the thought !) but overthrew the troop of passions and vices that oppose virtue. Wisdom's race 175 is likened to the sand of the earth (ibid. 14), both because its number is without limit and because the sand-bank forces back the inroads of the sea, as those of sinful and unjust deeds are kept back by trained reason. And this, in accordance with the Divine promises, is broadening out to the very bounds of the universe, and renders its possessor inheritor of the four quarters of the world, reaching to them all, to East, and West, and South and North : for it is said, " It

PHILO

- “ πλατυνθήσεται ἐπὶ θάλασσαν καὶ λίβα καὶ βορρᾶν 176 καὶ ἀνατολάς.” ἔστι δ’ ὁ ἀστεῖος οὐκ ἴδιον μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ κοινὸν ἀγαθὸν ἅπασιν, ἐξ ἐτοίμου τὴν ἀφ’ ἑαυτοῦ προτείνων ὠφέλειαν. ὡς γὰρ ἥλιος ἀπάντων ἐστὶ φῶς τῶν ὄψεις ἐχόντων, οὕτω καὶ ὁ σοφὸς τῶν ὅσοι λογικῆς κεκοινωνήκασιν φύσεως· XXIX. “ ἐνευλογηθήσονται γὰρ ἐν σοὶ ” φησί 177 “ πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαί.” ὁ δὲ χρησμός οὗτος ἐφαρμόττει καὶ αὐτῷ τινι πρὸς ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἑτέρῳ πρὸς ἕτερον. εἴαν τε γὰρ ὁ ἐν ἐμοὶ νοῦς ἀρετῆ τελεία καθαρῆ, καὶ αἱ τοῦ περὶ ἐμὲ γεώδους φυλαὶ συγκαθαίρονται, ἃς ἔλαχον αἱ αἰσθήσεις καὶ ἡ μεγίστη δεξαμενὴ, τὸ σῶμα· εἴαν τέ τις κατ’ οἰκίαν ἢ πόλιν ἢ χώραν ἢ ἔθνος γένηται φρονήσεως ἐραστής, ἀνάγκη τὴν οἰκίαν ἐκείνην καὶ τὴν πόλιν καὶ τὴν χώραν καὶ τὸ ἔθνος ἀμείνουσι βίῳ χρῆσθαι.
 178 καθάπερ γὰρ τὰ ἐκθυμώμενα τῶν ἀρωμάτων εὐωδίας τοὺς πλησιάζοντας ἀναπύμπλησι, τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον ὅσοι γείτονες καὶ ὄμοροι σοφοῦ, τῆς ἀπ’ αὐτοῦ σπῶντες αὔρας ἐπὶ μήκιστον χρομένης βελ-τιοῦνται τὰ ἦθη.
 179 XXX. Μεγίστη δέ ἐστιν εὐεργεσία ψυχῆ πονούση καὶ διαθλούση συνοδοιπόρον ἔχειν τὸν ἐφθακότα πάντη θεόν· “ ἰδοὺ ” γὰρ φησιν “ ἐγὼ μετὰ σοῦ.” τίνας οὖν ἂν ἔτι χρεῖοι γενοίμεθα πλοῦτου, σὲ τὸν ἀληθείᾳ πλοῦτον ἔχοντες μόνον “ διαφυλάσσοντα ἐν ὁδῷ ” τῇ πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἀγούση κατὰ πάσας αὐτῆς τὰς τομάς; οὐ γὰρ ἐν μέρος [648] ἐστὶ τοῦ λογικοῦ | βίου τὸ πρὸς δικαιοσύνην καὶ

---

<sup>a</sup> An interpretation of “all the way, wheresoever thou goest.”

shall spread abroad, to the West and to the South and to the North and to the East?" (ibid. 14). The man of worth is not just a good to himself but a common good to all men. From his ready store he proffers the boon which is his to give. For as the sun is a light to all who have eyes, so is the wise man to such as are partakers of a rational nature, XXIX. for he says "in thee shall all tribes be blessed" (ibid. 14). 176

Now this divine utterance has its application to a man both in his relation to his own separate being, and as a social being related to others. For if the mind which is in me have been rendered pure by perfect virtue, then the "tribes" of that which is earthly in me are sharers of its purifying, those I mean which pertain to the senses and to that chiefest container, the body. Again, if one belonging to a household or city or country or nation become a lover of sound sense, it must be that that household and city and country and nation has a better mode of life. For just as the exhalations from aromatic herbs fill those who come near them with a sweet fragrance, in the same way those who belong to the circle and neighbourhood of a wise man, drinking in the atmosphere which spreads far and wide around him, are improved in character. 177

XXX. It is a vast boon to a toiling and striving soul to have as a Fellow-traveller God whose presence reaches everywhere: for we read, "Behold, I am with thee" (ibid. 15). Of what riches can we any longer stand in need, when we have Thee Who art alone the true riches, "keeping us on the way" which leads to virtue, along all its sections? <sup>a</sup> For there is not one part only of the life according to reason which tends to righteousness and virtue gener- 178

PHILO

τὴν ἄλλην τεῖνον ἀρετὴν, ἀλλὰ μυρία ὄσα, ἐξ ὧν ἔστιν ὀρμωμένους φρονήσεως ἐφικνεῖσθαι.

- 180 XXXI. Παγκάλως δὲ εἴρηται καὶ τὸ “ἀποστρέψω σε εἰς τὴν γῆν ταύτην.” καλὸν μὲν γὰρ ἦν, τὸν λογισμὸν ἐφ’ ἑαυτοῦ μείναντα μὴ ἀποδημήσαι πρὸς αἰσθησιν· δεύτερος δὲ πλοῦς, ἐφ’
- 181 ἑαυτὸν ὑποστρέψαι πάλιν. ἴσως δὲ καὶ τὸ περὶ ἀφθαρσίας ψυχῆς ὑπαινίττεται δόγμα διὰ τούτου· ἀπολιποῦσα μὲν γὰρ τὸν οὐράνιον τόπον, ὡς καὶ μικρῶ πρότερον ἐλέχθη, καθάπερ εἰς ξένην χώραν ἦλθε τὸ σῶμα. φησὶ δ’ οὐ μέχρι τοῦ παντός καθειργμένην αὐτὴν ὁ γεννήσας περιόψεσθαι πατήρ, ἀλλ’ οἶκτον λαβὼν λύσειν τὰ δεσμὰ καὶ ἐλευθέραν ἄχρι τῆς μητροπόλεως ἀσφαλῶς παραπέμψειν καὶ μὴ πρότερον ἀνήσειν ἢ τὰς διὰ λόγων ὑποσχέσεις ἀληθείας ἔργοις βεβαιωθῆναι· θεοῦ γὰρ ἴδιον λέγειν
- 182 πάντως τὰ γενησόμενα. καίτοι τί τοῦτό φαμεν; ἔργων γὰρ ἀδιαφοροῦσιν αὐτοῦ οἱ λόγοι.

Διακινήθεισα οὖν καὶ διαναστάσα πρὸς τὰς περὶ τοῦ ὄντος ζητήσεις ἢ ἀσκητικῆ ψυχῆ τὸ μὲν πρῶτον ὑπετόπησεν εἶναι τὸ ὄν ἐν τόπῳ, μικρὸν δὲ ἐπισχοῦσα τῷ δυστοπιάστῳ τῆς σκέψεως περι-

183 δεῆς γίνεται καὶ μετανοεῖν ἄρχεται. “ἐξηγέρθη” γάρ φησιν “Ἰακώβ καὶ εἶπεν, ὅτι ἔστι κύριος ἐν τῷ τόπῳ τούτῳ, ἐγὼ δὲ οὐκ ᾔδην.” καὶ ἄμεινον

---

<sup>a</sup> This explanation of Jacob's waking words, that the soul when it first wakes to awareness of God first localizes Him, then realizing how the subject transcends human thought sees the error of such localizing, yet still finds in the world of place and sense the manifestation of divine goodness and the means by which we can rise to higher conceptions, is obtained (1) by taking τόπος first as "place" and then as "topic"; (2) by treating οὐκ ἔστι τοῦτο with an ally, but an infinite number of them, each a fresh starting-point on the road to wisdom.

392

XXXI. Right good too are the words " I will bring thee again into this land " (ibid.). For excellent would it have been for the reasoning faculty to have remained in its own keeping and not have left its home for that of sense-perception ; but, failing that, it is well that it should return to itself again. Perhaps, too, in these words he hints at the doctrine of the immortality of the soul : for, as was said a little before, it forsook its heavenly abode and came into the body as into a foreign land. But the Father who gave it birth says that He will not permanently disregard it in its imprisonment, but will take pity on it and loose its chains, and escort it in freedom and safety to its mother-city, and will not stay his hand until the promises given by words have been made good by actual deeds : for it is the special attribute of God and of Him alone to say what will surely come to pass. And yet what need to say this ? For His words are in no way different from deeds.

So, then, the practising soul, now fully roused and ready for the inquiry into what concerns Him that is, at first made the conjecture that He is in a place, but after a little while, it is seized with fear at the unscrutable nature of the quest and begins to change its mind.<sup>a</sup> For we read " Jacob rose up and said, that the Lord is in this place, but I knew it not " (ibid. 16). And it would have been better, I should say, to be audacity surprising even in Philo. He first takes it by itself = " this is not the case," then coupled with ἀλλ' ἢ οἶκος θεοῦ. In this last interpretation he reverses that given in De Mig. 5 where the world of sense was not the house of God, the name of God there indicating the Self-existent, here restricted to the Creative Potency.

PHILO

- ἦν, εἴποιμ' ἂν, ἀγνοεῖν ἢ ἔν τινι θεὸν ὑπολαμβάνειν εἶναι, τὸν περιέχοντα αὐτὸν ἐν κύκλῳ τὰ πάντα.
- 184 XXXII. δικαίως οὖν ἐφοβήθη καὶ εἶπε θαυμαστικῶς· “ὡς φοβερὸς ὁ τόπος οὗτος.” ὄντως γὰρ τῶν ἐν φυσιολογίᾳ τόπος ἀργαλεώτατος, ἐν ᾧ ζητεῖται, ποῦ καὶ εἰ συνόλως ἔν τινι τὸ ὄν, τῶν μὲν λεγόντων, ὅτι πᾶν τὸ ὑφεστῶς χῶραν τινὰ κατείληφε, καὶ ἄλλων ἄλλην ἀπονεμόντων, ἢ ἐντὸς τοῦ κόσμου ἢ ἐκτὸς αὐτοῦ μετακόσμιόν τινα, τῶν δὲ φασκόντων, ὅτι οὐδενὶ τῶν ἐν γενέσει τὸ ἀγένητον ὁμοιον, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ὅλοις ὑπερβάλλον, ὡς καὶ τὴν ὠκυδρομωτάτην διάνοιαν ὑστερίζουσαν μακρῶ τῆς καταλήψεως ὁμολογεῖν ἠττάσθαι.
- 185 διόπερ εὐθύς ἀνέκραγεν· “οὐκ ἔστι τοῦτο,” ὁ ἐδόξασα, “ὅτι ἔστι κύριος ἐν τῷ τόπῳ”· περιέχει γάρ, ἀλλ' οὐ περιέχεται κατὰ τὸν ἀληθῆ λόγον. τοῦτο δὲ τὸ δεικνύμενον καὶ ὄρατόν, ὁ αἰσθητὸς οὔτοσι κόσμος, οὐδὲν ἄρα ἄλλο ἔστιν ἢ οἶκος θεοῦ, μιᾶς τῶν τοῦ ὄντος δυνάμεων, καθ' ἣν ἀγαθὸς ἦν.
- 186 τὸν δὲ κόσμον (ὄν)<sup>1</sup> οἶκον ὠνόμασε καὶ πύλην τοῦ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν οὐρανοῦ προσεῖπε. τί δὲ τοῦτ' ἔστι; τὸν ἐκ τῶν ιδεῶν συσταθέντα ἐν τῷ χειροτονηθέντι
- [649] κατὰ τὰς θείας χορηγίας κόσμον νοητὸν | οὐκ ἔνεστιν ἄλλως καταλαβεῖν ὅτι μὴ κατὰ τὴν τοῦ
- 187 αἰσθητοῦ καὶ ὀρωμένου τούτου μετάβασιν. οὐδὲ γὰρ ἄλλο τῶν ὄντων οὐδὲν ἀσώματον ἐννοῆσαι δυνατὸν ὅτι μὴ τὴν ἀρχὴν λαβόντας ἀπὸ σωματίων·

<sup>1</sup> <δν> Mr. Whitaker's insertion.

<sup>a</sup> See App. p. 601.

<sup>b</sup> Perhaps meaning the Logos. But see App. pp. 601 ff. for a full discussion of the whole passage.

ignorant than to suppose that God is in some place Who Himself contains and encompasses all things. XXXII. Rightly, therefore, was he afraid and said 184 in an awestruck tone, "How dreadful is this place" (ibid. 17). For indeed most difficult of the "places" in the study of nature's verities is that in which men inquire as to where, and whether at all in any thing the Existent Being is. Some say that everything that subsists occupies some space, and of these one allots to the Existent One this space, another that, whether inside the world or a space outside it in the interval between worlds.<sup>a</sup> Others maintain that the Unoriginate resembles nothing among created things, but so completely transcends them, that even the swiftest understanding falls far short of apprehending Him and acknowledges its failure.

Wherefore he straightway cried aloud "This is not" 185 (ibid. 17); this that I supposed, "that the Lord is in some place" (ibid. 16), is not so; for according to the true reckoning He contains, but is not contained. But this that we can point out and see, this world discerned by sense, is, as I now know, nothing but a house of "God," that is, of one of the Potencies of the Existent, that is, the Potency which expresses His goodness. The world which he named a "house," he 186 also described as "gate of" the real "heaven" (ibid. 17). Now what is this? The world which only intellect can perceive, framed from the eternal forms in Him<sup>b</sup> Who was appointed in accordance with Divine bounties, cannot be apprehended otherwise than by passing on to it from this world which we see and perceive by our senses. For neither indeed is it 187 possible to get an idea of any other incorporeal thing among existences except by making material objects

PHILO

ἡρεμούντων μὲν γὰρ ἐνοήθη τόπος, χρόνος δὲ κινουμένων, σημεῖα δὲ καὶ γραμμαὶ καὶ ἐπιφάνειαι καὶ συνόλως πέρατα ἀπὸ τῆς ἐξωτάτω περικει-188 μένης οἶον ἀμπεχόνης. κατὰ τὸ ἀνάλογον οὖν καὶ ὁ νοητὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ αἰσθητοῦ κόσμος ἐνοήθη· πύλη τις οὖν<sup>1</sup> ἐκείνου. ὡς γὰρ οἱ βουλόμενοι τὰς πόλεις θεάσασθαι διὰ πυλῶν εἰσίασιν, οὕτως ὅσοι τὸν αἰδιῆ κόσμον καταλαβεῖν ἐθέλουσιν, ὑπὸ τῆς τοῦ ὄρατοῦ φαντασίας ξεναγοῦνται. ὁ δὲ νοητῆς ὑπο-στάσεως κόσμος ἄνευ ἡστινοσοῦν σχημάτων ὄψεως, μόνης δὲ διὰ τῆς ἀρχετύπου ιδέας τῆς ἐν τῷ διαχαραχθέντι πρὸς τὸ θεαθὲν αὐτῷ εἶδος ἄνευ σκιᾶς μετακληθήσεται, πάντων αὐτῷ τειχῶν καὶ πάσης πύλης ἀπαρθέντων εἰς τὸ μὴ ἀπὸ τινος ἀθρῆσαι, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ καθ' αὐτὸ ἀλέκτω τινὶ καὶ δυσερμηνεύτῳ θέα διδεῖν κάλλος ἀναλλοίωτον.<sup>2</sup>

189 XXXIII. Περὶ μὲν δὴ τούτων ἄλλis. ἐφαρμόζει δὲ τῷ αὐτῷ εἶδει καὶ ἕτερος ὄνειρος, ὁ περὶ τῆς ποικίλης ἀγέλης, ὃν περιαναστὰς ὁ φαντασιωθεὶς διηγεῖται φάσκων· “εἶπέ μοι ὁ ἄγγελος τοῦ θεοῦ καθ' ὕπνον· Ἰακώβ. ἐγὼ δὲ εἶπα· τί ἐστὶ; καὶ εἶπεν· ἀνάβλεψον τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς σου καὶ ἴδε τοὺς τράγους καὶ τοὺς κριοὺς ἀναβαίνοντας ἐπὶ τὰ πρό-βατα καὶ τὰς αἰγας διαλεύκους καὶ ποικίλους καὶ σποδοειδεῖς ραντούς. ἐώρακα γὰρ ὅσα σοι Λάβαν ποιεῖ. ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ θεὸς ὁ ὀφθεις σοι ἐν τόπῳ θεοῦ, οὗ ἤλειψάς μοι στήλην καὶ ἠῤῥω μοι εὐχῆν. νῦν

<sup>1</sup> mss. ὦν. The correction is Mr. Whitaker's and seems to me better than Wend.'s <ὄς> . . . ἦν or Mangey's πύλης ὄντος.

<sup>2</sup> The last part of this section from ὁ δὲ νοητῆς is bracketed by Wend. as a Christian interpolation. See App. pp. 602 f.

* Or “woke up.” Cf. De Som. ii. 106.

